Pope's Pastorals were first printed in a volume of Addison's Miscellanies in 1709, and were generally admired for the sweetness of the versification, and the lustre of the diction, though they betrayed a want of original observation, and an artificial cast of sentiment: in fact, they were any thing rather than real pastorals. In the mean time he was exerting himself in compositions of a higher class; and by his "Essay on Criticism," published two years afterwards, he obtained a great accession of reputation, merited by the comprehension of thought, the general good sense, and the frequent beauty of expression which it presents, though it displays many of the inaccuracies of a juvenile author. In 1712 his "Rape of the Lock," a mock heroic, from its first appearance, and conferred upon him the best title he possesses to the merit of invention. The machinery of the Sylphs was afterwards added, an exquisite fancy-piece, wrought with unrivalled skill and beauty. The "Temple of Fame," altered from Chaucer, though partaking of the embarrassments of the original plan, has many passages which he ranked with his happiest efforts.

In the year 1713, Pope issued proposals for publishing a translation of Homer's Iliad, the success of which soon removed all doubt of its making an addition to his reputation, whilst it afforded an ample remuneration for his labour. This noble work was published in separate volumes, each containing four books; and the produce of the subscription enabled him to take that house at Twickenham which he made so famous by his residence and decorations. He brought hither his father and mother; of whom the first parent died two years afterwards. The second long survived, to be comforted by the truly filial attentions of her son. About this period he probably wrote his Epistle from Eloisa to Abelard, partly founded upon the extant letters of these distinguished persons. He has rendered this one of the most impressive poems of which love is the subject; as it is likewise the most finished of all his works of equal length, in point of language and versification. The exaggeration, however, which he has given to the most impassioned expressions of Eloisa, and his deviations from the true story, have been pointed out by Mr. Berrington in his Lives of the two lovers.

During the years in which he was chiefly engaged with the Iliad, he published several occasional works, to which he usually prefixed very elegant prefaces; but the desire of farther emolument induced him to extend his translation to the Odyssey, in which task he engaged two inferior hands, whom he paid out of the produce of a new subscription. He himself, however, translated twelve books out of the twenty-four, with a happiness not inferior to his Iliad; and the transaction, conducted in a truly mercantile spirit, was the source of considerable profit to him. After the appearance of the Odyssey, Pope almost solely made himself known as a satirist and moralist. In 1728 he published the three first books of the "Dunciad," a kind of mock heroic, the object of which was to overwhelm with indelible ridicule all his antagonists, together with some other authors whom spleen or party led him to rank among the dunces, though they had given him no personal offence. Notwithstanding that the diction and versification of this poem are laboured with the greatest care, we shall borrow nothing from it. Its imagery is often extremely gross and offensive; and irritability, ill-nature, and partiality are so prominent through the whole, that whatever he gains as a poet he loses as a man. He has, indeed, a claim to the character of a satirist in this production, but none at all to that of a moralist.

The other selected pieces, though not entirely free from the same defects, may yet be tolerated; and his noble work called the "Essay on Man," which may stand in the first class of ethical poems, does not deviate from the style proper to its topic. This piece gave an example of the poet's extraordinary power of managing argumentation in verse, and of compressing his thoughts into clauses of the most energetic brevity, as well as of expanding them into passages distinguished by every poetic ornament. The origin of this essay is, however, generally ascribed to Lord Bolingbroke, who was adopted by the author as his "guide, philosopher, and friend;" and there is little doubt that, with respect to mankind in general, Pope adopted, without always fully understanding, the system of Bolingbroke.

On his works in prose, among which a collection of letters appears conspicuous, it is unnecessary here to remark. His life was not prolonged to the period of old age: an oppressive asthma indicated an early decline, and accumulated infirmities incapacitated him from pursuing the plan he had formed for new works. After having complied, through the instigation of a catholic friend, with the ceremonies of that religion, he quietly expired on May 30th, 1744, at the age of fifty-six. He was interred at Twickenham, where a monument was erected to his memory by the commentator and legatee of his writings, bishop Warburton.

Regarded as a poet, while it is allowed that Pope was deficient in invention, his other qualifications will scarcely be disputed; and it will generally be admitted that no English writer has carried to a greater degree correctness of versification, strength and splendour of diction, and the truly poetic power of vivifying and adorning every subject that he touched. The popularity of his productions has been proved by their constituting a school of English poetry, which in part continues to the present time.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK.

AN HEROI-COMICAL POEM.

Written in the Year 1712.

Nolueram, Belinda, tuos violare capillos;
Sed juvat, hoc precibus me tribuisse tuis.

MART.

CANTO I.

WHAT dire offence from amorous causes springs,
What mighty contests rise from trivial things,
I sing—this verse to Caryl, Muse! is due:
This ev'n Belinda may vouchsafe to view:
Slight is the subject, but not so the praise.
If she inspire, and he approve my lays.

Say what strange motive, goddess! could compel
A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?
O say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?
In tasks so bold, can little men engage?
And in soft bosoms dwells such mighty rage?

Sol through white curtains shot a timorous ray,
And ope'd those eyes that must eclipse the day:
Now lap-dogs give themselves the rousing shake,
And sleepless lovers, just at twelve, awake:
Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the ground,
And the press'd watch return'd a silver sound.
Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian Sylph prolong'd the balmy rest:
'Twas he had summon'd to her silent bed
The morning dream that hover'd o'er her head.
A youth more glittering than a birth-night beau
(That ev'n in slumber caus'd her cheek to glow)
Seem'd to her ear his winning lips to lay,
And thus in whispers said, or seem'd to say:

"Fairest of mortals, thou distinguish'd care
Of thousand bright inhabitants of air!
If e'er one vision touch thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moonlight shadows seen,
The silver token, and the circled green,

Or virgins visited by angel-powers,
With golden crowns and wreaths of heavenly flowers;
Hear, and believe! thy own importance know,
Nor bound thy narrow views to things below.
Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd;
What, though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe.
Know then, unnumber'd spirits round thee fly,
The light militia of the lower sky:
These, though unseen, are ever on the wing,
Hang o'er the box, and hover round the ring.
Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair.
As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once enclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air.
Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead:
Succeeding vanities she still regards,
And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.
Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive,
And love of ombre, after death survive.
For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements their souls retire:
The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a Salamander's name.
Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea.
The graver prude sinks downward to a Gnome,
In search of mischief still on Earth to roam.
The light coquettes in Sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

"Know farther yet; whoever fair and chaste
Rejects mankind, is by some Sylph embrac'd:
For, spirits, freed from mortal laws, with ease
Assume what sexes and what shapes they please.
What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treacherous friend, the daring squire,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark,
When kind occasion prompts their warm desire,
When music softens, and when dancing fires?

'Tis but their Sylph, the wise celestials know,
 Though honour is the word with men below.
 "Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face,
 For life predestin'd to the Gnome's embrace.
 These swell their prospects, and exalt their pride,
 When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd :
 Then gay ideas crowd the vacant brain,
 While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
 And garters, stars, and coronets appear,
 And in soft sounds, 'your grace' salutes their ear.
 'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
 Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
 Teach infant cheeks a bidden blush to know,
 And little hearts to flutter at a beau.
 "Oft, when the world imagine women stray,
 The Sylphs through mystic mazes guide their way,
 Through all the giddy circle they pursue,
 And old impertinence expel by new.
 That tender maid but must a victim fall
 To one man's treat, but for another's ball ?
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
 If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand ?
 With varying vanities, from every part,
 They shift the moving Toy-shop of their heart ;
 Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-
 knots strive,
 Leaux banish beaux, and coaches coaches drive.
 His erring mortals levity may call ;
 He, blind to truth ! the Sylphs contrive it all.
 "Of these am I, who thy protection claim,
 Watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.
 Ere, as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
 I the clear mirror of thy ruling star
 Saw, alas ! some dread event impend,
 Ere to the main this morning sun descend ;
 Ere Heaven reveals not what, or how, or where Warn'd by the Sylph, oh pious maid, beware !
 His to disclose is all thy guardian can :
 Beware of all, but most beware of man !" [long,
 He said ; when Shock, who thought she slept too
 Fast, wak'd up, and wak'd his mistress with his tongue.
 'Twas then, Belinda, if report say true,
 Her eyes first open'd on a billet-doux ;
 Sounds, charms, and ardours were no sooner read,
 Ere all the vision vanish'd from thy head.
 And now, unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
 Each silver vase in mystic order laid.
 First, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,
 With head uncover'd, the cosmetic powers.
 Her heavenly image in the glass appears,
 To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears ;
 Her inferior priestess, at her altar's side,
 Trembling, begins the sacred rites of Pride.
 A number'd treasures ope at once, and here
 A various offerings of the world appear ;
 From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
 And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.
 Her casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
 And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.
 The tortoise here and elephant unite,
 Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.
 Ere files of pins extend their shining rows,
 Cream, powders, patches, Bibles, billet-doux.
 Now awful Beauty puts on all its arms ;
 Her fair each moment rises in her charms,
 Repairs her smiles, awakens every grace,
 And calls forth all the wonders of her face :
 As by degrees a purer blush arise,
 And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.

The busy Sylphs surround their darling care :
 These set the head, and those divide the hair ;
 Some fold the sleeve, whilst others plait the gown ;
 And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own.

CANTO II.

Nor with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
 The Sun first rises o'er the purpled main,
 Than, issuing forth, the rival of his beams
 Lanch'd on the bosom of the silver'd Thames.
 Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,

But every eye was fix'd on her alone.
 On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore,
 Which Jews might kiss, and infidels adore.
 Her lively looks a sprightly mind disclose,
 Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those :
 Favours to none, to all she smiles extends ;
 Oft she rejects, but never once offends.
 Bright as the Sun, her eyes the gazers strike,
 And, like the Sun, they shine on all alike.
 Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride,
 Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide :
 If to her share some female errors fall,
 Look on her face, and you'll forget them all.

This nymph, to the destruction of mankind,
 Nourish'd two locks, which graceful hung behind,
 In equal curls, and well conspir'd to deck
 With shining ringlets the smooth ivory neck.
 Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
 And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
 With hairy springes we the birds betray ;
 Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey ;
 Fair tresses man's imperial race insnare,
 And Beauty draws us with a single hair.

Th' adventurous baron the bright locks admir'd ;
 He saw, he wish'd, and to the prize aspir'd.
 Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
 By force to ravish, or by fraud betray ;
 For when success a lover's toil attends,
 Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends.

For this, ere Phœbus rose, he had implor'd
 Propitious Heaven, and every power ador'd ;
 But chiefly Love—to Love an altar built,
 Of twelve vast French romances, neatly gilt.
 There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
 And all the trophies of his former loves.
 With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre,
 And breathes three amorous sighs to raise the fire.
 Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
 Soon to obtain, and long possess the prize :
 The powers gave ear, and granted half his prayer ;
 The rest, the winds dispers'd in empty air.

But now secure the painted vessel glides,
 The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides :
 While melting music steals upon the sky,
 And soften'd sounds along the waters die ;
 Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gentle play,
 Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay,
 All but the Sylph—with careful thoughts oppress'd ;
 Th' impending woe sat heavy on his breast.
 He summons straight his denizens of air ;
 The lucid squadrons round the sails repair :
 Soft o'er the shrouds aerial whispers breathe,
 That seem'd but zephyrs to the train beneath.
 Some to the Sun their insect wings unfold,
 Waft on the breeze, or sink in clouds of gold ;

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
 Their fluid bodies half dissolv'd in light.
 Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,
 Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew,
 Dipp'd in the richest tinctures of the skies,
 Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes,
 While every beam new transient colours flings,
 Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings.

Amid the circle on the gilded mast
 Superior by the head, was Ariel plac'd ;
 His purple pinions opening to the Sun,
 He rais'd his azure wand, and thus begun :

“ Ye Sylphs and Sylphids, to your chief give ear ;
 Fays, Fairies, Genii, Elves, and Demons, hear !
 Ye know the spheres, and various tasks assign'd
 By laws eternal to th' aërial kind.

Some in the fields of purest ether play,
 And bask and whiten in the blaze of day ;
 Some guide the course of wandering orbs on high,
 Or roll the planets through the boundless sky ;
 Some, less refin'd, beneath the Moon's pale light
 Pursue the stars that shoot athwart the night,
 Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
 Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
 Or brew fierce tempests on the wintry main,
 Or o'er the glebe distil the kindly rain.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
 Watch all their ways, and all their actions guide :
 Of these the chief the care of nations own,
 And guard with arms divine the British throne.

“ Our humbler province is to tend the fair,
 Not a less pleasing, though less glorious care ;
 To save the powder from too rude a gale,
 Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale ;
 To draw fresh colours from the vernal flowers ;
 To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in showers,
 A brighter wash ; to curl their waving hairs,
 Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs ;
 Nay oft, in dreams, invention we bestow,
 To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.

“ This day, black omens threat the brightest fair
 That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care :
 Some dire disaster, or by force, or slight ;
 But what, or where, the Fates have wrapp'd in night.
 Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
 Or some frail china-jar receive a flaw :
 Or stain her honour, or her new brocade ;
 Forget her prayers, or miss a masquerade ;
 Or lose her heart, or necklace at a ball ;
 Or whether Heaven has doom'd that Shock must fall.

Haste then, ye spirits ! to your charge repair :
 The fluttering fan be Zephyretta's care ;
 The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign ;
 And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine ;
 Do thou, Crispissa, tend her favourite lock ;
 Ariel himself shall be the guard of Shock.

“ To fifty chosen Sylphs, of special note,
 We trust th' important charge, the petticoat :
 Oft have we known that seven-fold fence to fail,
 Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale.

Form a strong line about the silver bound,
 And guard the wide circumference around.

“ Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
 His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
 Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
 Be stopp'd in vials, or transfix'd with pins ;
 Or plung'd in lakes of bitter washes lie,
 Or wedg'd whole ages in a bodkin's eye :

Gums and pomatums shall his flight restrain,
 While clogg'd he beats his silken wings in vain ;
 Or alum styptics with contracting power
 Shrink his thin essence like a shrivell'd flower :
 Or, as Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
 The giddy motion of the whirling mill,
 In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
 And tremble at the sea that froths below !”

He spoke ; the spirits from the sails descend :
 Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend ;
 Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair ;
 Some hang upon the pendants of her ear ;
 With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
 Anxious, and trembling for the birth of Fate.

CANTO III.

CLOSE by those meads, for ever crown'd with flowers,
 Where Thames with pride surveys his rising towers,
 There stands a structure of majestic frame,
 Which from the neighbouring Hampton takes its name.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
 Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home ;
 Here thou, great Anna ! whom three realms obey,
 Dost sometimes counsel take — and sometimes take

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,
 To taste awhile the pleasures of a court ;
 In various talk th' instructive hours they pass,
 Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last ;
 One speaks the glory of the British queen,
 And one describes a charming Indian screen ;
 A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes ;
 At every word a reputation dies.

Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat,
 With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Meanwhile, declining from the noon of day,
 The Sun obliquely shoots his burning ray :
 The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
 And wretches hang, that jurymen may dine ;
 The merchant from th' Exchange returns in peace,
 And the long labours of the toilet cease.

Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
 Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
 At Ombre singly to decide their doom ;
 And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.
 Straight the three bands prepare in arms to join,
 Each band the number of the sacred nine.
 Soon as she spreads her hand, th' aërial guard
 Descend, and sit on each important card :

First Ariel perch'd upon a Matadore,
 Then each according to the rank they bore ;
 For Sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient race,
 Are, as when women, wondrous fond of place.

Behold, four kings in majesty rever'd,
 With hoary whiskers and a forked beard ;
 And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flower
 Th' expressive emblem of their softer power ;
 Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band ;
 Caps on their heads, and halberts in their hand ;
 And party-coloured troops, a shining train,
 Drawn forth to combat on the velvet plain.

The skilful nymph reviews her force with care :
 Let spades be trumps ! she said, and trumps they were.

Now move to war her sable Matadores,
 In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
 Spadillio first, unconquerable lord !
 Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board.

As many more Manillio forc'd to yield,
 And march'd a victor from the verdant field.
 Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard
 Gain'd but one trump, and one plebeian card.
 With his broad sabre next, a chief in years,
 The hoary Majesty of Spades appears,
 Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
 The rest, his many-colour'd robe conceal'd.
 The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
 Proves the just victim of his royal rage.
 Ev'n mighty Pam, that kings and queenso'erthrew,
 And mow'd down armies in the fights of Lu,
 Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
 Falls undistinguish'd by the victor Spade!
 Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
 Now to the baron Fate inclines the field.
 His warlike Amazon her host invades,
 Th' imperial consort of the crown of Spades.
 The Club's black tyrant first her victim dy'd,
 In spite of his haughty mien, and barbarous pride:
 That boots the regal circle on his head,
 His giant limbs in state unwieldy spread;
 That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
 And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe?
 The baron now his Diamonds pours apace;
 Th' embroider'd king who shows but half his face,
 And his refulgent queen, with powers combin'd,
 Of broken troops an easy conquest find.
 Clubs, Diamonds, Hearts, in wild disorder seen,
 With throngs promiscuous strow the level green.
 Thus when dispers'd a routed army runs,
 Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,
 With like confusion different nations fly,
 Of various habit, and of various dye,
 As pierc'd battalions disunited fall,
 In heaps on heaps; one fate o'erwhelms them all.
 The Knave of Diamonds tries his wily arts,
 And wins (oh shameful chance!) the Queen of Hearts.
 At this, the blood the virgin's cheek forsook,
 Her livid paleness spreads o'er all her look;
 She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill,
 As in the jaws of ruin, and Codille.
 And now (as oft in some distemper'd state)
 On one nice trick depends the general fate,
 The Ace of Hearts steps forth: the king unseen
 Mark'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen:
 He springs to vengeance with an eager pace,
 And falls like thunder on the prostrate Ace.
 The nymph exulting fills with shouts the sky;
 The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.
 O thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate,
 Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.
 Sudden, these honours shall be snatch'd away,
 And curs'd for ever this victorious day.
 For lo! the board with cups and spoons is crown'd,
 The berries crackle, and the mill turns round:
 On shining Altars of Japan they raise
 The silver lamp; the fiery spirits blaze:
 From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
 While China's earth receives the smoking tide:
 As once they gratify their scent and taste,
 And frequent cups prolong the rich repast.
 Straight hover round the fair her airy band;
 Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd,
 Some o'er her lap their careful plumes display'd,
 Trembling, and conscious of the rich brocade.
 Coffee (which makes the politician wise,
 And see through all things with his half-shut eyes)
 Went up in vapours to the baron's brain
 To draw new stratagems, the radiant lock to gain.

Ah cease, rash youth; desist ere 'tis too late,
 Fear the just Gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
 Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air,
 She dearly pays for Nisus' injur'd hair!
 But when to mischief mortals bend their will,
 How soon they find fit instruments of ill!
 Just then, Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
 A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case:
 So ladies, in Romance, assist their knight,
 Present the spear, and arm him for the fight.
 He takes the gift with reverence, and extends
 The little engine on his fingers' ends;
 This just behind Belinda's neck he spread,
 As o'er the fragrant steams she bends her head.
 Swift to the Lock a thousand Sprites repair,
 A thousand wings, by turns, blow back the hair;
 And thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear;
 Thrice she look'd back, and thrice the foe drew near.
 Just in that instant, anxious Ariel sought
 The close recesses of the virgin's thought;
 As on the nosegay in her breast reclin'd,
 He watch'd th' ideas rising in her mind,
 Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
 An earthly lover lurking at her heart.
 Amaz'd, confus'd, he found his power expir'd,
 Resign'd to fate, and with a sigh retir'd.
 The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,
 To enclose the Lock; now joins it, to divide.
 Ev'n then, before the fatal engine clos'd,
 A wretched Sylph too fondly interpos'd;
 Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the Sylph in twain,
 (But airy substance soon unites again,)
 The meeting points the sacred hair dis sever
 From the fair head, for ever, and for ever!
 Then flash'd the living lightning from her eyes,
 And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies.
 Not louder shrieks to pitying Heaven are cast,
 When husbands, or when lap-dogs, breathe their last!
 Or when rich China vessels, fall'n from high,
 In glittering dust and painted fragments lie!
 Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine
 (The victor cry'd), the glorious prize is mine!
 While fish in streams, or birds delight in air,
 Or in a coach and six the British fair,
 As long as Atalantis shall be read,
 Or the small pillow grace a lady's bed,
 While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
 When numerous wax-lights in bright order blaze,
 While nymphs take treats, or assignations give,
 So long my honour, name, and praise, shall live!
 What time would spare, from steel receives its date,
 And monuments, like men, submit to Fate.
 Steel could the labour of the gods destroy,
 And strike to dust th' imperial powers of Troy;
 Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
 And hew triumphal arches to the ground.
 What wonder then, fair nymph! thy hairs should feel
 The conquering force of unresisted steel?

CANTO IV.

But anxious cares the pensive nymph oppress'd,
 And secret passions labour'd in her breast.
 Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
 Not scornful virgins who their charms survive,
 Not ardent lovers robb'd of all their bliss,
 Not ancient ladies when refus'd a kiss,
 Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
 Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,

E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair.

For, that sad moment, when the Sylphs withdrew,
And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew,
Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sully'd the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repair'd to search the gloomy cave of Spleen.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the Gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the dismal dome.
No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows,
The dreaded east is all the wind that blows.
Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and Megrim at her head.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
But differing far in figure and in face.
Here stood Ill-nature like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd;
With store of prayers, for mornings, nights, and noons,

Her hand is fill'd; her bosom with lampoons.
There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen,
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride,
On the rich quilt sinks with becoming woe,
Wrapt in a gown, for sickness, and for show.
The fair-ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
Dreadful, as hermits' dreams in haunted shades,
Or bright, as visions of expiring maids.
Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling spires,
Pale spectres, gaping tombs, and purple fires:
Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes,
And crystal domes, and angels in machines.

Unnumber'd throngs on every side are seen,
Of bodies chang'd to various forms by Spleen.
Here living tea-pots stand, one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout:
A pipkin there, like Homer's tripod, walks;
Here sighs a jar, and there a goose-pye talks;
Men prove with child, as powerful fancy works,
And maids, turn'd bottles, call aloud for corks.

Safe past the Gnome through this fantastic band,
A branch of healing spleen-wort in his hand,
Then thus address'd the power:—"Hail, wayward
queen!

Who rule the sex to fifty from fifteen:
Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who give th' hysteric, or poetic fit,
On various tempers act by various ways,
Make some take physic, others scribble plays;
Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray.
A nymph there is, that all thy power disdains,
And thousands more in equal mirth maintains.
But, oh! if e'er thy Gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,
Like citron-waters, matrons' cheeks inflame,
Or change complexions at a losing game;
If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,
Or caus'd suspicion where no soul was rude,
Or discompos'd the head-dress of a prude,
Or e'er to costive lap-dog gave disease,
Which not the tears of brightest eyes could ease:

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin:
That single act gives half the world the spleen."

The goddess with a discontented air
Seems to reject him, though she grants his prayer.
A wonderous bag with both her hands she binds,
Like that where once Ulysses held the winds;
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.
A vial next she fills with fainting fears,
Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing tears.
The Gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.

Sunk in Thalestris' arms the nymph he found,
Her eyes dejected, and her hair unbound.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the Furies issued at the vent.
Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,
And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire. [cry'd,
"O wretched maid!" she spread her hands, and (While Hampton's echoes, wretched maid! reply'd)

"Was it for this you took such constant care
The bodkin, comb, and essence, to prepare?
For this your locks in paper durance bound,
For this with torturing irons wreath'd around?
For this with fillets strain'd your tender head,
And bravely bore the double loads of lead?
Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare!
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.
Methinks already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost!
How shall I, then, your helpless fame defend?
'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend!
And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
Expos'd through crystal to the gazing eyes,
And heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!

Sooner shall grass in Hyde-park Circus grow,
And wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow!
Sooner let earth, air, sea, to chaos fall,
Men, monkeys, lap-dogs, parrots, perish all!"

She said; then raging to sir Plume repairs,
And bids her beau demand the precious hairs:
(Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane,)
With earnest eyes, and round unthinking face,
He first the snuff-box open'd, then the case,
And thus broke out:—"My Lord, why, what the devil?

Z—ds! damn the Lock! 'fore Gad, you must be civil!

Plague on 't! 'tis past a jest—nay pr'ythee, poi!
Give her the hair"—he spoke, and rapp'd his box.

"It grieves me much (reply'd the peer again),
Who speaks so well should ever speak in vain;
But by this Lock, this sacred Lock, I swear,
(Which never more shall join its parted hair;
Which never more its honours shall renew,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew.)
That while my nostrils draw the vital air,
This hand, which won it, shall for ever wear."
He spoke, and, speaking, in proud triumph spread
The long-contended honours of her head.

But Umbriel, hateful Gnome! forbears not so;
He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow.
Then see! the nymph in beauteous grief appears,
Her eyes half-languishing, half-drown'd in tears;

In her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which, with a sigh, she rais'd ; and thus she said :
" For ever curs'd be this detested day,
Which snatch'd my best, my favourite curl away :
Happy ! ah ten times happy had I been,
If Hampton-Court these eyes had never seen !
Yet am not I the first mistaken maid
By love of courts to numerous ills betray'd.
Oh had I rather unadmir'd remain'd
In some lone isle, or distant northern land ;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way,
Where none learn ombre, none e'er taste bohea !
Here kept my charms conceal'd from mortal eye,
Like roses, that in deserts bloom and die.
What mov'd my mind with youthful lords to roam ?
Oh had I stay'd, and said my prayers at home !
Twas this, the morning omens seem'd to tell,
Once from my trembling hand the patch-box fell ;
The tottering china shook without a wind,
Lay Poll sat mute, and Shock was most unkind !
Sylph too warn'd me of the threats of Fate,
Of mystic visions, now believ'd too late !
Of the poor remnants of these slighted hairs !
My hand shall rend what ev'n thy rapine spares :
These in two sable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck ;
The Sister-lock now sits uncouth, alone,
And in its fellow's fate foresees its own ;
Uncurl'd it hangs, the fatal shears demands,
And tempts, once more, thy sacrilegious hands.
Oh hadst thou, cruel ! been content to seize Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these !"

CANTO V.

He said : the pitying audience melt in tears ;
But Fate and Jove had stopp'd the baron's ears.
In vain Thalestris with reproach assails,
Who can move when fair Belinda fails ?
Or half so fix'd the Trojan could remain,
While Anna begg'd and Dido rag'd in vain.
Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan ;
Hence ensued, and thus the nymph began :
" Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,
The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast ?
Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
By angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd ? [beaux ?
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd
Why bows the side-box from its inmost rows ?
How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains :
But men may say, when we the front-box grace,
Should the first in virtue as in face !
But if to dance all night and dress all day,
Earn'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away ;
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce,
Who would learn one earthly thing of use ?
A patch, nay ogle, may become a saint ;
Or could it sure be such a sin to paint.
But since, alas, frail beauty must decay ;
Uncurl'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey ;
Not painted, or not painted, all shall fade,
And she who scorns a man must die a maid ;
What then remains, but well our power to use,
And keep good-humour still, whate'er we lose ?
And trust me, dear, good-humour can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail ;

Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may roll ;
Charms strike the sight, but merit wins the soul."

So spoke the dame, but no applause ensued :
Belinda frown'd, Thalestris call'd her prude.
" To arms, to arms !" the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies.
All side in parties, and begin th' attack ;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack ;
Heroes' and heroines' shouts confus'dly rise,
And base and treble voices strike the skies.
No common weapon in their hands are found ;
Like gods they fight, nor dread a mortal wound.

So when bold Homer makes the gods engage,
And heavenly breasts with human passions rage ;
'Gainst Pallas, Mars ; Latona Hermes arms ;
And all Olympus rings with loud alarms ;
Jove's thunder roars, Heaven trembles all around,
Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps resound :
Earth shakes her nodding towers, the ground gives
way,

And the pale ghosts start at the flash of day !
Triumphant Umbriel on a scone's height
Clapp'd his glad wings, and sate to view the fight :
Propp'd on their bodkin spears, the sprites survey
The growing combat, or assist the fray.
While through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,
And scatters death around from both her eyes,
A beau and witting perish'd in the throng,
One dy'd in metaphor, and one in song.
" O cruel nymph ! a living death I bear,"
Cry'd Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.
A mournful glance sir Fopling upwards cast,
" Those eyes are made so killing" — was his last.
Thus on Mæander's flowery margin lies
Th' expiring swan, and as he sings he dies.

When bold sir Plume had drawn Clarissa down,
Chloe stepp'd in, and kill'd him with a frown ;
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair ;
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side ;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

See, fierce Belinda on the baron flies,
With more than usual lightning in her eyes :
Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try,
Who sought no more than on his foe to die.
But this bold lord, with manly strength endu'd,
She with one finger and a thumb subdued :
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw ;
The Gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.
Sudden, with starting tears each eye o'erflows,
And the high dome re-echoes to his nose.

" Now meet thy fate," incens'd Belinda cry'd,
And drew a deadly bodkin from her side.
(The same, his ancient personage to deck,
Her great-great-grandsire wore about his neck,
In three seal-rings ; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown :
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew ;
Then in a bodkin grac'd her mother's hairs,
Which long she wore, and now Belinda wears.)

" Boast not my fall (he cry'd), insulting foe !
Thou by some other shalt be laid as low.
Nor think, to die dejects my lofty mind :
All that I dread is leaving you behind !

Rather than so, ah ! let me still survive,
And burn in Cupid's flames — but burn alive."

"Restore the Lock," she cries; and all around,
"Restore the Lock!" the vaulted roofs rebound.
Not fierce Othello in so loud a strain
Roar'd for the handkerchief that caus'd his pain.
But see how oft ambitious aims are cross'd,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost!
The Lock, obtain'd with guilt, and kept with pain,
In every place is sought, but sought in vain:
With such a prize no mortal must be blest,
So Heaven decrees! with Heaven who can contest?

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on Earth are treasur'd there.
'There heroes' wits are kept in ponderous vases,
And beaux in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases:
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found,
And lovers' hearts with ends of ribband bound;
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dry'd butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

But trust the Muse — she saw it upward rise,
Though mark'd by none but quick, poetic eyes:
(So Rome's great founder to the Heavens withdrew,
To Proculus alone confess'd in view:)

A sudden star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.
Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
The Heaven bespangling with dishevell'd light.
The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

This the beau-monde shall from the Mall survey,
And hail with music its propitious ray.
This the blest lover shall for Venus take,
And send up vows from Rosamonda's lake.
This Partridge soon shall view in cloudless skies,
When next he looks through Galileo's eyes;
And hence th' egregious wizard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn thy ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
Not all the tresses that fair-head can boast,
Shall draw such envy as the Lock you lost.
For, after all the murders of your eye,
When, after millions slain, yourself shall die;
When those fair suns shall set, as set they must,
And all those tresses shall be laid in dust,
This Lock the Muse shall consecrate to fame,
And 'midst the stars inscribe Belinda's name.

PROLOGUE

TO MR. ADDISON'S TRAGEDY OF CATO.

To wake the soul by tender strokes of art,
To raise the genius, and to mend the heart;
To make mankind in conscious virtue bold,
Live o'er each scene, and be what they behold:
For this the Tragic Muse first trod the stage,
Commanding tears to stream through every age;
Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to Virtue wonder'd how they wept.
Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love;
In pitying Love, we but our weakness show,
And wild Ambition well deserves its —

Here tears shall flow from a more generous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws:
He bids your breasts with ancient ardour rise,
And calls forth Roman drops from British eyes.
Virtue confess'd in human shape he draws,
What Plato thought, and godlike Cato was:
No common object to your sight displays,
But what with pleasure Heaven itself surveys,
A brave man struggling in the storms of fate,
And greatly falling with a falling state.
While Cato gives his little senate laws,
What bosom beats not in his country's cause?
Who sees him act, but envies every deed?
Who hears him groan, and does not wish to bleed?
Ev'n when proud Cæsar 'midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Show'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state;
As her dead father's reverend image past,
The pomp was darken'd, and the day o'ercast;
The triumph ceas'd, tears gush'd from ev'ry eye;
The world's great victor pass'd unheeded by;
Her last good man dejected Rome ador'd,
And honour'd Cæsar's less than Cato's sword.
Britons, attend: be worth like this approv'd,
And show, you have the virtue to be mov'd.
With honest scorn the first fam'd Cato view'd
Rome learning arts from Greece, whom she subdued;

Your scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation, and Italian song.
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage;
Such plays alone should win a British ear,
As Cato's self had not disdain'd to hear.

ELOISA TO ABELARD.

Argument.

Abelard and Eloïsa flourished in the twelfth century; they were two of the most distinguished persons of their age in learning and beauty, but for nothing more famous than for their unfortunate passion. After a long course of calamities, they retired each to a several convent, and consecrated the remainder of their days to religion. It was many years after this separation that a letter of Abelard's to a friend, which contained the history of his misfortune, fell into the hands of Eloïsa. This awakening all her tenderness, occasioned those celebrated letters of which the following is partly extracted, and give so lively a picture of the struggles of passion and nature, virtue and passion.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heavenly-pensive Contemplation dwells,
And ever musing Melancholy reigns;
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins?
Why rove my thoughts beyond this last retreat?
Why feels my heart its long-forgotten heat?
Yet, yet I love! — From Abelard it came,
And Eloïsa yet must kiss the name.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd,
Nor pass these lips in holy silence seal'd:
Hide it, my heart, within that close disguise,
Where, mix'd with God's, his lov'd idea lies:

O, write it not, my hand — the name appears
Already written — wash it out, my tears!
In vain lost Eloïsa weeps and prays,
Her heart still dictates, and her hand obeys.

Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains
Repentant sighs, and voluntary pains:
Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;
Ye grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn!
Shrines! where their vigils pale-ey'd virgins keep;
And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep!
Though cold like you, unmov'd and silent grown,
I have not yet forgot myself to stone.

All is not Heaven's while Abelard has part,
Still rebel Nature holds out half my heart;
Nor prayers nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain,
Nor tears, for ages taught to flow in vain.

Soon as thy letters trembling I uncloze,
That well-known name awakens all my woes.
Oh, name for ever sad! for ever dear!
Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear.
I tremble too, where'er my own I find,
Some dire misfortune follows close behind.
Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe:
Now warm in love, now withering in my bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom!
There stern Religion quench'd th' unwilling flame,
There dy'd the best of passions, love and fame.

Yet write, oh write me all, that I may join
Griefs to thy griefs, and echo sighs to thine.
Nor foes nor Fortune take this power away;
And is my Abelard less kind than they?
Fears still are mine, and those I need not spare,
Love but demands what else were shed in prayer;
No happier task these faded eyes pursue;
To read and weep is all they now can do.

Then share thy pain, allow that sad relief;
Ah, more than share it, give me all thy grief.
Heaven first taught letters for some wretch's aid,
Some banish'd lover, or some captive maid; [spires,
They live, they speak, they breathe what love in-
Farm from the soul, and faithful to its fires,
The virgin's wish without her fears impart,
Excuse the blush, and pour out all the heart,
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
Then Love approach'd me under Friendship's name;
By fancy form'd thee of angelic kind,
Some emanation of th' All-beauteous Mind.
Those smiling eyes, attempering every ray,
Were sweetly lambent with celestial day.
Guiltless I gaz'd; Heaven listen'd while you sung;
And truths divine came mended from that tongue.
From lips like those what precept fail'd to move?
So soon they taught me 'twas no sin to love:
Back through the paths of pleasing sense I ran,
Or wish'd an angel whom I lov'd a man.
And remote the joys of saints I see,
Or envy them that Heaven I lose for thee.

How oft, when press'd to marriage, have I said,
None on all laws but those which Love has made!
Love, free as air, at sight of human ties
Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.
At wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame,
Against her deed, and sacred be her fame;
Before true passion all those views remove;
None, wealth, and honour! what are you to love?
The jealous god, when we prophane his fires,
Those restless passions in revenge inspires,

And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
Should at my feet the world's great master fall,
Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn them all:
Not Caesar's empress would I deign to prove;
No, make me mistress to the man I love.

If there be yet another name more free,
More fond than mistress, make me that to thee!
Oh, happy state! when souls each other draw,
When love is liberty, and Nature law:
All then is full, possessing and possess'd,
No craving void left aching in the breast: [part,
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
This sure is bliss (if bliss on Earth there be)
And once the lot of Abelard and me.

Alas, how chang'd! what sudden horrors rise!
A naked lover bound and bleeding lies!
Where, where was Eloïsa? her voice, her hand,
Her poniard had oppos'd the dire command.
Barbarian, stay! that bloody stroke restrain;
The crime was common, common be the pain.
I can no more; by shame, by rage suppress'd,
Let tears and burning blushes speak the rest.

Canst thou forget that sad, that solemn day,
When victims at yon altar's foot we lay?
Canst thou forget what tears that moment fell,
When, warm in youth, I bade the world farewell?
As with cold lips I kiss'd the sacred veil,
The shrines all trembled and the lamps grew pale:
Heaven scarce believ'd the conquest it survey'd,
And saints with wonder heard the vows I made.
Yet then, to those dread altars as I drew,
Not on the cross my eyes were fix'd, but you:
Not grace, or zeal, love only was my call;
And if I lose thy love, I lose my all.
Come! with thy looks, thy words, relieve my woe;
Those still at least are left thee to bestow.
Still on that breast enamour'd let me lie,
Still drink delicious poison from thy eye,
Pant on thy lip, and to thy heart be press'd;
Give all thou canst—and let me dream the rest.
Ah, no! instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes,
Full in my view set all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God.

Ah! think at least thy flock deserves thy care,
Plants of thy hand, and children of thy prayer.
From the false world in early youth they fled,
By thee to mountains, wilds, and deserts led.
You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert smil'd,
And Paradise was open'd in the wild.
No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors;
No silver saints, by dying misers given,
Here bribe the rage of ill-requited Heaven;
But such plain roofs as Piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise.
In these lone walls, (their days eternal bound,)
These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.
But now no face divine contentment wears,
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears.
See how the force of others' prayers I try,
(O pious fraud of amorous charity!)
But why should I on others' prayers depend?
Come thou, my father, brother, husband, friend!

Ah, let thy handmaid, sister, daughter, move,
 And all those tender names in one, thy love!
 The darksome pines that o'er yon rocks reclin'd
 Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind,
 The wandering streams that shine between the hills,
 The grotts that echo to the tinkling rills,
 The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
 The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze;
 No more these scenes my meditation aid,
 Or lull to rest the visionary maid:
 But o'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
 Long-sounding aisles, and intermingled graves,
 Black Melancholy sits, and round her throws
 A death-like silence, and a dread repose;
 Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
 Shades every flower and darkens every green,
 Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
 And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Yet here for ever, ever must I stay;
 Sad proof how well a lover can obey!
 Death, only Death, can break the lasting chain;
 And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
 Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
 And wait till 'tis no sin to mix with thine.

Ah, wretch! believ'd the spouse of God in vain,
 Confess'd within the slave of love and man.
 Assist me, Heaven! but whence arose that prayer?
 Sprung it from piety, or from despair?

Ev'n here where frozen Chastity retires,
 Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.
 I ought to grieve, but cannot what I ought;
 I mourn the lover, not lament the fault;
 I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
 Repent old pleasures, and solicit new;
 Now turn'd to Heaven, I weep my past offence,
 Now think of thee, and curse my innocence.

Of all affliction taught a lover yet,
 'Tis sure the hardest science to forget!
 How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
 And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence?
 How the dear object from the crime remove,
 Or how distinguish penitence from love?
 Unequal task! a passion to resign,
 For hearts so touch'd, so pierc'd, so lost as mine!
 Ere such a soul regains its peaceful state,
 How often must it love, how often hate!
 How often hope, despair, resent, regret,
 Conceal, disdain, — do all things but forget!
 But let Heaven seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd:
 Not touch'd, but rapt; not waken'd, but inspir'd!
 Oh, come, oh, teach me Nature to subdue,
 Renounce my love, my life, myself — and you.
 Fill my fond heart with God alone, for he Alone can rival, can succeed to thee.

How happy is the blameless vestal's lot;
 The world forgetting, by the world forgot!
 Eternal sun-shine of the spotless mind!
 Each prayer accepted, and each wish resign'd;
 Labour and rest that equal periods keep;
 "Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep;"
 Desires compos'd, affections ever even;
 Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to Heaven.
 Grace shines around her with serenest beams,
 And whispering angels prompt her golden dreams.
 For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
 And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes;
 For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
 For her white virgins hymeneals sing:
 To sounds of heavenly harps she dies away,
 And melts in visions of eternal day.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ,
 Far other raptures of unholy joy:
 When, at the close of each sad, sorrowing day,
 Fancy restores what Vengeance snatch'd away,
 Then Conscience sleeps, and leaving Nature free,
 All my loose soul unbounded springs to thee.
 O curst, dear horrors of all-conscious night!
 How glowing guilt exalts the keen delight!
 Provoking demons all restraint remove,
 And stir within me every source of love.
 I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
 And round thy phantom glue my claspings arms.
 I wake: — no more I hear, no more I view,
 The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.
 I call aloud; it hears not what I say:
 I stretch my empty arms; it glides away.
 To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
 Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise!

Alas, no more! methinks we wandering go
 Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe,
 Where round some mouldering tower pale ivy creeps,
 And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deep.
 Sudden you mount, you beckon from the skies,
 Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise.
 I shriek, start up, the same sad prospect find,
 And wake to all the griefs I left behind.

For thee the Fates, severely kind, ordain
 A cool suspense from pleasure and from pain:
 Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose:
 No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows.
 Still as the sea, ere winds were taught to blow,
 Or moving spirit bade the waters flow;
 Soft as the slumbers of a saint forgiven,
 And mild as opening gleams of promis'd Heaven.

Come, Abelard! for what hast thou to dread?
 The torch of Venus burns not for the dead.
 Nature stands check'd; Religion disapproves,
 Ev'n thou art cold — yet Eloisa loves.
 Ah, hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn
 To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

What scenes appear where'er I turn my view!
 The dear ideas, where I fly, pursue,
 Rise in the grove, before the altar rise,
 Stain all my soul, and wanton in my eyes.
 I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee,
 Thy image steals between my God and me;
 Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
 With every bead I drop too soft a tear.
 When from the censer clouds of fragrance roll,
 And swelling organs lift the rising soul,
 One thought of thee puts all the pomp to flight,
 Priests, tapers, temples, swim before my sight:
 In seas of flame my plunging soul is drown'd,
 While altars blaze, and angels tremble round.

While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
 Kind, virtuous drops just gathering in my eye,
 While, praying, trembling, in the dust I roll,
 And dawning grace is opening on my soul:
 Come, if thou dar'st, all charming as thou art,
 Oppose thyself to Heaven; dispute my heart;
 Come, with one glance of those deluding eyes
 Blot out each bright idea of the skies;
 Take back that grace, those sorrows, and those tears
 Take back my fruitless penitence and prayers:
 Snatch me, just mounting, from the blest abode.
 Assist the fiends, and tear me from my God!

No, fly me, fly me, far as pole from pole!
 Rise Alps between us! and whole oceans roll!
 Ah, come not, write not, think not once of me,
 Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee.

Thy oaths I quit, thy memory resign !
 Forget, renounce me, hate whate'er was mine.
 Fair eyes, and tempting looks, (which yet I view !)
 Long lov'd, ador'd ideas, all adieu !
 O Grace serene ! O Virtue heavenly fair !
 Divine oblivion of low-thoughted Care !
 Fresh-blooming Hope, gay daughter of the sky !
 And Faith, our early immortality !
 Enter, each mild, each amicable guest ;
 Receive and wrap me in eternal rest !

See in her cell sad Eloïsa spread,
 Propt on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead.
 In each low wind methinks a spirit calls,
 And more than Echoes talk along the walls.
 Here, as I watch'd the dying lamp around,
 From yonder shrine I heard a hollow sound.
 "Come, sister, come !" (it said, or seem'd to say)
 "Thy place is here, sad sister, come away !
 Once like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd,
 Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid :
 But all is calm in this eternal sleep :
 Here Grief forgets to groan, and Love to weep ;
 Ev'n Superstition loses every fear ;
 For God, not man, absolves our frailties here."

I come, I come ! prepare your roseate bowers,
 Celestial palms, and ever-blooming flowers.
 Hither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
 Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphic glow ;
 Thou, Abelard ! the last sad office pay,
 And smooth my passage to the realms of day ;
 Let my lips tremble, and my eye-balls roll,
 Luck my last breath, and catch my flying soul !
 Ah, no — in sacred vestments mayst thou stand,
 The hallow'd taper trembling in thy hand,
 Present the cross before my lifted eye,
 Teach me at once, and learn of me to die.
 Ah, then thy once lov'd Eloïsa see !
 It will be then no crime to gaze on me.
 See from my cheek the transient roses fly !
 See the last sparkle languish in my eye !
 Till every motion, pulse, and breath be o'er ;
 And ev'n my Abelard be lov'd no more.

Death all eloquent ! you only prove
 That dust we doat on, when 'tis man we love.
 Then too, when Fate shall thy fair frame destroy,
 That cause of all my guilt, and all my joy,)
 A trance ecstatic may thy pangs be drown'd,
 Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round,
 From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
 And saints embrace thee with a love like mine !
 May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
 And graft my love immortal on thy fame !
 Then, ages hence, when all my woes are o'er,
 When this rebellious heart shall beat no more ;
 Ever chance two wandering lovers brings
 To Paraclete's white walls and silver springs,
 For the pale marble shall they join their heads,
 And drink the falling tears each other sheds ;
 Then sadly say, with mutual pity mov'd,
 O, may we never love as these have lov'd !"
 From the full choir, when loud hosannas rise,
 And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice,
 Amid that scene if some relenting eye
 Chance on the stone where our cold relics lie,
 Devotion's self shall steal a thought from Heaven,
 The human tear shall drop, and be forgiven.
 And sure if Fate some future bard shall join
 A sad similitude of griefs to mine,
 And mourn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
 And image charms he must behold no more ;

Such, if there be, who loves so long, so well ;
 Let him our sad, our tender story tell !
 The well-sung woes will sooth my pensive ghost ;
 He best can paint them who shall feel them most !

THE TEMPLE OF FAME.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1711.

The hint of the following piece was taken from Chaucer's House of Fame. The design is in a manner entirely altered, the descriptions and most of the particular thoughts my own ; yet I could not suffer it to be printed without this acknowledgment. The reader, who would compare this with Chaucer, may begin with his third book of Fame, there being nothing in the two first books that answers to their title.

The poem is introduced in the manner of the Provençal poets, whose works were for the most part visions, or pieces of imagination, and constantly descriptive. From these, Petrarch and Chaucer frequently borrowed the idea of their poems. See the Trionfi of the former, and the Dream, Flower and the Leaf, &c. of the latter. The author of this therefore chose the same sort of exordium.

In that soft season, when descending showers
 Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flowers ;
 When opening buds salute the welcome day,
 And earth relenting feels the genial ray ;
 As balmy sleep had charm'd my cares to rest,
 And love itself was banish'd from my breast,
 (What time the morn mysterious visions bring,
 While purer slumbers spread their golden wings,)
 A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
 And join'd, this intellectual scene compose.

I stood, methought, betwixt earth, seas and skies ;
 The whole creation open to my eyes :
 In air self-balanc'd hung the globe below,
 Where mountains rise, and circling oceans flow ;
 Here naked rocks, and empty wastes were seen ;
 There towering cities, and the forests green :
 Here sailing ships delight the wandering eyes !
 There trees and intermingled temples rise :
 Now a clear sun the shining scene displays ;
 The transient landscape now in clouds decays.

O'er the wide prospect as I gaz'd around,
 Sudden I heard a wild promiscuous sound,
 Like broken thunders that at distance roar,
 Or billows murmuring on the hollow shore :
 Then gazing up, a glorious pile beheld,
 Whose towering summit ambient clouds conceal'd
 High on a rock of ice the structure lay,
 Steep its ascent, and slippery was the way ;
 The wonderous rock like Parian marble shone,
 And seem'd, to distant sight, of solid stone.
 Inscriptions here of various names I view'd,
 The greater part by hostile time subdued ;
 Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,
 And poets once had promis'd they should last.
 Some fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd ;
 I look'd again, nor could their trace be found.

Critics I saw, that other names deface,
 And fix their own, with labour, in their place:
 Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
 Or disappear'd, and left the first behind.
 Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
 But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun;
 For Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
 Not more by Envy, than excess of Praise.
 Yet part no injuries of Heaven could feel,
 Like crystal faithful to the graving steel:
 The rock's high summit, in the temple's shade,
 Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade.
 Their names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past
 From Time's first birth, with Time itself shall last;
 These ever new, nor subject to decays,
 Spread and grow brighter with the length of days.

So Zembla's rocks (the beauteous work of frost)
 Rise white in air, and glitter o'er the coast;
 Pale suns, unfelt, at distance roll away,
 And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play;
 Eternal snows the growing mass supply,
 Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent sky;
 As Atlas fix'd, each hoary pile appears,
 The gather'd winter of a thousand years.
 On this foundation Fame's high temple stands;
 Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands.
 Whate'er proud Rome or artful Greece beheld,
 Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd.
 Four faces had the dome, and every face
 Of various structure, but of equal grace!
 Four brazen gates, on columns lifted high,
 Salute the different quarters of the sky.
 Here fabled chiefs in darker ages born,
 Or worthies old, whom arms or arts adorn,
 Who cities rais'd, or tam'd a monstrous race,
 The walls in venerable order grace:
 Heroes in animated marble frown,
 And legislators seem to think in stone.

Westward, a sumptuous frontispiece appear'd,
 On Doric pillars of white marble rear'd,
 Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
 And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold.
 In shaggy spoils here Theseus was beheld,
 And Perseus dreadful with Minerva's shield:
 There great Alcides, stooping with his toil,
 Rests on his club, and holds th' Hesperian spoil:
 Here Orpheus sings; trees moving to the sound
 Start from their roots, and form a shade around:
 Amphion there the loud creating lyre
 Strikes, and behold a sudden Thebes aspire!
 Cythæron's echoes answer to his call,
 And half the mountain rolls into a wall:
 There might you see the lengthening spires ascend,
 The domes swell up, the widening arches bend,
 The growing towers like exhalations rise,
 And the huge columns heave into the skies.

The eastern front was glorious to behold,
 With diamond flaming, and Barbaric gold.
 There Ninus shone, who spread th' Assyrian fame,
 And the great founder of the Persian name:
 There in long robes the royal Magi stand,
 Grave Zoroaster waves the circling wand:
 The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
 And Brachmans, deep in desert woods rever'd.
 These stopp'd the Moon, and call'd th' unbody'd shades

To midnight banquets in the glimmering glades;
 Made visionary fabrics round them rise,
 And airy spectres skim before their eyes;

Of talismans and sigils knew the power,
 And careful watch'd the planetary hour.
 Superior, and alone, Confucius stood,
 Who taught that useful science, to be good.

But on the south, a long majestic race
 Of Egypt's priests the gilded niches grace,
 Who measur'd Earth, describ'd the starry sphere,
 And trac'd the long records of lunar years.
 High on his car Sesostris struck my view,
 Whom sceptre'd slaves in golden harness drew:
 His hands a bow and pointed javelin hold;
 His giant limbs are arm'd in scales of gold.
 Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
 And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphics grac'd.

Of Gothic structure was the northern side,
 O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride.
 There huge Colosses rose, with trophies crown'd,
 And Runic characters were grav'd around.
 There sat Zamolxis with erected eyes,
 And Odin here in mimic trances dies.
 There on rude iron columns, smear'd with blood,
 The horrid forms of Scythian heroes stood,
 Druids and bards (their once loud harps unstrung),
 And youths that died to be by poets sung.
 These and a thousand more of doubtful fame,
 To whom old fables gave a lasting name,
 In ranks adorn'd the temple's outward face;
 The wall in lustre and effect like glass,
 Which, o'er each object casting various dyes,
 Enlarges some, and others multiplies:
 Nor void of emblem was the mystic wall,
 For thus romantic Fame increases all.

The temple shakes, the sounding gates unfold,
 Wide vaults appear, and roofs of fretted gold:
 Rais'd on a thousand pillars wreath'd around
 With laurel-foliage, and with eagles crown'd:
 Of bright transparent beryl were the walls,
 The friezes gold, and gold the capitals:
 As Heaven with stars, the roof with jewels glow,
 And ever-living lamps depend in rows.
 Full in the passage of each spacious gate,
 The sage historians in white garments wait;
 Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was found,
 His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound.
 Within stood heroes, who through loud alarms
 In bloody fields pursued renown in arms.
 High on a throne with trophies charg'd, I view'd
 The youth that all things but himself subdu'd;
 His feet on sceptres and tiaras trod,
 And his horn'd head bely'd the Lybian god.
 There Caesar, grac'd with both Minervas, shone;
 Caesar, the world's great master, and his own;
 Unmov'd, superior still in every state,
 And scarce detested in his country's fate.
 But chief were those, who not for empire fought,
 But with their toils their people's safety bought:
 High o'er the rest Epaminondas stood;
 Timoleon, glorious in his brother's blood;
 Bold Scipio, saviour of the Roman state;
 Great in his triumphs, in retirement great;
 And wise Aurelius, in whose well-taught mind
 With boundless power unbounded virtue join'd.
 His own strict judge, and patron of mankind.

Much suffering heroes next their honours claim
 Those of less noisy, and less guilty fame,
 Fair Virtue's silent train: supreme of these
 Here ever shines the godlike Socrates;
 He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
 At all times just, but when he sign'd the shell.

Here his abode the martyr'd Phœcian claims,
With Agis, not the last of Spartan names :
Unconquer'd Cato shows the wound he tore,
And Brutus his ill genius meets no more.

But in the centre of the hallow'd choir,
Six pompous columns o'er the rest aspire ;
Around the shrine itself of Fame they stand,
Hold the chief honours, and the fane command.
High on the first, the mighty Homer shone ;
Eternal adamant compos'd his throne ;
Father of verse ! in holy fillets drest,
His silver beard wav'd gently o'er his breast ;
Though blind, a boldness in his looks appears ;
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years.
The wars of Troy were round the pillar seen :
Here fierce Tydides wounds the Cyprian queen ;
Here Hector glorious from Patroclus' fall,
Here dragg'd in triumph round the Trojan wall.
Motion and life did every part inspire,
Bold was the work, and prov'd the master's fire ;
A strong expression most he seem'd t' affect,
And here and there disclos'd a brave neglect.

A golden column next in rank appear'd,
On which a shrine of purest gold was rear'd ;
Finish'd the whole, and labour'd every part,
With patient touches of unwearied Art :
The Mantuan there in sober triumph sat,
Compos'd his posture, and his look sedate ;
On Homer still he fix'd a reverent eye,
Great without pride, in modest majesty.
In living sculpture on the sides were spread
The Latian wars, and haughty Turnus dead ;
Æliza stretch'd upon the funeral pyre,
Æneas bending with his aged sire :
Troy flam'd in burning gold, and o'er the throne
ARMS AND THE MAN in golden cyphers shone.

Four swans sustain a car of silver bright,
With beads advanc'd, and pinions stretch'd for flight :
Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring god.
Across the harp a careless hand he flings,
And boldly sinks into the sounding strings.
The figur'd games of Greece the column grace,
Neptune and Jove survey the rapid race.
The youths hang o'er their chariots as they run ;
The fiery steeds seem starting from the stone ;
The champions in distorted postures threat ;
And all appear'd irregularly great.

Here happy Horace tun'd th' Ausonian lyre
To sweeter sounds, and temper'd Pindar's fire :
He mix'd with Alcæus' manly rage t' infuse
The softer spirit of the Sapphic Muse.
On polish'd pillar different sculptures grace ;
A work outlasting monumental brass.

Here smiling Loves and Bacchanals appear,
The Julian star and great Augustus here.
The doves that round the infant poet spread
Garlands and bays, hung hovering o'er his head.

Here, in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
He fix'd in thought the mighty Stagirite ;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround ;
His piercing eyes, erect, appear to view
Superior worlds, and look all Nature through.

With equal rays immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne :
Gathering his flowing robe, he seem'd to stand
To act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand
Behind, Rome's genius waits with civic crowns,
And the great father of his country owns.

These massy columns in a circle rise,
O'er which a pompous dome invades the skies :
Scarce to the top I stretch'd my aching sight,
So large it spread, and swell'd to such a height.
Full in the midst proud Fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great ;
The vivid emeralds there revive the eye,
The flaming rubies show their sanguine dye,
Bright azure rays from lively sapphires stream,
And lucid amber casts a golden gleam.
With various-colour'd light the pavement shone,
And all on fire appear'd the glowing throne ;
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays.
When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit's height ;
But swell'd to larger size, the more I gaz'd,
Till to the roof her towering front she rais'd.
With her, the temple every moment grew,
And ampler vistas open'd to my view :
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long aisles extend.
Such was her form, as ancient bards have told,
Wings raise her arms, and wings her feet infold ;
A thousand busy tongues the goddess bears,
And thousand open eyes, and thousand listening ears.
Beneath, in order rang'd, the tuneful Nine
(Her virgin handmaids) still attend the shrine :
With eyes on Fame for ever fix'd, they sing ;
For Fame they raise their voice, and tune the string ;
With Time's first birth began the heavenly lays,
And last, eternal, through the length of days.

Around these wonders as I cast a look,
The trumpet sounded, and the temple shook,
And all the nations, summon'd at the call,
From different quarters fill the crowded hall :
Of various tongues the mingled sounds were heard ;
In various garbs promiscuous throngs appear'd ;
Thick as the bees, that with the spring renew
Their flowery toils, and sip the fragrant dew,
When the wing'd colonies first tempt the sky,
O'er dusky fields and shaded waters fly,
Or, settling, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
And a low murmur runs along the field.
Millions of suppliant crowds the shrine attend,
And all degrees before the goddess bend ;
The poor, the rich, the valiant, and the sage,
And boasting youth, and narrative old-age.
Their pleas were different, their request the same ;
For good and bad alike are fond of Fame.
Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd ;
Unlike successes equal merits found.

Thus her blind sister, fickle Fortune, reigns,
And undiscerning scatters crowns and chains.

First at the shrine the learned world appear,
And to the goddess thus prefer their prayer.
" Long have we sought t' instruct and please mankind,

With studies pale, with midnight vigils blind ;
But thank'd by few, rewarded yet by none,
We here appeal to thy superior throne :
On wit and learning the just prize bestow,
For Fame is all we must expect below."

The goddess heard, and bade the Muses raise
The golden trumpet of eternal Praise :
From pole to pole the winds diffuse the sound,
That fills the circuit of the world around ;
Not all at once, as thunder breaks the cloud ;
The notes at first were rather sweet than loud :

By just degrees they every moment rise,
Fill the wide Earth, and gain upon the skies.
At every breath were balmy odours shed,
Which still grew sweeter, as they wider spread :
Less fragrant scents th' unfolding rose exhales,
Or spices breathing in Arabian gales.

Next these the good and just, an awful train,
Thus on their knees address the sacred fane.
" Since living virtue is with envy curs'd,
And the best men are treated like the worst,
Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
And give each deed th' exact intrinsic worth."
" Not with bare justice shall your act be crown'd,"
(Said Fame) " but high above desert renown'd :
Let fuller notes th' applauding world amaze,
And the loud clarion labour in your praise."

This band dismiss'd, behold another crowd
Prefer'd the same request, and lowly bow'd ;
The constant tenour of whose well-spent days
No less deserv'd a just return of praise.
But straight the direful trump of Slander sounds ;
Through the big dome the doubling thunder bounds ;

Loud as the burst of cannon rends the skies,
The dire report through every region flies,
In every ear incessant rumours rung,
And gathering scandals grew on every tongue.
From the black trumpet's rusty concave broke
Sulphureous flames, and clouds of rolling smoke :
The poisonous vapour blots the purple skies,
And withers all before it as it flies.

A troop came next, who crowns and armour wore,
And proud defiance in their looks they bore :
" For thee" (they cry'd), " amidst alarms and strife,
We sail'd in tempests down the stream of life ;
For thee whole nations fill'd with flames and blood,
And swam to empire through the purple flood.
Those ills we dar'd, thy inspiration own ;
What virtue seem'd, was done for thee alone."
" Ambitious fools !" (the queen reply'd, and frown'd)
" Be all your acts in dark oblivion drown'd ;
There sleep forgot, with mighty tyrants gone,
Your statues moulder'd, and your names unknown !"
A sudden cloud straight snatch'd them from my sight,

And each majestic phantom sunk in night.

Then came the smallest tribe I yet had seen ;
Plain was their dress, and modest was their mien.
" Great idol of mankind ! we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to Fame !
But, safe in deserts from th' applause of men,
Would die unheard of, as we liv'd unseen.
'Tis all we beg thee, to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite.
O let us still the secret joys partake,
To follow Virtue ev'n for Virtue's sake."

" And live there men, who slight immortal Fame?
Who then with incense shall adore our name?
But, mortals ! know, 'tis still our greatest pride,
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide.
Rise ! Muses, rise ! add all your tuneful breath ;
These must not sleep in darkness and in death."
She said : in air the trembling music floats,
And on the winds triumphant swell the notes ;
So soft, though high, so loud, and yet so clear,
Ev'n listening angels lean from Heaven to hear :
To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies.

Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd :

" Hither," they cry'd, " direct your eyes, and see
The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry ;
Ours is the place at banquets, balls, and plays ;
Sprightly our nights, polite are all our days ;
Courts we frequent, where 'tis our pleasing care
To pay due visits, and address the fair :
In fact, 'tis true, no nymph we could persuade,
But still in fancy vanquish'd every maid ;
Of unknown duchesses lewd tales we tell,
Yet, would the world believe us, all were well.
The joy let others have, and we the name,
And what we want in pleasure, grant in fame."

The queen assents, the trumpet rends the skies,
And at each blast a lady's honour dies.

Pleas'd with the same success, vast numbers press
Around the shrine, and made the same request :

" What you !" (she cry'd) " unlearn'd in arts to please,

Slaves to yourselves, and ev'n fatigued with ease,
Who lose a length of undeserving days,
Would you usurp the lover's dear-bought praise ?
To just contempt, ye vain pretenders, fall,

The people's fable, and the scorn of all."
Straight the black clarion sends a horrid sound,
Loud laughs burst out, and bitter scoffs fly round.
Whispers are heard, with taunts reviling loud,
And scornful hisses run through all the crowd.

Last, those who boast of mighty mischiefs done,
Enslave their country, or usurp a throne !
Or who their glory's dire foundation laid
On sovereigns ruin'd, or on friends betray'd :
Calm, thinking villains, whom no faith could fix,
Of crooked counsels and dark politics ;
Of these a gloomy tribe surround the throne,
And beg to make th' immortal treasons known.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem'd to set the world on fire.
At the dread sound, pale mortals stood aghast,
And startled Nature trembled with the blast. [known

This having heard and seen, some power un-Straight chang'd the scene, and snatch'd me from the throne.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
Its site uncertain, if in earth or air ;
With rapid motion turn'd the mansion round ;
With ceaseless noise the ringing walls resound ;
Not less in number were the spacious doors,
Than leaves on trees, or sands upon the shores ;
Which still unfolded stand, by night, by day,
Pervious to winds, and open every way.
As flames by nature to the skies ascend,
As weighty bodies to the centre tend,
As to the sea returning rivers roll,
And the touch'd needle trembles to the Pole ;
Hither, as to their proper place, arise
All various sounds from earth, and seas, and skies.
Or spoke aloud, or whisper'd in the ear ;
Nor ever silence, rest, or peace, is here.
As on the smooth expanse of crystal lakes
The sinking stone at first a circle makes ;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third ;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the watery plain, and to the margin dance.
Thus every voice and sound, when first they break
On neighbouring air a soft impression make ;
Another ambient circle then they move ;
That, in its turn, impels the next above ;
Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element.

There various news I heard of love and strife,
Of peace and war, health, sickness, death, and life,
(Of loss and gain, of famine and of store,
(Of storms at sea, and travels on the shore,
(Of prodigies, and portents seen in air,
Of fires and plagues, and stars with blazing hair,
Of turns of fortune, changes in the state,
The falls of favourites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new :
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.

Above, below, without, within, around,
Confus'd, unnumber'd multitudes are found,
Who pass, repass, advance, and glide away ;
Hosts rais'd by fear, and phantoms of a day :
Astrologers, that future fates foreshow,
Projectors, quacks, and lawyers not a few ;
And priests, and party zealots, numerous bands
With home-born lies, or tales from foreign lands ;
Each talk'd aloud, or in some secret place,
And wild impatience star'd in every face.
The flying rumours gather'd as they roll'd,
Scarce any tale was sooner heard than told ;
And all who told it added something new,
And all who heard it made enlargements too,
In every ear it spread, on every tongue it grew.
Thus flying east and west, and north and south,
News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth.
So from a spark, that kindled first by chance,
With gathering force the quickening flames advance ;

Till to the clouds their curling heads aspire,
And towers and temples sink in floods of fire.

When thus ripe lies are to perfection sprung,
Full grown, and fit to grace a mortal tongue,
Through thousand vents, impatient, forth they flow,
And rush in millions on the world below ;
Fame sits aloft, and points them out their course,
Their date determines, and prescribes their force :
Some to remain, and some to perish soon ;
Or wane and wax alternate like the Moon.

Around a thousand winged wonders fly, [the sky.
Borne by the trumpet's blast, and scatter'd through

There, at one passage, oft you might survey
Lie and truth contending for the way ;
And long 'twas doubtful, though so closely pent,
Which first should issue through the narrow vent :
At last agreed, together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie ;

The strict companions are for ever join'd,
And this or that unmix'd, no mortal e'er shall find.

While thus I stood, intent to see and hear,
He came, methought, and whisper'd in my ear :

"What could thus high thy rash ambition raise ?
In thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise ?"

" 'Tis true," said I, " not void of hopes I came,
For who so fond as youthful bards of Fame ?

But few, alas ! the casual blessing boast,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost.

How vain that second life in others breath,
The estate which wits inherit after death !

Peace, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine !)

The great man's curse, without the gains, endure,
Be envy'd, wretched, and be flatter'd, poor ;

All luckless wits their enemies profess,
And all successful, jealous friends at best.

Nor Fame I slight, nor for her favours call ;
He comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all.

But if the purchase costs so dear a price
Is soothing Folly, or exalting Vice :

Oh ! if the Muse must flatter lawless sway,
And follow still where Fortune leads the way ;
Or if no basis bear my rising name,
But the fall'n ruins of another's fame ;
Then teach me, Heaven ! to scorn the guilty bays,
Drive from my breast that wretched lust of praise ;
Unblemish'd let me live, or die unknown ;
Oh, grant an honest fame, or grant me none !"

THE FABLE OF DRYOPE.

FROM OVID'S METAMORPHOSES, BOOK IX.

SHE said, and for her lost Galanthis sighs,
When the fair consort of her son replies :
Since you a servant's ravish'd form bemoan,
And kindly sigh for sorrows not your own ;
Let me (if tears and grief permit) relate
A nearer woe, a sister's stranger fate.
No nymph of all Æchalia could compare
For beauteous form with Dryope the fair,
Her tender mother's only hope and pride
(Myself the offering of a second bride).
This nymph, compress'd by him who rules the day,
Whom Delphi and the Delian isle obey,
Andræmon lov'd ; and, bless'd in all those charms
That pleas'd a god, succeeded to her arms.

A lake there was, with shelving banks around,
Whose verdant summit fragrant myrtles crown'd.
These shades, unknowing of the Fates, she sought,
And to the Naiads flowery garlands brought ;
Her smiling babe (a pleasing charge) she prest
Within her arms, and nourish'd at her breast.
Not distant far, a watery lotos grows ;
The spring was new, and all the verdant boughs,
Adorn'd with blossoms, promis'd fruits that vie
In glowing colours with the Tyrian dye :
Of these she cropp'd to please her infant son ;
And I myself the same rash act had done ;
But lo ! I saw (as near her side I stood)
The violated blossoms drop with blood.
Upon the tree I cast a frightful look ;
The trembling tree with sudden horror shook.
Lotis the nymph (if rural tales be true),
As from Priapus' lawless lust she flew,
Forsook her form ; and, fixing here, became
A flowery plant, which still preserves her name.

This change unknown, astonish'd at the sight,
My trembling sister strove to urge her flight :
And first the pardon of the nymphs implor'd,
And those offended sylvan powers ador'd :
But when she backward would have fled, she found
Her stiffening feet were rooted in the ground :
In vain to free her fastening feet she strove,
And, as she struggles, only moves above ;
She feels th' encroaching bark around her grow
By quick degrees, and cover all below :
Surpris'd at this, her trembling hand she heaves
To rend her hair ; her hand is fill'd with leaves :
Where late was hair, the shooting leaves are seen
To rise, and shade her with a sudden green.
The child Amphissus, to her bosom press'd,
Perceiv'd a colder and a harder breast,
And found the springs, that ne'er till then deny'd
Their milky moisture, on a sudden dry'd.

I saw, unhappy ! what I now relate,
And stood the helpless witness of thy fate,

Embrac'd thy boughs, thy rising bark delay'd,
There wish'd to grow, and mingle shade with shade.

Behold Andromon and th' unhappy sire
Appear, and for their Dryope inquire ;
A springing tree for Dryope they find,
And print warm kisses on the panting rind ;
Prostrate, with tears their kindred plant bedew,
And close embrace as to the roots they grew.
The face was all that now remain'd of thee,
No more a woman, nor yet quite a tree ;
Thy branches hung with humid pearls appear,
From every leaf distils a trickling tear,
And straight a voice, while yet a voice remains,
Thus through the trembling boughs in sighs complains :

" If to the wretched any faith be given,
I swear by all th' un pitying powers of Heaven,
No wilful crime this heavy vengeance bred ;
In mutual innocence our lives we led :
If this be false, let these new greens decay,
Let sounding axes lop my limbs away,
And crackling flames on all my honours prey !
But from my branching arms this infant bear,
Let some kind nurse supply a mother's care :
And to his mother let him oft be led,
Sport in her shades, and in her shades be fed ;
Teach him, when first his infant voice shall frame
Imperfect words, and lisp his mother's name,
To hail this tree ; and say, with weeping eyes,
Within this plant my hapless parent lies :
And when in youth he seeks the shady woods,
Oh, let him fly the crystal lakes and floods,
Nor touch the fatal flowers ; but warn'd by me,
Believe a goddess shrin'd in every tree.
My sire, my sister, and my spouse, farewell !
If in your breasts or love or pity dwell,
Protect your plant, nor let my branches feel
The browsing cattle, or the piercing steel.
Farewell ! and since I cannot bend to join
My lips to yours, advance at least to mine.
My son, thy mother's parting kiss receive,
While yet thy mother has a kiss to give.
I can no more ; the creeping rind invades
My closing lips, and hides my head in shades :
Remove your hands ; the bark shall soon suffice
Without their aid to seal these dying eyes."

She ceas'd at once to speak, and ceas'd to be ;
And all the nymph was lost within the tree ;
Yet latent life through her new branches reign'd,
And long the plant a human heat retain'd.

VERTUMNUS AND POMONA.

FROM OVID'S METAMORPHOSES, BOOK IV.

THE fair Pomona flourish'd in his reign :
Of all the virgins of the sylvan train,
None taught the trees a nobler race to bear,
Or more improv'd the vegetable care.
To her the shady grove, the flowery field,
The streams and fountains, no delights could yield ;
'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
And see the boughs with happy burthens bend.
The hook she bore instead of Cynthia's spear,
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to spring.
Now the cleft rind inserted grafts receives,
And yields an offspring more than Nature gives ;

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy.
Her private orchards, wall'd on every side,
To lawless sylvans all access deny'd.
How oft the Satyrs and the wanton Fauns,
Who haunt the forest, or frequent the lawns,
The god whose ensign scares the birds of prey,
And old Silenus, youthful in decay,
Employ'd their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences, and surprise the fair !
Like these, Vertumnus own'd his faithful flames,
Like these, rejected by the scornful dame.
To gain her sight a thousand forms he wears :
And first a reaper from the field appears ;
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain
O'ercharge the shoulders of the seeming swain.
Oft o'er his back a crooked scythe is laid,
And wreaths of hay his sun-burnt temples shade :
Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears,
Like one who late unyok'd the sweating steers.
Sometimes his pruning-hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.
Now gathering what the bounteous year allows,
He pulls ripe apples from the bending boughs.
A soldier now, he with his sword appears ;
A fisher next, his trembling angle bears,
Each shape he varies, and each art he tries,
On her bright charms to feast his longing eyes.

A female form at last Vertumnus wears,
With all the marks of reverend age appears,
His temples thinly spread with silver hairs :
Propp'd on his staff, and stooping as he goes,
A painted mitre shades his furrow'd brows.
The god, in this decrepit form array'd,
The gardens enter'd, and the fruit survey'd ;
And " Happy you !" (he thus address'd the maid)
" Whose charms as far all other nymphs out-shine,
As other gardens are excell'd by thine !"
Then kiss'd the fair ; (his kisses warmer grow
Than such as women on their sex bestow ;)
Then, plac'd beside her on the flowery ground,
Beheld the trees with autumn's bounty crown'd.
An elm was near, to whose embraces led,
The curling vine her swelling clusters spread :
He view'd her twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight.

" Yet this tall elm, but for his vine" (he said)
" Had stood neglected, and a barren shade ;
And this fair vine, but that her arms surround
Her marry'd elm, had crept along the ground.
Ah, beauteous maid ! let this example move
Your mind, averse from all the joys of love :
Deign to be lov'd, and every heart subdue !
What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you '
Not she whose beauty urg'd the Centaur's arms,
Ulysses' queen, nor Helen's fatal charms.
Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain,
A thousand sylvans, demigods, and gods,
That haunt our mountains, and our Alban woods.
But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise,
And one whose tender care is far above
All that these lovers ever felt of love,
(Far more than e'er can by yourself be guess'd :
Fix on Vertumnus, and reject the rest.
For his firm faith I dare engage my own ;
Scarce to himself, himself is better known.

o distant lands Vertumnus never roves ;
 like you, contented with his native groves ;
 or at first sight, like most, admires the fair ;
 & you he lives ; and you alone shall share
 his last affection, as his early care.
 Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
 with youth immortal, and with beauty blest.
 And that he varies every shape with ease,
 and tries all forms that may Pomona please.
 But what should most excite a mutual flame,
 our rural cares and pleasures are the same.
 To him your orchard's early fruit are due,
 A pleasing offering when 'tis made by you,
 He values these ; but yet (alas) ! complains,
 That still the best and dearest gift remains.
 'Tis the fair fruit that on yon branches glows
 With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows ;
 & tasteful herbs that in these gardens rise,
 Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies ;
 But only you, can move the god's desire :
 O crown so constant and so pure a fire !
 O soft compassion touch your gentle mind ;
 Oink, 'tis Vertumnus begs you to be kind ;
 May no frost, when early buds appear,
 Destroy the promise of the youthful year ;
 & winds, when first your florid orchard blows,
 Shake the light blossoms from their blasted boughs !"
 This when the various god had urg'd in vain,
 He straight assum'd his native form again ;
 And so bright an aspect now he bears,
 When through clouds th' emerging Sun appears,
 And thence exerting his refulgent ray,
 Dispels the darkness, and reveals the day.
 Once he prepar'd, but check'd the rash design :
 When, appearing in a form divine,
 A nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
 Of charming features, and a youthful face ;
 Her soft breast consenting passions move,
 And the warm maid confess'd a mutual love.

AN ESSAY ON MAN,

IN FOUR EPISTLES,

TO H. ST. JOHN, LORD BOLINGBROKE.

EPISTLE I.

THE NATURE AND STATE OF MAN WITH RESPECT TO THE UNIVERSE.

The Argument.

man in the abstract. — I. That we can judge only with regard to our own system, being ignorant of the relations of systems and things. II. That man is not to be deemed imperfect, but as being suited to his place and rank in the creation, agreeable to the general order of things, and conformable to ends and relations to him unknown. III. That it is partly upon his ignorance of future events, and partly upon the hope of a future state, that all his happiness in the present depends. IV. The pride of aiming at more knowledge, and pretending to more perfection, the cause of man's error and misery. The impiety of putting himself in the place of God, and judging of the fitness or unfitness, perfection or imper-

 fection, justice or injustice, of his dispensations.
 V. The absurdity of conceiving himself the final cause of the creation, or expecting that perfection
 in the moral world, which is not in the natural.
 VI. The unreasonableness of his complaints against Providence, while on the one hand he demands the perfection of the angels, and on the other the bodily qualifications of the brutes ;
 though, to possess any of the sensitive faculties
 in a higher degree, would render him miserable.
 VII. That throughout the whole visible world, an universal order and gradation in the sensual and mental faculties is observed, which causes a subordination of creature to creature, and of all creatures to man. The gradations of sense, instinct, thought, reflection, reason ; that reason alone countervails all the other faculties. VIII. How much farther this order and subordination of living creatures may extend above and below us ;
 were any part of which broken, not that part only, but the whole connected creation must be destroyed. IX. The extravagance, madness, and pride of such a desire. X. The consequence of all the absolute submission due to Providence,
 both as to our present and future state.

AWAKE, my St. John ! leave all meaner things
 To low ambition and the pride of kings.
 Let us (since life can little more supply
 Than just to look about us, and to die)
 Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man ;
 A mighty maze ! but not without a plan :
 A wild, where weeds and flowers promiscuous shoot ;
 Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
 Together let us beat this ample field,
 Try what the open, what the covert yield ;
 The latent tracts, the giddy heights, explore
 Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar ;
 Eye Nature's walks, shoot Folly as it flies,
 And catch the manners living as they rise :
 Laugh where we must, be candid where we can ;
 But vindicate the ways of God to man.

I. Say, first, of God above, or man below,
 What can we reason, but from what we know ?
 Of man, what see we but his station here,
 From which to reason, or to which refer ?
 Through worlds unnumber'd though the God be known,

'Tis ours to trace him only in our own.
 He, who through vast immensity can pierce,
 See worlds on worlds compose one universe,
 Observe how system into system runs,
 What other planets circle other suns,
 What vary'd Being peoples every star,
 May tell why Heaven has made us as we are.
 But of this frame the bearings and the ties,
 The strong connections, nice dependencies,
 Gradations just, has thy pervading soul
 Look'd through ? or can a part contain the whole ?

Is the great chain, that draws all to agree,
 And drawn supports, upheld by God, or thee ?

II. Presumptuous man ! the reason wouldst thou
 find,

Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind ?
 First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
 Why form'd no weaker, blinder, and no less ?
 Ask of thy mother Earth, why oaks are made
 Taller or weaker than the weeds they shade ?

Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's Satellites are less than Jove?

Of systems possible, if 'tis confest,
That Wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must full or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree;
Then, in the scale of reasoning life, 'tis plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man:
And all the question (wrangle e'er so long)
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong?

Respecting man, whatever wrong we call
May, must be right, as relative to all.
In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain:
In God's, one single can its end produce;
Yet serves to second too some other use.
So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

When the proud steed shall know why man restrains

His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains;
When the dull ox, why now he breaks the clod,
Is now a victim, and now Ægypt's god:
Then shall man's pride and dulness comprehend
His actions', passions', being's, use and end;
Why doing, suffering, check'd, impell'd; and why
This hour a slave, the next a deity.

Then say not Man's imperfect, Heaven in fault;
Say, rather, Man's as perfect as he ought:
His knowledge measur'd to his state and place;
His time a moment, and a point his space.
If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here, or there?
The blest to day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. [Fate,

III. Heaven from all creatures hides the book of
All but the page prescrib'd, their present state:
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know:
Or who could suffer being here below?

(The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flowery food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
O! blindness to the future! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by Heaven:
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms or systems into ruin hurl'd,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Hope humbly then; with trembling pinions soar,
Wait the great teacher, Death; and God adore.
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast:
(Man never Is, but always To be blest:
The soul, uneasy, and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind;
His soul proud Science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
Yet simple Nature to his hope has given,
Behind the cloud-tipt hill, an humbler Heaven;
Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the watery waste,
Where slaves once more their native land behold,
No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.

To be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

IV. Go, wiser thou! and in thy scale of sense,
Weigh thy opinion against Providence;
Call imperfection what thou fancy'st such;
Say, here he gives too little, there too much:
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet say, if man's unhappy, God's unjust;
If man alone ingross not Heaven's high care,
Alone made perfect here, immortal there:
Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod.
Re-judge his justice, be the god of God.
In Pride, in reasoning Pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.
Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,
Men would be angels, angels would be gods.
(Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel:
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' Eternal Cause.

V. Ask for what end the heavenly bodies shine,
Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "Tis for mine."
For me kind Nature wakes her genial power;
Suckles each herb, and spreads out every flower;
Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
For me, the mine a thousand treasures brings;
For me, health gushes from a thousand springs;
Seas roll to waft me, suns to light me rise;
My foot-stool Earth, my canopy the skies."
But errs not Nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend,
When earthquakes swallow, or when tempests sweep
Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep:
"No," 'tis reply'd, "the first Almighty Cause
Acts not by partial, but by general laws;
Th' exceptions few; some change since all began:
And what created perfect?" Why then man?
If the great end be human happiness,
Then Nature deviates; and can man do less?
As much that end a constant course requires
Of showers and sun-shine, as of man's desires;
As much eternal springs and cloudless skies,
As men for ever temperate, calm, and wise.
If plagues or earthquakes break not Heaven's design,
Why then a Borgia, or a Catiline;
Who knows, but he whose hand the lightning forms
Who heaves old Ocean, and who wings the storm
Pours fierce ambition in a Caesar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind
From pride, from pride our very reasoning springs
Account for moral as for natural things:
Why charge we Heaven in those, in these acquiesce?
In both, to reason right, is to submit.

Better for us, perhaps, it might appear,
Were there all harmony, all virtue here;
That never air or ocean felt the wind,
That never passion discompos'd the mind.
But all subsists by elemental strife;
And passions are the elements of life.
The general order, since the whole began,
Is kept in Nature, and is kept in man.

VI. What would this man? Now upward would he soar,
And, little less than angel, would be more;
Now looking downwards, just as griev'd appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.

made for his use all creatures if he call,
 by what their use, had he the powers of all?
 Nature to these without profusion, kind,
 the proper organs, proper powers assign'd;
 each seeming want compensated of course,
 here with degrees of swiftness, there of force;
 all in exact proportion to the state;
 nothing to add, and nothing to abate.
 Each beast, each insect, happy in its own:
 'Heaven unkind to man, and man alone?
 Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
 be pleas'd with nothing, if not blest with all?

The bliss of man (could Pride that blessing find)
 is not to act or think beyond mankind;
 his powers of body or of soul to share,
 let what his nature and his state can bear.
 Why has not man a microscopic eye?
 For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
 If what the use, were finer optics given,
 'Inspect a mite, not comprehend the Heaven?
 Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
 no smart and agonize at every pore?
 Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
 be of a rose in aromatic pain?

Nature thunder'd in his opening ears,
 and stunn'd him with the music of the spheres,
 how would he wish that Heaven had left him still the whispering zephyr, and the purling rill!
 Who finds not Providence all good and wise,
 like in what it gives, and what denies?

VII. Far as creation's ample range extends,
 the scale of sensual, mental powers ascends:
 mark how it mounts to man's imperial race,
 from the green myriads in the peopled grass:
 what modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
 the mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam;
 the snail, the headlong lioness between,
 and bound sagacious on the tainted green;
 the bearing, from the life that fills the flood,
 to that which warbles through the vernal wood!
 the spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
 at each thread, and lives along the line:
 the nice bee, what sense so subtly true
 the poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew!
 how Instinct varies in the grovelling swine,
 compar'd, half-reasoning elephant, with thine!
 betwixt that, and Reason, what a nice barrier!
 never separate, yet for ever near!
 remembrance and Reflection how allied!
 that thin partitions Sense from Thought divide!
 all middle natures, how they long to join,
 yet never pass th' insuperable line!
 without this just gradation, could they be object'd, these to those, or all to thee?
 the powers of all subdued by thee alone,
 can thy Reason all these powers in one?

VIII. See, through this air, this ocean, and this earth,

all matter quick, and bursting into birth.
 above, how high! progressive life may go!
 around, how wide! how deep extend below!
 what chain of being! which from God began,
 lectures ethereal, human, angel, man,
 beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
 no glass can reach; from Infinite to thee,
 from thee to Nothing. — On superior powers
 how we to press, inferior might on ours;
 let in the full creation leave a void,
 how one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd:

From Nature's chain whatever link you strike,
 Tenth, or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike.

And, if each system in gradation roll
 Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
 The least confusion but in one, not all
 That system only, but the whole must fall
 Let Earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
 Planets and suns run lawless through the sky;
 Let ruling angels from their spheres be hurl'd,
 Being on being wreck'd, and world on world;
 Heaven's whole foundations to their centre nod,
 And Nature trembles to the throne of God.
 All this dread order break — for whom? for thee?
 Vile worm! — oh madness! pride! impiety!

IX. What if the foot, ordain'd the dust to tread,
 Or hand, to toil, aspir'd to be the head?
 What if the head, the eye, or ear, repin'd
 To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?
 Just as absurd for any part to claim
 To be another in this general frame:
 Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains
 The great directing mind of all ordains.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
 Whose body Nature is, and God the soul;
 That chang'd through all, and yet in all the same;
 Great in the Earth, as in th' ethereal frame;
 Warms in the Sun, refreshes in the breeze,
 Glows in the stars, and blossoms in the trees;
 Lives through all life, extends through all extent;
 Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
 Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
 As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart,
 As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,
 As the rapt seraph that adores and burns:
 To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
 He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all.

X. Cease, then, nor order imperfection name:
 Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.
 Know thy own point: this kind, this due degree
 Of blindness, weakness, Heaven bestows on thee.
 Submit. — In this, or any other sphere,
 Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear:
 Safe in the hand of one disposing Power,
 Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
 All Nature is but Art, unknown to thee;
 All Chance, Direction, which thou canst not see;
 All Discord, Harmony not understood;
 All partial Evil, universal Good.
 And, spite of Pride, in erring Reason's spite,
 One truth is clear, WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.

EPISTLE II.

OF THE NATURE AND STATE OF MAN WITH RESPECT
 TO HIMSELF, AS AN INDIVIDUAL

Argument.

I. The business of man not to pry into God, but to study himself. His middle nature: his powers and frailties. The limits of his capacity. II. The two principles of man, self-love and reason, both necessary. Self-love the stronger, and why. Their end the same. III. The passions, and their use. The predominant passion, and its force. Its necessity, in directing men to different purposes. Its providential use, in fixing our principle, and ascertaining our virtue. IV. Virtue and vice joined in our mixed nature; the limits near, yet the things separate and evident: what is the office of reason. V. How odious vice in itself, and how we deceive ourselves into it. VI. That, however, the ends of Providence and general good are answered in our passions and imperfections. How usefully these are distributed to all orders of men. How useful they are to society; and to individuals, in every state, and every age of life.

I. Know then thyself, presume not God to scan,
The proper study of mankind is man.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great:
With too much knowledge for the Sceptic side,
With too much weakness for the Stoic's pride,
He hangs between; in doubt to act, or rest;
In doubt to deem himself a god, or beast;
In doubt his mind or body to prefer;
Born but to die, and reasoning but to err;
Alike in ignorance, his reason such,
Whether he thinks too little, or too much:
Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd, or disabus'd;
Created half to rise, and half to fall;
Great lord of all things, yet a prey to all;
Sole judge of truth, in endless error hurl'd:
The glory, jest, and riddle of the world! [guides,

Go, wondrous creature! mount where Science
Go, measure Earth, weigh air, and state the tides;
Instruct the planets in what orbs to run,
Correct old Time, and regulate the Sun;
Go, soar with Plato to th' empyreal sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair;
Or tread the mazy round his followers trod,
And quitting sense call imitating God;
As eastern priests in giddy circles run,
And turn their heads to imitate the Sun.
Go, teach Eternal Wisdom how to rule—
Then drop into thyself, and be a fool!

Superior beings, when of late they saw
A mortal man unfold all Nature's law,
Admir'd such wisdom in an earthly shape,
And show'd a Newton as we show an ape.

Could he, whose rules the rapid comet bind,
Describe or fix one movement of his mind!
Who saw its fires here rise and there descend,
Explain his own beginning or his end?
Alas, what wonder! Man's superior part
Uncheck'd may rise, and climb from art to art;
But when his own great work is but begun,
What Reason weaves, by Passion is undone.

Trace Science, then, with Modesty thy guide;
First strip off all her equipage of Pride;
Deduct what is but Vanity or dress,
Or Learning's luxury, or Idleness;
Or tricks to show the stretch of human brain,
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all our Vices have created Arts;
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come!

II. Two principles in human nature reign;
Self-love, to urge, and Reason, to restrain;
Nor this a good, nor that a bad we call,
Each works its end, to move or govern all:
And to their proper operations still,
Ascribe all good, to their improper, ill.

Self-love, the spring of motion, acts the soul;
Reason's comparing balance rules the whole.

Man, but for that, no action could attend,
And but for this, were active to no end:
Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot;
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot,
Or, meteor-like, flame lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd.

Most strength the moving principle requires
Active its task, it prompts, impels, inspires.
Sedate and quiet the comparing lies,
Form'd but to check, deliberate, and advise.
Self-love, still stronger, as its objects nigh;
Reason's at distance, and in prospect lie:
That sees immediate good by present sense;
Reason, the future and the consequence.
Thicker than arguments, temptations throng,
At best more watchful this, but that more strong:
The action of the stronger to suspend,
Reason still use, to Reason still attend.
Attention, habit, and experience gains;
Each strengthens Reason, and Self-love restrains;
Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight:
More studious to divide than to unite;
And Grace and Virtue, Sense and Reason split,
With all the rash dexterity of Wit.
Wits, just like fools, at war about a name,
Have full as oft no meaning, or the same.
Self-love and Reason to one end aspire,
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire;
But greedy that, his object would devour,
This taste the honey, and not wound the flower.
Pleasure, or wrong or rightly understood,
Our greatest evil, or our greatest good.

III. Modes of Self-love the passions we may call
'Tis real good, or seeming, moves them all:
But since not every good we can divide,
And Reason bids us for our own provide;
Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair,
List under Reason, and deserve her care;
Those, that imparted, court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name.

In lazy apathy let Stoics boast
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fix'd as in a frost;
Contracted all, retiring to the breast;
But strength of mind is exercise, not rest:
The rising tempest puts in act the soul;
Parts it may ravage, but preserves the whole.
On life's vast ocean diversely we sail,
Reason the card, but Passion is the gale;
Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind.

Passions, like elements, though born to fight,
Yet, mix'd and soften'd, in his work unite:
These 'tis enough to temper and employ;
But what composes man, can man destroy?
Suffice that Reason keep to Nature's road,
Subject, compound them, follow her and God.
Love, Hope, and Joy, fair Pleasure's smiling train;
Hate, Fear, and Grief, the family of Pain;
These, mixt with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind;
The lights and shades whose well-accorded strains
Gives all the strength and colour of our life.

Pleasures are ever in our hands and eyes;
And when in act they cease, in prospect rise:
Present to grasp, and future still to find,
The whole employ of body and of mind.
All spread their charms, but charm not all alike:
On different senses, different objects strike:
Hence different passions more or less inflame
As strong or weak, the organs of the frame.

hence one master passion in the breast,
 e Aaron's serpent, swallows up the rest.
 man, perhaps, the moment of his breath,
 gives the lurking principle of Death;
 young disease, which must subdue at length, ws with his growth, and strengthens with his strength:

cast and mingled with his very frame,
 e mind's disease, its Ruling Passion came;
 th vital humour which should feed the whole,
 a flows to this, in body and in soul:
 stever warms the heart, or fills the head,
 the mind opens, and its functions spread,
 gination plies her dangerous art,
 l pours it all upon the peccant part.
 Nature its mother, Habit is its nurse;
 Spirit, Faculties, but make it worse;
 son itself but gives it edge and power;
 Heaven's blest beam turns vinegar more sour.
 e, wretched subjects though to lawful sway,
 his weak queen, some favourite still obey:

if she lend not arms, as well as rules,
 it can she more than tell us we are fools?
 th us to mourn our nature, not to mend;
 arp accuser, but a helpless friend!
 rom a judge turn pleader, to persuade choice we make, or justify it made;
 id of an easy conquest all along,
 but removes weak passions for the strong:
 hen small humours gather to a gout,
 doctor fancies he has driv'n them out.
 rs, Nature's road must ever be preferr'd;
 on is here no guide, but still a guard:
 hers to rectify, not overthrow,

treat this passion more as friend than foe;
 ightier power the strong direction sends,
 several men impels to several ends:
 varying winds, by other passions tost,
 drives them constant to a certain coast.
 power or knowledge, gold or glory, please,
 oft more strong than all) the love of ease;
 ough life 'tis follow'd ev'n at life's expense;
 merchant's toil, the sage's indolence,
 monk's humility, the hero's pride,
 all alike, find Reason on their side.

h' Eternal Art, educing good from ill,
 its on this passion our best principle:
 thus the mercury of man is fix'd,
 ng grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;
 draws cements what else were too refin'd,
 m one interest body acts with mind.

a fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
 savage stocks inserted learn to bear;
 surest virtues thus from passions shoot,
 d Nature's vigour working at the root.
 a crops of wit and honesty appear
 n spleen, from obstinacy, hate, or fear!
 anger, zeal and fortitude supply;
 avarice, prudence; sloth, philosophy;
 t, through some certain strainers well refin'd,
 ntle love, and charms all womankind;
 y, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
 mulation in the learn'd or brave;

virtue, male or female, can we name,
 what will grow on pride, or grow on shame.
 hus Nature gives us (let it check our pride)
 virtue nearest to our vice ally'd:
 mon the bias turns to good from ill,
 Nero reigns a Titus, if he will

The fiery soul abhorr'd in Catiline,
 In Decius charms, in Curtius is divine:
 The same ambition can destroy or save,
 And makes a patriot as it makes a knave.

IV. This light and darkness in our chaos join'd,
 What shall divide? The God within the mind.

Extremes in Nature equal ends produce,
 In man they join to some mysterious use;
 Though each by turns the other's bound invade,
 As in some well-wrought picture, light and shade,
 And oft so mix, the difference is too nice
 Where ends the virtue, or begins the vice.

Fools! who from hence into the notion fall,
 That vice or virtue there is none at all.
 If white and black blend, soften, and unite
 A thousand ways, is there no black or white?
 Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain;
 'Tis to mistake them, costs the time and pain.

V. Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
 As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
 Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
 We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
 But where th' extreme of vice, was ne'er agreed:
 Ask where's the north? at York, 'tis on the Tweed;
 In Scotland, at the Orcades; and there,
 At Greenland, Zembla, or the Lord knows where.
 No creature owns it in the first degree,
 But thinks his neighbour further gone than he:
 Ev'n those who dwell beneath its very zone,
 Or never feel the rage, or never own;
 What happier natures shrink at with affright,
 The hard inhabitant contends is right.

/ Virtuous and vicious every man must be,
 Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
 The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise;
 And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise.
 'Tis but by parts we follow good or ill;
 For, vice or virtue, Self directs it still;
 Each individual seeks a several goal;

VI. But Heaven's great view, is one, and that the whole.

That counter-works each folly and caprice;
 That disappoints th' effect of every vice:
 That, happy frailties to all ranks apply'd;
 Shame to the virgin, to the matron pride;
 Fear to the statesman, rashness to the chief;
 To kings presumption, and to crowds belief:
 That, Virtue's ends from vanity can raise,
 Which seeks no interest, no reward but praise.
 And build 'on wants, and on defects of mind,
 The joy, the peace, the glory of mankind.

Heaven forming each on other to depend,
 A master, or a servant, or a friend,
 Bids each on other for assistance call,
 Till one man's weakness grows the strength of all.
 Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally
 The common interest, or endear the tie.
 To these we owe true friendship, love sincere,
 Each home-felt joy that life inherits here;
 Yet from the same we learn, in its decline,
 Those joys, those loves, those interests, to resign;
 Taught half by Reason, half by mere decay,
 To welcome death, and calmly pass away.

Whate'er the passion, knowledge, fame, or pelf,
 Not one will change his neighbour with himself.
 The learned is happy Nature to explore,
 The fool is happy that he knows no more.
 The rich is happy in the plenty given,
 The poor contents him with the care of Heaven.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatic a king;
The starving chymist in his golden views
Supremely blest, the poet in his Muse.

See some strange comfort every state attend,
And pride bestow'd on all, a common friend:
See some fit passion every age supply;
Hope travels through, nor quits us when we die.

Behold the child, by Nature's kindly law,
Pleas'd with a rattle, tickled with a straw:
Some livelier plaything gives his youth delight,
A little louder, but as empty quite:
Scarfs, garters, gold, amuse his riper stage,
And beads and prayer-books are the toys of age:
Pleas'd with this bauble still, as that before;
'Till tir'd he sleeps, and Life's poor play is o'er.
Meanwhile Opinion gilds with varying rays
Those painted clouds that beautify our days:
Each want of happiness by Hope supply'd,
And each vacuity of sense by Pride:
These build as fast as Knowledge can destroy;
In Folly's cup still laughs the bubble, Joy;
One prospect lost, another still we gain;
And not a vanity is giv'n in vain:
Ev'n mean Self-love becomes, by force divine,
The scale to measure others wants by thine.
See! and confess, one comfort still must rise;
'Tis this, Though man's a fool, yet God is wise.

EPISTLE III.

OF THE NATURE AND STATE OF MAN WITH RESPECT TO SOCIETY.

Argument.

I. The whole universe one system of society. Nothing made wholly for itself, nor yet wholly for another. The happiness of animals mutual. II. Reason or instinct operate alike to the good of each individual. Reason or instinct operate also to society in all animals. III. How far society carried by instinct. How much farther by reason. IV. Of that which is called the state of nature. Reason instructed by instinct in the invention of arts, and in the forms of society. V. Origin of political societies. Origin of monarchy. Patriarchal government. VI. Origin of true religion and government, from the same principle, of love. Origin of superstition and tyranny, from the same principle of fear. The influence of self-love operating to the social and public good. Restoration of true religion and government on their first principle. Mixed government. Various forms of each, and the true end of all.

HERE then we rest; "the Universal Cause
Acts to one end, but acts by various laws."
In all the madness of superfluous wealth,
The train of pride, the impudence of wealth,
Let this great truth be present night and day;
But must be present, if we preach or pray.

I. Look round our world; behold the chain of Love
Combining all below and all above.
See plastic Nature working to this end,
The single atoms each to other tend,

Attract, attracted to, the next in place
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace.
See matter next, with various life endued,
Press to one centre still, the general good.
See dying vegetables life sustain,
See life dissolving, vegetate again:
All forms that perish other forms supply,
(By turns we catch the vital breath, and die.)
Like bubbles on the sea of matter borne,
They rise, they break, and to that sea return.
Nothing is foreign; parts relate to whole;
One all-extending, all-preserving soul
Connects each being, greatest with the least;
Made beast in aid of man, and man of beast;
All serv'd, all serving: nothing stands alone;
The chain holds on, and where it ends unknown.

Has God, thou fool! work'd solely for thy end
Thy joy, thy pastime, thy attire, thy food?
Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
For him as kindly spread the flowery lawn:
Is it for thee the lark ascends and sings?
Joy tunes his voice, joy elevates his wings.
Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?
Loves of his own and raptures swell the note.
The bounding steed you pompously bestride,
Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride.
Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
The birds of Heaven shall vindicate their grain.
Thine the full harvest of the golden year?
Part pays, and justly, the deserving steer:
The hog, that ploughs not, nor obeys thy call,
Lives on the labours of this lord of all.

Know, Nature's children all divide her care;
The fur that warms a monarch, warm'd a bear.
While man exclaims, "See all things for my use!"
"See man for mine!" replies a pamper'd goose.
And just as short of reason he must fall,
Who thinks all made for one, not one for all.

Grant that the powerful still the weak controul
Be man the wit and tyrant of the whole:
Nature that tyrant checks; he only knows,
And helps, another creature's wants and woes.
Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings?
Man cares for all: to birds he gives his woods,
To beasts his pastures, and to fish his floods:
For some, his interest prompts him to provide,
For more his pleasure, yet for more his pride.
All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.
That very life his learned hunger craves,
He saves from famine, from the savage saves:
Nay, feasts the animal he dooms his feast,
And, till he ends the being, makes it blest:
Which sees no more the stroke, or feels the pain,
Than favour'd man by touch ethereal slain.
The creature had his feast of life before;
'Thou too must perish, when thy feast is o'er'
To each unthinking being, Heaven, a friend,
Gives not the useless knowledge of its end:
To man imparts it; but with such a view
As, while he dreads it, makes him hope it too.
The hour conceal'd, and so remote the fear,
Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.
Great standing miracle! that Heaven assign'd
Its only thinking thing this turn of mind.

II. Whether with reason, or with instinct led
Know, all enjoy that power which suits their end.

Bliss alike by that direction tend,
 And find the means proportion'd to their end,
 Where full Instinct is th' unerring guide,
 At pope or council can they need beside?
 Reason, however able, cool at best,
 Serves not for service, or but serves when prest,
 As till we call, and then not often near;
 The honest Instinct comes a volunteer,
 He never to o'ershoot, but just to hit;
 While still too wide or short is human Wit;
 He by quick Nature happiness to gain,
 Which heavier Reason labours at in vain.
 Reason serves always, Reason never long:
 One must go right, the other may go wrong.
 Then the acting and comparing powers
 In their nature, which are two in ours!
 Let Reason raise o'er Instinct as you can,
 His 'tis God directs, in that 'tis man.
 Who taught the nations of the field and wood
 To shun their poison, and to choose their food?
 To resist the tides or tempests to withstand,
 And on the wave, or arch beneath the sand?
 Who made the spider parallels design,
 As De Moivre, without rule or line?
 Who bid the stork, Columbus-like, explore
 Regions not his own, and worlds unknown before?
 Who calls the council, states the certain day?
 Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
 I. God, in the nature of each being, founds
 His proper bliss, and sets its proper bounds:
 As he fram'd a whole, the whole to bless,
 Mutual wants built mutual happiness:
 From the first, eternal Order ran,
 A creature link'd to creature, man to man.
 The ether of life all-quickening ether keeps,
 Breathes through air, or shoots beneath the deeps,
 Burns profuse on earth, one Nature feeds
 The vital flame, and swells the genial seeds.
 Man alone, but all that roam the wood,
 On the wing the sky, or roll along the flood,
 Loves itself, but not itself alone,
 Yet desires alike, till two are one.
 He finds the pleasure with the fierce embrace;
 He loves themselves, a third time, in their race.
 The beast and bird their common charge attend,
 Mothers nurse it, and the sires defend;
 Young dismiss'd to wander earth or air,
 He stops the Instinct, and there ends the care;
 Each dissolves, each seeks a fresh embrace,
 And love succeeds, another race.
 No longer care man's helpless kind demands;
 No longer care contracts more lasting bands:
 Reason, Reason, still the ties improve,
 He extend the interest, and the love:
 Where choice we fix, with sympathy we burn;
 Virtue in each passion takes its turn;
 All new needs, new helps, new habits rise,
 We graft benevolence on charities.
 As one brood, and as another rose,
 The natural love maintain'd, habitual those:
 But, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
 He ripples him from whom their life began:
 Try and Forecast just returns engage,
 He pointed back to youth, this on to age;
 Pleasure, Gratitude, and Hope, combin'd,
 He spread the interest, and preserve the kind.
 Nor think, in Nature's state they blindly
 Proceeded;
 The state of Nature was the reign of God:

Self-love and social at her birth began,
 Union the bond of all things, and of man.
 Pride then was not; nor arts, that Pride to aid;
 Man walk'd with beast, joint tenant of the shade;
 The same his table, and the same his bed;
 No murder cloth'd him, and no murder fed.
 In the same temple, the resounding wood,
 All vocal beings hymn'd their equal God:
 The shrine with gore unstain'd, with gold undress'd,
 Unbrib'd, unbloody, stood the blameless priest:
 Heaven's attribute was universal care,
 And man's prerogative, to rule, but spare.
 Ah! how unlike the man of times to come!
 Of half that live the butcher and the tomb;
 Who, foe to Nature, hears the general groan,
 Murders their species, and betrays his own.
 But just disease to luxury succeeds,
 And every death its own avenger breeds;
 The Fury-passions from that blood began,
 And turn'd on man, a fiercer savage, man.

See him from Nature rising slow to Art!
 To copy Instinct then was Reason's part:
 Thus then to man the voice of Nature spake—
 "Go, from the creatures thy instructions take:
 Learn from the birds what food the thickets yield;
 Learn from the beasts the physic of the field;
 Thy arts of building from the bee receive:
 Learn of the mole to plough, the worm to weave;
 Learn of the little Nautilus to sail,
 Spread the thin oar, and catch the driving gale.
 Here too all forms of social union find,
 And hence let Reason, late, instruct mankind:
 Here subterranean works and cities see;
 There towns aerial on the waving tree.
 Learn each small people's genius, policies,
 The ant's republic, and the realm of bees;
 How those in common all their wealth bestow,
 And anarchy without confusion know;
 And these for ever, though a monarch reign,
 Their separate cells and properties maintain.
 Mark what unvary'd laws preserve each state,
 Laws wise as Nature, and as fix'd as Fate.
 In vain thy Reason finer webs shall draw,
 Entangle Justice in her net of Law,
 And right, too rigid, harden into wrong;
 Still for the strong too weak, the weak too strong.
 Yet go! and thus o'er all the creatures sway,
 Thus let the wiser make the rest obey:
 And for those arts mere Instinct could afford,
 Be crown'd as monarchs, or as gods ador'd."

V. Great Nature spoke; observant man obey'd;
 Cities were built, societies were made:
 Here rose one little state; another near
 Grew by like means, and join'd through love or fear.
 Did here the trees with ruddier burthens bend,
 And there the streams in purer rills descend,
 What War could ravish, Commerce could bestow;
 And he return'd a friend, who came a foe.
 Converse and Love mankind might strongly draw,
 When Love was Liberty, and Nature Law.
 Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,
 Till common interest plac'd the sway in one.
 'Twas Virtue only, (or in arts or arms, Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,)
 The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
 A prince the father of a people made.

VI. Till then, by Nature crown'd, each patriarch
 Sate,
 King, priest, and parent, of his growing state:

On him, their second Providence, they hung,
 Their law his eye, their oracle his tongue.
 He from the wondering furrow call'd the food,
 Taught to command the fire, controul the flood,
 Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
 Or fetch th' ærial eagle to the ground.
 Till drooping, sickening, dying, they began
 Whom they rever'd as God to mourn as Man:
 Then, looking up from sire to sire, explor'd
 One great First Father, and that first ador'd.
 Or plain tradition, that this All begun,
 Convey'd unbroken faith from sire to son;
 The worker from the work distinct was known,
 And simple Reason never sought but one:
 Ere Wit oblique had broke that steady light,
 Man, like his Maker, saw that all was right;
 To virtue, in the paths of pleasure trod,
 And own'd a father when he own'd a God.
 Love all the faith, and all th' allegiance then;
 For Nature knew no right divine in men,
 No ill could fear in God: and understood
 A sovereign being, but a sovereign good.
 True faith, true policy, united ran;
 That was but love of God, and this of man.
 Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
 Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
 That proud exception to all Nature's laws,
 T' invert the world and counter-work its cause?
 Force first made conquest, and that conquest, law;
 Till Superstition taught the tyrant awe,
 Then shar'd the tyranny, then lent it aid,
 And gods of conquerors, slaves of subjects made:
 She 'midst the lightning's blaze, and thunder's sound,
 When rock'd the mountains, and when groan'd the
 ground,

She taught the weak to bend, the proud to pray,
 To power unseen, and mightier far than they:
 She, from the rending earth, and bursting skies,
 Saw gods descend, and fiends infernal rise:
 Here fix'd the dreadful, there the blest abodes;
 Fear made her devils, and weak Hope her gods;
 Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
 Whose attributes were rage, revenge, or lust;
 Such as the souls of cowards might conceive,
 And, form'd like tyrants, tyrants would believe.
 Zeal, then, not charity, became the guide;
 And Hell was built on spite, and Heaven on pride.
 Then sacred seem'd th' ethereal vault no more;
 Altars grew marble then, and reek'd with gore:
 Then first the Flamen tasted living food;
 Next his grim idol, smear'd with human blood;
 With heaven's own thunders shook the world below,
 And play'd the god an engine on his foe. [unjust,
 So drives Self-love, through just, and through
 To one man's power, ambition, lucre, lust:
 The same self-love, in all, becomes the cause
 Of what restrains him, government and laws.
 For, what one likes, if others like as well,
 What serves one will, when many wills rebel?
 How shall he keep, what, sleeping or awake,
 A weaker may surprise, a stronger take?
 His safety must his liberty restrain:
 All join to guard what each desires to gain.
 Forc'd into virtue thus, by self-defence,
 Ev'n kings learn'd justice and benevolence:
 Self-love forsook the path it first pursued,
 And found the private in the public good.

'Twas then the studious head or generous mind,
 Follower of God, or friend of human kind,

Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
 The faith and moral, Nature gave before;
 Relum'd her ancient light, not kindled new;
 If not God's image, yet his shadow drew:
 Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
 Taught nor to slack, nor strain its tender strings.
 The less, or greater, set so justly true,
 That touching one must strike the other too;
 Till jarring interests of themselves create
 Th' according music of a well-mix'd state.
 Such is the world's great harmony, that springs
 From order, union, full consent of things:
 Where small and great, where weak and might made

To serve, not suffer, strengthen, not invade;
 More powerful each as needful to the rest,
 And, in proportion as it blesses, blest;
 Draw to one point, and to one centre bring
 Beast, man, or angel, servant, lord, or king.

For forms of government let fools contest;
 Whate'er is best administer'd is best:
 For modes of faith, let graceless zealots fight;
 His can't be wrong whose life is in the right;
 In faith and hope the world will disagree,
 But all mankind's concern is charity:
 All must be false that thwart this one great end:
 And all of God, that bless mankind, or mend
 Man, like the generous vine, supported lives:
 The strength he gains is from th' embrace he gives
 On their own axis as the planets run,
 Yet make at once their circle round the Sun;
 So two consistent motions act the soul;
 And one regards itself, and one the whole.

Thus God and Nature link'd the general frame
 And bade self-love and social be the same.

EPISTLE IV.

OF THE NATURE AND STATE OF MAN WITH RESPECT TO HAPPINESS.

Argument.

I. False notions of happiness, philosophical and popular, answered. II. It is the end of men, and attainable by all. God intends happiness to be equal; and to be so, it must be social, since all particular happiness depends on the general, and since he governs by general laws. As it is necessary for order, and the peace and welfare of society, that external goods should be unequal, happiness is not to consist in these. But, notwithstanding this inequality, the balance of happiness among mankind is kept even by Providence, by the passions of Hope and Fear. III. What happiness of individuals is, as far as is consistent with the constitution of this world; and that a good man has here the advantage. The error of imputing to virtue what are only the calamities of nature, or of fortune. IV. The folly of expecting that God should alter his general law in favour of particulars. V. That we are all judges who are good; but that, whoever they are, they must be happiest. VI. That external goods are not the proper rewards, but often inconsistent with, or destructive of, virtue. That even these can make no man happy without virtue: instanced in riches. However Nobility. Greatness. Fame. Superior talents. With pictures of human infelicity in men, possessed of them all. VII. That virtue only constitutes a happiness, whose object is universal, and whose prospect eternal. That the perfection of virtue and happiness consists in a conformity to the order of Providence here, and a resignation to it here and hereafter.

HAPPINESS! our being's end and aim!
 God, Pleasure, Ease, Content! whate'er thy name:
 At something still which prompts th' eternal sigh,
 Which we bear to live, or dare to die,
 Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies,
 Which look'd, seen double, by the fool and wise:
 Ours of celestial seed! if dropp'd below,
 In what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow?
 In opening to some court's propitious shine,
 Deep with diamonds in the flaming mine?
 Or in'd with the wreaths Parnassian laurels yield,
 Reap'd in iron harvests of the field?
 Where grows? where grows it not? If vain our toil,
 Ought to blame the culture, not the soil:
 If to no spot is happiness sincere,
 No where to be found, or every where:
 Never to be bought, but always free,
 If fled from monarchs, St. John! dwells with thee.

Ask of the learn'd the way? The learn'd are blind:
 Some bids to serve, and that to shun mankind;
 Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,
 Some call it pleasure, and contentment these:
 Some sink to beasts, find pleasure end in pain;
 Some, swell'd to gods, confess ev'n virtue vain;
 Some indolent, to each extreme they fall,
 Trust in ev'ry thing, or doubt of all.
 Who thus define it, say they more or less,
 Is this, that happiness is happiness?
 Take Nature's path, and mad Opinion's leave;
 No states can reach it, and all heads conceive;
 No joys her goods, in no extreme they dwell;
 No needs but thinking right, and meaning well;
 No mourn our various portions as we please,
 All is common sense, and common ease.
 Remember, man, "the Universal Cause
 Is not by partial, but by gen'ral laws;"
 It makes what happiness we justly call,
 Not not in the good of one, but all.
 It's not a blessing individuals find,
 Some way leans and hearkens to the kind:
 The bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
 The cavern'd hermit, rests self-satisfy'd:
 Some most to shun or hate mankind pretend,
 Some an admirer, or would fix a friend:
 To tract what others feel, what others think,
 Pleasures sicken, and all glories sink:
 Each has his share; and who would more obtain,
 Will find, the pleasure pays not half the pain.
 The order is Heaven's first law; and this confess,
 We are, and must be, greater than the rest,
 We rich, more wise; but who infers from hence
 That such are happier, shocks all common sense.
 Even to mankind impartial we confess,
 All are equal in their happiness:
 No mutual wants this happiness increase;
 Nature's difference keeps all Nature's peace.
 Condition, circumstance, is not the thing;
 It is the same in subject or in king,
 Who obtain defence, or who defend,
 Him who is, or him who finds a friend:

Heaven breathes through every member of the whole,
 One common blessing, as one common soul.
 But Fortune's gifts if each alike possess,
 And each were equal, must not all contest?
 If then to all men happiness was meant,
 God in externals could not place content.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,
 And these be happy call'd, unhappy those;
 But Heaven's just balance equal will appear,
 While those are plac'd in hope, and these in fear:
 Not present good or ill, the joy or curse,
 But future views of better, or of worse.

Oh, sons of Earth! attempt ye still to rise,
 By mountains pil'd on mountains, to the skies?
 Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
 And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.

Know, all the good that individuals find,
 Or God and Nature meant to mere mankind,
 Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense,
 Lie in three words, Health, Peace, and Competence.
 But Health consists with Temperance alone;
 And Peace, oh Virtue! Peace is all thy own.
 The good or bad the gifts of Fortune gain;
 But these less taste them, as they worse obtain.
 Say, in pursuit of profit or delight,
 Who risk the most, that take wrong means, or right?
 Of Vice or Virtue, whether blest or curst,
 Which meets contempt, or which compassion first?
 Count all th' advantage prosperous Vice attains,
 'Tis but what Virtue flies from and disdains:
 And grant the bad what happiness they would,
 One they must want, which is to pass for good.
 Oh blind to truth, and God's whole scheme below,
 Who fancy bliss to Vice, to Virtue woe!
 Who sees and follows that great scheme the best,
 Best knows the blessing, and will most be blest.
 But fools, the good alone, unhappy call,
 For ills or accidents that chance to all.
 See Falkland dies, the virtuous and the just!
 See godlike Turenne prostrate on the dust!
 See Sidney bleeds amid the martial strife!
 Was this their virtue, or contempt of life?
 Say, was it virtue, more though Heaven ne'er gave,
 Lamented Digby! sunk thee to the grave?
 Tell me, if virtue made the son expire,
 Why, full of days and honour, lives the sire?
 Why drew Marselles' good bishop purer breath,
 When Nature sicken'd, and each gale was death?
 Or why so long (in life if long can be)
 Lent Heaven a parent to the poor and me?

What makes all physical or moral ill?
 There deviates Nature, and here wanders will.
 God sends not ill; if rightly understood,
 Or partial ill is universal good,
 Or change admits, or Nature lets it fall,
 Short, and but rare, till man improv'd it all.
 We just as wisely might of Heaven complain
 That righteous Abel was destroyed by Cain,
 As that the virtuous son is ill at ease
 When his lewd father gave the dire disease.
 Think we, like some weak prince, th' Eternal Cause
 Prone for his favourites to reverse his laws?

Shall burning Ætna, if a sage requires,
 Forget to thunder, and recall her fires?
 On air or sea new motions be impress'd,
 Oh blameless Bethel! to relieve thy breast?
 When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
 Shall gravitation cease, if you go by?
 Or some old temple, nodding to its fall,
 For Chartres' head reserve the hanging wall?

But still this world (so fitted for the knave)
 Contents us not. A better shall we have?
 A kingdom of the just then let it be:
 But first consider how those just agree.
 The good must merit God's peculiar care;
 But who, but God, can tell us who they are?
 One thinks on Calvin Heaven's own spirit fell;
 Another deems him instrument of Hell;
 If Calvin feels Heaven's blessing, or its rod,
 This cries, there is, and that, there is no God.
 What shocks one part, will edify the rest,
 Nor with one system can they all be blest.
 The very best will variously incline,
 And what rewards your virtue, punish mine.
 WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.—This world, 'tis true,
 Was made for Cæsar—but for Titus too;
 And which more blest? who chain'd his country, say,
 Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

“But sometimes Virtue starves, while Vice is fed.”
 What then? Is the reward of Virtue bread?
 That, Vice may merit, 'tis the price of toil;
 The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil;
 The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
 Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain.
 The good man may be weak, be indolent;
 Nor is his claim to plenty, but content.
 But grant him riches, your demand is o'er?
 “No—shall the good want health, the good want power?”

Add health and power, and every earthly thing,
 “Why bounded power? why private? why no king?”
 Nay, why external for internal given?
 Why is not man a god, and Earth a Heaven?
 Who ask and reason thus, will scarce conceive
 God gives enough, while he has more to give;
 Immense the power, immense were the demand;
 Say, at what part of Nature will they stand?

What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
 The soul's calm sun-shine, and the heart-felt joy,
 Is Virtue's prize: A better would you fix?
 Then give Humility a coach and six,
 Justice a conqueror's sword, or Truth a gown,
 Or Public Spirit its great cure, a crown.
 Weak, foolish man! will Heaven reward us there
 With the same trash mad mortals wish for here?
 The boy and man an individual makes,
 Yet sigh'st thou now for apples and for cakes?
 Go, like the Indian, in another life
 Expect thy dog, thy bottle, and thy wife;
 As well as dream such trifles are assign'd,
 As toys and empires, for a godlike mind;
 Rewards, that either would to virtue bring
 No joy, or be destructive of the thing;
 How oft by these at sixty are undone
 The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!
 To whom can riches give repute, or trust,
 Content, or pleasure, but the good and just?
 Judges and senates have been bought for gold;
 Esteem and love were never to be sold.
 Oh fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
 The lover and the love of human-kind,
 Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience clear,
 Because he wants a thousand pounds a-year.

Honour and shame from no condition rise;
 Act well your part, there all the honour lies.
 Fortune in men has some small difference made,
 One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade;
 The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
 The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd.

“What differ more,” you cry, “than crown and cowl!”

I'll tell you, friend! a wise man and a fool
 You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
 Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
 Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
 The rest is all but leather or prunella.

Stuck o'er with titles, and hung round with strings,

That thou mayst be by kings, or whores of kings.
 Boast the pure blood of an illustrious race,
 In quiet flow from Lucrece to Lucrece:
 But, by your father's worth if yours you rate,
 Count me those only who were good and great.
 Go! if your ancient, but ignoble blood
 Has crept through scoundrels ever since the Flood,
 Go! and pretend your family is young;
 Nor own your fathers have been fools so long.
 What can ennoble sons, or slaves, or cowards?
 Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards.

Look next on greatness; say, where greatness lies:

“Where but among the heroes and the wise?”
 Heroes are much the same, the point's agreed,
 From Macedonia's madman to the Swede;
 The whole strange purpose of their lives, to find,
 Or make, an enemy of all mankind!
 Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
 Yet ne'er looks forward further than his nose.
 No less alike the politic and wise:
 All sly slow things, with circumspective eyes:
 Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,
 Not that themselves are wise, but others weak.
 But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat:
 'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great;
 Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
 Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
 Who noble ends by noble means obtains,
 Or, failing, smiles in exile or in chains,
 Like good Aurelius let him reign, or bleed
 Like Socrates, that man is great indeed.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others' breath,
 A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death.
 Just what you hear, you have; and what's unknown
 The same, my lord, if Tully's, or your own.
 All that we feel of it begins and ends
 In the small circle of our foes or friends;
 To all beside as much an empty shade
 An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead;
 Alike or when, or where they shone, or shine,
 Or on the Rubicon, or on the Rhine.
 A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod:
 An honest man's the noblest work of God.
 Fame but from death a villain's name can save,
 As Justice tears his body from the grave;
 When what t' oblivion better were resign'd,
 Is hung on high to poison half mankind.
 All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
 Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart.
 One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
 Of stupid starers, and of loud huzzas;
 And more true joy Marcellus exil'd feels,
 Than Cæsar with a senate at his heels.

In parts superior what advantage lies?
 Tell (for you can) what is it to be wise?
 'Tis but to know how little can be known;
 To see all others' faults, and feel our own:
 Condemn'd in business or in arts to drudge,
 Without a second, or without a judge:

ruths would you teach, or save a sinking land?
 All fear, none aid you, and few understand.
 sinful pre-eminence! yourself to view
 above life's weakness, and its comforts too.
 Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
 make fair deductions; see to what they mount:
 how much of other each is sure to cost;
 how much for other oft is wholly lost;
 how inconsistent greater goods with these;
 how sometimes life is risk'd, and always ease:
 think, and if still the things thy envy call,
 why, wouldst thou be the man to whom they fall?
 O sigh for ribbands, if thou art so silly,
 mark how they grace Lord Umbra, or Sir Billy.
 O yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
 Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife.
 How parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,
 the wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind:
 Enrich'd with the whistling of a name,
 Cromwell, damn'd to everlasting fame!
 All, united, thy ambition call,
 In an ancient story, learn to scorn them all.
 Here, in the rich, the honour'd, fam'd, and great,
 Is the false scale of happiness complete!
 The hearts of kings, or arms of queens who lay,
 How happy! those to ruin, these betray.
 Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows,
 In dirt and sea-weed, as proud Venice rose;
 Each, how guilt and greatness equal ran,
 And all that rais'd the hero, sunk the man:
 How Europe's laurels on their brows behold,
 Stain'd with blood, or ill exchang'd for gold:
 How see them broke with toils, or sunk in ease,
 Infamous for plunder'd provinces.
 Wealth ill-fated; which no act of fame
 Can taught to shine, or sanctify'd from shame!
 What greater bliss attends their close of life?
 The greedy minion, or imperious wife,
 In trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
 And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.
 As! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray,
 Compute the morn and evening to the day;
 The whole amount of that enormous fame,
 Ale, that blends their glory with their shame!
 Know then this truth (enough for man to know),
 Virtue alone is happiness below."
 The only point where human bliss stands still,
 And tastes the good without the fall to ill;
 Where only merit constant pay receives,
 Blest in what it takes, and what it gives;
 Joy unequall'd, if its end it gain,
 And if it lose, attended with no pain:
 Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
 And but more relish'd as the more distress'd:
 The broadest mirth unfeeling Folly wears,
 As pleasing far than Virtue's very tears:
 And, from each object, from each place acquir'd,
 Is ever exercis'd, yet never tir'd;
 Ever elated, while one man's oppress'd;
 Ever dejected, while another's blest;
 And where no wants, no wishes can remain,
 But to wish more virtue, is to gain.
 See the sole bliss Heaven could on all bestow!
 Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know:
 The poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
 The bad must miss; the good, untaught, will find;
 He to no sect, who takes no private road,
 Who looks through Nature, up to Nature's God;
 Who sees that chain which links th' impense design,
 From Heaven and Earth, and mortal and divine;

Sees, that no being any bliss can know,
 But touches some above, and some below;
 Learns from this union of the rising whole
 The first, last purpose of the human soul;
 And knows where faith, law, morals, all began,
 All end in love of God, and love of man.
 For him alone, Hope leads from goal to goal,
 And opens still, and opens on his soul:
 Till lengthen'd on to Faith, and unconfin'd,
 It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind.
 He sees, why Nature plants in man alone
 Hope of known bliss, and faith in bliss unknown:
 (Nature, whose dictates to no other kind
 Are given in vain, but what they seek they find.)
 Wise is her present; she connects in this
 His greatest virtue with his greatest bliss;
 At once his own bright prospect to be blest;
 And strongest motive to assist the rest.

Self-love thus push'd to social, to divine,
 Gives thee to make thy neighbour's blessing thine.
 Is this too little for the boundless heart?
 Extend it, let thy enemies have part.
 Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life, and sense,
 In one close system of benevolence:
 Happier as kinder, in whate'er degree,
 And height of bliss but height of charity.

God loves from whole to parts: but human soul
 Must rise from individual to the whole.
 Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
 As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake;
 The centre mov'd, a circle straight succeeds,
 Another still, and still another spreads;
 Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace;
 His country next; and next all human race;
 Wide and more wide, th' o'erflowings of the mind
 Take every creature in, of every kind;
 Earth smiles around, with boundless bounty blest,
 And Heaven beholds its image in his breast.

Come then, my friend! my genius! come along!
 Oh master of the poet, and the song!
 And while the Muse now stoops, or now ascends,
 To man's low passions, or their glorious ends,
 Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,
 To fall with dignity, with temper rise;
 Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer,
 From grave to gay, from lively to severe;
 Correct with spirit, eloquent with ease,
 Intent to reason, or polite to please.
 Oh! while along the stream of time thy name
 Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame;
 Say, shall my little bark attendant sail,
 Pursue the triumph, and partake the gale?
 When statesmen, heroes, kings, in dust repose,
 Whose sons shall blush their fathers were thy foes,
 Shall then this verse to future age pretend
 Thou wert my guide, philosopher, and friend?
 That, urg'd by thee, I turn'd the tuneful art,
 From sounds to things, from fancy to the heart;
 For Wit's false mirror held up Nature's light;
 Show'd erring Pride, ~~WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT~~;
 That reason, passion, answer one great aim;
 That true self-love and social are the same;
 That virtue only makes our bliss below;
 And all our knowledge is, ourselves to know.

MORAL ESSAYS,

EPISTLE I.

OF THE KNOWLEDGE AND CHARACTERS OF MEN.

Argument.

I. That it is not sufficient for this knowledge to consider man in the abstract: books will not serve the purpose, nor yet our own experience singly. General maxims, unless they be formed upon both, will be but notional. Some peculiarity in every man, characteristic to himself, yet varying from himself. Difficulties arising from our own passions, fancies, faculties. The shortness of life to observe in, and the uncertainty of the principles of action in men to observe by. Our own principle of action often hid from ourselves. Some few characters plain, but in general confounded, dissembled, or inconsistent. The same man utterly different in different places and seasons. Unimaginable weaknesses in the greatest. Nothing constant and certain but God and nature. No judging of the motives from the actions; the same actions proceeding from contrary motives, and the same motives influencing contrary actions. II. Yet, to form characters, we can only take the strongest actions of a man's life, and try to make them agree: the utter uncertainty of this, from nature itself, and from policy. Characters given according to the rank of men of the world: and some reason for it. Education alters the nature, or at least character of many. Actions, passions, opinions, manners, humours, or principles, all subject to change. No judging by nature. III. It only remains to find (if we can) his ruling passion: that will certainly influence all the rest, and can reconcile the seeming or real inconsistency of all his actions. Instanced in the extraordinary character of Clodio. A caution against mistaking second qualities for first, which will destroy all possibility of the knowledge of mankind. Examples of the strength of the ruling passion, and its continuation to the last breath.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
 Who from his study rails at human-kind;
 Though what he learns he speaks, and may advance
 Some general maxims, or be right by chance.
 The coxcomb bird, so talkative and grave,
 That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knave,
 Though many a passenger he rightly call,
 You hold him no philosopher at all.

And yet the fate of all extremes is such,
 Men may be read, as well as books, too much.
 To observations which ourselves we make,
 We grow more partial for th' observer's sake;
 To written wisdom, as another's, less:
 Maxims are drawn from notions, these from gusts.
 There's some peculiar in each leaf and grain,
 Some unmark'd fibre, or some varying vein:
 Shall only man be taken in the gross?
 Grant but as many sorts of mind as moss.

That each from other differs, first confess;
 Next, that he varies from himself no less;
 Add nature's, custom's, reason's, passion's strife,
 And all opinion's colours cast on life.
 Our depths who fathoms, or our shallows finds,
 Quick whirls, and shifting eddies, of our minds?
 On human actions reason though you can,
 It may be reason, but it is not man:
 His principle of action once explore,
 That instant 'tis his principle no more.
 Like following life through creatures you desert,
 You lose it in the moment you detect.

Yet more; the difference is as great between
 The optics seeing, as the objects seen.
 All manners take a tincture from our own;
 Or come discolour'd through our passions shown.
 Or Fancy's beam enlarges, multiplies,
 Contracts, inverts, and gives ten thousand dyes.
 Nor will life's stream for observation stay,
 It hurries all too fast to mark their way:
 In vain sedate reflections we would make,
 When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
 Oft, in the passion's wild rotation tost,
 Our spring of action to ourselves is lost:
 Tir'd, not determin'd, to the last we yield,
 And what comes then is master of the field.
 As the last image of that troubled heap,
 When sense subsides and fancy sports in sleep,
 (Though past the recollection of the thought,)
 Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought.
 Something as dim to our internal view,
 Is thus, perhaps, the cause of most we do.

True, some are open, and to all men known;
 Others, so very close, they're hid from none;
 (So darkness strikes the sense no less than light,
 Thus gracious Chandos is belov'd at sight;
 And every child hates Shylock, though his soul
 Still sits at squat, and peeps not from its hole.
 At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
 All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves.
 When universal homage Umbra pays,
 All see 'tis vice, an itch of vulgar praise.
 When flattery glares, all hate it in a queen,
 While one there is who charms us with his spleen.

But these plain characters we rarely find:
 Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind
 Or puzzling contraries confound the whole;
 Or affectations quite reverse the soul.
 The dull, flat falsehood serves for policy;
 And, in the cunning, truth itself's a lie:
 Unthought-of frailties cheat us in the wise;
 The fool lies hid in inconsistencies.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
 Alone, in company; in place, or out;
 Early at business, and at hazard late;
 Mad at a fox-chace, wise at a debate;
 Drunk at a borough, civil at a ball;
 Friendly at Hackney, faithless at Whitehall.
 Cautious is ever moral, ever grave,
 Thinks who endures a knave, is next a knave.

ave just at dinner — then prefers, no doubt,
A rogue with venison to a saint without.

Who would not praise Patricio's high desert,
His hand unstain'd, his uncorrupted heart,
His comprehensive head! all interests weigh'd,
All Europe sav'd, yet Britain not betray'd.
He thanks you not, his pride is in piquette,
Newmarket fame, and judgment at a bet. [ron!]

What made (say, Montagne, or more sage Char-
Who a warrior, Cromwell a buffoon?

A perjured prince a leaden saint revere,
A godless regent tremble at a star?
The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit,
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit?
Europe a woman, child, or dotard rule,
And just her wisest monarch made a fool?

Know, God and Nature only are the same:
A man, the judgment shoots a flying game;
A bird of passage! gone as soon as found,
Now in the Moon perhaps, now under ground.

In vain the sage, with retrospective eye,
Could from th' apparent what conclude the why,
To fer the motive from the deed, and show,
That what we chanc'd, was what we meant to do.
Behold if Fortune or a mistress frowns,
Some plunge in business, others shave their crowns;
To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
His quits an empire, that embroils a state:
The same adust complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field.

Not always actions show the man: we find
Who does a kindness, is not therefore kind:
Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast,
Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east:
Not therefore humble he who seeks retreat,
Who guides his steps, and bids him shun the great:
Who combats bravely is not therefore brave,
He dreads a death-bed like the meanest slave:
Who reasons wisely is not therefore wise,
His pride in reasoning, not in acting, lies.

But grant that actions best discover man;
Take the most strong, and sort them as you can.
Be few that glare, each character must mark,
You balance not the many in the dark.

That will you do with such as disagree?
Oppress them, or miscall them policy?
Must then at once (the character to save)
The plain rough hero turn a crafty knave?
Has! in truth the man but chang'd his mind,
Perhaps was sick, in love, or had not din'd.
Ask why from Britain Cæsar would retreat?
Near himself might whisper, he was beat.
Why risk the world's great empire for a punk?
Cæsar perhaps might answer, he was drunk.
But, sage historians! 'tis your task to prove
His action, conduct; one, heroic love.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn:
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn;
A judge is just, a chancellor juster still;
A gownman learn'd; a bishop, what you will;
Wise, if a minister; but, if a king, [thing.
More wise, more learn'd, more just, more every
Court-virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate,
Born where Heaven's influence scarce can penetrate:
A life's low vale, the soil the virtues like,
They please as beauties, here as wonders strike.
Though the same Sun with all diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his power,
And justly set the gem above the flower.

'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclin'd.
Boastful and rough, your first son is a 'squire;
The next a tradesman meek, and much a liar:
Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scrivener, an exceeding knave:
Is he a churchman? then he's fond of power:
A quaker? sly: a presbyterian? sour:
A smart free-thinker? all things in an hour.

Ask men's opinions: Scoto now shall tell
How trade increases, and the world goes well;
Strike off his pension, by the setting sun,
And Britain, if not Europe, is undone.

That gay free-thinker, a fine talker once,
What turns him now a stupid, silent dunce?
Some god, or spirit, he has lately found;
Or chanc'd to meet a minister that frown'd.

Judge we by nature? habit can efface,
Interest o'ercome, or policy take place:
By actions? those uncertainty divides:
By passions? these dissimulation hides:
Opinions? they still take a wider range:
Find, if you can, in what you cannot change.

Manners with fortunes, humours turn with climes,
Tenets with books, and principles with times.

Search then the ruling passion: there, alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known;
The fool consistent, and the false sincere;
Priests, princes, women, no dissemblers here.
This clue once found, unravels all the rest,
The prospect clears, and Wharton stands confest.
Wharton, the scorn and wonder of our days,
Whose ruling passion was the lust of praise;
Born with whate'er could win it from the wise,
Women and fools must like him, or he dies:
Though wondering senates hung on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke.
Shall parts so various aim at nothing new?
He'll shine a Tully and a Wilmot too.
Then turns repentant, and his God adores
With the same spirit that he drinks and whores;
Enough if all around him but admire,
And now the punk applaud, and now the friar.
Thus with each gift of Nature and of Art,
And wanting nothing but an honest heart;
Grown all to all, from no one vice exempt;
And most contemptible, to shun contempt;
His passion still, to covet general praise;
His life, to forfeit it a thousand ways;
A constant bounty, which no friend has made;
An angel tongue, which no man can persuade;
A fool, with more of wit than half mankind,
Too rash for thought, for action too refin'd:
A tyrant to the wife his heart approves;
A rebel to the very king he loves;
He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still! flagitious, yet not great.
Ask you why Wharton broke through every rule?
'Twas all for fear the knaves should call him fool.

Nature well known, no prodigies remain,
Comets are regular, and Wharton plair.

Yet, in this search, the wisest may mistake,
If second qualities for first they take.
When Catiline by rapine swell'd his store;
When Cæsar made a noble dame a whore;
In this the lust, in that the avarice,
Were means, not ends; ambition was the vice.
That very Cæsar, born in Scipio's days,
Had aim'd, like him, by chastity, at praise.

Lucullus, when frugality could charm,
Had roasted turnips in the Sabine farm.
In vain the observer eyes the builder's toil,
But quite mistakes the scaffold for the pile.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy,
As fits give vigour, just when they destroy.
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last sand.
Consistent in our follies and our sins,
Here honest Nature ends as she begins.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And totter on in business to the last;
As weak, as earnest; and as gravely out,
As sober Lanesborow dancing in the gout.

Behold a reverend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race,
Shov'd from the wall perhaps, or rudely press'd
By his own son, that passes by unblest:
Still to his wench he crawls on knocking knees,
And envies every sparrow that he sees.

A salmon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate;
The doctor call'd, declares all help too late:
"Mercy!" cries Helluo, "mercy on my soul!
Is there no hope?—Alas!—then bring the jowl."

The frugal crone, whom praying priests attend,
Still strives to save the hallow'd taper's end,
Collects her breath, as ebbing life retires,
For one puff more, and in that puff expires.

"Odious! in woollen! 'twould a saint provoke,"
(Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke,)
"No, let a charming chintz and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face:
One would not, sure, be frightful when one's dead—
And—Betty—give this cheek a little red."

The courtier smooth, who forty years had shin'd
An humble servant to all human-kind, [stir,
Just brought out this, when scarce his tongue could
"If—where I'm going—I could serve you, sir!"

"I give and I devise" (old Euclio said,
And sigh'd) "my lands and tenements to Ned."
Your money, sir?—"My money, sir, what all?
Why, if I must"—(then wept) "I give it Paul."
The manor, sir?—"The manor! hold," he cry'd.
"Not that—I cannot part with that,"—and dy'd.

And you! brave Cobham, to the latest breath,
Shall feel your ruling passion strong in death:
Such in those moments as in all the past,
"Oh, save my country, Heaven!" shall be your last.

TO A LADY.

EPISTLE II.

OF THE CHARACTERS OF WOMEN.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
"Most women have no characters at all."
Matter too soft a lasting mark to bear,
And best distinguish'd by black, brown, or fair.

How many pictures of one nymph we view,
All how unlike each other, all how true!
Arcadia's countess, here, in ermin'd pride,
Is there, Pastora by a fountain side.
Here Fannia, leering on her own good man,
And there, a naked Leda with a swan.
Let then the fair-one beautifully cry,
In Magdalene's loose hair, and lifted eye,
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpering angels, palms, and harps divine;

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grow romantic, I must paint it.

Come then, the colours and the ground prepare!
Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
Choose a firm cloud, before it fall, and in it
Catch, ere she change, the Cynthia of this minute.

Rufa, whose eye, quick glancing o'er the Part,
Attracts each light gay meteor of a spark,
Agrees as ill with Rufa studying Locke,
As Sappho's diamonds with her dirty smock;
Or Sappho at her toilet's greasy task,
With Sappho fragrant at an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting-sun.

How soft is Silia! fearful to offend;
The frail-one's advocate, the weak-one's friend.
To her Calista prov'd her conduct nice,
And good Simplicius asks of her advice.
Sudden, she storms! she raves! You tip the wink,
But spare your censure; Silia does not drink.
All eyes may see from what the change arose,
All eyes may see—a pimple on her nose.

Papillia, wedded to her amorous spark,
Sighs for the shades—"How charming is a park!"
A park is purchas'd, but the fair he sees
All bath'd in tears—"Oh odious, odious trees!"

Ladies, like variegated tulips, show,
'Tis to their changes half their charms we owe;
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy spots the nice admirer take.
'Twas thus Calypso once each heart alarm'd,
Aw'd without virtue, without beauty charm'd;
Her tongue bewitch'd as oddly as her eyes,
Less wit than mimic, more a wit than wise;
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad;
Yet ne'er so sure our passion to create,
As when she touch'd the brink of all we hate.

Narcissa's nature, tolerably mild,
To make a wash, would hardly stew a child;
Has ev'n been prov'd to grant a lover's prayer,
And paid a tradesman once to make him stare;
Gave alms at Easter, in a Christian trim,
And made a widow happy, for a whim.
Why then declare good-nature is her scorn,
When 'tis by that alone she can be borne?
Why pique all mortals, yet affect a name?
A fool to pleasure, yet a slave to fame:
Now deep in Taylor and the Book of Martyrs,
Now drinking citron with his grace and Chartres;
Now conscience chills her, and now passion burns
And atheism and religion take their turns;
A very heathen in the carnal part,
Yet still a sad good Christian at her heart.

See Sin in state, majestically drunk,
Proud as a peeress, prouder as a punk;
Chaste to her husband, frank to all beside,
A teeming mistress, but a barren bride,
What then? let blood and body bear the fault,
Her head's untouch'd, that noble seat of thought.
Such this day's doctrine—in another fit
She sins with poets through pure love of wit.
What has not fir'd her bosom or her brain?
Caesar and Tall-boy, Charles and Charlemagne.
As Helluo, late dictator of the feast,
The nose of Haut-gout, and the tip of Taste,
Critiqu'd your wine, and analys'd your meat,
Yet on plain pudding deign'd at home to eat:
So Philomede, lecturing all mankind
On the soft passion, and the taste refin'd,

Th' address, the delicacy — stoops at once,
And makes her hearty meal upon a dunce.

Flavia's a wit, has too much sense to pray;
To toast our wants and wishes, is her way;
Nor asks of God, but of her stars, to give
The mighty blessing, "while we live, to live."
Then all for death, that opiate of the soul!
Lucretia's dagger, Rosamonda's bowl.
Say, what can cause such impotence of mind?
A spark too fickle, or a spouse too kind?
Wise wretch! with pleasures too refin'd to please;
With too much spirit to be e'er at ease;
With too much quickness ever to be taught;
With too much thinking to have common thought:
You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live.

Turn then from wits; and look on Simo's mate,
So ass so meek, no ass so obstinate.
Her, that owns her faults, but never mends,
Because she's honest, and the best of friends.
Her, whose life the church and scandal share,
For ever in a passion, or a prayer.
Her, who laughs at Hell, but (like her grace)
Cries, "Ah! how charming, if there's no such place!"

Her who in sweet vicissitude appears
Of mirth and opium, ratiſie and tears,
The daily anodyne, and nightly draught,
To kill those foes to fair-ones, time and thought.
Woman and fool are two hard things to hit;
For true no-meaning puzzles more than wit.

But what are these to great Atossa's mind?
Scarce once herself, by turns all woman-kind!
Who, with herself, or others, from her birth
Kinds all her life one warfare upon Earth:
Lines, in exposing knaves, and painting fools,
Let it, whate'er she hates and ridicules.
No thought advances, but her eddy brain
Thinks it about, and down it goes again.
Full sixty years the world has been her trade,
The wisest fool much time has ever made.
From loveless youth to unrespected age
No passion gratify'd, except her rage,
No much the fury still outran the wit,
The pleasure mist her, and the scandal hit.
Who breaks with her, provokes revenge from Hell,

But he's a bolder man who dares be well.
Her every turn with violence pursued,
For more a storm her hate than gratitude:
So that each passion turns, or soon or late;
Love, if it makes her yield, must make her hate:
Superiors? Jeath! and equals? what a curse!
But an inferior not dependant? worse.
Mend her, and she knows not to forgive;
Oblige her, and she'll hate you while you live:
But die, and she'll adore you — Then the bust
And temple rise — then fall again to dust.
Last night, her lord was all that's good and great;
A knave this morning, and his will a cheat.
Strange! by the means defeated of the ends,
By spirit robb'd of power, by warmth of friends,
By wealth of followers! without one distress
Sick of herself, through very selfishness!
Atossa, curs'd with every granted prayer,
Childless with all her children, wants an heir.
To heirs unknown descends th' unguarded store,
Or wanders, Heaven-directed, to the poor.

Pictures, like these, dear madam, to design,
Asks no firm hand, and no unerring line;

Some wandering touches, some reflected light,
Some flying stroke alone can hit them right:
For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black?

"Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot." —
Nature in her then err'd not, but forgot.
"With every pleasing, every prudent part,
Say, what can Chloe want?" — She wants a heart.
She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one generous thought.
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever.
So very reasonable, so unmov'd,
As never yet to love, or to be lov'd.
She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest;
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair.
Forbid it, Heaven, a favour or a debt
She e'er should cancel — but she may forget.
Safe is your secret still in Chloe's ear;
But none of Chloe's shall you ever hear.
Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone.
Would Chloe know if you're alive or dead?
She bids her footman put it in her head.
Chloe is prudent — Would you too be wise?
Then never break your heart when Chloe dies.

One certain portrait may (I grant) be seen,
Which Heaven has varnish'd out, and made a queen:
The same for ever! and describ'd by all
With truth and goodness, as with crown and ball.
Poets heap virtues, painters gems at will,
And show their zeal, and hide their want of skill.
'Tis well — but, artists! who can paint or write,
To draw the naked is your true delight.
That robe of quality so struts and swells,
None see what parts of Nature it conceals:
Th' exactest traits of body or of mind,
We owe to models of an humble kind.
If Queensberry to strip there's no compelling,
'Tis from a handmaid we must take a Helen.
From peer or bishop 'tis no easy thing
To draw the man who loves his God, or king:
Alas! I copy (or my draught would fail)
From honest Mah'met, or plain parson Hale.

But grant, in public, men sometimes are shown,
A woman's seen in private life alone:
Our bolder talents in full life display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade.
Bred to disguise, in public 'tis you hide;
There, none distinguish 'twixt your shame or pride.
Weakness or delicacy; all so nice,
That each may seem a virtue, or a vice.

In men, we various ruling passions find;
In women, two almost divide the kind:
Those, only fix'd, they first or last obey,
The love of pleasure, and the love of sway.

That, Nature gives; and where the lesson taught
Is but to please, can pleasure seem a fault?
Experience, this; by man's oppression curst,
They seek the second not to lose the first.

Men, some to business, some to pleasure take;
But every woman is at heart a rake:
Men, some to quiet, some to public strife;
But every lady would be queen for life.

Yet mark the fate of a whole sex of queens!
Power all their end, but beauty all the means:
In youth they conquer with so wild a rage,
As leaves them scarce a subject in their age:

For foreign glory, foreign joy, they roam ;
 No thought of peace or happiness at home.
 But wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
 As hard a science to the fair as great !
 Beauties, like tyrants, old and friendless grown,
 Yet hate repose, and dread to be alone,
 Worn out in public, weary every eye,
 Nor leave one sigh behind them when they die.

Pleasures the sex, as children birds, pursue,
 Still out of reach, yet never out of view ;
 Sure, if they catch, to spoil the toy at most,
 To covet flying, and regret when lost :
 At last, to follies youth could scarce defend,
 It grows their age's prudence to pretend ;
 Asham'd to own they gave delight before,
 Reduc'd to feign it, when they give no more.
 As hags hold sabbaths, less for joy than spite,
 So these their merry, miserable night ;
 Still round and round the ghosts of beauty glide,
 And haunt the places where their honour dy'd.

See how the world its veterans rewards !
 A youth of frolics, an old-age of cards :
 Fair to no purpose, artful to no end ;
 Young without lovers, old without a friend ;
 A fop their passion, but their prize a sot ;
 Alive, ridiculous ; and dead, forgot !

Ah ! friend ! to dazzle let the vain design ;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine !
 That charm shall grow, while what fatigues the ring,
 Flaunts and goes down, an unregarded thing :
 So when the Sun's broad beam has tir'd the sight,
 All mild ascends the Moon's more sober light,
 Serene in virgin modesty she shines,
 And unobserv'd the glaring orb declines.

Oh ! blest with temper, whose unclouded ray
 Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day :
 She, who can love a sister's charms, or hear
 Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear ;
 She who ne'er answers till a husband cools,
 Or, if she rules him, never shows she rules ;
 Charms by accepting, by submitting sways,
 Yet has her humour most, when she obeys ;
 Let fops or Fortune fly which way they will,
 Disdains all loss of tickets, or codille ;
 Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all,
 And mistress of herself, though china fall.

And yet, believe me, good as well as ill,
 Woman's at best a contradiction still.
 Heaven when it strives to polish all it can
 Its last best work, but forms a softer man ;
 Picks from each sex, to make the favourite blest,
 Your love of pleasure, our desire of rest :
 Blends, in exception to all general rules,
 Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools :
 Reserve with frankness, art with truth ally'd,
 Courage with softness, modesty with pride ;
 Fix'd principles, with fancy ever new ;
 Shakes all together, and produces — you.
 Be this a woman's fame ! with this unblest,
 Toasts live a scorn, and queens may die a jest.
 This Phœbus promis'd (I forget the year)
 When those blue eyes first open'd on the sphere ;
 Ascendant Phœbus watch'd that hour with care,
 Averted half your parents' simple prayer ;
 And gave you beauty, but deny'd the pelf
 That buys your sex a tyrant o'er itself.
 The generous god, who wit and gold refines,
 And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
 Kept dress for duchesses, the world shall know it,
 To you gave sense, good-humour, and a poet.

To ALLEN, LORD BATHURST.

EPISTLE III.

ON THE USE OF RICHES.

Argument.

That it is known to few, most falling into one of the extremes, avarice or profusion. The point discussed, whether the invention of money has been more commodious or pernicious to mankind. That riches, either to the avaricious or the prodigal, cannot afford happiness, scarcely necessaries. That avarice is an absolute frenzy, without an end or purpose. Conjectures about the motives of avaricious men. That the conduct of men, with respect to riches, can only be accounted for by the order of Providence, which works the general good out of extremes, and brings all to its great end by perpetual revolutions. How a miser acts upon principles which appear to him reasonable. How a prodigal does the same. The due medium, and true use of riches. The Man of Ross. The fate of the profuse and the covetous, in two examples ; both miserable in life and in death. The story of Sir Balam.

P. Who shall decide when doctors disagree,
 And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me ?
 You hold the word, from Jove to Momus given,
 That man was made the standing jest of Heaven ;
 And gold but sent to keep the fools in play,
 For some to heap, and some to throw away.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
 (And, surely, Heaven and I are of a mind,)
 Opine, that Nature, as in duty bound,
 Deep hid the shining mischief under ground :
 But when, by man's audacious labour won,
 Flam'd forth this rival too, its sire, the Sun,
 Then careful Heaven supply'd two sorts of men,
 To squander these, and those to hide again.

Like doctors thus, when much dispute has past,
 We find our tenets just the same at last.

Both fairly owning, riches, in effect,
 No grace of Heaven, or token of th' elect ;
 Given to the fool, the mad, the vain, the evil,
 To Ward, to Waters, Chartres, and the Devil.

B. What nature wants, commodious gold bestows,
 'Tis thus we eat the bread another sows.

P. But how unequal it bestows, observe ;
 'Tis thus we riot, while, who sow it, starve :
 What nature wants (a phrase I must distrust)
 Extends to luxury, extends to lust :
 Useful, I grant, it serves what life requires,
 But dreadful too, the dark assassin hires.

B. Trade it may help, society extend :

P. But lures the pirate, and corrupts the friend

B. It raises armies in a nation's aid :

P. But bribes a senate, and the land's betray'd
 In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
 If secret gold sap on from knave to knave.
 Once we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
 From the crack'd bag the dropping Guinea spout,
 And jingling down the back-stairs, told the crew,
 " Old Cato is as great a rogue as you."
 Blest Paper-credit ! last and best supply !
 That lends Corruption lighter wings to fly

gold, imp'd by thee, can compass hardest things,
An pocket states, can fetch or carry kings ;
A single leaf shall waft an army o'er,
Or ship off senates to some distant shore ;
A leaf, like Sibyl's, scatter to and fro
Our fates and fortunes, as the wind shall blow :
Regnant with thousands flits the scrap unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen.

Oh ! that such bulky bribes as all might see,
Till, as of old, encumber'd villany !
Could France or Rome divert our brave designs,
With all their brandies, or with all their wines ?
What could they more than knights and 'squires
Confound,

Or water all the quorum ten miles round ?
Or statesman's slumbers how this speech would Spoil !

Sir, Spain has sent a thousand jars of oil ;
Large bales of British cloth blockade the door ;
A hundred oxen at your levee roar."

Poor Avarice one torment more would find ;
Or could Profusion squander all in kind.
To stride his cheese Sir Morgan might we meet ;
And Worldly crying coals from street to street,
Hom, with a wig so wild, and mien so maz'd,
His mistakes for some poor tradesman craz'd.
And Colepepper's whole wealth been hops and Hogs,

Could he himself have sent it to the dogs ?
His grace will game : to White's a bull be led,
With spurning heels and with a butting head.
To White's be carry'd, as to ancient games,
His couriers, vases, and alluring dames.
Will then Uxorio, if the stakes he sweep,
Far home six whores, and make his lady weep ?
Or soft Adonis, so perfum'd and fine,
Drive to St. James's a whole herd of swine ?
Or filthy check on all industrious skill,
Or spoil the nation's last great trade, quadrille !
Once then, my lord, on such a world we fall,
What say you ? B. Say ? Why take it, gold and all.

P. What riches give us, let us then inquire ?
Least, fire, and clothes. B. What more ? P. Meat, clothes, and fire.

Is this too little ? would you more than live ?
Has ! 'tis more than Turner finds they give.
Has ! 'tis more than (all his visions past)
Unhappy Wharton, waking, found at last !
What can they give ? to dying Hopkins, heirs ;
To Chartres, vigour ; Japhet, nose and ears ?
Can they, in gems bid pallid Hippia glow,
Or Fulvia's buckle ease the throbs below ;
Or heal, old Narses, thy obscener ail,
With all th' embroidery plaster'd at thy tail ?
Why might (were Harpax not too wise to spend)
Give Harpax self the blessing of a friend ;
Or find some doctor that would save the life
Of wretched Shylock, spite of Shylock's wife ;
Let thousands die, without or this or that,
He, and endow a college, or a cat.
To come, indeed, Heaven grants the happier fate,
To enrich a bastard, or a son they hate.

Perhaps you think the poor might have their part ;
Heaven damn the poor, and hates them from his
heart :

The grave Sir Gilbert holds it for a rule
That every man in want is knave or fool :
"God cannot love" (says Blunt, with tearless eyes)
"The wretch he starves" — and piously denies :

But the good bishop, with a meeker air,
Admits, and leaves them, Providence's care.

Yet to be just to these poor men of pelf,
Each does but hate his neighbour as himself :
Damn'd to the mines, an equal fate betides
The slave that digs it, and the slave that hides.

B. Who suffer thus, mere charity should own,
Must act on motives powerful, though unknown.

P. Some war, some plague, or famine, they foresee,
Some revelation hid from you and me.

Why Shylock wants a meal, the cause is found ;
He thinks a loaf will rise to fifty pound.

What made directors cheat in South-Sea year ?
To live on venison when it sold so dear.

Ask you why Phryne the whole auction buys ?
Phryne foresees a general excise.

Why she and Sappho raise that monstrous sum ?
Alas ! they fear a man will cost a plum.

Wise Peter sees the world's respect for gold,
And therefore hopes this nation may be sold :
Glorious ambition ! Peter, swell thy store,
And be what Rome's great Didius was before.

The crown of Poland, venal twice an age,
To just three millions stinted modest Gage.
But nobler scenes Maria's dreams unfold,
Hereditary realms, and worlds of gold.

Congenial souls ; whose life one avarice joins,
And one fate buries in th' Asturian mines.

Much-injur'd Blunt ! why bears he Britain's hate ?
A wizard told him in these words our fate :

"At length Corruption, like a general flood,
(So long by watchful ministers withstood,)
Shall deluge all ; and Avarice, creeping on,
Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun ;
Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
Peeress and butler share alike the box ;
And judges job, and bishops bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown.

See Britain sunk in Lucre's sordid charms,
And France reveng'd of Anne's and Edward's arms !"

'Twas no court-badge, great scrivener, fir'd thy brain,
Nor lordly luxury, nor city gain :

No, 'twas thy righteous end, ashamed to see
Senates degenerate, patriots disagree,
And nobly wishing party-rage to cease,
To buy both sides, and give thy country peace.

"All this is madness," cries a sober sage :
But who, my friend, has reason in his rage ?

"The ruling passion, be it what it will,
The ruling passion conquers reason still."

Less mad the wildest whimsey we can frame,
Than even that passion, if it has no aim ;
For though such motives folly you may call,
The folly's greater to have none at all.

Hear then the truth : "'Tis Heaven each passion sends,

And different men directs to different ends.
Extremes in Nature equal good produce,
Extremes in man concur to general use."

Ask we what makes one keep, and one bestow ?
That Power who bids the ocean ebb and flow,
Bids seed-time, harvest, equal course maintain,
Through reconcil'd extremes of drought and rain,
Builds life on death, on change duration founds,
And gives th' eternal wheels to know their rounds.

Riches, like insects, when conceal'd they lie,
Wait but for wings, and in their season fly.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor ;

This year, a reservoir, to keep and spare ;
The next, a fountain, spouting through his hair,
In lavish streams to quench a country's thirst,
And men and dogs shall drink him till they burst.

Old Cotta sham'd his fortune and his birth,
Yet was not Cotta void of wit or worth :
What though (the use of barbarous spits forgot)
His kitchen vied in coolness with his grot ?
His court with nettles, moats with cresses stor'd,
With soups unbought and sallads bless'd his board ?
If Cotta liv'd on pulse, it was no more
Than Bramins, saints, and sages did before :
To cram the rich, was prodigal expense,
And who would take the poor from Providence ?
Like some lone Chartreux stands the good old Hall,
Silence without, and fasts within the wall ;
No rafter'd roofs with dance and tabor sound,
No noontide bell invites the country round :
Tenants with sighs the smokeless towers survey,
And turn th' unwilling steeds another way :
Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,
Curs'd the sav'd candle, and unopening door ;
While the gaunt mastiff, growling at the gate,
Affrights the beggar whom he longs to eat.

Not so his son : he mark'd this oversight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right.
(For what to shun, will no great knowledge need ;
But what to follow, is a task indeed.)
Yet sure, of qualities deserving praise,
More go to ruin fortunes, than to raise.
What slaughter'd hecatombs, what floods of wine,
Fill the capacious 'squire, and deep divine !
Yet no mean motives this profusion draws,
His oxen perish in his country's cause ;
'Tis George and Liberty that crowns the cup,
And zeal for that great house which eats him up.
The woods recede around the naked seat,
The Sylvens groan — no matter — for the fleet :
Next goes his wool — to clothe our valiant bands :
Last, for his country's love, he sells his lands.
To town he comes, completes the nation's hope,
And heads the bold train-bands, and burns a pope.
And shall not Britain now reward his toils,
Britain that pays her patriots with her spoils ?
In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause,
His thankless country leaves him to her laws.

The sense to value riches, with the art
To enjoy them, and the virtue to impart,
Not meanly, nor ambitiously pursued,
Not sunk by sloth, nor rais'd by servitude ;
To balance fortune by a just expense,
Join with economy, magnificence ;
With splendour, charity ; with plenty, health ;
Oh teach us, Bathurst ! yet unspoil'd by wealth !
That secret rare, between th' extremes to move
Of mad Good-nature, and of mean Self-love.

B. To worth or want well-weigh'd, be bounty given,
And ease, or emulate, the care of Heaven ;
(Whose measure full o'erflows on human race)
Mend Fortune's fault, and justify her grace.
Wealth in the gross is death, but life diffus'd ;
As poison heals, in just proportion us'd :
In heaps, like ambergris, a stink it lies,
But well dispers'd, is incense to the skies.

P. Who starves by nobles, or with nobles eats ?
The wretch that trusts them, and the rogue that cheats.
Is there a lord, who knows a cheerful noon
Without a fiddler, flatterer, or buffoon ?

Whose table, Wit, or modest Merit share,
Un-elbow'd by a gamester, pimp, or player ?
Who copies yours, or Oxford's better part,
To ease th' oppress'd, and raise the sinking heart ?
Where'er he shines, oh Fortune, gild the scene,
And angels guard him in the golden mean !
There, English Bounty yet a while may stand,
And Honour linger ere it leaves the land.

But all our praises why should lords engross ?
Rise, honest Muse ! and sing the Man of Ross :
Pleas'd Vaga echoes through her winding bounds,
And rapid Severn hoarse applause resounds.
Who hung with woods yon mountain's salty brow ?

From the dry rock who bade the waters flow ?
Not to the skies in useless columns tost,
Or in proud falls magnificently lost ;
But clear and artless pouring through the plain
Health to the sick, and solace to the swain.
Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows ?
Whose seats the weary traveller repose ?
Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise ?
" The Man of Ross," each lisping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread !
The Man of Ross divides the weekly bread :
He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
Where Age and Want sit smiling at the gate ;
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans bless,
The young who labour, and the old who rest.
Is any sick ? the Man of Ross relieves,
Prescribes, attends, the medicine makes, and gives.
Is there a variance ? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an useless race.

B. Thrice happy man ! enabled to pursue
What all so wish, but want the power to do !
Oh say, what sums that generous hand supply ?
What mines to swell that boundless charity ?

P. Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear.
This man possess — five hundred pounds a year.
Blush, Grandeur, blush ! proud courts, withdraw your blaze !

Ye little stars ! hide your diminish'd rays.

B. And what ? no monument, inscription, stone ?
His race, his form, his name almost unknown ?

P. Who builds a church to God, and not to Fame.
Will never mark the marble with his name :
Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history ;
Enough, that Virtue fill'd the space between ;
Prov'd by the ends of being, to have been.
When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch, who living sav'd a candle's end ;
Shouldering God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands ;
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone.
Behold what blessings wealth to life can lend !
And see, what comfort it affords our end.
In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half-hung
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung,
On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw.
With tape-ty'd curtains, never meant to draw,
The George and Garter dangling from that bed
Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red,
Great Villers lies — alas, how chang'd from him,
That life of pleasure, and that soul of whim !
Gallant and gay, in Cliveden's proud alcove,
The bower of wanton Shrewsbury and Love ;

Or just as gay, at council, in a ring
 Of mimick'd statesmen, and their merry king.
 To wit to flatter, left of all his store !
 To fool to laugh at, which he valued more.
 Here, victor of his health, of fortune, friends,
 And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends.
 His grace's fate sage Cutler could foresee,
 And well (he thought) advis'd him, "Live like me!"
 As well his grace reply'd, "Like you, Sir John !
 That I can do, when all I have is gone."
 Resolve me, Reason, which of these are worse,
 Want with a full, or with an empty purse ?
 Thy life more wretched, Cutler, was confess'd,
 Rise, and tell me, was thy death more bless'd ?
 Cutler saw tenants break, and houses fall,
 For very want he could not build a wall.
 His only daughter in a stranger's power,
 For very want ; he could not pay a dower.
 A few grey hairs his reverend temples crown'd,
 Was very want that sold them for two pound.
 That ! ev'n deny'd a cordial at his end,
 Banish'd the doctor, and expell'd the friend ?
 That but a want, which you perhaps think mad,
 Yet numbers feel, the want of what he had !
 Cutler and Brutus dying, both exclaim,
 "Virtue ! and Wealth ! what are ye but a name !" —
 Why, for such worth are other worlds prepar'd ?
 Or are they both, in this, their own reward ?
 A knotty point ! to which we now proceed.
 But you are tir'd — I'll tell a tale. — B. Agreed.
P. Where London's column, pointing at the skies
 Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies ;
 Here dwelt a citizen of sober fame,
 A plain good man, and Balaam was his name ;
 Religious, punctual, frugal, and so forth ;
 In word would pass for more than he was worth.
 He sold his dish his week-day meal affords,
 And added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's :
 Instant at church, and 'Change ; his gains were Sure,
 His givings rare, save farthings to the poor.
 The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
 And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old ;
 But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
 And tempts by making rich, not making poor.
 Rous'd by the prince of air, the whirlwinds sweep
 He surge, and plunge his father in the deep ;
 Then full against his Cornish lands they roar,
 And two rich shipwrecks bless the lucky shore.
 Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks,
 He takes his chirping pint, and cracks his jokes :
 "Live like yourself," was soon my lady's word ;
 And lo ! two puddings smok'd upon the board.
 Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
 An honest factor stole a gem away :
 He pledg'd it to the knight, the knight had wit,
 He kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.
 Some scruple rose, but thus he eas'd his thought,
 "I'll now give sixpence where I gave a groat ;
 Where once I went to church, I'll now go twice —
 And am so clear too of all other vice."
 The tempter saw his time : the work he ply'd ;
 Stocks and subscriptions pour on every side,
 And all the demon makes his full descent
 A one abundant shower of cent per cent,
 Takes deep within him, and possesses whole,
 Then dubs director, and secures his soul.
 Behold Sir Balaam, now a man of spirit,
 Ascribes his gettings to his parts and merit ;

What late he call'd a blessing, now was wit,
 And God's good providence, a lucky hit.
 Things change their titles, as our manners turn :
 His compting-house employ'd the Sunday morn :
 Seldom at church, ('twas such a busy life,)
 But duly sent his family and wife.
 There (so the devil ordain'd) one Christmas-tide
 My good old lady catch'd a cold, and dy'd.
 A nymph of quality admires our knight ;
 He marries, bows at court, and grows polite :
 Leaves the dull city, and joins (to please the fair)
 The well-bred cuckolds in St. James's air :
 First, for his son a gay commission buys,
 Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies :
 His daughter flaunts a viscount's tawdry wife ;
 She bears a coronet and p—x for life.
 In Britain's senate he a seat obtains,
 And one more pensioner St. Stephen gains.
 My lady falls to play : so bad her chance,
 He must repair it ; takes a bribe from France :
 The house impeach him, Coningsby harangues ;
 The court forsake him, and Sir Balaam hangs :
 Wife, son, and daughter, Satan ! are thy own,
 His wealth, yet dearer, forfeit to the crown :
 The devil and the king divide the prize,
 And sad Sir Balaam curses God and dies.

TO RICHARD BOYLE, EARL OF BURLINGTON.

ÆPISTLE IV.

OF THE USE OF RICHES.

Argument.

The vanity of expense in people of wealth and quality. The abuse of the word taste. That the first principle and foundation in this, as in every thing else, is good sense. The chief proof of it is to follow Nature, even in works of mere luxury and elegance. Instanced in architecture and gardening, where all must be adapted to the genius and use of the place, and the beauties not forced into it, but resulting from it. How men are disappointed in their most expensive undertakings, for want of this true foundation, without which nothing can please long, if at all ; and the best examples and rules will be but perverted into something burthensome and ridiculous. A description of the false taste of magnificence ; the first grand error of which is, to imagine that greatness consists in the size and dimension, instead of the proportion and harmony of the whole ; and the second, either in joining together parts incoherent, or too minutely resembling, or in the repetition of the same too frequently. A word or two of false taste in books, in music, in painting, even in preaching and prayer, and lastly in entertainments. Yet Providence is justified in giving wealth to be squandered in this manner, since it is dispersed to the poor and laborious part of mankind. What are the proper objects of magnificence, and a proper field for the expense of great men ; and finally the great and public works which become a prince.

'Tis strange, the miser should his cares employ
 To gain those riches he can ne'er enjoy ;

Is it less strange, the prodigal should waste
His wealth, to purchase what he ne'er can taste?
Not for himself he sees, or hears, or eats;
Artists must choose his pictures, music, meats:
He buys for Topham drawings and designs;
For Pembroke statues, dirty gods, and coins;
Rare monkish manuscripts for Hearne alone,
And books for Mead, and butterflies for Sloane.
Think we all these are for himself? no more
Than his fine wife, alas! or finer whore.

For what has Virro painted, built, and planted?
Only to show how many tastes he wanted.
What brought Sir Visto's ill-got wealth to waste?
Some demon whisper'd, "Visto! have a taste."
Heaven visits with a taste the wealthy fool,
And needs no rod but Ripley with a rule.
See! sportive Fate, to punish awkward pride,
Bids Bubo build, and sends him such a guide:
A standing sermon, at each year's expense,
That never coxcomb reach'd magnificence!

You show us, Rome was glorious, not profuse,
And pompous buildings once were things of use.
Yet shall, my lord, your just, your noble rules
Fill half the land with imitating fools;
Who random drawings from your sheets shall take,
And of one beauty many blunders make;
Load some vain church with old theatric state,
Turn arts of triumph to a garden-gate;
Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd dog-hole ek'd with ends of wall;
Then clap four slices of pilaster on 't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front.
Shall call the winds through long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door;
Conscious they act a true Palladian part,
And if they starve, they starve by rules of art.

Oft have you hinted to your brother peer,
A certain truth, which many buy too dear:
Something there is more needful than expense,
And something previous ev'n to taste — 'tis sense:
Good sense, which only is the gift of Heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:
A light which in yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend,
To swell the terrace, or to sink the grot;
In all, let Nature never be forgot.
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare;
Let not each beauty every where be spy'd,
Where half the skill is decently to hide.
He gains all points, who pleasingly confounds,
Surprizes, varies, and conceals the bounds.
Consult the genius of the place in all;
That tells the waters or to rise, or fall;
Or helps th' ambitious hill the heavens to scale,
Or scoops in circling theatres the vale;
Calls in the country, catches opening glades,
Joins willing woods, and varies shades from shades;
Now breaks, or now directs th' intending lines;
Paints as you plant, and, as you work, designs.

Still follow sense, of every art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole,
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you; Time shall make it grow
A work to wonder at — perhaps a Stow.

Without it, proud Versailles! thy glory falls;
And Nero's terraces desert their walls:

The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make,
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake:
Or cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll wish your hill or shelter'd seat again.
Ev'n in an ornament its place remark,
Nor in an hermitage set Dr. Clarke.
Behold Villario's ten years' toil complete;
His quincunx darkens, his espaliers meet;
The wood supports the plain, the parts unite,
And strength of shade contends with strength of light;

A waving glow the bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day,
With silver-quivering rills meander'd o'er —
Enjoy them, you! Villario can no more;
Tir'd of the scene parterres and fountains yield,
He finds at last he better likes a field.

Through his young woods how pleas'd Sabina
stray'd,

Or sate delighted in the thickening shade,
With annual joy the reddening shoots to greet,
Or see the stretching branches long to meet!
His son's fine taste an opener Vista loves,
Foe to the Dryads of his father's groves;
One boundless green, or flourish'd carpet views,
With all the mournful family of yews:
The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade.

At Timon's villa let us pass a day,
Where all cry out, "What sums are thrown away!"
So proud, so grand; of that stupendous air,
Soft and agreeable come never there.
Greatness, with Timon, dwells in such a draught
As brings all Brobdignag before your thought.
To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down:
Who but must laugh, the master when he sees,
A puny insect, shivering at a breeze!
Lo, what huge heaps of littleness around!
The whole a labour'd quarry above ground.
Two Cupids squirt before: a lake behind
Improves the keenness of the northern wind.
His gardens next your admiration call,
On every side you look, behold the wall!
No pleasing intricacies intervene,
No artful wildness to perplex the scene;
Grove nods at grove, each alley has a brother,
And half the platform just reflects the other
The suffering eye inverted Nature sees,
Trees cut to statues, statues thick as trees;
With here a fountain, never to be play'd;
And there a summer-house that knows no shade;
Here Amphitrite sails through myrtle bowers;
There gladiators fight, or die in flowers;
Unwater'd see the drooping sea-horse mourn,
And swallows roost in Nilus' dusty urn.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
Smit with the mighty pleasure to be seen:
But soft — by regular approach — not yet —
First through the length of yon hot terrace sweet;
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,

Just at his study-door he'll bless your eyes.

His study! with what authors is it stor'd?
In books, not authors, curious is my lord;
To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Sueil has bound.
Lo, some are vellum, and the rest as good
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.

For Locke or Milton, 'tis in vain to look,
These shelves admit not any modern book.

And now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer :
Light quirks of music, broken and uneven,
Make the soul dance upon a jig to Heaven.
On painted ceilings you devoutly stare,
Where sprawl the saints of Verrio or Laguerre,
Or gilded clouds in fair expansion lie,
And bring all Paradise before your eye.
To rest, the cushion and soft dean invite,
Who never mentions Hell to ears polite.

But hark ! the chiming clocks to dinner call ;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall :
The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.
Is this a dinner ? this a genial room ?
No, 'tis a temple, and a hecatomb.
A solemn sacrifice perform'd in state,
You drink by measure, and to minutes eat.
So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.
Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
From soup to sweet-wine, and God bless the King.
In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate,
Treated, caress'd, and tir'd, I take my leave,
Sick of his civil pride from morn to eve ;
I curse such lavish cost, and little skill,
And swear no day was ever pass'd so ill.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed ;
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The labourer bears : What his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre,
Deep harvest bury all his pride has plann'd,
And laughing Ceres re-assume the land.

Who then shall grace, or who improve the soil ?
Who plants like Bathurst, or who builds like Boyle ?
'Tis use alone that sanctifies expense,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense.

His father's acres who enjoys in peace,
Or makes his neighbours glad, if he increase :
Whose cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil,
Yet to their lord owe more than to the soil ;
Whose ample lawns are not ashamed to feed
The milky heifer and deserving steed ;
Whose rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies, grow :
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town.

You too proceed ! make falling arts your care,
Erect new wonders, and the old repair ;
Jones and Palladio to themselves restore,
And be whate'er Vitruvius was before :
Till kings call forth the ideas of your mind,
(Proud to accomplish what such hands design'd,)
Bid harbours open, public ways extend,
Bid temples worthier of the God ascend ;
Bid the broad arch the dangerous flood contain,
The mole projected break the roaring main ;
Back to his bounds their subject sea command,
And roll obedient rivers through the land ;
These honours, Peace to happy Britain brings ;
These are imperial works, and worthy kings.

To MR. ADDISON.

EPISTLE V.

OCCASIONED BY HIS DIALOGUES ON MEDALS.

This was originally written in the year 1715, when Mr. Addison intended to publish his book of medals : it was some time before he was secretary of state ; but not published till Mr. Tickell's edition of his works ; at which time his verses on Mr. Craggs, which conclude the poem, were added, viz. in 1720.

As the third Epistle treated of the extremes of avarice and profusion ; and the fourth took up one particular branch of the latter, namely, the vanity of expense in people of wealth and quality, and was, therefore, a corollary to the third ; so this treats of one circumstance of that vanity, as it appears in the common collectors of old coins ; and is, therefore, a corollary to the fourth.

See the wild waste of all-devouring years ;
How Rome her own sad sepulchre appears,
With nodding arches, broken temples spread !
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead !
Imperial wonders rais'd on nations spoil'd, [toil'd :
Where, mix'd with slaves, the groaning martyr
Huge theatres, that now unpeopled woods,
Now drain'd a distant country of her floods :
Fanes, which admiring gods with pride survey ;
Statues of men, scarce less alive than they !
Some felt the silent stroke of mouldering age,
Some hostile fury, some religious rage.
Barbarian blindness, christian zeal conspire,
And papal piety, and gothic fire.
Perhaps, by its own ruins sav'd from flame,
Some bury'd marble half preserves a name ;
That name the learn'd with fierce disputes pursue,
And give to Titus old Vespasian's due.

Ambition sigh'd : she found it vain to trust
The faithless column and the crumbling bust :
Huge moles, whose shadows stretch'd from shore to shore,

Their ruins perish'd, and their place no more !
Convinc'd, she now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin.
A narrow orb each crowded conquest keeps,
Beneath her palm here sad Judea weeps ;
Now scantier limits the proud arch confine,
And scarce are seen the prostrate Nile or Rhine ;
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold.

The medal, faithful to its charge of fame,
Through climes and ages bears each form and name :
In one short view subjected to our eye
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties, lie.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore.
This the blue varnish, that the green endears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years !
To gain Pescenius one employs his schemes,
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatic dreams.
Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his shield was scour'd :
And Curio, restless by the fair-one's side,
Sighs for an Otho, and neglects his bride.

Theirs is the vanity, the learning thine
Touch'd by thy hand, again Rome's glories shine :

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew.
Nor blush, these studies thy regard engage :
These pleas'd the fathers of poetic rage :
The verse and sculpture bore an equal part,
And art reflected images to art.

Oh, when shall Britain, conscious of her claim,
Stand emulous of Greek and Roman fame?
In living medals see her wars enroll'd,
And vanquish'd realms supply recording gold?
Here, rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There, warriors frowning in historic brass?
Then future ages with delight shall see
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's looks agree;
Or in fair series laurel'd bards be shown,
A Virgil there, and here an Addison:
Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the cast ore, another Pollio, shine:
With aspect open shall erect his head,
And round the orb in lasting notes be read,
"Statesman, best friend to truth! of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honour clear;
Who broke no promise, serv'd no private end,
Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend;
Ennobled by himself, by all approv'd,
And prais'd, unenvy'd, by the Muse he loved."

EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT:

BEING THE PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

P. SHUT, shut the door, good John! fatigu'd, I said,
Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead.
The Dog-star rages! nay, 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out:
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

What walls can guard me, or what shades can hide?

They pierce my thickets, through my grot they glide.
By land, by water, they renew the charge;
They stop the chariot, and they board the barge.
No place is sacred, not the church is free,
Ev'n Sunday shines no sabbath-day to me;
Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me, just at dinner-time.

Is there a parson, much bemus'd in beer,
A maudlin poetess, a rhyming peer,
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza, when he should engross?
Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
All fly to Twit'nam, and, in humble strain,
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.
Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause:
Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope,
And curses wit, and poetry, and Pope.

Friend to my life! (which did you not prolong,
The world had wanted many an idle song,)
What drop of nostrum can this plague remove?
Or which must end me, a fool's wrath or love?
A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead.
Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lie:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face.

I sit with sad civility; I read
With honest anguish, and an aching head;
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."

"Nine years!" cries he, who high in Drury-lane,
Lull'd by soft zephyrs through the broken pane,
Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before term ends,
Oblig'd by hunger and request of friends:

"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why take it;
I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it."

Three things another's modest wishes bound,
My friendship, and a prologue, and ten pound.

Pitholeon sends to me: "You know his grace:
I want a patron; ask him for a place."

Pitholeon libell'd me — "but here's a letter
Informs you, sir, 'twas when he knew no better.

Dare you refuse him? Curll invites to dine,
He'll write a journal, or he'll turn divine."

Bless me! a packet. — "'Tis a stranger sees,
A Virgin Tragedy, an Orphan Muse."

If I dislike it, "Puries, death, and rage!"

If I approve, "Commend it to the stage."

There (thank my stars) my whole commission ends,
The players and I are, luckily, no friends.

Fir'd that the house reject him, "'Sdeath! I'll print
And shame the fools — your interest, sir, with

Lintot."

Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:

"Not, sir, if you revise it, and retouch."

All my demurs but double his attacks:

At last he whispers, "Do; and we go snacks."

Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door,

"Sir, let me see your works and you no more."

'Tis sung, when Midas' ears began to spring.

(Midas, a sacred person and a king,)

His very minister, who spy'd them first,

(Some say his queen,) was forc'd to speak, or burst.

And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case,

When every coxcomb perks them in my face?

A. Good friend, forbear! you deal in dangerous things,

I'd never name queens, ministers, or kings;

Keep close to ears, and those let asses prick,

'Tis nothing — P. Nothing? if they bite and kick?

Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass,

That secret to each fool, that he's an ass:

The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie?)

The queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel? Take it for a rule,

No creature smarts so little as a fool.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus, round thee break,

Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack:

Pit, box, and gallery, in convulsions hurl'd,

Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.

Who shames a scribbler? Break one cobweb through,

He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew:

Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,

The creature's at his dirty work again,

Thron'd on the centre of his thin designs,

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines!

Whom have I hurt? has poet yet, or peer,

Lost the arch'd eyebrow, or Parnassian sneer?

And has not Colly still his lord, and where?

His butchers Henley, his free-masons Moor?

Does not one table Bavius still admit?

Still to one bishop Philip seems a wit?

Still Sappho — A. Hold! for God's sake — you'll offend;

No names — be calm — learn prudence of a friend.

[too could write, and I am twice as tall; [all
But foes like these — P. One flatterer's worse than
Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.

A fool quite angry is quite innocent :
Alas ! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.
One dedicates in high heroic prose,
And ridicules beyond a hundred foes ;
One from all Grub-street will my fame defend,
And, more abusive, calls himself my friend.
This prints my letters, that expects a bribe,
And others roar aloud, " Subscribe, subscribe !"

There are, who to my person pay their court :
I cough like Horace, and, though lean, am short.
Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high,
Much Ovid's nose, and, " Sir ! you have an eye !"
Go on, obliging creature, make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me.
Lay, for my comfort, languishing in bed,
Just so immortal Maro held his head ;"
And when I die, be sure you let me know
Great Homer dy'd three thousand years ago.

Why did I write ? what sin' to me unknown
Lipp'd me in ink, my parents', or my own ?
Is yet a child, nor yet a fool to Fame,
Lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.
Left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd ;
The Muse but serv'd to ease some friend, not wife ;
To help me through this long disease, my life ;
To second, Arbuthnot ! thy art and care,
And teach, the being you preserv'd, to bear.

But why then publish ? Granville the polite,
And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write ;
Veil-natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays ;
The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield read,
John mitred Rochester would nod the head,
And St. John's self (great Dryden's friend before)
With open arms received one poet more.

Happy my studies, when by these approv'd !
Happier their author, when by these belov'd !
From these the world will judge of men and books,
Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.

Soft were my numbers : who could take offence
While pure description held the place of sense ?
Like gentle Fanny's was my flowery theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.
Yet then did Gildon draw his venal quill ;
Wish'd the man a dinner, and sate still.
Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret :
Never answer'd, I was not in debt.

I want provok'd, or madness made them print,
Wag'd no war with Bedlam or the Mint.
Did some more sober critic come abroad ;
I wrong, I smil'd ; if right, I kiss'd the rod.
Pains, reading, study, are their just pretence,
And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.
Commas and points they set exactly right,
And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibalds.
Each wight, who reads not, and but scans and spells,
Each word-catcher, that lives on syllables,
Even such small critics some regard may claim,
Reserv'd in Milton's or in Shakspeare's name.
Pretty ! in amber to observe the forms
Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms !
The things we know are neither rich nor rare,
But wonder how the devil they got there.

Were others angry : I excus'd them too ;
Well might they rage, I gave them but their due.
A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find ;
But each man's secret standard in his mind,
That casting-weight pride adds to emptiness,
This, who can gratify ? for who can guess ?
The bard whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear, [year ;
And strains from hard-bound brains, eight lines
He, who, still wanting, though he lives on theft,
Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left :
And he, who, now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning :
And he, whose fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad :
All these, my modest satire bad translate,
And own'd that nine such poets made a Tate.
How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe !
And swear, not Addison himself was safe.

Peace to all such ! but were there one whose fires
True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires ;
Blest with each talent and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live with ease :
Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne,
View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
And hate for arts that caus'd himself to rise ;
Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer ;
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike ;
Alike reserv'd to blame, or to commend,
A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend ;
Dreading ev'n fools, by flatterers besieg'd,
And so obliging, that he ne'er oblig'd ;
Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause ;
While wits and templars every sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise —
Who but must laugh, if such a man there be !
Who would not weep, if Atticus were he !

What, though my name stood rubric on the walls,
Or plaster'd posts, with claps, in capitals ?
Or smoking forth, a hundred hawkers' load,
On wings of winds came flying all abroad ?
I sought no homage from the race that write ;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight :
Poems I heeded (now berhym'd so long)
No more than thou, great George ! a birth-day song.
I ne'er with wits or witlings pass'd my days,
To spread about the itch of verse and praise ;
Nor, like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down ;
Nor at rehearsals sweat, and mouth'd, and cry'd,
With handkerchief and orange at my side !
But, sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
To Bufo left the whole Castalian state.
Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sate full-blown Bufo, puff'd by every quill ;
Fed with soft dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song.
His library (where busts of poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head)
Receiv'd of wits an undistinguish'd race,
Who first his judgment ask'd, and then a place ;
Much they extoll'd his pictures, much his seat,
And flatter'd every day, and some days eat ;
Till, grown more frugal in his riper days,
He paid some bards with port, and some with praise ;

To some a dry rehearsal was assign'd,
And others (harder still) he paid in kind.
Dryden alone (what wonder?) came not nigh,
Dryden alone escap'd this judging eye:
But still the great have kindness in reserve,
He help'd to bury whom he help'd to starve.

May some choice patron bless each grey goosequill!

May every Bavius have his Bufo still!
So when a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands!
Blest be the great! for those they take away,
And those they left me; for they left me Gay:
Left me to see neglected genius bloom,
Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb:
Of all thy blameless life the sole return
My verse, and Queensberry weeping o'er thy urn!

Oh let me live my own, and die so too!
(To live and die is all I have to do:)
Maintain a poet's dignity and ease,
And see what friends, and read what books I please:
Above a patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.
I was not born for courts or great affairs:
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers;
Can sleep without a poem in my head,
Nor know, if Dennis be alive or dead.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light?
Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write?
Has life no joys for me? or (to be grave)
Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save?
"I found him close with Swift—Indeed? no doubt (Cries prating Balbus) something will come out."
'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will,
"No, such a genius never can lie still;"
And then for mine obligingly mistakes
The first lampoon Sir Will or Bubo makes.
Poor, guiltless I! and can I choose but smile,
When every coxcomb knows me by my style?

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear!
But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Insults fall'n worth, or beauty in distress,
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out:
That fop, whose pride affects a patron's name,
Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame:
Who can your merit selfishly approve,
And show the sense of it without the love;
Who has the vanity to call you friend,
Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend;
Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,
And, if he lie not, must at least betray:
Who to the dean and silver bell can swear,
And sees at Cannons what was never there;
Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
Make satire a lampoon, and fiction lie;
A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

Let Sporus tremble—A. What? that thing of silk,
Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk?
Satire of sense, alas! can Sporus feel?
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?
P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings;

Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys:
So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks;
Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies.
His wit all see-saw, between that and this,
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile Antithesis.
Amphibious thing! that, acting either part,
The trifling head! or the corrupted heart,
Fop at the toilet, flatterer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's tempter thus the Rabbins have express,
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest.

Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.

Not Fortune's worshipper, nor Fashion's fool,
Not Lucre's madman, nor Ambition's tool,
Not proud, nor servile; be one poet's praise,
That, if he pleas'd, he pleas'd by manly ways:
That flattery, ev'n to kings, he held a shame,
And thought a lie in verse or prose the same;
That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to Truth, and moraliz'd his song:
That not for fame, but Virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The damning critic, half-approving wit,
The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit;
Laugh'd at the loss of friends he never had,
The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad;
The distant threats of vengeance on his head,
The blow unfelt, the tear he never shed;
The tale reviv'd, the lie so oft o'erthrown,
Th' imputed trash, and dulness not his own;
The morals blacken'd when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person and the pictur'd shape;
Abuse, on all he lov'd, or lov'd him, spread,
A friend in exile, or a father dead;
The whisper, that, to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear—
Welcome for thee, fair Virtue! all the past:
For thee, fair Virtue! welcome ev'n the last!

A. But why insult the poor, affront the great?

P. A knave's a knave, to me, in every state:
Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail,
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a gaol;
A hireling scribbler, or a hireling peer,
Knight of the post corrupt, or of the shire;
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
Sappho can tell you how this man was bit:
This dreaded sat'rist Dennis will confess
Foe to his pride but friend to his distress:
So humble, he has knock'd at Tibbald's door,
Has drunk with Cibber, nay, has rhym'd for Moon.
Full ten years slander'd, did he once reply?
Three thousand suns went down on Welsted's lie.
To please his mistress one aspers'd his life;
He lash'd him not, but let her be his wife:
Let Budgell charge low Grub-street on his quill,
And write whate'er he pleas'd, except his will;

Let the two Curlls of town and court, abuse
His father, mother, body, soul, and Muse.
Yet why? that father held it for a rule;
It was a sin to call our neighbour fool:
That harmless mother thought no wife a whore:
Hear this and spare his family, James Moore;
Unspotted names, and memorable long;
If there be force in virtue, or in song.

Of gentle blood (part shed in Honour's cause,
While yet in Britain Honour had applause)
Each parent sprung — A. What fortune, pray? —

P. Their own,

And better got, than Bestia's from the throne.
Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife,
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.
No courts he saw, no suits would ever try,
Nor dar'd an oath, nor hazarded a lie.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art,
No language, but the language of the heart.
By nature honest, by experience wise;
Healthy by temperance, and by exercise;
His life, though long, to sickness past unknown,
His death was instant, and without a groan.
O grant me thus to live, and thus to die!

Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I.

O friend! may each domestic bliss be thine!
Be no unpleasing melancholy mine:
Me, let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age,
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death,
Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
And keep awhile one parent from the sky!
On cares like these if length of days attend,
May Heaven, to bless those days, preserve my friend,
Preserve him social, cheerful, and serene,
And just as rich as when he serv'd a queen!
A. Whether that blessings be deny'd or given,
Thus far was right, the rest belongs to Heaven.

MESSIAH.

A SACRED ECLOGUE, IN IMITATION OF VIRGIL'S PASTORAL.

Ye nymphs of Solyma! begin the song:
To heavenly themes sublimer strains belong.
The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades,
The dreams of Pindus and th' Aonian maids,
Delight no more — O thou my voice inspire
Who touch'd Isaiah's hallow'd lips with fire!

Rapt into future times, the bard begun:
A Virgin shall conceive, a Virgin bear a Son!
From Jesse's root behold a branch arise,
Whose sacred flower with fragrance fills the skies:
Th' ethereal spirit o'er its leaves shall move,
And on its top descends the mystic Dove.
Ye Heavens! from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly shower!
The sick and weak the healing plant shall aid,
From storm a shelter, and from heat a shade.
All crimes shall cease, and ancient frauds shall fail;
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-rob'd Innocence from Heaven descend.
Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!
Oh spring to light, auspicious Babe, be born!

See, Nature hastes her earliest wreaths to bring,
With all the incense of the breathing spring:
See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding forests on the mountains dance:
See spicy clouds from lowly Saron rise,
And Carmel's flowery top perfumes the skies!
Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;
Prepare the way! a God, a God appears!
A God, a God! the vocal hills reply,
The rocks proclaim th' approaching Deity.
Lo, Earth receives him from the bending skies!
Sink down, ye mountains! and ye valleys, rise!
With heads declin'd, ye cedars, homage pay!
Be smooth, ye rocks! ye rapid floods, give way!
The Saviour comes! by ancient bards foretold:
Hear him, ye deaf! and all ye blind, behold!
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eye-ball pour the day:
'Tis he th' obstructed paths of sound shall clear,
And bid new music charm th' unfolding ear:
The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe.
No sigh, no murmur, the wide world shall hear,
From every face he wipes off every tear.
In adamant chains shall Death be bound,
And Hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound.
As the good shepherd tends his fleecy care,
Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;
Explores the lost, the wandering sheep directs,
By day o'ersees them, and by night protects;
The tender lambs he raises in his arms,
Feeds from his hand, and in his bosom warms:
Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd father of the future age.
No more shall nation against nation rise,
Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes,
Nor fields with gleaming steel be cover'd o'er,
The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into scythes shall bend,
And the broad falchion in a plow-share end.
Then palaces shall rise; the joyful son
Shall finish what his short-liv'd sire begun;
Their vines a shadow to their race shall yield,
And the same hand that sow'd, shall reap the field.
The swain in barren deserts with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds to hear
New falls of water murmuring in his ear.
On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green reed trembles, and the bulrush nods.
Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spiry fir and shapely box adorn:
To leafless shrubs the flowery palms succeed,
And odorous myrtle to the noisome weed.
The lambs with wolves shall graze the verdant mead,
And boys in flowery bands the tiger lead:
The steer and lion at one crib shall meet,
And harmless serpents lick the pilgrim's feet.
The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake,
Pleas'd, the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forked tongue shall innocently play.
Rise, crown'd with light, imperial Salem, rise!
Exalt thy towery head, and lift thy eyes!
See a long race thy spacious courts adorn;
See future sons, and daughters yet unborn,
In crowding ranks on every side arise,
Demanding life, impatient for the skies!
See barbarous nations at thy gates attend,
Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend!

See thy bright altars throng'd with prostrate kings,
 And heap'd with products of Sabean springs !
 For thee Idumæ's spicy forests blow,
 And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow.
 See Heaven its sparkling portals wide display,
 And break upon thee in a flood of day !
 No more the rising Sun shall gild the morn,
 Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn ;
 But lost, dissolv'd in thy superior rays,
 One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze
 O'erflow thy courts : the Light himself shall shine
 Reveal'd, and God's eternal day be thine !
 The seas shall waste, the skies in smoke decay,
 Rocks fall to dust, and mountains melt away !
 But fix'd his word, his saving power remains ;
 Thy realm for ever lasts, thy own Messiah reigns !

ELEGY

TO THE MEMORY OF AN UNFORTUNATE LADY.

WHAT beckoning ghost, along the moon-light shade,
 Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade ?
 'Tis she ! — but why that bleeding bosom gor'd,
 Why dimly gleams the visionary sword ?
 Oh, ever beauteous, ever friendly ! tell,
 Is it, in Heaven, a crime to love too well ?
 To bear too tender, or too firm a heart,
 To act a lover's or a Roman's part ?
 Is there no bright reversion in the sky,
 For those who greatly think, or bravely die ?

Why bade ye else, ye powers ! her soul aspire
 Above the vulgar flight of low desire ?
 Ambition first sprung from your blest abodes ;
 The glorious fault of angels and of gods :
 Thence to their images on Earth it flows,
 And in the breasts of kings and heroes glows.
 Most souls, 'tis true, but peep out once an age,
 Dull sullen prisoners in the body's cage :
 Dim lights of life, that burn a length of years,
 Useless, unseen, as lamps in sepulchres ;
 Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
 And, close confin'd to their own palace, sleep.

From these perhaps (ere Nature bade her die)
 Fate snatch'd her early to the pitying sky.
 As into air the purer spirits flow,
 And separate from their kindred dregs below ;
 So flew the soul to its congenial place,
 Nor left one virtue to redeem her race.

But thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
 Thou, mean deserter of thy brother's blood !
 See on these ruby lips the trembling breath,
 These cheeks now fading at the blast of Death ;
 Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
 And those love-darting eyes must roll no more.
 Thus, if eternal Justice rules the ball,
 Thus shall your wives, and thus your children fall :
 On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
 And frequent hearses shall besiege your gates ;
 There passengers shall stand, and pointing say,
 (While the long funerals blacken all the way,)
 " Lo ! these were they, whose souls the Furies steel'd,
 And curst with hearts unknowing how to yield."
 Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
 The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day !
 So perish all, whose breast ne'er learn'd to glow,
 For others' good, or melt at others' woe.

What can atone, oh, ever-injur'd shade,
 Thy fate unpiety'd, and thy rites unpaid ?

No friend's complaint, no kind domestic tear
 Pleas'd thy pale ghost, or grac'd thy mournful bier :
 By foreign hands thy dying eyes were clos'd,
 By foreign hands thy decent limbs compos'd ;
 By foreign hands thy humble grave adorn'd,
 By strangers honour'd, and by strangers mourn'd !
 What though no friends in sable weeds appear,
 Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
 And bear about the mockery of woe
 To midnight dances, and the public show ?
 What though no weeping Loves thy ashes grace,
 Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face ?
 What though no sacred earth allow thee room,
 Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb ?
 Yet shall thy grave with rising flowers be dress'd,
 And the green turf lie lightly on thy breast :
 There shall the morn her earliest tears bestow,
 There the first roses of the year shall blow ;
 While angels with their silver wings o'er shade
 The ground now sacred by thy reliques made.

So, peaceful rests, without a stone, a name,
 What once had beauty, titles, wealth, and fame.
 How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not,
 To whom related, or by whom begot ;
 A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
 'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be !

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,
 Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.
 Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,
 Shall shortly want the generous tear he pays ;
 Then from his closing eyes thy form shall part,
 And the last pang shall tear thee from his heart ;
 Life's idle business at one gasp be o'er,
 The Muse forgot, and thou belov'd no more !

SATIRE.

The first Part (to verse 132.) imitated in the Year 1714, by Dr. Swift; the latter Part added afterwards.

I 'vz often wish'd that I had clear
 For life, six hundred pounds a year,
 A handsome house to lodge a friend,
 A river at my garden's end,
 A terrace-walk, and half a rood
 Of land, set out to plant a wood.

Well, now I have all this and more,
 I ask not to increase my store ;
 " But here a grievance seems to lie,
 All this is mine but till I die ;
 I can't but think 'twould sound more clever
 To me and to my heirs for ever.

" If I ne'er got or lost a groat,
 By any trick, or any fault ;
 And if I pray by Reason's rules,
 And not like forty other fools :
 As thus, ' Vouchsafe, oh gracious Maker !
 To grant me this and t' other acre :
 Or, if it be thy will and pleasure,
 Direct my plow to find a treasure :"
 But only what my station fits,
 And to be kept in my right wits,
 Preserve, Almighty Providence !
 Just what you gave me, competence :
 And let me in these shades compose
 Something in verse as true as prose ;
 Remov'd from all th' ambitious scene,
 Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen."

In short, I'm perfectly content,
Let me but live on this side Trent;
Nor cross the Channel twice a year,
To spend six months with statesmen here.

I must by all means come to town,
'Tis for the service of the crown.

"Lewis, the Dean will be of use,
Send for him up, take no excuse."
The toil, the danger of the seas;
Great ministers ne'er think of these;
Or let it cost five hundred pound,
No matter where the money 's found.
It is but so much more in debt,
And that they ne'er consider'd yet.

"Good Mr. Dean, go change your gown,
Let my lord know you 're come to town."

I hurry me in haste away,
Not thinking it is levee-day;
And find his honour in a pound,
Hemm'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons blue and green:
How should I thrust myself between?
Some wag observes me thus perplex'd,
And smiling whispers to the next,
"I thought the Dean had been too proud,
To juggle here among a crowd."

Another, in a surly fit,
Tells me I have more zeal than wit,
"So eager to express your love,
You ne'er consider whom you shove,
But rudely press before a duke."
I own, I'm pleas'd with this rebuke,
And take it kindly meant to show
What I desire the world should know.

I get a whisper, and withdraw:
When twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Desiring I would stand their friend.

This, humbly offers me his case —
That, begs my int'rest for a place —
A hundred other men's affairs,
Like bees, are humming in my ears.
"To-morrow my appeal comes on,
Without your help the cause is gone." —
The duke expects my lord and you,
About some great affair, at two —
"Put my lord Bolingbroke in mind,
To get my warrant quickly signed:
Consider 'tis my first request." —
Be satisfy'd, I'll do my best: —
Then presently he falls to tease,
"You may for certain, if you please;
I doubt not, if his lordship knew —
And, Mr. Dean, one word from you —"

'Tis (let me see) three years and more,
(October next it will be four,) —
Since Harley bid me first attend,
And chose me for an humble friend;
Would take me in his coach to chat,
And question me of this and that;
As, "What's o'clock?" And, "How's the wind?"
"Who's chariot's that we left behind?"
Or gravely try to read the lines
Writ underneath the country signs;
Or, "Have you nothing new to-day
From Pope, from Parnell, or from Gay?"
Such tattle often entertains
My lord and me as far as Staines,
As once a week we travel down
To Windsor, and again to town,

Where all that passes, inter nos,
Might be proclaim'd at Charing-Cross.

Yet some I know with envy swell,
Because they see me us'd so well:
"How think you of our friend the Dean?"

I wonder what some people mean;
My lord and he are grown so great,
Always together, tête-à-tête.

What, they admire him for his jokes —
See but the fortune of some folks!"

There flies about a strange report
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopt by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street.

"You, Mr. Dean, frequent the great;
Inform us, will the emp'ror treat?
Or do the prints and papers lie?"

Faith, Sir, you know as much as I.

"Ah, doctor, how you love to jest!"

'Tis now no secret" — I protest

'Tis one to me — "Then tell us, pray,
When are the troops to have their pay?"

And, tho' I solemnly declare
I know no more than my lord-mayor,
They stand amaz'd, and think me grown
The closest mortal ever known.

Thus in a sea of folly toss'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost;
Yet always wishing to retreat,
Oh, could I see my country seat!
There, leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book,
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town.
O charming noons! and nights divine!

Or when I sup, or when I dine,
My friends above, my folks below,
Chatting and laughing all-a-row,
The beans and bacon set before 'em,
The grace-cup serv'd with all decorum:
Each willing to be pleas'd, and please,
And even the very dogs at ease!
Here no man prates of idle things,
How this or that Italian sings,
A neighbour's madness, or his spouse's,
Or what 's in either of the houses:
But something much more our concern,
And quite a scandal not to learn:
Which is the happier, or the wiser,
A man of merit, or a miser?
Whether we ought to choose our friends,
For their own worth, or our own ends?
What good, or better, we may call,
And what, the very best of all?

Our friend Dan Prior told (you know)

A tale extremely à propos:

Name a town life, and in a trice

He had a story of two mice.

Once on a time (so runs the fable)

A country mouse, right hospitable,

Receiv'd a town mouse at his board,

Just as a farmer might a lord.

A frugal mouse upon the whole,

Yet lov'd his friend, and had a soul,

Knew what was handsome, and would do 't,

On just occasion, colite qui colite.

He brought him bacon (nothing lean);

Pudding, that might have pleas'd a dean;

Cheese, such as men in Suffolk make,

But wish'd it Stilton for his sake;

Yet, to his guest though no way sparing,
 He eat himself the rind and paring.
 Our courtier scarce could touch a bit,
 But show'd his breeding and his wit ;
 He did his best to seem to eat,
 And cry'd, " I vow you 're mighty neat.
 But Lord, my friend, this savage scene !
 For God's sake, come, and live with men :
 Consider, mice, like men, must die,
 Both small and great, both you and I :
 Then spend your life in joy and sport ;
 (This doctrine, friend, I learnt at court.)"

The veriest hermit in the nation
 May yield, God knows, to strong temptation.
 Away they come, through thick and thin,
 To a tall house near Lincoln's-inn :
 ('Twas on the night of a debate,
 When all their lordships had sate late.)

Behold the place, where if a poet
 Shin'd in description, he might show it ;
 Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
 And tips with silver all the walls ;
 Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
 Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors :
 But let it (in a word) be said,
 The Moon was up, and men a-bed,
 The napkins white, the carpet red :
 The guests withdrawn had left the treat,
 And down the mice sate, tête-à-tête.

Our courtier walks from dish to dish,
 Tastes for his friend of fowl and fish ;
 Tells all their names, lays down the law,
 " Que ça est bon ! Ah goûtez ça !
 That jelly 's rich, this malmsey healing,
 Pray dip your whiskers and your tail in."
 Was ever such a happy swain !
 He stuffs and swills, and stuffs again.
 " I'm quite asham'd — 'tis mighty rude
 To eat so much — but all 's so good.
 I have a thousand thanks to give —
 My lord alone knows how to live."
 No sooner said, but from the hall
 Rush chaplain, butler, dogs, and all :
 " A rat ! a rat ! clap to the door" —
 The cat comes bouncing on the floor.
 O for the heart of Homer's mice,
 Or gods to save them in a trice !
 (It was by Providence they think,
 For your damn'd stucco has no chink.)
 " An't please your honour," quoth the peasant,
 " This same dessert is not so pleasant :
 Give me again my hollow tree,
 A crust of bread, and liberty !"

EPISTLE TO

ROBERT EARL OF OXFORD AND EARL MORTIMER.

Sent to the Earl of Oxford, with Dr. Parnell's Poems published by our Author, after the said Earl's imprisonment in the Tower, and Retreat into the Country, in the Year 1721.

SUCH were the notes thy once-lov'd poet sung,
 Till Death untimely stopp'd his tuneful tongue.
 Oh just beheld, and lost ! admir'd, and mourn'd !
 With softest manners, gentlest arts adorn'd !
 Blest in each science, blest in every strain !
 Dear to the Muse ! to Harley dear — in vain !
 For him, thou oft hast bid the world attend,
 Fond to forget the statesman in the friend ;
 For Swift and him, despis'd the farce of state,
 The sober follies of the wise and great ;
 Dextrous, the craving, fawning crowd to quit,
 And pleas'd to 'scape from flattery to wit.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
 (A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear,)
 Recall those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days,
 Still hear thy Parnell in his living lays,
 Who, careless now of interest, fame, or fate ;
 Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great ;
 Or, deeming meanest what we greatest call,
 Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall.

And sure, if aught below the seats divine
 Can touch immortals, 'tis a soul like thine :
 A soul supreme, in each hard instance try'd,
 Above all pain, and passion, and all pride,
 The rage of power, the blast of public breath,
 The lust of lucre, and the dread of Death.

In vain to deserts thy retreat is made ;
 The Muse attends thee to thy silent shade :
 'Tis hers, the brave man's latest steps to trace,
 Re-judge his acts, and dignify disgrace.
 When interest calls off all her sneaking train,
 And all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain ;
 She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
 When the last lingering friend has bid farewell.
 Ev'n now she shades thy evening-walk with bays
 (No hireling she, no prostitute to praise) ;
 Ev'n now, observant of the parting ray,
 Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day,
 Through Fortune's cloud one truly great can see
 Nor fears to tell, that Mortimer is he.

JONATHAN SWIFT.

JONATHAN SWIFT, a person who has carried one species of poetry, that of humorous satire, to a degree never before attained, was, by his parentage, of English descent, but probably born in Ireland. It is known that his father, also called Jonathan, having married a Leicestershire lady, died at an early age, leaving a daughter, and a posthumous son. His widow, being left in narrow circumstances, was invited by her husband's brother, Godwin, who resided in Dublin, to his house; and there, it is supposed, Jonathan was born, on November 30th, 1667. After passing some time at a school in Kilkenny, he was removed to Trinity College, Dublin, in his 15th year; in which university he spent seven years, and then obtained with difficulty the degree of bachelor of arts, conferred speciali gratia. The circumstance affords sufficient proof of the misapplication of his talents to mathematical pursuits; but he is said to have been at this period engaged eight hours a day in more congenial studies.

So profuse are the materials for the life of Swift, that it has become almost a vain attempt to give, in a moderate compass, the events by which he was distinguished from ordinary mortals; and it will therefore be chiefly in his character of a poetical composer that we shall now consider him. He was early domesticated with the celebrated statesman, Sir William Temple, who now lived in retirement at Moor Park; but having made choice of the church as his future destination, on parting in some disagreement from Temple, he went to Ireland, with very moderate expectations, and took orders. A reconciliation with his patron brought him back to Moor Park, where he passed his time in harmony till the death of Sir William, who left him a legacy and his papers. He then accepted an invitation from the Earl of Berkeley, one of the Lords Justices of Ireland, to accompany him thither as chaplain and private secretary; and he continued in the family as long as his lordship remained in that kingdom. Here Swift began to distinguish himself by an incomparable talent of writing humorous verses in the true familiar style, several specimens of which he produced for the amusement of the house. After Lord Berkeley's return to England, Swift went to reside at his living at Laracor, in the diocese of Meath; and here it was that ambition began to take possession of his mind. He thought it proper to increase his consequence by taking the degree of doctor of divinity in an English university; and, for the purpose of forming connections, he paid annual visits to that country. In 1701, he first engaged as a political writer; and, in 1704, he published, though anonymously, his celebrated "Tale of a Tub," which, while it placed him high as a writer distinguished by wit and humour of a peculiar cast, brought him under the heavy imputation, from which he was never able entirely to free himself, of being a scoffer against revealed religion.

His prospects of advancement in the political career were abortive, till 1710, when the Tories came into power. His connection with this party began in an acquaintance with Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, who introduced him to secretary St. John, afterwards Lord Bolingbroke; and he engaged the confidence of these leaders to such a degree, that he was admitted to their most secret consultations. In all his transactions with them he was most scrupulously attentive to preserve every appearance of being on an equality, and to repress every thing that looked like slight or neglect on their parts; and there probably is not another example of a man of letters who has held his head so high in his association with men in power. This was undoubtedly owing to that constitutional pride and unsubmitting nature which governed all his actions.

A bishopric in England was the object at which he aimed, and a vacancy on the bench occurring, he was recommended by his friends in the ministry to the Queen; but suspicions of his faith, and other prejudices, being raised against him, he was passed over; and the highest preferment which his patrons could venture to bestow upon him was the deanery of St. Patrick's, in Dublin; to which he was presented in 1713, and in which he continued for life. The death of the Queen put an end to all contests among the Tory ministers; and the change terminated Swift's prospects, and condemned him to an unwilling residence in a country which he always disliked. On his return to Dublin his temper was severely tried by the triumph of the Whigs, who treated him with great indignity; but in length of time, by a proper exercise of his clerical office, by reforms introduced into the chapter of St. Patrick's, and by his bold and able exposures of the abuses practised in the government of Ireland, he rose to the title of King of the Mob in that capital.

His conduct with respect to the female sex was not less unaccountable than singular, and certainly does no honour to his memory. Early in life he attached himself to his celebrated Stella, whose real name was Johnson, the daughter of Sir William Temple's steward. Soon after his settlement at Laracor he invited her to Ireland. She came, accompanied by a Mrs. Dingley, and resided near the parsonage when he was at home, and in it when he was absent; nor were they ever known to lodge in the same house, or to see each other without a witness. In 1716, he was privately married to her, but the parties were brought no nearer than before, and the act was attended with no acknowledgment that could gratify the feelings of a woman who had so long devoted herself to him. About the year 1712, he became acquainted, in London, with Miss Esther Vanhomrigh, a young lady of fortune, with a taste for literature, which Swift was fond of cultivating. To her he wrote the longest and most finished of his poems, entitled Cadenus and Vanessa; and her attachment acquired so much strength, that she made him the offer of her hand. Even after his marriage to Stella, Swift kept Miss Vanhomrigh in ignorance of this connection; but a report of it having at length reached her, she took the step of writing a note to Stella, requesting to know if the marriage were real. Stella assured her of the affirmative in her answer, which she enclosed to Swift, and went into the country without seeing him. Swift went immediately to the house of Miss Vanhomrigh, threw Stella's letter on the table, and departed, without speaking a word. She never recovered the shock, and died in 1723. Stella, with her health entirely ruined, languished on till 1728, when she expired. Such was the fate which he prepared for both.

Of the poems of Swift, some of the most striking were composed in mature life, after his attainment of his deanery of St. Patrick; and it will be admitted that no one ever gave a more perfect example of the easy familiarity attainable in the English language. His readiness in rhyme is truly astonishing; the most uncommon associations of sounds coming to him as it were spontaneously, in words seemingly the best adapted to the occasion. That he was capable of high polish and elegance, some of his works sufficiently prove; but the humorous and sarcastic was his habitual taste, which he frequently indulged beyond the bounds of decorum; a circumstance which renders the task of selection from his works somewhat perplexing. In wit, both in verse and prose, he stands foremost in grave irony, maintained with the most plausible air of serious simplicity, and supported by great minuteness of detail. His "Gulliver's Travels" are a remarkable exemplification of his powers in this kind, which have rendered the work wonderfully amusing, even to childish readers, whilst the keen satire with which it abounds may gratify the most splenetic misanthropist. In general, however, his style in prose, though held up as a model of clearness, purity, and simplicity, has only the merit of expressing the author's meaning with perfect precision.

Late in life, Swift fell under the fate which he dreaded: the faculties of his mind decayed before those of his body, and he gradually settled into absolute idiocy. A total silence for some months preceded his decease, which took place in October, 1744, when he was in his 78th year. He was interred in St. Patrick's cathedral, under a monument, for which he wrote a Latin epitaph, in which one clause most energetically displays the state of his feelings: — "Ubi sæva indignatio ulterius cor lacerare nequit." He bequeathed the greatest part of his property to an hospital for lunatics and idiots,

To show, by one satiric touch,
No nation wanted it so much.

CADENUS AND VANESSA. *

WRITTEN AT WINDSOR, 1713.

THE shepherds and the nymphs were seen
Pleading before the Cyprian queen.
The counsel for the fair began,
Accusing the false creature man.
The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd;
That Cupid now has lost his art,
Or blunts the point of every dart; —
His altar now no longer smokes,
His mother's aid no youth invokes:
This tempts freethinkers to refine,
And bring in doubt their powers divine;
Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money-league.
Which crimes aforesaid (with her leave)
Were (as he humbly did conceive)

* Founded on an offer of marriage made by Miss Vanhomrigh to Dr. Swift, who was occasionally her receptor. The lady's unhappy story is well known.

Against our sovereign lady's peace,
Against the statute in that case,
Against her dignity and crown:
Then pray'd an answer, and sat down.
The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes:
When the defendant's counsel rose,
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact;
But, what the gentlest heart would vex,
Laid all the fault on t' other sex.
That modern love is no such thing
As what those ancient poets sing;
A fire celestial, chaste, refin'd,
Conceiv'd and kindled in the mind;
Which, having found an equal flame,
Unites, and both become the same,
In different breasts together burn,
Together both to ashes turn.
But women now feel no such fire,
And only know the gross desire.
Their passions move in lower spheres,
Where'er caprice or folly steers.
A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Ingross the fancies of the fair,
The few soft moments they can spare,

From visits to receive and pay ;
From scandal, politics, and play ;
From fans, and flounces, and brocades,
From equipage and park-parades,
From all the thousand female toys,
From every trifle that employs
The out or inside of their heads,
Between their toilets and their beds.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow ;
If a small breeze obstruct the course,
It whirls about, for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers.
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with every wind ;
Thus whirling round together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws.
Hence we conclude, no women's hearts
Are won by virtue, wit, and parts :
Nor are the men of sense to blame,
For breasts incapable of flame ;
The fault must on the nymphs be plac'd,
Grown so corrupted in their taste.

The pleader, having spoke his best,
Had witness ready to attest,
Who fairly could on oath depose,
When questions on the fact arose,
That every article was true ;
Nor further these deponents knew : —
Therefore he humbly would insist,
The bill might be with costs dismiss'd.
The cause appear'd of so much weight,
That Venus, from her judgment-seat,
Desir'd them not to talk so loud,
Else she must interpose a cloud :
For, if the heavenly folk should know
These pleadings in the courts below,
That mortals here disdain to love,
She ne'er could show her face above ;
For gods, their betters, are too wise
To value that which men despise.
“ And then,” said she, “ my son and I
Must stroll in air, 'twixt land and sky ;
Or else, shut out from heaven and earth,
Fly to the sea, my place of birth ;
There live, with daggled mermaids pent,
And keep on fish perpetual Lent.”

But, since the case appear'd so nice,
She thought it best to take advice.
The Muses, by their king's permission,
Though foes to love, attend the session,
And on the right hand took their places
In order ; on the left, the Graces :
To whom she might her doubts propose
On all emergencies that rose.
The Muses oft' were seen to frown ;
The Graces half-asham'd look down ;
And 'twas observ'd there were but few
Of either sex among the crew,
Whom she or her assessors knew.
The goddess soon began to see,
Things were not ripe for a decree ;
And said she must consult her books,
The lovers' Fletas, Bractons, Cokes.
First to a dapper clerk she beckon'd,
To turn to Ovid, book the second ;
She then referr'd them to a place
In Virgil (vide Dido's case :)
As for Tibullus's reports,
They never pass'd for law in courts :

For Cowley's briefs, and pleas of Waller,
Still their authority was smaller.

There was on both sides much to say :
She 'd hear the cause another day.
And so she did ; and then a third
She heard it — there, she kept her word :
But, with rejoinders or replies,
Long bills, and answers stuff'd with lies,
Demur, imparlance, and essoign,
The parties ne'er could issue join :
For sixteen years the cause was spun,
And then stood where it first begun.

Now, gentle Clio, sing or say,
What Venus meant by this delay.
The goddess, much perplex'd in mind
To see her empire thus declin'd,
When first this grand debate arose,
Above her wisdom to compose,
Conceiv'd a project in her head
To work her ends ; which, if it sped,
Would show the merits of the cause
Far better than consulting laws.

In a glad hour Lucina's aid
Produc'd on Earth a wondrous maid,
On whom the queen of love was bent
To try a new experiment.
She threw her law-books on the shelf,
And thus debated with herself.

“ Since men allege, they ne'er can find
Those beauties in a female mind,
Which raise a flame that will endure
For ever uncorrupt and pure ;
If 'tis with reason they complain,
This infant shall restore my reign.
I'll search where every virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells :
What preachers talk, or sages write ;
These I will gather and unite,
And represent them to mankind
Collected in that infant's mind.”

This said, she plucks in Heaven's high bowers
A sprig of amaranthine flowers,
In nectar thrice infuses bays,
Three times refin'd in Titan's rays ;
Then calls the Graces to her aid,
And sprinkles thrice the new-born maid :
From whence the tender skin assumes
A sweetness above all perfumes :
From whence a cleanliness remains
Incapable of outward stains :
From whence that decency of mind,
So lovely in the female kind,
Where not one careless thought intrudes,
Less modest than the speech of prudes ;
Where never blush was call'd in aid,
That spurious virtue in a maid,
A virtue but at second-hand ;
They blush because they understand.

The Graces next would act their part,
And show'd but little of their art ;
Their work was half already done,
The child with native beauty shone ;
The outward form no help requir'd :
Each, breathing on her thrice, inspir'd
That gentle, soft, engaging air,
Which in old times adorn'd the fair :
And said, “ Vanessa be the name
By which thou shalt be known to fame ;
Vanessa, by the gods inroll'd :
Her name on Earth shall not be told.”

But still the work was not complete ;
 When Venus thought on a deceit,
 Drawn by her doves, away she flies,
 And finds out Pallas in the skies.
 " Dear Pallas, I have been this morn
 To see a lovely infant born ;
 A boy in yonder isle below,
 So like my own without his bow,
 By beauty could your heart be won,
 You 'd swear it is Apollo's son :
 But it shall ne'er be said a child
 So hopeful has by me been spoil'd ;
 I have enough besides to spare,
 And give him wholly to your care."

Wisdom 's above suspecting wiles :
 The queen of learning gravely smiles,
 Down from Olympus comes with joy,
 Mistakes Vanessa for a boy ;
 Then sows within her tender mind
 Seeds long unknown to woman-kind ;
 For manly bosoms chiefly fit,
 The seeds of knowledge, judgment, wit.
 Her soul was suddenly endued
 With justice, truth, and fortitude ;
 With honour, which no breath can stain,
 Which malice must attack in vain ;
 With open heart and bounteous hand.
 But Pallas here was at a stand ;
 She knew, in our degenerate days,
 Bare virtue could not live on praise ;
 That meat must be with money bought :
 She therefore, upon second thought,
 Infus'd, yet as it were by stealth,
 Some small regard for state and wealth ;
 Of which, as she grew up, there staid
 A tincture in the prudent maid :
 She manag'd her estate with care,
 Yet lik'd three footmen to her chair.
 But lest he should neglect his studies
 Like a young heir, the thrifty goddess
 (For fear young master should be spoil'd)
 Would use him like a younger child ;
 And, after long computing, found
 'Twould come to just five thousand pound.

The queen of love was pleas'd, and proud,
 To see Vanessa thus endow'd :
 She doubted not but such a dame
 Through every breast would dart a flame ;
 That every rich and lordly swain
 With pride would drag about her chain ;
 That scholars would forsake their books,
 To study bright Vanessa's looks ;
 As she advanc'd, that woman-kind
 Would by her model form their mind,
 And all their conduct would be try'd
 By her, as an unerring guide ;
 Offending daughters oft' would hear
 Vanessa's praise rung in their ear :
 Miss Betty, when she does a fault,
 Lets fall her knife, or spills the salt,
 Will thus be by her mother chid,
 " 'Tis what Vanessa never did !"
 " Thus by the nymphs and swains ador'd,
 My power shall be again restor'd,
 And happy lovers bless my reign — "
 So Venus hop'd, but hop'd in vain.

For when in time the martial maid
 Found out the trick that Venus play'd,
 She shakes her helm, she knits her brows,
 And, fir'd with indignation, vows,

To-morrow, ere the setting sun,
 She 'd all undo that she had done.

But in the poets we may find
 A wholesome law, time out of mind,
 Had been confirm'd by fate's decree,
 That gods, of whatso'er degree,
 Resume not what themselves have given,
 Or any brother-god in Heaven ;
 Which keeps the peace among the gods,
 Or they must always be at odds :
 And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
 Must yield her foe the stronger cause ;
 A shame to one so much ador'd
 For wisdom at Jove's council-board.
 Besides, she fear'd the queen of love
 Would meet with better friends above.
 And though she must with grief reflect,
 To see a mortal virgin deck'd
 With graces hitherto unknown
 To female breasts, except her own ;
 Yet she would act as best became
 A goddess of unspotted fame.
 She knew, by augury divine,
 Venus would fail in her design :
 She study'd well the point, and found
 Her foe's conclusions were not sound,
 From premises erroneous brought ;
 And therefore the deduction 's nought,
 And must have contrary effects
 To what her treacherous foe expects.

In proper season Pallas meets
 The queen of love, whom thus she greets :
 (For gods, we are by Homer told,
 Can in celestial language scold :)
 " Perfidious goddess ! but in vain
 You form'd this project in your brain ;
 A project for thy talents fit,
 With much deceit and little wit.
 Thou hast, as thou shalt quickly see,
 Deceiv'd thyself, instead of me :
 For how can heavenly wisdom prove
 An instrument to earthly love ?
 Know'st thou not yet, that men commence
 Thy votaries, for want of sense ?
 Nor shall Vanessa be the theme
 To manage thy abortive scheme :
 She 'll prove the greatest of thy foes ;
 And yet I scorn to interpose,
 But, using neither skill nor force,
 Leave all things to their natural course."

The goddess thus pronounc'd her doom :
 When lo ! Vanessa in her bloom
 Advanc'd, like Atalanta's star,
 But rarely seen, and seen from far :
 In a new world with caution step'd,
 Watch'd all the company she kept,
 Well knowing, from the books she read,
 What dangerous paths young virgins tread :
 Would seldom at the park appear,
 Nor saw the play-house twice a year ;
 Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
 To know the converse of mankind.

First issued from perfumers' shops,
 A crowd of fashionable fops :
 They ask'd her, how she lik'd the play ?
 Then told the tattle of the day ;
 A duel fought last night at two,
 About a lady — you know who ;
 Mention'd a new Italian come
 Either from Muscovy or Rome ;

Gave hints of who and who's together ;
Then fell a talking of the weather ;
Last night was so extremely fine,
The ladies walk'd till after nine ;
Then, in soft voice and speech absurd,
With nonsense every second word,
With fustian from exploded plays,
They celebrate her beauty's praise ;
Run o'er their cant of stupid lies,
And tell the murders of her eyes.

With silent scorn Vanessa sat,
Scarce listening to their idle chat ;
Further than sometimes by a frown,
When they grew pert, to pull them down.
At last she spitefully was bent
To try their wisdom's full extent ;
And said she valued nothing less
Than titles, figure, shape, and dress ;
That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgment, knowledge, wit, and taste ;
And these, she offer'd to dispute,
Alone distinguish'd man from brute :
That present times have no pretence
To virtue, in the noble sense
By Greeks and Romans understood,
To perish for our country's good.
She nam'd the ancient heroes round,
Explain'd for what they were renown'd ;
Then spoke with censure or applause
Of foreign customs, rites, and laws ;
Through nature and through art she rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd ;
In vain ! her hearers had no share
In all she spoke, except to stare.
Their judgment was, upon the whole,
— " That lady is the dullest soul ! — "
Then tipt their forehead in a jeer,
As who should say — " She wants it here !
She may be handsome, young, and rich,
But none will burn her for a witch ! "

A party next of glittering dames,
From round the purlieus of St. James,
Came early, out of pure good-will,
To see the girl in dishabille.
Their clamour, 'lighting from their chairs,
Grew louder all the way up stairs ;
At entrance loudest, where they found
The room with volumes litter'd round.
Vanessa held Montaigne, and read,
Whilst Mrs. Susan comb'd her head.
They called for tea and chocolate,
And fell into their usual chat,
Discoursing, with important face,
On ribbons, fans, and gloves, and lace ;
Show'd patterns just from India brought,
And gravely ask'd her what she thought,
Whether the red or green were best,
And what they cost ? Vanessa guess'd,
As came into her fancy first ;
Nam'd half the rates, and lik'd the worst.
To scandal next — " What awkward thing
Was that last Sunday in the ring ?
I'm sorry Mopsa breaks so fast ;
I said, her face would never last.
Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty, and a bit to spare :
Her fondness for a certain earl
Began when I was but a girl !
Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was marry'd to the Tunbridge-beau,

I saw coquetting t' other night
In public with that odious knight ! "

They rally'd next Vanessa's dress :
" That gown was made for old queen Bess.
Dear madam, let me see your head :
Don't you intend to put on red ?
A petticoat without a hoop !
Sure, you are not asham'd to stoop !
With handsome garters at your knees,
No matter what a fellow sees. "
Fill'd with disdain, with rage inflam'd,
Both of herself and sex asham'd,
The nymph stood silent out of spite,
Nor would vouchsafe to set them right.
Away the fair detractors went,
And gave by turns their censures vent.
She 's not so handsome in my eyes :
For wit, I wonder, where it lies !
" She 's fair and clean, and that 's the most :
But why proclaim her for a toast ?
A baby face : no life, no airs,
But what she learn'd at country-fairs :
Scarce knows what difference is between
Rich Flanders lace and colberteen.
I'll undertake, my little Nancy
In flounces hath a better fancy !
With all her wit, I would not ask
Her judgment, how to buy a mask.
We begg'd her but to patch her face,
She never hit one proper place ;
Which every girl at five years old
Can do as soon as she is told.
I own, that out-of-fashion stuff
Becomes the creature well enough.
The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better. "
(To know the world ! a modern phrase,
For visits, ombre, balls, and plays.)

Thus, to the world's perpetual shame,
The queen of beauty lost her aim ;
Too late with grief she understood,
Pallas had done more harm than good ;
For great examples are but vain,
Where ignorance begets disdain.
Both sexes, arm'd with guilt and spite,
Against Vanessa's power unite :
To copy her few nymphs aspir'd ;
Her virtues fewer swains admir'd.
So stars beyond a certain height
Give mortals neither heat nor light.

Yet some of either sex, endow'd
With gifts superior to the crowd,
With virtue, knowledge, taste, and wit,
She condescended to admit :
With pleasing arts she could reduce
Men's talents to their proper use :
And with address each genius held
To that wherein it most excell'd ;
Thus making others' wisdom known,
Could please them, and improve her own.
A modest youth said something new ;
She plac'd it in the strongest view.
All humble worth she strove to raise ;
Would not be prais'd, yet lov'd to praise.
The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach :
Some clergy too she would allow,
Nor quarrell'd at their awkward bow ;
But this was for Cadenus' sake,
A gownman of a different make ;

Whom Pallas, once Vanessa's tutor,
Had fix'd on for her coadjutor.

But Cupid, full of mischief, longs
To vindicate his mother's wrongs.
On Pallas all attempts are vain :
One way he knows to give her pain ;
Vows on Vanessa's heart to take
Due vengeance, for her patron's sake.
Those early seeds by Venus sown,
In spite of Pallas, now were grown ;
And Cupid hop'd they would improve
By time, and ripen into love.
The boy made use of all his craft,
In vain discharging many a shaft,
Pointed at colonels, lords, and beaux :
Cadenus warded off the blows ;
For, placing still some book betwixt,
The darts were in the cover fix'd,
Or, often blunted and recoil'd,
On Plutarch's Morals struck, were spoil'd.

The queen of wisdom could foresee,
But not prevent the Fates' decree :
And human caution tries in vain
To break that adamant chain.
Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By Love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid
Was, in the very search, betray'd.

Cupid, though all his darts were lost,
Yet still resolv'd to spare no cost :
He could not answer to his fame
The triumphs of that stubborn dame,
A nymph so hard to be subdued,
Who neither was coquette nor prude.
" I find," said he, " she wants a doctor
Both to adore her, and instruct her :
I'll give her what she most admires,
Among those venerable sires,
Cadenus is a subject fit,
Grown old in politics and wit,
Caress'd by ministers of state,
Of half mankind the dread and hate.
Whate'er vexations love attend,
She need no rivals apprehend.
Her sex, with universal voice,
Must laugh at her capricious choice. "

Cadenus many things had writ :
Vanessa much esteem'd his wit,
And call'd for his poetic works :
Meantime the boy in secret lurks ;
And, while the book was in her hand,
The urchin from his private stand
Took aim, and shot with all his strength
A dart of such prodigious length,
It pierc'd the feeble volume through,
And deep transfix'd her bosom too.
Some lines, more moving than the rest,
Stuck to the point that pierc'd her breast,
And, borne directly to the heart,
With pains unknown, increas'd her smart.

Vanessa, not in years a score,
Dreams of a gown of forty-four ;
Imaginary charms can find
In eyes with reading almost blind :
Cadenus now no more appears
Declin'd in health, advanc'd in years.
She fancies music in his tongue ;
No farther looks, but thinks him young.
What mariner is not afraid
To venture in a ship decay'd ?

What planter will attempt to yoke
A sapling with a falling oak ?
As years increase, she brighter shines :
Cadenus with each day declines :
And he must fall a prey to time,
While she continues in her prime.

Cadenus, common forms apart,
In every scene had kept his heart ;
Had sigh'd and languish'd, vow'd and writ,
For pastime, or to show his wit.
But books, and time, and state affairs,
Had spoil'd his fashionable airs :
He now could praise, esteem, approve,
But understood not what was love.
His conduct might have made him styl'd
A father, and the nymph his child.
That innocent delight he took
To see the virgin mind her book,
Was but the master's secret joy
In school to hear the finest boy.
Her knowledge with her fancy grew ;
She hourly press'd for something new ;
Ideas came into her mind
So fast, his lessons lag'd behind ;
She reason'd, without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong.
But now a sudden change was wrought :
She minds no longer what he taught.
Cadenus was amaz'd to find
Such marks of a distracted mind :
For, though she seem'd to listen more
To all he spoke, than e'er before,
He found her thoughts would absent range,
Yet guess'd not whence could spring the change
And first he modestly conjectures
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures ;
Which help'd to mortify his pride,
Yet gave him not the heart to chide :
But, in a mild dejected strain,
At last he ventur'd to complain ;
Said, she should be no longer teas'd,
Might have her freedom when she pleas'd ;
Was now convinc'd he acted wrong,
To hide her from the world so long,
And in dull studies to engage
One of her tender sex and age ;
That every nymph with envy own'd,
How she might shine in the grand monde ;
And every shepherd was undone
To see her cloister'd like a nun.
This was a visionary scheme :
He wak'd, and found it but a dream ;
A project far above his skill ;
For nature must be nature still.
If he were bolder than became
A scholar to a courtly dame,
She might excuse a man of letters ;
Thus tutors often treat their betters :
And, since his talk offensive grew,
He came to take his last adieu.

Vanessa, fill'd with just disdain,
Would still her dignity maintain,
Instructed from her early years
To scorn the art of female tears.

Had he employ'd his time so long
To teach her what was right and wrong ;
Yet could such notions entertain
That all his lectures were in vain ?
She own'd the wandering of her thoughts ;
But he must answer for her faults.

She well remembered, to her cost,
That all his lessons were not lost.
Two maxims she could still produce,
And sad experience taught their use;
That virtue, pleas'd by being shown,
Knows nothing which it dares not own;
Can make us without fear disclose
Our inmost secrets to our foes:
That common forms were not design'd
Directors to a noble mind.
"Now," said the nymph, "to let you see
My actions with your rules agree;
That I can vulgar forms despise,
And have no secrets to disguise:
I knew, by what you said and writ,
How dangerous things were men of wit;
You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms;
Your lessons found the weakest part,
Aim'd at the head, but reach'd the heart."

Cadenus felt within him rise
Shame, disappointment, guilt, surprise.
He knew not how to reconcile
Such language with her usual style:
And yet her words were so express'd,
He could not hope she spoke in jest,
His thoughts had wholly been confin'd
To form and cultivate her mind.
He hardly knew, till he was told,
Whether the nymph were young or old;
Had met her in a public place,
Without distinguishing her face:
Much less could his declining age
Vanessa's earliest thoughts engage;
And, if her youth indifference met,
His person must contempt beget:
Or, grant her passion be sincere,
How shall his innocence be clear?
Appearances were all so strong,
The world must think him in the wrong;
Would say, he made a treacherous use
Of wit, to flatter and seduce:
The town would swear, he had betray'd
By magic spells the harmless maid:
And every beau would have his jokes,
That scholars were like other folks;
And, when Platonic flights were over,
The tutor turn'd a mortal lover!
So tender of the young and fair!
It show'd a true paternal care—
Five thousand guineas in her purse!
The doctor might have fancied worse.—

Hardly at length he silence broke,
And falter'd every word he spoke;
Interpreting her complaisance,
Just as a man sans conséquence.
She rallied well, he always knew:
Her manner now was something new;
And what she spoke was in an air
As serious as a tragic player.
But those who aim at ridicule
Should fix upon some certain rule,
Which fairly hints they are in jest,
Else he must enter his protest:
For, let a man be ne'er so wise,
He may be caught with sober lies;
A science which he never taught,
And, to be free, was dearly bought;
For, take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite.

But, not to dwell on things minute,
Vanessa finish'd the dispute,
Brought weighty arguments to prove
That reason was her guide in love.
She thought he had himself describ'd
His doctrines when she first imbib'd:
What he had planted now was grown;
His virtues she might call her own;
As he approves, as he dislikes,
Love or contempt her fancy strikes.
Self-love, in nature rooted fast,
Attends us first, and leaves us last:
Why she likes him, admire not at her;
She loves herself, and that 's the matter.
How was her tutor wont to praise
The geniuses of ancient days!
(Those authors he so oft had nam'd,
For learning, wit, and wisdom fam'd,)
Was struck with love, esteem, and awe,
For persons whom he never saw.
Suppose Cadenus flourish'd then,
He must adore such godlike men.
If one short volume could comprise
All that was witty, learn'd, and wise,
How would it be esteem'd and read,
Although the writer long were dead!
If such an author were alive,
How all would for his friendship strive,
And come in crowds to see his face!
And this she takes to be her case.
Cadenus answers every end,
The book, the author, and the friend;
The utmost her desires will reach,
Is but to learn what he can teach:
His converse is a system fit
Alone to fill up all her wit;
While every passion of her mind
In him is center'd and confin'd.

Love can with speech inspire a mute,
And taught Vanessa to dispute.
This topic, never touch'd before,
Display'd her eloquence the more:
Her knowledge, with such pains acquir'd,
By this new passion grew inspir'd;
Through this she made all objects pass,
Which gave a tincture o'er the mass;
As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline;
Or, as philosophers, who find
Some favourite system to their mind,
In every point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.

Cadenus, who could ne'er suspect
His lessons would have such effect,
Or be so artfully apply'd,
Insensibly came on her side.
It was an unforeseen event;
Things took a turn he never meant.
Whoe'er excels in what we prize,
Appears a hero in our eyes:
Each girl, when pleas'd with what is taught,
Will have the teacher in her thought.
When Miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get;
A blockhead, with melodious voice,
In boarding-schools may have his choice;
And oft' the dancing-master's art
Climbs from the toe to touch the heart.
In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by 't.

Cadenus, to his grief and shame,
 Could scarce oppose Vanessa's flame ;
 And, though her arguments were strong,
 At least could hardly wish them wrong.
 Howe'er it came, he could not tell,
 But sure she never talk'd so well.
 His pride began to interpose ;
 Preferr'd before a crowd of beaux !
 So bright a nymph to come unsought !
 Such wonder by his merit wrought !
 'Tis merit must with her prevail !
 He never knew her judgment fail !
 She noted all she ever read !
 And had a most discerning head !

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
 That flattery 's the food of fools,
 Yet now and then your men of wit
 Will condescend to take a bit.

So, when Cadenus could not hide,
 He chose to justify, his pride ;
 Construing the passion she had shown,
 Much to her praise, more to his own.
 Nature in him had merit plac'd,
 In her a most judicious taste.
 Love, hitherto a transient guest,
 Ne'er held possession of his breast ;
 So long attending at the gate,
 Disdain'd to enter in so late.
Love why do we one passion call,
 When 'tis a compound of them all ?
 Where hot and cold, where sharp and sweet,
 In all their equipages meet ;
 Where pleasures mix'd with pains appear,
 Sorrow with joy, and hope with fear ;
 Wherein his dignity and age
 Forbid Cadenus to engage.
 But friendship, in its greatest height,
 A constant, rational delight,
 On virtue's basis fix'd to last,
 When love allurements long are past,
 Which gently warms, but cannot burn,
 He gladly offers in return ;
 His want of passion will redeem
 With gratitude, respect, esteem ;
 With that devotion we bestow,
 When goddesses appear below.

While thus Cadenus entertains
 Vanessa in exalted strains,
 The nymph in sober words entreats
 A truce with all sublime conceits :
 For why such raptures, flights, and fancies,
 To her who durst not read romances ?
 In lofty style to make replies,
 Which he had taught her to despise ?
 But when her tutor will affect
 Devotion, duty, and respect,
 He fairly abdicates the throne ;
 The government is now her own ;
 He has a forfeiture incurr'd ;
 She vows to take him at his word,
 And hopes he will not think it strange,
 If both should now their stations change.
 The nymph will have her turn to be
 The tutor ; and the pupil, he :
 Though she already can discern
 Her scholar is not apt to learn ;
 Or wants capacity to reach
 The science she designs to teach :
 Wherein his genius was below
 The skill of every common beau,

Who, though he cannot spell, is wise
 Enough to read a lady's eyes,
 And will each accidental glance
 Interpret for a kind advance.

But what success Vanessa met,
 Is to the world a secret yet.
 Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
 Talks in a high romantic strain ;
 Or whether he at last descends
 To act with less seraphic ends ;
 Or, to compound the business, whether
 They temper love and hooks together ;
 Must never to mankind be told,
 Nor shall the conscious Muse unfold.

Meantime the mournful queen of love
 Led but a weary life above.

She ventures now to leave the skies,
 Grown by Vanessa's conduct wise :
 For, though by one perverse event
 Pallas had cross'd her first intent ;
 Though her design was not obtain'd,
 Yet had she much experience gain'd ;
 And by the project vainly try'd,
 Could better now the cause decide.
 She gave due notice, that both parties,
Coram regina, prox' die Martis,
 Should at their peril, without fail,
 Come and appear, and save their bail.
 All met ; and, silence thrice proclaim'd,
 One lawyer to each side was nam'd.
 The judge discover'd in her face
 Resentments for her late disgrace ;
 And, full of anger, shame, and grief,
 Directed them to mind their brief,
 Nor spend their time to show their reading ;
 She'd have a summary proceeding.
 She gather'd under every head
 The sum of what each lawyer said,
 Gave her own reasons last, and then
 Decreed the cause against the men.

But, in a weighty case like this,
 To show she did not judge amiss,
 Which evil tongues might else report,
 She made a speech in open court,
 Wherein she grievously complains,
 " How she was cheated by the swains :
 On whose petition (humbly showing,
 That women were not worth the wooing,
 And that, unless the sex would mend,
 The race of lovers soon must end) —
 She was at Lord knows what expense
 To form a nymph of wit and sense,
 A model for her sex design'd,
 Who never could one lover find.
 She saw her favour was misplac'd ;
 The fellows had a wretched taste ;
 She needs must tell them to their face,
 They were a stupid, senseless race ;
 And, were she to begin again,
 She'd study to reform the men ;
 Or add some grains of folly more
 To women, than they had before,
 To put them on an equal foot ;
 And this, or nothing else would do 't.
 This might their mutual fancy strike,
 Since every being loves its like."

" But now, repenting what was done,
 She left all business to her son ;
 She puts the world in his possession,
 And the him use it at discretion."

The cryer was order'd to dismiss
The court, so made his last O yes!
The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harness'd her doves, and flew to Heaven.

STELLA'S BIRTH-DAY. 1720.

ALL travellers at first incline
Where'er they see the fairest sign;
And, if they find the chambers neat,
And like the liquor and the meat,
Will call again and recommend
The Angel-inn to every friend.
What though the painting grows decay'd,
The house will never lose its trade:
Nay, though the treacherous tapster Thomas
Hangs a new Angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers' hands can make it,
In hopes that strangers may mistake it,
We think it both a shame and sin
To quit the true old Angel-inn.

Now this is Stella's case in fact,
An angel's face a little crack'd:
(Could poets or could painters fix
How angels look at thirty-six:)
This drew us in at first to find
In such a form an angel's mind;
And every virtue now supplies
The fainting rays of Stella's eyes.
See at her levee crowding swains,
Whom Stella freely entertains
With breeding, humour, wit, and sense;
And puts them but to small expense;
Their mind so plentifully fills,
And makes such reasonable bills,
So little gets for what she gives,
We really wonder how she lives!
And, had her stock been less, no doubt
She must have long ago run out.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
When Doll hangs out a newer face?
Or stop and light at Chloe's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed?

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your inuendos, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows:
And let me warn you to believe
A truth, for which your soul should grieve;
That, should you live to see the day
When Stella's locks must all be grey,
When age must print a furrow'd trace
On every feature of her face;
Though you, and all your senseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore.

THE JOURNAL OF A MODERN LADY.

IN A LETTER TO A PERSON OF QUALITY. 1728.

SIR,

It was a most unfriendly part
In you, who ought to know my heart,
Are well acquainted with my zeal
For all the female commonweal —
How could it come into your mind
To pitch on me of all mankind,
Against the sex to write a satire,
And brand me for a woman-hater?
On me, who think them all so fair,
'They rival Venus to a hair;
Their virtues never ceas'd to sing,
Since first I learn'd to tune a string?
Methinks I hear the ladies cry,
Will he his character belie?
Must never our misfortunes end?
And have we lost our only friend?
Ah, lovely nymphs, remove your fears,
No more let fall those precious tears.
Sooner shall, &c.

[Here are several verses omitted.]

The hound be hunted by the hare,
Than I turn rebel to the fair.

'Twas you engag'd me first to write,
Then gave the subject out of spite:
The journal of a modern dame
Is by my promise what you claim.
My word is past, I must submit;
And yet, perhaps, you may be bit.
I but transcribe; for not a line
Of all the satire shall be mine.
Compell'd by you to tag in rhymes
The common slanders of the times,
Of modern times, the guilt is yours,
And me my innocence secures.
Unwilling Muse, begin thy lay,
The annals of a female day.

By nature turn'd to play the rake well,
(As we shall show you in the sequel,)
The modern dame is wak'd by noon,
(Some authors say, not quite so soon,)
Because, though sore against her will,
She sate all night up at quadrille.
She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks, if it be time to rise:
Of head-ache and the spleen complains;
And then, to cool her heated brains,
Her night-gown and her slippers brought her,
Takes a large dram of citron-water.
Then to her glass; and, "Betty, pray
Don't I look frightfully to-day?
But was it not confounded hard?
Well, if I ever touch a card!
Four mattadores, and lose codille!
Depend upon 't, I never will.
But run to Tom, and bid him fix
The ladies here to-night by six."
"Madam, the goldsmith waits below;
He says, 'His business is to know
If you 'll redeem the silver cup
He keeps in pawn?' — "First, show him up."
"Your dressing-plate he 'll be content
To take, for interest cent. per cent.

And, madam, there 's my lady Spade,
Hath sent this letter by her maid."

"Well, I remember what she won;
And hath she sent so soon to dun?
Here, carry down those ten pistoles
My husband left to pay for coals:
I thank my stars, they all are light;
And I may have revenge to-night."
Now, loitering o'er her tea and cream,
She enters on her usual theme;
Her last night's ill success repeats,
Calls lady Spade a hundred cheats:
"She slipt spadillo in her breast,
Then thought to turn it to a jest:
There 's Mrs. Cut and she combine,
And to each other give the sign."
Through every game pursues her tale,
Like hunters o'er their evening ale.

Now to another scene give place:
Enter the folks with silks and lace:
Fresh matter for a world of chat,
Right Indian this, right Mechlin that:
"Observe this pattern; there 's a stuff;
I can have customers enough.
Dear madam, you are grown so hard—
This lace is worth twelve pounds a yard:
Madam, if there be truth in man,
I never sold so cheap a fan."
This business of importance o'er,
And madam almost dress'd by four;
The footman, in his usual phrase,
Comes up with, "Madam, dinner stays."
She answers in her usual style,
"The cook must keep it back awhile:
I never can have time to dress;
(No woman breathing takes up less;)
I'm hurried so it makes me sick;
I wish the dinner at Old Nick."
At table now she acts her part,
Has all the dinner-cant by heart:
"I thought we were to dine alone,
My dear; for sure, if I had known
This company would come to-day—
But really 'tis my spouse's way!
He 's so unkind, he never sends
To tell when he invites his friends:
I wish ye may but have enough!"
And while with all this paltry stuff
She sits tormenting every guest,
Nor gives her tongue one moment's rest,
In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,
Which modern ladies call polite;
You see the booby husband sit
In admiration at her wit.

But let me now awhile survey
Our madam o'er her evening-tea;
Surrounded with her noisy clans
Of prudes, coquettes, and harridans;
When, frightened at the clamorous crew,
Away the god of Silence flew,
And fair Discretion left the place,
And Modesty with blushing face:
Now enters overweening Pride,
And Scandal ever gaping wide;
Hypocrisy with frown severe,
Scurrility with gibing air;
Rude Laughter seeming like to burst,
And Malice always judging worst;
And Vapidity with pocket-glass,
And Impudence with front of brass;

And study'd Affectation came,
Each limb and feature out of frame;
While Ignorance, with brain of lead,
Flew hovering o'er each female head.

Why should I ask of thee, my Muse,
An hundred tongues, as poets use,
When, to give every dame her due,
An hundred thousand were too few?
Or how shall I, alas! relate
The sum of all their senseless prate,
Their innuendos, hints, and slanders,
Their meanings lewd, and double entendres?
Now comes the general scandal-charge;
What some invent, the rest enlarge;
And, "Madam, if it be a lie,
You have the tale as cheap as I:
I must conceal my author's name;
But now 'tis known to common fame."

Say, foolish females, bold and blind,
Say, by what fatal turn of mind,
Are you on vices most severe,
Wherein yourselves have greatest share?
Thus every fool herself deludes;
The prudes condemn the absent prudes:
Mopsa, who stinks her spouse to death,
Accuses Chloe's tainted breath;
Hircina, rank with sweat, presumes
To censure Phyllis for perfumes;
While crooked Cynthia, sneering, says
That Florimel wears iron stays:
Chloe, of every coxcomb jealous,
Admires how girls can talk with fellows;
And, full of indignation, frets,
That women should be such coquettes:
Iris, for scandal most notorious,
Cries, "Lord, the world is so censorious!"
And Rufa, with her combs of lead,
Whispers that Sappho's hair is red:
Aura, whose tongue you hear a mile hence,
Talks half a day in praise of silence:
And Sylvia, full of inward guilt,
Calls Amoret an arrant jilt.

Now voices over voices rise,
While each to be the loudest vies:
They contradict, affirm, dispute,
No single tongue one moment mute;
All mad to speak, and none to hearken,
They set the very lap-dog barking;
Their chattering makes a louder din
Than fish-wives o'er a cup of gin:
Not school-boys at a barring-out
Rais'd ever such incessant rout;
The jumbling particles of matter
In chaos made not such a clatter;
Far less the rabble roar and rail,
When drunk with sour election ale.

Nor do they trust their tongues alone,
But speak a language of their own;
Can read a nod, a shrug, a look,
Far better than a printed book;
Convey a libel in a frown,
And wink a reputation down;
Or, by the tossing of the fan,
Describe the lady and the man.

But see, the female club disbands,
Each twenty visits on her hands.
Now all alone poor madam sits
In vapours and hysteric fits:
"And was not Tom this morning sent?
I'd lay my life he never went:

Past six, and not a living soul !
 I might by this have won a vole."
 A dreadful interval of spleen !
 How shall we pass the time between ?
 " Here, Betty, let me take my drops ;
 And feel my pulse, I know it stops :
 This head of mine, Lord, how it swims !
 And such a pain in all my limbs !"
 " Dear madam, try to take a nap." —
 But now they hear a footman's rap :
 " Go, run, and light the ladies up :
 It must be one before we sup."

The table, cards, and counters, set,
 And all the gamester-ladies met,
 Her spleen and fits recover'd quite,
 Our madam can sit up all night :
 " Whoever comes, I'm not within." —
 Quadrille 's the word, and so begin.

How can the Muse her aid impart,
 Unskill'd in all the terms of art ?
 Or in harmonious numbers put
 The deal, the shuffle, and the cut ?
 The superstitious whims relate,
 That fill a female gamester's pate ?
 What agony of soul she feels
 To see a knave's inverted heels !
 She draws up card by card, to find
 Good-fortune peeping from behind ;
 With panting heart, and earnest eyes,
 In hope to see spadillo rise :
 In vain, alas ! her hope is fed ;
 She draws an ace, and sees it red ;
 In ready counters never pays,
 But pawns her snuff-box, rings, and keys :
 Ever with some new fancy struck,
 Tries twenty charms to mend her luck.
 " This morning, when the parson came,
 I said I should not win a game.
 This odious chair, how came I stuck in 't ?
 I think I never had good luck in 't.
 I'm so uneasy in my stays ;
 Your fan a moment, if you please.
 Stand further, girl, or get you gone ;
 I always lose when you look on."
 " Lord ! madam, you have lost codille !
 I never saw you play so ill."
 " Nay, madam, give me leave to say,
 'Twas you that threw the game away :
 When lady Tricksey play'd a four,
 You took it with a mattadore ;
 I saw you touch your wedding-ring
 Before my lady call'd a king ;
 You spoke a word began with H,
 And I know whom you meant to teach,
 Because you held the king of hearts ;
 Fie, madam, leave these little arts."
 " That 's not so bad as one that rubs
 Her chair, to call the king of clubs ;
 And makes her partner understand
 A mattadore is in her hand."
 " Madam, you have no cause to flounce,
 I swear I saw you thrice renounce."
 " And truly, madam, I know when,
 Instead of five, you scor'd me ten.
Spadillo here has got a mark ;
 A child may know it in the dark :
 I guess'd the band : it seldom fails :
 I wish some folks would pare their nails."

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
 It passes but for common form :

But, conscious that they all speak true,
 And give each other but their due,
 It never interrupts the game,
 Or makes them sensible of shame.

The time too precious now to waste,
 The supper gobbled up in haste ;
 Again afresh to cards they run,
 As if they had but just begun.
 But I shall not again repeat,
 How oft they squabble, snarl, and cheat.
 At last they hear the watchman knock,
 " A frosty morn — past four o'clock."
 The chairmen are not to be found,
 " Come, let us play the other round."

Now all in haste they huddle on
 Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone ;
 But, first, the winner must invite
 The company to-morrow night.

Unlucky madam, left in tears,
 (Who now again quadrille forswears,)
 With empty purse, and aching head,
 Steals to her sleeping spouse to bed.

ON THE DEATH OF DR. SWIFT.*

OCCASIONED BY READING THE FOLLOWING MAXIM IN ROCHEFOUCAULT:

Dans l'adversité de nos meilleurs amis, nous trouvons toujours quelque chose qui ne nous déplaît pas.

" In the adversity of our best friends, we always find something that doth not displease us."

As Rochefoucault his maxims drew
 From nature, I believe them true :
 They argue no corrupted mind
 In him : the fault is in mankind.

This maxim more than all the rest
 Is thought too base for human breast :
 " In all distresses of our friends,
 We first consult our private ends ;
 While nature, kindly bent to ease us,
 Points out some circumstance to please us."

If this perhaps your patience move,
 Let reason and experience prove.

We all behold with envious eyes
 Our equals rais'd above our size.
 Who would not at a crowded show
 Stand high himself, keep others low ?
 I love my friend as well as you :
 But why should he obstruct my view ?
 Then let me have the higher post ;
 Suppose it but an inch at most.
 If in a battle you should find
 One, whom you love of all mankind,
 Had some heroic action done,
 A champion kill'd, or trophy won ;
 Rather than thus be over-topt,
 Would you not wish his laurels cropt ?
 Dear honest Ned is in the gout,
 Lies rack'd with pain, and you without :

* Written in November, 1731. — There are two distinct poems on this subject, one of them containing many spurious lines. In what is here printed, the genuine parts of both are preserved. N.

How patiently you hear him groan !
How glad the case is not your own !

What poet would not grieve to see
His brother write as well as he ?
But, rather than they should excel,
Would wish his rivals all in hell ?

Her end when emulation misses,
She turns to envy, stings, and hisses :
The strongest friendship yields to pride,
Unless the odds be on our side.
Vain human-kind ! fantastic race !
Thy various follies who can trace ?
Self-love, ambition, envy, pride,
Their empire in our heart divide.
Give others riches, power, and station,
'Tis all to me an usurpation.
I have no title to aspire ;
Yet, when you sink, I seem the higher.
In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine :
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six ;
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, " Pox take him and his wit !"
I grieve to be outdone by Gay
In my own humorous biting way.
Arbuthnot is no more my friend,
Who dares to irony pretend,
Which I was born to introduce,
Refin'd at first, and show'd its use.
St. John, as well as Pulteney, knows
That I had some repute for prose ;
And, till they drove me out of date,
Could maul a minister of state.
If they have mortified my pride,
And made me throw my pen aside ;
If with such talents Heaven hath bless'd 'em,
Have I not reason to detest 'em ?

To all my foes, dear Fortune, send
Thy gifts ; but never to my friend :
I tamely can endure the first ;
But this with envy makes me burst.

Thus much may serve by way of proem ;
Proceed we therefore to our poem.

The time is not remote when I
Must by the course of nature die ;
When, I foresee, my special friends
Will try to find their private ends :
And, though 'tis hardly understood
Which way my death can do them good,
Yet thus, methinks, I hear them speak :
" See how the Dean begins to break !
Poor gentleman, he droops apace !
You plainly find it in his face.
That old vertigo in his head
Will never leave him till he's dead.
Besides, his memory decays :
He recollects not what he says ;
He cannot call his friends to mind ;
Forgets the place where last he din'd ;
Plies you with stories o'er and o'er ;
He told them fifty times before.
How does he fancy we can sit
To hear his out-of-fashion wit ?
But he takes up with younger folks,
Who for his wine will bear his jokes.
Faith ! he must make his stories shorter,
Or change his comrades once a quarter ;
In half the time he talks them round,
There must another set be found.

" For poetry, he's past his prime :
He takes an hour to find a rhyme ;
His fire is out, his wit decay'd,
His fancy sunk, his Muse a jade.
I'd have him throw away his pen ;
But there's no talking to some men !"

And then their tenderness appears
By adding largely to my years :
" He's older than he would be reckon'd,
And well remembers Charles the Second.
He hardly drinks a pint of wine ;
And that, I doubt, is no good sign.
His stomach too begins to fail ;
Last year we thought him strong and hale ;
But now he's quite another thing :
I wish he may hold out till spring !"
They hug themselves and reason thus :
" It is not yet so bad with us !"

In such a case they talk in tropes,
And by their fears express their hopes.
Some great misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend.
With all the kindness they profess,
The merit of a lucky guess
(When daily how-d'ye's come of course,
And servants answer, " Worse and worse !")
Would please them better, than to tell,
That, " God be prais'd, the Dean is well."
Then he who prophesy'd the best,
Approves his foresight to the rest :
" You know I always fear'd the worst,
And often told you so at first."
He'd rather choose that I should die,
Than his predictions prove a lie.
Not one foretells I shall recover ;
But, all agree to give me over.

Yet should some neighbour feel a pain
Just in the parts where I complain ;
How many a message would he send !
What hearty prayers that I should mend !
Inquire what regimen I kept ?
What gave me ease, and how I slept ?
And more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed.
My good companions, never fear ;
For, though you may mistake a year,
Though your prognostics run too fast,
They must be verify'd at last.

Behold the fatal day arrive !
" How is the Dean ?" — " He's just alive."
Now the departing prayer is read ;
He hardly breathes — the Dean is dead.

Before the passing-bell begun,
The news through half the town is run.
" Oh ! may we all for death prepare !
What has he left ? and who's his heir ?"
" I know no more than what the news is ;
'Tis all bequeath'd to public uses."
" To public uses ! there's a whim !
What had the public done for him ?
Mere envy, avarice, and pride :
He gave it all — but first he dy'd.
And had the Dean, in all the nation,
No worthy friend, no poor relation ?
So ready to do strangers good,
Forgetting his own flesh and blood !"

Now Grub-street wits are all employ'd ;
With elegies the town is cloy'd :
Some paragraph in every paper,
To curse the Dean, or bless the Drapier.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
Wisely on me lay all the blame.
"We must confess, his case was nice;
But he would never take advice.
Had he been rul'd, for aught appears,
He might have liv'd these twenty years:
For, when we open'd him, we found
That all his vital parts were sound."

From Dublin soon to London spread,
Tis told at court, "the Dean is dead."
And lady Suffolk*, in the spleen,
Runs laughing up to tell the queen.
The queen, so gracious, mild, and good,
Cries, "Is he gone! 'tis time he should.
He's dead, you say; then let him rot:
I'm glad the medals† were forgot.
I promis'd him, I own; but when?
I only was the princess then:
But now, as consort of the king,
You know, 'tis quite another thing."

Now Chartres, at Sir Robert's levee,
Tells with a sneer the tidings heavy:
"Why, if he dy'd without his shoes,"
Cries Bob, "I'm sorry for the news:
Oh, were the wretch but living still,
And in his place my good friend Will!
Or had a mitre on his head,
Provided Bolingbroke were dead!"

Now Curll his shop from rubbish drains:
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains!
And then, to make them pass the glibber,
Revis'd by Tibbalds, Moore, and Cibber.
He'll treat me as he does my betters,
Publish my will, my life, my letters;
Revive the libels born to die:
Which Pope must bear as well as I.

Here shift the scene to represent,
How those I love my death lament.
Poor Pope will grieve a month, and Gay
A week, and Arbuthnot a day.

St. John himself will scarce forbear
To bite his pen, and drop a tear.
The rest will give a shrug, and cry,
"I'm sorry — but we all must die!"

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies:
For how can stony bowels melt
In those who never pity felt!
When we are lash'd, they kiss the rod,
Resigning to the will of God.

The fools, my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear;
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between:
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling;
They mourn for me without dissembling.

My female friends, whose tender hearts
Have better learn'd to act their parts,
Receive the news in doleful dumps:
"The Dean is dead: (Pray what is trumps?)
Then, Lord have mercy on his soul!
(Ladies, I'll venture for the vole.)
Six deans, they say, must bear the pall:
(I wish I knew what king to call.)

* Mrs. Howard, at one time a favourite with the Dean. N.

† Which the Dean in vain expected, in return for a small present he had sent to the princess. N.

Madam, your husband will attend
The funeral of so good a friend?
No, madam, 'tis a shocking sight;
And he's engag'd to-morrow night:
My lady Club will take it ill,
If he should fail her at quadrille.
He lov'd the Dean — (I lead a heart:)
But dearest friends, they say, must part.
His time was come; he ran his race;
We hope he's in a better place."

Why do we grieve that friends should die?
No loss more easy to supply.
One year is past; a different scene!
No farther mention of the Dean,
Who now, alas! no more is miss'd,
Than if he never did exist.
Where's now the favourite of Apollo?
Departed: — and his works must follow;
Must undergo the common fate;
His kind of wit is out of date.

Some country squire to Lintot goes,
Inquires for Swift in verse and prose.
Says Lintot, "I have heard the name;
He dy'd a year ago." — "The same."
He searches all the shop in vain.
"Sir, you may find them in Duck-lane:
I sent them, with a load of books,
Last Monday to the pastry-cook's.
To fancy they could live a year!
I find you're but a stranger here.,
The Dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme.
His way of writing now is past:
The town has got a better taste.
I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough.
Pray, do but give me leave to show 'em:
Here's Colley Cibber's birth-day poem.
This ode you never yet have seen,
By Stephen Duck, upon the queen.
Then here's a letter finely penn'd
Against the Craftsman and his friend:
It clearly shows that all reflection
On ministers is disaffection.
Next, here's Sir Robert's vindication,
And Mr. Henley's last oration.
The hawkers have not got them yet:
Your honour please to buy a set?"

"Here's Wolston's tracts, the twelfth edition;
'Tis read by every politician:
The country-members, when in town,
To all their boroughs send them down;
You never met a thing so smart;
The courtiers have them all by heart:
Those maids of honour who can read,
Are taught to use them for their creed.
The reverend author's good intention
Hath been rewarded with a pension*:
He doth an honour to his gown,
By bravely running priest-craft down:
He shows, as sure as God's in Gloucester,
That Moses was a grand impostor;
That all his miracles were cheats,
Perform'd as jugglers do their feats:
The church had never such a writer;
A shame he hath not got a mitre!"

* Wolston is here confounded with Woolaston. N.

Suppose me dead ; and then suppose
A club assembled at the Rose ;
Where, from discourse of this and that,
I grow the subject of their chat.
And while they toss my name about,
With favour some, and some without ;
One, quite indifferent in the cause,
My character impartial draws.
“ The Dean, if we believe report,
Was never ill receiv’d at court,
Although, ironically grave,
He sham’d the fool, and lash’d the knave ;
To steal a hint was never known,
But what he writ was all his own.”

“ Sir, I have heard another story ;
He was a most confounded Tory,
And grew, or he is much bely’d,
Extremely dull, before he dy’d.”

“ Can we the Drapier then forget ?
Is not our nation in his debt ?

‘Twas he that writ the Drapier’s letters !” —

“ He should have left them for his bettors :
We had a hundred abler men,
Nor need depend upon his pen. —
Say what you will about his reading,
You never can defend his breeding ;
Who, in his satires running riot,
Could never leave the world in quiet ;
Attacking, when he took the whim,
Court, city, camp — all one to him. —
But why would he, except he slobber’d,
Offend our patriot, great Sir Robert,
Whose counsels aid the sovereign power
To save the nation every hour !
What scenes of evil he unravels,
In satires, libels, lying travels ;
Not sparing his own clergy cloth,
But eats into it, like a moth !”

“ Perhaps I may allow the Dean
Had too much satire in his vein,
And seem’d determin’d not to starve it,
Because no age could more deserve it.
Yet malice never was his aim ;
He lash’d the vice, but spar’d the name.
No individual could resent,
Where thousands equally were meant :
His satire points at no defect,
But what all mortals may correct ;
For he abhorr’d the senseless tribe
Who call it humour when they gibe :
He spar’d a hump, or crooked nose,
Whose owners set not up for beaux.
True genuine dulness mov’d his pity,
Unless it offer’d to be witty.
Those who their ignorance confest,
He ne’er offended with a jest ;
But laugh’d to hear an idiot quote
A verse from Horace learn’d by rote.
Vice, if it e’er can be abash’d,
Must be or ridicul’d or lash’d.
If you resent it, who’s to blame ?
He neither knows you, nor your name.
Should vice expect to ’scape rebuke,
Because its owner is a duke ?
His friendships, still to few confin’d,
Were always of the middling kind ;
No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for lords indeed :
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither’d flower ;

He would have deem’d it a disgrace,
If such a wretch had known his face,
On rural squires, that kingdom’s bane,
He vented oft his wrath in vain :
***** squires to market brought,
Who sell their souls and **** for nought :
The **** go joyful back,
To rob the church, their tenants rack ;
Go snacks with ***** justices,
And keep the peace to pick up fees ;
In every job to have a share,
A gaol or turnpike to repair ;
And turn ***** to public roads
Commodious to their own abodes.

“ He never thought an honour done him,
Because a peer was proud to own him ;
Would rather slip aside, and choose
To talk with wits in dirty shoes ;
And scorn the tools with stars and garters,
So often seen caressing Chartres.
He never courted men in station,
Nor persons held in admiration ;
Of no man’s greatness was afraid,
Because he sought for no man’s aid.
Though trusted long in great affairs,
He gave himself no haughty airs :
Without regarding private ends,
Spent all his credit for his friends ;
And only chose the wise and good ;
No flatterers ; no allies in blood :
But succour’d virtue in distress,
And seldom fail’d of good success ;
As numbers in their hearts must own,
Who, but for him, had been unknown.

“ He kept with princes due decorum ;
Yet never stood in awe before ’em.
He follow’d David’s lesson just ;
In princes never put his trust :
And, would you make him truly sour,
Provoke him with a slave in power.
The Irish senate if you nam’d,
With what impatience he declaim’d !
Fair LUXURY was all his cry ;
For her he stood prepar’d to die ;
For her he boldly stood alone ;
For her he oft expos’d his own.
Two kingdoms, just as faction led,
Had set a price upon his head ;
But not a traitor could be found,
To sell him for six hundred pound.

“ Had he but spar’d his tongue and pen,
He might have rose like other men :
But power was never in his thought,
And wealth he valued not a groat :
Ingratitude he often found,
And pity’d those who meant the wound ;
But kept the tenour of his mind,
To merit well of human-kind ;
Nor made a sacrifice of those
Who still were true, to please his foes.
He labour’d many a fruitless hour,
To reconcile his friends in power ;
Saw mischief by a faction brewing,
While they pursued each other’s ruin.
But, finding vain was all his care,
He left the court in mere despair.

“ And, oh ! how short are human schemes !
Here ended all our golden dreams.
What St. John’s skill in state affairs,
What Ormond’s valour, Oxford’s cares,

To save their sinking country lent,
Was all destroy'd by one event.
Too soon that precious life was ended,
On which alone our weal depended.
When up a dangerous faction starts,
With wrath and vengeance in their hearts;
By solemn league and covenant bound,
To ruin, slaughter, and confound;
To turn religion to a fable,
And make the government a Babel;
Pervert the laws, disgrace the gown,
Corrupt the senate, rob the crown;
To sacrifice Old England's glory,
And make her infamous in story:
When such a tempest shook the land,
How could unguarded virtue stand!

"With horror, grief, despair, the Dean
Beheld the dire destructive scene:
His friends in exile, or the Tower,
Himself within the frown of power;
Pursued by base envenom'd pens,
Far to the land of ——— and fens;
A servile race in folly nurs'd,
Who truckle most, when treated worst.

"By innocence and resolution,
He bore continual persecution;
While numbers to preferment rose,
Whose merit was to be his foes;
When ev'n his own familiar friends,
Intent upon their private ends,
Like renegadoes now he feels,
Against him lifting up their heels.

"The Dean did, by his pen, defeat
An infamous destructive cheat;
Taught fools their interest how to know,
And gave them arms to ward the blow.
Envy hath own'd it was his doing,
To save that hapless land from ruin;
While they who at the steerage stood,
And reap'd the profit, sought his blood.

"To save them from their evil fate,
In him was held a crime of state.
A wicked monster on the bench,
Whose fury blood could never quench;
As vile and profligate a villain,
As modern Scroggs, or old Tressilian;
Who long all justice had discarded,
Nor fear'd he God, nor man regarded;
Vow'd on the Dean his rage to vent,
And make him of his zeal repent:
But Heaven his innocence defends,
The grateful people stand his friends;
Not strains of law, nor judges' frown,
Nor topics brought to please the crown,
Nor witness hir'd, nor jury pick'd,
Prevail to bring him in convict.

"In exile, with a steady heart,
He spent his life's declining part;
Where folly, pride, and faction sway,
Remote from St. John, Pope, and Gay."

"Alas, poor Dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope.
This into general odium drew him,
Which if he lik'd, much good may 't do him.
His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times:
For, had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post, or fill his coffers,
Perhaps he might have truckled down,
Like other brethren of his gown;

For party he would scarce have bled: —
I say no more — because he 's dead. —
What writings has he left behind?"

"I hear they 're of a different kind:
A few in verse; but most in prose —"

"Some high-flown pamphlets, I suppose: —
All scribbled in the worst of times,
To palliate his friend Oxford's crimes;
To praise queen Anne, nay more, defend her,
As never favouring the Pretender:
Or libels yet conceal'd from sight,
Against the court to show his spite:
Perhaps his travels, part the third;
A lie at every second word —
Offensive to a loyal ear: —
But — not one sermon, you may swear."

"He knew an hundred pleasing stories,
With all the turns of Whigs and Tories:
Was cheerful to his dying day;
And friends would let him have his way.

"As for his works in verse or prose,
I own myself no judge of those.
Nor can I tell what critics thought them;
But this I know, all people bought them,
As with a moral view design'd
To please and to reform mankind:
And, if he often miss'd his aim,
The world must own it to their shame,
The praise is his, and theirs the blame.
He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;
To show, by one satiric touch,
No nation wanted it so much.
That kingdom he hath left his debtor;
I wish it soon may have a better.
And, since you dread no further lashes,
Methinks you may forgive his ashes."

BAUCIS AND PHILEMON.

ON THE EVER-LAMENTED LOSS OF THE TWO YEW-
TREES IN THE PARISH OF CHILTHORNE, SOMERSET.

1708.

Imitated from the Eighth Book of Ovid.

IN ancient times, as story tells,
The saints would often leave their cells,
And stroll about, but hide their quality,
To try good people's hospitality.

It happen'd on a winter-night,
As authors of the legend write,
Two brother-hermits, saints by trade,
Taking their tour in masquerade,
Disguis'd in tatter'd habits, went
To a small village down in Kent;
Where, in the strollers' canting strain,
They begg'd from door to door in vain,
Tried every tone might pity win;
But not a soul would let them in.

Our wandering saints, in woeful state,
Treated at this ungodly rate,
Having through all the village past,
To a small cottage came at last;
Where dwelt a good old honest ye'man,
Call'd in the neighbourhood Philemon;
Who kindly did these saints invite
In his poor hut to pass the night;

And then the hospitable sire
 Bid Goody Baucis mend the fire ;
 While he from out the chimney took
 A flitch of bacon off the hook,
 And freely from the fattest side
 Cut out large slices to be fry'd ;
 Then stepp'd aside to fetch them drink,
 Fill'd a large jug up to the brink,
 And saw it fairly twice go round ;
 Yet (what is wonderful !) they found
 'Twas still replenish'd to the top,
 As if they ne'er had touch'd a drop.
 The good old couple were amaz'd,
 And often on each other gaz'd ;
 For both were frighten'd to the heart,
 And just began to cry, — " What ar't ?"
 Then softly turn'd aside to view
 Whether the lights were burning blue.
 The gentle pilgrims, soon aware on 't,
 Told them their calling, and their errand :
 " Good folks, you need not be afraid,
 We are but saints," the hermits said :
 " No hurt shall come to you or yours :
 But for that pack of churlish boors,
 Not fit to live on Christian ground,
 They and their houses shall be drown'd ;
 Whilst you shall see your cottage rise,
 And grow a church before your eyes."

They scarce had spoke, when fair and soft
 The roof began to mount aloft ;
 Aloft rose every beam and rafter ;
 The heavy wall climb'd slowly after.

The chimney widen'd, and grew higher,
 Became a steeple with a spire.

The kettle to the top was hoist,
 And there stood fasten'd to a joist,
 But with the upside down, to show
 Its inclination for below :
 In vain ; for a superior force,
 Apply'd at bottom, stops its course ;
 Doom'd ever in suspense to dwell,
 'Tis now no kettle, but a bell.

A wooden jack, which had almost
 Lost by disuse the art to roast,
 A sudden alteration feels,
 Increas'd by new intestine wheels ;
 And, what exalts the wonder more,
 The number made the motion slower :
 The flier, though 't had leaden feet,
 Turn'd round so quick, you scarce could see 't ;
 But, slacken'd by some secret power,
 Now hardly moves an inch an hour.
 The jack and chimney, near ally'd,
 Had never left each other's side :
 The chimney to a steeple grown,
 The jack would not be left alone ;
 But, up against the steeple rear'd,
 Became a clock, and still 'adher'd ;
 And still its love to household cares,
 By a shrill voice at noon, declares,
 Warning the cook-maid not to burn
 That roast meat which it cannot turn.

The groaning-chair began to crawl,
 Like a huge snail, along the wall ;
 There stuck aloft in public view,
 And, with small change, a pulpit grew.

The porringers, that in a row
 Hung high, and made a glittering show,
 To a less noble substance chang'd,
 Were now but leathern buckets rang'd.

The ballads, pasted on the wall,
 Of Joan of France, and English Moll,
 Fair Rosamond, and Robin Hood,
 The Little Children in the Wood,
 Now seem'd to look abundance better,
 Improv'd in picture, size, and letter ;
 And, high in order plac'd, describe
 The heraldry of every tribe. *

A bedstead of the antique mode,
 Compact of timber many a load,
 Such as our ancestors did use,
 Was metamorphos'd into pews ;
 Which still their ancient nature keep
 By lodging folks dispos'd to sleep.

The cottage by such feats as these
 Grown to a church by just degrees,
 The hermits then desir'd their host
 To ask for what he fancy'd most.
 Philemon, having paus'd awhile,
 Return'd them thanks in homely style :
 Then said, " My house is grown so fine,
 Methinks I still would call it mine ;
 I'm old, and fain would live at ease ;
 Make me the parson, if you please."

He spoke, and presently he feels
 His grazier's coat fall down his heels :
 He sees, yet hardly can believe,
 About each arm a pudding-sleeve ;
 His waistcoat to a cassock grew,
 And both assum'd a sable hue ;
 But, being old, continued just
 As thread-bare, and as full of dust.
 His talk was now of tithes and dues :
 He smok'd his pipe, and read the news ;
 Knew how to preach old sermons next,
 Vamp'd in the preface and the text ;
 At christenings well could act his part,
 And had the service all by heart ;
 Wish'd women might have children fast,
 And thought whose sow had farrow'd last ;
 Against dissenters would repine,
 And stood up firm for right divine ;
 Found his head fill'd with many a system ;
 But classic authors, — he ne'er miss'd 'em.

Thus having furbish'd up a parson,
 Dame Baucis next they play'd their farce on.
 Instead of home-spun coifs, were seen
 Good pinners edg'd with colberteen ;
 Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
 Became black sattin, flounc'd with lace.
 Plain Goody would no longer down ;
 'Twas Madam, in her grogram gown.
 Philemon was in great surprise,
 And hardly could believe his eyes,
 Amaz'd to see her look so prim ;
 And she admir'd as much at him.

Thus happy in their change of life
 Were several years this man and wife ;
 When, on a day, which prov'd their last,
 Discoursing o'er old stories past,
 They went by chance, amidst their talk,
 To the church-yard to take a walk ;
 When Baucis hastily cry'd out,
 " My dear, I see your forehead sprout !" [us ?
 " Sprout !" quoth the man ; " what 's this you tell
 I hope you don't believe me jealous ?

* The tribes of Israel are sometimes distinguished in country churches by the ensigns given to them by Jacob.

But yet, methinks, I feel it true ;
And really yours is budding too : —
Nay — now I cannot stir my foot ;
It feels as if 'twere taking root."

Description would but tire my Muse ;
In short, they both were turn'd to yews.

Old Goodman Dobson of the green
Remembers, he the trees has seen :
He 'll talk of them from noon till night,
And goes with folks to show the sight :
On Sundays, after evening prayer,
He gathers all the parish there ;
Points out the place of either yew ;
Here Baucis, there Philemon, grew :
Till once a parson of our town,
To mend his barn, cut Baucis down ;
At which, 'tis hard to be believ'd
How much the other tree was griev'd,
Grew scrubbed, dy'd a-top, was stunted ;
So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE MORNING.

1709.

Now hardly here and there an hackney coach
Appearing, show'd the ruddy Morn's approach.
Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own ;
The slipshod 'prentice from his master's door
Had par'd the dirt, and sprinkled round the floor.
Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs,
Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs.
The youth with broomy stumps began to trace
The kennel's edge, where wheels had worn the place.
The small-coal-man was heard with cadence deep,
Till drown'd in shriller notes of chimney-sweep.
Duns at his lordship's gate began to meet ;
And brick-dust Moll had scream'd through half the street.

The turnkey now his flock returning sees,
Duly let out a-nights to steal for fees :
The watchful bailiffs take their silent stands,
And school-boys lag with satchels in their hands.

THE GRAND QUESTION DEBATED :

WHETHER HAMILTON'S BAWN SHOULD BE TURNED INTO A BARRACK OR A MALT-HOUSE. 1729.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight * full of care :
" Let me have your advice in a weighty affair.
This Hamilton's bawn †, whilst it sticks on my hand,
I lose by the house what I get by the land ;
But how to dispose of it to the best bidder,
For a barrack ‡ or malt-house, we now must consider.

" First, let me suppose I make it a malt-house,
Here I have computed the profit will fall t' us ;

* Sir Arthur Acheson, at whose seat this was written.

† A large old house, two miles from Sir Arthur's seat. F.

‡ The army in Ireland is lodged in strong buildings, over the whole kingdom, called barracks. F.

There's nine hundred pounds for labour and grain,
I increase it to twelve, so three hundred remain ;
A handsome addition for wine and good cheer,
Three dishes a day, and three hogsheads a year :
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd ;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board ;
And you and the Dean no more shall combine
To stint me at night to one bottle of wine ;
Nor shall I, for his humour, permit you to purloin .
A stone and a quarter of beef from my surloin.
If I make it a barrack, the crown is my tenant !
My dear, I have ponder'd again and again on 't :
In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent ;
Whatever they give me, I must be content,
Or join with the court in every debate ;
And rather than that, I would lose my estate."
Thus ended the knight ; thus began his meek wife :
" It must, and it shall be a barrack, my life.
I'm grown a mere mopus ; no company comes,
But a rabble of tenants, and rusty dull Rums §
With parsons what lady can keep herself clean ?
I'm all over daub'd when I sit by the Dean.
But if you will give us a barrack, my dear,
The captain, I'm sure, will always come here ;
I then shall not value his Deanship a straw,
For the captain, I warrant, will keep him in awe ;
Or should he pretend to be brisk and alert,
Will tell him that chaplains should not be so pert ;
That men of his coat should be minding their prayers,
And not among ladies to give themselves airs."

Thus argued my lady, but argued in vain ;
The knight his opinion resolv'd to maintain.

But Hannah ||, who listen'd to all that was past,
And could not endure so vulgar a taste,
As soon as her ladyship call'd to be drest,
Cry'd, " Madam, why surely my master's possest !
Sir Arthur the maltster ! how fine it will sound !
I'd rather the bawn were sunk under ground.
But madam, I guess'd there would never come good,
When I saw him so often with Darby and Wood. ¶
And now my dream's out ; for I was a-dream'd
That I saw a huge rat — O dear, how I scream'd !
And after, methought, I had lost my new shoes ;
And Molly, she said, I should hear some ill news.

" Dear madam, had you but the spirit to tease,
You might have a barrack whenever you please :
And, madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out.
If I had a husband like him, I purtest,
Till he gave me my will, I would give him no rest ;
And, rather than come in the same pair of sheets
With such a cross man, I would lie in the streets ;
But, madam, I beg you contrive and invent,
And worry him out, till he gives his consent.
Dear madam, whene'er of a barrack I think,
An I were to be hang'd, I can't sleep a wink :
For if a new crotchet comes into my brain,
I can't get it out, though I'd never so fain.
I fancy already a barrack contriv'd
At Hamilton's bawn, and the troop is arriv'd ;
Of this, to be sure, Sir Arthur has warning,
And waits on the captain betimes the next morning.
Now see, when they meet, how their honours behave :
' Noble captain, your servant' — ' Sir Arthur, your slave ;

§ A cant word in Ireland for a poor country clergyman. F.

|| My lady's waiting-woman. F.

¶ Two of Sir Arthur's managers. N.

You honour me much' — 'The honour is mine.' —
 ' 'Twas a sad rainy night' — 'But the morning is fine.' [service.] —
 'Pray how does my lady?' — 'My wife's at your
 'I think I have seen her picture by Jervas.' —
 'Good morrow, good captain. I'll wait on you down.' — [clown:]
 'You sha'n't stir a foot.' — 'You'll think me a
 'For all the world, captain —' — 'Not half an inch farther.' — [Arthur:]
 'You must be obey'd.' — 'Your servant, Sir
 My humble respects to my lady unknown.' —
 'I hope you will use my house as your own.' "

"Go bring me my smock, and leave off your prate, Thou hast certainly gotten a cup in thy pate."

"Pray, madam, be quiet; what was it I said?
 You had like to have put it quite out of my head.
 Next day, to be sure, the captain will come,
 At the head of his troops, with trumpet and drum.
 Now, madam, observe how he marches in state:
 The man with the kettle-drum enters the gate:
 Dub, dub, adub, dub. The trumpeters follow,
 Tantara, tantara; while all the boys hollow.
 See now comes the captain all daub'd with gold lace:
 O la! the sweet gentleman! look in his face;
 And see how he rides like a lord of the land,
 With the fine flaming sword that he holds in his hand;
 And his horse, the dear creter, it prances and rears;
 With ribbons in knots at its tail and its ears:
 At last comes the troop by the word of command,
 Drawn up in our court; when the captain cries,
     STAND!

Your ladyship lifts up the sash to be seen
 (For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen).
 The captain, to show he is proud of the favour,
 Looks up to your window, and cocks up his beaver.
 (His beaver is cock'd; pray, madam, mark that,
 For a captain of horse never takes off his hat,
 Because he has never a hand that is idle;
 For the right holds the sword, and the left holds the bridle:)

Then flourishes thrice his sword in the air,
 As a compliment due to a lady so fair;
 (How I tremble to think of the blood it hath spilt;)
 Then he lowers down the point, and kisses the hilt.
 Your ladyship smiles, and thus you begin:

'Pray, captain, be pleas'd to alight and walk in.'
 The captain salutes you with congee profound,
 And your ladyship curtsies half way to the ground.
 'Kit, run to your master, and bid him come to us;
 I'm sure he'll be proud of the honour you do us.
 And, captain, you'll do us the favour to stay,
 And take a short dinner here with us to-day:
 You're heartily welcome; but as for good cheer,
 You come in the very worst time of the year:
 If I had expected so worthy a guest —'
 'Lord! madam! your ladyship sure is in jest:
 You banter me, madam; the kingdom must grant —'
 'You officers, captain, are so complaisant!'"

"Hist, hussy, I think I hear somebody coming —"
 "No, madam; 'tis only Sir Arthur a-humming.
 To shorten my tale (for I hate a long story),
 The captain at dinner appears in his glory;
 The Dean and the doctor * have humbled their pride,
 For the captain's entreated to sit by your side;
 And, because he's their betters, you carve for him
     first;

The parsons for envy are ready to burst.

* Dr. Jinny, a clergyman in the neighbourhood. F.

The servants amas'd are scarce ever able
 To keep off their eyes, as they wait at the table;
 And Molly and I have thrust in our nose
 To peep at the captain all in his fine clo'es.
 Dear madam, be sure he's a fine-spoken man,
 Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran;
 'And, madam,' says he, 'if such dinners you give,
 You'll ne'er want for parsons as long as you live.
 I ne'er knew a parson without a good nose;
 But the Devil's as welcome wherever he goes:
 G—d—n me! they bid us reform and repent,
 But, z—s! by their looks they never keep Lent.
 Mister curate, for all your grave looks, I'm afraid
 You cast a sheep's eye on her ladyship's maid:
 I wish she would lend you her pretty white hand
 In mending your cassoc, and smoothing your hand.
 (For the Dean was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny,
 That the captain suppos'd he was curate to Jinny.)
 Whenever you see a cassoc and gown,
 A hundred to one but it covers a clown.
 Observe how a parson comes into a room;
 G—d—n me! he hobbles as bad as my groom;
 A scholard, when just from his college broke loose,
 Can hardly tell how to cry bo to a goose;
 Your Novels, and Bluturcks, and Omurs †, and stuff,
 By G—, they don't signify this pinch of snuff.
 To give a young gentleman right education,
 The army's the only good school in the nation:
 My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool,
 But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school;
 I never could take to my book for the blood o' me,
 And the puppy confess'd he expected no good o' me.
 He caught me one morning coquetting his wife;
 But he maul'd me, I ne'er was so maul'd in my life:
 So I took to the road, and what's very odd,
 The first man I robb'd was a parson, by G—.
 Now, madam, you'll think it a strange thing to say,
 But the sight of a book makes me sick to this day."

"Never since I was born did I hear so much wit,
 And, madam, I laugh'd till I thought I should split.
 So then you look'd scornful, and snift at the Dean,
 As who should say, Now, am I skinny and lean? ‡
 But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
 And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips."
 Thus merciless Hannah ran on in her talk,
 Till she heard the Dean call, "Will your ladyship walk?"

Her ladyship answers, "I'm just coming down:"
 Then, turning to Hannah, and forcing a frown,
 Although it was plain in her heart she was glad,
 Cry'd, "Hussy, why sure the wench is gone mad!
 How could these chimeras get into your brains? —
 Come hither, and take this old gown for your pains.
 But the Dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
 Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers:
 For your life, not a word of the matter, I charge ye;
 Give me but a barrack, a fig for the clergy."

ON POETRY: A RHAPSODY. 1733.

ALL human race would fain be wits,
 And millions miss for one that hits.
 Young's universal passion, pride,
 Was never known to spread so wide.
 Say, Britain, could you ever boast,
 Three poets in an age at most?

† Ovids, Plutarchs, Homers,

‡ Nick-names for my lady.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
 A sprig of bays in fifty years ;
 While every fool his claim alleges,
 As if it grew in common hedges.
 What reason can there be assign'd
 For this perverseness in the mind ?
 Brutes find out where their talents lie :
 A bear will not attempt to fly ;
 A founder'd horse will oft debate,
 Before he tries a five-bar'd gate ;
 A dog by instinct turns aside,
 Who sees the ditch too deep and wide.
 But man we find the only creature
 Who, led by folly, combats nature ;
 Who, when she loudly cries, forbear,
 With obstinacy fixes there ;
 And, where his genius least inclines,
 Absurdly bends his whole designs.

Not empire to the rising Sun
 By valour, conduct, fortune won ;
 Not highest wisdom in debates
 For framing laws to govern states ;
 Not skill in sciences profound,
 So large to grasp the circle round ;
 Such heavenly influence require,
 As how to strike the Muse's lyre.

Not beggar's brat on bulk begot ;
 Not bastard of a pedlar Scot ;
 Not boy brought up to cleaning shoes,
 The spawn of Bridewell or the stews ;
 Not infants dropt, the spurious pledges
 Of gypsies littering under hedges ;
 Are so disqualified by fate
 To rise in church, or law, or state,
 As he whom Phœbus in his ire
 Hath blasted with poetic fire.

What hope of custom in the fair,
 While not a soul demands your ware ?
 Where you have nothing to produce
 For private life, or public use ?
Court, city, country, want you not ;
 You cannot bribe, betray, or plot.
 For poets, law makes no provision ;
 The wealthy have you in derision :
 Of state affairs you cannot smatter ;
 Are awkward when you try to flatter :
 Your portion, taking Britain round,
 Was just one annual hundred pound ;
 Now not so much as in remainder,
 Since Cibber brought in an attainder ;
 For ever fix'd by right divine
 (A monarch's right) on Grub-street line.

Poor starveling bard, how small thy gains !
 How unproportion'd to thy pains !
 And here a simile comes pat in :
 Though chickens take a month to fatten,
 The guests in less than half an hour
 Will more than half a score devour.
 So, after toiling twenty days
 To earn a stock of pence and praise,
 Thy labours, grown the critic's prey,
 Are swallow'd o'er a dish of tea ;
 Gone to be never heard of more,
 Gone where the chickens went before.

How shall a new attempter learn
 Of different spirits to discern,
 And how distinguish which is which,
 The poet's vein, or scribbling itch ?
 Then hear an old experienc'd sinner
 Instructing thus a young beginner.

Consult yourself ; and if you find
 A powerful impulse urge your mind,
 Impartial judge within your breast
 What subject you can manage best ;
 Whether your genius most inclines
 To satire, praise, or humorous lines,
 To elegies in mournful tone,
 Or prologue sent from hand unknown.
 Then, rising with Aurora's light,
 The Muse invoc'd, sit down to write ;
 Blot out, correct, insert, refine,
 Enlarge, diminish, interline ;
 Be mindful, when invention fails,
 To scratch your head, and bite your nails.

Your poem finish'd, next your care
 Is needful to transcribe it fair.
 In modern wit, all printed trash is
 Set off with numerous breaks and dashes.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
 You print it in italic type.
 When letters are in vulgar shapes,
 'Tis ten to one the wit escapes :
 But, when in capitals exprest,
 The dullest reader smokes the jest :
 Or else perhaps he may invent
 A better than the poet meant ;
 As learned commentators view
 In Homer more than Homer knew.

Your poem in its modish dress,
 Correctly fitted for the press,
 Convey by penny-post to Lintot,
 But let no friend alive look into 't.
 If Lintot thinks 'twill quit the cost,
 You need not fear your labour lost :
 And how agreeably surpris'd
 Are you to see it advertis'd !
 The hawker shows you one in print,
 As fresh as farthings from the mint :
 The product of your toil and sweating ;
 A bastard of your own begetting.

Be sure at Will's, the following day,
 Lie snug, and hear what critics say ;
 And, if you find the general vogue
 Pronounces you a stupid rogue,
 Damns all your thoughts as low and little,
 Sit still, and swallow down your spittle.
 Be silent as a politician,
 For talking may beget suspicion :
 Or praise the judgment of the town,
 And help yourself to run it down.
 Give up your fond paternal pride,
 Nor argue on the weaker side :
 For poems read without a name
 We justly praise, or justly blame ;
 And critics have no partial views,
 Except they know whom they abuse :
 And, since you ne'er provoke their spite,
 Depend upon 't their judgment's right.
 But if you blab, you are undone :
 Consider what a risk you run :
 You lose your credit all at once ;
 The town will mark you for a dunce ;
 The vilest doggrel Grub-street sends,
 Will pass for yours with foes and friends ;
 And you must bear the whole disgrace,
 Till some fresh blockhead takes your place.

Your secret kept, your poem sunk,
 And sent in quires to line a trunk,
 If still you be dispos'd to rhyme,
 Go try your hand a second time,

Again you fail : yet Safe 's the word ;
 Take courage, and attempt a third.
 But first with care employ your thoughts
 Where critics mark'd your former faults ;
 The trivial turns, the borrow'd wit,
 The similes that nothing fit ;
 The cant which every fool repeats,
 Town jests and coffee-house conceits ;
 Descriptions tedious, flat and dry,
 And introduc'd the Lord knows why :
 Or where we find your fury set
 Against the harmless alphabet ;
 On A's and B's your malice vent,
 While readers wonder whom you meant ;
 A public or a private robber,
 A statesman, or a South-sea jobber ;
 A prelate who no God believes ;
 A parliament, or den of thieves ;
 A pick-purse at the bar or bench ;
 A duchess, or a suburb-wench :
 Or oft', when epithets you link
 In gaping lines to fill a chink ;
 Like stepping-stones to save a stride,
 In streets where kennels are too wide ;
 Or like a heel-piece, to support
 A cripple with one foot too short ;
 Or like a bridge, that joins a marish
 To moorlands of a different parish :
 So have I seen ill-coupled hounds
 Drag different ways in miry grounds
 So geographers in Afric maps
 With savage pictures fill their gaps,
 And o'er unhabitable downs
 Place elephants for want of towns.

But, though you miss your third essay,
 You need not throw your pen away.
 Lay now aside all thoughts of fame,
 To spring more profitable game.
 From party-merit seek support ;
 The vilest verse thrives best at court.
 A pamphlet in Sir Bob's defence
 Will never fail to bring in pence :
 Nor be concern'd about the sale,
 He pays his workmen on the nail.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
 Inherits every virtue round,
 As emblems of the sovereign power,
 Like other baubles in the Tower ;
 Is generous, valiant, just, and wise,
 And so continues till he dies :
 His humble senate this professes,
 In all their speeches, votes, addresses.
 But once you fix him in a tomb,
 His virtues fade, his vices bloom ;
 And each perfection wrong imputed,
 Is fully at his death confuted.
 The loads of poems in his praise,
 Ascending, make one funeral blaze :
 As soon as you can hear his knell,
 This god on Earth turns devil in Hell :
 And lo ! his ministers of state,
 Transform'd to imps, his levee wait ;
 Where, in the scenes of endless woe,
 They ply their former arts below ;
 And, as they sail in Charon's boat,
 Contrive to bribe the judge's vote ;
 To Cerberus they give a sop,
 His triple-barking mouth to stop ;
 Or in the ivory gate of dreams
 Project excise and South-sea schemes ;

Or hire the party pamphleteers
 To set Elysium by the ears.

Then, poet, if you mean to thrive,
 Employ your Muse on kings alive :
 With prudence gathering up a cluster
 Of all the virtues you can muster,
 Which, form'd into a garland sweet,
 Lay humbly at your monarch's feet ;
 Who, as the odours reach his throne,
 Will smile, and think them all his own ;
 For law and gospel both determine
 All virtues lodge in royal ermine :
 (I mean the oracles of both,
 Who shall depose it upon oath.)

Your garland in the following reign,
 Change but the names, will do again.

But, if you think this trade too base,
 (Which seldom is the dunce's case,)
 Put on the critic's brow, and sit
 At Will's the puny judge of wit.
 A nod, a shrug, a scornful smile,
 With caution us'd, may serve awhile.
 Proceed no further in your part,
 Before you learn the terms of art ;
 For you can never be too far gone
 In all our modern critic's jargon :
 Then talk with more authentic face
 Of unities, in time and place ;

Get scraps of Horace from your friends,
 And have them at your fingers' ends ;
 Learn Aristotle's rules by rote,
 And at all hazards boldly quote ;
 Judicious Rymer oft' review,
 Wise Dennis, and profound Bossu ;
 Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
 For these our critics much confide in,
 (Though merely writ at first for filling,
 To raise the volume's price a shilling.)

A forward critic often dupes us
 With sham quotations peri hupsous ;
 And if we have not read Longinus,
 Will magisterially outshine us.
 Then, lest with Greek he overrun ye,
 Procure the book for love or money,
 Translated from Boileau's translation,
 And quote quotation on quotation.

At Will's you hear a poem read,
 Where Battus, from the table head,
 Reclining on his elbow-chair,
 Gives judgment with decisive air ;
 To whom the tribe of circling wits
 As to an oracle submits.
 He gives directions to the town,
 To cry it up or run it down ;
 Like courtiers, when they send a note,
 Instructing members how to vote.
 He sets the stamp of bad and good,
 Though not a word be understood.
 Your lesson learn'd, you 'll be secure
 To get the name of connoisseur :
 And, when your merits once are known,
 Procure disciples of your own.
 For poets (you can never want 'em)
 Spread through Augusta Trinobantum,
 Computing by their pecks of coals,
 Amount to just nine thousand souls :
 These o'er their proper districts govern,
 Of wit and humour judges sovereign.
 In every street a city-bard
 Rules, like an alderman, his ward ;

His indisputed rights extend
Through all the lane, from end to end ;
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness
For songs of loyalty and lewdness ;
Outdone by none in rhyming well,
Although he never learn'd to spell.

Two bordering wits contend for glory ;
And one is Whig, and one is Tory :
And this for epics claims the bays,
And that for elegiac lays :
Some fam'd for numbers soft and smooth,
By lovers spoke in Punch's booth ;
And some as justly fame extols
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls.
Bavius in Wapping gains renown,
And Mævius reigns o'er Kentish-town :
Tigellius, plac'd in Phœbus' car,
From Ludgate shines to Temple-bar ;
Harmonious Cibber entertains
The court with annual birth-day strains ;
Whence Gay was banish'd in disgrace ;
Where Pope will never show his face ;
Where Young must torture his invention
To flatter knaves, or lose his pension.

But these are not a thousandth part
Of jobbers in the poet's art,
Attending each his proper station,
And all in due subordination,
Through every alley to be found,
In garrets high, or under ground ;
And when they join their pericranies,
Out skips a book of miscellanies.
Hobbes clearly proves that every creature
Lives in a state of war by nature.
The greater for the smallest watch,
But meddle seldom with their match.
A whale of moderate size will draw
A shoal of herrings down his maw ;
A fox with geese his belly crams ;
A wolf destroys a thousand lambs :
But search among the rhyming race,
The brave are worry'd by the base.
If on Parnassus' top you sit,
You rarely bite, are always bit.
Each poet of inferior size
On you shall rail and criticise,
And strive to tear you limb from limb ;
While others do as much for him.

The vermin only tease and pinch
Their foes superior by an inch.
So, naturalists observe, a flea
Hath smaller fleas that on him prey ;
And these have smaller still to bite 'em,
And so proceed ad infinitum.
Thus every poet in his kind
Is bit by him that comes behind :
Who, though too little to be seen,
Can tease, and gall, and give the spleen ;
Call dunces fools and sons of whores,
Lay Grub-street at each other's doors ;
Extol the Greek and Roman masters,
And curse our modern poetasters ;
Complain, as many an ancient bard did,
How genius is no more rewarded ;
How wrong a taste prevails among us ;
How much our ancestors outsung us ;
Can personate an awkward scorn
For those who are not poets born ;
And all their brother-dunces lash,
Who crowd the press with hourly trash.

O Grub-street ! how do I bemoan thee,
Whose graceless children scorn to own thee !
Their filial piety forgot,
Deny their country, like a Scot ;
Though, by their idiom and grimace,
They soon betray their native place.
Yet thou hast greater cause to be
Asham'd of them, than they of thee,
Degenerate from their ancient brood,
Since first the court allow'd them food.

Remains a difficulty still,
To purchase fame by writing ill.
From Flecknoe down to Howard's time,
How few have reach'd the low sublime !
For when our high-born Howard dy'd,
Blackmore alone his place supply'd :
And, lest a chasm should intervene,
When Death had finish'd Blackmore's reign,
The *lead*en crown devolv'd to thee,
Great poet of the hollow tree.
But ah ! how unsecure thy throne !
A thousand bards thy right disown :
They plot to turn, in factious zeal,
Duncenia to a common weal ;
And with rebellious arms pretend
An equal privilege to descend.

In bulk there are not more degrees
From elephants to mites in cheese,
Than what a curious eye may trace
In creatures of the rhyming race.
From bad to worse, and worse, they fall ;
But who can reach the worst of all ?
For though, in nature, depth and height
Are equally held infinite ;
In poetry, the height we know ;
'Tis only infinite below.

For instance : when you rashly think,
No rhymers can like Welsted sink,
His merits balanc'd, you shall find
The laureat leaves him far behind.
Concannen, more aspiring bard,
Soars downwards deeper by a yard.
Smart Jemmy Moor with vigour drops :
The rest pursue as thick as hops.
With heads to points the gulph they enter,
Link'd perpendicular to the centre ;
And, as their heels elated rise,
Their heads attempt the nether skies.

Oh, what indignity and shame,
To prostitute the Muse's name !
By flattering kings, whom Heaven design'd
The plagues and scourges of mankind ;
Bred up in ignorance and sloth,
And every vice that nurses both.

Fair Britain, in thy monarch blest,
Whose virtues bear the strictest test ;
Whom never faction could bespatter,
Nor minister nor poet flatter ;
What justice in rewarding merit !
What magnanimity of spirit !
What lineaments divine we trace
Through all his figure, mien, and face !
Though peace with olive bind his hands,
Confess'd the conquering hero stands.
Hydaspes, Indus, and the Ganges,
Dread from his hand impending changes.
From him the Tartar and Chinese,
Short by the knees, entreat for peace.
The consort of his throne and bed,
A perfect goddess born and bred,

Appointed sovereign judge to sit
On learning, eloquence, and wit.
Our eldest hope, divine Iulus,
(Late, very late, oh may he rule us !)
What early manhood has he shown,
Before his downy beard was grown !
Then think, what wonders will be done,
By going on as he begun,
An heir for Britain to secure
As long as Sun and Moon endure.

The remnant of the royal blood
Comes pouring on me like a flood :
Bright goddesses, in number five ;
Duke William, sweetest prince alive.
Now sing the minister of state,
Who shines alone without a mate.
Observe with what majestic port
This Atlas stands to prop the court :
Intent the public debts to pay,
Like prudent Fabius, by delay.
Thou great vicegerent of the king,
Thy praises every Muse shall sing !
In all affairs thou sole director,
Of wit and learning chief protector ;
Though small the time thou hast to spare,
The church is thy peculiar care.
Of pious prelates what a stock
You choose, to rule the sable flock !
You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage.
You dignify the noble race,
Content yourself with humbler place.
Now, learning, valour, virtue, sense,
To titles give the sole pretence.
St. George beheld thee with delight
Vouchsafe to be an azure knight,
When on thy breasts and sides Herculean
He fix'd the star and string cerulean.

Say, poet, in what other nation
Shone ever such a constellation !
Attend, ye Popes, and Youngs, and Gays,
And tune your harps, and strow your bays :
Your panegyrics here provide ;
You cannot err on flattery's side.
Above the stars exalt your style,
You still are low ten thousand mile.
On Lewis, all his bards bestow'd
Of incense many a thousand load ;
But Europe mortify'd his pride,
And swore the fawning rascals ly'd.
Yet what the world refus'd to Lewis,
Apply'd to George, exactly true is.
Exactly true ! invidious poet !
'Tis fifty thousand times below it.

Translate me now some lines, if you can,
From Virgil, Martial, Ovid, Lucan.
They could all power in Heaven divide,
And do no wrong on either side ;
They teach you how to split a hair,
Give George and Jove an equal share.
Yet why should we be lac'd so straight ?
I'll give my monarch butter-weight.
And reason good ; for many a year
Jove never intermeddled here :
Nor, though his priests be duly paid,
Did ever we desire his aid :
We now can better do without him,
Since Woolston gave us arms to rout him.
Cætera desiderantur.

A DESCRIPTION OF A CITY-SHOWER,

IN IMITATION OF VIRGIL'S GEORGICS. 1710.

CAREFUL observers may foretell the hour
(By sure prognostics) when to dread a shower.
While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolics, and pursues her tail no more.
Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended sense with double stink.
If you be wise, then go not far to dine ;
You'll spend in coach-hire more than save in wine.
A coming shower your shooting corns presage,
Old aches will throb, your hollow tooth will rage.
Sauntering in coffee-house is Dulman seen ;
He damns the climate, and complains of spleen.

Meanwhile the south, rising with dabbled wings,
A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings,
That swill'd more liquor than it could contain,
And, like a drunkard, gives it up again.
Brisk Susan whips her linen from the rope,
While the first drizzling shower is borne aslope :
Such is that sprinkling which some careless queen
Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean :
You fly, invoke the gods ; then, turning, stop
To rail ; she, singing, still whirls on her mop.
Not yet the dust had shunn'd th' unequal strife,
But aided by the wind, fought still for life :
And, wafted with its foe by violent gust,
'Twas doubtful which was rain, and which was dust.
Ah ! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade ?
Sole coat ! where dust cemented by the rain
Erects the nap, and leaves a cloudy stain !

Now in contiguous drops the flood comes down,
Threatening with deluge this devoted town.
To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,
Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy.
The templar spruce, while every spout 's abroad,
Stays till 'tis fair, yet seems to call a coach.
The tuck'd-up sempstress walks with hasty strides,
While streams run down her oil'd umbrella's sides.
Here various kinds, by various fortunes led,
Commence acquaintance underneath a shed.
Triumphant Tories and desponding Whigs
Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs.
Box'd in a chair, the beau impatient sits,
While spouts run clattering o'er the roof by fits,
And ever and anon with frightful din
The leather sounds ; he trembles from within.
So when Troy chairmen bore the wooden steed,
Pregnant with Greeks impatient to be freed,
(Those bully Greeks, who, as the moderns do,
Instead of paying chairmen, ran them through,)
Laocoon struck the outside with his spear,
And each imprison'd hero quak'd for fear.

Now from all parts the swelling kennels flow,
And bear their trophies with them as they go :
Filths of all hues and odours seem to tell
What street they sail'd from by their sight and smell.
They, as each torrent drives, with rapid force,
From Smithfield or St. 'Pulchre's shape their course,
And in huge confluence join'd at Snowhill ridge,
Fall from the conduit prone to Holborn bridge.
Sweepings from butchers' stalls, dung, guts, and blood, [mud,
Drown'd puppies, stinking sprats, all drench'd in Dead cats, and turnip-tops, come tumbling down
the flood,

HORACE, BOOK III. ODE II.

TO THE EARL OF OXFORD, LATE LORD TREASURER.

SENT TO HIM WHEN IN THE TOWER, 1617.

How blest is he who for his country dies,
 Since Death pursues the coward as he flies !
 The youth in vain would fly from fate's attack,
 With trembling knees and terrour at his back ;
 Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
 Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind.

Virtue repuls'd, yet knows not to repine,
 But shall with unattainted honour shine ;
 Nor stoops to take the staff*, nor lays it down,
 Just as the rabble please to smile or frown.

Virtue, to crown her favourites, loves to try
 Some new unbeaten passage to the sky ;
 Where Jove a seat among the gods will give
 To those who die for meriting to live.

Next, faithful silence hath a sure reward ;
 Within our breast be every secret barr'd !
 He who betrays his friend, shall never be
 Under one roof, or in one ship, with me.
 For who with traitors would his safety trust,
 Lest, with the wicked, Heaven involve the just ?
 And, though the villain 'scape awhile, he feels
 Slow vengeance, like a blood-hound, at his heels.

MRS. HARRIS'S PETITION.

1699.

To their excellencies the lords justices of Ireland †,
 the humble petition of Frances Harris,
 Who must starve, and die a maid, if it miscarries ;

Humbly sheweth,

That I went to warm myself in Lady Betty's ‡ chamber, because I was cold ;

And I had in a purse seven pounds, four shillings,
 and sixpence, besides farthings, in money
 and gold :

So, because I had been buying things for my lady
 last night,

I was resolv'd to tell my money, to see if it was right.

Now, you must know, because my trunk has a very bad lock,

Therefore all the money I have, which, God knows,
 is a very small stock,

I keep in my pocket, ty'd about my middle, next to my smock.

So when I went to put up my purse, as God would have it, my smock was unript,

And, instead of putting it into my pocket, down it
 slipt ;

Then the bell rung, and I went down to put my lady
 to bed ;

And, God knows, I thought my money was as safe
 as my maidenhead.

* The ensign of the lord treasurer's office.

† The Earls of Berkeley and of Galway.

‡ Lady Betty Berkeley, afterwards Germaine.

So, when I came up again, I found my pocket feel very light :

But when I search'd, and miss'd my purse, Lord !
 I thought I should have sunk outright.

Lord ! madam, says Mary, how d' ye do ? Indeed, says I, never worse :

But pray, Mary, can you tell what I have done
 with my purse ?

Lord help me ! said Mary, I never stirr'd out of this place :

Nay, said I, I had it in Lady Betty's chamber, that's a plain case.

So Mary got me to bed and cover'd me up warm :
 However, she stole away my garters, that I might do myself no harm.

So I tumbled and toss'd all night, as you may very well think,

But hardly ever set my eyes together, or slept a wink.

So I was a-dream'd, methought, that we went and
 search'd the folks round,

And in a corner of Mrs. Dukes's * box, ty'd in a rag,
 the money was found.

So next morning we told Whittle †, and he fell
 a-swearing :

Then my dame Wadger ‡ came ; and she, you know,
 is thick of hearing.

Dame, said I, as loud as I could bawl, do you know what a loss I have had ?

Nay, said she, my Lord Colway's § folks are all very sad ;

For my Lord Dromedary || comes a Tuesday without fail.

Pugh ! said I, but that 's not the business that I ail,
 Says Cary ¶, says he, I have been a servant this five and twenty years, come spring,

 And in all the places I liv'd, I never heard of such a thing.

Yes, says the steward **, I remember, when I was at my Lady Shrewsbury's,

Such a thing as this happen'd just about the time of gooseberries.

So I went to the party suspected, and I found her full of grief,

(Now, you must know, of all things in the world,
 I hate a thief.)

However, I am resolv'd to bring the discourse slyly about :

Mrs. Dukes, said I, here 's an ugly accident has happen'd out :

'Tis not that I value the money three skips of a louse †† ;

But the thing I stand upon is the credit of the house.

'Tis true, seven pounds, four shillings, and sixpence,
 makes a great hole in my wages :

Besides, as they say, service is no inheritance in these ages.

* Wife to one of the footmen.

|| The Earl of Drogheda, who, with the prime, was to succeed the two earls.

¶ Clerk of the kitchen.

** Ferria.

†† An usual saying of hers.

Now, Mrs. Dukes, you know, and every body understands,
 That though 'tis hard to judge, yet money can't go without hands.
 The devil take me! said she (blessing herself) if ever I saw 't!
 So she roar'd like a Bedlam, as though I had call'd her all to naught.
 So, you know, what could I say to her any more? I e'en left her, and came away as wise as I was before.
 Well; but then they would have had me gone to the cunning man!
 No, said I, 'tis the same thing, the chaplain will be here anon.
 So the chaplain * came in. Now, the servants say he is my sweetheart,
 Because he 's always in my chamber, and I always take his part.
 So, as the devil would have it, before I was aware, out I blunder'd,
Parson, said I, can you cast a nativity, when a body's plunder'd?
 (Now, you must know, he hates to be call'd parson like the devil!)
 Truly, says he, Mrs. Nab, it might become you to be more civil;
 If your money be gone, as a learned divine says, d' ye see;
 You are no text for my handling; so take that from me:
 I was never taken for a conjurer before, I'd have you to know.
 Lord! said I, don't be angry, I am sure I never thought you so;
 You know I honour the cloth; I design to be a parson's wife;
 I never took one in your coat for a conjurer, in all my life.
 With that he twisted his girdle at me like a rope, as who should say,
 Now you may go hang yourself for me! and so went away.
 Well: I thought I should have swoon'd. Lord! said I, what shall I do?
 I have lost my money, and shall lose my true love too!
 Then my lord call'd me: Harry †, said my lord, don't cry;
 I'll give you something towards thy loss; and, says my lady, so will I.
 Oh! but, said I, what if, after all, the chaplain won't come to?
 For that, he said, (an't please your excellencies,) I must petition you.
 The premisses tenderly consider'd, I desire your excellencies protection,
 And that I may have a share in next Sunday's collection;
 And over and above, that I may have your excellencies letter,
 With an order for the chaplain aforesaid or, instead of him, a better:
 And then your poor petitioner, both night and day, Or the chaplain (for 'tis his trade), as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

* Dr. Swift.

† A cant word of Lord and Lady B. to Mrs. Harris.

TO THE EARL OF PETERBOROW,

WHO COMMANDED THE BRITISH FORCES IN SPAIN

MORDANTO fills the trump of fame,
 The Christian worlds his deeds proclaim,
 And prints are crowded with his name.

In journies he outrides the post,
 Sits up till midnight with his host,
 Talks politics, and gives the toast;

Knows every prince in Europe's face,
 Flies like a squib from place to place,
 And travels not, but runs a race.

From Paris gasette à-la-main,
 This day arriv'd, without his train,
 Mordanto in a week from Spain.

A messenger comes all a-reek,
 Mordanto at Madrid to seek;
 He left the town above a week.

Next day the post-boy winds his horn,
 And rides through Dover in the morn:
 Mordanto 's landed from Leghorn.

Mordanto gallops on alone;
 The roads are with his followers strown;
 This breaks a girth and that a bone.

His body active as his mind,
 Returning sound in limb and wind,
 Except some leather lost behind.

A skeleton in outward figure,
 His meagre corpse, though full of vigour,
 Would halt behind him, were it bigger.

So wonderful his expedition,
 When you have not the least suspicion,
 He 's with you like an apparition:

Shines in all climates like a star;
 In senates bold, and fierce in war;
 A land commander, and a tar:

Heroic actions early bred in,
 Ne'er to be match'd in modern reading,
 But by his name-sake, Charles of Sweden.

THE PROGRESS OF POETRY.

THE farmer's goose, who in the stubble
 Has fed without restraint or trouble,
 Grown fat with corn, and sitting still,
 Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill;
 And hardly waddles forth to cool
 Her belly in the neighbouring pool;
 Nor loudly cackles at the door;
 For cackling shows the goose is poor.

But, when she must be turn'd to graze,
 And round the barren common strays,

Hard exercise and harder fare
 Soon make my dame grow lank and spare :
 Her body light, she tries her wings,
 And scorns the ground, and upward springs ;
 While all the parish, as she flies,
 Hear sounds harmonious from the skies.

Such is the poet fresh in pay
 (The third night's profits of his play) ;
 His morning-draughts till noon can swill
 Among his brethren of the quill :
 With good roast beef his belly full,
 Grown lazy, foggy, fat, and dull,
 Deep sunk in plenty and delight,
 What poet e'er could take his flight ?
 Or, stuff'd with phlegm up to the throat,
 What poet e'er could sing a note ?
 Nor Pegasus could bear the load
 Along the high celestial road ;

The steed, oppress'd, would break his girth,
 To raise the lumber from the Earth.

But view him in another scene,
 When all his drink is Hippocrene,
 His money spent, his patrons fail,
 His credit out for cheese and ale ;
 His two-years' coat so smooth and bare,
 Through every thread it lets in air ;
 With hungry meals his body pin'd,
 His guts and belly full of wind ;
 And, like a jockey for a race,
 His flesh brought down to flying case :
 Now his exalted spirit loaths
 Encumbrances of food and clothes ;
 And up he rises, like a vapour,
 Supported high on wings of paper ;
 He singing flies, and flying sings,
 While from below all Grub-street rings.

JAMES THOMSON.

JAMES THOMSON, a distinguished British poet, born at Ednam, near Kelso, in Scotland, in 1700, was one of the nine children of the Rev. Mr. Thomson, minister of that place. James was sent to the school of Jedburgh, where he attracted the notice of a neighbouring minister by his propensity to poetry, who encouraged his early attempts, and corrected his performances. On his removal from school, he was sent to the university of Edinburgh, where he chiefly attended to the cultivation of his poetical faculty; but the death of his father, during his second session, having brought his mother to Edinburgh for the purpose of educating her children, James complied with the advice of his friends, and entered upon a course of divinity. Here, we are told, that the explanation of a psalm having been required from him as a probationary exercise, he performed it in language so splendid, that he was reproved by his professor for employing a diction which it was not likely that any one of his future audience could comprehend. This admonition completed the disgust which he felt for the profession chosen for him; and having connected himself with some young men in the university who were aspirants after literary eminence, he readily listened to the advice of a lady, the friend of his mother, and determined to try his fortune in the great metropolis, London.

In 1725 Thomson came by sea to the capital, where he soon found out his college acquaintance, Mallet, to whom he showed his poem of "Winter," then composed in detached passages of the descriptive kind. Mallet advised him to form them into a connected piece, and immediately to print it. It was purchased for a small sum, and appeared in 1726, dedicated to Sir Spencer Compton. Its merits, however, were little understood by the public; till Mr. Whateley, a person of acknowledged taste, happening to cast an eye upon it, was struck with its beauties, and gave it vogue. His dedicatee, who had hitherto neglected him, made him a present of twenty guineas, and he was introduced to Pope, Bishop Rundle, and Lord-chancellor Talbot. In 1727, he published another of his seasons, "Summer," dedicated to Mr. Doddington, for it was still the custom for poets to pay this tribute to men in power. In the same year he gave to the public his "Poem, sacred to the memory of Sir Isaac Newton," and his "Britannia." His "Spring" was published in 1728, addressed to the Countess of Hertford; and the Seasons were completed by the addition of "Autumn," dedicated to Mr. Onslow, in 1730, when they were published collectively.

As nothing was more tempting to the cupidity of an author than dramatic composition, Thomson resolved to become a competitor for that laurel also, and in 1728, he had the influence to bring upon the stage of Drury-lane, his tragedy of "Sophonista." It was succeeded by "Agamemnon;" "Edward and Eleonora;" and "Tancred and Sigismunda;" but although these pieces were not without their merits, the moral strain was too prevalent for the public taste, and they have long ceased to occupy the theatre. Through the recommendation of Dr. Rundle, he was, about 1729, selected as the travelling associate of the Hon. Mr. Talbot, eldest son of the Chancellor, with whom he visited most of the courts of the European continent. During this tour, the idea of a poem on "Liberty" suggested itself, and after his return, he employed two years in its completion. The place of secretary of the briefs, which was nearly a sinecure, repaid him for his attendance on Mr. Talbot. "Liberty" at length appeared, and was dedicated to Frederic, Prince of Wales, who, in opposition to the court, affected the patronage of letters, as well as of liberal sentiments in politics. He granted Thomson a pension, to remunerate him for the loss of his place by the death of Lord-chancellor Talbot. In 1746, appeared his poem, called "The Castle of Indolence," which had been several years under his polishing hand, and by many is considered as his principal performance. He was now in tolerably affluent circumstances, a place of Surveyor-general of the Leeward Islands, given him by Mr. Lyttleton, bringing him in, after paying a deputy, about 800*l.* a year. He did not, however, long enjoy this state of comfort; for returning one evening from London to Kew-lane, he was attacked by a fever, which proved fatal in August 1748, the 48th year of his age. He was interred without any memorial in Richmond church; but a monument was erected to his memory, in Westminster Abbey, in 1762, with the profits arising from an edition of his works published by Mr. Millar.

Thomson in person was large and ungainly, with a heavy, unanimated countenance, and having nothing in his appearance in mixed society indicating the man of genius or refinement. He was, however, easy and cheerful with select friends, by whom he was singularly beloved for the kindness of his heart, and his freedom from all the malignant passions which too often debase the literary character. His temper was much inclined to indolence, and he was fond of indulgence of every kind; in particular he was more attached to the pleasures of sense, than the sentimental delicacy of his writings would induce a reader to suppose. For the moral tendency of his works, no author has deserved more praise; and no one can rise from the perusal of his pages, without being sensible of a melioration of his principles or feelings.

The poetical merits of Thomson, undoubtedly stand most conspicuous in his Seasons, the first long composition, perhaps, of which natural description was made the staple, and certainly the most fertile of grand and beautiful delineations, in great measure deduced from the author's own observation. Its diction is somewhat cumbrous and laboured, but energetic and expressive. Its versification does not denote a practised ear, but is seldom unpleasantly harsh. Upon the whole, no poem has been more, and more deservedly, popular; and it has exerted a powerful influence upon public taste, not only in this country, but throughout Europe. Any addition to his fame has principally arisen from his "Castle of Indolence," an allegorical composition in the manner and stanza of Spenser, and among the imitators of this poet, Thomson may deserve the preference, on account of the application of his fable, and the moral and descriptive beauties by which it is filled up. This piece is entirely free from the stiffness of language perceptible in the author's blank verse, which is also the case with many of his songs, and other rhymed poems.

THE SEASONS.

SPRING, 1728.

Et nunc omnis ager, nunc omnis parturit arbos,
Nunc frondent sylvæ, nunc formosissimus annus.
VIRG.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Inscribed to the Countess of Hertford. The season is described as it affects the various parts of Nature, ascending from the lower to the higher; with digressions arising from the subject. Its influence on inanimate matter, on vegetables, on brute animals, and, last, on man; concluding with a dissuasive from the wild and irregular passion of love, opposed to that of a pure and happy kind.

COME, gentle Spring, ethereal Mildness, come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud,
While music wakes around, veil'd in a shower
Of shadowing roses, on our plains descend.

O Hertford, fitted or to shine in courts
With unaffected grace, or walk the plain
With innocence and meditation join'd
In soft assemblage, listen to my song,
Which thy own Season paints; when Nature all
Is blooming and benevolent, like thee.

And see where surly Winter passes off,
Far to the north, and calls his ruffian blasts:
His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale;
While softer gales succeed, at whose kind touch,
Dissolving snows in livid torrents lost,
The mountains lift their green heads to the sky.

As yet the trembling year is unconfirm'd,
And Winter oft at eve resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale morn, and bids his driving sheets
Deform the day delightless: so that scarce
The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulph'd
To shake the sounding marsh; or from the shore
The plovers when to scatter o'er the heath,
And sing their wild notes to the listening waste.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous Sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Then no more

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold;
But, full of life and vivifying soul, [thin,
Lifts the light clouds sublime, and spreads them
Fleecy and white, o'er all-surrounding heaven.

Forth fly the tepid airs; and unconfin'd,
Unbinding earth, the moving softness strays.
Joyous, th' impatient husbandman perceives
Relenting Nature, and his lusty steers
Drives from their stalls, to where the well-us'd plough

Lies in the furrow, loosen'd from the frost.
There, unrefusing, to the harness'd yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil,
Cheer'd by the simple song and soaring lark.
Meanwhile incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructing clay,
Winds the whole work, and sidelong lays the glebe.

White through the neighbouring field the sower
stalks,

With measur'd step; and liberal throws the grain
Into the faithful bosom of the ground:

The harrow follows harsh, and shuts the scene.

Be gracious, Heaven! for now laborious man
Has done his part. Ye fostering breezes, blow!
Ye softening dews, ye tender showers, descend!
And temper all, thou world-reviving Sun,
Into the perfect year! Nor ye who live
In luxury and ease, in pomp and pride,
Think these lost themes unworthy of your ear:
Such themes as these the rural Maro sung
To wide-imperial Rome, in the full height
Of elegance and taste, by Greece refin'd.
In ancient times, the sacred plough employ'd
The kings, and awful fathers of mankind:
And some, with whom compar'd your insect-tribes
Are but the beings of a summer's day,
Have held the scale of empire, rul'd the storm
Of mighty war; then, with unwearied hand,
Disdaining little delicacies, seiz'd
The plough, and greatly independent liv'd.

Ye generous Britons, venerate the plough;
And o'er your hills, and long withdrawing vales,
Let Autumn spread his treasures to the Sun,
Luxuriant and unbounded: as the Sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns, and from a thousand shores
Wafts all the pomp of life into your ports;
So with superior boon may your rich soil,
Exuberant, Nature's better blessings pour

O'er every land, the naked nations clothe,
And be th' exhaustless granary of a world!

Nor only through the lenient air this change,
Delicious, breathes; the penetrative Sun,
His force deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming Power
At large, to wander o'er the vernal Earth,
In various hues; but chiefly thee, gay Green!
Thou smiling Nature's universal robe!
United light and shade! where the sight dwells
With growing strength, and ever-new delight.

From the moist meadow to the wither'd hill,
Led by the breeze, the vivid verdure runs,
And swells, and deepens, to the cherish'd eye.
The hawthorn whitens: and the juicy groves
Put forth their buds, unfolding by degrees,
Till the whole leafy forest stands display'd,
In full luxuriance to the sighing gales;
Where the deer rustle through the twining brake,
And the birds sing conceal'd. At once array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
By Nature's swift and secret-working hand,
The garden glows, and fills the liberal air
With lavish fragrance; while the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd
Within its crimson folds. Now from the town
Buried in smoke, and sleep, and noisome damps,
Oft let me wander o'er the dewy fields, [drops
Where freshness breathes, and dash the trembling
From the bent bush, as through the verdant maze
Of sweet-brier hedges I pursue my walk;
Or taste the smell of dairy; or ascend
Some eminence, Augusta, in thy plains,
And see the country, far diffus'd around,
One boundless blush, one white-empurpled shower
Of mingled blossoms; where the raptur'd eye
Hurries from joy to joy, and, hid beneath
The fair profusion, yellow Autumn spies.

If, brush'd from Russian wilds, a cutting gale
Rise not, and scatter from his humid wings
The clammy mildew; or, dry-blowing, breathe
Untimely frost; before whose baleful blast
The full-blown Spring, through all her foliage
shrinks,

Joyless and dead, a wide-dejected waste.
For oft, engender'd by the hazy north,
Myriads on myriads, insect armies waft
Keen in the poison'd breeze; and wasteful eat
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core,
Their eager way. A feeble race! yet oft
The sacred sons of vengeance! on whose course
Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year.
To check this plague, the skilful farmer chaff,
And blazing straw, before his orchard burns;
Till, all involv'd in smoke, the latent foe
From every cranny suffocated falls:
Or scatters o'er the blooms the pungent dust
Of pepper, fatal to the frosty tribe:
Or, when th' envenom'd leaf begins to curl,
With sprinkled water drowns them in their nest;
Nor, while they pick them up with busy bill,
The little trooping birds unwisely scares.

Be patient, swains; these cruel-seeming winds
Blow not in vain. Far hence they keep repress'd
Those deepening clouds on clouds, surcharg'd with rain,

That, o'er the vast Atlantic hither borne,
In endless train, would quench the summer-blaze,
And, cheerless, drown the crude unripened year.

The north-east spends his rage; he now

Within his iron cave, th' effusive south
Warms the wide air, and o'er the void of heaven
Breathes the big clouds with vernal showers distent.
At first a dusky wreath they seem to rise,
Scarce staining ether; but by swift degrees,
In heaps on heaps, the doubling vapour sails
Along the loaded sky, and mingled deep
Sits on th' horizon round a settled gloom:
Not such as wintery-storms on mortals shed,
Oppressing life; but lovely, gentle, kind,
And full of every hope, and every joy,
The wish of Nature. Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing woods,
Or rustling turn the many twinkling leaves
Of aspen tall. Th' uncurling floods, diffus'd
In glassy breadth, seem through delusive lapse
Forgetful of their course. 'Tis silence all,
And pleasing expectation. Herds and flocks
Drop the dry sprig, and mute-imploing, eye
The falling verdure. Hush'd in short suspense,
The plummy people streak their wings with oil,
To throw the lucid moisture trickling off;
And wait th' approaching sign to strike, at once,
Into the general choir. Ev'n mountains, vales,
And forests seem, impatient, to demand
The promis'd sweetness. Man superior walks
Amid the glad creation, musing praise,
And looking lively gratitude. At last,
The clouds consign their treasures to the fields;
And, softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow,
In large effusion, o'er the freshen'd world.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard,
By such as wander through the forest walks,
Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves.
But who can hold the shade, while Heaven descends
In universal bounty, shedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap?
Swift fancy fir'd anticipates their growth;
And, while the milky nutriment distils,
Beholds the kindling country colour round.

Thus all day long the full-distended clouds
Indulge their genial stores, and well-shower'd earth
Is deep-enrich'd with vegetable life;
Till, in the western sky, the downward Sun
Looks out, effulgent, from amid the flush
Of broken clouds, gay-shifting to his beam.
The rapid radiance instantaneous strikes
Th' illumin'd mountain, through the forest streams,
Shakes on the floods, and in a yellow mist,
Far smoking o'er th' interminable plain,
In twinkling myriads lights the dewy gems.
Moist, bright, and green, the landscape laughs
around.

Full swell the woods; their very music wakes,
Mix'd in wild concert with the warbling brooks
Increas'd, the distant bleatings of the hills,
And hollow lows responsive from the vales,
Whence blending all the sweeten'd zephyr springs.
Meantime, refracted from yon eastern cloud,
Bestriding Earth, the grand ethereal bow
Shoots up immense; and every hue unfolds,
In fair proportion running from the red,
To where the violet fades into the sky.
Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds
Form, fronting on the Sun, thy showery prism,
And to the sage-instructed eye unfold
The various twine of light, by thee disclos'd
the white mingling maze. Not so the boy,

He wondering views the bright enchantment bend,
 Delightful, o'er the radiant fields, and runs
 To catch the falling glory; but amaz'd
 Beholds th' amusive arch before him fly,
 Then vanish quite away. Still night succeeds,
 A soften'd shade, and saturated earth
 Awaits the morning-beam, to give to light,
 Rais'd through ten thousand different plastic tubes,
 The balmy treasures of the former day.

Then spring the living herbs, profusely wild,
 O'er all the deep-green earth, beyond the power
 Of botanists to number up their tribes:
 Whether he steals along the lonely dale,
 In silent search; or through the forest, rank
 With what the dull incurious weeds account,
 Bursts his blind way; or climbs the mountain-rock,
 Fir'd by the nodding verdure of its brow:
 With such a liberal hand has Nature flung
 Their seeds abroad, blown them about in winds,
 Innumerable mix'd them with the nursing mould,
 The moistening current, and prolific rain.

But who their virtues can declare? who pierce,
 With vision pure, into these secret stores,
 Of health, and life, and joy? The food of man,
 While yet he liv'd in innocence, and told
 A length of golden years; unflesh'd in blood,
 A stranger to the savage arts of life,
 Death, rapine, carnage, surfeit, and disease;
 The lord, and not the tyrant, of the world.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd
 race

Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
 The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam:
 For their light slumbers gently fum'd away;
 And up they rose as vigorous as the Sun,
 Or to the culture of the willing glebe,
 Or to the cheerful tendence of the flock.
 Meantime the song went round; and dance and sport,
 Wisdom and friendly talk, successive, stole
 Their hours away; while in the rosy vale
 Love breath'd his infant sighs, from anguish free,
 And full replete with bliss; save the sweet pain,
 That, inly thrilling, but exalts it more.
 Nor yet injurious act, nor surly deed,
 Was known among those happy sons of Heaven;
 For reason and benevolence were law.
 Harmonious Nature too look'd smiling on.
 Clear shone the skies, cool'd with eternal gales,
 And balmy spirit all. The youthful Sun
 Shot his best rays, and still the gracious clouds
 Propp'd fatness down; as o'er the swelling mead,
 The herds and flocks, commixing, play'd secure.
 This when, emergent from the gloomy wood,
 The glaring lion saw, his horrid heart
 Was meek'd, and he join'd his sullen joy,
 For music held the whole in perfect peace:
 Soft sigh'd the flute; the tender voice was heard,
 Warbling the varied heart; the woodlands round
 Apply'd their quire; and winds and waters flow'd
 In consonance. Such were those prime of days.

But now those white unblemish'd manners,
 whence

The fabling poets took their golden age,
 Are found no more amid these iron times,
 These dregs of life! Now the distemper'd mind
 Has lost that concord of harmonious powers,
 Which forms the soul of happiness; and all
 Is off the poise within: the passions all
 Have burst their bounds; and reason, half extinct,
 Or impotent, or else approving, sees

The foul disorder. Senseless, and deform'd,
 Convulsive anger storms at large; or pale,
 And silent, settles into fell revenge.
 Base envy withers at another's joy,
 And hates that excellence it cannot reach.
 Desponding fear, of feeble fancies full,
 Weak and unmanly, loosens every power.
 Ev'n love itself is bitterness of soul,
 A pensive anguish pining at the heart;
 Or, sunk to sordid interest, feels no more
 That noble wish, that never-cloy'd desire,
 Which, selfish joy disdaining, seeks alone
 To bless the dearer object of its flame.
 Hope sickens with extravagance; and grief,
 Of life impatient, into madness swells;
 Or in dead silence wastes the weeping hours.
 These, and a thousand mixt emotions more,
 From ever-changing views of good and ill,
 Form'd infinitely various, vex the mind
 With endless storm: whence, deeply rankling, grows
 The partial thought, a listless unconcern,
 Cold, and averting from our neighbour's good;
 Then dark disgust, and hatred, winding wiles,
 Coward deceit, and ruffian violence;
 At last, extinct each social feeling, fell
 And joyless inhumanity pervades
 And petrifies the heart. Nature disturb'd
 Is deem'd, vindictive, to have chang'd her course.

Hence, in old dusky time, a deluge came:
 When the deep-cleft disparting orb, that arch'd
 The central waters round, impetuous rush'd,
 With universal burst, into the gulph,
 And o'er the high-pil'd hills of fractur'd earth
 Wide dash'd the waves, in undulation vast;
 Till, from the centre to the streaming clouds,
 A shoreless ocean tumbled round the globe.

The Seasons since have, with severer sway,
 Oppress'd a broken world: the Winter keen
 Shook forth his waste of snows; and Summer shot
 His pestilential heats. Great Spring, before,
 Green'd all the year; and fruits and blossoms
 blush'd,

In social sweetness, on the self-same bough.
 Pure was the temperate air; and even calm
 Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
 Breath'd o'er the blue expanse: for then nor storms
 Were taught to blow, nor hurricanes to rage;
 Sound slept the waters; no sulphureous glooms
 Swell'd in the sky, and sent the lightning forth;
 While sickly damps, and cold autumnal fogs,
 Hung not, relaxing, on the springs of life.
 But now, of turbid elements the sport,
 From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
 And dry to moist, with inward-eating change,
 Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
 Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun.

And yet the wholesome herb neglected dies;
 Though with the pure exhilarating soul
 Of nutriment, and health, and vital powers,
 Beyond the search of art, 'tis copious blest.
 For, with hot ravine fir'd, ensanguin'd man
 Is now become the lion of the plain,
 And worse. The wolf, who from the nightly fold
 Fierce drags the bleating prey, ne'er drunk her milk,
 Nor wore her warming fleece: nor has the steer,
 At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
 E'er plough'd for him. They too are temper'd high,
 With hunger stung and wild necessity,
 Nor lodges pity in their shaggy breast.
 But Man, whom Nature form'd of milder clay,

With every kind emotion in his heart,
 And taught alone to weep ; while from her lap
 She pours ten thousand delicacies, herbs,
 And fruits, as numerous as the drops of rain,
 Or beams that gave them birth : shall he, fair form !
 Who wears sweet smiles, and looks erect on Heaven,
 E'er stoop to mingle with the prowling herd,
 And dip his tongue in gore ? The beast of prey,
 Blood-stain'd, deserves to bleed : but you, ye flocks,
 What have ye done ; ye peaceful people, what,
 To merit death ? you who have given us milk
 In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat
 Against the winter's cold ? And the plain ox,
 That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
 In what has he offended ? he, whose toil,
 Patient and ever ready, clothes the land
 With all the pomp of harvest : shall he bleed,
 And struggling groan beneath the cruel hands
 Ev'n of the clown he feeds ; and that, perhaps,
 To swell the riot of th' autumnal feast,
 Won by his labour ? Thus the feeling heart
 Would tenderly suggest : but 'tis enough,
 In this late age, adventurous, to have touch'd
 Light on the numbers of the Samian sage.
 High Heaven forbids the bold presumptuous strain,
 Whose wisest will has fix'd us in a state
 That must not yet to pure perfection rise.

Now, when the first foul torrent of the brooks,
 Swell'd with the vernal rains, is ebb'd away,
 And, whitening, down their mossy-tinctur'd stream
 Descends the billowy foam : now is the time,
 While yet the dark-brown water aids the guile,
 To tempt the trout. The well-dissembled fly,
 The rod fine-tapering with elastic spring,
 Snatch'd from the hoary steed the floating line,
 And all thy slender wat'ry stores, prepare.
 But let not on thy hook the tortur'd worm,
 Convulsive, twist in agonizing folds ;
 Which, by rapacious hunger swallow'd deep,
 Gives, as you tear it from the bleeding breast
 Of the weak helpless uncomplaining wretch,
 Harsh pain, and horror to the tender hand.

When with his lively ray the potent Sun
 Has pierc'd the streams, and rous'd the finny race,
 Then issuing cheerful, to thy sport repair ;
 Chief should the western breezes curling play,
 And light o'er ether bear the shadowy clouds.
 High to their fount, this day, amid the hills
 And woodlands warbling round, trace up the brooks ;
 The next, pursue their rocky-channell'd maze,
 Down to the river, in whose ample wave
 Their little Naiads love to sport at large.
 Just in the dubious point, where with the pool
 Is mix'd the trembling stream, or where it boils
 Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
 Reverted plays in undulating flow,
 There throw, nice judging, the delusive fly ;
 And as you lead it round in artful curve,
 With eye attentive mark the springing game.
 Straight as above the surface of the flood
 They wanton rise, or urg'd by hunger leap,
 Then fix, with gentle twitch, the barbed hook :
 Some lightly tossing to the grassy bank,
 And to the shelving shore, slow-dragging some,
 With various hand proportion'd to their force.
 If yet too young, and easily deceiv'd,
 A worthless prey scarce bends your pliant rod,
 Him, piteous of his youth, and the short space
 He has enjoy'd the vital light of Heaven,
 Soft disengage, and back into the stream

The speckled captive throw. But should you lure
 From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
 Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
 Behoves you then to ply your finest art.
 Long time he, following cautious, scans the fly ;
 And oft attempts to seize it, but as oft
 The dimpled water speaks his jealous fear.
 At last, while haply o'er the shaded Sun
 Passes a cloud, he desperate takes the death,
 With sullen plunge. At once he darts along,
 Deep-struck, and runs out all the lengthen'd line :
 Then seeks the farthest ooze, the sheltering weed,
 The cavern'd bank, his old secure abode ;
 And flies aloft, and flounces round the pool,
 Indignant of the guile. With yielding hand,
 That feels him still, yet to his furious course
 Gives way, you, now retiring, following now,
 Across the stream, exhaust his idle rage :
 Till floating broad upon his breathless side,
 And to his fate abandon'd, to the shore
 You gaily drag your unresisting prize.

Thus pass the temperate hours : but when the Sun
 Shakes from his noon-day throne the scattering
 clouds,

Ev'n shooting listless languor through the deeps ;
 Then seek the bank where flowering elders crowd,
 Where, scatter'd wild, the lily of the vale
 Its balmy essence breathes, where cowslips hang
 The dewy head, where purple violets lurk,
 With all the lowly children of the shade :
 Or lie reclin'd beneath yon spreading ash,
 Hung o'er the steep ; whence, borne on liquid wing,
 The sounding culver shoots ; or where the hawk,
 High, in the beetling cliff, his aëry builds.
 There let the classic page the fancy lead
 Through rural scenes ; such as the Mantuan swain
 Paints in the matchless harmony of song.
 Or catch thyself the landscape, gliding swift
 Athwart imagination's vivid eye :
 Or by the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
 And lost in lonely musing, in the dream,
 Confus'd, of careless solitude, where mix
 Ten thousand wandering images of things,
 Soothe every gust of passion into peace ;
 All but the swellings of the soften'd heart,
 That waken, not disturb, the tranquil mind.

Behold yon breathing prospect bids the Muse
 Throw all her beauty forth. But who can paint
 Like Nature ? Can imagination boast,
 Amid its gay creation, hues like hers ?
 Or can it mix them with that matchless skill,
 And lose them in each other, as appears
 In every bud that blows ? If fancy then
 Unequal fails beneath the pleasing task,
 Ah, what shall language do ? ah, where find words
 Ting'd with so many colours ; and whose power,
 To life approaching, may perfume my lays
 With that fine oil, those aromatic gales
 That inexhaustive flow continual round ?

Yet, though successful, will the toil delight.
 Come then, ye virgins and ye youths, whose hearts
 Have felt the raptures of refining love !
 And thou, Amanda, come, pride of my song !
 Form'd by the Graces, loveliness itself !
 Come with those downcast eyes, sedate and sweet,
 Those looks demure, that deeply pierce the soul,
 Where, with the light of thoughtful reason mix'd,
 Shines lively fancy and the feeling heart :
 O come ! and while the rosy-footed May
 -hing on, together let us tread

The morning dews, and gather in their prime
Fresh-blooming flowers, to grace thy braided hair,
And thy lov'd bosom that improves their sweets.

See where the winding vale its lavish stores,
Irriguous, spreads. See, how the lily drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing through the grass,
Of growth luxuriant: or the humid bank,
In fair profusion, decks. Long let us walk,
Where the breeze blows from yon extended field
Of blossom'd beans. Arabia cannot boast
A fuller gale of joy, than, liberal, thence [soul.
Breathes through the sense, and takes the ravish'd
Nor is the mead unworthy of thy foot,
Full of fresh verdure, and unnumber'd flowers,
The negligence of Nature, wide, and wild;
Where, undisguis'd by mimic Art, she spreads
Unbounded beauty to the roving eye.
Here their delicious task the fervent bees,
In swarming millions, tend: around, athwart,
Through the soft air, the busy nations fly,
Cling to the bud, and, with inserted tube,
Suck its pure essence, its ethereal soul;
And oft, with bolder wing, they soaring dare
The purple heath, or where the wild thyme grows,
And yellow load them with the luscious spoil.

At length the finish'd garden to the view
Its vistas opens, and its alleys green.
Snatch'd through the verdant maze, the hurried eye
Distracted wanders; now the bowery walk
Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps:
Now meets the bending sky; the river now
Dimpled along, the breezy ruffled lake,
The forest darkening round, the glittering spire,
Th' ethereal mountain, and the distant main.
But why so far excursive? when at hand,
Along these blushing borders, bright with dew,
And in yon mingled wilderness of flowers,
Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
'Throws out the snow-drop, and the crocus first;
The daisy, primrose, violet darkly blue,
And polyanthus of unnumber'd dyes;
The yellow wall-flower, stain'd with iron-brown;
And lavish stock that scents the garden round:
From the soft wing of vernal breezes shed,
Anemonies; auriculas, enrich'd
With shining meal o'er all their velvet leaves;
And full ranunculus of glowing red.
Then comes the tulip-race, where beauty plays
Her idle freaks; from family diffus'd
To family, as flies the father dust,
The varied colours run; and while they break
On the charm'd eye, th' exulting florist marks,
With secret pride, the wonders of his hand.
No gradual bloom is wanting; from the bud,
First-born of Spring, to Summer's musky tribes:
Nor hyacinths, of purest virgin white,
Low-bent, and blushing inward; nor jonquils,
Of potent fragrance; nor Narcissus fair,
As o'er the fabled mountain hanging still;
Nor broad carnations, nor gay-spotted pinks;
Nor, shower'd from every bush, the damask-rose.
Infinite numbers, delicacies, smells,
With hues on hues expression cannot paint,
The breath of Nature and her endless bloom.

Hail, source of Being! Universal Soul
Of Heaven and Earth! essential Presence, hail!
To thee I bend the knee; to thee, my thoughts
Continual climb; who, with a master-hand,
Hast the great whole into perfection touch'd.

By thee the various vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves,
Draw the live ether, and imbibe the dew;
By thee dispos'd into congenial soils,
Stands each attractive plant, and sucks and swells
The juicy tide; a twining mass of tubes.
At thy command the vernal Sun awakes
The torpid sap, detruded to the root
By wintry winds; that now in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable-colour'd scene of things.

As rising from the vegetable world
My theme ascends, with equal wing ascend,
My panting Muse; and hark how loud the woods
Invite you forth in all your gayest trim.
Lend me your song, ye nightingales! oh! pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! while I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of Spring, and touch a theme
Unknown to fame, the passion of the groves.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
Warm through the vital air, and on the heart
Harmonious seizes, the gay troops begin,
In gallant thought to plume the painted wing;
And try again the long-forgotten strain,
At first faint-warbled. But no sooner grows
The soft infusion prevalent and wide,
Than, all alive, at once their joy o'erflows
In music unconfin'd. Up springs the lark,
Shrill-voic'd, and loud, the messenger of morn;
Ere yet the shadows fly, he mounted sings
Amid the dawning clouds, and from their haunts
Calls up the tuneful nations. Every copse
Deep-tangled, tree irregular, and bush
Bending with dewy moisture, o'er the heads
Of the coy quiristers that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony. The thrush
And wood-lark, o'er the kind-contending throng
Superior heard, run through the sweetest length
Of notes; when listening Philomela deigns
To let them joy, and purposes, in thought
Elate, to make her night excel their day.
The black-bird whistles from the thorny brake;
The mellow bulfinch answers from the grove:
Nor are the linnets, o'er the flowering furze
Pour'd out profusely, silent. Join'd to these,
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade
Of new-sprung leaves, their modulations mix
Mellifluous. The jay, the rook, the daw,
And each harsh pipe, discordant heard alone,
Aid the full concert: while the stock-dove breathes
A melancholy murmur through the whole.

'Tis love creates their melody, and all
This waste of music is the voice of love;
That ev'n to birds, and beasts, the tender arts
Of pleasing teaches. Hence the glossy kind
Try every winning way inventive love
Can dictate, and in courtship to their mates
Pour forth their little souls. First, wide around,
With distant awe, in airy rings they rove,
Endeavouring by a thousand tricks to catch
The cunning, conscious, half-averted glance
Of their regardless charmer. Should she seem
Softening the least approbance to bestow,
Their colours burnish, and, by hope inspir'd,
They brisk advance; then, on a sudden struck,
Retire disorder'd; then again approach;
In fond rotation spread the spotted wing,
And shiver every feather with desire.

Connubial leagues agreed, to the deep woods
 They haste away, all as their fancy leads,
 Pleasure, or food, or secret safety prompts;
 That Nature's great command may be obey'd:
 Nor all the sweet sensations they perceive
 Indulg'd in vain. Some to the holly-hedge
 Nestling repair, and to the thicket some;
 Some to the rude protection of the thorn
 Commit their feeble offspring: the cleft tree
 Offers its kind concealment to a few,
 Their food its insects, and its moss their nests.
 Others apart, far in the grassy dale,
 Or roughening waste, their humble texture weave.
 But most in woodland solitudes delight,
 In unfrequented glooms, or shaggy banks,
 Steep, and divided by a babbling brook,
 Whose murmurs soothe them all the live-long day,
 When by kind duty fix'd. Among the roots
 Of hazel, pendent o'er the plaintive stream,
 They frame the first foundation of their domes;
 Dry sprigs of trees, in artful fabric laid,
 And bound with clay together. Now 'tis nought
 But restless hurry through the busy air,
 Beat by unnumber'd wings. The swallow sweeps
 The slimy pool, to build his hanging house
 Intent. And often, from the careless back
 Of herds and flocks a thousand tugging bills
 Pluck hair and wool; and oft, when unobserv'd,
 Steal from the barn a straw: till soft and warm,
 Clean, and complete, their habitation grows.

As thus the patient dam assiduous sits,
 Not to be tempted from her tender task,
 Or by sharp hunger, or by smooth delight,
 Though the whole loosen'd Spring around her blows,
 Her sympathizing lover takes his stand
 High on th' opponent bank, and ceaseless sings
 The tedious time away; or else supplies
 Her place a moment, while she sudden flits
 To pick the scanty meal. Th' appointed time
 With pious toil fulfill'd, the callow young,
 Warm'd and expanded into perfect life,
 Their brittle bondage break, and come to light,
 A helpless family, demanding food
 With constant clamour: O what passions then,
 What melting sentiments of kindly care,
 On the new parents seize! Away they fly
 Affectionate, and undesiring bear
 The most delicious morsel to their young;
 Which equally distributed, again
 The search begins. Ev'n so a gentle pair,
 By fortune sunk, but form'd of generous mould,
 And charm'd with cares beyond the vulgar breast,
 In some lone cot amid the distant woods,
 Sustain'd alone by providential Heaven,
 Oft as they weeping eye their infant train,
 Check their own appetites, and give them all.
 Nor toil alone they scorn; exalting love,
 By the great Father of the Spring inspir'd,
 Gives instant courage to the fearful race,
 And to the simple, art. With stealthy wing,
 Should some rude foot their woody haunts molest,
 Amid a neighbouring bush they silent drop,
 And whirling thence, as if alarm'd, deceive
 Th' unfeeling school-boy. Hence, around the head
 Of wandering swain, the white-wing'd plover wheels
 Her sounding flight, and then directly on
 In long excursion skims the level lawn,
 To tempt him from her nest. The wild-duck, hence,
 O'er the rough moss, and o'er the trackless waste

The heath-hen flutters, pious fraud! to lead
 The hot pursuing spaniel far astray.

Be not the Muse asham'd, here to bemoan
 Her brothers of the grove, by tyrant man
 Inhuman caught, and in the narrow cage
 From liberty confin'd, and boundless air.
 Dull are the pretty slaves, their plumage dull,
 Ragged, and all its brightening lustre lost;
 Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
 Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.
 O then, ye friends of love and love-taught song,
 Spare the soft tribes, this barbarous art forbear;
 If on your bosom innocence can win,
 Music engage, or piety persuade.

But let not chief the nightingale lament
 Her ruin'd care, too delicately fram'd
 To brook the harsh confinement of the cage.
 Oft when, returning with her loaded bill,
 Th' astonish'd mother finds a vacant nest,
 By the hard hand of unrelenting clown
 Robb'd, to the ground the vain provision falls;
 Her pinions ruffle, and, low dropping, scarce
 Can bear the mourner to the poplar shade;
 Where, all abandon'd to despair, she sings
 Her sorrows through the night; and, on the bough
 Sole-sitting, still at every dying fall
 Takes up again her lamentable strain
 Of winding woe; till, wide around, the woods
 Sigh to her song, and with her wail resound.

But now the feather'd youth their former bounds,
 Ardent, disdain; and, weighing oft their wings,
 Demand the free possession of the sky:
 This one glad office more, and then dissolves
 Parental love at once, now needless grown.
 Unlavish'd Wisdom never works in vain.
 'Tis on some evening, sunny, grateful, mild,
 When nought but balm is breathing through the woods,

With yellow lustre bright, that the new tribes
 Visit the spacious heavens, and look abroad
 On Nature's common far as they can see,
 Or wing, their range and pasture. O'er the boughs
 Dancing about, still at the giddy verge
 Their resolution fails; their pinions still,
 In loose libration stretch'd, to trust the void
 Trembling refuse: till down before them fly
 The parent-guides, and chide, exhort, command,
 Or push them off. The surging air receives
 Its plummy burden; and their self-taught wings
 Winnow the waving element. On ground
 Alighted, bolder up again they lead,
 Farther and farther on, the lengthening flight;
 Till, vanish'd every fear, and every power
 Rous'd into life and action, light in air
 Th' acquitted parents see their soaring race,
 And once rejoicing never know them more.

High from the summit of a craggy cliff,
 Hung o'er the deep, such as amazing frowns
 On utmost Kilda's * shore, whose lonely race
 Resign the setting sun to Indian worlds,
 The royal eagle draws his vigorous young,
 Strong-pounc'd, and ardent with paternal fire.
 Now fit to raise a kingdom of their own,
 He drives them from his fort, the towering seat,
 For ages of his empire; which, in peace,
 Unstain'd he holds, while many a league to sea
 He wings his course, and preys in distant isles.

* The farthest of the western islands of Scotland.

Should I my steps turn to the rural seat,
Whose lofty elms, and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws amusive; there, well pleas'd,
I might the various polity survey
Of the mixt household kind. The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock;
Whose breast with ardour flames, as on he walks
Graceful, and crows defiance. In the pond,
The finely-chequer'd duck, before her train,
Rows garrulous. The stately sailing swan
Gives out his snowy plumage to the gale;
And, arching proud his neck, with oary feet
Bears forward fierce, and guards his osier-isle,
Protective of his young. The turkey nigh,
Loud threatening reddens; while the peacock
spreads

His every-colour'd glory to the Sun,
And swims in radiant majesty along.
O'er the whole homely scene, the cooing dove
Flies thick in amorous chase, and wanton rolls
The glancing eye, and turns the changeful neck.

While thus the gentle tenants of the shade
Indulge their purer loves, the rougher world
Of brutes, below, rush furious into flame,
And fierce desire. Through all his lusty veins
The bull, deep-scorch'd, the raging passion feels.
Of pasture sick, and negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom,
While o'er his ample side the rambling sprays
Luxuriant shoot; or through the mazy wood
Dejected wanders, nor th' enticing bud
Crops, though it presses on his careless sense.
And oft, in jealous maddening fancy wrapt,
He seeks the fight; and, idly butting, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk.
Him should he meet, the bellowing war begins:
Their eyes flash fury; to the hollow'd earth,
Whence the sand flies, they mutter bloody deeds,
And, groaning deep, th' impetuous battle mix:
While the fair heifer, balmy breathing, near,
Stands kindling up their rage. The trembling steed,
With this hot impulse seiz'd in every nerve,
Nor heeds the rein, nor hears the sounding thong;
Blows are not felt; but, tossing high his head,
And by the well-known joy to distant plains
Attracted strong, all wild he bursts away;
O'er rocks, and woods, and craggy mountains flies:
And, neighing, on th' aerial summit takes
Th' exciting gale; then, steep-descending, cleaves
The headlong torrents foaming down the hills,
Ev'n where the madness of the straiten'd stream
Turns in black eddies round; such is the force
With which his frantic heart and sinews swell.

Nor undelighted by the boundless Spring
Are the broad monsters of the foaming deep:
From the deep ooze and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flounce and tumble in unwieldy joy.
Dire were the strain, and dissonant, to sing
The cruel raptures of the savage kind:
How by this flame their native wrath sublim'd,
They roam, amid the fury of their heart,
The far-resounding waste in fiercer bands,
And growl their horrid loves. But this the theme
I sing, enraptur'd, to the British Fair,
Forbids, and leads me to the mountain-brow,
Where sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling, healthful, the descending Sun.

Around him feeds his many-bleating flock,
Of various cadence; and his sportive lambs,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee
Their frolics play. And now the sprightly race
Invites them forth; when swift, the signal given,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill; the rampart once
Of iron war, in ancient barbarous times,
When disunited Britain ever bled,
Lost in eternal broil: ere yet she grew
To this deep-laid indissoluble state, [heads;
Where Wealth and Commerce lift their golden
And o'er our labours, Liberty and Law,
Impartial, watch; the wonder of a world!

What is this mighty Breath, ye sages, say,
That, in a powerful language, felt, not heard,
Instructs the fowls of heaven; and through their breast

These arts of love diffuses? What, but God?
Inspiring God! who, boundless Spirit all,
And unremitting Energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole.
He ceaseless works alone; and yet alone
Seems not to work: with such perfection fram'd
Is this complex stupendous scheme of things.
But, though conceal'd, to every purer eye
Th' informing Author in his works appears:
Chief, lovely Spring, in thee, and thy soft scenes,
The smiling God is seen; while water, earth,
And air, attest his bounty; which exalts
The brute creation to this finer thought,
And annual melts their undesigning hearts
Profusely thus in tenderness and joy.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,
And sing th' infusive force of Spring on man;
When heaven and earth, as if contending, vie
To raise his being, and serene his soul.
Can he forbear to join the general smile
Of Nature? Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Hence! from the bounteous walks
Of flowing Spring, ye sordid sons of Earth,
Hard, and unfeeling of another's woe!
Or only lavish to yourselves; away!
But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative Bounty burns
With warmest beam; and on your open front,
And liberal eye, sits, from his dark retreat
Inviting modest Want. Nor, till invoc'd,
Can restless goodness wait: your active search
Leaves no cold wintry corner unexplor'd;
Like silent-working Heaven, surprizing oft
The lonely heart with unexpected good.
For you, the roving spirit of the wind
Blows Spring abroad; for you, the teeming clouds
Descend in gladsome plenty o'er the world;
And the Sun sheds his kindest rays for you,
Ye flower of human race! In these green days,
Reviving Sickness lifts her languid head:
Life flows afresh; and young-ey'd Health exalts
The whole creation round. Contentment walks
The sunny glade, and feels an inward bliss
Spring o'er his mind, beyond the power of kings
To purchase. Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation still.
By swift degrees the love of Nature works,
And warms the bosom; till at last sublim'd
To rapture, and enthusiastic heat,
We feel the present Deity, and taste
The joy of God to see a happy world!

These are the sacred feelings of thy heart,
Thy heart inform'd by reason's purer ray,
O Lyttleton, the friend! thy passions thus
And meditations vary, as at large, [stray'st ;
Courting the Muse, through Hagley Park thou
Thy British Temple! There along the dale,
With woods o'er-hung and shagg'd with mossy rocks,

Whence on each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white-dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vista through the trees,
You silent steal; or sit beneath the shade
Of solemn oaks, that tuft the swelling mounts
Thrown graceful round by Nature's careless hand,
And pensive listen to the various voice
Of rural peace: the herds, the flocks, the birds,
The hollow-whispering breeze, the plaint of rills,
That, purling down amid the twisted roots
Which creep around, their dewy murmurs shake
On the sooth'd ear. From these abstracted oft,
You wander through the philosophic world;
Where in bright train continual wonders rise,
Or to the curious or the pious eye.
And oft, conducted by historic truth,
You tread the long extent of backward time:
Planning, with warm benevolence of mind,
And honest zeal, unwarp'd by party-rage,
Britannia's weal; how from the venal gulph
To raise her virtue, and her arts revive.

Or, turning thence thy view, these graver thoughts
The Muses charm: while, with sure taste refin'd,
You draw th' inspiring breath of ancient song;
Till nobly rises, emulous, thy own.
Perhaps thy lov'd Lucinda shares thy walk,
With soul to thine attun'd. Then Nature all
Wears to the lover's eye a look of love;
And all the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passions, sinks away.
The tender heart is animated peace;
And as it pours its copious treasures forth,
In varied converse, softening every theme,
You, frequent pausing, turn, and from her eyes,
Where meekness'd sense, and amiable grace,
And lively sweetness dwell, enraptur'd, drink
That nameless spirit of ethereal joy,
Unutterable happiness! which love,
Alone, bestows, and on a favour'd few.
Meantime you gain the height, from whose fair brow
The bursting prospect spreads immense around:
And snatch'd o'er hill and dale, and wood and lawn,
And verdant field, and darkening heath between,
And villages embosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd
Of household smoke, your eye excursive roams:
Wide-stretching from the hall, in whose kind haunt
The hospitable genius lingers still,
To where the broken landscape, by degrees,
Ascending, roughens into rigid hills;
O'er which the Cambrian mountains, like far clouds
That skirt the blue horizon, dusky rise.

Flush'd by the spirit of the genial year,
Now from the virgin's cheek a fresher bloom
Shoots, less and less, the live carnation round;
Her lips blush deeper sweets; she breathes of youth;
The shining moisture swells into her eyes,
In brighter flow; her wishing bosom heaves
With palpitations wild; kind tumults seize
Her veins, and all her yielding soul is love.
From the keen gaze her lover turns away,
Full of the dear ecstatic power, and sick

With sighing languishment. Ah then, ye fair!
Be greatly cautious of your sliding hearts:
Dare not th' infectious sigh; the pleading look,
Downcast, and low, in meek submission drest,
But full of guile. Let not the fervent tongue,
Prompt to deceive, with adulation smooth,
Gain on your purpos'd will. Nor in the bower,
Where woodbines flaunt, and roses shed a couch,
While Evening draws her crimson curtains round,
Trust your soft minutes with betraying man.

And let th' aspiring youth beware of love,
Of the smooth glance beware; for 'tis too late,
When on his heart the torrent-softness pours.
Then wisdom prostrate lies, and fading fame
Dissolves in air away: while the fond soul,
Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form; the kindling grace;
Th' enticing smile; the modest-seeming eye,
Beneath whose beauteous beams, belying heaven,
Lurk searchless cunning, cruelty, and death:
And still false-warbling in his cheated ear,
Her syren voice, enchanting, draws him on
To guileful shores, and meads of fatal joy.

Ev'n present, in the very lap of love
Inglorious laid; while music flows around,
Perfumes, and oils, and wine, and wanton hours;
Amid the roses fierce Repentance rears
Her snaky crest: a quick returning pang [still,
Shoots through the conscious heart, where honour
And great design, against the oppressive load
Of luxury, by fits, impatient heave.

But absent, what fantastic woes, arous'd,
Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life?
Neglected fortune flies; and sliding swift,
Prone into ruin, fall his scorn'd affairs.
'Tis nought but gloom around: the darken'd Sun
Loses his light. The rosy-bosom'd Spring
To weeping fancy pines; and yon bright arch,
Contracted, bends into a dusky vault.
All Nature fades extinct; and she alone
Heard, felt, and seen, possesses every thought,
Fills every sense, and pants in every vein.
Books are but formal dulness, tedious friends;
And sad amid the social band he sits,
Lonely, and unattentive. From his tongue
Th' unfinish'd period falls: while, borne away
On swelling thought, his wafted spirit flies
To the vain bosom of his distant fair;
And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
And love-dejected eyes. Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trance, and restless runs
To glimmering shades, and sympathetic glooms;
Where the dun umbrage o'er the falling stream,
Romantic, hangs; there through the pensive dusk
Strays, in heart-thrilling meditation lost;
Indulging all to love: or on the bank
Thrown, amid drooping lilies, swells the breeze
With sighs unceasing, and the brook with tears.
Thus in soft anguish he consumes the day,
Nor quits his deep retirement, till the Moon
Peeps through the chambers of the fleecy east,
Enlighten'd by degrees, and in her train
Leads on the gentle hours; then forth he walks,
Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul, and wooes the bird of eve
To mingle woes with his: or while the world
And all the sons of care lie hush'd in sleep,
Associates with the midnight shadows drear;

And, sighing to the lonely taper, pours
 His idly-tortur'd heart into the page,
 Meant for the moving messenger of love ;
 Where rapture burns on rapture, every line
 With rising frenzy fir'd. But if on bed
 Delirious flung, sleep from his pillow flies,
 All night he tosses, nor the balmy power
 In any posture finds ; till the grey morn
 Lifts her pale lustre on the paler wretch,
 Exanimate by love : and then perhaps
 Exhausted nature sinks awhile to rest,
 Still interrupted by distracted dreams,
 That o'er the sick imagination rise,
 And in black colours paint the mimic scene.
 Oft with th' enchantress of his soul he talks ;
 Sometimes in crowds distress'd ; or if retir'd
 To secret winding flower-enwoven bowers,
 Far from the dull impertinence of man,
 Just as he, credulous, his endless cares
 Begins to lose in blind oblivious love,
 Snatch'd from her yielded hand, he knows not how,
 Through forests huge, and long untravell'd heaths
 With desolation brown, he wanders waste,
 In night and tempest wrapt ; or shrinks aghast,
 Back, from the bending precipice ; or wades
 The turbid stream below, and strives to reach
 The farther shore ; where succourless, and sad,
 She with extended arms his aid implores ;
 But strives in vain : borne by th' outrageous flood
 To distance down, he rides the ridgy wave,
 Or whelm'd beneath the boiling eddy sinks.

These are the charming agonies of love,
 Whose misery delights. But through the heart
 Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
 'Tis then delightful misery no more,
 But agony unmix'd, incessant gall,
 Corroding every thought, and blasting all
 Love's paradise. Ye fairy prospects, then,
 Ye beds of roses, and ye bowers of joy,
 Farewell ! Ye gleamings of departed peace,
 Shine out your last ! The yellow-tinging plague
 Internal vision taints, and in a night
 Of livid gloom imagination wraps.
 Ah, then ! instead of love-enliven'd cheeks,
 Of sunny features, and of ardent eyes,
 With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed,
 Suffus'd and glaring with untender fire ;
 A clouded aspect, and a burning cheek,
 Where the whole poison'd soul, malignant, sits,
 And frightens love away. Ten thousand fears
 Invented wild, ten thousand frantic views
 Of horrid rivals, hanging on the charms
 For which he melts in fondness, eat him up
 With fervent anguish, and consuming rage.
 In vain reproaches lend their idle aid,
 Deceitful pride, and resolution frail,
 Giving false peace a moment. Fancy pours,
 Afresh, her beauties on his busy thought,
 Her first endearments twining round the soul,
 With all the witchcraft of ensnaring love.
 Straight the fierce storm involves his mind anew,
 Flames through the nerves, and boils along the veins ;
 While anxious doubt distracts the tortur'd heart :
 For ev'n the sad assurance of his fears
 Were ease to what he feels. Thus the warm youth,
 Whom love deludes into his thorny wilds,
 Through flowery-tempting paths, or leads a life
 Of fever'd rapture, or of cruel care ;
 His brightest flames extinguish'd all, and all
 His lively moments running down to waste.

But happy they ! the happiest of their kind !
 Whom gentler stars unite, and in one fate
 Their hearts, their fortunes, and their beings blend.
 'Tis not the coarser tie of human laws,
 Unnatural oft, and foreign to the mind,
 That binds their peace, but harmony itself,
 Attuning all their passions into love ;
 Where friendship full exerts her softest power,
 Perfect esteem, enliven'd by desire
 Ineffable, and sympathy of soul ;
 Thought meeting thought, and will preventing will,
 With boundless confidence : for nought but love
 Can answer love, and render bliss secure.
 Let him, ungenerous, who, alone intent
 To bless himself, from sordid parents buys
 The loathing virgin, in eternal care,
 Well merited, consume his nights and days :
 Let barbarous nations, whose inhuman love
 Is wild desire, fierce as the suns they feel ;
 Let eastern tyrants, from the light of Heaven
 Seclude their bosom-slaves, meanly possess'd
 Of a mere, lifeless, violated form :
 While those whom love cements in holy faith,
 And equal transport, free as Nature live,
 Disdaining fear. What is the world to them,
 Its pomp, its pleasure, and its nonsense all !
 Who in each other clasp whatever fair
 High fancy forms, and lavish hearts can wish ;
 Something than beauty dearer, should they look
 Or on the mind, or mind-illumin'd face ;
 Truth, goodness, honour, harmony, and love,
 The richest bounty of indulgent Heaven.
 Meantime a smiling offspring rises round,
 And mingles both their graces. By degrees,
 The human blossom blows ; and every day,
 Soft as it rolls along, shows some new charm,
 The father's lustre, and the mother's bloom.
 Then infant reason grows apace, and calls
 For the kind hand of an assiduous care.
 Delightful task ! to rear the tender thought,
 To teach the young idea how to shoot,
 To pour the fresh instruction o'er the mind,
 To breathe th' enlivening spirit and to fix
 The generous purpose in the glowing breast.
 Oh, speak the joy ! ye whom the sudden tear
 Surprises often, while you look around,
 And nothing strikes your eye but sights of bliss,
 All various nature pressing on the heart :
 An elegant sufficiency, content,
 Retirement, rural quiet, friendship, books,
 Ease and alternate labour, useful life,
 Progressive virtue, and approving Heaven.
 These are the matchless joys of virtuous love ;
 And thus their moments fly. The seasons thus,
 As ceaseless round a jarring world they roll,
 Still find them happy ; and consenting Spring
 Sheds her own rosy garland on their heads :
 Till evening comes at last, serene and mild ;
 When, after the long vernal day of life,
 Enamour'd more, as more remembrance swells
 With many a proof of recollected love,
 Together down they sink in social sleep ;
 Together freed, their gentle spirits fly
 To scenes where love and bliss immortal reign.

SUMMER, 1727.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Invocation. Address to Mr. Doddington. An introductory reflection on the motion of the heavenly bodies; whence the succession of the Seasons. As the face of Nature in this season is almost uniform, the progress of the poem is a description of a summer's day. The dawn. Sun-rising. Hymn to the Sun. Forenoon. Summer insects described. Hay-making. Sheep-shearing. Noon-day. A woodland retreat. Groupe of herds and flocks. A solemn grove: how it affects a contemplative mind. A cataract, and rude scene. View of Summer in the torrid zone. Storm of thunder and lightning. A tale. The storm over, a serene afternoon. Bathing. Hour of walking. Transition to the prospect of a rich well-cultivated country; which introduces a panegyric on Great Britain. Sun-set. Evening. Night. Summer meteors. A comet. The whole concluding with the praise of philosophy.

From brightening fields of ether fair disclos'd,
Child of the Sun, refulgent Summer comes,
In pride of youth, and felt through Nature's depth:
He comes attended by the sultry hours,
And ever-fanning breezes, on his way;
While from his ardent look, the turning Spring
Averts her blushful face; and earth and skies,
All smiling, to his hot dominion leaves.

Hence, let me haste into the mid-wood shade,
Where scarce a sun-beam wanders through the
• gloom;

And on the dark green grass, beside the brink
Of haunted stream, that by the roots of oak
Rolls o'er the rocky channel, lie at large,
And sing the glories of the circling year.

Come, Inspiration! from thy hermit seat,
By mortal seldom found: may fancy dare,
From thy fix'd serious eye, and raptur'd glance
Shot on surrounding Heaven, to steal one look
Creative of the poet, every power
Exalting to an ecstasy of soul.

And thou, my youthful Muse's early friend,
In whom the human graces all unite:
Pure light of mind, and tenderness of heart;
Genius, and wisdom; the gay social sense,
By decency chastis'd; goodness and wit,
In seldom-meeting harmony combin'd;
Unblemish'd honour, and an active zeal
For Britain's glory, liberty, and man:
O Doddington! attend my rural song,
Stoop to my theme, inspirit every line,
And teach me to deserve thy just applause.

With what an awful world-revolving power
Were first th' unwieldy planets lanch'd along
Th' illimitable void! Thus to remain,
Amid the flux of many thousand years,
That oft has swept the toiling race of men,
And all their labour'd monuments away.
Firm, unremitting, matchless, in their course;
To the kind-temper'd change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever stealing round,
Minutely faithful: such th' all-perfect Hand!
That pois'd, impels, and rules the steady whole.

When now no more th' alternate Twins are fir'd,
And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night;
And soon, observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint-gleaming in the dappled east:
Till far o'er ether spreads the widening glow;
And, from before the lustre of her face,
White break the clouds away. With quicken'd step,
Brown night retires: young day pours in apace,
And opens all the lawny prospect wide.
The dripping rock, the mountain's misty top,
Swell on the sight, and brighten with the dawn.
Blue, through the dusk, the smoking currents
shine;

And from the bladed field the fearful hare
Limps, awkward; while along the forest-glade
The wild-deer trip, and often turning gaze
At early passenger. Music awakes
The native voice of undissembled joy;
And thick around the woodland hymns arise.
Rous'd by the cock, the soon-clad shepherd leaves
His mossy cottage, where with Peace he dwells;
And from the crowded fold, in order, drives
His flock to taste the verdure of the morn.

Falsely luxurious, will not man awake;
And, springing from the bed of sloth, enjoy
The cool, the fragrant, and the silent hour,
To meditation due and sacred song?
For is there aught in sleep can charm the wise?
To lie in dead oblivion, losing half
The fleeting moments of too short a life;
Total extinction of the enlighten'd soul!
Or else to feverish vanity alive,
Wilder'd, and tossing through distemper'd dreams?
Who would in such a gloomy state remain
Longer than nature craves; when every Muse
And every blooming pleasure wait without,
To bless the wildly devious morning walk?

But yonder comes the powerful king of day,
Rejoicing in the east. The lessening cloud,
The kindling azure, and the mountain's brow
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach
Betoken glad. Lo! now, apparent all,
Aslant the dew-bright Earth, and colour'd air,
He looks in boundless majesty abroad;
And sheds the shining day, that burnish'd plays
On rocks, and hills, and towers, and wandering streams,

High gleaming from afar. Prime cheerer Light!
Of all material beings first, and best!
Efflux divine! Nature's resplendent robe!
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In unessential gloom; and thou, O Sun!
Soul of surrounding worlds! in whom best seen
Shines out thy Maker! may I sing of thee?

'Tis by thy secret, strong, attractive force,
As with a chain indissoluble bound,
Thy system rolls entire: from the far bourne
Of utmost Saturn, wheeling wide his round
Of thirty years; to Mercury, whose disk
Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence of thy blaze.

Informer of the planetary train!
Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous
orbs

Were brute unlovely mass, inert and dead,
And not, as now, the green abodes of life!
How many forms of being wait on thee!
Inhaling spirit; from th' unfetter'd mind,

By thee sublim'd, down to the daily race,
The mixing myriads of thy setting beam.

The vegetable world is also thine,
Parent of Seasons ! who the pomp precede
That waits thy throne, as through thy vast domain,
Annual, along the bright ecliptic road,
In world-rejoicing state, it moves sublime.
Meantime th' expecting nations, circled gay
With all the various tribes of foodful earth,
Implore thy bounty, or send grateful up
A common hymn : while, round thy beaming car,
High-seen, the Seasons lead, in sprightly dance
Harmonious knit, the rosy-finger'd Hours,
The Zephyrs floating loose, the timely Rains,
Of bloom ethereal the light-footed Dews,
And soften'd into joy the surly storms.
These, in successive turn, with lavish hand,
Shower every beauty, every fragrance shower,
Herbs, flowers, and fruits ; till kindling at thy touch,
From land to land is flush'd the vernal year.

Nor to the surface of enliven'd Earth,
Graceful with hills and dales, and leafy woods,
Her liberal tresses, is thy force confin'd :
But to the bowell'd cavern darting deep,
The mineral kinds confess thy mighty power.
Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines ;
Hence Labour draws his tools ; hence burnish'd War
Gleams on the day ; the nobler works of Peace
Hence bless mankind, and generous Commerce binds

The round of nations in a golden chain.

Th' unfruitful rock itself, impregn'd by thee,
In dark retirement forms the lucid stone.
The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact ; that, polish'd bright,
And all its native lustre let abroad,
Dares, as it sparkles on the fair-one's breast,
With vain ambition emulate her eyes.
At thee the ruby lights its deepening glow,
And with a waving radiance inward flames.
From thee the sapphire, solid ether, takes
Its hue cerulean ; and, of evening tinct,
The purple-streaming amethyst is thine.
With thy own smile the yellow topaz burns,
Nor deeper verdure dyes the robe of Spring,
When first she gives it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald shows. But, all combin'd,
Thick through the whitening opal play thy beams ;
Or, flying several from its surface, form
A trembling variance of revolving hues,
As the site varies in the gazer's hand.

The very dead creation, from thy touch,
Assumes a mimic life. By thee refin'd,
In brighter mazes the relucient stream
Plays o'er the mead. The precipice abrupt,
Projecting horror on the blacken'd flood,
Softens at thy return. The desert joys
Wildly, through all his melancholy bounds.
Rude ruins glitter ; and the briny deep,
Seen from some pointed promontory's top,
Far to the blue horizon's utmost verge,
Restless, reflects a floating gleam. But this,
And all the much-transported Muse can sing,
Are to thy beauty, dignity, and use,
Unequal far ; great delegated source
Of light, and life, and grace, and joy below !

How shall I then attempt to sing of Him !
Who, Light himself, in uncreated light
Invested deep, dwells awefully retir'd
From mortal eye, or angel's purer ken ;

Whose single smile has, from the first of time,
Fill'd o'erflowing, all those lamps of Heaven,
That beam for ever through the boundless sky :
But, should he hide his face, th' astonish'd Sun,
And all the extinguish'd stars, would loosening reel
Wide from their spheres, and Chaos come again.

And yet was every faltering tongue of man,
Almighty Father ! silent in thy praise,
Thy works themselves would raise a general voice,
Ev'n in the depth of solitary woods
By human foot untrod ; proclaim thy power,
And to the quire celestial thee resound,
Th' eternal cause, support, and end of all !

To me be Nature's volume broad display'd ;
And to peruse its all-instructing page,
Or, haply catching inspiration thence,
Some easy passage, raptur'd to translate ;
My sole delight, as through the falling glooms
Pensive I stray, or with the rising dawn
On fancy's eagle-wing excursive soar.

Now flaming up the Heavens, the potent Sun
Melts into limpid air the high-rai'd clouds,
And morning fogs that hover'd round the hills
In party-colour'd bands ; till wide unveil'd
The face of Nature shines, from where Earth seems,
Far stretch'd around, to meet the bending sphere.

Half in a blush of clustering roses lost,
Dew-dropping Coolness to the shade retires ;
There, on the verdant turf, or flowery bed,
By gelid founts and careless rills to muse ;
While tyrant Heat, disspreading through the sky,
With rapid sway, his burning influence darts
On man, and beast, and herb, and tepid stream.

Who can unpitying see the flowery race,
Shed by the morn, their new-flush'd bloom resign,
Before the parching beam ? So fade the fair,
When fevers revel through their azure veins.
But one, the lofty follower of the Sun,
Sad when he sits, shuts up her yellow leaves,
Drooping all night ; and, when he warm returns,
Points her enamour'd bosom to his ray.

Home, from his morning task, the swain retreats ;
His flock before him stepping to the fold :
While the full-udder'd mother lows around
The cheerful cottage, then expecting food,
The food of innocence and health ! The daw,
The rook and magpie, to the grey-grown oaks
That the calm village in their verdant arms,
Sheltering, embrace, direct their lazy flight ;
Where on the mingling boughs they sit embower'd.
All the hot noon, till cooler hours arise.
Faint, underneath, the household fowls convene ;
And, in a corner of the buzzing shade,
The house-dog, with the vacant greyhound, lies,
Out-stretch'd, and sleepy. In his slumbers, one
Attacks the nightly thief, and one exults
O'er hill and dale ; till, waken'd by the wasp,
They starting snap. Nor shall the Muse disdain
To let the little noisy summer-race
Live in her lay, and flutter through her song :
Not mean, though simple ; to the Sun ally'd,
From him they draw their animating fire.

Wak'd by his warmer ray, the reptile young
Come wing'd abroad ; by the light air upborn,
Lighter, and full of soul. From every chink,
And secret corner, where they slept away
The wintry storms ; or rising from their tombs,
To higher life ; by myriads, forth at once,
Swarming they pour ; of all the vary'd hues
Their beauty-beaming parent can disclose.

Ten thousand forms ! ten thousand different tribes !
 People the blaze. To sunny waters some
 By fatal instinct fly ; where on the pool
 They, sportive, wheel ; or, sailing down the stream,
 Are snatch'd immediate by the quick-ey'd trout,
 Or darting salmon. Through the green-wood glade
 Some love to stray ; there lodg'd, amus'd and fed,
 In the fresh leaf. Luxurious, others make
 The meads their choice, and visit every flower,
 And every latent herb : for the sweet task,
 To propagate their kinds, and where to wrap,
 In what soft beds, their young yet undisclos'd,
 Employs their tender care. Some to the house,
 The fold, and dairy, hungry, bend their flight ;
 Sip round the pail, or taste the curdling cheese :
 Oft, inadvertent, from the milky stream
 They meet their fate ; or, weltering in the bowl,
 With powerless wings around them wrapt, expire.

But chief to heedless flies the window proves
 A constant death ; where, gloomily retir'd,
 The villain spider lives, cunning, and fierce,
 Mixture abhorr'd ! Amid a mangled heap
 Of carcasses, in eager watch he sits,
 O'erlooking all his waving snares around.
 Near the dire cell the dreadless wanderer oft
 Passes, as oft the ruffian shows his front ;
 The prey at last ensnar'd, he dreadful darts,
 With rapid glide, along the leaning line ;
 And, fixing in the wretch his cruel fangs,
 Strikes backward grimly pleas'd : the fluttering wing
 And shriller sound declare extreme distress,
 And ask the helping hospitable hand.

Resounds the living surface of the ground :
 Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
 To him who muses through the woods at noon :
 Or drowsy shepherd, as he lies reclin'd,
 With half-shut eyes, beneath the floating shade
 Of willows grey, close-crowding o'er the brook.

Gradual, from these what numerous kinds descend,
 Evading ev'n the microscopic eye !
 Full Nature swarms with life ; one wondrous mass
 Of animals, or atoms organiz'd,
 Waiting the vital Breath, when Parent-Heaven
 Shall bid his spirit blow. The hoary fen,
 In putrid steams, emits the living cloud
 Of pestilence. Through subterranean cells,
 Where searching sun-beams scarce can find a way,
 Earth animated heaves. The flowery leaf
 Wants not its soft inhabitants. Secure,
 Within its winding citadel, the stone
 Holds multitudes. But chief the forest-boughs,
 That dance unnumber'd to the playful breeze,
 The downy orchard, and the melting pulp
 Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed
 Of evanescent insects. Where the pool
 Stands mantled o'er with green, invisible,
 Amid the floating verdure millions stray.
 Each liquid too, whether it pierces, soothes,
 Inflames, refreshes, or exalts the taste,
 With various forms abounds. Nor is the stream
 Of purest crystal, nor the lucid air,
 Though one transparent vacancy it seems,
 Void of their unseen people. These, conceal'd
 By the kind art of forming Heaven, escape
 The grosser eye of man : for, if the worlds
 In worlds enclos'd should on his senses burst,
 From cates ambrosial, and the nectar'd bowl,
 He would abhorrent turn ; and in dead night,
 When silence sleeps o'er all, be stunn'd with noise.

Let no presuming impious railer tax
 Creative Wisdom, as if aught was form'd
 In vain, or not for admirable ends.
 Shall little haughty Ignorance pronounce
 His works unwise, of which the smallest part
 Exceeds the narrow vision of her mind ?
 As if upon a full-proportion'd dome,
 On swelling columns heav'd, the pride of art !
 A critic fly, whose feeble ray scarce spreads
 An inch around, with blind presumption bold,
 Should dare to tax the structure of the whole.
 And lives the man, whose universal eye
 Has swept at once th' unbounded scheme of things ;
 Mark'd their dependence so, and firm accord,
 As with unfaltering accent to conclude
 That this availeth nought ? Has any seen
 The mighty chain of beings, lessening down
 From Infinite Perfection to the brink
 Of dreary nothing, desolate abyss !
 From which astonish'd thought, recoiling, turns ?
 Till then alone let zealous praise ascend,
 And hymns of holy wonder, to that Power
 Whose wisdom shines as lovely on our minds,
 As on our smiling eyes his servant Sun.

Thick in yon stream of light, a thousand ways,
 Upward, and downward, thwarting, and convolv'd,
 The quivering nations sport ; till, tempest-wing'd,
 Fierce Winter sweeps them from the face of day.

Ev'n so luxurious men, unheeding, pass
 An idle summer life in fortune's shine,
 A season's glitter ! Thus they flutter on
 From toy to toy, from vanity to vice ;
 Till, blown away by Death, Oblivion comes
 Behind, and strikes them from the book of life.

Now swarms the village o'er the jovial mead :
 The rustic youth, brown with meridian toil,
 Healthful and strong ; full as the summer rose
 Blown by prevailing suns, the ruddy maid,
 Half naked, swelling on the sight, and all
 Her kindled graces, burning o'er her cheek
 Ev'n stooping age is here : and infant-hands
 Trail the long rake, or, with the fragrant load
 O'ercharg'd, amid the kind oppression roll.
 Wide flies the tedded grain ; all in a row
 Advancing broad, or wheeling round the field,
 They spread their breathing harvest to the Sun,
 That throws refreshful round a rural smell :
 Or, as they rake the green-appearing ground,
 And drive the dusky wave along the mead,
 The russet hay-cock rises thick behind,
 In order gay. While, heard from dale to dale,
 Waking the breeze, resounds the blended voice
 Of happy labour, love, and social glee.

Or rushing thence, in one diffusive band,
 They drive the troubled flocks, by many a dog
 Compell'd, to where the mazy-running brook
 Forms a deep pool ; this bank abrupt and high,
 And that fair spreading in a pebbled shore.
 Urg'd to the giddy brink, much is the toil,
 The clamour much, of men, and boys, and dogs,
 Ere the soft fearful people to the flood
 Commit their woolly sides. and oft the swain,
 On some impatient seizing, hurls them in ;
 Embolden'd then, nor hesitating more,
 Fast, fast, they plunge amid the flashing wave,
 And panting labour to the farthest shore.
 Repeated this, till deep the well-wash'd fleece
 Has drunk the flood, and from his lively haunt
 The trout is banish'd by the sordid stream ;
 Heavy, and dripping, to the breezy brow

Slow move the harmless race ; where, as they spread
 Their swelling treasures to the sunny ray,
 Inly disturb'd, and wondering what this wild
 Outrageous tumult means, their loud complaints
 The country fill ; and, toss'd from rock to rock,
 Incessant bleatings run around the hills.

At last, of snowy white, the gather'd flocks
 Are in the wattled pen innumerable press'd,
 Head above head : and, rang'd in lusty rows,
 The shepherds sit, and whet the sounding shears.
 The housewife waits to roll her fleecy stores,
 With all her gay drest maids attending round.
 One, chief in gracious dignity enthron'd,
 Shines o'er the rest, the pastoral queen, and rays
 Her smiles, sweet-beaming, on her shepherd-king ;
 While the glad circle round them yield their souls
 To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.
 Meantime, their joyous task goes on apace :
 Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some,
 Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving side,
 To stamp his master's cypher ready stand ;
 Others th' unwilling wether drag along ;
 And, glorying in his might, the sturdy boy
 Holds by the twisted horns th' indignant ram.
 Behold where bound, and of its robe bereft,
 By needy man, that all-depending lord,
 How meek, how patient, the mild creature lies !
 What softness in its melancholy face,
 What dumb complaining innocence appears !
 Fear not, ye gentle tribes, 'tis not the knife
 Of horrid slaughter that is o'er you wav'd ;
 No, 'tis the tender swain's well-guided shears,
 Who having now, to pay his annual care,
 Borrow'd your fleece, to you a cumbrous load,
 Will send you bounding to your hills again.

A simple scene ! Yet hence Britannia sees
 Her solid grandeur rise : hence she commands
 Th' exalted stores of every brighter clime,
 The treasures of the Sun without his rage :
 Hence, fervent all, with culture, toil, and arts,
 Wide glows her land : her dreadful thunder hence
 Rides o'er the waves sublime, and now, ev'n now,
 Impending hangs o'er Gallia's humbled coast ;
 Hence rules the circling deep, and awes the world.

'Tis raging noon ; and, vertical, the Sun
 Darts on the head direct his forceful rays.
 O'er Heaven and Earth, far as the ranging eye
 Can sweep, a dazzling deluge reigns ; and all
 From pole to pole is undistinguish'd blaze.
 In vain the sight, dejected to the ground,
 Stoops for relief ; thence hot-ascending steams
 And keen reflection pain. Deep to the root
 Of vegetation parch'd, the cleaving fields
 And slippery lawn an arid hue disclose,
 Blast Fancy's bloom, and wither ev'n the soul.
 Echo no more returns the cheerful sound
 Of sharpening scythe : the mower sinking, heaps
 O'er him the humid hay, with flowers perfum'd ;
 And scarce a chirping grasshopper is heard
 Through the dumb mead. Distressful Nature pants.
 The very streams look languid from afar ;
 Or, through th' unshelter'd glade, impatient seem
 To hurl into the covert of the grove.

All-conquering Heat, oh, intermit thy wrath !
 And on my throbbing temples potent thus
 Beam not so fierce ! Incessant still you flow,
 And still another fervent flood succeeds,
 Pour'd on the head profuse. In vain I sigh,
 And restless turn, and look around for night ;
 Night is far off, and hotter hours approach.

Thrice happy he ! who, on the sunless side
 Of a romantic mountain, forest-crown'd,
 Beneath the whole collected shade reclines :
 Or in the gelid caverns, woodbine-wrought,
 And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams,
 Sits coolly calm ; while all the world without,
 Unsatisfied and sick, tosses in noon :
 Emblem instructive of the virtuous man,
 Who keeps his temper'd mind serene and pure,
 And every passion aptly harmoniz'd,
 Amid a jarring world with vice inflam'd.

Welcome, ye shades ! ye bowery thickets, hail !
 Ye lofty pines ! ye venerable oaks !
 Ye ashes wild, resounding o'er the steep !
 Delicious is your shelter to the soul,
 As to the hunted hart the sallying spring,
 Or stream full-flowing, that his swelling sides
 Laves, as he floats along the herbag'd brink.
 Cool, through the nerves, your pleasing comfort
 glides ;

The heart beats glad ; the fresh-expanded eye
 And ear resume their watch ; the sinews knit ;
 And life shoots swift through all the lighten'd limbs.

Around th' adjoining brook, that purls along
 The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
 Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool,
 Now starting to a sudden stream, and now
 Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain ;
 A various groupe the herds and flocks compose,
 Rural confusion ! on the grassy bank
 Some ruminating lie ; while others stand
 Half in the flood, and, often bending, sip
 The circling surface. In the middle droops
 The strong laborious ox, of honest front,
 Which incompas'd he shakes ; and from his sides
 The troublous insects lashes with his tail,
 Returning still. Amid his subjects safe,
 Slumbers the monarch-swain ; his careless arm
 Thrown round his head, on downy moss sustain'd ;
 Here laid his scrip, with wholesome viands fill'd ;
 There, listening every noise, his watchful dog.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
 Of angry gad-flies fasten on the herd ;
 That startling scatters from the shallow brook,
 In search of lavish stream. Tossing the foam,
 They scorn the keeper's voice, and scour the plain,
 Through all the bright severity of noon ;
 While, from their labouring breasts, a hollow moan
 Proceeding runs low-bellowing round the hills.

Oft in this season too the horse, provok'd,
 While his big sinews full of spirits swell,
 Trembling with vigour, in the heat of blood,
 Springs the high fence ; and, o'er the field effus'd,
 Darts on the gloomy flood, with stedfast eye,
 And heart estrang'd to fear : his nervous chest,
 Luxuriant, and erect ! the seat of strength !
 Bears down th' opposing stream : quenchless his thirst ;

He takes the river at redoubled draughts,
 And with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave.

Still let me pierce into the midnight depth
 Of yonder grove, of wildest largest growth :
 That, forming high in air a woodland quire,
 Nods o'er the mount beneath. At every step,
 Solemn, and slow, the shadows blacker fall,
 And all is awful listening gloom around.

These are the haunts of Meditation, these
 The scenes where ancient bards th' inspiring breath,
 Ecstatic, felt ; and, from this world retir'd,
 Convers'd with angels and immortal forms,

On gracious errands bent : to save the fall
Of Virtue struggling on the brink of Vice ;
In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul
For future trials fated to prepare ,
To prompt the poet, who devoted gives
His Muse to better themes ; to soothe the pangs
Of dying worth, and from the patriot's breast
(Backward to mingle in detested war,
But foremost when engag'd) to turn the death ;
And numberless such offices of love
Daily, and nightly, zealous to perform.

Shook sudden from the bosom of the sky,
A thousand shapes or glide athwart the dusk,
Or stalk majestic on. Deep-rous'd, I feel
A sacred terrour, a severe delight, [methinks,
Creep through my mortal frame ; and thus,
A voice, than human more, th' abstracted ear
Of fancy strikes. " Be not of us afraid,
Poor kindred man ! thy fellow-creatures, we
From the same Parent-Power our beings drew,
The same our Lord, and laws, and great pursuit.
Once some of us, like thee, through stormy life,
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immingle charms.
Then fear not us ; but with responsive song,
Amid these dim recesses, undisturb'd
By noisy folly and discordant vice,
Of Nature sing with us, and Nature's God.
Here frequent, at the visionary hour,
When musing midnight reigns or silent noon,
Angelic harps are in full concert heard ;
And voices chanting from the wood-crown'd hill,
The deepening dale, or inmost sylvan glade :
A privilege bestow'd by us, alone,
On Contemplation, or the hallow'd ear
Of poet, swelling to seraphic strain."

And art thou, Stanley *, of that sacred band ?
Alas, for us too soon ! Though rais'd above
The reach of human pain, above the flight
Of human joy ; yet, with a mingled ray
Of sadly-pleas'd remembrance, must thou feel
A mother's love, a mother's tender woe :
Who seeks thee still, in many a former scene ;
Seeks thy fair form, thy lovely beaming eyes,
Thy pleasing converse, by gay lively sense
Inspir'd : where moral wisdom mildly shone,
Without the toil of art ; and virtue glow'd,
In all her smiles, without forbidding pride.
But, O thou best of parents ! wipe thy tears ;
Or rather to Parental Nature pay
The tears of grateful joy, who for a while
Lent thee this younger self, this opening bloom
Of thy enlighten'd mind and gentle worth.
Believe the Muse : the wintry blast of Death
Kills not the buds of virtue ; no, they spread,
Beneath the heavenly beam of brighter suns,
Through endless ages, into higher powers.

Thus up the mount, in æry vision rapt,
I stray, regardless whither ; till the sound
Of a near fall of water every sense
Wakes from the charm of thought : swift-shrinking
back,

I check my steps, and view the broken scene.

Smooth to the shelving brink a copious flood
Rolls fair, and placid ; where collected all,

* A young lady who died at the age of eighteen,
in the year 1738.

In one impetuous torrent, down the steep
It thundering shoots, and shakes the country round.
At first, an azure sheet, it rushes broad ;
Then whitening by degrees, as prone it falls,
And from the loud-resounding rocks below
Dash'd in a cloud of foam, it sends aloft
A hoary mist, and forms a ceaseless shower.
Nor can the tortur'd wave here find repose :
But, raging still amid the shaggy rocks,
Now flashes o'er the scatter'd fragments, now
Aslant the hollow channel rapid darts ;
And, falling fast from gradual slope to slope,
With wild infracted course, and lessen'd roar,
It gains a safer bed, and steals, at last,
Along the mazes of the quiet vale.

Invited from the cliff, to whose dark brow
He clings, the steep-ascending eagle soars,
With upward pinions through the flood of day ;
And, giving full his bosom to the blaze,
Gains on the Sun ; while all the tuneful race,
Smit by afflictive noon, disorder'd droop,
Deep in the thicket ; or, from bower to bower
Responsive, force an interrupted strain.
The stock-dove only through the forest cooes,
Mournfully hoarse ; oft ceasing from his plaint,
Short interval of weary woe ! again
The sad idea of his murder'd mate,
Struck from his side by savage fowler's guile,
Across his fancy comes ; and then resounds
A louder song of sorrow through the grove.

Beside the dewy border let me sit,
All in the freshness of the humid air ;
There in that hollow'd rock, grotesque and wild,
An ample chair moss-lin'd, and over head
By flowering umbrage shaded ; where the bee
Strays diligent, and with th' extracted balm
Of fragrant woodbine loads his little thigh.

Now, while I taste the sweetness of the shade,
While Nature lies around deep-lull'd in Noon,
Now come bold Fancy, spread a daring flight,
And view the wonders of the torrid zone :
Climes unrelenting ! with whose rage compar'd,
Yon blaze is feeble, and yon skies are cool.

See, how at once the bright effulgent Sun,
Rising direct, swift chases from the sky
The short-liv'd twilight ; and with ardent blaze
Looks gaily fierce through all the dazzling air :
He mounts his throne ; but kind before him sends,
Issuing from out the portals of the morn,
The general breeze †, to mitigate his fire,
And breathe refreshment on a fainting world.
Great are the scenes, with dreadful beauty crown'd
And barbarous wealth, that see each circling year,
Returning suns and double seasons † pass :
Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays :
Majestic woods, of every vigorous green,
Stage above stage, high waving o'er the hills ;
Or to the far horizon wide diffus'd,
A boundless deep immensity of shade.

† Which blows constantly between the tropics
from the east, or the collateral points, the north-east and south-east ; caused by the pressure of the rarefied air on that before it, according to the diurnal motion of the Sun from east to west.

‡ In all climates between the tropics, the Sun, as he passes and repasses in his annual motion, is twice a year vertical, which produces this effect.

Here lofty trees, to ancient song unknown,
The noble sons of potent heat and floods
Prone rushing from the clouds, rear high to Heaven
Their thorny stems, and broad around them throw
Meridian gloom. Here, in eternal prime,
Unnumber'd fruits of keen delicious taste
And vital spirit, drink amid the cliffs,
And burning sands that bank the shrubby vales,
Redoubled day, yet in their rugged coats
A friendly juice to cool its rage contain.

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves;
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Lay me reclin'd
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.
Deep in the night the massy locust sheds, [maze,
Quench my hot limbs; or lead me through the Embowering endless, of the Indian fig;
Or, thrown at gayer ease, on some fair brow,
Let me behold, by breezy murmurs cool'd,
Broad o'er my head the verdant cedar wave,
And high palmetos lift their graceful shade.
Or, stretch'd amid these orchards of the Sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine!
More bounteous far than all the frantic juice
Which Bacchus pours. Nor, on its slender twigs
Low-bending, be the full pomegranate scorn'd;
Nor, creeping through the woods, the gelid race
Of berries. Oft in humble station dwells
Unboastful worth, above fastidious pomp.
Witness, thou best Anâna, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age:
Quick let me strip thee of thy tufty coat,
Spread thy ambrosial stores, and feast with Jove!

From these the prospect varies. Plains immense
Lie stretch'd below, interminable meads,
And vast savannas, where the wandering eye,
Unfix'd, is in a verdant ocean lost.
Another Flora there, of bolder hues,
And richer sweets, beyond our garden's pride,
Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand
Exuberant Spring; for oft these valleys shift
Their green-embroider'd robe to fiery brown,
And swift to green again, as scorching suns,
Or streaming dews and torrent rains, prevail.

Along these lonely regions, where retir'd,
From little scenes of art, great Nature dwells
In awful solitude, and nought is seen
But the wild herds that own no master's stall,
Prodigious rivers roll their fattening seas;
On whose luxuriant herbage, half-conceal'd,
Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,
Cas'd in green scales, the crocodile extends.
The flood disparts: behold! in plaited mail,
Behemoth* rears his head. Glanc'd from his side,
The darted steel in idle shivers flies:
He fearless walks the plain, or seeks the hills;
Where, as he crops his varied fare, the herds,
In widening circle round, forget their food,
And at the harmless stranger wondering gaze.

Peaceful, beneath primeval trees, that cast
Their ample shade o'er Niger's yellow stream,
And where the Ganges rolls his sacred wave;
Or mid the central depth of blackening woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around,

Leans the huge elephant: wisest of brutes!
O truly wise! with gentle might endow'd,
Though powerful, not destructive! Here he sees
Revolving ages sweep the changeful earth,
And empires rise and fall; regardless he
Of what the never-resting race of men
Project: thrice happy! could he 'scape their guile,
Who mine, from cruel avarice, his steps;
Or with his towery grandeur swell their state,
The pride of kings! or else his strength pervert,
And bid him rage amid the mortal fray,
Astonish'd at the madness of mankind.

Wide o'er the winding umbrage of the floods,
Like vivid blossoms glowing from afar, [hand,
Thick swarm the brighter birds. For Nature's
That with a sportive vanity has deck'd
The plummy nations, there her gayest hues
Profusely pours. But, if she bids them shine,
Array'd in all the beauteous beams of day,
Yet, frugal still, she humbles them in song. †
Nor envy we the gaudy robes they lent
Proud Montezuma's realm, whose legions cast
A boundless radiance waving on the Sun,
While Philomel is ours; while in our shades,
Through the soft silence of the listening night,
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay.

But come, my Muse, the desert-barrier burst,
A wild expanse of lifeless sand and sky:
And, swifter than the toiling caravan,
Shoot o'er the vale of Sennar; ardent climb
The Nubian mountains, and the secret bounds
Of jealous Abyssinia boldly pierce.
Thou art no ruffian, who beneath the mask
Of social commerce com'st to rob their wealth;
No holy Fury thou, blaspheming Heaven,
With consecrated steel to stab their peace,
And through the land, yet red from civil wounds,
To spread the purple tyranny of Rome.
Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range,
From mead to mead bright with exalted flowers,
From jasmine grove to grove, may'st wander gay,
Through palmy shades and aromatic woods,
That grace the plains, invest the peopled hills,
And up the more than Alpine mountains wave.
There on the breezy summit, spreading fair,
For many a league; or on stupendous rocks,
That from the sun-redoubling valley lift,
Cool to the middle air their lawny tops;
Where palaces, and fanes, and villas rise;
And gardens smile around, and cultur'd fields;
And fountains gush; and careless herds and flocks
Securely stray; a world within itself,
Disdaining all assault: there let me draw
Ethereal soul, there drink reviving gales,
Profusely breathing from the spicy groves,
And vales of fragrance; there at distance hear
The roaring floods, and cataracts, that sweep
From disembowell'd Earth the virgin gold;
And o'er the varied landscape, restless, rove,
Fervent with life of every fairer kind:
A land of wonders! which the Sun still eyes
With ray direct, as of the lovely realm
Enamour'd, and delighting there to dwell. [noon,
How chang'd the scene! In blazing height of
The Sun, oppress'd, is plung'd in thickest gloom.
Still Horror reigns, a dreary twilight round,

† In all the regions of the torrid zone, the birds,
though more beautiful in their plumage, are observed to be less melodious than ours.

* The hippopotamus, or river-horse.

Of struggling night and day malignant mix'd.
 For to the hot equator crowding fast,
 Where, highly rarefy'd, the yielding air
 Admits their stream, incessant vapours roll,
 Amazing clouds on clouds continual heap'd!
 Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind,
 Or silent borne along, heavy, and slow,
 With the big stores of steaming oceans charg'd.
 Meantime, amid these upper seas, condens'd
 Around the cold aerial mountain's brow,
 And by conflicting winds together dash'd,
 The Thunder holds his black tremendous throne:
 From cloud to cloud the rending Lightnings rage;
 Till, in the furious elemental war
 Dissolv'd, the whole precipitated mass,
 Unbroken floods and solid torrents pours.

The treasures these, hid from the bounded search
 Of ancient knowledge; whence, with annual pomp,
 Rich king of floods! o'erflows the swelling Nile.
 From his two springs, in Gojam's sunny realm,
 Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
 Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream.
 There, by the Naiads nurs'd, he sports away
 His playful youth, amid the fragrant isles,
 That with unfading verdure smile around.
 Ambitious, thence the manly river breaks;
 And, gathering many a flood, and copious fed
 With all the mellow'd treasures of the sky,
 Winds in progressive majesty along:
 Through splendid kingdoms now devolves his maze,
 Now wanders wild o'er solitary tracts
 Of life-deserted sand: till, glad to quit
 The joyless desert, down the Nubian rocks
 From thundering steep to steep, he pours his urn,
 And Egypt joys beneath the spreading wave.

His brother Niger, too, and all the floods
 In which the full-form'd maids of Afric lave
 Their jetty limbs; and all that form the tract
 Of woody mountains stretch'd through gorgeous Ind
 Fall on Cormandel's coast, or Malabar;
 From Menam's orient stream*, that nightly shines
 With insect-lamps, to where Aurora sheds
 On Indus' smiling banks the rosy shower:
 All, at this bounteous season, ope their urns,
 And pour untoiling harvest o'er the land.

Nor less thy world, Columbus, drinks, refresh'd,
 The lavish'd moisture of the melting year.
 Wide o'er his isles, the branching Oronoque
 Rolls a brown deluge; and the native drives
 To dwell aloft on life-sufficing trees,
 At once his dome, his robe, his food, and arms.
 Swell'd by a thousand streams, impetuous hurl'd
 From all the roaring Andes, huge descends
 The mighty Orellana.† Scarce the Muse
 Dares stretch her wing o'er this enormous mass
 Of rushing water; scarce she dares attempt
 The sea-like Plata; to whose dread expanse,
 Continuous depth, and wondrous length of course,
 Our floods are rills. With unabated force,
 In silent dignity they sweep along,
 And traverse realms unknown, and blooming wilds,
 And fruitful deserts, worlds of solitude,
 Where the Sun smiles and Seasons teem in vain,
 Unseen and unenjoy'd. Forsaking these,
 O'er peopled plains they fair-diffusive flow,

* The river that runs through Siam; on whose banks a vast number of those insects called fire-flies make a beautiful appearance in the night.

† The river of the Amazons.

And many a nation feed, and circle safe,
 In their soft bosom, many a happy isle;
 The seat of blameless Pan, yet undisturb'd
 By Christian crimes and Europe's cruel sons.
 Thus pouring on they proudly seek the deep,
 Whose vanquish'd tide, recoiling from the shock,
 Yields to the liquid weight of half the globe;
 And Ocean trembles for his green domain.

But what avails this wondrous waste of wealth?
 This gay profusion of luxurious bliss?
 This pomp of Nature? what their balmy meads,
 Their powerful herbs, and Ceres void of pain?
 By vagrant birds dispers'd, and wafting winds,
 What their unplanted fruits? what the cool draughts,
 Th' ambrosial food, rich gums, and spicy health,
 Their forests yield? their toiling insects what,
 Their silky pride, and vegetable robes?
 Ah! what avail their fatal treasures, hid
 Deep in the bowels of the pitying Earth,
 Golconda's gems, and sad Potosi's mines;
 Where dwelt the gentlest children of the Sun?
 What all that Afric's golden rivers roll,
 Her odorous woods, and shining ivory stores?
 Ill-fated race! the softening arts of peace,
 Whate'er the humanizing Muses teach;
 The godlike wisdom of the temper'd breast;
 Progressive truth, the patient force of thought;
 Investigation calm, whose silent powers
 Command the world; the light that leads to Heaven;
 Kind equal rule, the government of laws,
 And all-protecting freedom, which alone
 Sustains the name and dignity of man:
 These are not theirs. The parent Sun himself
 Seems o'er this world of slaves to tyrannize;
 And, with oppressive ray, the roscat bloom
 Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
 And feature gross: or worse, to ruthless deeds,
 Mad jealousy, blind rage, and fell revenge,
 Their fervid spirit fires. Love dwells not there,
 The soft regards, the tenderness of life,
 The heart-shed tear, th' ineffable delight
 Of sweet humanity: these court the beam
 Of milder climes; in selfish fierce desire,
 And the wild fury of voluptuous sense,
 There lost. The very brute creation there
 This rage partakes, and burns with horrid fire.

Lo! the green serpent, from his dark abode,
 Which ev'n imagination fears to tread,
 At noon forth issuing, gathers up his train
 In orbs immense, then, darting out anew,
 Seeks the refreshing fount; by which diffus'd,
 He throws his folds: and while, with threaten-
 tongue,

And deathful jaws erect, the monster curls
 His flaming crest, all other thirst appall'd,
 Or shivering flies, or check'd at distance stands,
 Nor dares approach. But still more direful he,
 The small close-lurking minister of Fate,
 Whose high-concocted venom through the veins
 A rapid lightning darts, arresting swift
 The vital current. Form'd to humble man,
 This child of vengeful nature! There, sublim'd
 To fearless lust of blood, the savage race
 Roam, licens'd by the shading hour of guilt,
 And foul misdeed, when the pure day has shut
 His sacred eye. The tiger darting fierce
 Impetuous on the prey his glance has doom'd:
 The lively-shining leopard, speckled o'er
 With many a spot, the beauty of the waste:
 And, scorning all the taming arts of man,

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell.
 These, rushing from th' inhospitable woods
 Of Mauritania, or the tufted isles,
 That verdant rise amid the Libyan wild,
 Innumerable glare around their shaggy king,
 Majestic, stalking o'er the printed sand;
 And, with imperious and repeated roars,
 Demand their fated food. The fearful flocks
 Crowd near the guardian swain; the nobler herds,
 Where round their lordly bull, in rural ease,
 They ruminating lie, with horror hear
 The coming rage. Th' awaken'd village starts;
 And to her fluttering breast the mother strains
 Her thoughtless infant. From the pirate's den,
 Or stern Morocco's tyrant-fang escap'd,
 The wretch half-wishes for his bonds again:
 While, uproar all, the wilderness resounds,
 From Atlas eastward to the frightened Nile.

Unhappy he! who from the first of joys,
 Society, cut off, is left alone
 Amid this world of death. Day after day,
 Sad on the jutting eminence he sits,
 And views the main that ever toils below;
 Still fondly forming in the farthest verge,
 Where the round ether mixes with the wave,
 Ships, dim discover'd, dropping from the clouds;
 At evening, to the setting Sun he turns
 A mournful eye, and down his dying heart
 Sinks helpless; while the wonted roar is up,
 And hiss continual through the tedious night.
 Yet here, ev'n here, into these black abodes
 Of monsters unappall'd, from stooping Rome,
 And guilty Caesar, Liberty retir'd,
 Her Cato following through Numidian wilds:
 Disdainful of Campania's gentle plains,
 And all the green delights Ausonia pours;
 When for them she must bend the servile knee,
 And fawning take the splendid robber's boon.

Nor stop the terrors of these regions here:
 Commission'd demons oft, angels of wrath,
 Let loose the raging elements. Breath'd hot,
 From all the boundless furnace of the sky,
 And the wide glittering waste of burning sand,
 A suffocating wind the pilgrim smites
 With instant death. Patient of thirst and toil,
 Son of the desert! even the camel feels,
 Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast.
 Or from the black-red ether, bursting broad,
 Sallies the sudden whirlwind. Straight the sands,
 Commov'd around, in gathering eddies play:
 Nearer and nearer still they darkening come;
 Till, with the general all-involving storm,
 Swept up, the whole continuous wilds arise;
 And by their noon-day fount dejected thrown,
 Or sunk at night in sad disastrous sleep,
 Beneath descending hills, the caravan
 Is buried deep. In Cairo's crowded streets
 Th' impatient merchant, wondering, waits in vain,
 And Mecca saddens at the long delay.

But chief at sea, whose every flexile wave
 Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells.
 In the dread Ocean, undulating wide,
 Beneath the radiant line that girds the globe,
 The circling Typhon*, whirl'd from point to point,
 Exhausting all the rage of all the sky,
 And dire Ecnephia* reign. Amid the heavens,

* Typhon and Ecnephia, names of particular storms or hurricanes, known only between the tropics.

Falsely serene, deep in a cloudy speck †
 Compress'd, the mighty tempest brooding dwells:
 Of no regard, save to the skilful eye,
 Fiery and foul, the small prognostic hangs
 Aloft, or on the promontory's brow
 Musters its force. A faint deceitful calm,
 A fluttering gale the demon sends before,
 To tempt the spreading sail. Then down at once,
 Precipitant, descends a mingled mass
 Of roaring winds, and flame, and rushing floods.
 In wild amazement fix'd the sailor stands.
 Art is too slow: by rapid Fate oppress'd,
 His broad-wing'd vessel drinks the whelming tide,
 Hid in the bosom of the black abyss.
 With such mad seas the daring Gama ‡ fought,
 For many a day, and many a dreadful night,
 Incessant, labouring round the stormy Cape;
 By bold ambition led, and bolder thirst
 Of gold. For then from ancient gloom emerg'd
 The rising world of trade: the genius, then,
 Of navigation, that, in hopeless sloth,
 Had slumber'd on the vast Atlantic deep,
 For idle ages, starting, heard at last
 The Lusitanian prince §; who, Heaven-inspir'd,
 To love of useful glory rous'd mankind,
 And in unbounded commerce mix'd the world.

Increasing still the terrors of these storms,
 His jaws horrific arm'd with threefold fate,
 Here dwells the direful shark. Lur'd by the scent
 Of steaming crowds, of rank disease, and death,
 Behold! he rushing cuts the briny flood,
 Swift as the gale can bear the ship along;
 And, from the partners of that cruel trade,
 Which spoils unhappy Guinea of her sons,
 Demands his share of prey; demands themselves.
 The stormy Fates descend: one death involves Tyrants and slaves; when straight, their mangled
 limbs

Crashing at once, he dyes the purple seas
 With gore, and riots in the vengeful meal.

When o'er this world, by equinoctial rains
 Flooded immense, looks out the joyless Sun,
 And draws the copious steam: from swampy fens,
 Where putrefaction into life ferments,
 And breathes destructive myriads: or from woods,
 Impenetrable shades, recesses foul,
 In vapours rank and blue corruption wrapt,
 Whose gloomy horrors yet no desperate foot
 Has ever dar'd to pierce; then, wasteful, forth
 Walks the dire power of pestilent Disease.
 A thousand hideous fiends her course attend,
 Sick Nature blasting, and to heartless woe,
 And feeble desolation, casting down
 The towering hopes and all the pride of man:
 Such as, of late, at Carthage quench'd
 The British fire. You, gallant Vernon, saw
 The miserable scene; you, pitying, saw
 To infant weakness sunk the warrior's arm;
 Saw the deep-racking pang, the ghastly form,
 The lip pale quivering, and the beamless eye

† Called by sailors the ox-eye, being in appearance at first no bigger.

‡ Vasco de Gama, the first who sailed round Africa, by the Cape of Good Hope, to the East Indies.

§ Don Henry, third son to John the First, king of Portugal. His strong genius to the discovery of new countries was the chief source of all the modern improvements in navigation.

No more with ardour bright: you heard the groans
Of agonizing ships from shore to shore;
Heard, nightly plung'd amid the sullen waves,
The frequent corse; while, on each other fix'd,
In sad presage, the blank assistants seem'd,
Silent, to ask, whom Fate would next demand.

What need I mention those inclement skies,
Where, frequent o'er the sickening city, Plague,
The fiercest child of Nemesis divine,
Descends*? From Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifled Cairo's filth, and fetid fields
With locust-armies putrefying heap'd,
This great destroyer sprung. Her awful rage
The brutes escape: man is her destin'd prey,
Intemperate man! and, o'er his guilty domes,
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death;
Uninterrupted by the living winds,
Forbid to blow a wholesome breeze; and stain'd
With many a mixture by the Sun, suffus'd,
Of angry aspect. Princely wisdom, then,
Dejects his watchful eye; and from the hand
Of feeble justice, ineffectual, drop
The sword and balance: mute the voice of joy,
And hush'd the clamour of the busy world.
Empty the streets, with uncouth verdure clad;
Into the worst of deserts sudden turn'd
The cheerful haunt of men, unless escap'd [reigns,
From the doom'd house, where matchless horror
Shut up by barbarous fear, the smitten wretch,
With frenzy wild, breaks loose; and, loud to Heaven
Screaming, the dreadful policy arraigns,
Inhuman, and unwise. The sullen door,
Yet uninfected, on its cautious hinge
Fearing to turn, abhors society:
Dependants, friends, relations, Love himself,
Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie,
The sweet engagement of the feeling heart.
But vain their selfish care: the circling sky,
The wide enlivening air, is full of fate;
And, struck by turns, in solitary pangs
They fall, unblest, untended, and unmourn'd.
Thus o'er the prostrate city black Despair
Extends her raven wing; while, to complete
The scene of desolation, stretch'd around,
The grim guards stand, denying all retreat,
And give the flying wretch a better death.

Much yet remains unsung: the rage intense
Of brazen-vaulted skies, of iron fields,
Where drought and famine starve the blasted year:
Fir'd by the torch of noon to tenfold rage,
Th' infuriate hill that shoots the pillar'd flame;
And, rous'd within the subterranean world,
Th' expanding earthquake, that resistless shakes
Aspiring cities from their solid base,
And buries mountains in the flaming gulph.
But 'tis enough; return, my vagrant Muse:
A nearer scene of horror calls thee home.

Behold, slow-settling o'er the lurid grove
Unusual darkness broods; and growing gains
The full possession of the sky, surcharg'd
With wrathful vapour, from the secret beds,
Where sleep the mineral generations, drawn.
Thence nitre, sulphur, and the fiery spume
Of fat bitumen, steaming on the day,
With various-tinctur'd trains of latent flame,
Pollute the sky, and in yon baleful cloud,

* These are the causes supposed to be the first origin of the plague, in Dr. Mead's elegant book on that subject.

A reddening gloom, a magazine of fate,
Ferment; till by the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. A boding silence reigns,
Dread through the dun expanse; save the dull sound
That from the mountain, previous to the storm,
Rolls o'er the muttering earth, disturbs the flood,
And shakes the forest-leaf without a breath.
Prone, to the lowest vale, th' aerial tribes
Descend: the tempest-loving raven scarce
Dares wing the dubious dusk. In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling Heavens
Cast a deploring eye, by man forsook,
Who to the crowded cottage hies him fast,
Or seeks the shelter of the downward cave.

'Tis listening fear and dumb amazement all:
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south, eruptive through the cloud;
And following slower, in explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.
At first, heard solemn o'er the verge of Heaven,
The tempest growls; but as it nearer comes,
And rolls its awful burden on the wind,
The lightnings flash a larger curve, and more
The noise astounds: till over head a sheet
Of livid flame discloses wide; then shuts,
And opens wider; shuts and opens still
Expansive, wrapping ether in a blaze.
Follows the loosen'd aggravated roar,
Enlarging, deepening, mingling; peal on peal
Crush'd horrible, convulsing Heaven and Earth.

Down comes a deluge of sonorous hail,
Or prone descending rain. Wide rent, the clouds
Pour a whole flood; and yet, its flame unquench'd,
Th' unconquerable lightning struggles through,
Ragged and fierce, or in red whirling balls,
And fires the mountains with redoubled rage.
Black from the stroke, above, the smouldering pine,
Stands a sad shatter'd trunk; and, stretch'd below,
A lifeless groupe the blasted cattle lie:
Here the soft flocks, with that same harmless look
They wore alive, and ruminating still
In Fancy's eye; and there the frowning bull,
An ox half-rais'd. Struck on the castled cliff,
The venerable tower and spiry fane
Resign their aged pride. The gloomy woods
Start at the flash, and from their deep recess,
Wide-flaming out, their trembling inmates shake.
Amid Carnarvon's mountains rages loud
The repercussive roar: with mighty crush,
Into the flashing deep, from the rude rocks
Of Penmanmaur heap'd hideous to the sky,
Tumble the smitten cliffs; and Snowden's peak,
Dissolving, instant yields his wintry load.
Far-seen, the heights of heathy Cheviot blaze,
And Thulé bellows through her utmost isles.

Guilt hears appall'd, with deeply troubled thought.
And yet not always on the guilty head
Descends the fated flash. Young Celadon
And his Amelia were a matchless pair;
With equal virtue form'd, and equal grace,
The same, distinguish'd by their sex alone:
Hers the mild lustre of the blooming morn,
And his the radiance of the risen day.

They lov'd: but such their guileless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth.
'Twas friendship heighten'd by the mutual wish,
Th' enchanting hope, and sympathetic glow,

Beam'd from the mutual eye. Devoting all
To love, each was to each a dearer self ;
Supremely happy in th' awaken'd power
Of giving joy. Alone, amid the shades,
Still in harmonious intercourse they liv'd
The rural day, and talk'd the flowing heart,
Or sigh'd and look'd unutterable things.

So pass'd their life, a clear united stream,
By care unruffled ; till, in evil hour,
The tempest caught them on the tender walk,
Heedless how far, and where its mazes stray'd,
While, with each other blest, creative love
Still bade eternal Eden smile around.
Presaging instant fate, her bosom heav'd
Unwonted sighs, and stealing oft a look
Of the big gloom, on Celadon her eye
Fell tearful, wetting her disorder'd cheek.
In vain assuring love, and confidence
In Heaven, repress'd her fear ; it grew, and shook
Her frame near dissolution. He perceiv'd
Th' unequal conflict ; and as angels look
On dying saints, his eyes compassion shed,
With love illumin'd high. " Fear not," he said,
" Sweet innocence ! thou stranger to offence,
And inward storm ! He, who yon skies involves
In frowns of darkness, ever smiles on thee
With kind regard. O'er thee the secret shaft
That wastes at midnight, or th' undreaded hour
Of noon, flies harmless : and that very voice
Which thunders terror through the guilty heart,
With tongues of seraphs whispers peace to thine.
'Tis safety to be near thee sure, and thus
To clasp perfection !" From his void embrace,
Mysterious Heaven ! that moment, to the ground,
A blacken'd corse, was struck the beauteous maid.
But who can paint the lover, as he stood,
Pierc'd by severe amazement, hating life,
Speechless, and fix'd in all the death of woe ?
So, faint resemblance ! on the marble tomb,
The well-dissembled mourner stooping stands,
For ever silent, and for ever sad.

As from the face of Heaven the shatter'd clouds
Tumultuous rove, th' interminable sky
Sublimely swells, and o'er the world expands
A purer azure. Through the lighten'd air
A higher lustre and a clearer calm,
Diffusive, tremble ; while, as if in sign
Of danger past, a glittering robe of joy,
Set off abundant by the yellow ray,
Invests the fields ; and Nature smiles reviv'd.

'Tis beauty all, and grateful song around,
Join'd to the low of kine, and numerous bleat
Of flocks thick-nibbling through the clover'd vale.
And shall the hymn be marr'd by thankless man,
Most favour'd ; who with voice articulate
Should lead the chorus of this lower world ?
Shall he, so soon forgetful of the hand
That hush'd the thunder, and serenest the sky,
Extinguish'd feel that spark the tempest wak'd,
That sense of powers exceeding far his own,
Ere yet his feeble heart has lost its fears ?

Cheer'd by the milder beam, the sprightly youth
Speeds to the well-known pool, whose crystal depth
A sandy bottom shows. Awhile he stands
Gazing th' inverted landscape, half afraid
To meditate the blue profound below ;
Then plunges headlong down the circling flood.
His ebon tresses and his rosy cheek
Instant emerge ; and through th' obedient wave,
At each short breathing by his lip repell'd,

With arms and legs according well, he makes,
As humour leads, an easy-winding path :
While, from his polish'd sides, a dewy light
Effuses on the pleas'd spectators round.

This is the purest exercise of health,
The kind refresher of the summer heats ;
Nor, when cold Winter keens the brightening flood,
Would I, weak-shivering, linger on the brink.
Thus life redoubles, and is oft preserv'd,
By the bold swimmer, in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Hence the limbs
Knit into force ; and the same Roman arm,
That rose victorious o'er the conquer'd Earth,
First learn'd, while tender, to subdue the wave.
Even from the body's purity, the mind
Receives a secret sympathetic aid.

Close in the covert of an hazel copse,
Where winded into pleasing solitudes
Runs out the rambling dale, young Damon sat
Pensive, and pierc'd with love's delightful pangs.
There to the stream that down the distant rocks
Hoarse-murmuring fell, and plaintive breeze that play'd

Among the bending willows, falsely he
Of Musidora's cruelty complain'd.
She felt his flame ; but deep within her breast,
In bashful coyness, or in maiden pride,
The soft return conceal'd ; save when it stole
In side-long glances from her downcast eye,
Or from her swelling soul in stifled sighs.
Touch'd by the scene, no stranger to his vows,
He fram'd a melting lay, to try her heart ;
And, if an infant passion struggled there,
To call that passion forth. Thrice happy swain !
A lucky chance, that oft decides the fate
Of mighty monarchs, then decided thine.
For, lo ! conducted by the laughing Loves,
This cool retreat his Musidora sought :
Warm in her cheek the sultry season glow'd ;
And, rob'd in loose array, she came to bathe
Her fervent limbs in the refreshing stream.
What shall he do ? In sweet confusion lost,
And dubious flutterings, he awhile remain'd :
A pure ingenuous elegance of soul,
A delicate refinement, known to few,
Perplex'd his breast, and urg'd him to retire :
But love forbade. Ye prudes in virtue, say,
Say, ye severest, what would you have done ?
Meantime, this fairer nymph than ever blest
Arcadian stream, with timid eye around
The banks surveying, stripp'd her beauteous limbs,
To taste the lucid coolness of the flood.
Ah, then ! not Paris on the piny top
Of Ida panted stronger, when aside
The rival goddesses the veil divine
Cast unconfin'd, and gave him all their charms,
Than, Damon, thou ; as from the snowy leg,
And slender foot, th' inverted silk she drew ;
As the soft touch dissolv'd the virgin zone ;
And, through the parting robe, the alternate breast,
With youth wild-throbbing, on thy lawless gaze
In full luxuriance rose. But, desperate youth,
How durst thou risk the soul-distracting view ;
As from her naked limbs, of glowing white,
Harmonious swell'd by Nature's finest hand,
In folds loose-floating fell the fainter lawn ;
And fair-expos'd she stood, shrunk from herself,
With fancy blushing, at the doubtful breeze
Alarm'd, and starting like the fearful fawn ?

Then to the flood she rush'd ; the parted flood
 Its lovely guest with closing waves receiv'd ;
 And every beauty softening, every grace
 Flushing anew, a mellow lustre shed :
 As shines the lily through the crystal mild ;
 Or as the rose amid the morning dew,
 Fresh from Aurora's hand, more sweetly glows.
 While thus she wanton'd, now beneath the wave
 But ill-conceal'd ; and now with streaming locks,
 That half-embrac'd her in a humid veil,
 Rising again, the latent Damon drew
 Such maddening draughts of beauty to the soul,
 As for awhile o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought
 With luxury too daring. Check'd, at last,
 By love's respectful modesty, he deem'd
 The theft profane, if aught profane to love
 Can e'er be deem'd ; and, struggling from the shade,
 With headlong hurry fled : but first these lines,
 Trac'd by his ready pencil, on the bank [fair,
 With trembling hand he threw. " Bathe on, my
 Yet unbeheld, save by the sacred eye
 Of faithful love : I go to guard thy haunt,
 To keep from thy recess each vagrant foot,
 And each licentious eye." With wild surprise,
 As if to marble struck, devoid of sense,
 A stupid moment motionless she stood :
 So stands the statue * that enchants the world,
 So bending tries to veil the matchless boast,
 The mingled beauties of exulting Greece.
 Recovering, swift she flew to find those robes
 Which blissful Eden knew not ; and, array'd
 In careless haste, th' alarming paper snatch'd.
 But, when her Damon's well-known hand she saw,
 Her terrors vanish'd, and a softer train
 Of mixt emotions, hard to be describ'd,
 Her sudden bosom seiz'd : shame void of guilt,
 The charming blush of innocence, esteem
 And admiration of her lover's flame,
 By modesty exalted : even a sense
 Of self-approving beauty stole across
 Her busy thought. At length, a tender calm
 Hush'd by degrees the tumult of her soul ;
 And on the spreading beech, that o'er the stream
 Incumbent hung, she with the sylvan pen
 Of rural lovers this confession carv'd,
 Which soon her Damon kiss'd with weeping joy :
 " Dear youth ! sole judge of what these verses mean,
 By fortune too much favour'd, but by love,
 Alas ! not favour'd less, be still as now
 Discreet : the time may come you need not fly."

The Sun has lost his rage : his downward orb
 Shoots nothing now but animating warmth,
 And vital lustre ; that with various ray [Heaven,
 Lights up the clouds, those beauteous robes of Incessant roll'd into romantic shapes,
 The dream of waking fancy ! Broad below,
 Cover'd with ripening fruits, and swelling fast
 Into the perfect year, the pregnant Earth
 And all her tribes rejoice. Now the soft hour
 Of walking comes : for him who lonely loves
 To seek the distant hills, and there converse
 With Nature ; there to harmonize his heart,
 And in pathetic song to breathe around
 The harmony to others. Social friends,
 Attun'd to happy unison of soul ;
 To whose exalting eye a fairer world,
 Of which the vulgar never had a glimpse, [fraught
 Displays its charms ; whose minds are richly
 With philosophic stores, superior light ;

* The Venus of Medici.

And in whose breast, enthusiastic, burns
 Virtue, the sons of interest deem romance ;
 Now call'd abroad enjoy the falling day :
 Now to the verdant Portico of woods,
 To Nature's vast Lycéum, forth they walk ;
 By that kind school where no proud master reigns,
 The full free converse of the friendly heart,
 Improving and improv'd. Now from the world,
 Sacred to sweet retirement, lovers steal,
 And pour their souls in transport which the Sire
 Of love approving hears, and calls it good.
 Which way, Amanda, shall we bend our course ?
 The choice perplexes. Wherefore should we chuse ?
 All is the same with thee. Say, shall we wind
 Along the streams ? or walk the smiling mead ?
 Or court the forest-glades ? or wander wild
 Among the waving harvests ? or ascend,
 While radiant Summer opens all its pride,
 Thy hill, delightful Shene † ? Here let us sweep
 The boundless landscape : now the raptur'd eye,
 Exulting swift, to huge Augusta send,
 Now to the sister-hills ‡ that skirt her plain,
 To lofty Harrow now, and now to where
 Majestic Windsor lifts his princely brow.
 In lovely contrast to this glorious view
 Calmly magnificent, then will we turn
 To where the silver Thames first rural grows.
 There let the feasted eye unwearied stray ;
 Luxurious, there, rove through the pendant woods
 That nodding hang o'er Harrington's retreat ;
 And stooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,
 Beneath whose shades, in spotless peace retir'd,
 With her the pleasing partner of his heart,
 The worthy Queensbury yet laments his Gay,
 And polish'd Cornbury wooes the willing Muse.
 Slow let us trace the matchless vale of Thames :
 Fair winding up to where the Muses haunt
 In Twit'nam's bowers, and for their Pope implore
 The healing god § ; to royal Hampton's pile,
 To Clermont's terrac'd height, and Esher's groves,
 Where, in the sweetest solitude, embrac'd
 By the soft windings of the silent Mole,
 From courts and senates Pelham finds repose :
 Enchanting vale ! beyond whate'er the Muse
 Has of Achaia or Hesperia sung !
 O vale of bliss ! O softly-swelling hills !
 On which the Power of Cultivation lies,
 And joys to see the wonders of his toil.

Heavens ! what a goodly prospect spreads around,
 Of hills, and dales, and woods, and lawns, and spires,
 And glittering towns, and gilded streams, till all
 The stretching landscape into smoke decays !
 Happy Britannia ! where the queen of arts,
 Inspiring vigour, liberty abroad
 Walks, unconfin'd, ev'n to thy farthest cots,
 And scatters plenty with unsparing hand.

Rich is thy soil, and merciful thy clime ;
 Thy streams unfailing in the summer's drought ;
 Unmatch'd thy guardian oaks ; thy valleys float
 With golden waves : and on thy mountains flocks
 Bleat numberless ; while, roving round their sides,
 Bellow the blackening herds in lusty droves.
 Beneath thy meadows glow, and rise unquell'd
 Against the mower's scythe. On every hand
 Thy villas shine. Thy country teems with wealth ;

† The old name of Richmond, signifying in Saxon shining or splendour.

‡ Highgate and Hampstead.

§ In his last sickness.

And property assures it to the swain,
Pleas'd, and unwearied, in his guarded toil.

Full are thy cities with the sons of art ;
And trade and joy, in every busy street,
Mingling are heard : ev'n Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace-stone, looks gay. Thy crowded ports,
Where rising masts an endless prospect yield,
With labour burn, and echo to the shouts
Of hurried sailor, as he hearty waves
His last adieu, and, loosening every sheet,
Resigns the spreading vessel to the wind.

Bold, firm, and graceful, are thy generous youth,
By hardship sinew'd, and by danger fir'd,
Scattering the nations where they go ; and first
Or on the listed plain, or stormy seas.
Mild are thy glories too, as o'er the plans
Of thriving peace thy thoughtful sires preside ;
In genius, and substantial learning, high ;
For every virtue, every worth renown'd ;
Sincere, plain-hearted, hospitable, kind ;
Yet, like the mustering thunder, when provok'd,
The dread of tyrants, and the sole resource
Of those that under grim oppression groan.

Thy sons of glory many ! Alfred thine,
In whom the splendour of heroic war,
And more heroic peace, when govern'd well,
Combine ; whose hallow'd names the virtuous saint,
And his own Muses love ; the best of kings !
With him thy Edwards and thy Henries shine,
Names dear to fame ; the first who deep impress'd
On haughty Gaul the terror of thy arms,
That awes her genius still. In statesmen thou,
And patriots, fertile. Thine a steady More,
Who, with a generous, though mistaken zeal,
Withstood a brutal tyrant's useful rage,
Like Cato firm, like Aristides just,
Like rigid Cincinnatus nobly poor,
A dauntless soul erect, who smil'd on death.
Frugal and wise, a Walsingham is thine ;
A Drake, who made thee mistress of the deep,
And bore thy name in thunder round the world.
Then flam'd thy spirit high : but who can speak
The numerous worthies of the maiden reign ?
In Raleigh mark their every glory mix'd ;
Raleigh, the scourge of Spain ! whose breast with all
The sage, the patriot, and the hero, burn'd.
Nor sunk his vigour, when a coward-reign
The warrior fetter'd, and at last resign'd,
To glut the vengeance of a vanquish'd foe.
Then, active still and unrestrain'd, his mind
Explor'd the vast extent of ages past,
And with his prison-hours enrich'd the world ;
Yet found no times, in all the long research,
So glorious, or so base, as those he prov'd,
In which he conquer'd, and in which he bled.
Nor can the Muse the gallant Sidney pass,
The plume of war ! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle, and the poet's bay.
A Hampden too is thine, illustrious land,
Wise, strenuous, firm, of unsubmitting soul,
Who stemm'd the torrent of a downward age
To slavery prone, and bade thee rise again,
In all thy native pomp of freedom bold.
Bright at his call, thy age of men effulg'd,
Of men on whom late time a kindling eye
Shall turn, and tyrants tremble while they read.
Bring every sweetest flower, and let me strew
The grave where Russell lies ; whose temper'd blood,
With calmest cheerfulness for thee resign'd,

Stain'd the sad annals of a giddy reign ;
Aiming at lawless power, though meanly sunk
In loose inglorious luxury. With him
His friend, the British Cassius*, fearless bled ;
Of high-determin'd spirit, roughly brave,
By ancient learning, to th' enlighten'd love
Of ancient freedom warm'd. Fair thy renown
In awful sages and in noble bards,
Soon as the light of dawning Science spread
Her orient ray, and wak'd the Muses' song.
Thine is a Bacon ; hapless in his choice,
Unfit to stand the civil storm of state,
And through the smooth barbarity of courts,
With firm, but pliant virtue, forward still
To urge his course ; him for the studious shade
Kind Nature form'd, deep, comprehensive, clear,
Exact, and elegant ; in one rich soul,
Plato, the Stagyrte, and Tully join'd.
The great deliverer he ! who from the gloom
Of cloister'd monks, and jargon-teaching schools,
Led forth the true Philosophy, there long
Held in the magic chain of words and forms,
And definitions void : he led her forth,
Daughter of Heaven ! that, slow-ascending still,
Investigating sure the chain of things,
With radiant finger points to Heaven again.
The generous Ashley† thine, the friend of man ;
Who scann'd his nature with a brother's eye,
His weakness prompt to shade to raise his aim,
To touch the finer movements of the mind,
And with the moral beauty charm the heart.
Why need I name thy Boyle, whose pious search
Amid the dark recesses of his works,
The great Creator sought ? And why thy Locke,
Who made the whole internal world his own ?
Let Newton, pure Intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works
From laws sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. For lofty sense,
Creative fancy, and inspection keen
Through the deep windings of the human heart,
Is not wild Shakspeare thine and Nature's boast ?
Is not each great, each amiable Muse
Of classic ages in thy Milton met ?
A genius universal as his theme ;
Astonishing as Chaos, as the bloom
Of blowing Eden fair, as Heaven sublime.
Nor shall my verse that elder bard forget,
The gentle Spenser, Fancy's pleasing son ;
Who, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground :
Nor thee, his ancient master, laughing sage,
Chaucer, whose native manners-painting verse,
Well-moraliz'd, shines through the gothic cloud
Of time and language o'er thy genius thrown.

May my song soften, as thy daughters I,
Britannia, hail ! for beauty is their own,
The feeling heart, simplicity of life,
And elegance, and taste : the faultless form,
Shap'd by the hand of harmony ; the cheek,
Where the live crimson, through the native white
Soft-shooting, o'er the face diffuses bloom,
And every nameless grace ; the parted lip,
Like the red rose-bud moist with morning-dew,
Breathing delight ; and, under flowing jet,
Or sunny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight-shaded, and the swelling breast ;

* Algernon Sidney.

† Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of Shaftesbury.

The look resistless, piercing to the soul,
And by the soul inform'd, when drest in love
She sits high-smiling in the conscious eye.

Island of bliss ! amid the subject seas,
That thunder round thy rocky coasts, set up,
At once the wonder, terrour, and delight,
Of distant nations ; whose remotest shores
Can soon be shaken by thy naval arm ;
Not to be shook thyself, but all assaults
Baffling, as thy hoar cliffs the loud sea-wave.

O Thou ! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of Empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving Virtues round the land,
In bright patrol : white Peace, and social Love ;
The tender-looking Charity, intent
On gentle deeds, and shedding tears through smiles ;
Undaunted Truth, and dignity of mind ;
Courage compos'd, and keen ; sound Temperance,
Healthful in heart and look ; clear Chastity,
With blushes reddening as she moves along,
Disorder'd at the deep regard she draws ;
Rough Industry ; Activity untir'd,
With copious life inform'd, and all awake :
While in the radiant front superior shines
That first paternal virtue, public zeal ;
Who throws o'er all an equal wide survey,
And, ever musing on the common weal,
Still labours glorious with some great design.

Low walks the Sun, and broadens by degrees,
Just o'er the verge of day. The shifting clouds
Assembled gay, a richly-gorgeous train,
In all their pomp attend his setting throne.
Air, Earth, and Ocean smile immense. And now,
As if his weary chariot sought the bowers
Of Amphitritè, and her tending nymphs,
(So Grecian fable sung,) he dips his orb ;
Now half-immers'd ; and now a golden curve
Gives one bright glance, then total disappears.

For ever running an enchanted round,
Passes the day, deceitful, vain, and void ;
As fleets the vision o'er the formful brain,
This moment hurrying wild the impassion'd soul,
The next in nothing lost. 'Tis so to him,
The dreamer of this Earth, an idle blank :
A sight of horror to the cruel wretch,
Who, all day long in sordid pleasure roll'd,
Himself an useless load, has squander'd vile,
Upon his scoundrel train, what might have cheer'd
A drooping family of modest worth.
But to the generous still-improving mind,
That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,
Diffusing kind beneficence around,
Boastless, as now descends the silent dew ;
To him the long review of order'd life
Is inward rapture, only to be felt.

Confess'd from yonder slow-extinguish'd clouds,
All ether softening, sober Evening takes
Her wonted station in the middle air ;
A thousand shadows at her beck. First this
She sends on Earth ; then that of deeper dye
Steals soft behind ; and then a deeper still,
In circle following circle, gathers round,
To close the face of things. A fresher gale
Begins to wave the wood, and stir the stream,
Sweeping with shadowy gust the fields of corn ;
While the quail clamours for his running mate.
Wide o'er the thistly lawn, as swells the breeze,
A whitening shower of vegetable down
Amusive floats. The kind impartial care
Of Nature nought disdains : thoughtful to feed

Her lowest sons, and clothe the coming year,
From field to field the feather'd seeds she wings.

His folded flock secure, the shepherd home
Hies, merry-hearted ; and by turns relieves
The ruddy milk-maid of her brimming pail ;
The beauty whom perhaps his witless heart,
Unknowing what the joy-mixt anguish means,
Sincerely loves, by that best language shown
Of cordial glances, and obliging deeds.
Onward they pass, o'er many a panting height
And valley sunk, and unfrequented ; where
At fall of eve the Fairy people throng,
In various game, and revelry, to pass
The summer night, as village-stories tell.
But far about they wander from the grave
Of him, whom his ungentle fortune urg'd
Against his own sad breast to lift the hand
Of impious violence. The lonely tower
Is also shunn'd ; whose mournful chambers hold,
So night-struck fancy dreams, the yelling ghost.
Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem ; and through the dark,

A moving radiance twinkles. Evening yields
The world to Night ; not in her winter-robe
Of massy Stygian woof, but loose array'd
In mantle dun. A faint erroneous ray,
Glanc'd from th' imperfect surfaces of things,
Flings half an image on the straining eye :
While wavering woods, and villages, and streams,
And rocks, and mountain-tops, that long retain'd
Th' ascending gleam, are all one swimming scene,
Uncertain if beheld. Sudden to Heaven
Thence weary vision turns ; where, leading soft
The silent hours of love, with purest ray
Sweet Venus shines ; and from her genial rise,
When day-light sickens till it springs afresh,
Unrival'd reigns, the fairest lamp of night.
As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
With cherish'd gaze, the lambent lightnings shoot
Across the sky ; or horizontal dart
In wondrous shapes : by fearful murmuring crowds
Portentous deem'd. Amid the radiant orbs,
That more than deck, that animate the sky,
The life-infusing suns of other worlds ;
Lo ! from the dread immensity of space
Returning with accelerated course,
The rushing comet to the Sun descends ;
And as he sinks below the shading Earth,
With awful train projected o'er the Heavens,
The guilty nations tremble. But, above
Those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequacious herd, to mystic faith
And blind amazement prone, the enlighten'd few,
Whose godlike minds philosophy exalts,
The glorious stranger hail. They feel a joy
Divinely great ; they in their powers exult,
That wondrous force of thought, which mounting spurns

This dusky spot, and measures all the sky ;
While, from his far excursion through the wilds
Of barren ether, faithful to his time,
They see the blazing wonder rise anew,
In seeming terrour clad, but kindly bent
To work the will of all-sustaining Love :
From his huge vapoury train perhaps to shake
Reviving moisture on the numerous orbs,
Through which his long ellipsis winds ; perhaps
To lend new fuel to declining suns,
To light up worlds, and feed th' eternal fire.

With thee, serene Philosophy, with thee,
 And thy bright garland, let me crown my song !
 Effusive source of evidence, and truth !
 A lustre shedding o'er th' ennobled mind,
 Stronger than summer-noon ; and pure as that,
 Whose mild vibrations soothe the parted soul,
 New to the dawning of celestial day. [thee,
 Hence through her nourish'd powers, enlarg'd by
 She springs aloft, with elevated pride,
 Above the tangling mass of low desires,
 That bind the fluttering crowd : and, angel-wing'd,
 The heights of science and of virtue gains,
 Where all is calm and clear ; with Nature round,
 Or in the starry regions, or th' abyss,
 To Reason's and to Fancy's eye display'd :
 The first up-tracing, from the dreary void,
 The chain of causes and effects to Him,
 The world-producing Essence, who alone
 Possesses being ; while the last receives
 The whole magnificence of Heaven and Earth,
 And every beauty, delicate or bold,
 Obvious or more remote, with livelier sense,
 Diffusive painted on the rapid mind.

Tutor'd by thee, hence Poetry exalts
 Her voice to ages ; and informs the page
 With music, image, sentiment, and thought,
 Never to die ! the treasure of mankind !
 Their highest honour, and their truest joy !

Without thee, what were unenlighten'd man ?
 A savage roaming through the woods and wilds,
 In quest of prey ; and with th' unfashion'd fur
 Rough-clad ; devoid of every finer art,
 And elegance of life. Nor happiness
 Domestic, mix'd of tenderness and care,
 Nor moral excellence, nor social bliss,
 Nor guardian law were his ; nor various skill
 To turn the furrow, or to guide the tool
 Mechanic ; nor the heaven-conducted prow
 Of navigation bold, that fearless braves
 The burning Line, or dares the wintery Pole ;
 Mother severe of infinite delights !
 Nothing, save rapine, indolence, and guile,
 And woes on woes, a still-revolving train !
 Whose horrid circle had made human life
 Than non-existence worse : but, taught by thee,
 Ours are the plans of policy and peace ;
 To live like brothers, and conjunctive all
 Embellish life. While thus laborious crowds
 Ply the tough oar, Philosophy directs
 The ruling helm ; or like the liberal breath
 Of potent Heaven, invisible, the sail
 Swells out, and bears th' inferior world along.

Nor to this evanescent speck of Earth
 Poorly confin'd, the radiant tracts on high
 Are her exalted range ; intent to gaze
 Creation through ; and, from that full complex
 Of never-ending wonders, to conceive
 Of the Sole Being right, who spoke the word,
 And Nature mov'd complete. With inward view,
 Thence on th' ideal kingdom swift she turns
 Her eye ; and instant, at her powerful glance,
 Th' obedient phantoms vanish or appear ;
 Compound, divide, and into order shift,
 Each to his rank, from plain perception up
 To the fair forms of Fancy's fleeting train :
 To reason then, deducing truth from truth ;
 And notion quite abstract ; where first begins
 The world of spirits, action all, and life
 Unfetter'd, and unmixt. But here the cloud,
 So wills Eternal Providence, sits deep.

Enough for us to know that this dark state,
 In wayward passions lost, and vain pursuits,
 This infancy of Being, cannot prove
 The final issue of the works of God,
 By boundless love and perfect wisdom form'd,
 And ever rising with the rising mind.

AUTUMN. 1790.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Addressed to Mr. Onslow.
 A prospect of the fields ready for harvest. Reflections in praise of industry raised by that view.
 Reaping. A tale relative to it. A harvest-storm.
 Shooting and hunting, their barbarity. A ludicrous account of fox-hunting. A view of an orchard. Wall-fruit. A vineyard. A description of fogs, frequent in the latter part of Autumn :
 whence a digression, enquiring into the rise of fountains and rivers. Birds of season considered, that now shift their habitation. The prodigious number of them that cover the northern and western isles of Scotland. Hence a view of the country. A prospect of the discoloured, fading woods. After a gentle dusky day, moon-light.
 Autumnal meteors. Morning : to which succeeds a calm, pure, sun-shiny day, such as usually shuts up the season. The harvest being gathered in, the country dissolved in joy. The whole concludes with a panegyric on a philosophical country life.

Crown'd with the sickle and the wheaten sheaf,
 While Autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain,
 Comes jovial on ; the Doric reed once more,
 Well pleas'd, I tune. Whate'er the Wintery frost
 Nitrous prepar'd ; the various-blossom'd Spring
 Put in white promise forth ; and Summer suns
 Concocted strong, rush boundless now to view,
 Full, perfect all, and swell my glorious theme.

Onslow ! the Muse, ambitious of thy name,
 To grace, inspire, and dignify her song,
 Would from the public voice thy gentle ear
 Awhile engage. Thy noble care she knows,
 The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
 Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow ;
 While listening senates hang upon thy tongue
 Devolving through the maze of eloquence
 A roll of periods sweeter than her song.
 But she too pants for public virtue ; she,
 Though weak of power, yet strong in ardent will,
 Whene'er her country rushes on her heart,
 Assumes a bolder note, and fondly tries
 To mix the patriot's with the poet's flame.

When the bright Virgin gives the beauteous days,
 And Libra weighs in equal scales the year ;
 From Heaven's high cope the fierce effulgence shook

Of parting Summer, a serener blue,
 With golden light enliven'd, wide invests
 The happy world. Attemper'd suns arise,
 Sweet-beam'd, and shedding oft through lucid
 clouds

A pleasing calm ; while broad, and brown, below,
 Extensive harvests hang the heavy head.
 Rich, silent, deep, they stand ; for not a gale
 Rolls its light billows o'er the bending plain :
 A calm of plenty ! till the ruffled air

Falls from its poise, and gives the breeze to blow.
Rent is the fleecy mantle of the sky ;
The clouds fly different ; and the sudden Sun
By fits effulgent gilds th' illumin'd field,
And black by fits the shadows sweep along.
A gaily-chequer'd heart-expanding view,
Far as the circling eye can shoot around,
Unbounded tossing in a flood of corn.

These are thy blessings, Industry ! rough power ;
Whom labour still attends, and sweat, and pain :
Yet the kind source of every gentle art,
And all the soft civility of life :

Raiser of human-kind ! by Nature cast,
Naked, and helpless, out amid the woods
And wilds, to rude inclement elements ;
With various seeds of art deep in the mind
Implanted, and profusely pour'd around
Materials infinite ; but idle all.

Still unexerted, in th' unconscious breast,
Slept the lethargic powers ; corruption still,
Voracious, swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd o'er the savage year :
And still the sad barbarian, roving, mix'd
With beasts of prey ; or for his acorn-meal
Fought the fierce tusky boar ; a shivering wretch !
Aghast, and comfortless, when the bleak north,
With Winter charg'd, let the mix'd tempest fly
Hail, rain, and snow, and bitter-breathing frost :
Then to the shelter of the hut he fled ;
And the wild season, sordid, pin'd away.

For home he had not ; home is the resort
Of love, of joy, of peace and plenty, where,
Supported and supporting, polish'd friends,
And dear relations, mingle into bliss.
But this the rugged savage never felt,
Ev'n desolate in crowds ; and thus his days
Roll'd heavy, dark, and unenjoy'd along :
A waste of time : till Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth :
His faculties unfolded ; pointed out
Where lavish Nature the directing hand
Of Art demanded ; show'd him how to raise
His feeble force by the mechanic powers,
To dig the mineral from the vaulted Earth,
On what to turn the piercing rage of fire,
On what the torrent, and the gather'd blast ;
Gave the tall ancient forest to his axe ;
Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone,
Till by degrees the finish'd fabric rose ;
Tore from his limbs the blood-polluted fur,
And wrapt them in the woolly vestment warm,
Or bright in glossy silk, and flowing lawn ;
With wholesome viands fill'd his table, pour'd
The generous glass around, inspir'd to wake
The life-refining soul of decent wit :
Nor stopp'd at barren bare necessity ;
But, still advancing bolder, led him on
To pomp, to pleasure, elegance, and grace ;
And, breathing high ambition through his soul,
Set science, wisdom, glory, in his view,
And bade him be the Lord of all below.

Then gathering men their natural powers combin'd,
And form'd a public ; to the general good
Submitting, aiming, and conducting all.
For this the patriot-council met, the full,
The free, and fairly represented whole ;
For this they plann'd the holy guardian laws,
Distinguish'd orders, animated arts,
And, with joint force Oppression chaining, set
Imperial Justice at the helm ; yet still

To them accountable ; nor slavish dream'd
That toiling millions must resign their weal,
And all the honey of their search, to such
As for themselves alone themselves have rais'd.

Hence every form of cultivated life
In order set, protected, and inspir'd,
Into perfection wrought. Uniting all,
Society grew numerous, high, polite,
And happy. Nurse of art ! the city rear'd
In beauteous pride her tower-encircled head ;
And, stretching street on street, by thousands drew,
From twining woody haunts, or the tough yew
To bows strong-straining, her aspiring sons.

Then Commerce brought into the public walk
The busy merchant ; the big warehouse built ;
Rais'd the strong crane ; choak'd up the loaded street

With foreign plenty ; and thy stream, O Thames,
Large, gentle, deep, majestic, king of floods !
Chose for his grand resort. On either hand,
Like a long wintery forest, groves of masts
Shot up their spires ; the bellying sheet between Possess'd the breezy void ; the sooty hulk
Steer'd sluggish on ; the splendid barge along
Row'd, regular, to harmony ; around,
The boat, light skimming, stretch'd its oary wings ;
While deep the various voice of fervent toil [oak
From bank to bank increas'd ; whence ribb'd with
To bear the British thunder, black, and bold,
The roaring vessel rush'd into the main.

Then too the pillar'd dome, magnific, heav'd
Its ample roof ; and Luxury within
Pour'd out her glittering stores ; the canvass smooth,
With glowing life protuberant, to the view
Embodied rose ; the statue seem'd to breathe,
And soften into flesh, beneath the touch
Of forming art, imagination-flush'd.

All is the gift of Industry ; whate'er
Exalts, embellishes, and renders life
Delightful. Pensive Winter cheer'd by him
Sits at the social fire, and happy bears
Th' excluded tempest idly rave along ;
His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy Spring ;
Without him Summer were an arid waste ;
Nor to th' Autumnal months could thus transmit
Those full, mature, immeasurable stores,
That, waving round, recall my wandering song.

Soon as the morning trembles o'er the sky,
And, unperceiv'd, unfolds the spreading day ;
Before the ripen'd field the reapers stand,
In fair array ; each by the lass he loves,
To bear the rougher part, and mitigate
By nameless gentle offices her toil.
At once they stoop and swell the lusty sheaves ;
While through their cheerful band the rural talk,
The rural scandal, and the rural jest,
Fly harmless, to deceive the tedious time,
And steal unfelt the sultry hours away.
Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks ;
And, conscious, glancing oft on every side
His sated eye, feels his heart heave with joy.
The gleaners spread around, and here and there,
Spike after spike, their scanty harvest pick.
Be not too narrow, husbandmen ; but fling
From the full sheaf, with charitable stealth,
The liberal handful. Think, oh, grateful think !
How good the God of Harvest is to you ;
Who pours abundance o'er your flowing fields ;
While these unhappy partners of your kind
..... hover round you like the fowls of Heaven,

And ask their humble dole. The various turns
Of fortune ponder; that your sons may want
What now, with hard reluctance, faint, ye give.

The lovely young Lavinia once had friends;
And Fortune smil'd, deceitful, on her birth.
For, in her helpless years depriv'd of all,
Of every stay, save Innocence and Heaven,
She, with her widow'd mother, feeble, old,
And poor, liv'd in a cottage, far retir'd
Among the windings of a woody vale;
By solitude and deep surrounding shades,
But more by bashful modesty, conceal'd.
Together thus they shunn'd the cruel scorn
Which virtue, sunk to poverty, would meet
From giddy passion and low-minded pride:
Almost on Nature's common bounty fed;
Like the gay birds that sung them to repose,
Content, and careless of to-morrow's fare.
Her form was fresher than the morning rose,
When the dew wets its leaves; unstain'd and pure,
As is the lily, or the mountain snow.

The modest virtues mingled in her eyes,
Still on the ground dejected, darting all
Their humid beams into the blooming flowers;
Or when the mournful tale her mother told,
Of what her faithless fortune promis'd once,
Thrill'd in her thought, they, like the dewy star
Of evening, shone in tears. A native grace
Sat fair-proportion'd on her polish'd limbs,
Veil'd in a simple robe, their best attire,
Beyond the pomp of dress; for loveliness
Needs not the foreign aid of ornament,
But is when unadorn'd adorn'd the most.
Thoughtless of beauty, she was Beauty's self,
Recluse amid the close-embowering woods.
As in the hollow breast of Appenine,
Beneath the shelter of encircling hills
A myrtle rises, far from human eye,
And breathes its balmy fragrance o'er the wild;
So flourish'd blooming, and unseen by all,
The sweet Lavinia; till, at length, compell'd
By strong Necessity's supreme command,
With smiling patience in her looks, she went
To glean Palemon's fields. The pride of swains
Palemon was, the generous, and the rich;
Who led the rural life in all its joy
And elegance, such as Arcadian song
Transmits from ancient uncorrupted times;
When tyrant custom had not shackled man,
But free to follow nature was the mode.
He then, his fancy with autumnal scenes
Amusing, chanc'd beside his reaper-train
To walk, when poor Lavinia drew his eye;
Unconscious of her power, and turning quick
With unaffected blushes from his gaze:
He saw her charming, but he saw not half
The charms her downcast modesty conceal'd.
That very moment love and chaste desire
Sprung in his bosom, to himself unknown;
For still the world prevail'd; and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field:
And thus in secret to his soul he sigh'd.

"What pity! that so delicate a form,
By beauty kindled, where enlivening sense
And more than vulgar goodness seem to dwell,
Should be devoted to the rude embrace
Of some indecent clown! She looks, methinks,
Of old Acasto's line; and to my mind
Recalls that patron of my happy life,

From whom my liberal fortune took its rise;
Now to the dust gone down; his houses, lands,
And once fair-spreading family, dissolv'd.
'Tis said that in some lone obscure retreat,
Urg'd by remembrance sad, and decent pride,
Far from those scenes which knew their better days,
His aged widow and his daughter live,
Whom yet my fruitless search could never find.
Romantic wish! would this the daughter were!"

When, strict enquiring, from herself he found
She was the same, the daughter of his friend,
Of bountiful Acasto; who can speak
The mingled passions that surpris'd his heart,
And through his nerves in shivering transport ran?
Then blaz'd his smother'd flame, avow'd, and bold;
And, as he view'd her, ardent, o'er and o'er,
Love, gratitude, and pity, wept at once.
Confus'd, and frighten'd at his sudden tears,
Her rising beauties flush'd a higher bloom,
As thus Palemon, passionate and just,
Pour'd out the pious rapture of his soul.

"And art thou then Acasto's dear remains?
She, whom my restless gratitude has sought
So long in vain? O, Heavens! the very same,
The soften'd image of my noble friend,
Alive his every look, his every feature,
More elegantly touch'd. Sweeter than Spring!
Thou sole surviving blossom from the root
That nourish'd up my fortune! say, ah where,
In what sequester'd desert, hast thou drawn
The kindest aspect of delighted Heaven?
Into such beauty spread, and blown so fair;
Though poverty's cold wind, and crushing rain,
Beat keen, and heavy, on thy tender years?
O let me now, into a richer soil, [showers,
Transplant thee safe! where vernal suns, and
Diffuse their warmest, largest influence;
And of my garden be the pride and joy!
Ill it befits thee, oh! it ill befits

Acasto's daughter, his whose open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ampler heart,
The father of a country, thus to pick
The very refuse of those harvest-fields,
Which from his bounteous friendship I enjoy
Then throw that shameful pittance from thy hand,
But ill apply'd to such a rugged task;
The fields, the master, all, my fair, are thine;
If to the various blessings which thy house
Has on me lavish'd, thou wilt add that bliss,
That dearest bliss, the power of blessing thee!"

Here ceas'd the youth, yet still his speaking eye
Express'd the sacred triumph of his soul,
With conscious virtue, gratitude, and love,
Above the vulgar joy divinely rais'd.
Nor waited he reply. Won by the charm
Of goodness irresistible, and all
In sweet disorder lost, she blush'd consent.
The news immediate to her mother brought,
While, pierc'd with anxious thought, she pin'd away
The lonely moments for Lavinia's fate;
Amaz'd, and scarce believing what she heard,
Joy seiz'd her wither'd veins, and one bright gleam
Of setting life shone on her evening hours:
Not less enraptur'd than the happy pair;
Who flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves,
And good, the grace of all the country round.

Defeating oft the labours of the year,
The sultry south collects a potent blast.
At first, the groves are scarcely seen to stir

Their trembling tops, and a still murmur runs
 Along the soft-inclining fields of corn.
 But as th' ærial tempest fuller swells,
 And in one mighty stream, invisible,
 Immense, the whole excited atmosphere,
 Impetuous rushes o'er the sounding world :
 Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
 A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves,
 High-beat, the circling mountains eddy in,
 From the bare wild, the dissipated storm,
 And send it in a torrent down the vale.
 Expos'd, and naked, to its utmost rage,
 Through all the sea of harvest rolling round,
 The billowy plain floats wide ; nor can evade,
 Though pliant to the blast, its seizing force ;
 Or whirl'd in air, or into vacant chaff
 Shook waste. And sometimes too a burst of rain,
 Swept from the black horizon, broad, descends
 In one continuous flood. Still over head
 The mingling tempest weaves its gloom, and still
 The deluge deepens ; till the fields around
 Lie sunk and flatted, in the sordid wave.
 Sudden, the ditches swell ; the meadows swim.
 Red, from the hills, innumerable streams
 Tumultuous roar ; and high above its banks
 The river lift ; before whose rushing tide,
 Herds, flocks, and harvest, cottages, and swains,
 Roll mingled down ; all that the winds had spar'd
 In one wild moment ruin'd ; the big hopes,
 And well-earn'd treasures of the painful year.
 Fled to some eminence, the husbandman
 Helpless beholds the miserable wreck
 Driving along : his drowning ox at once
 Descending, with his labours scatter'd round,
 He sees ; and instant o'er his shivering thought
 Comes Winter unprovided, and a train
 Of claimant children dear. Ye masters, then,
 Be mindful of the rough laborious hand,
 That sinks you soft in elegance and ease ;
 Be mindful of those limbs in russet clad,
 Whose toil to yours is warmth, and graceful pride :
 And, oh ! be mindful of that sparing board,
 Which covers yours with luxury profuse,
 Makes your glass sparkle, and your sense rejoice !
 Nor cruelly demand what the deep rains
 And all-involving winds have swept away.

Here the rude clamour of the sportsman's joy,
 The gun fast-thundering, and the winded horn,
 Would tempt the Muse to sing the rural game :
 How, in his mid-career, the spaniel struck,
 Stiff, by the tainted gale, with open nose,
 Out-stretch'd, and finely sensible, draws full,
 Fearful, and cautious, on the latent prey ;
 As in the sun the circling covey bask
 Their varied plumes, and watchful every way,
 Through the rough stubble turn the secret eye.
 Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat
 Their idle wings, entangled more and more :
 Nor on the surges of the boundless air,
 Though borne triumphant, are they safe ; the gun,
 Glanc'd just, and sudden, from the fowler's eye,
 O'ertakes their sounding pinions ; and again,
 Immediate, brings them from the towering wing,
 Dead to the ground : or drives them wide-dispers'd,
 Wounded, and wheeling various, down the wind.

These are not subjects for the peaceful Muse,
 Nor will she stain with such her spotless song ;
 Then most delighted, when she social sees
 The whole mix'd animal creation round
 Alive, and happy. 'Tis not joy to her,

This falsely-cheerful barbarous game of death ;
 This rage of pleasure, which the restless youth
 Awakes, impatient, with the gleaming morn ;
 When beasts of prey retire, that all night long,
 Urg'd by necessity, had rang'd the dark,
 As if their conscious ravage shunn'd the light,
 Asham'd. Not so the steady tyrant man,
 Who with the thoughtless insolence of power
 Inflam'd, beyond the most infuriate wrath
 Of the worst monster that e'er roam'd the waste,
 For sport alone pursues the cruel chase,
 Amid the beamings of the gentle days.
 Upbraid, ye ravening tribes, our wanton rage,
 For hunger kindles you, and lawless want ;
 But lavish fed, in Nature's bounty roll'd,
 To joy at anguish, and delight in blood,
 Is what your horrid bosoms never knew.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare !
 Scar'd from the corn, and now to some lone seat
 Retir'd : the rushy fen ; the ragged furze,
 Stretch'd o'er the stony heath ; the stubble chapt ;
 The thistly lawn ; the thick-entangled broom ;
 Of the same friendly hue, the wither'd fern ;
 The fallow ground laid open to the Sun,
 Concoctive ; and the nodding sandy bank,
 Hung o'er the mazes of the mountain brook.
 Vain is her best precaution ; though she sits
 Conceal'd, with folded ears ; unsleeping eyes,
 By Nature rais'd to take th' horizon in ;
 And head couch'd close betwixt her hairy feet,
 In act to spring away. The scented dew
 Betrays her early labyrinth ; and deep,
 In scatter'd sullen openings, far behind,
 With every breeze she hears the coming storm.
 But nearer, and more frequent, as it loads
 The sighing gale, she springs amaz'd, and all
 The savage soul of game is up at once :
 The pack full-opening, various ; the shrill horn
 Resounded from the hills ; the neighing steed,
 Wild for the chase : and the loud hunter's shout ;
 O'er a weak, harmless, flying creature, all
 Mix'd in mad tumult, and discordant joy.

The stag too, singled from the herd, where long
 He rang'd the branching monarch of the shades,
 Before the tempest drives. At first, in speed
 He, sprightly, puts his faith ; and, rous'd by fear,
 Gives all his swift ærial soul to flight ;
 Against the breeze he darts, that way the more
 To leave the lessening murderous cry behind :
 Deception short ; though fleetier than the winds
 Blown o'er the keen-air'd mountains by the north,
 He bursts the thickets, glances through the glades,
 And plunges deep into the wildest wood ;
 If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the track
 Hot-steaming, up behind him come again
 Th' inhuman rout, and from the shady depth
 Expel him, circling through his every shift.
 He sweeps the forest oft ; and sobbing sees
 The glades, mild opening to the golden day ;
 Where, in kind contest, with his butting friends
 He wont to struggle, or his loves enjoy
 Oft in the full-descending flood he tries
 To lose the scent, and lave his burning sides :
 Oft seeks the herd ; the watchful herd, alarm'd,
 With selfish care avoid a brother's woe.
 What shall he do ? His once so vivid nerves,
 So full of buoyant spirit, now no more
 Inspire the course ; but fainting breathless toil,
 Sick, seizes on his heart : he stands at bay ;
 And puts his last weak refuge in despair.

The big round tears run down his dappled face ;
He groans in anguish ; while the growling pack,
Blood-happy, hang at his fair jutting chest,
And mark his beauteous chequer'd sides with gore.

Of this enough. But if the sylvan youth,
Whose fervent blood boils into violence,
Must have the chase ; behold, despising flight,
The rous'd-up lion, resolute, and slow,
Advancing full on the protended spear,
And coward-band, that circling wheel aloof.
Slunk from the cavern, and the troubled wood,
See the grim wolf ; on him his shaggy foe
Vindictive fix, and let the ruffian die :
Or, growling horrid, as the brindled boar
Grins fell destruction, to the monster's heart
Let the dart lighten from the nervous arm.

These Britain knows not ; give, ye Britons, then
Your sportive fury, pitiless, to pour
Loose on the nightly robber of the fold :
Him, from his craggy winding haunts unearth'd,
Let all the thunder of the chase pursue.
Throw the broad ditch behind you ; o'er the hedge
High bound, resistless ; nor the deep morass
Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness
Pick your nice way ; into the perilous flood
Bear fearless, of the raging instinct full ;
And as you ride the torrent, to the banks
Your triumph sound sonorous, running round,
From rock to rock, in circling echoes tost ;
Then scale the mountains to their woody tops ;
Rush down the dangerous steep ; and o'er the lawn,
In fancy swallowing up the space between,
Pour all your speed into the rapid game ;
For happy he ! who tops the wheeling chase ;
Has every maze evolv'd, and every guile
Disclos'd ; who knows the merits of the pack ;
Who saw the villain seiz'd, and dying hard,
Without complaint, though by an hundred mouths
Relentless torn : O glorious he, beyond
His daring peers ! when the retreating horn
Calls them to ghostly halls of grey renown,
With woodland honours grac'd ; the fox's fur,
Depending decent from the roof ; and spread
Round the drear walls, with antic figures fierce,
The stag's large front : he then is loudest heard,
When the night staggers with severer toils,
With feats Thessalian Centaurs never knew,
And their repeated wonders shake the dome.

But first the fuel'd chimney blazes wide ;
The tankards foam ; and the strong table groans
Beneath the smoking surloin, stretch'd immense
From side to side ; in which, with desperate knife,
They deep incision make, and talk the while
Of England's glory, ne'er to be defac'd
While hence they borrow vigour : or amain
Into the pasty plung'd, at intervals,
If stomach keen can intervals allow,
Relating all the glories of the chase.
Then satiated Hunger bids his brother Thirst
Produce the mighty bowl ; the mighty bowl,
Swell'd high with fiery juice, steams liberal round
A potent gale, delicious as the breath
Of Maia to the love-sick shepherdess,
On violets diffus'd, while soft she hears
Her panting shepherd stealing to her arms.
Nor wanting is the brown October, drawn,
Mature and perfect, from his dark retreat
Of thirty years ; and now his honest front
Flames in the light refulgent, not afraid
Ev'n with the vineyard's best produce to vie.

To cheat the thirsty moments, Whist awhile
Walks his dull round, beneath a cloud of smoke,
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe ; or the quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon : while romp-loving Miss
Is haul'd about, in gallantry robust.

At last these puling idlenesses laid
Aside, frequent and full, the dry divan
Close in firm circle ; and set, ardent, in
For serious drinking. Nor evasion sly,
Nor sober shift, is to the puking wretch
Indulg'd apart ; but earnest, brimming bowls
Lave every soul, the table floating round,
And pavement, faithless to the fuddled foot.
Thus as they swim in mutual swill, the talk,
Vociferous at once from twenty tongues,
Reels fast from theme to theme ; from horses,
hounds,

To church or mistress, politics or ghost,
In endless mazes, intricate, perplex'd.
Meantime, with sudden interruption, loud,
Th' impatient catch bursts from the joyous heart ;
That moment touch'd is every kindred soul ;
And, opening in a full-mouth'd cry of joy,
The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse, go round ;
While, from their slumbers shook, the kennell'd
hounds

Mix in the music of the day again.
As when the tempest, that has vex'd the deep
The dark night long, with fainter murmurs falls ;
So gradual sinks their mirth. Their feeble tongues,
Unable to take up the cumbrous word,
Lie quite dissolv'd. Before their maudlin eyes,
Seen dim, and blue, the double tapers dance,
Like the Sun wading through the misty sky.
Then sliding soft, they drop. Confus'd above,
Glasses and bottles, pipes and gazetteers,
As if the table ev'n itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene ; and wide, below,
Is heap'd the social slaughter ; where astride
The lubber power in filthy triumph sits,
Slumberous, inclining still from side to side,
And steeps them drench'd in potent sleep till morn.
Perhaps some doctor, of tremendous paunch,
Awful and deep, a black abyss of drink,
Out-lives them all ; and from his bury'd flock
Retiring, full of rumination sad,
Laments the weakness of these latter times.

But if the rougher sex by this fierce sport
Is hurried wild, let not such horrid joy
E'er stain the bosom of the British fair.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them !
Uncomely courage, unbeseeming skill ;
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed ;
The cap, the whip, the masculine attire ;
In which they roughen to the sense, and all
The winning softness of their sex is lost.
In them 'tis graceful to dissolve at woe ;
With every motion, every word, to wave
Quick o'er the kindling cheek the ready blush ;
And from the smallest violence to shrink
Unequal, then the loveliest in their fears ;
And by this silent adulation, soft,
To their protection more engaging man.
O may their eyes no miserable sight,
Save weeping lovers, see ! a nobler game,
Through Love's enchanting wiles pursued, yet fled,
In chase ambiguous. May their tender limbs
Float in the loose simplicity of dress !
And, fashion'd all to harmony, alone

Know they to seize the captivated soul,
 In rapture warbled from love-breathing lips ;
 To teach the lute to languish ; with smooth step,
 Disclosing motion in its every charm,
 To swim along, and swell the mazy dance ;
 To train the foliage o'er the snowy lawn ;
 To guide the pencil, turn the tuneful page ;
 To lend new flavour to the fruitful year,
 And heighten Nature's dainties : in their race
 To rear their graces into second life ;
 To give society its highest taste ;
 Well-order'd home man's best delight to make ;
 And by submissive wisdom, modest skill,
 With every gentle care-eluding art,
 To raise the virtues, animate the bliss,
 And sweeten all the toils of human life :
 This be the female dignity and praise.

Ye swains, now hasten to the hazel bank ;
 Where, down yon dale, the wildly-winding brook
 Falls hoarse from steep to steep. In close array,
 Fit for the thickets and the tangling shrub,
 Ye virgins come. For you their latest song
 The woodlands raise ; the clustering nuts for you
 The lover finds amid the secret shade ;
 And, where they burnish on the topmost bough,
 With active vigour crushes down the tree ;
 Or shakes them ripe from the resigning husk,
 A glossy shower, and of an ardent brown,
 As are the ringlets of Melinda's hair :
 Melinda ! form'd with every grace complete,
 Yet these neglecting, above beauty wise,
 And far transcending such a vulgar praise.

Hence from the busy joy-resounding fields,
 In cheerful error, let us tread the maze
 Of Autumn, unconfin'd ; and taste, reviv'd,
 The breath of orchard big with bending fruit.
 Obedient to the breeze and beating ray,
 From the deep-loaded bough a mellow shower
 Incessant melts away. The juicy year
 Lies, in a soft profusion, scatter'd round.
 A various sweetness swells the gentle race ;
 By Nature's all-refining hand prepar'd ;
 Of temper'd sun, and water, earth, and air,
 In ever-changing composition mixt.
 Such, falling frequent through the chiller night,
 The fragrant stores, the wide projected heaps
 Of apples, which the lusty-handed Year,
 Innumerable, o'er the blushing orchard shakes.
 A various spirit, fresh, delicious, keen,
 Dwells in their gelid pores ; and, active, points
 The piercing cyder for the thirsty tongue :
 Thy native theme, and boon-inspirer too,
 Phillips, Pomona's bard, the second thou
 Who nobly durst, in rhyme-unfetter'd verse,
 With British freedom sing the British song :
 How, from Silurian vats, high-sparkling wines
 Foam in transparent floods ; some strong, to cheer
 The wintery revels of the labouring hind ;
 And tasteful some, to cool the summer hours.

In this glad season, while his sweetest beams
 The Sun sheds equal o'er the meek'd day ;
 Oh, lose me in the green delightful walks
 Of, Doddington, thy seat, serene, and plain ;
 Where simple Nature reigns ; and every view,
 Diffusive, spreads the pure Dorsetian downs,
 In boundless prospect : yonder shagg'd with wood,
 Here rich with harvest, and there white with flocks !
 Meantime the grandeur of thy lofty dome,
 Far splendid, seizes on the ravish'd eye.
 New beauties rise with each revolving day ;

New columns swell ; and still the fresh Spring finds
 New plants to quicken, and new groves to green.
 Full of thy genius all ! the Muses' seat :
 Where, in the secret bower, and winding walk,
 For virtuous Young and thee they twine the bay.
 Here wandering oft, fir'd with the restless thirst
 Of thy applause, I solitary court
 Th' inspiring breeze : and meditate the book
 Of Nature ever open : aiming thence,
 Warm from the heart, to learn the moral song.
 Here, as I steal along the sunny wall,
 Where Autumn basks, with fruit empurpled deep,
 My pleasing theme continual prompts my thought :
 Presents the downy peach ; the shining plum ;
 The ruddy, fragrant nectarine ; and dark,
 Beneath his ample leaf, the luscious fig.
 The vine, too, here her curling tendrils shoots ;
 Hangs out her clusters, glowing to the south ;
 And scarcely wishes for a warmer sky.

Turn we a moment Fancy's rapid flight
 To vigorous soils, and climes of fair extent ;
 Where, by the potent Sun elated high,
 The vineyard swells refulgent on the day ;
 Spreads o'er the vale ; or up the mountain climbs,
 Profuse ; and drinks amid the sunny rocks,
 From cliff to cliff increas'd, the heighten'd blaze.
 Low bend the weighty boughs. The clusters clear,
 Half through the foliage seen, or ardent flame,
 Or shine transparent ; while perfection breathes
 White o'er the turgent film the living dew.
 As thus they brighten with exalted juice,
 'Touch'd into flavour by the mingling ray ;
 The rural youth and virgins o'er the field,
 Each fond for each to cull th' autumnal prime,
 Exulting rove, and speak the vintage nigh.
 Then comes the crushing swain ; the country floats,
 And foams unbounded with the mazy flood ;
 That by degrees fermented and refin'd,
 Round the rais'd nations pours the cup of joy :
 The claret smooth, red as the lip we press,
 In sparkling fancy, while we drain the bowl ;
 The mellow-tasted Burgundy ; and quick,
 As is the wit it gives, the gay Champagne.

Now, by the cool declining year condens'd,
 Descend the copious exhalations, check'd
 As up the middle sky unseen they stole,
 And roll the doubling fogs around the hill.
 No more the mountain, horrid, vast, sublime,
 Who pours a sweep of rivers from his sides,
 And high between contending kingdoms rears
 The rocky long division, fills the view
 With great variety ; but in a night
 Of gathering vapour, from the baffled sense
 Sinks dark and dreary. Thence expanding far,
 The huge dusk, gradual, swallows up the plain :
 Vanish the woods ; the dim-seen river seems
 Sullen, and slow, to roll the misty wave.
 Ev'n in the height of noon oppress, the Sun
 Sheds weak, and blunt, his wide-refracted ray ;
 Whence glaring oft, with many a broaden'd orb
 He frights the nations. Indistinct on Earth,
 Seen through the turbid air, beyond the life
 Objects appear ; and, wilder'd, o'er the waste
 The shepherd stalks gigantic. Till at last Wreath'd dun around, in deeper circles still
 Successive closing, sits the general fog
 Unbounded o'er the world ; and, mingling thick,
 A formless grey confusion covers all.
 As when of old (so sung the Hebrew bard)
 Light, uncollected, through the Chaos urg'd

Its infant way ; nor Order yet had drawn
His lovely train from out the dubious gloom.

These roving mists, that constant now begin
To smoke along the hilly country, these,
With weighty rains, and melted Alpine snows,
The mountain-cisterns fill, those ample stores
Of water, scoop'd among the hollow rocks ; [play,
Whence gush the streams, the ceaseless fountains
And their unfailing wealth the rivers draw.
Some sages say, that, where the numerous wave
For ever lashes the resounding shore,
Drill'd through the sandy stratum, every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise ;
Amid whose angles infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind,
And clear and sweeten, as they soak along.
Nor stops the restless fluid, mounting still,
Though oft amidst th' irriguous vale it springs ;
But to the mountain courted by the sand,
That leads it darkling on in faithful maze,
Far from the parent main, it boils again
Fresh into day ; and all the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting rills. But hence this vain
Amusive dream ! why should the waters love
To take so far a journey to the hills,
When the sweet valleys offer to their toil
Inviting quiet, and a nearer bed ?
Or if, by blind ambition led astray,
They must aspire ; why should they sudden stop
Among the broken mountain's rushy dells,
And, ere they gain its highest peak, desert
Th' attractive sand that charm'd their course so long ?
Besides, the hard agglomerating salts,
The spoil of ages, would impervious choke
Their secret channels ; or, by slow degrees,
High as the hills protrude the swelling vales :
Old Ocean too, suck'd through the porous globe,
Had long ere now forsook his horrid bed,
And brought Deucalion's watery times again.

Say then, where lurk the vast eternal springs,
That, like Creating Nature, lie conceal'd
From mortal eye, yet with their lavish stores
Refresh the globe, and all its joyous tribes ?
O, thou pervading Genius, given to man,
To trace the secrets of the dark abyss,
O, lay the mountains bare ! and wide display
Their hidden structure to th' astonish'd view !
Strip from the branching Alps their piny load ;
The huge encumbrance of horrific woods
From Asian Taurus, from Imaus stretch'd
Athwart the roving Tartar's sullen bounds !
Give opening Hemus to my searching eye,
And high Olympus pouring many a stream !
O, from the sounding summits of the north,
The Dofrine hills, through Scandinavia roll'd
To farthest Lapland and the Frozen Main ;
From lofty Caucasus, far-seen by those
Who in the Caspian and black Euxine toil ;
From cold Riphean rocks, which the wild Russ
Believes the stony girdle * of the world ;
And all the dreadful mountains, wrapt in storm,
Whence wide Siberia draws her lonely floods ;
O, sweep th' eternal snows ! Hung o'er the deep,
That ever works beneath his sounding base,
Bid Atlas, propping Heaven, as poets feign,
His subterranean wonders spread ! unveil

* The Muscovites call the Riphean mountains Weliki Camenypoys, that is, the great stony girdle ; because they suppose them to encompass the whole earth.

The miny caverns, blazing on the day,
Of Abyssinia's cloud-compelling cliffs,
And of the bending Mountains of the Moon ! †
O'ertopping all these giant sons of Earth,
Let the dire Andes, from the radiant line
Stretch'd to the stormy seas that thunder round
The southern Pole, their hideous deeps unfold !
Amazing scene ! Behold ! the glooms disclose,
I see the rivers in their infant beds !
Deep, deep I hear them, labouring to get free !
I see the leaning strata, artful rang'd ;
The gaping fissures to receive the rains,
The melting snows, and ever-dripping fogs,
Strow'd bibulous above I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, the layers then
Of mingled moulds, of more retentive earths,
The gutter'd rocks, and mazy-running clefts ;
That, while the stealing moisture they transmit,
Retard its motion, and forbid its waste.
Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains,
I see the rocky syphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs, of harden'd chalk,
Or stiff compacted clay, capacious form'd.
O'erflowing thence, the congregated stores,
The crystal treasures of the liquid world,
Through the stirr'd sands a bubbling passage burst,
And swelling out, around the middle steep,
Or from the bottoms of the bosom'd hills,
In pure effusion flow. United, thus,
Th' exhaling Sun, the vapour-burden'd air,
The gelid mountains, that to rain condens'd
These vapours in continual current draw,
And send them, o'er the fair divided earth,
In bounteous rivers to the deep again,
A social commerce hold, and firm support
The full adjusted harmony of things.

When Autumn scatters his departing gleams,
Warn'd of approaching Winter, gather'd, play
The swallow-people ; and toss'd wide around,
O'er the calm sky, in convolution swift,
The feather'd eddy floats : rejoicing once,
Ere to their wintry slumbers they retire ;
In clusters clung, beneath the mouldering bank,
And where, unpierc'd by frost, the cavern sweats,
Or rather into warmer climes convey'd,
With other kindred birds of season, there
They twitter cheerful, till the vernal months
Invite them welcome back : for, thronging, now
Innumerable wings are in commotion all.

Where the Rhine loses his majestic force
In Belgian plains, won from the raging deep,
By diligence amazing, and the strong
Unconquerable hand of Liberty,
The stork-assembly meets ; for many a day,
Consulting deep, and various, ere they take
Their arduous voyage through the liquid sky.
And now their route design'd, their leaders chose,
Their tribes adjusted, clean'd their vigorous wings ;
And many a circle, many a short essay,
Wheel'd round and round, in congregation full
The figur'd flight ascends ; and, riding high
Th' aerial billows, mixes with the clouds.

Or where the Northern Ocean, in vast whirls,
Boils round the naked melancholy isles
Of farthest Thulé, and th' Atlantic surge
Pours in among the stormy Hebrides ;
Who can recount what transigrations there

† A range of mountains in Africa, that surround almost all Monomotapa.

Are annual made? what nations come and go?
And how the living clouds on clouds arise?
Infinite wings! till all the plume-dark air
And rude resounding shore are one wild cry.

Here the plain harmless native his small flock,
And herd diminutive of many hues,
Tends on the little island's verdant swell,
The shepherd's sea-girt reign; or, to the rocks
Dire-clinging, gathers his ovarious food;
Or sweeps the fishy shore; or treasures up
The plumage, rising full, to form the bed
Of luxury. And here awhile the Muse,
High hovering o'er the broad cerulean scene,
Sees Caledonia, in romantic view:
Her airy mountains, from the waving main,
Invested with a keen diffusive sky,
Breathing the soul acute; her forests huge,
Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand
Planted of old; her azure lakes between,
Pour'd out extensive, and of watery wealth
Full; winding deep, and green, her fertile vales;
With many a cool translucent brimming flood
Wash'd lovely from the Tweed (pure parent stream,
Whose pastoral banks first heard my Doric reed,
With sylvan Jed, thy tributary brook)
To where the north-inflated tempest foams
O'er Orca's or Betubium's highest peak:
Nurse of a people, in misfortune's school
Train'd up to hardy deeds; soon visited
By Learning, when before the Gothic rage
She took her western flight. A manly race,
Of unsubmitting spirit, wise, and brave;
Who still through bleeding ages struggled hard,
(As well unhappy Wallace can attest,
Great patriot-hero! ill-requited chief!)
To hold a generous undiminish'd state;
Too much in vain! Hence of unequal bounds
Impatient, and by tempting glory borne
O'er every land, for every land their life
Has flow'd profuse, their piercing genius plann'd
And swell'd the pomp of peace their faithful toil,
As from their own clear north, in radiant streams,
Bright over Europe bursts the Boreal morn.

Oh, is there not some patriot, in whose power
That best, that godlike luxury is plac'd,
Of blessing thousands, thousands yet unborn,
Through late posterity? some, large of soul,
To cheer dejected industry? to give
A double harvest to the pining swain?
And teach the labouring hind the sweets of toil?
How, by the finest art, the native robe
To weave; how, white as Hyperborean snow,
To form the lucid lawn; with venturous oar
How to dash wide the billow; nor look on,
Shamefully passive, while Batavian fleets
Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores;
How all-enlivening trade to rouse, and wing
The prosperous sail, from every growing port,
Uninjur'd, round the sea-encircled globe;
And thus, in soul united as in name,
Bid Britain reign the mistress of the deep?

Yes, there are such. And full on thee, Argyll,
Her hope, her stay, her darling, and her boast,
From her first patriots and her heroes sprung,
Thy fond imploring country turns her eye;
In thee, with all a mother's triumph, sees
Her every virtue, every grace combin'd,
Her genius, wisdom, her engaging turn,
Her pride of honour, and her courage try'd,

Calm, and intrepid, in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field.
Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow:
For, powerful as thy sword, from thy rich tongue
Persuasion flows, and wins the high debate;
While mix'd in thee combine the charm of youth,
The force of manhood, and the depth of age.
Thee, Forbes, too, whom every worth attends,
As truth sincere, as weeping friendship kind,
Thee, truly generous, and in silence great,
Thy country feels through her reviving arts,
Plann'd by thy wisdom, by thy soul inform'd;
And seldom has she known a friend like thee.
But see the fading many-colour'd woods,
Shade deepening over shade, the country round
Imbrown; a crowded umbrage, dusk, and dun,
Of every hue, from wan-declining green
To sooty dark. These now the lonesome Muse,
Low-whispering, lead into their leaf-strown walks,
And give the season in its latest view.

Meantime, light shadowing all, a sober calm
Fleeces unbounded ether; whose least wave
Stands tremulous, uncertain where to turn
The gentle current: while illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the Sun,
And through their lucid vale his soften'd force
Shed o'er the peaceful world. Then is the time,
For those whom Wisdom and whom Nature charm,
To steal themselves from the degenerate crowd,
And soar above this little scene of things;
To tread low-thoughted Vice beneath their feet;
To soothe the throbbing passions into peace;
And woo lone Quiet in her silent walks.

Thus solitary, and in pensive guise,
Oft let me wander o'er the russet mead, [heard
And through the sadden'd grove, where scarce is
One dying strain, to cheer the woodman's toil.
Haply some widow'd songster pours his plaint,
Far, in faint warblings, through the tawny copse;
While congregated thrushes, linnets, larks,
And each wild throat, whose artless strains so late
Swell'd all the music of the swarming shades,
Robb'd of their tuneful souls, now shivering sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock;
With not a brightness waving o'er their plumes,
And nought save chattering discord in their note.
O, let not, aim'd from some inhuman eye,
The gun the music of the coming year
Destroy; and harmless, unsuspecting harm,
Lay the weak tribes a miserable prey,
In mingled murder, fluttering on the ground!

The pale descending year, yet pleasing still,
A gentler mood inspires; for now the leaf
Incessant rustles from the mournful grove,
Oft startling such as, studious, walk below,
And slowly circles through the waving air.
But should a quicker breeze amid the boughs
Sob, o'er the sky the leafy deluge streams;
Till chok'd, and matted with the dreary shower,
The forest-walks, at every rising gale,
Roll wide the wither'd waste, and whistle bleak.
Fled is the blasted verdure of the fields;
And, shrunk into their beds, the flowery race
Their sunny robes resign. Ev'n what remain'd
Of stronger fruits falls from the naked tree;
And woods, fields, gardens, orchards, all around
The desolated prospect thrills the soul.

He comes! he comes! in every breeze the power
Of philosophic Melancholy comes!
His near approach the sudden-starting tear,

The glowing cheek, the mild dejected air,
 The soften'd feature, and the beating heart,
 Pierc'd deep with many a virtuous pang, declare.
 O'er all the soul his sacred influence breathes !
 Inflames imagination ; through the breast
 Infuses every tenderness ; and far
 Beyond dim Earth exalts the swelling thought.
 Ten thousand thousand fleet ideas, such
 As never mingled with the vulgar dream,
 Crowd fast into the mind's creative eye.
 As fast the correspondent passions rise,
 As varied, and as high : devotion rais'd
 To rapture, and divine astonishment ;
 The love of Nature unconfin'd, and, chief,
 Of human race ; the large ambitious wish,
 To make them blest ; the sigh for suffering worth
 Lost in obscurity ; the noble scorn
 Of tyrant-pride ; the fearless great resolve ;
 The wonder which the dying patriot draws,
 Inspiring glory through remotest time ;
 Th' awaken'd throb for virtue, and for fame ;
 The sympathies of love, and friendship dear ;
 With all the social offspring of the heart.

Oh, bear me then to vast embowering shades,
 To twilight groves, and visionary vales ;
 To weeping grottoes, and prophetic glooms ;
 Where angel forms athwart the solemn dusk
 Tremendous sweep, or seem to sweep along ;
 And voices more than human, through the void
 Deep-sounding, seize th' enthusiastic ear !

Or is this gloom too much ? Then lead, ye powers,
 That o'er the garden and the rural seat
 Preside, which shining through the cheerful land
 In countless numbers blest Britannia sees ;
 O, lead me to the wide-extended walks,
 The fair majestic paradise of Stowe ! *
 Not Persian Cyrus on Ionia's shore
 E'er saw such sylvan scenes ; such various art
 By genius fir'd, such ardent genius tam'd
 By cool judicious art ; that, in the strife,
 All-beauteous Nature fears to be outdone.
 And there, O Pitt, thy country's early boast,
 There let me sit beneath the shelter'd slopes,
 Or in that temple † where, in future times,
 Thou well shalt merit a distinguish'd name ;
 And, with thy converse blest, catch the last smiles
 Of Autumn beaming o'er the yellow woods.
 While there with thee th' enchanted round I walk
 The regulated wild, gay Fancy then
 Will tread in thought the groves of Attic land ;
 Will from thy standard taste refine her own,
 Correct her pencil to the purest truth
 Of Nature, or, the unimpassion'd shades
 Forsaking, raise it to the human mind.
 Or if hereafter she, with juster hand,
 Shall draw the tragic scene, instruct her thou,
 To mark the varied movements of the heart,
 What every decent character requires,
 And every passion speaks : O, through her strain
 Breathe thy pathetic eloquence ! that moulds
 Th' attentive senate, charms, persuades, exalts,
 Of honest zeal the indignant lightning throws,
 And shakes Corruption on her venal throne.
 While thus we talk, and through Elysian vales
 Delighted rove, perhaps a sigh escapes :
 What pity, Cobham, thou thy verdant files
 Of order'd trees shouldst here inglorious range,

* The seat of the Lord Viscount Cobham.

† The temple of Virtue in Stowe-gardens.

Instead of squadrons flaming o'er the field,
 And long-embattled hosts ! when the proud foe,
 The faithless vain disturber of mankind,
 Insulting Gaul, has rous'd the world to war ;
 When keen, once more, within their bounds to press
 Those polish'd robbers, those ambitious slaves,
 The British youth would hail thy wise command,
 Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill.

The western Sun withdraws the shorten'd day ;
 And humid Evening, gliding o'er the sky,
 In her chill progress, to the ground condens'd
 The vapours throws. Where creeping waters ooze,
 Where marshes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
 Cluster the rolling fogs, and swim along
 The dusky-mantled lawn. Meanwhile the Moon,
 Full-orb'd, and breaking through the scatter'd
 clouds,

Shows her broad visage in the crimson'd east.
 Turn'd to the Sun direct, her spotted disk,
 Where mountains rise, umbrageous dales descend,
 And caverns deep, as optic tube describes,
 A smaller Earth, gives us his blaze again,
 Void of its flame, and sheds a softer day.
 Now through the passing cloud she seems to stoop,
 Now up the pure cerulean rides sublime.
 Wide the pale deluge floats, and streaming mild
 O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale,
 While rocks and floods reflect the quivering gleam,
 The whole air whitens with a boundless tide
 Of silver radiance, trembling round the world.

But when half-blotted from the sky her light,
 Fainting, permits the starry fires to burn
 With keener lustre through the depth of Heaven ;
 Or near extinct her deaden'd orb appears,
 And scarce appears, of sickly beamless white ;
 Oft in this season, silent from the north
 A blaze of meteors shoots : ensweeping first
 The lower skies, they all at once converge
 High to the crown of Heaven, and all at once
 Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend,
 And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
 All ether coursing in a maze of light.

From look to look, contagious through the crowd,
 The panic runs, and into wondrous shapes
 Th' appearance throws : armies in meet array,
 Throng'd with aerial spears and steeds of fire ;
 Till the long lines of full-extended war
 In bleeding fight commix'd, the sanguine flood
 Rolls a broad slaughter o'er the plains of Heaven.
 As thus they scan the visionary scene,
 On all sides swells the superstitious din,
 Incontinent ; and busy Phrenzy talks
 Of blood and battle ; cities overturn'd,
 And late at night in swallowing earthquake sunk,
 Or hideous wrapt in fierce ascending flame ;
 Of sallow famine, inundation, storm ;
 Of pestilence, and every great distress ;
 Empires subvers'd, when ruling Fate has struck
 Th' unalterable hour : ev'n Nature's self
 Is deem'd to totter on the brink of time.
 Not so the man of philosophic eye,
 And inspect sage ; the waving brightness he
 Curious surveys, inquisitive to know
 The causes, and materials, yet unfix'd,
 Of this appearance beautiful and new.

Now black, and deep, the night begins to fall,
 A shade immense. Sunk in the quenching gloom,
 Magnificent and vast, are Heaven and Earth.
 Order confounded lies ; all beauty void ;
 Distinction lost ; and gay variety

One universal blot : such the fair power
Of light, to kindle and create the whole.
Drear is the state of the benighted wretch,
Who then, bewilder'd, wanders through the dark,
Full of pale fancies, and chimeras huge ;
Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall.
Perhaps, impatient as he stumbles on,
Struck from the root of slimy rushes, blue,
The wild-fire scatters round, or gather'd trails
A length of flame deceitful o'er the moss :
Whither decoy'd by the fantastic blaze,
Now lost, and now renew'd, he sinks absorpt,
Rider and horse, amid the miry gulph :
While still, from day to day, his pining wife
And plaintive children his return await,
In wild conjecture lost. At other times,
Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious, gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor sits ; and shows the narrow path,
That winding leads through pits of death, or else
Instructs him how to take the dangerous ford.

The lengthen'd night elaps'd, the Morning shines
Serene, in all her dewy beauty bright,
Unfolding fair the last autumnal day.
And now the mounting Sun dispels the fog ;
The rigid hoar-frost melts before his beam ;
And hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dew-drops twinkle round.

Ah, see, where robb'd, and murder'd, in that pit
Lies the still heaving hive ! at evening snatch'd,
Beneath the cloud of guilt-concealing night,
And fix'd o'er sulphur : while, not dreaming ill,
The happy people, in their waxen cells,
Sat tending public cares, and planning schemes
Of temperance, for Winter poor ; rejoic'd
To mark, full flowing round, their copious stores.
Sudden the dark oppressive steam ascends ;
And, us'd to milder scents, the tender race,
By thousands, tumble from their honey'd domes,
Convolv'd, and agonizing in the dust.
And was it then for this you roam'd the Spring,
Intent from flower to flower ? for this you toil'd
Ceaseless the burning Summer-heats away ?
For this in Autumn search'd the blooming waste,
Nor lost one sunny gleam ? for this sad fate ?
O, man ! tyrannic lord ! how long, how long,
Shall prostrate Nature groan beneath your rage,
Awaiting renovation ? When oblig'd,
Must you destroy ? Of their ambrosial food
Can you not borrow ; and, in just return,
Afford them shelter from the wintry winds ?
Or, as the sharp year pinches, with their own
Again regale them on some smiling day ?
See where the stony bottom of their town
Looks desolate, and wild ; with here and there
A helpless number, who the ruin'd state
Survive, lamenting weak, cast out to death.
Thus a proud city, populous and rich,
Full of the works of peace, and high in joy,
At theatre or feast, or sunk in sleep,
(As late, Palermo, was thy fate !) is seiz'd
By some dread earthquake, and convulsive hurl'd
Sheer from the black foundation, stench-involv'd,
Into a gulph of blue sulphureous flame.

Hence every harsher sight ! for now the day,
O'er Heaven and Earth diffus'd, grows warm, and high,
Infinite splendour ! wide investing all.
How still the breeze ! save what the filmy threads

Of dew evaporate brushes from the plain.
How clear the cloudless sky ! how deeply ting'd
With a peculiar blue ! th' ethereal arch
How swell'd immense ! amid whose azure thron'd
The radiant Sun how gay ! how calm below
The gilded Earth ! the harvest-treasures all
Now gather'd in, beyond the rage of storms,
Sure to the swain ; the circling fence shut up ;
And instant Winter's utmost rage defy'd.
While, loose to festive joy, the country round
Laughs with the loud sincerity of mirth,
Shook to the wind their cares. The toil-strung youth,
By the quick sense of music taught alone,
Leaps wildly graceful in the lively dance.
Her every charm abroad, the village-toast,
Young, buxom, warm, in native beauty rich,
Darts not unmeaning looks ; and, where her eye
Points an approving smile, with double force
The cudgel rattles, and the wrestler twines.
Age, too, shines out ; and, garrulous, recounts
The feats of youth. Thus they rejoice ; nor think
That, with to-morrow's Sun, their annual toil
Begins again the never-ceasing round.

Oh, knew he but his happiness, of men
The happiest he ! who, far from public rage
Deep in the vale, with a choice few retir'd,
Drinks the pure pleasures of the rural life. [gate,
What though the dome be wanting, whose proud
Each morning, vomits out the sneaking crowd
Of flatterers false, and in their turn abus'd ?
Vile intercourse ! What though the glittering robe,
Of every hue reflected light can give,
Or floating loose, or stiff with mazy gold,
The pride and gaze of fools ! oppress him not ?
What though, from utmost land and sea purvey'd,
For him each rarer tributary life
Bleeds not, and his insatiate table heaps
With luxury and death ? What though his bowl
Flames not with costly juice : nor sunk in beds,
Oft of gay care, he tosses out the night,
Or melts the thoughtless hours in idle state ?
What though he knows not those fantastic joys,
That still amuse the wanton, still deceive ;
A face of pleasure, but a heart of pain ;
Their hollow moments undelighted all ?
Sure peace is his ; a solid life, estrang'd
To disappointment, and fallacious hope :
Rich in content, in Nature's bounty rich,
In herbs and fruits ; whatever greens the Spring,
When Heaven descends in showers ; or bends the bough

When Summer reddens, and when Autumn beams ;
Or in the wintry glebe whatever lies
Conceal'd, and fattens with the richest sap :
These are not wanting ; nor the milky drove,
Luxuriant, spread o'er all the lowing vale ;
Nor bleating mountains ; nor the chide of streams,
And hum of bees, inviting sleep sincere
Into the guiltless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid the fragrant hay ;
Nor aught besides of prospect, grove, or song,
Dim grottoes, gleaming lakes, and fountains clear.
Here, too, dwells simple truth ; plain innocence ;
Unsullied beauty ; sound unbroken youth,
Patient of labour, with a little pleas'd ;
Health ever blooming ; unambitious toil ;
Calm contemplation, and poetic ease.

Let others brave the flood in quest of gain,
And beat, for joyless months, the gloomy wave.
Let such as deem it glory to destroy,

Rush into blood, the sack of cities seek ;
 Unpierc'd, exulting in the widow's wail,
 The virgin's shriek, and infant's trembling cry.
 Let some, far distant from their native soil,
 Urg'd or by want or harden'd avarice,
 Find other lands beneath another Sun.
 Let this through cities work his eager way,
 By regal outrage and establish'd guile,
 The social sense extinct ; and that ferment
 Mad into tumult the seditious herd,
 Or melt them down to slavery. Let these
 Insnare the wretched in the toils of law,
 Fomenting discord, and perplexing right,
 An iron race ! and those of fairer front,
 But equal inhumanity, in courts,
 Delusive pomp, and dark cabals delight ;
 Wreath the deep bow, diffuse the lying smile,
 And tread the weary labyrinth of state.
 While he, from all the stormy passions free
 That restless men involve, hears, and but hears,
 At distance safe, the human tempest roar,
 Wrapt close in conscious peace. The fall of kings,
 The rage of nations, and the crush of states,
 Move not the man, who, from the world escap'd,
 In still retreats, and flowery solitudes,
 To Nature's voice attends, from month to month,
 And day to day, through the revolving year ;
 Admiring sees her in her every shape ;
 Feels all her sweet emotions at his heart ;
 Takes what she liberal gives, nor thinks of more.
 He, when young Spring protrudes the bursting
     gems,
 Marks the first bud, and sucks the healthful gale
 Into his freshen'd soul ; her genial hours
 He full enjoys ; and not a beauty blows,
 And not an opening blossom breathes in vain.
 In Summer he, beneath the living shade,
 Such as o'er frigid Tempé wont to wave,
 Or Hemus cool, reads what the Muse, of these,
 Perhaps, has in immortal numbers sung ;
 Or what she dictates writes : and oft, an eye
 Shot round, rejoices in the vigorous year.
 When Autumn's yellow lustre gilds the world,
 And tempts the sickled swain into the field,
 Seiz'd by the general joy, his heart distends
 With gentle throws ; and through the tepid gleams
 Deep musing, then he best exerts his song.
 E'en Winter, wild to him, is full of bliss.
 The mighty tempest, and the hoary waste,
 Abrupt, and deep, stretch'd o'er the buried earth,
 Awake to solemn thought. At night the skies,
 Disclos'd, and kindled, by refining frost,
 Pours every lustre on th' exalted eye.
 A friend, a book, the stealing hours secure,
 And mark them down for wisdom. With swift wing,
 O'er land and sea imagination roams ;
 Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
 Elates his being, and unfolds his powers ;
 Or in his breast heroic virtue burns.
 The touch of kindred too and love he feels ;
 The modest eye, whose beams on his alone
 Ecstatic shine ; the little strong embrace
 Of prattling children, twin'd around his neck,
 And emulous to please him, calling forth
 The fond paternal soul. Nor purpose gay,
 Amusement, dance, or song, he sternly scorns ;
 For happiness and true philosophy
 Are of the social still, and smiling kind.
 This is the life which those who fret in guilt,
 And guilty cities, never knew ; the life,

Led by primeval ages, uncorrupt,
 When angels dwelt, and God himself, with man !
 Oh, Nature ! all-sufficient ! over all !
 Enrich me with the knowledge of thy works !
 Snatch me to Heaven ; thy rolling wonder there,
 World beyond world, in infinite extent,
 Profusely scatter'd o'er the blue immense,
 Show me ; their motions, periods, and their laws,
 Give me to scan ; through the disclosing deep
 Light my blind way ; the inineral strata there ;
 Thrust, blooming, thence the vegetable world ;
 O'er that the rising system, more complex,
 Of animals ; and higher still, the mind,
 The varied scene of quick-compounded thought,
 And where the mixing passions endless shift ;
 These ever open to my ravish'd eye ;
 A search, the flight of time can ne'er exhaust !
 But if to that unequal ; if the blood,
 In sluggish streams about my heart, forbid
 That best ambition ; under closing shades,
 Inglorious, lay me by the lowly brook,
 And whisper to my dreams. From thee begin,
 Dwell all on thee, with thee conclude my song ;
 And let me never, never stray from thee !

WINTER. 1726.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Address to the Earl of Wilmington. First approach of Winter. According to the natural course of the Season, various storms described. Rain. Wind. Snow.
 The driving of the snows : a man perishing
 among them ; whence reflections on the wants and miseries of human life. The wolves descending from the Alps and Appenines. A winter evening described : as spent by philosophers ; by the country people ; in the city.
 Frost. A view of Winter within the polar circle.
 A thaw. The whole concluding with moral reflections on a future state.

SEE, Winter comes, to rule the varied year,
 Sullen and sad, with all his rising train. [theme !
 Vapours, and clouds, and storms. Be these my
 These ! that exalt the soul to solemn thought,
 And heavenly musing. Welcome, kindred glooms !
 Congenial horrors, hail ! with frequent foot,
 Pleas'd have I, in my cheerful morn of life
 When nurs'd by careless solitude I liv'd,
 And sung of Nature with unceasing joy,
 Pleas'd have I wander'd through your rough domain ;
 Trod the pure virgin-snows, myself as pure ;
 Heard the winds roar, and the big torrent burst ;
 Or seen the deep fermenting tempest brew'd
 In the grim evening sky. Thus pass'd the time,
 Till through the lucid chambers of the south
 Look'd out the joyous Spring, look'd out, and smil'd.
 To thee, the patron of her first essay,
 The Muse, O Wilmington ! renews her song.
 Since has she rounded the revolving year :
 Skimm'd the gay Spring ; on eagle-pinions borne,
 Attempted through the Summer-blaze to rise ;
 Then swept o'er Autumn with the shadowy gale ;
 And now among the Wintery clouds again,
 Roll'd in the doubling storm, she tries to soar ;
 To swell her note with all the rushing winds ;
 To suit her sounding cadence to the floods ;

As is her theme, her numbers wildly great :
 Thrice happy ! could she fill thy judging ear
 With bold description, and with manly thought.
 Nor art thou skill'd in awful schemes alone,
 And how to make a mighty people thrive :
 But equal goodness, sound integrity,
 A firm, unshaken, uncorrupted soul
 Amid a sliding age, and burning strong,
 Not vainly blazing for thy country's weal,
 A steady spirit regularly free ;
 These, each exalting each, the statesman light
 Into the patriot ; these, the public hope
 And eye to thee converting, bid the Muse
 Record what envy dares not flattery call.

Now when the cheerless empire of the sky
 To Capricorn the Centaur Archer yields,
 And fierce Aquarius stains th' inverted year ;
 Hung o'er the farthest verge of Heaven, the Sun
 Scarce spreads through ether the dejected day.
 Faint are his gleams, and ineffectual shoot
 His struggling rays, in horizontal lines,
 Through the thick air ; as, cloth'd in cloudy storm,
 Weak, wan, and broad, he skirts the southern sky ;
 And, soon descending, to the long dark night,
 Wide-shading all, the prostrate world resigns.
 Nor is the night unwish'd ; while vital heat,
 Light, life, and joy, the dubious day forsake.
 Meantime, in sable cincture, shadows vast,
 Deep-ting'd and damp, and congregated clouds,
 And all the vapoury turbulence of Heaven,
 Involve the face of things. Thus Winter falls
 A heavy gloom oppressive o'er the world,
 Through Nature shedding influence malign,
 And rouses up the seeds of dark disease.
 The soul of man dies in him, loathing life,
 And black with more than melancholy views.
 The cattle droop ; and o'er the furrow'd land,
 Fresh from the plough, the dun discolour'd flocks,
 Untended spreading, crop the wholesome root.
 Along the woods, along the moorish fens,
 Sighs the sad Genius of the coming storm ;
 And up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
 And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling brook
 And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan,
 Resounding long in listening Fancy's ear.

Then comes the father of the tempest forth,
 Wrapt in black glooms. First joyless rains obscure
 Drive through the mingling skies with vapour foul ;
 Dash on the mountain's brow, and shake the woods,
 That grumbling wave below. Th' unsightly plain
 Lies a brown deluge, as the low-bent clouds
 Pour flood on flood, yet unexhausted still
 Combine, and deepening into night, shut up
 The day's fair face. The wanderers of Heaven,
 Each to his home, retire ; save those that love
 To take their pastime in the troubled air,
 Or skimming flutter round the dimply pool.
 The cattle from th' untasted fields return,
 And ask, with meaning low, their wonted stalls,
 Or ruminate in the contiguous shade.
 Thither the household feathery people crowd,
 The crested cock, with all his female train,
 Pensive, and dripping ; while the cottage hind
 Hangs o'er th' enlivening blaze, and taleful there
 Recounts his simple frolic : much he talks,
 And much he laughs, nor recks the storm that blows
 Without, and rattles on his humble roof.

Wide o'er the brim, with many a torrent swell'd,
 And the mix'd ruin of its banks o'erspread,
 At last the rous'd-up river pours along :

Resistless, roaring, dreadful, down it comes,
 From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,
 Tumbling through rocks abrupt, and sounding far ;
 Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads,
 Calm, sluggish, silent ; till again, constrain'd
 Between two meeting hills, it bursts away,
 Where rocks and woods o'erhang the turbid stream ;
 There, gathering triple force, rapid and deep,
 It boils, and wheels, and foams, and thunders
 through.

Nature ! great parent ! whose unceasing hand
 Rolls round the seasons of the changeful year,
 How mighty, how majestic, are thy works !
 With what a pleasing dread they swell the soul !
 That sees astonish'd ! and astonish'd sings !
 Ye too, ye winds ! that now begin to blow,
 With boisterous sweep, I raise my voice to you.
 Where are your stores, ye powerful beings ! say,
 Where your aërial magazines reserv'd,
 To swell the brooding terrors of the storm ?
 In what far distant region of the sky,
 Hush'd in deep silence, sleep ye when 'tis calm ?

When from the pallid sky the Sun descends,
 With many a spot, that o'er his glaring orb
 Uncertain wanders, stain'd ; red fiery streaks
 Begin to flush around. The reeling clouds
 Stagger with dizzy poise, as doubting yet
 Which master to obey : while rising slow,
 Blank, in the leaden-colour'd east, the Moon
 Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns.
 Seen through the turbid fluctuating air,
 The stars obtuse emit a shiver'd ray ;
 Or frequent seen to shoot athwart the gloom,
 And long behind them trail the whitening blaze.
 Snatch'd in short eddies, plays the wither'd leaf ;
 And on the flood the dancing feather floats.
 With broaden'd nostrils to the sky up-turn'd,
 The conscious heifer snuffs the stormy gale.
 Ev'n as the matron, at her nightly task,
 With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread,
 The wasted taper and the crackling flame
 Foretell the blast. But chief the plumy race,
 The tenants of the sky, its changes speak.
 Retiring from the downs, where all day long
 They pick'd their scanty fare, a blackening train
 Of clamorous rooks thick urge their weary flight
 And seek the closing shelter of the grove ;
 Assiduous, in his bower, the wailing owl
 Plies his sad song. The cormorant on high
 Wheels from the deep, and screams along the land.
 Loud shrieks the soaring hern ; and with wild wing
 The circling sea-fowl cleave the flaky clouds.
 Ocean, unequal press'd, with broken tide
 And blind commotion heaves ; while from the shore,
 Eat into caverns by the restless wave,
 And forest-rustling mountains, comes a voice,
 That solemn sounding bids the world prepare.
 Then issues forth the storm with sudden burst,
 And hurls the whole precipitated air,
 Down, in a torrent. On the passive main
 Descends th' ethereal force, and with strong gust
 Turns from its bottom the discolour'd deep.
 Through the black night that sits immense around,
 Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine
 Seems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn.
 Meantime the mountain-billows to the clouds
 In dreadful tumult swell'd, surge above surge,
 Burst into chaos with tremendous roar,
 And anchor'd navies from their stations drive,
 Wild as the winds across the howling waste

Of mighty waters : now th' inflated wave
 Straining they scale, and now impetuous shoot
 Into the secret chambers of the deep,
 The wintry Baltic thundering o'er their head.
 Emerging thence again, before the breath
 Of full-exerted Heaven they wing their course,
 And dart on distant coasts ; if some sharp rock,
 Or shoal insidious break not their career,
 And in loose fragments fling them floating round.
 Nor less at land the loosen'd tempest reigns.
 The mountain thunders ; and its sturdy sons
 Stoop to the bottom of the rocks they shade.
 Loose on the midnight steep, and all aghast,
 The dark way-faring stranger breathless toils,
 And, often falling, climbs against the blast.
 Low waves the rooted forest, vex'd, and sheds
 What of its tarnish'd honours yet remain ;
 Dash'd down, and scatter'd, by the tearing wind's
 Assiduous fury, its gigantic limbs.
 Thus struggling through the dissipated grove,
 The whirling tempest raves along the plain ;
 And on the cottage thatch'd, or lordly roof,
 Keen-fastening, shakes them to the solid base.
 Sleep frightened flies ; and round the rocking dome,
 For entrance eager, howls the savage blast.
 Then too, they say, through all the burden'd air,
 Long groans are heard, shrill sounds, and distant sighs,

That, utter'd by the demon of the night,
 Warn the devoted wretch of woe and death.

Huge uproar lords it wide. The clouds, commixt
 With stars swift gliding, sweep along the sky.
 All Nature reels : till Nature's King, who oft
 Amid tempestuous darkness dwells alone,
 And on the wings of the careering wind
 Walks dreadfully serene, commands a calm ;
 Then strait, air, sea, and earth, are hush'd at once.

As yet 'tis midnight deep. The weary clouds
 Slow-meeting, mingle into solid gloom.
 Now, while the drowsy world lies lost in sleep,
 Let me associate with the serious Night,
 And Contemplation, her sedate compeer ;
 Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,
 And lay the meddling senses all aside.

Where now, ye lying vanities of life !
 Ye ever-tempting, ever-cheating train !
 Where are you now ? and what is your amount ?
 Vexation, disappointment, and remorse.
 Sad, sickening thought ! and yet deluded man,
 A scene of crude disjointed visions past,
 And broken slumbers, rises still resolv'd,
 With new-flush'd hopes, to run the giddy round.

Father of light and life ! thou good Supreme !
 O, teach me what is good ! teach me Thyself !
 Save me from folly, vanity, and vice,
 From every low pursuit ! and feed my soul
 With knowledge, conscious peace, and virtue pure ;
 Sacred, substantial, never-fading bliss !

The keener tempests rise : and, fuming dun
 From all the livid east, or piercing north,
 Thick clouds ascend ; in whose capacious womb
 A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd.
 Heavy they roll their fleecy world along ;
 And the sky saddens with the gather'd storm.
 Through the hush'd air the whitening shower
 descends,

At first thin wavering ; till at last the flakes
 Fall broad, and wide, and fast, dimming the day
 With a continual flow. The cherish'd fields
 Put on their winter-robe of purest white.

'Tis brightness all ; save where the new snow melts
 Along the mazy current. Low the woods
 Bow their hoar head ; and, ere the languid Sun
 Faint from the west emits his evening ray,
 Earth's universal face, deep hid, and chill,
 Is one wide dazzling waste, that buries wide
 The works of man. Drooping, the labourer-ox
 Stands cover'd o'er with snow, and then demands
 The fruit of all his toil. The fowls of Heaven,
 Tam'd by the cruel season, crowd around
 The winnowing store, and claim the little boon
 Which Providence assigns them. One alone,
 The red-breast, sacred to the household gods,
 Wisely regardful of th' embroiling sky,
 In joyless fields, and thorny thickets, leaves
 His shivering mates, and pays to trusted man
 His annual visit. Half-afraid, he first
 Against the window beats ; then, brisk, alights
 On the warm hearth ; then, hopping o'er the floor,
 Eyes all the smiling family askance,
 And pecks, and starts, and wonders where he is :
 Till more familiar grown, the table-crumbs
 Attract his slender feet. The foodless wilds
 Pour forth their brown inhabitants. The hare,
 Though timorous of heart, and hard beset
 By death in various forms, dark snares, and dogs,
 And more unpitying men, the garden seeks,
 Urg'd on by fearless want. The bleating kind
 Eye the bleak Heaven, and next the glistening
 Earth,

With looks of dumb despair ; then, sad-dispers'd,
 Dig for the wither'd herb through heaps of snow.

Now, shepherds, to your helpless charge be kind :
 Baffle the raging year, and fill their pens.
 With food at will ; lodge them below the storm,
 And watch them strict : for from the bellowing East,
 In this dire season, oft the whirlwind's wing
 Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains
 At one wide waft, and o'er the hapless flocks,
 Hid in the hollow of two neighbouring hills,
 The billowy tempest whelms ; till, upward urg'd,
 The valley to a shining mountain swells,
 Tipt with a wreath high-curling in the sky.

As thus the snows arise ; and foul, and fierce,
 All Winter drives along the darken'd air ;
 In his own loose-revolving fields, the swain
 Disaster'd stands ; sees other hills ascend,
 Of unknown joyless brow ; and other scenes,
 Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain :
 Nor finds the river, nor the forest, hid
 Beneath the formless wild ; but wanders on
 From hill to dale, still more and more astray ;
 Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps,
 Stung with the thoughts of home ; the thoughts of home

Rush on his nerves, and call their vigour forth
 In many a vain attempt. How sinks his soul !
 What black despair, what horror, fills his heart !
 When for the dusky spot, which fancy feign'd
 His tufted cottage rising through the snow,
 He meets the roughness of the middle waste,
 Far from the track, and blest abode of man ;
 While round him night resistless closes fast,
 And every tempest, howling o'er his head,
 Renders the savage wilderness more wild.
 Then throng the busy shapes into his mind,
 Of cover'd pits, unfathomably deep,
 A dire descent ! beyond the power of frost ;
 Of faithless bogs ; of precipices huge, [known,
 Smooth'd up with snow ; and, what is land, un-

What water of the still unfrozen spring,
In the loose marsh or solitary lake,
Where the fresh fountain from the bottom boils.
These check his fearful steps ; and down he sinks
Beneath the shelter of the shapeless drift,
Thinking o'er all the bitterness of death,
Mix'd with the tender anguish Nature shoots
Through the wrung bosom of the dying man,
His wife, his children, and his friends unseen.
In vain for him th' officious wife prepares
The fire fair-blazing, and the vestment warm ;
In vain his little children, peeping out
Into the mingling storm, demand their sire,
With tears of artless innocence. Alas !
Nor wife, nor children, more shall he behold,
Nor friends, nor sacred home. On every nerve
The deadly Winter seizes ; shuts up sense ;
And, o'er his inmost vitals creeping cold,
Lays him along the snows, a stiffen'd corse,
Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast.

Ah ! little think the gay licentious proud,
Whom pleasure, power, and affluence surround ;
They, who their thoughtless hours in giddy mirth,
And wanton, often cruel, riot waste ;
Ah ! little think they, while they dance along,
How many feel, this very moment, death
And all the sad variety of pain.
How many sink in the devouring flood,
Or more devouring flame. How many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt man and man.
How many pine in want, and dungeon glooms ;
Shut from the common air, and common use
Of their own limbs. How many drink the cup
Of baleful grief, or eat the bitter bread
Of misery. Sore pierc'd by wintry winds,
How many shrink into the sordid hut
Of cheerless poverty. How many shake
With all the fiercer tortures of the mind,
Unbounded passion, madness, guilt, remorse ;
Whence tumbled headlong from the height of life,
They furnish matter for the tragic Muse.
Ev'n in the vale, where Wisdom loves to dwell
With Friendship, Peace, and Contemplation join'd,
How many, rack'd with honest passions, droop
In deep retir'd distress. How many stand
Around the death-bed of their dearest friends,
And point the parting anguish. Thought fond man
Of these, and all the thousand nameless ills,
That one incessant struggle render life,
One scene of toil, of suffering, and of fate,
Vice in his high career would stand appall'd,
And heedless rambling Impulse learn to think ;
The conscious heart of Charity would warm,
And her wide wish Benevolence dilate ;
The social tear would rise, the social sigh ;
And into clear perfection, gradual bliss,
Refining still, the social passions work.

And here can I forget the generous band *,
Who, touch'd with human woe, redressive search'd
Into the horrors of the gloomy jail ?
Unpitied, and unheard, where misery moans ;
Where sickness pines ; where thirst and hunger burn,
And poor misfortune feels the lash of vice.
While in the land of liberty, the land
Whose every street and public meeting glow
With open freedom, little tyrants rag'd ;
Snatch'd the lean morsel from the starving mouth ;
Tore from cold wintry limbs the tatter'd weed ;

* The Jail Committee, in the year 1791.

Ev'n robb'd them of the last of comforts, sleep ;
The free-born Briton to the dungeon chain'd,
Or, as the lust of cruelty prevail'd,
At pleasure mark'd him with inglorious stripes :
And crush'd out lives, by secret barbarous ways,
That for their country would have toil'd, or bled.
O, great design ! if executed well,
With patient care, and wisdom-temper'd zeal.
Ye sons of mercy ! yet resume the search ;
Drag forth the legal monsters into light,
Wrench from their hands oppression's iron rod,
And bid the cruel feel the pains they give.
Much still untouch'd remains ; in this rank age,
Much is the patriot's weeding hand requir'd.
The toils of law, (what dark insidious men
Have cumberous added to perplex the truth,
And lengthen simple justice into trade,)
How glorious were the day that saw these broke,
And every man within the reach of right !

By wintry famine rous'd, from all the tract
Of horrid mountains, which the shining Alps,
And wavy Appenine, and Pyrenees,
Branch out stupendous into distant lands ;
Cruel as Death, and hungry as the Grave !
Burning for blood ! bony, and gaunt, and grim !
Assembling wolves in raging troops descend ;
And, pouring o'er the country, bear along,
Keen as the north wind sweeps the glossy snow.
All is their prize. They fasten on the steed,
Press him to earth, and pierce his mighty heart.
Nor can the bull his awful front defend,
Or shake the murdering savages away.
Rapacious, at the mother's throat they fly,
And tear the screaming infant from her breast.
The godlike face of man avails him nought.
Ev'n Beauty, force divine ! at whose bright glance
The generous lion stands in soften'd gaze,
Here bleeds, a hapless undistinguish'd prey.
But if, appriz'd of the severe attack,
The country be shut up, lur'd by the scent,
On church-yards drear (inhuman to relate !)
The disappointed prowlers fall, and dig
The shrouded body from the grave ; o'er which,
Mix'd with foul shades, and frightened ghosts, they howl.

Among those hilly regions, where embrac'd
In peaceful vales the happy Grisons dwell,
Oft, rushing sudden from the loaded cliffs,
Mountains of snow their gathering terrors roll
From steep to steep, loud-thundering down they come,

A wintry waste in dire commotion all ;
And herds, and flocks, and travellers, and swains,
And sometimes whole brigades of marching troops,
Or hamlets sleeping in the dead of night,
Are deep beneath the smothering ruin whelm'd.

Now all amid the rigours of the year,
In the wild depth of Winter, while without
The ceaseless winds blow ice, be my retreat,
Between the groaning forest and the shore
Beat by the boundless multitude of waves,
A rural, shelter'd, solitary scene ;
Where ruddy fire and beaming tapers join,
To cheer the gloom. There studious let me sit,
And hold high converse with the mighty dead ;
Sages of ancient time, as gods rever'd,
As gods beneficent, who blest mankind
With arts, with arms, and humaniz'd a world.
Rous'd at th' inspiring thought, I throw aside
A long-liv'd volume ; and, deep musing, hail

The sacred shades, that slowly rising pass
Before my wondering eyes. First Socrates,
Who, firmly good in a corrupted state,
Against the rage of tyrants single stood,
Invincible ! calm reason's holy law,
That voice of God within th' attentive mind,
Obeying, fearless, or in life, or death :
Great moral teacher ! wisest of mankind !
Solon the next, who built his common-weal
On equity's wide base ; by tender laws
A lively people curbing, yet undamp'd,
Preserving still that quick peculiar fire,
Whence in the laurell'd field of finer arts,
And of bold freedom, they unequall'd shone,
The pride of smiling Greece, and human-kind.
Lycurgus then, who bow'd beneath the force
Of strictest discipline, severely wise,
All human passions. Following him I see,
As at Thermopylæ he glorious fell,
The firm devoted chief * who prov'd by deeds
The hardest lesson which the other taught.
Then Aristides lifts his honest front ;
Spotless of heart, to whom th' unflattering voice
Of freedom gave the noblest name of just ;
In pure majestic poverty rever'd ;
Who, ev'n his glory to his country's weal
Submitting, swell'd a haughty rival's† fame.
Rear'd by his care, of softer ray appears
Cimon, sweet-soul'd ; whose genius, rising strong,
Shook off the load of young debauch ; abroad
The scourge of Persian pride, at home the friend
Of every worth and every splendid art ;
Modest and simple in the pomp of wealth.
Then the last worthies of declining Greece,
Late call'd to glory, in unequal times,
Pensive, appear. The fair Corinthian boast,
Timoleon, happy temper ! mild and firm,
Who wept the brother while the tyrant bled.
And, equal to the best, the Theban pair ‡,
Whose virtues, in heroic concord join'd,
Their country rais'd to freedom, empire, fame.
He too, with whom Athenian honour sunk,
And left a mass of sordid lees behind :
Phocion the good ; in public life severe,
To virtue still inexorably firm ;
But when, beneath his low illustrious roof,
Sweet peace and happy wisdom smooth'd his brow,
Not friendship softer was, nor love more kind.
And he, the last of old Lycurgus' sons,
The generous victim to that vain attempt,
To save a rotten state, Agis, who saw
Ev'n Sparta's self to servile avarice sunk.
The two Achaian heroes close the train :
Aratus, who awhile relum'd the soul
Of fondly lingering liberty in Greece :
And he her darling, as her latest hope,
The gallant Philopœmen ; who to arms
Turn'd the luxurious pomp he could not cure ;
Or toiling in his farm a simple swain ;
Or bold and skilful, thundering in the field.

Of rougher front, a mighty people come !
A race of heroes ! in those virtuous times,
Which knew no stain, save that with partial flame
Their dearest country they too fondly lov'd :
Her better founder first, the light of Rome,
Numa, who soften'd her rapacious sons :

* Leonidas.

† Themistocles.

‡ Pelopidas and Epaminondas.

Servius the king, who laid the solid base
On which o'er Earth the vast republic spread.
Then the great consuls venerable rise.
The public father §, who the private quell'd,
As on the dread tribunal sternly sad.
He, whom his thankless country could not lose,
Camillus, only vengeful to his foes.
Fabricius, scorner of all-conquering gold ;
And Cincinnatus, awful from the plough.
Thy willing victim ||, Carthage, bursting loose
From all that pleading Nature could oppose,
From a whole city's tears, by rigid faith
Imperious call'd, and honour's dire command.
Scipio, the gentle chief, humanely brave,
Who soon the race of spotless glory ran,
And warm in youth, to the poetic shade
With Friendship and Philosophy retir'd.
Tully, whose powerful eloquence awhile
Restrain'd the rapid fate of rushing Rome.
Unconquer'd Cato, virtuous in extreme.
And thou, unhappy Brutus, kind of heart,
Whose steady arm, by awful virtue urg'd,
Lifted the Roman steel against thy friend.
Thousands besides the tribute of a verse
Demand ; but who can count the stars of Heaven ?
Who sing their influence on this lower world ?

Behold, who yonder comes ! in sober state,
Fair, mild, and strong, as is a vernal sun :
'Tis Phœbus' self, or else the Mantuan Swain !
Great Homer too appears, of daring wing,
Parent of song ! and equal by his side,
The British Muse ; join'd hand in hand they walk,
Darkling, full up the middle steep to Fame.
Nor absent are those shades, whose skilful touch
Pathetic drew th' impassion'd heart, and charm'd
Transported Athens with the moral scene :
Nor those who, tuneful, wak'd th' enchanting lyre.

First of your kind ! society divine ;
Still visit thus my nights, for you reserv'd,
And mount my soaring soul to thoughts like yours.
Silence, thou lonely power ! the door be thine :
See on the hallow'd hour that none intrude,
Save a few chosen friends, who sometimes deign
To bless my humble roof, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well, exalted faith,
Unstudy'd wit, and humour ever gay.
Or from the Muses' hill will Pope descend,
To raise the sacred hour, to bid it smile,
And with the social spirit warm the heart ?
For though not sweeter his own Homer sings,
Yet is his life the more endearing song.

Where art thou, Hammond ? thou the darling
pride,

The friend and lover of the tuneful throng !
Ah, why, dear youth, in all the blooming prime
Of vernal genius, where disclosing fast
Each active worth, each manly virtue lay,
Why wert thou ravish'd from our hope so soon ?
What now avails that noble thirst of fame,
Which stung thy fervent breast ? that treasur'd store
Of knowledge early gain'd ? that eager zeal
To serve thy country, glowing in the band
Of youthful patriots, who sustain her name ?
What now, alas ! that life-diffusing charm
Of sprightly wit ? that rapture for the Muse,
That heart of friendship, and that soul of joy,
Which bade with softest light thy virtues smile ?

§ Marcus Junius Brutus.

|| Regulus.

Ah ! only show'd, to check our fond pursuits,
And teach our humbled hopes that life is vain !

Thus in some deep retirement would I pass
The Winter-glooms, with friends of pliant soul,
Or blithe, or solemn, as the theme inspir'd : [frame
With them would search, if Nature's boundless
Was call'd, late-rising from the void of night,
Or sprung eternal from th' Eternal Mind ;
Its life, its laws, its progress, and its end.
Hence larger prospects of the beauteous whole
Would, gradual, open on our opening minds ;
And each diffusive harmony unite
In full perfection to th' astonish'd eye.

Then would we try to scan the moral world,
Which, though to us it seems embroil'd, moves on
In higher order ; fitted, and impell'd,
By Wisdom's finest hand, and issuing all
In general good. The sage historic Muse
Should next conduct us through the deeps of time :
Show us how empire grew, declin'd, and fell,
In scatter'd states ; what makes the nations smile,
Improves their soil, and gives them double suns ;
And why they pine beneath the brightest skies,
In Nature's richest lap. As thus we talk'd,
Our hearts would burn within us, would inhale
The portion of divinity, that ray
Of purest Heaven, which lights the public soul
Of patriots, and of heroes. But if doom'd,
In powerless humble fortune, to repress
These ardent risings of the kindling soul ;
Then, ev'n superior to ambition, we
Would learn the private virtues how to glide
Through shades and plains, along the smoothest
stream

Of rural life : or snatch'd away by hope,
Through the dim spaces of futurity,
With earnest eye anticipate those scenes
Of happiness, and wonder ; where the mind,
In endless growth and infinite ascent,
Rises from state to state, and world to world.
But when with these the serious thought is foil'd,
We, shifting for relief, would play the shapes
Of frolic Fancy ; and incessant form
Those rapid pictures, that assembled train
Of fleet ideas, never join'd before,
Whence lively Wit excites to gay surprise ;
Or folly-painting Humour, grave himself,
Calls Laughter forth, deep-shaking every nerve.

Meantime the village rouses up the fire ;
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn, goes the goblin-story round ;
Till superstitious horror creeps o'er all.
Or, frequent in the sounding hall, they wake
The rural gambol. Rustic mirth goes round ;
The simple joke that takes the shepherd's heart,
Easily pleas'd ; the long loud laugh, sincere ;
The kiss, snatch'd hasty from the side-long maid,
On purpose guardless, or pretending sleep :
The leap, the slap, the haul ; and, shook to notes
Of native music, the respondent dance.
Thus jocund fleets with them the winter-night.

The city swarms intense. The public haunt,
Full of each theme, and warm with mixt discourse,
Hums indistinct. The sons of riot flow
Down the loose stream of false enchanted joy,
To swift destruction. On the rankled soul
The gaming fury falls ; and in one gulph
Of total ruin, honour, virtue, peace,
Friends, families, and fortune, headlong sink.
Up-springs the dance along the lighted dr

Mix'd and evolv'd, a thousand sprightly ways.
The glittering court effuses every pomp ;
The circle deepens : bearn'd from gaudy robes,
Tapers, and sparkling gems, and radiant eyes,
A soft effulgence o'er the palace waves :
While, a gay insect in his summer-shine,
The fop, light-fluttering, spreads his mealy wings.

Dread o'er the scene, the ghost of Hamlet stalks ;
Othello rages ; poor Monimia mourns ;
And Belvidera pours her soul in love.
Terror alarms the breast ; the comely tear
Steals o'er the cheek : or else the comic Muse
Holds to the world a picture of itself,
And raises sly the fair impartial laugh.
Sometimes she lifts her strain, and paints the scenes
Of beauteous life ; whate'er can deck mankind,
Or charm the heart, in generous Bevil * show'd.

O, thou, whose wisdom, solid yet refin'd,
Whose patriot-virtues, and consummate skill
To touch the finer springs that move the world,
Join'd to whate'er the Graces can bestow,
And all Apollo's animating fire,
Give thee, with pleasing dignity, to shine
At once the guardian, ornament, and joy,
Of polish'd life ; permit the rural Muse,
O Chesterfield, to grace with thee her song !
Ere to the shades again she humbly flies,
Indulge her fond ambition, in thy train
(For every Muse has in thy train a place)
To mark thy various full-accomplish'd mind :
To mark that spirit, which, with British scorn,
Rejects th' allurements of corrupted power ;
That elegant politeness, which excels,
Ev'n in the judgment of presumptuous France,
The boasted manners of her shining court ;
That wit, the vivid energy of sense,
The truth of Nature, which, with Attic point,
And kind well-temper'd satire, smoothly keen,
Steals through the soul, and without pain corrects.
Or, rising thence with yet a brighter flame,
O, let me hail thee on some glorious day,
When to the listening senate, ardent, crowd
Britannia's sons to hear her pleaded cause.
Then drest by thee, more amiably fair,
Truth the soft robe of mild persuasion wears :
Thou to assenting reason giv'st again [heart,
Her own enlighten'd thoughts ; call'd from the
Th' obedient passions on thy voice attend ;
And ev'n reluctant party feels awhile
Thy gracious power : as through the varied maze
Of eloquence, now smooth, now quick, now strong,
Profound and clear, you roll the copious flood.

To thy lov'd haunt return, my happy Muse :
For now, behold, the joyous Winter-days,
Frosty, succeed ; and through the blue serene,
For sight too fine, th' ethereal nitre flies ;
Killing infectious damps, and the spent air
Storing afresh with elemental life.
Close crowds the shining atmosphere ; and binds
Our strengthen'd bodies in its cold embrace,
Constringent ; feeds, and animates our blood ;
Refines our spirits, through the new-strung nerves,
In swifter sallies darting to the brain ;
Where sits the soul, intense, collected, cool,
Bright as the skies, and as the season keen.
All Nature feels the renovating force
Of Winter, only to the thoughtless eye

* A character in the Conscious Lovers, written by Richard Steele.

In ruin seen. The frost-concocted glebe
 Draws in abundant vegetable soul,
 And gathers vigour for the coming year.
 A stronger glow sits on the lively cheek
 Of ruddy fire: and luculent along
 The purer rivers flow; their sullen deeps,
 Transparent, open to the shepherd's gaze,
 And murmur hoarser at the fixing frost. [stores

What art thou, frost? and whence are thy keen
 Deriv'd, thou secret all-invading power,
 Whom ev'n th' illusive fluid cannot fly?
 Is not thy potent energy, unseen,
 Myriads of little salts, or hook'd, or shap'd
 Like double wedges, and diffus'd immense
 Through water, earth, and ether? Hence at eve,
 Steam'd eager from the red horizon round,
 With the fierce rage of Winter deep suffus'd,
 An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool
 Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career
 Arrests the bickering stream. The loosen'd ice,
 Let down the flood, and half dissolv'd by day,
 Rustles no more; but to the sedgy bank
 Fast grows, or gathers round the pointed stone,
 A crystal pavement, by the breath of Heaven
 Cemented firm; till, seiz'd from shore to shore,
 The whole imprison'd river growls below.
 Loud rings the frozen earth, and hard reflects
 A double noise; while, at his evening watch,
 The village dog deters the nightly thief;
 The heifer lows; the distant water-fall
 Swells in the breeze; and, with the hasty tread
 Of traveller, the hollow-sounding plain
 Shakes from afar. The full ethereal round,
 Infinite worlds disclosing to the view,
 Shines out intensely keen; and, all one cope
 Of starry glitter, glows from pole to pole.
 From pole to pole the rigid influence falls,
 Through the still night, incessant, heavy, strong,
 And seizes Nature fast. It freezes on;
 Till Morn, late-rising o'er the drooping world,
 Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Then appears
 The various labour of the silent Night:
 Prone from the dripping cave, and dumb cascade,
 Whose idle torrents only seem to roar,
 The pendant icicle; the frost-work fair,
 Where transient hues and fancy'd figures rise;
 Wide-spouted o'er the hill, the frozen brook,
 A livid tract, cold-gleaming on the morn;
 The forest bent beneath the plummy wave;
 And by the frost refin'd the whiter snow,
 Incrusted hard, and sounding to the tread
 Of early shepherd, as he pensive seeks
 His pining flock, or from the mountain-top,
 Pless'd with the slippery surface, swift descends.

On blithsome frolicks bent, the youthful swains,
 While every work of man is laid at rest,
 Fond o'er the river crowd, in various sport
 And revelry dissolv'd; where mixing glad,
 Happiest of all the train! the raptur'd boy
 Leazes the whirling top. Or, where the Rhine
 Branch'd out in many a long canal extends,
 From every province swarming, void of care,
 Batavia rushes forth; and as they sweep,
 On sounding skates, a thousand different ways,
 In circling poise, swift as the winds, along,
 The then gay land is madden'd all to joy.
 Nor less the northern courts, wide o'er the snow,
 Pour a new pomp. Eager, on rapid sleds,
 Their vigorous youth in bold contention wheel
 The long resounding course. Meantime, to raise

The manly strife, with highly blooming charms,
 Flush'd by the season, Scandinavia's dames,
 Or Russia's buxom daughters, glow around.

Pure, quick, and sportful, is the wholesome day;
 But soon elaps'd. The horizontal Sun,
 Broad o'er the south, hangs at his utmost noon:
 And, ineffectual, strikes the gelid cliff:
 His azure gloss the mountain still maintains,
 Nor feels the feeble touch. Perhaps the vale
 Relents awhile to the reflected ray;
 Or from the forest falls the cluster'd snow,
 Myriads of gems, that in the waving gleam
 Gay-twinkle as they scatter. Thick around
 Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun,
 And dog impatient bounding at the shot,
 Worse than the season, desolate the fields:
 And, adding to the ruins of the year,
 Distress the footed or the feather'd game.

But what is this? Our infant Winter sinks,
 Divested of his grandeur, should our eye
 Astonish'd shoot into the frigid zone;
 Where, for relentless months, continual Night
 Holds o'er the glittering waste her starry reign.

There, through the prison of unbounded wilds,
 Barr'd by the hand of Nature from escape,
 Wide roams the Russian exile. Nought around
 Strikes his sad eye, but deserts lost in snow;
 And heavy-loaded groves; and solid floods,
 That stretch athwart the solitary vast,
 Their icy horrors to the frozen main;
 And cheerless towns far distant, never bless'd,
 Save when its annual course the caravan
 Bends to the golden coast of rich Cathay*,
 With news of human-kind. Yet there life glows:
 Yet cherish'd there, beneath the shining waste,
 The furry nations harbour: tipt with jet,
 Fair ermines, sportless as the snows they press;
 Sables, of glossy black; and dark-embrown'd,
 Or beauteous freakt with many a mingled hue,
 Thousands besides, the costly pride of courts.
 There, warm together press'd, the trooping deer
 Sleep on the new-fall'n snows; and, scarce his head
 Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
 Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss.
 The ruthless hunter wants nor dogs nor toils,
 Nor with the dread of sounding bows he drives
 The fearful flying race: with ponderous clubs,
 As weak against the mountain-heaps they push
 Their beating breast in vain, and piteous bray,
 He lays them quivering on the ensanguin'd snows,
 And with loud shouts rejoicing bears them home.
 There, through the piny forest half-absorpt,
 Rough tenant of these shades, the shapeless bear,
 With dangling ice all horrid, stalks forlorn;
 Slow-plac'd, and sourer as the storms increase,
 He makes his bed beneath th' inclement drift,
 And, with stern patience, scorning weak complaint,
 Hardens his heart against assailing want.

Wide o'er the spacious regions of the north,
 That sees Boötes urge his tardy wain,
 A boisterous race, by frosty Caurus† pierc'd,
 Who little pleasure know, and fear no pain,
 Prolific swarm. They once relum'd the flame
 Of lost mankind in polish'd slavery sunk,
 Drove martial horde on horde‡, with dreadful sweep
 Resistless rushing o'er th' enfeebled south,

And gave the vanquish'd world another form.
 Not such the sons of Lapland: wisely they
 Despise th' insensate barbarous trade of war;
 They ask no more than simple Nature gives;
 They love their mountains, and enjoy their storms,
 No false desires, no pride-created wants,
 Disturb the peaceful current of their time,
 And through the restless ever-tortur'd maze
 Of pleasure, or ambition, bid it rage.
 Their rein-deer form their riches. These their tents,
 Their robes, their beds, and all their homely wealth
 Supply, their wholesome fare, and cheerful cups.
 Obsequious at their call, the docile tribe
 Yield to the sled their necks, and whirl them swift
 O'er hill and dale, heap'd into one expanse
 Of marbled snow, as far as eye can sweep,
 With a blue crust of ice unbounded glaz'd.
 By dancing meteors then, that ceaseless shake
 A waving blaze refracted o'er the heavens,
 And vivid moons, and stars that keener play
 With double lustre from the glossy waste,
 Ev'n in the depth of polar night, they find
 A wondrous day: enough to light the chase,
 Or guide their daring steps to Finland fairs.
 Wish'd Spring returns; and from the hazy south,
 While dim Aurora slowly moves before,
 The welcome Sun, just verging up at first,
 By small degrees extends the swelling curve!
 Till seen at large for gay rejoicing months,
 Still round and round his spiral course he winds,
 And as he nearly dips his flaming orb,
 Wheels up again, and re-ascends the sky.
 In that glad season from the lakes and floods,
 Where pure Niemi's * fairy mountains rise,
 And fring'd with roses Tenglio † rolls his stream,
 They draw the copious fry. With these, at eve,
 They cheerful loaded to their tents repair;
 Where, all day long in useful care employ'd,
 Their kind unblemish'd wives the fire prepare.
 Thrice happy race! by poverty secur'd
 From legal plunder and rapacious power:
 In whom fell interest never yet has sown
 The seeds of vice: whose spotless swains ne'er knew
 Injurious deed, nor, blasted by the breath
 Of faithless love, their blooming daughters woe.

Still pressing on, beyond Tornea's lake,
 And Hecla flaming through a waste of snow,
 And farthest Greenland, to the Pole itself,
 Where, failing gradual, life at length goes out,
 The Muse expands her solitary flight;
 And, hovering o'er the wild stupendous scene,
 Beholds new seas beneath another sky. ‡
 Thron'd in his palace of cerulean ice,

* M. de Maupertuis, in his book on the Figure of the Earth, after having described the beautiful lake and mountain of Niemi in Lapland, says, — "From this height we had opportunity several times to see those vapours rise from the lake, which the people of the country call Haltios, and which they deem to be the guardian spirits of the mountains. We had been frighted with stories of bears that haunted this place, but saw none. It seemed rather a place of resort for Fairies and Genii, than bears."

† The same author observes; — "I was surprised to see upon the banks of this river (the Tenglio) roses of as lively a red as any that are in our gardens."

‡ The other hemisphere.

Here Winter holds his unrejoicing court;
 And through his airy hall the loud misrule
 Of driving tempest is for ever heard:
 Here the grim tyrant meditates his wrath;
 Here arms his winds with all-subduing frost;
 Moulds his fierce hail, and treasures up his snows,
 With which he now oppresses half the globe.

Thence winding eastward to the Tartar's coast,
 She sweeps the howling margin of the main;
 Where undissolving, from the first of time,
 Snows swell on snows amazing to the sky;
 And icy mountains, high on mountains pil'd,
 Seem to the shivering sailor from afar,
 Shapeless and white, an atmosphere of clouds.
 Projected huge, and horrid, o'er the surge,
 Alps frown on Alps, or rushing hideous down,
 As if old Chaos was again return'd,
 Wide-rend the deep, and shake the solid Pole.
 Ocean itself no longer can resist
 The binding fury; but, in all its rage
 Of tempest, taken by the boundless frost,
 Is many a fathom to the bottom chain'd,
 And bid to roar no more: a bleak expanse,
 Shagg'd o'er with wavy rocks, cheerless, and void
 Of every life, that from the dreary months
 Flies conscious southward. Miserable they,
 Who, here entangled in the gathering ice,
 Take their last look of the descending Sun;
 While, full of death, and fierce with tenfold frost,
 The long long night, incumbent o'er their heads,
 Falls horrible. Such was the Briton's § fate,
 As with first prow (what have not Britons dar'd!)
 He for the passage sought, attempted since
 So much in vain, and seeming to be shut
 By jealous Nature with eternal bars.
 In these fell regions, in Arzina caught,
 And to the stony deep his idle ship
 Immediate seal'd, he with his hapless crew,
 Each full-exerted at his several task,
 Froze into statues; to the cordage glued
 The sailor, and the pilot to the helm. [stream

Hard by these shores, where scarce his freezing

 And half-enliven'd by the distant Sun,
 That rears and ripens man, as well as plants,
 Here human nature wears its rudest form.
 Deep from the piercing season sunk in caves,
 Here by dull fires, and with unjoyous cheer,
 They waste the tedious gloom. Immers'd in furs,
 Doze the gross race. Nor sprightly jest, nor song,
 Nor tenderness they know; nor aught of life,
 Beyond the kindred bears that stalk without.
 Till Morn at length, her roses drooping all,
 Sheds a long twilight brightening o'er their fields,
 And calls the quiver'd savage to the chase.

* Hugh Willoughby, sent by Queen Elizabeth
 the north-east passage.

Through long successive ages to build up
 A labouring plan of state, behold at once
 The wonder done ! behold the matchless prince !
 Who left his native throne, where reign'd till then
 A mighty shadow of unreal power ;
 Who greatly spurn'd the slothful pomp of courts ;
 And, roaming every land, in every port
 His sceptre laid aside, with glorious hand
 Unwearied plying the mechanic tool,
 Gather'd the seeds of trade, of useful arts,
 Of civil wisdom, and of martial skill.
 Charg'd with the stores of Europe, home he goes ;
 Then cities rise amid th' illumin'd waste :
 O'er joyless deserts smiles the rural reign ;
 Far distant flood to flood is social join'd ;
 Th' astonish'd Euxine hears the Baltic roar ;
 Proud navies ride on seas that never foam'd
 With daring keel before ; and armies stretch
 Each way their dazzling files, repressing here
 The frantic Alexander of the north,
 And awing there stern Otthman's shrinking sons.
 Sloth flies the land, and Ignorance, and Vice,
 Of old dishonour proud : it glows around,
 Taught by the royal hand that rous'd the whole,
 One scene of arts, of arms, of rising trade :
 For what his wisdom plann'd, and power enforc'd,
 More potent still, his great example show'd.

Muttering, the winds at eve, with blunted point,
 Blow hollow-blustering from the south. Subdued,
 The frost resolves into a trickling thaw.
 Spotted the mountains shine ; loose sleet descends,
 And floods the country round. The rivers swell,
 Of bonds impatient. Sudden from the hills,
 O'er rocks and woods, in broad brown cataracts,
 A thousand snow-fed torrents shoot at once ;
 And, where they rush, the wide-resounding plain
 Is left one slimy waste. Those sullen seas,
 That wash'd th' ungenial Pole, will rest no more
 Beneath the shackles of the mighty north ;
 But, rousing all their waves, resistless heave.
 And hark : the lengthening roar continuous runs
 Athwart the rifted deep : at once it bursts,
 And piles a thousand mountains to the clouds.
 Ill fares the bark with trembling wretches charg'd,
 That, tost amid the floating fragments, moors
 Beneath the shelter of an icy isle,
 While night o'erwhelms the sea, and horror looks
 More horrible. Can human force endure
 Th' assembled mischiefs that besiege them round ?
 Heart-gnawing hunger, fainting weariness,
 The roar of winds and waves, the crush of ice,
 Now ceasing, now renew'd with louder rage,
 And in dire echoes bellowing round the main.
 More to embroil the deep, Leviathan
 And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport, [gloom,
 Tempest the loosen'd brine, while through the
 Far from the bleak inhospitable shore,
 Loading the winds, is heard the hungry howl
 Of famish'd monsters, there awaiting wrecks.
 Yet Providence, that ever-waking eye,
 Looks down with pity on the feeble toil
 Of mortals lost to hope, and lights them safe,
 Through all this dreary labyrinth of fate. [glooms,
 'Tis done ! dread Winter spreads his latest
 And reigns tremendous o'er the conquer'd year.
 How dead the vegetable kingdom lies !
 How dumb the tuneful ! Horror wide extends
 His desolate domain. Behold, fond man !
 See here thy pictur'd life ; pass some few years,

Thy flowering Spring, thy Summer's ardent
 strength,
 Thy sober Autumn fading into age,
 And pale concluding Winter comes at last,
 And shuts the scene. Ah ! whither now are fled
 Those dreams of greatness ? those unsolid hopes
 Of happiness ? those longings after fame ?
 Those restless cares ? those busy bustling days ?
 Those gay-spent, festive nights ? those veering thoughts,
 Lost between good and ill, that shar'd thy life ?
 All now are vanish'd ! Virtue sole survives,
 Immortal, never-failing friend of man,
 His guide to happiness on high. And see !
 'Tis come, the glorious morn ! the second birth
 Of Heaven and Earth ! awakening Nature hears
 The new-creating word, and starts to life,
 In every heighten'd form, from pain and death
 For ever free. The great eternal scheme,
 Involving all, and in a perfect whole
 Uniting, as the prospect wider spreads,
 To reason's eye refin'd clears up apace.
 Ye vainly wise ! ye blind presumptuous ! now,
 Confounded in the dust, adore that Power,
 And Wisdom oft arraign'd : see now the cause,
 Why unassuming Worth in secret liv'd,
 And dy'd neglected : why the good man's share
 In life was gall and bitterness of soul :
 Why the lone widow and her orphans pin'd
 In starving solitude ; while Luxury,
 In palaces, lay straining her low thought,
 To form unreal wants : why heaven-born Truth,
 And Moderation fair, wore the red marks
 Of Superstition's scourge : why licens'd Pain,
 That cruel spoiler, that embosom'd foe,
 Imbitter'd all our bliss. Ye good distress !
 Ye noble few ! who here unbending stand
 Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up awhile,
 And what your bounded view, which only saw
 A little part, deem'd evil, is no more :
 The storms of Wintery Time will quickly pass,
 And one unbounded Spring encircle all.

A HYMN.

THESE, as they change, Almighty Father, these
 Are but the varied God. The rolling year
 Is full of thee. Forth in the pleasing Spring
 Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness and love.
 Wide flush the fields ; the softening air is balm ;
 Echo the mountains round ; the forest smiles ;
 And every sense, and every heart, is joy.
 Then comes thy glory in the Summer-months,
 With light and heat refulgent. Then thy Sun
 Shoots full perfection through the swelling year :
 And oft thy voice in dreadful thunder speaks ;
 And oft at dawn, deep noon, or falling eve,
 By brooks and groves, in hollow-whispering gales,
 Thy bounty shines in Autumn unconfin'd,
 And spreads a common feast for all that lives.
 In Winter awful thou ! with clouds and storms
 Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
 Majestic darkness ! on the whirlwind's wing,
 Riding sublime, thou bidst the world adore,
 And humblest nature with thy northern blast.
 Mysterious round ! what skill, what force divine,
 Deep felt, in these appear ! a simple train,
 Yet so delightful mix'd, with such kind art,

Such beauty and beneficence combin'd ;
 Shade, unperceiv'd, so softening into shade ;
 And all so forming an harmonious whole ;
 That, as they still succeed, they ravish still.
 But wandering oft, with brute unconscious gaze,
 Man marks not thee, marks not the mighty hand,
 That, ever busy, wheels the silent spheres ;
 Works in the secret deep ; shoots, steaming, thence
 The fair profusion that o'erspreads the Spring :
 Flings from the Sun direct the flaming day ;
 Feeds every creature ; hurls the tempests forth ;
 And, as on Earth this grateful change revolves,
 With transport touches all the springs of life.

Nature, attend ! join every living soul,
 Beneath the spacious temple of the sky,
 In adoration join ; and, ardent, raise
 One general song ! To him, ye vocal gales,
 Breathe soft, whose Spirit in your freshness breathes :
 Oh, talk of him in solitary glooms ;
 Where, o'er the rock, the scarcely waving pine
 Fills the brown shade with a religious awe.
 And ye, whose bolder note is heard afar,
 Who shake th' astonish'd world, lift high to Heaven
 Th' impetuous song, and say from whom you rage.
 His praise, ye brooks, attune, ye trembling rills ;
 And let me catch it as I muse along.
 Ye headlong torrents, rapid and profound ;
 Ye softer floods, that lead the humid maze
 Along the vale ; and thou, majestic main,
 A secret world of wonders in thyself,
 Sound his stupendous praise ; whose greater voice
 Or bids you roar, or bids your roarings fall.
 Soft roll your incense, herbs, and fruits, and
 flowers,

In mingled clouds to him ; whose Sun exalts,
 Whose breath perfumes you, and whose pencil paints.

Ye forests bend, ye harvests wave, to him ;
 Breathe your still song into the reaper's heart,
 As home he goes beneath the joyous Moon.
 Ye that keep watch in Heaven, as Earth asleep
 Unconscious lies, effuse your mildest beams,
 Ye constellations, while your angels strike,
 Amid the spangled sky, the silver lyre.
 Great source of day ! best image here below
 Of thy Creator, ever pouring wide,
 From world to world, the vital ocean round,
 On Nature write with every beam his praise.
 The thunder rolls : be hush'd the prostrate world ;
 While cloud to cloud returns the solemn hymn.
 Bleat out afresh, ye hills : ye mossy rocks,
 Retain the sound : the broad responsive low,
 Ye valleys, raise ; for the Great Shepherd reigns ;
 And his unsuffering kingdom yet will come.
 Ye woodlands all, awake : a boundless song
 Burst from the groves ! and when the restless day,
 Expiring, lays the warbling world asleep,
 Sweetest of birds ! sweet Philomela, charm
 The listening shades, and teach the night his praise.
 Ye chief, for whom the whole creation smiles,
 At once the head, the heart, and tongue of all,
 Crown the great hymn ! in swarming cities vast,
 Assembled men, to the deep organ join
 The long-resounding voice, oft breaking clear,
 At solemn pauses, through the swelling base ;
 And, as each mingling flame increases each,
 In one united ardour rise to Heaven.
 Or if you rather chuse the rural shade,
 And find a fame in every secret grove ;
 There let the shepherd's flute, the virgin's lay,

The prompting seraph, and the poet's lyre,
 Still sing the God of Seasons, as they roll.
 For me, when I forget the darling theme,
 Whether the blossom blows, the Summer-ray
 Russets the plain, inspiring Autumn gleams ;
 Or Winter rises in the blackening east ;
 Be my tongue mute, my fancy paint no more,
 And, dead to joy, forget my heart to beat.

Should Fate command me to the farthest verge
 Of the green earth, to distant barbarous climes,
 Rivers unknown to song ; where first the Sun
 Gilds Indian mountains, or his setting beam
 Flames on th' Atlantic isles ; 'tis nought to me ;
 Since God is ever present, ever felt,
 In the void waste, as in the city full ;
 And where he vital breathes, there must be joy.
 When ev'n at last the solemn hour shall come,
 And wing my mystic flight to future worlds,
 I cheerful will obey : there, with new powers,
 Will rising wonders sing : I cannot go
 Where Universal Love not smiles around,
 Sustaining all yon orbs, and all their suns ;
 From seeming evil still educating good,
 And better thence again, and better still,
 In infinite progression. But I lose
 Myself in him, in Light ineffable ;
 Come then, expressive Silence, muse his praise.

THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE.

AN ALLEGORICAL POEM.

Advertisement.

This poem being writ in the manner of Spenser, the obsolete words, and a simplicity of diction in some of the lines, which borders on the ludicrous, were necessary, to make the imitation more perfect. And the style of that admirable poet, as well as the measure in which he wrote, are, as it were, appropriated by custom to allegorical poems writ in our language ; just as in French the style of Marot, who lived under Francis I., has been used in tales, and familiar epistles, by the politest writers of the age of Louis XIV.

CANTO L

The Castle height of Indolence,
 And its false luxury;
 Where for a little time, alas!
 We liv'd right jollily.

O MORTAL man, who livest here by toil,
 Do not complain of this thy hard estate;
 That like an emmet thou must ever moil,
 Is a sad sentence of an ancient date;
 And, certes, there is for it reason great;
 For, tho' sometimes it makes thee weep and wail,
 And curse thy star, and early drudge and late,
 Withouten that would come an heavier bale,
 Loose life, unruly passions and diseases pale.

In lowly dale, fast by a river's side,
 With woody hill o'er hill encompass'd round,
 A most enchanting wizard did abide,
 Than whom a fiend more fell is no where found.
 It was, I ween, a lovely spot of ground;
 And there a season atween June and May,
 Half prankt with spring, with summer half em-
 brown'd,
 A listless climate made, where, sooth to say,
 No living wight could work, ne cared ev'n for play.

Was nought around but images of rest:
 Sleep-soothing groves, and quiet lawns between;
 And flowery beds that slumberous influence kest,
 From poppies breath'd; and beds of pleasant
 green,
 Where never yet was creeping creature seen.
 Meantime unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
 And hurled every where their waters sheen;
 That, as they bicker'd through the sunny shade,
 Though restless still themselves, a lulling murmur
 made.

Join'd to the prattle of the purling rills,
 Were heard the lowing herds along the vale,
 And flocks loud-bleating from the distant hills,
 And vacant shepherds piping in the dale:
 And now and then sweet Philomel would wail,
 Or stock-doves plain amid the forest deep,
 That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale;
 And still a coil the grasshopper did keep;
 Yet all these sounds yblent inclined all to sleep.

Full in the passage of the vale, above,
 A sable, silent, solemn forest stood; [move,
 Where nought but shadowy forms was seen to
 As Idless fancy'd in her dreaming mood:
 And up the hills, on either side, a wood
 Of blackening pines, ay waving to and fro,
 Sent forth a sleepy horror through the blood;
 And where this valley winded out, below,
 The murmuring main was heard, and scarcely heard,
 to flow.

A pleasing land of drowsy-head it was,
 Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye;
 And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
 For ever flushing round a summer-sky:
 There eke the soft delights, that witchingly
 Instil a wanton sweetness through the breast,
 And the calm pleasures always hover'd nigh;
 But whate'er smack'd of noyance, or unrest,
 Was far far off expell'd from this delicious nest.

The landskip such, inspiring perfect ease,
 Where Indolence (for so the wizard hight)
 Close-hid his castle mid embowering trees,
 That half shut out the beams of Phœbus bright,
 And made a kind of checker'd day and night;
 Meanwhile, unceasing at the massy gate,
 Beneath a spacious palm, the wicked wight
 Was plac'd; and to his lute, of cruel fate, [estate.
 And labour harsh, complain'd, lamenting man's

Thither continual pilgrims crowded still,
 From all the roads of Earth that pass there by:
 For, as they chaunc'd to breathe on neighbouring hill,
 The freshness of this valley smote their eye,
 And drew them ever and anon more nigh;
 Till clustering round th' enchanter false they hung,
 Ymolten with his syren melody;
 While o'er th' enfeebling lute his hand he flung,
 And to the trembling chords these tempting verses
 sung:

"Behold! ye pilgrims of this Earth, behold!
 See all but man with unearn'd pleasure gay:
 See her bright robes the butterfly unfold,
 Broke from her wintry tomb in prime of May!

What youthful bride can equal her array?
 Who can with her for easy pleasure vie?
 From mead to mead with gentle wing to stray,
 From flower to flower on balmy gales to fly,
 Is all she has to do beneath the radiant sky.

"Behold the merry minstrels of the morn,
 The swarming songsters of the careless grove,
 Ten thousand throats! that from the flowering thorn

Hymn their good God, and carol sweet of love,
 Such grateful kindly raptures them emove:
 They neither plow, nor sow; ne, fit for flail,
 E'er to the barn the nodden sheaves they drove;
 Yet theirs each harvest dancing in the gale,
 Whatever crowns the hill, or smiles along the vale.

"Outcast of Nature, man! the wretched thrall
 Of bitter dropping sweat, of sweltry pain,
 Of cares that eat away thy heart with gall,
 And of the vices, an inhuman train,
 That all proceed from savage thirst of gain:
 For when hard-hearted Interest first began
 To poison Earth, Astræa left the plain;
 Guile, violence, and murder, seiz'd on man,
 And, for soft milky streams, with blood the rivers
 ran.

"Come, ye, who still the cumbersome load of life
 Push hard up hill; but as the farthest steep
 You trust to gain, and put an end to strife,
 Down thunders back the stone with mighty sweep,
 And hurls your labours to the valley deep,
 For ever vain: come, and, withouten fee,
 I in oblivion will your sorrows steep,
 Your cares, your toils, will steep you in a sea
 Of full delight: (O come, ye weary wights, to me!

"With me, you need not rise at early dawn
 To pass the joyless day in various stounds:
 Or, louting low, on upstart Fortune fawn,
 And sell fair honour for some paltry pounds;
 Or through the city take your dirty rounds,
 To cheat, and dun, and lye, and visit pay,
 Now flattering base, now giving secret wounds:
 Or prowl in courts of law for human prey,
 In venal senate thief, or rob on broad highway.

"No cocks, with me, to rustic labour call,
 From village on to village sounding clear:
 To tardy swain no shrill-voic'd matrons squall;
 No dogs, no babes, no wives, to stun your ear;
 No hammers thump; no horrid blacksmith sear,
 Ne noisy tradesmen your sweet slumbers start,
 With sounds that are a misery to hear:
 But all is calm, as would delight the heart
 Of Sybarite of old, all nature, and all art.

"Here nought but candour reigns, indulgent ease,
 Good-natur'd lounging, sauntering up and down:
 They who are pleas'd themselves must always
 please;
 On others' ways they never squint a frown,
 Nor heed what haps in hamlet or in town:
 Thus, from the source of tender indolence,
 With milky blood the heart is overflown,
 Is sooth'd and sweeten'd by the social sense;
 For Interest, Envy, Pride, and Strife, are banish'd
 hence.

"What, what is virtue, but repose of mind,
 A pure ethereal calm, that knows no storm;
 Above the reach of wild ambition's wind,
 Above the passions that this world deform,
 And torture man, a proud malignant worm?
 But here, instead, soft gales of passion play,
 And gently stir the heart, thereby to form
 A quicker sense of joy; as breezes stray [gay,
 Across th' enliven'd skies, and make them still more

"The best of men have ever lov'd repose:
 They hate to mingle in the filthy fray;
 Where the soul sours, and gradual rancour grows,
 Embitter'd more from pceevish day to day.
 Ev'n those whom Fame has lent her fairest ray,
 The most renown'd of worthy wights of yore,
 From a base world at last have stol'n away:
 So Scipio, to the soft Cumæan shore
 Retiring, tasted joy he never knew before.

"But if a little exercise you chuse,
 Some zest for ease, 'tis not forbidden here.
 Amid the groves you may indulge the Muse,
 Or tend the blooms, and deck the vernal year;
 Or softly stealing, with your watery gear,
 Along the brook, the crimson spotted fry
 You may delude: the whilst, amus'd, you hear
 Now the hoarse stream, and now the Zephyr's sigh,
 Attuned to the birds, and woodland melody.

"O grievous folly! to heap up estate,
 Losing the days you see beneath the Sun;
 When, sudden, comes blind unrelenting Fate,
 And gives th' untasted portion you have won,
 With ruthless toil, and many a wretch undone,
 To those who mock you gone to Pluto's reign,
 There with sad ghosts to pine, and shadows drear:
 But sure it is of vanities most vain,
 To toil for what you here untoiling may obtain."

He ceas'd. But still their trembling ears retain'd
 The deep vibrations of his witching song;
 That, by a kind of magic power, constrain'd
 To enter in, pell-mell, the listening throng.
 Heaps pour'd on heaps, and yet they slipt along,
 In silent ease: as when beneath the beam
 Of summer-moons, the distant woods among,
 Or by some flood all silver'd with the gleam,
 The soft-embodied Fays through airy portal stream:

By the smooth demon so it order'd was,
 And here his baneful bounty first began: [pass,
 Though some there were who would not further
 And his alluring baits suspected han
 The wise distrust the too fair-spoken man.
 Yet through the gate they cast a wishful eye:
 Not to move on, perdie, is all they can;
 For, do their very best, they cannot fly,
 But often each way look, and often sorely sigh.

When this the watchful wicked wizard saw,
 With sudden spring he leap'd upon them straight;
 And, soon as touch'd by his unhallow'd paw,
 They found themselves within the cursed gate;
 Full hard to be repass'd, like that of Fate
 Not stronger were of old the giant crew,
 Who sought to pull high Jove from regal state;
 Though feeble wretch he seem'd, of sallow hue:
 Certes, who bides his grasp, will that encounter rue.

For whomsoe'er the villain takes in hand,
 Their joints unknit, their sinews melt space ;
 As lithe they grow as any willow-wand,
 And of their vanish'd force remains no trace :
 So when a maiden fair, of modest grace,
 In all her buxom blooming May of charms,
 Is seized in some losel's hot embrace,
 She waxeth very weakly as she warms,
 Then sighing yields her up to love's delicious harms.

Wak'd by the crowd, slow from his bench arose
 A comely full-spread porter, swoln with sleep :
 His calm, broad, thoughtless aspect, breath'd repose ;
 And in sweet torpours he was plunged deep,
 Ne could himself from ceaseless yawning keep ;
 While o'er his eyes the drowsy liquor ran,
 Thro' which his half-wak'd soul would faintly peep.
 Then, taking his black staff, he call'd his man,
 And rous'd himself as much as rouse himself he can.

The lad leap'd lightly at his master's call.
 He was, to weet, a little roguish page,
 Save sleep and play who minded nought at all,
 Like most the untaught striplings of his age.
 This boy he kept each band to disengage,
 Garters and buckles, task for him unfit,
 But ill-hecoming his grave personage,
 And which his portly paunch would not permit,
 So this same limber page to all performed it.

Meantime the master-porter wide display'd
 Great store of caps, of slippers, and of gowns ;
 Wherewith be those that enter'd in, array'd
 Loose, as the breeze that plays along the downs,
 And waves the summer-woods when evening
     frowns.

O fair undress, best dress ! it checks no vein,
 But every flowing limb in pleasure drowns,
 And heightens ease with grace. This done, right fain,
 Sir porter sat him down, and turn'd to sleep again.

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
 That in the middle of the court up-threw
 A stream, high-spouting from its liquid bed,
 And falling back again in drizzly dew : [drew.
 There each deep draughts, as deep he thirsted,
 It was a fountain of Nepenthe rare : [grew,
 Whence, as Dan Homer sings, huge pleasure
 And sweet oblivion of vile earthly care ;
 Fair gladsome waking thoughts, and joyous dreams
     more fair.

This rite perform'd, all inly pleas'd and still,
 Withouten tromp, was proclamation made.
 " Ye sons of Indolence, do what you will ;
 And wander where you list, thro' hall or glade !
 Be no man's pleasure for another staid ;
 Let each as likes him best his hours employ,
 And curs'd be he who minds his neighbour's trade !
 Here dwells kind Ease and unrepining Joy :
 He little merits bliss who others can annoy."

Straight of these endless numbers, swarming round,
 As thick as idle notes in sunny ray,
 Not one oftsoons in view was to be found,
 But every man stroll'd off his own glad-way,
 Wide o'er this ample court's black area,

With all the lodges that thereto pertain'd,
 No living creature could be seen to stray ;
 While solitude and perfect silence reign'd :
 So that to think you dreamt you almost was con-
     strain'd.

As when a shepherd of the Hebrid isles,
 Plac'd far amid the melancholy main,
 (Whether it be lone fancy him beguiles ;
 Or that aërial beings sometimes deign
 To stand embodied, to our senses plain,)
 Sees on the naked hill, or valley low,
 The whilst in ocean Phoebus dips his wain,
 A vast assembly moving to and fro :
 Then all at once in air dissolves the wondrous show.

Ye gods of quiet, and of sleep profound !
 Whose soft dominion o'er this castle sways,
 And all the widely-silent places round,
 Forgive me, if my trembling pen displays
 What never yet was sung in mortal lays.
 But how shall I attempt such arduous string,
 I, who have spent my nights, and nightly days,
 In this soul-deadening place, loose-loitering ?
 Ah ! how shall I for this uprear my moulted wing?

Come on, my Muse, nor stoop to low despair,
 Thou imp of Jove, touch'd by celestial fire !
 Thou yet shalt sing of war, and actions fair,
 Which the bold sons of Britain will inspire ;
 Of ancient bards thou yet shalt sweep the lyre ;
 Thou yet shalt tread in tragic pall the stage,
 Paint love's enchanting woes, the hero's ire,
 The sage's calm, the patriot's noble rage,
 Dashing corruption down through every worthless age.

The doors, that knew no shrill alarming bell,
 Ne cursed knocker ply'd by villain's hand,
 Self-open'd into halls, where, who can tell
 What elegance and grandeur wide expand
 The pride of Turkey and of Persia land ?
 Soft quilts on quilts, on carpets carpets spread,
 And couches stretch'd around in seemly band ;
 And endless pillows rise to prop the head ;
 So that each spacious room was one full-swelling bed.

And every where huge cover'd tables stood,
 With wines high-flavour'd and rich viands
     crown'd ;
 Whatever sprightly juice or tasteful food
 On the green bosom of this Earth are found,
 And all old Ocean genders in his round :
 Some hand unseen these silently display'd,
 Ev'n undemanded by a sign or sound ;
 You need but wish, and, instantly obey'd,
 Fair-rang'd the dishes rose, and thick the glasses
     play'd.

Here freedom reign'd, without the least alloy ;
 Nor gossip's tale, nor ancient maiden's gall,
 Nor saintly spleen, durst murmur at our joy,
 And with envenom'd tongue our pleasures pall.
 For why ? there was but one great rule for all ;
 To wit, that each should work his own desire,
 And eat, drink, study, sleep, as it may fall,
 Or melt the time in love, or wake the lyre,
 And carol what, unbid, the Muses might inspire.

The rooms with costly tapestry were hung,
Where was inwoven many a gentle tale;
Such as of old the rural poets sung,
Or of Arcadian or Sicilian vale:
Reclining lovers, in the lonely dale,
Pour'd forth at large the sweetly-tortur'd heart;
Or, sighing tender passion, swell'd the gale,
And taught charm'd echo to resound their smart;
While flocks, woods, streams, around, repose and peace impart.

Those pleas'd the most, where, by a cunning
hand,
Depainted was the patriarchal age;
What time Dan Abraham left the Chaldee land,
And pastur'd on from verdant stage to stage,
Where fields and fountains fresh could best engage.
Toil was not then. Of nothing took they heed,
But with wild beasts the sylvan war to wage,
And o'er vast plains their herds and flocks to feed:
Blest sons of Nature they! true golden age indeed!

Sometimes the pencil, in cool airy halls,
Bade the gay bloom of vernal landscips rise,
Or Autumn's varied shades imbrown the walls:
Now the black tempest strikes th' astonish'd eyes,
Now down the steep the flashing torrent flies;
The trembling Sun now plays o'er Ocean blue,
And now rude mountains frown amid the skies;
Whate'er Lorraine light-touch'd with softening hue,
Or savage Rosa dash'd, or learned Poussin drew.

Each sound, too, here, to languishment inclin'd,
Lull'd the weak bosom, and induced ease,
Aërial music in the warbling wind,
At distance rising oft by small degrees,
Nearer and nearer came, till o'er the trees
It hung, and breath'd such soul-dissolving airs,
As did, alas! with soft perdition please:
Entangled deep in its enchanting snares,
The listening heart forgot all duties and all cares.

A certain music, never known before,
Here lull'd the pensive melancholy mind;
Full easily obtain'd. Behoves no more,
But sidelong, to the gently-waving wind,
To lay the well-tun'd instrument reclin'd;
From which, with airy flying fingers light,
Beyond each mortal touch the most refin'd,
The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight:
Whence, with just cause, the harp of Æolus it hight.

Ah me! what hand can touch the string so fine?
Who up the lofty diapason roll
Such sweet, such sad, such solemn airs divine,
Then let them down again into the soul?
Now rising love they fann'd; now pleasing dole
They breath'd, in tender musings, through the
heart;
And now a graver sacred strain they stole,
As when seraphic hands an hymn impart,
Wild-warbling Nature all above the reach of Art!

Such the gay splendour, the luxurious state,
Of caliphs old, who on the Tigris' shore,
In mighty Bagdat, populous and great,
Held their bright court, where was of ladies store;
And verse, love, music, still the garland

When sleep was coy, the bard in waiting there,
Cheer'd the lone midnight with the Muse's love:
Composing music bade his dreams be fair,
And music lent new gladness to the morning air.

Near the pavilions where we slept, still ran
Soft-tinkling streams, and dashing waters fell,
And sobbing breezes sigh'd, and oft began
(So work'd the wizard) wintery storms to swell,
As Heaven and Earth they would together melt:
At doors and windows, threatening, seem'd to call
The demons of the tempest, growling fell,
Yet the least entrance found they none at all;
Whence sweeter grew our sleep, secure in many hall.

And hither Morpheus sent his kindest dreams,
Raising a world of gayer tinct and grace;
O'er which were shadowy cast Elysian gleams,
That play'd, in waving lights, from place to place,
And shed a roseate smile on Nature's face.
Not Titian's pencil e'er could so array,
So fierce with clouds the pure ethereal space;
Ne could it e'er such melting forms display,
As loose on flowery beds all languishingly lay.

No, fair illusions! artful phantoms, no!
My Muse will not attempt your fairy-land:
She has no colours that like you can glow:
To catch your vivid scenes too gross her hand.
But sure it is, was ne'er a subtler band
Than these same guileful angel-seeming sprites,
Who thus in dreams, voluptuous, soft, and bland,
Pour'd all th' Arabian Heaven upon her nights,
And bless'd them oft besides with more refin'd delights.

They were in sooth a most enchanting train,
Ev'n feigning virtue; skilful to unite
With evil, good, and strew with pleasure, pain.
But for those fiends, whom blood and broils delight;
Who hurl the wretch, as if to Hell outright,
Down, down black gulphs, where sullen waters
sleep,
Or hold him clambering all the fearful night
On beetling cliffs, or pent in ruins deep;
They, till due time should serve, were bid far
hence to keep.

Ye guardian spirits, to whom man is dear,
From these foul demons shield the midnight
gloom:
Angels of fancy and of love, be near,
And o'er the blank of sleep diffuse a bloom:
Evoke the sacred shades of Greece and Rome,
And let them virtue with a look impart:
But chief, awhile, O! lend us from the tomb
These long-lost friends for whom in love we smart,
And fill with pious awe and joy-mixt woe the
heart.

Or are you sportive — Bid the morn of youth
Rise to new light, and beam afresh the days
Of innocence, simplicity, and truth;
To cares estrang'd, and manhood's thorny ways
What transport, to retrace our boyish plays,

Our easy bliss, when each thing joy supply'd ;
 The woods, the mountains, and the warbling maze
 Of the wild brooks !—But fondly wandering wide,
 My Muse, resume the task that yet doth thee abide.

One great amusement of our household was,
 In a huge crystal magic globe to spy,
 Still as you turn'd it, all things that do pass
 Upon this ant-hill Earth ; where constantly
 Of idly-busy men the restless fry
 Run bustling to and fro with foolish haste,
 In search of pleasure vain that from them fly,
 Or which obtain'd, the caitiffs dare not taste :
 When nothing is enjoy'd, can there be greater waste ?

“ Of vanity the mirror ” this was call'd.
 Here you a muckworm of the town might see,
 At his dull desk, amid his legers stall'd,
 Eat up with carking care and penurie :
 Most like to carcase parch'd on gallow-tree.
 “ A penny saved is a penny got ; ”
 Firm to this scoundrel maxim keepeth he,
 Ne of its rigour will he bate a jot,
 Till it has quench'd his fire, and banished his pot.

Straight from the filth of this low grub, behold !
 Comes fluttering forth a gaudy spendthrift heir,
 All glossy gay, enamell'd all with gold,
 The silly tenant of the summer-air,
 In folly lost, of nothing takes he care ;
 Pimps, lawyers, stewards, harlots, flatterers vile,
 And thieving tradesmen him among them share :
 His father's ghost from limbo-lake, the while,
 Sees this, which more damnation doth upon him pile.

This globe pourtray'd the race of learned men,
 Still at their books, and turning o'er the page
 Backwards and forwards : oft they snatch the pen,
 As if inspir'd, and in a Thespian rage ;
 Then write, and blot, as would your ruth engage.
 Why, authors, all this scrawl and scribbling sore ?
 To lose the present, gain the future age,
 Praised to be when you can hear no more,
 And much enrich'd with fame, when useless worldly store.

Then would a splendid city rise to view,
 With carts, and cars, and coaches, roaring all :
 Wide pour'd abroad behold the giddy crew ;
 See how they dash along from wall to wall !
 At every door, hark how they thundering call !
 Good Lord ! what can this giddy rout excite ?
 Why, on each other with fell tooth to fall ;
 A neighbour's fortune, fame, or peace to blight,
 And make new tiresome parties for the coming night.

The puzzling sons of party next appear'd,
 In dark cabals and nightly juntos met ; [rear'd
 And now they whisper'd close, now shrugging
 Th' important shoulder ; then, as if to get
 New light, their twinkling eyes were inward set.
 No sooner Lucifer recalls affairs,
 Than forth they various rush in mighty fret ;
 When, lo ! push'd up to power, and crown'd
 their cares, [stairs.
 In comes another sett, and kicketh them down

But what most show'd the vanity of life,
 Was to behold the nations all on fire,
 In cruel broils engag'd, and deadly strife :
 Most Christian kings, inflam'd by black desire,
 With honourable ruffians in their hire,
 Cause war to rage, and blood around to pour :
 Of this sad work when each begins to tire,
 They sit them down just where they were before,
 Till for new scenes of woe peace shall their force restore.

To number up the thousands dwelling here,
 An useless were, and eke an endless task ;
 From kings, and those who at the helm appear.
 To gypsies brown in summer-glades who bask.
 Yea, many a man, perdie, I could unmask,
 Whose desk and table make a solemn show,
 With tape-ty'd trash, and suits of fools that ask
 For place or pension laid in decent row ;
 But these I passen by, with nameless numbers moe.

Of all the gentle tenants of the place,
 There was a man of special grave remark :
 A certain tender gloom o'erspread his face,
 Pensive, not sad, in thought involv'd, not dark ;
 As soot this man could sing as morning-lark,
 And teach the noblest morals of the heart :
 But these his talents were yburied stark ;
 Of the fine stores he nothing would impart,
 Which or boon Nature gave, or Nature-painting
 Art.

To noontide shades incontinent he ran,
 Where purls the brook with sleep-inviting sound ;
 Or when Dan Sol to slope his wheels began,
 Amid the broom he bask'd him on the ground,
 Where the wild thyme and camomil are found :
 There would he linger, till the latest ray
 Of light sat trembling on the welkin's bound ;
 Then homeward through the twilight shadows
 stray,
 Sauntering and slow. So had he passed many a day !

Yet not in thoughtless slumber were they past :
 For oft the heavenly fire, that lay conceal'd
 Beneath the sleeping embers, mounted fast,
 And all its native light anew reveal'd :
 Oft as he travers'd the cerulean field,
 And markt the clouds that drove before the wind,
 Ten thousand glorious systems would he build,
 Ten thousand great ideas fill'd his mind ;
 But with the clouds they fled, and left no trace behind.

With him was sometimes join'd, in silent walk,
 (Profoundly silent, for they never spoke,)
 One shyer still, who quite detested talk :
 Oft, stung by spleen, at once away he broke,
 To groves of pine, and broad o'ershadowing oak ;
 There, inly thrill'd, he wander'd all alone,
 And on himself his pensive fury wroke,
 Ne ever utter'd word, save when first shone
 The glittering star of eve — “ Thank Heaven ! the day is done.”

Here lurk'd a wretch, who had not crept abroad
 For forty years, no face of mortal seen ;
 In chamber brooding like a loathly toad :
 And sure his linen was not very clean.

Through secret loop-holes, that had practis'd been
Near to his bed, his dinner vile he took ;
Unkempt, and rough, of squalid face and mien,
Our castle's shame ! whence, from his filthy nook,
We drove the villain out for fitter lair to look.

One day there chaunc'd into these halls to rove
A joyous youth, who took you at first sight ;
Him the wild wave of pleasure hither drove,
Before the sprightly tempest-tossing light :
Certes, he was a most engaging wight,
Of social glee, and wit humane, though keen,
Turning the night to day, and day to night :
For him the merry bells had rung, I ween,
If in this nook of quiet bells had ever been.

But not ev'n pleasure to excess is good :
What most elates then sinks the soul as low :
When spring-tide joy pours in with copious flood,
The higher still th' exulting billows flow,
The farther back again they flagging go,
And leave us grovelling on the dreary shore :
Taught by this son of joy, we found it so :
Who, whilst he staid, kept in a gay uproar
Our madden'd castle all, th' abode of sleep no more.

As when in prime of June a burnish'd fly,
Sprung from the meads, o'er which he sweeps
along,
Cheer'd by the breathing bloom and vital sky,
Tunes up amid these airy halls his song,
Soothing at first the gay reposing throng :
And oft he sips their bowl : or, nearly drown'd,
He, thence recovering, drives their beds among,
And scares their tender sleep, with trump profound ;
Then out again he flies, to wing his mazy round.

Another guest there was, of sense refin'd,
Who felt each worth, for every worth he had ;
Serene, yet warm, humane, yet firm his mind,
As little touch'd as any man's with bad :
Him through their inmost walks the Muses lad,
To him the sacred love of Nature lent,
And sometimes would he make our valley glad ;
When as we found he would not here be pent,
To him the better sort this friendly message sent.

" Come, dwell with us ! true son of virtue, come !
But if, alas ! we cannot thee persuade,
To lie content beneath our peaceful dome,
Ne ever more to quit our quiet glade ;
Yet when at last thy toils but ill apaid
Shall dead thy fire, and damp its heavenly spark,
Thou wilt be glad to seek the rural shade,
There to indulge the Muse, and Nature mark :
We then a lodge for thee will rear in Hagley-Park."

Here whilom ligg'd th' Esopus * of the age ;
But call'd by Fame, in soul ypricked deep,
A noble pride restor'd him to the stage,
And rous'd him like a giant from his sleep.
Ev'n from his slumbers we advantage reap :
With double force th' enliven'd scene he wakes,
Yet quits not Nature's bounds. He knows to keep
Each due decorum : now the heart he shakes,
And now with well-urg'd sense th' enlighten'd judgment takes.

* Mr. Quin.

A bard here dwelt, more fat than bard becoms ;
† Who, void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
On virtue still, and Nature's pleasing themes,
Pour'd forth his unpremeditated strain :
The world forsaking with a calm disdain,
Here laugh'd he careless in his easy seat ;
Here quaff'd encircled with the joyous train,
Oft moralizing sage ; his ditty sweet
He loathed much to write, ne cared to repeat.

Full oft by holy feet our ground was trod,
Of clerks good plenty here you mote espy.
A little, round, fat, oily man of God,
Was one I chiefly mark'd among the fry :
He had a roguish twinkle in his eye,
And shone all glittering with ungodly dew,
If a tight damsel chaunc'd to trippen by ;
Which, when observ'd, he shrunk into his mew,
And straight would recollect his piety anew.

Nor be forgot a tribe, who minded nought
(Old inmates of the place) but state-affairs :
They look'd, perdie, as if they deeply thought ;
And on their brow sat every nation's cares.
The world by them is parcell'd out in shares.
When in the hall of smoke they congress hold,
And the sage berry sun-burnt Mocha bears
Has clear'd their inward eye : then, smoke-enroll'd,
Their oracles break forth mysterious, as of old.

Here languid Beauty kept her pale-fac'd court :
Bevies of dainty dames, of high degree,
From every quarter hither made resort ;
Where, from gross mortal care and business free,
They lay, pour'd out in ease and luxury.
Or should they a vain show of work assume,
Alas ! and well-a-day ! what can it be ?
To knot, to twist, to range the vernal bloom :
But far is cast the distaff, spinning-wheel, and loom.

Their only labour was to kill the time ;
And labour dire it is, and weary woe.
They sit, they loll, turn o'er some idle rhyme ;
Then, rising sudden, to the glass they go,
Or saunter forth, with tottering step and slow :
This soon too rude an exercise they find ;
Straight on the couch their limbs again they throw,
Where hours on hours they sighing lie reclin'd,
And court the vapoury god soft-breathing in the wind.

Now must I mark the villainy we found,
But, ah ! too late, as shall eftsoons be shown.
A place here was, deep, dreary, under ground ;
Where still our inmates, when displeasing grown,
Diseas'd and loathsome, privily were thrown.
Far from the light of Heaven, they languish'd there,
Unpity'd uttering many a bitter groan ;
For of these wretches taken was no care :
Fierce fiends, and hags of Hell, their only nurses were.

† This character of Mr. Thomson was written by Lord Lyttelton.

Alas! the change! from scenes of joy and rest,
To this dark den, where Sickness toss'd alway:
Here Lethargy, with deadly sleep oppress,
Stretch'd on his back, a mighty lubbard, lay,
Heaving his sides, and snored night and day;
To stir him from his traunce it was not eath,
And his half-open'd eyne he shut straightway:
He led, I wot, the softest way to death,
And taught withouten pain and strife to yield the breath.

Of limbs enormous, but withal unsound,
Soft-swoln and pale, here lay the Hydropsy:
Unwieldy man; with belly monstrous round,
For ever fed with watery supply;
For still he drank, and yet he still was dry.
And moping here did Hypochondria sit,
Mother of Spleen, in robes of various dye,
Who vex'd was full oft with ugly fit; [a wit.
And some her frantic deem'd, and some her deem'd

A lady proud she was, of ancient blood,
Yet oft her fear her pride made crouchen low:
She felt, or fancy'd in her fluttering mood,
All the diseases which the spittles know,
And sought all physic which the shops bestow.
And still new leeches and new drugs would try,
Her humour ever wavering to and fro;
For sometimes she would laugh, and sometimes cry,
Then sudden waxed wroth, and all she knew not why.

Fast by her side a listless maiden pin'd,
With aching head, and squeamish heart-burnings;
Pale, bloated, cold, she seem'd to hate mankind,
Yet lov'd in secret all forbidden things.
And here the Tertian shakes his chilling wings;
The sleepless Gout here counts the crowing cocks,
A wolf now gnaws him, now a serpent stings;
Whilst Apoplexy cramm'd Intemperance knocks
Down to the ground at once, as butcher felleth ox.

CANTO II.

The knight of arts and industry,
And his achievements fair;
That by his castle's overthrow,
Secur'd, and crowned were.

Escap'd the castle of the sire of sin,
Ah! where shall I so sweet a dwelling find?
For all around, without, and all within,
Nothing save what delightful was and kind,
Of goodness savouring and a tender mind,
E'er rose to view. But now another strain,
Of doleful note, alas! remains behind:
I now must sing of pleasure turn'd to pain,
And of the false enchanter, Indolence, complain.

Is there no patron to protect the Muse,
And fence for her Parnassus' barren soil?
To every labour its reward accrues,
And they are sure of bread who swink and moil;
But a fell tribe th' Aonian hive despoil,
As ruthless wasps oft rob the painful bee:
Thus while the laws not guard that noblest toil,
Ne for the other Muses meed decree,
They praised are alone, and starve right merrily.

I care not, Fortune, what you me deny:
You cannot rob me of free Nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky, [face;
Through which Aurora shows her brightening
You cannot bar my constant feet to trace
The woods and lawns, by living stream, at eve:
Let health my nerves and finer fibres brace,
And I their toys to the great children leave:
Of fancy, reason, virtue, nought can me bereave.

Come then, my Muse, and raise a bolder song;
Come, lig no more upon the bed of sloth,
Dragging the lazy languid line along.
Fond to begin, but still to finish loth,
Thy half-writ scrolls all eaten by the moth:
Arise, and sing that generous imp of Fame,
Who with the sons of softness nobly wroth,
To sweep away this human lumber came,
Or in a chosen few to rouse the slumbering flame.

In Fairy-land there liv'd a knight of old,
Of feature stern, Selvaggio well yclep'd,
A rough unpolish'd man, robust and bold,
But wondrous poor: he neither sow'd nor reap'd,
Ne stores in summer for cold winter heap'd;
In hunting all his days away he wore;
Now scorch'd by June, now in November steep'd,
Now pinch'd by biting January sore,
He still in woods pursued the libbard and the boar.

As he one morning, long before the dawn,
Prick'd through the forest to dislodge his prey,
Deep in the winding bosom of a lawn,
With wood wild-fring'd, he mark'd a taper's ray,
That from the beating rain, and wintery fray,
Did to a lonely cot his steps decoy;
There, up to earn the needments of the day,
He found dame Poverty, nor fair nor coy:
Her he compress'd, and fill'd her with a lusty boy.

Amid the green-wood shade this boy was bred,
And grew at last a knight of muchel fame,
Of active mind and vigorous lustybed,
The Knight of Arts and Industry by name.
Earth was his bed, the boughs his roof did frame;
He knew no beverage but the flowing stream;
His tasteful well-earn'd food the sylvan game,
Or the brown fruit with which the woodlands teem:
The same to him glad summer, or the winter breme.

So pass'd his youthly morning, void of care,
Wild as the colts that thro' the commons run:
For him no tender parents troubled were,
He of the forest seem'd to be the son,
And certes had been utterly undone;
But that Minerva pity of him took,
With all the gods that love the rural wonne,
That teach to tame the soil and rule the crook;
Ne did the sacred Nine disdain a gentle look.

Of fertile genius him they nurtur'd well,
In every science, and in every art,
By which mankind the thoughtless brutes excel,
That can or use, or joy, or grace impart,
Disclosing all the powers of head and heart:
Ne were the goodly exercises spar'd,
That brace the nerves, or make the limbs alert,
And mix elastic force with firmness hard:
Was never knight on ground mote be with him
compar'd.

Sometimes, with early morn, he mounted gay
The hunter-steed, exulting o'er the dale,
And drew the roseat breath of orient day;
Sometimes, retiring to the secret vale,
Yclad in steel, and bright with burnish'd mail,
He strain'd the bow, or toss'd the sounding spear,
Or darting on the goal outstripp'd the gale,
Or wheel'd the chariot in its mid career, [peer.
Or strenuous wrestled hard with many a tough com-

At other times he pry'd through Nature's store,
Whate'er she in th' ethereal round contains,
Whate'er she hides beneath her verdant floor,
The vegetable and the mineral reigns: [mains,
Or else he scann'd the globe, those small do-
Where restless mortals such a turmoil keep,
Its seas, its floods, its mountains, and its plains;
But more he search'd the mind, and rous'd from sleep
Those moral seeds whence we heroic actions reap.

Nor would he scorn to stoop from high pursuits
Of heavenly Truth, and practise what she taught.
Vain is the tree of knowledge without fruits.
Sometimes in hand the spade or plough he caught,
Forth-calling all with which boon Earth is fraught;
Sometimes he ply'd the strong mechanic tool,
Or rear'd the fabric from the finest draught;
And oft he put himself to Neptune's school,
Fighting with winds and waves on the vex'd ocean pool.

To solace then these rougher toils, he try'd
To touch the kindling canvass into life;
With Nature his creating pencil vy'd,
With Nature joyous at the mimic strife:
Or, to such shapes as grac'd Pygmalion's wife,
He hew'd the marble; or, with varied fire,
He rous'd the trumpet and the martial fife,
Or bade the lute sweet tenderness inspire, [lyre.
Or verses fram'd that well might wake Apollo's

Accomplish'd thus he from the woods issued,
Full of great aims, and bent on bold emprise;
The work, which long he in his breast had brew'd,
Now to perform he ardent did devise;
To wit, a barbarous world to civilize.
Earth was till then a boundless forest wild;
Nought to be seen but savage wood, and skies;
No cities nourish'd arts, no culture smil'd,
No government, no laws, no gentle manners mild.

A rugged wight, the worst of brutes, was man;
On his own wretched kind he, ruthless, prey'd:
The strongest still the weakest over-ran;
In every country mighty robbers sway'd,
And guile and ruffian force were all their trade.
Life was a scene of rapine, want, and woe;
Which this brave knight, in noble anger, made
To swear, he would the rascal rout o'erthrow,
For, by the powers divine, it should no more be so!

It would exceed the purport of my song,
To say how this best Sun from orient climes
Came beaming life and beauty all along,
Before him chasing indolence and crimes.
Still as he pass'd, the nations he sublimes,
And calls forth arts and virtues with his ray:
Then Egypt, Greece, and Rome, their golden times,

Successive had; but now in ruins grey
They lie, to slavish sloth and tyranny a prey.

To crown his toils, sir Industry then spread
The swelling sail, and made for Britain's coast.
A sylvan life till then the natives led,
In the brown shades and green-wood forest lost,
All careless rambling where it lik'd them most:
Their wealth the wild-deer bouncing through the glade;
They lodg'd at large, and liv'd at Nature's cost;
Save spear, and bow, withouten other aid;
Yet not the Roman steel their naked breast dis-
may'd.

He lik'd the soil, he lik'd the clement skies,
He lik'd the verdant hills and flowery plains.
"Be this my great, my chosen isle," he cries,
"This, whilst my labours Liberty sustains,
This queen of Ocean all assault disdains."
Nor lik'd he less the genius of the land,
To freedom apt and persevering pains,
Mild to obey, and generous to command,
Temper'd by forming Heaven with kindest, firmest
hand.

Here, by degrees, his master-work arose,
Whatever arts and industry can frame:
Whatever finish'd Agriculture knows,
Fair queen of arts! from Heaven itself who came
When Eden flourished in unspotted fame:
And still with her sweet Innocence we find,
And tender Peace, and joys without a name,
That, while they ravish, tranquillize the mind:
Nature and Art, at once, delight and use com-
bin'd.

The towns he quicken'd by mechanic arts,
And bade the fervent city glow with toil;
Bade social Commerce raise renowned marts,
Join land to land, and marry soil to soil,
Unite the Poles, and, without bloody spoil,
Bring home of either Ind the gorgeous stores;
Or, should despotic rage the world embroil,
Bade tyrants tremble on remotest shores, [roars.
While o'er th' encircling deep Britannia's thunder

The drooping Muses then he westward call'd,
From the fam'd city by Propontic sea,
What time the Turk th' enfeebled Grecian
thrall'd;
Thence from their cloister'd walks he set them
free,
And brought them to another Castalie,
Where Isis many a famous nursling breeds;
Or where old Cam soft-paces o'er the lea
In pensive mood, and tunes his Doric reeds,
The whilst his flock at large the lonely shepherd feeds.

Yet the fine arts were what he finish'd least.
For why? They are the quintessence of all,
The growth of labouring time, and slow increas;
Unless, as seldom chances, it should fall,
That mighty patrons the coy sisters call
Up to the sun-shine of uncumber'd ease, [thrall,
Where no rude care the mounting thought may
And where they nothing have to do but please;
Ah! gracious God! thou know'st they ask no other fees.

But now, alas ! we live too late in time :
 Our patrons now ev'n grudge that little claim,
 Except to such as sleek the soothing rhyme ;
 And yet, forsooth, they wear Mæcenas' name,
 Poor sons of puffed-up vanity, not famè.
 Unbroken spirits, cheer ! still, still remains
 Th' eternal patron, Liberty ; whose flame,
 While she protects, inspires the noblest strains.
 The best, and sweetest far, are toil-created gains.

When as the knight had fram'd, in Britain-land
 A matchless form of glorious government,
 In which the sovereign laws alone command,
 Laws 'stablish'd by the public free consent,
 Whose majesty is to the sceptre lent ;
 When this great plan, with each dependent art,
 Was settled firm, and to his heart's content,
 Then sought he from the toilsome scene to part,
 And let life's vacant eve breathe quiet through the heart.

For this he chose a farm in Deva's vale,
 Where his long alleys peep'd upon the main.
 In this calm seat he drew the healthful gale,
 Here mix'd the chief, the patriot, and the swain.
 The happy monarch of his sylvan train,
 Here, aided by the guardians of the fold,
 He walk'd his rounds, and cheer'd his blest domain !

His days, the days of unstain'd nature, roll'd,
 Replete with peace and joy, like patriarchs of old.

Witness, ye lowing herds, who gave him milk ;
 Witness, ye flocks, whose woolly vestments far
 Exceed soft India's cotton, or her silk ;
 Witness, with autumn charg'd, the nodding car,
 That homeward came beneath sweet evening's star,
 Or of September moons the radiance mild.
 O, hide thy head, abominable War !
 Of crimes and ruffian-idleness the child
 From Heaven this life ysprung, from Hell thy glories vild !

Nor from this deep retirement banish'd was
 Th' amusing care of rural industry.
 Still as with grateful change the seasons pass,
 New scenes arise, new landships strike the eye,
 And all th' enliven'd country beautify :
 Gay plains extend where marshes slept before ;
 O'er recent meads th' exulting streamlets fly ;
 Dark frowning heaths grow bright with Ceres'
 store, [shore.
 And woods imbrown the steep, or wave along the

As nearer to his farm you made approach,
 He polish'd nature with a finer hand :
 Yet on her beauties durst not art incroach ;
 'Tis art's alone these beauties to expand.
 In graceful dance immingled, o'er the land,
 Pan, Paleas, Flora, and Pomona play'd :
 Here too brisk gales the rude wild common fann'd
 An happy place ; where free, and unafraid,
 Amid the flowering brakes each cower creature
 stray'd.

But in prime vigour what can last for ay ?
 That soul-enfeebling wizard Indolence,
 I whilom sung, wrought in his works decay :
 Spread far and wide was his curs'd influence ;

Of public virtue much he dull'd the sense,
 Ev'n much of private ; ate our spirit out,
 And fed our rank luxurious vices : whence
 The land was overlaid with many a lout ;
 Not as old Fame reports, wise, generous, bold, and stout.

A rage of pleasure madden'd every breast,
 Down to the lowest lees the ferment ran :
 To his licentious wish each must be blest,
 With joy be fever'd ; snatch it as he can.
 Thus Vice the standard rear'd ; her arrier-ban
 Corruption call'd, and loud she gave the word,
 " Mind, mind yourselves ! why should the vulgar
 man,
 The lacquey, be more virtuous than his lord ?
 Enjoy this span of life ! 'tis all the gods afford."

The tidings reach'd to where, in quiet hall,
 The good old knight enjoy'd well-earn'd repose.
 " Come, come, sir Knight ! thy children on thee
 call :
 Come, save us yet, ere ruin round us close !
 The demon Indolence thy toils o'erthrows."
 On this the noble colour stain'd his cheeks,
 Indignant, glowing through the whitening snows
 Of venerable eld ; his eye full speaks
 His ardent soul, and from his couch at once he breaks.

" I will," he cry'd, " so help me God ! destroy
 That villain Archimage." — His page then straight
 He to him call'd, a fiery-footed boy,
 Benempt Dispatch. " My steed be at the gate ;
 My bard attend ; quick, bring the net of Fate."
 This net was twisted by the sisters three ; [late
 Which when once cast o'er harden'd wretch, too
 Repentance comes ; replevy cannot be
 From the strong iron grasp of vengeful Destiny.

He came, the bard, a little druid-wight,
 Of wither'd aspect ; but his eye was keen,
 With sweetness mix'd. In russet brown bedight,
 As is his sister * of the copses green,
 He crept along, unpromising of mien.
 Gross he who judges so. His soul was fair,
 Bright as the children of yon azure sheen.
 True comeliness, which nothing can impair,
 Dwells in the mind : all else is vanity and glare.

" Come," quoth the knight, " a voice has reach'd mine ear :
 The demon Indolence threatens overthrow
 To all that to mankind is good and dear :
 Come, Philomelus ; let us instant go,
 O'erturn his bowers, and lay his castle low.
 Those men, those wretched men ! who will be slaves,
 Must drink a bitter wrathful cup of woe :
 But some there be, thy song, as from their graves,
 Shall raise. Thrice happy he ! who without rigour saves."

Issuing forth, the knight bestrode his steed,
 Of ardent bay, and on whose front a star [breed
 Shone blazing bright : sprung from the generous
 That whirl of active day the rapid car,

He pranc'd along, disdain'g gate or bar.
 Meantime, the bard on milk-white palfrey rode ;
 An honest sober beast, that did not mar
 His meditations, but full softly trode ;
 And much they moralis'd as thus yfere they yode.

They talk'd of virtue, and of human bliss.
 What else so fit for man to settle well ?
 And still their long researches met in this,
 This truth of truths, which nothing can refel :
 " From virtue's fount the purest joys out-well,
 Sweet rills of thought that cheer the conscious
     soul ; [Hell,
 While vice pours forth the troubled streams of
 The which, howe'er disguis'd, at last with dole
 Will, through the tortur'd breast, their fiery torrent
     roll."

At length it dawn'd, that fatal valley gay, [rear.
 O'er which high wood-crown'd hills their summits
 On the cool height awhile our palmers stay,
 And spite ev'n of themselves their senses cheer ;
 Then to the wizard's wonne their steps they steer.
 Like a green isle, it broad beneath them spread,
 With gardens round, and wandering currents clear,
 And tufted groves to shade the meadow bed,
 Sweet airs and song ; and without hurry all seem'd glad.

" As God shall judge me, knight, we must forgive"
 (The half-enraptur'd Philomelus cry'd)
 " The frail good man deluded here to live,
 And in these groves his musing fancy hide.
 Ah ! nought is pure. It cannot be deny'd,
 That virtue still some tincture has of vice,
 And vice of virtue. What should then betide
 But that our charity be not too nice ?
 Come, let us those we can to real bliss entice."

" Ay, sicker," quoth the knight, " all flesh is frail,
 To pleasant sin and joyous dalliance bent ;
 But let not brutish vice of this avail,
 And think to 'scape deserved punishment.
 Justice were cruel weakly to relent ;
 From Mercy's self she got her sacred glaive ;
 Grace be to those who can, and will, repent ;
 But penance long, and dreary, to the slave,
 Who must in floods of fire his gross foul spirit lave."

Thus, holding high discourse, they came to where
 The cursed carle was at his wonted trade ;
 Still tempting heedless men into his snare,
 In witching wise, as I before have said.
 But when he saw, in goodly geer array'd,
 The grave majestic knight approaching nigh,
 And by his side the bard so sage and staid,
 His countenance fell ; yet oft his anxious eye
 Mark'd them, like wily fox who roosted cock doth spy.

Nathless, with feign'd respect, he bade give back
 The rabble-rout, and welcom'd them full kind ;
 Struck with the noble twain, they were not slack
 His orders to obey, and fall behind.
 Then he resum'd his song ; and unconfin'd,
 Pour'd all his music, ran through all his strings :
 With magic dust their eyne he tries to blind,
 And virtue's tender airs o'er weakness flings.
 What pity base his song who so divinely sings !

Elate in thought, he counted them his own,
 They listen'd so intent with fix'd delight :
 But they instead, as if transnew'd to stone,
 Marvell'd he could with such sweet art unite
 The lights and shades of manners, wrong and right.

Meantime, the silly crowd the charm devour,
 Wide pressing to the gate. Swift on the knight
 He darted fierce, to drag him to his bower,
 Who backening shunn'd his touch, for well he knew its power.

As in throng'd amphitheatre, of old,
 The wary Retiarius trapp'd his foe ;
 Ev'n so the knight, returning on him bold,
 At once involv'd him in the net of woe,
 Whereof I mention made not long ago.
 Inrag'd at first, he scorn'd so weak a jail,
 And leapt, and flew, and flounced to and fro ;
 But when he found that nothing could avail,
 He set him felly down and gnaw'd his bitter nail.

Alarm'd, th' inferior demons of the place
 Rais'd rueful shrieks and hideous yells around ;
 Black stormy clouds deform'd the welkin's face,
 And from beneath was heard a wailing sound,
 As of infernal sprites in cavern bound ;
 A solemn sadness every creature strook,
 And lightnings flash'd, and horror rock'd the ground : [look,
 Huge crowds on crowds out-pour'd, with blennish'd
 As if on time's last verge this frame of things had shook.

Soon as the short-liv'd tempest was yspent,
 Steam'd from the jaws of vex'd Avernus' hole,
 And hush'd the hubbub of the rabblement,
 Sir Industry the first calm moment stole.
 " There must," he cry'd, " amidst so vast a shoal,
 Be some who are not tainted at the heart,
 Not poison'd quite by this same villain's bowl :
 Come then, my bard, thy heavenly fire impart ;
 Touch soul with soul, till forth the latent spirit start."

The bard obey'd ; and taking from his side,
 Where it in seemly sort depending hung,
 His British harp, its speaking strings he try'd,
 The which with skilful touch he deftly strung,
 Till tinkling in clear symphony they rung.
 Then, as he felt the Muses come along,
 Light o'er the chords his raptur'd hand he flung,
 And play'd a prelude to his rising song :
 The whilst, like midnight mute, ten thousands round
     him throng.

Thus, ardent, burst his strain, —

" Ye helpless race,
 Dire-labouring here to smother reason's ray,
 That lights our Maker's image in our face,
 And gives us wide o'er Earth unquestion'd sway ;
 What is th' ador'd Supreme Perfection, say ?
 What, but eternal never-resting soul,
 Almighty power, and all-directing day ;
 By whom each atom stirs, the planets roll ;
 Who fills, surrounds, informs, and agitates the whole.

" Come, to the beaming God your hearts unfold !
 Draw from its fountain life ! 'tis thence, alone,
 We can excel. Up from unfeeling mould,
 To seraphs burning round th' Almighty's throne,

Life rising still on life, in higher tone,
Perfection forms, and with perfection bliss.
In universal nature this clear shown,
Nor needeth proof; to prove it were, I wis,
To prove the beauteous world excels the brute abyss.

"Is not the field, with lively culture green,
A sight more joyous than the dead morass?
Do not the skies, with active ether clean,
And fann'd by sprightly zephyrs, far surpass
The foul November fogs, and slumberous mass,
With which sad Nature veils her drooping face?
Does not the mountain-stream, as clear as glass,
Gay dancing on, the putrid pool disgrace?
The same in all holds true, but chief in human race.

"It was not by vile loitering in ease
That Greece obtain'd the brighter palm of art,
That soft yet ardent Athens learnt to please,
To keen the wit, and to sublime the heart,
In all supreme! complete in every part!
It was not thence majestic Rome arose,
And o'er the nations shook her conquering dart:
For sluggard's brow the laurel never grows;
Renown is not the child of indolent repose.

"Had unambitious mortals minded nought,
But in loose joy their time to wear away;
Had they alone the lap of dalliance sought,
Pleas'd on her pillow their dull heads to lay,
Rude Nature's state had been our state to-day;
No cities e'er their towery fronts had rais'd,
No arts had made us opulent and gay;
With brother-brutes the human race had graz'd;
None e'er had soar'd to fame, none honour'd been,
none prais'd.

"Great Homer's song had never fir'd the breast
To thirst of glory, and heroic deeds;
Sweet Maro's Muse, sunk in inglorious rest,
Had silent slept amid the Mincian reeds:
The wits of modern time had told their beads,
And monkish legions been their only strains;
Our Milton's Eden had lain wrapt in weeds,
Our Shakspeare stroll'd and laugh'd with Warwick swains,
Ne had my master Spenser charm'd his Mulla's
plains.

"Dumb too had been the sage historic Muse,
And perish'd all the sons of ancient fame;
Those starry lights of virtue, that diffuse
Through the dark depth of time their vivid flame,
Had all been lost with such as have no name.
Who then had scorn'd his ease for others' good?
Who then had toil'd rapacious men to tame?
Who in the public breach devoted stood,
And for his country's cause been prodigal of blood?

"But should your hearts to fame unfeeling be,
If right I read, your pleasure all require:
Then hear how best may be obtain'd this fee,
How best enjoy'd this nature's wide desire.
Toil, and be glad! let Industry inspire
Into your quicken'd limbs her buoyant breath!
Who does not act is dead; absorpt entire
In miry sloth, no pride, no joy he hath:
O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with death!

"Ah! what avail the largest gifts of Heaven,
When drooping health and spirits go amiss?
How tasteless then whatever can be given!
Health is the vital principle of bliss,
And exercise of health. In proof of this,
Behold the wretch, who slugs his life away,
Soon swallow'd in disease's sad abyss;
While he whom toil has brac'd, or manly play,
Has light as air each limb, each thought as clear as day.

"O, who can speak the vigorous joy of health?
Unclogg'd the body, unobscur'd the mind:
The morning rises gay, with pleasing stealth,
The temperate evening falls serene and kind.
In health the wiser brutes true gladness find.
See! how the younglings frisk along the meads,
As May comes on, and wakes the balmy wind;
Rampant with life, their joy all joy exceeds:
Yet what but high-strung health this dancing plea-
saunce breeds?

"But here, instead, is foster'd every ill,
Which or distemper'd minds or bodies know.
Come then, my kindred spirits! do not spill
Your talents here. This place is but a show,
Whose charms delude you to the den of woe:
Come, follow me, I will direct you right,
Where pleasure's roses, void of serpents, grow,
Sincere as sweet; come, follow this good knight,
And you will bless the day that brought him to your sight.

[camps;
"Some he will lead to courts, and some to
To senates some, and public sage debates,
Where, by the solemn gleam of midnight-lamps,
The world is pois'd, and manag'd mighty states;
To high discovery some, that new-creates
The face of Earth; some to the thriving mart;
Some to the rural reign, and softer fates;
To the sweet Muses some, who raise the heart;
All glory shall be yours, all nature, and all art.

"There are, I see, who listen to my lay,
Who wretched sigh for virtue, but despair.
'All may be done,' methinks I hear them say,
'Ev'n death despis'd by generous actions fair;
All, but for those who to these bowers repair,
Their every power dissolv'd in luxury,
To quit of torpid sluggishness the lair,
And from the powerful arms of sloth get free.
'Tis rising from the dead:—Alas!—it cannot be!'

"Would you then learn to dissipate the band
Of these huge threatening difficulties dire,
That in the weak man's way like lions stand,
His soul appall, and damp his rising fire?
Resolve, resolve, and to be men aspire.
Exert that noblest privilege, alone,
Here to mankind indulg'd: controul desire:
Let godlike Reason, from her sovereign throne,
Speak the commanding word—I will—and it is done.

"Heavens! can you then thus waste, in shameful wise,
Your few important days of tryal here?
Heirs of eternity! yborn to rise
Through endless states of being, still more near
To bliss approaching, and perfection clear,

Can you renounce a fortune so sublime,
Such glorious hopes, your backward steps to steer,
And roll, with vilest brutes, thro' mud and slime?
No! no! — Your heaven-touch'd heart disdains the sordid crime!"

"Enough! enough!" they cry'd — straight from the crowd

The better sort on wings of transport fly:
As when amid the lifeless summits proud
Of Alpine cliffs, where to the gelid sky
Snows pil'd on snows in wintery torp'our lie,
The rays divine of vernal Phoebus play;
Th' awaken'd heaps, in streamlets from on high,
Rous'd into action, lively leap away, [gay.
Glad warbling through the vales, in their new being

Not less the life, the vivid joy serene,
That lighted up these new-created men,
Than that which wings th' exulting spirit clean,
When, just deliver'd from his fleshly den,
It soaring seeks its native skies agen:
How light its essence! how unclogg'd its powers,
Beyond the blazon of my mortal pen!
Ev'n so we glad forsook the sinful bowers,
Ev'n such enraptur'd life, such energy was ours.

But far the greater part, with rage inflam'd,
Dire-mutter'd curses, and blasphem'd high Jove.
"Ye sons of hate!" they bitterly exclaim'd,
"What brought you to this seat of peace and love?
While with kind nature, here amid the grove,
We pass'd the harmless sabbath of our time,
What to disturb it could, fell men, emove
Your barbarous hearts? Is happiness a crime?
Then do the fiends of Hell rule in yon Heaven sublime."

"Ye impious wretches," quoth the knight in wrath,
"Your happiness behold!" Then straight a wand
He wav'd, an anti-magic power that hath,
Truth from illusive falsehood to command,
Sudden the landskip sinks on every hand;
The pure quick streams are marshy puddles found;
On baleful heaths the groves all blacken'd stand;
And, o'er the weedy foul abhorred ground,
Snakes, adders, toads, each loathsome creature
crawls around.

And here and there, on trees by lightning scath'd,
Unhappy wights who loathed life yhung;
Or, in fresh gore and recent murder bath'd,
They weltering lay; or else, infuriate flung
Into the gloomy flood, while ravens sung
The funeral dirge, they down the torrent roll'd:
These, by distemper'd blood to madness stung,
Had doom'd themselves; whence oft, when night
controll'd

The world, returning hither their sad spirits howl'd.

Meantime a moving scene was open laid;
That lazaret-house, I whilom in my lay
Depainted have, its horrors deep-display'd,
And gave unnumber'd wretches to the day,
Who tossing there in squalid misery lay.
Soon as of sacred light th' unwonted smile
Pour'd on these living catacombs its ray,
Through the drear caverns stretching many a mile,
The sick up-rais'd their heads, and d-
woes awhile.

"O, Heaven!" they cry'd, "and do we once more see

Yon blessed Sun, and this green Earth so fair?
Are we from noisome damp of pest-house free?
And drink our souls the sweet ethereal air?
O, thou! or knight, or god! who holdest there
That fiend, oh, keep him in eternal chains!
But what for us, the children of despair,
Brought to the brink of Hell, what hope remains?
Repentance does itself but aggravate our pains."

The gentle knight, who saw their rueful case,
Let fall adown his silver beard some tears.
"Certes," quoth he, "it is not ev'n in grace,
T' undo the past, and eke your broken years:
Nathless, to nobler worlds Repentance rears,
With humble hope, her eye; to her is given
A power the truly contrite heart that cheers;
She quells the brand by which the rocks are riven;
She more than merely softens, she rejoices Heaven.

"Then patient bear the sufferings you have earn'd,
And by these sufferings purify the mind;
Let wisdom be by past misconduct learn'd:
Or pious die, with penitence resign'd;
And to a life more happy and refin'd,
Doubt not, you shall, new creatures, yet arise.
Till then, you may expect in me to find
One who will wipe your sorrow from your eyes,
One who will soothe your pangs, and wing you to the skies."

They silent heard, and pour'd their thanks in tears.
"For you," resum'd the knight, with sterner
tone, [sears,
"Whose hard dry hearts th' obdurate demon
That villain's gifts will cost you many a groan;
In dolorous mansion long you must bemoan
His fatal charms, and weep your stains away:
Till, soft and pure as infant goodness grown,
You feel a perfect change: then, who can say,
What grace may yet shine forth in Heaven's eternal
day?"

This said, his powerful wand he wav'd anew:
Instant, a glorious angel-train descends,
The Charities, to wit, of rosy hue;
Sweet love their looks a gentle radiance lends,
And with seraphic flame compassion blends.
At once, delighted, to their charge they fly:
When, lo! a goodly hospital ascends;
In which they bade each lenient aid be nigh,
That could the sick-bed smoothe of that sad company.

It was a worthy edifying sight,
And gives to human-kind peculiar grace,
To see kind hands attending day and night,
With tender ministry, from place to place.
Some prop the head; some from the pallid face
Wipe off the faint cold dews weak nature sheds;
Some reach the healing draught: the whilst, to chase

The fear supreme, around their soften'd beds,
Some holy man by prayer all opening Heaven dis-
preds.

Attended by a glad acclaiming train,
Of those he rescued had from gaping Hell,
Then turn'd the knight; and, to his hall again
Soft-pacing, sought of Peace the mossy cell:

Yet down his cheeks the gems of pity fell,
To see the helpless wretches that remain'd,
There left through delves and deserts dire to yell;
Amaz'd, their looks with pale dismay were stain'd,
And spreading wide their hands they meek repentance feign'd.

But, ah! their scorned day of grace was past:
For (horrible to tell!) a desert wild
Before them stretch'd, bare, comfortless, and vast,
With gibbets, bones, and carcases defil'd.
There nor trim field, nor lively culture smil'd;
Nor waving shade was seen, nor fountain fair;
But sands abrupt on sands lay loosely pil'd,
Through which they floundering toil'd with painful care, [less air.
Whilst Phoebus smote them sore, and fir'd the cloud-

Then, varying to a joyless land of bogs,
The sadden'd country a grey waste appear'd;
Where nought but putrid streams and noisome fogs
For ever hung on drizzly Auster's beard;
Or else the ground, by piercing Caurus sear'd,
Was jagg'd with frost, or heap'd with glazed
snow; [steer'd,
Through these extremes a ceaseless round they
By cruel fiends still hurry'd to and fro, [moe.
Gaunt Beggary, and Scorn, with many hell-bounds

The first was with base dunghill rags yclad,
Tainting the gale, in which they flutter'd light;
Of morbid hue his features, sunk, and sad;
His hollow eyne shook forth a sickly light;
And o'er his lank jaw-bone, in piteous plight,
His black rough beard was matted rank and vile;
Direful to see! an heart-appalling sight!
Meantime foul scurf and blotches him defile;
And dogs, where'er he went, still barked all the while.

The other was a fell despightful fiend:
Hell holds none worse in baleful bower below:
By pride, and wit, and rage, and rancour keen'd;
Of man alike, if good or bad, the foe:
With nose up-turn'd, he always made a show
As if he smelt some nauseous scent; his eye
Was cold, and keen, like blast from boreal snow;
And taunts he casten forth most bitterly.
Such were the twain that off drove this ungodly fry.

Ev'n so through Brentford town, a town of mud,
An herd of brisly swine is prick'd along;
The filthy beasts, that never chew the cud,
Still grunt, and squeak, and sing their troublous
song,
And oft they plunge themselves the mire among:
But ay the ruthless driver goads them on,
And ay of barking dogs the bitter throng
Makes them renew their unmelodious moan;
Ne ever find they rest from their unresting fone.

ANCIENT AND MODERN ITALY COMPARED:

BEING THE FIRST PART OF

LIBERTY,

A POEM.

The Contents of Part I.

The following poem is thrown into the form of a poetical vision. Its scene the ruins of ancient Rome. The goddess of Liberty, who is supposed to speak through the whole, appears, characterized as British Liberty. Gives a view of ancient Italy, and particularly of republican Rome, in all her magnificence and glory. This contrasted by modern Italy; its valleys, mountains, culture, cities, people: the difference appearing strongest in the capital city, Rome. The ruins of the great works of Liberty more magnificent than the borrowed pomp of Oppression; and from them revived Sculpture, Painting, and Architecture. The old Romans apostrophized, with regard to the several melancholy changes in Italy: Horace, Tully, and Virgil, with regard to their Tibur, Tusculum, and Naples. That once finest and most ornamented part of Italy, all along the coast of Baïæ, how changed. This desolation of Italy applied to Britain. Address to the goddess of Liberty, that she would deduce from the first ages, her chief establishments, the description of which constitute the subject of the following parts of this poem. She assents, and commands what she says to be sung in Britain; whose happiness, arising from freedom, and a limited monarchy, she marks. An immediate vision attends, and paints her words. Invocation.

O my lamented Talbot! while with thee
The Muse gay rov'd the glad Hesperian round,
And drew th' inspiring breath of ancient arts;
Ah! little thought she her returning verse
Should sing our darling subject to thy shade.
And does the mystic veil, from mortal beam,
Involve those eyes where every virtue smil'd,
And all thy father's candid spirit shone?
The light of reason, pure, without a cloud;
Full of the generous heart, the mild regard;
Honour disdaining blemish, cordial faith,
And limpid truth, that looks the very soul.
But to the death of mighty nations turn,
My strain; be there absorpt the private tear.

Musing, I lay; warm from the sacred walks,
Where at each step imagination burns:
While scatter'd wide around, awful, and hoar,
Lies, a vast monument, once glorious Rome,
The tomb of empire! ruins! that efface
Whate'er, of finish'd, modern pomp can boast.

Snatch'd by these wonders to that world where thought

Unfetter'd ranges, Fancy's magic hand
Led me anew o'er all the solemn scene,
Still in the mind's pure eye more solemn drest.
When straight, methought, the fair majestic power
Of Liberty appear'd. Not, as of old,
Extended in her hand the cap, and rod,
Whose slave-enlarging touch gave double life:

But her bright temples bound with British oak,
And naval honours nodded on her brow.
Sublime of port: loose o'er her shoulder flow'd
Her sea-green robe, with constellations gay.
An island-goddess now; and her high care
The queen of isles, the mistress of the main.
My heart beat filial transport at the sight;
And, as she mov'd to speak, th' awakened Muse
Listen'd intense. Awhile she look'd around,
With mournful eye the well-known ruins mark'd,
And then, her sighs repressing, thus began.

" Mine are these wonders, all thou see'st is mine;

But, ah, how chang'd! the falling poor remains
Of what exalted once th' Ausonian shore. [gloom,
Look back through time; and, rising from the Mark the dread scene, that paints whate'er I say.

" The great republic see! that glow'd, sublime,
With the mixt freedom of a thousand states:
Rais'd on the thrones of kings her curule chair,
And by her fasces aw'd the subject world.
See busy millions quickening all the land,
With cities throng'd, and teeming culture high:
For Nature then smiled on her free-born sons,
And pour'd the plenty that belongs to men.
Behold, the country cheering, villas rise,
In lively prospect; — by the secret lapse
(Of brooks now lost and streams renown'd in song:
In Umbria's closing vales, or on the brow
Of her brown hills that breathe the scented gale:
On Baïæ's viny coast; where peaceful seas,
Fann'd by kind zephyrs, ever kiss the shore;
And suns unclouded shine, through purest air:
Or in the spacious neighbourhood of Rome;
Far-shining upward to the Sabine hills,
To Anio's roar, and Tibur's olive shade;
To where Præneste lifts her airy brow;
Or downward spreading to the sunny shore,
Where Alba breathes the freshness of the main.

" See distant mountains leave their valleys dry,
And o'er the proud arcade their tribute pour,
To lave imperial Rome. For ages laid,
Deep, massy, firm, diverging every way,
With tombs of heroes sacred, see her roads:
By various nations trod, and suppliant kings;
With legions flaming, or with triumph gay.

" Full in the centre of these wondrous works,
The pride of Earth! Rome in her glory see!
Behold her demigods, in senate met;
All head to counsel, and all heart to act:
The common-weal inspiring every tongue
With fervent eloquence, unbrib'd, and bold;
Ere tame corruption taught the servile herd
To rank obedient to a master's voice.

" Her forum see, warm, popular, and loud,
In trembling wonder hushed, when the two sires*,
As they the private father greatly quell'd,
Stood up the public fathers of the state.
See Justice judging there, in human shape.
Hark, how with Freedom's voice it thunders high,
Or in soft murmurs sinks to Tully's tongue.

" Her tribes, her census, see; her generous troops,
Whose pay was glory, and their best reward,
Free for their country and for me to die;
Ere mercenary murder grew a trade.

" Mark, as the purple triumph waves along,
The highest pomp and lowest fall of life.

" Her festive games, the school of heroes, see;

* L. J. Brutus, and Virginius.

Her circus, ardent with contending youth;
Her streets, her temples, palaces, and baths,
Full of fair forms, of beauty's eldest-born,
And of a people cast in virtue's mould.
While sculpture lives around, and Asian bill:
Lend their best stores to heave the pillar'd dome:
All that to Roman strength the softer touch
Of Grecian art can join. But language fails
To paint this sun, this centre of mankind;
Where every virtue, glory, treasure, art,
Attracted strong, in heighten'd lustre met.

" Need I the contrast mark? unjoyous view!

A land in all, in government, in arts,
In virtue, genius, earth and heaven, revers'd,
Who but, these far-fam'd ruins to behold,
Proofs of a people, whose heroic aims
Soar'd far above the little selfish sphere
Of doubting modern life; who but, inflam'd
With classic zeal, these consecrated scenes
Of men and deeds to trace, — unhappy land,
Would trust thy wilds, and cities loose of sway?

" Are these the vales, that, once, exulting states
In their warm bosom fed? the mountains these,
On whose high-blooming sides my sons, of old,
I bred to glory? the dejected towns,
Where, mean, and sordid, life can scarce subsist,
The scenes of ancient opulence, and pomp?

" Come! by whatever sacred name disguis'd,
Oppression, come! and in thy works rejoice!
See Nature's richest plains to putrid fens
Turn'd by thy fury. From their cheerful bounds,
See raz'd th' enlivening village, farm, and seat.
First, rural toil, by thy rapacious hand
Robb'd of his poor reward, resign'd the plough;
And now he dares not turn the noxious glebe.
'Tis thine entire. The lonely swain himself,
Who loves at large along the grassy downs
His flocks to pasture, thy drear champain flies.
Far as the sickening eye can sweep around,
'Tis all one desert, desolate, and grey,
Graz'd by the sullen buffalo alone;
And where the rank uncultivated growth
Of rotting ages taints the passing gale.
Beneath the baleful blast the city pines,
Or sinks enfeebled, or infected burns.

Beneath it mourns the solitary road,
Roll'd in rude mazes o'er th' abandon'd waste;
While ancient ways, ingulph'd, are seen no more.

" Such thy dire plains, thou self-destroyer! see
To human-kind! Thy mountains too, profuse,
Where savage nature blooms, seem their sad plaint
To raise against thy desolating rod.

There on the breezy brow, where thriving states,
And famous cities, once, to the pleas'd Sun,
Far other scenes of rising culture spread,
Pale shine thy ragged towns. Neglected round,
Each harvest pines; the livid, lean produce
Of heartless labour: while thy hated joys,
Not proper pleasure, lift the lazy hand.
Better to sink in sloth the woes of life,
Than wake their rage with unavailing toil.
Hence drooping Art almost to Nature leaves
The rude unguided year. Thin wave the gifts
Of yellow Ceres, thin the radiant blush
Of orchard reddens in the warmest ray.
To weedy wildness run, no rural wealth
(Such as dictators fed) the garden pours.
Crude the wild olive flows, and foul the vine;
Nor juice Cœcubian, nor Falernian, more,
Streams life and joy, save in the Muse's bowl.

Unseconded by art, the spinning race
 Draw the bright thread in vain, and idly toil.
 In vain, forlorn in wilds, the citron blows;
 And flowering plants perfume the desert gale.
 Through the vile thorn the tender myrtle twines.
 Inglorious droops the laurel, dead to song,
 And long a stranger to the hero's brow. [fields,

"Nor half thy triumph this: cast, from brute
 Into the haunts of men thy ruthless eye.
 There buxom Plenty never turns her horn;
 The grace and virtue of exterior life,
 No clean convenience reigns; ev'n Sleep itself,
 Least delicate of powers, reluctant, there,
 Lays on the bed impure his heavy head.
 Thy horrid walk! dead, empty, unadorn'd,
 See streets whose echoes never know the voice
 Of cheerful Hurry, Commerce many-tongu'd,
 And Art mechanic at his various task,
 Fervent, employ'd. Mark the desponding race,
 Of occupation void, as void of hope;
 Hope, the glad ray, glanc'd from Eternal Good,
 That life enlivens, and exalts its powers,
 With views of fortune—madness all to them!
 By thee relentless seiz'd their better joys,
 To the soft aid of cordial airs they fly,
 Breathing a kind oblivion o'er their woes,
 And love and music melt their souls away.
 From feeble Justice see how rash Revenge,
 Trembling, the balance snatches; and the sword,
 Fearful himself, to venal ruffians gives.
 See where God's altar, nursing murder, stands,
 With the red touch of dark assassins stain'd.

"But chief let Rome, the mighty city! speak
 The full-exerted genius of thy reign.
 Behold her rise amid the lifeless waste,
 Expiring Nature all corrupted round;
 While the lone Tyber, through the desert plain,
 Winds his waste stores, and sullen sweeps along.
 Patch'd from my fragments, in unsolid pomp,
 Mark how the temple glares; and, artful drest,
 Amusive, draws the superstitious train.
 Mark how the palace lifts a lying front,
 Concealing often, in magnificent jail,
 Proud Want; a deep unanimated gloom!
 And oft adjoining to the drear abode
 Of Misery, whose melancholy walls
 Seem its voracious grandeur to reproach.
 Within the city bounds, the desert see.
 See the rank vine o'er subterranean roofs,
 Indecent, spread; beneath whose fretted gold
 It once, exulting, flow'd. The people mark,
 Matchless, while fir'd by me; to public good
 Inexorably firm, just, generous, brave,
 Afraid of nothing but unworthy life,
 Elate with glory, an heroic soul
 Known to the vulgar breast: behold them now
 A thin despairing number, all-subdued,
 The slaves of slaves, by superstition fool'd,
 By vice unmann'd and a licentious rule,
 In guile ingenious, and in murder brave.
 Such in one land, beneath the same fair clime,
 Thy sons, Oppression, are; and such were mine.

"Ev'n with thy labour'd pomp, for whose vain
 show
 Deluded thousands starve; all age begrim'd,
 Torn, robb'd, and scatter'd in unnumber'd sacks,
 And by the tempest of two thousand years
 Continual shaken, let my ruins vie.
 These roads, that yet the Roman hand assert,

Beyond the weak repair of modern toil;
 These fractur'd arches, that the chiding stream
 No more delighted hear; these rich remains
 Of marbles now unknown, where shines imbib'd
 Each parent ray; these massy columns, hew'd
 From Afric's farthest shore: one granite all,
 These obelisks high-towering to the sky,
 Mysterious mark'd with dark Egyptian lore;
 These endless wonders that this sacred way*
 Illumine still, and consecrate to fame;
 These fountains, vases, urns, and statues, charg'd
 With the fine stores of art-completing Greece.
 Mine is, besides, thy every later boast:
 Thy Buonaroti, thy Palladios mine†;
 And mine the fair designs, which Raphael's soul
 O'er the live canvass, emanating, breath'd.

"What would you say, ye conquerors of Earth!
 Ye Romans! could you raise the laurel'd head;
 Could you the country see, by seas of blood,
 And the dread toil of ages, won so dear;
 Your pride, your triumph, and supreme delight!
 For whose defence oft, in the doubtful hour,
 You rush'd with rapture down the gulph of fate,
 Of death ambitious! till by awful deeds,
 Virtues, and courage, that amaze mankind,
 The queen of nations rose; possess of all
 Which Nature, Art, and Glory could bestow:
 What would you say, deep in the last abyss
 Of slavery, vice, and unambitious want,
 Thus to behold her sunk? Your crowded plains,
 Void of their cities; unadorn'd your hills;
 Ungrac'd your lakes; your ports to ships unknown;
 Your lawless floods, and your abandon'd streams:
 These could you know? these could you love again?

Thy Tibur, Horace, could it now inspire,
 Content, poetic ease, and rural joy,
 Soon bursting into song; while through the groves
 Of headlong Anio, dashing to the vale,
 In many a tortur'd stream, you mus'd along?
 Yon wild retreat, where Superstition dreams,
 Could, Tully, you your Tusculum‡ believe?
 And could you deem yon naked hills, that form,
 Fam'd in old song, the ship-forsaken bay§,
 Your Formian shore? Once the delight of Earth,
 Where Art and Nature, ever smiling, join'd
 On the gay land to lavish all their stores.
 How chang'd, how vacant, Virgil, wide around,
 Would now your Naples seem! Disaster'd less
 By black Vesuvius thundering o'er the coast
 His midnight earthquakes, and his mining fires,
 Than by despotic rage||: that inward gnaws,
 A native foe: a foreign, tears without.
 First from your flatter'd Cæsars this began:
 Till, doom'd to tyrants an eternal prey,
 Thin-peopled spreads, at last, the syren plain¶,
 That the dire soul of Hannibal disarmin'd;

* Via Sacra.

† M. Angelo Buonaroti, Palladio, and Raphael d'Urbino; the three great modern masters in sculpture, architecture, and painting.

‡ Tusculum is reckoned to have stood at a place now called Grotto Ferrata, a convent of monks.

§ The bay of Mola (anciently Formiæ), into which Homer brings Ulysses and his companions. Near Formiæ Cicero had a villa.

|| Naples then under the Austrian government.

¶ Campagna Felice, adjoining to Capua.

And wrapt in weeds the shore of Venus lies.*
 There Baïæ sees no more the joyous throng;
 Her bank all-beaming with the pride of Rome:
 No generous vines now bask along the hills,
 Where sport the breezes of the Tyrrhene main:
 With baths and temples mix'd, no villas rise;
 Nor, art sustain'd amid reluctant waves,
 Draw the cool murmurs of the breathing deep:
 No spreading ports their sacred arms extend:
 No mighty moles the big intrusive storm,
 From the calm station, roll resounding back.
 An almost total desolation sits,
 A dreary stillness, saddening o'er the coast;
 Where, when soft suns and tepid winters rose †,
 Rejoicing crowds inhal'd the balm of peace;
 Where city'd hill to hill reflected blaze;
 And where with Ceres, Bacchus wont to hold
 A genial strife. Her youthful form, robust,
 Ev'n Nature yields; by fire and earthquake rent:
 Whose stately cities in the dark abrupt
 Swallow'd at once, or vile in rubbish laid,
 A nest for serpents; from the red abyss
 New hills, explosive, thrown; the Lucrine lake
 A reedy pool; and all to Cuma's point,
 The sea recovering his usurp'd domain,
 And pour'd triumphant o'er the bury'd dome.

"Hence, Britain, learn; my best-established, last,
 And more than Greece, or Rome, my steady reign;
 The land where, king and people equal bound
 By guardian laws, my fullest blessings flow;
 And where my jealous unsubmitting soul,
 The dread of tyrants! burns in every breast:
 Learn hence, if such the miserable fate
 Of an heroic race, the masters once
 Of human-kind; what, when depriv'd of me,
 How grievous must be thine? In spite of climes,
 Whose sun-enliven'd ether wakes the soul
 To higher powers; in spite of happy soils,
 That, but by labour's slightest aid impell'd,
 With treasures teem to thy cold clime unknown;
 If there desponding fail the common arts,
 And sustenance of life: could life itself,
 Far less a thoughtless tyrant's hollow pomp,
 Subsist with thee? Against depressing skies,
 Join'd to full-spread Oppression's cloudy brow,
 How could thy spirits hold? where vigour find,
 Forc'd fruits to tear from their unnative soil?
 Or, storing every harvest in thy ports,
 To plow the dreadful all-producing wave?"

Here paus'd the goddess. By the pause assur'd,
 In trembling accents thus I mov'd my prayer:
 "Oh, first, and most benevolent of powers!
 Come from eternal splendours, here on Earth,
 Against despotic pride, and rage, and lust,
 To shield mankind; to raise them to assert
 The native rights and honour of their race:
 Teach me, thy lowest subject, but in zeal
 Yielding to none, the progress of thy reign,
 And with a strain from thee enrich the Muse.
 As thee alone she serves, her patron, thou,
 And great inspirer be! then will she joy,

* The coast of Baïæ, which was formerly adorned with the works mentioned in the following lines; and where, amidst many magnificent ruins, those of a temple erected to Venus are still to be seen.

† All along this coast the ancient Romans had their winter retreats; and several populous cities stood.

Through narrow life her lot, and private shade;
 And when her venal voice she barter's vile,
 Or to thy open or thy secret foes,
 May ne'er those sacred raptures touch her more,
 By slavish hearts unfelt! and may her song
 Sink in oblivion with the nameless crew!
 Vermin of state! to thy o'erflowing light
 That owe their being, yet betray thy cause."

Then, condescending kind, the heavenly power
 Return'd:—"What here, suggested by the scene,
 I slight unfold, record and sing at home,
 In that best isle, where (so we spirits move)
 With one quick effort of my will I am.
 There Truth, unlicens'd, walks; and dares accost
 Ev'n kings themselves, the monarchs of the free!
 Fix'd on my rock, there, an indulgent race
 O'er Britons wield the sceptre of their choice;
 And there, to finish what his sires began,
 A prince behold! for me who burns sincere,
 Ev'n with a subject's zeal. He my great work
 Will parent-like sustain; and added give
 The touch, the Graces and the Muses owe.
 For Britain's glory swells his panting breast;
 And ancient arts he emulous revolves:
 His pride to let the smiling heart abroad,
 Through clouds of pomp, that but conceal the man;
 To please, his pleasure; bounty, his delight;
 And all the soul of Titus dwells in him."

Hail, glorious theme! But how, alas! shall verse,
 From the crude stores of mortal language drawn,
 How faint and tedious, sing, what, piercing deep,
 The goddess flash'd at once upon my soul.
 For, clear precision all, the tongue of gods,
 Is harmony itself; to every ear
 Familiar known, like light to every eye.
 Meantime disclosing ages, as she spoke,
 In long succession pour'd their empires forth;
 Scene after scene, the human drama spread;
 And still th' embodied picture rose to sight.

Oh thou, to whom the Muses owe their flame;
 Who bidd'st, beneath the Pole, Parnassus rise,
 And Hippocrenè flow; with thy bold ease,
 The striking force, the lightning of thy thought,
 And thy strong phrase, that rolls profound, and clear;

Oh, gracious goddess! re-inspire my song;
 While I, to nobler than poetic fame
 Aspiring, thy commands to Britons bear.

GREECE:

BEING THE SECOND PART OF

LIBERTY,

A POEM.

The Contents of Part II.

Liberty traced from the pastoral ages, and the first uniting of neighbouring families into civil government. The several establishments of Liberty, in Egypt, Persia, Phœnicia, Palestine, slightly touched upon, down to her great establishment in Greece. Geographical description of Greece. Sparta and Athens, the two principal states of Greece, described. Influence of Liberty over all the Grecian states; with regard to their government, their politeness, their virtues, their arts and sciences. The vast superiority it gave them, in point of force and bravery, over the Persians, exemplified by the action of Thermopylae, the battle of Marathon, and the retreat of the ten thousand. Its full exertion, and most beautiful effects in Athens. Liberty the source of free philosophy. The various schools which took their rise from Socrates. Enumeration of fine arts: eloquence, poetry, music, sculpture, painting, and architecture; the effects of Liberty in Greece, and brought to their utmost perfection there. Transition to the modern state of Greece. Why Liberty declined, and was at last entirely lost among the Greeks. Concluding reflection.

Thus spoke the goddess of the fearless eye;
And at her voice, renew'd, the vision rose.

"First in the dawn of time, with eastern swains,
In woods, and tents, and cottages, I liv'd;
While on from plain to plain they led their flocks,
In search of clearer spring, and fresher field.
These, as increasing families disclos'd
The tender state, I taught an equal sway.
Few were offences, properties, and laws.
Beneath the rural portal, palm o'erspread,
The father-senate met. There Justice dealt,
With reason then and equity the same,
Free as the common air, her prompt decree;
Nor yet had stain'd her sword with subject's blood.
The simpler arts were all their simple wants
Had urg'd to light. But instant, these supply'd,
Another set of fonder wants arose,
And other arts with them of finer aim;
Till, from refining want to want impell'd,
The mind by thinking push'd her latent powers,
And life began to glow, and arts to shine.

"At first, on brutes alone the rustic war
Launch'd the rude spear; swift, as he glar'd along,
On the grim lion, or the robber-wolf.
For then young sportive life was void of toil,
Demanding little, and with little pleas'd:
But when to manhood grown, and endless joys,
Led on by equal toils, the bosom fir'd;
Lewd lazy Rapine broke primeval peace,
And, hid in caves and idle forests drear,
From the lone pilgrim and the wandering swain,
Seiz'd what he durst not earn. Then brother's blood
First, horrid, smok'd on the polluted skies.
Aweful in justice, then the burning youth,
Led by their temper'd sires, on lawless men,
The last, worst monsters of the shaggy wood,
Turn'd the keen arrow, and the sharpen'd spear.
Then war grew glorious. Heroes then arose;
Who, scorning coward self, for others liv'd,
Toil'd for their ease, and for their safety bled.
West with the living day to Greece I came:
Earth smil'd beneath my beam: the Muse before
Soporific flew, that low till then in woods
Had tun'd the reed, and sigh'd the shepherd's pain;
But now, to sing heroic deeds, she swell'd
A nobler note, and bade the banquet burn.

"For Greece, my sons of Egypt I forsook:
A boastful race, that in the vain abyss
Of fabled ages lov'd to lose their source,
And with their river trac'd it from the skies.
While there my laws alone despotic reign'd,
And king, as well as people, proud obey'd:
I taught them science, virtue, wisdom, arts;
By poets, sages, legislators sought:
The school of polish'd life, and human-kind.

But when mysterious Superstition came,
And, with her civil sister* leagu'd, involv'd
In study'd darkness the desponding mind;
Then tyrant Power the righteous scourge unloos'd:
For yielded reason speaks the soul a slave.
Instead of useful works, like Nature's, great,
Enormous, cruel wonders crush'd the land;
And round a tyrant's tomb †, who none deserv'd,
For one vile carcass perish'd countless lives.
Then the great Dragon, couch'd amid his floods ‡,
Swell'd his fierce heart, and cry'd — 'This flood is mine;

'Tis I that bid it flow.' — But, undeceiv'd,
His phrenzy soon the proud blasphemer felt;
Felt that, without my fertilizing power,
Suns lost their force, and Niles o'erflow'd in vain.
Nought could retard me: nor the frugal state
Of rising Persia, sober in extreme,
Beyond the pitch of man, and thence revers'd
Into luxurious waste; nor yet the ports
Of old Phoenicia; first for letters fam'd,
That paint the voice, and silent speak to sight,
Of arts prime source, and guardian! by fair stars,
First tempted out into the lonely deep;
To whom I first disclos'd mechanic arts,
The winds to conquer, to subdue the waves,
With all the peaceful power of ruling trade;
Earnest of Britain. Nor by these retain'd;
Nor by the neighbouring land, whose palmy shore
The silver Jordan laves. Before me lay
The promis'd land of arts, and urg'd my flight.

"Hail Nature's utmost boast! unrivall'd Greece!
My fairest reign! where every power benign
Conspir'd to blow the flower of human-kind,
And lavish'd all that genius can inspire.
Clear sunny climates, by the breezy main,
Ionian or Ægean, temper'd kind,
Light, airy soils. A country rich, and gay;
Broke into hills with balmy odours crown'd,
And, bright with purple harvest joyous vales.
Mountains and streams, where verse spontaneous
flow'd:

Whence deem'd by wondering men the seat of gods,
And still the mountains and the streams of song.
All that boon Nature could luxuriant pour
Of high materials, and my restless arts
Frame into finish'd life. How many states,
And clustering towns, and monuments of fame,
And scenes of glorious deeds, in little bounds!
From the rough tract of bending mountains, beat
By Adria's here, there by Ægean waves;
To where the deep adorning Cyclade Isles
In shining prospect rise, and on the shore
Of farthest Crete resounds the Libyan main.

"O'er all two rival cities rear'd the brow,
And balanc'd all. Spread on Eurota's bank,
Amid a circle of soft-rising hills,
The patient Sparta one: the sober, hard,
And man-subduing city; which no shape
Of pain could conquer, nor of pleasure charm.
Lycurgus there built, on the solid base
Of equal life, so well a temper'd state;
Where mix'd each government, in such just poise;
Each power so checking, and supporting, each;
That firm for ages, and unmov'd, it stood,

‡ The tyrants of Egypt.

The fort of Greece ! without one giddy hour,
 One shock of faction, or of party-rage.
 For, drain'd the springs of wealth, corruption there
 Lay wither'd at the root. Thrice happy land !
 Had not neglected art, with weedy vice
 Confounded, sunk. But if Athenian arts
 Lov'd not the soil ; yet there the calm abode
 Of wisdom, virtue, philosophic ease,
 Of manly sense and wit, in frugal phrase
 Confin'd, and press'd into laconic force.
 There, too, by rooting thence still treacherous self,
 The public and the private grew the same.
 The children of the nursing public hall,
 And at its table fed, for that they toil'd,
 For that they liv'd entire, and ev'n for that
 The tender mother urg'd her son to die.

“ Of softer genius, but not less intent
 To seize the palm of empire, Athens rose :
 Where, with bright marbles big and future pomp,
 Hymettus * spread, amid the scented sky,
 His thymy treasures to the labouring bee,
 And to botanic hand the stores of health :
 Wrapt in a soul-attenuating clime,
 Between Ilissus and Cephissus † glow'd
 This hive of science, shedding sweets divine,
 Of active arts, and animated arms.
 There, passionate for me, an easy-mov'd,
 A quick, refin'd, a delicate, humane,
 Enlighten'd people reign'd. Oft on the brink
 Of ruin, hurry'd by the charm of speech,
 Inforcing hasty counsel immature,
 Totter'd the rash democracy ; unpois'd,
 And by the rage devour'd, that ever tears
 A populace unequal ; part too rich,
 And part or fierce with want, or abject grown.
 Solon, at last, their mild restorer, rose :
 Allay'd the tempest ; to the calm of laws
 Reduc'd the settling whole ; and, with the weight
 Which the two senates ‡ to the public lent,
 As with an anchor fix'd the driving state.

“ Nor was my forming care to these confin'd.
 For emulation through the whole I pour'd,
 Noble contention ! who should most excel
 In government well-pois'd, adjusted best
 To public weal : in countries cultur'd high :
 In ornamented towns, where order reigns,
 Free social life, and polish'd manners fair :
 In exercise, and arms ; arms only drawn
 For common Greece, to quell the Persian pride :
 In moral science, and in graceful arts.
 Hence, as for glory peacefully they strove,
 The prize grew greater, and the prize of all.
 By contest brighten'd, hence the radiant youth
 Pour'd every beam ; by generous pride inflam'd,
 Felt every ardour burn : their great reward
 The verdant wreath, which sounding Pisa § gave.

“ Hence flourish'd Greece ; and hence a race of men,
 As gods by conscious future times ador'd :

‡ The Areopagus, or supreme court of judicature, which Solon reformed and improved ; and the council of four hundred, by him instituted. In this council all affairs of state were deliberated, before they came to be voted in the assembly of the people.

§ Or Olympia, the city where the Olympic games were celebrated.

In whom each virtue wore a smiling air,
 Each science shed o'er life a friendly light,
 Each art was nature. Spartan valour hence,
 At the fam'd pass *, firm as an isthmus stood ;
 And the whole eastern ocean, waving far
 As eye could dart its vision, nobly check'd,
 While in extended battle, at the field
 Of Marathon, my keen Athenians drove
 Before their ardent band, an host of slaves.

“ Hence through the continent ten thousand
 Greeks

Urg'd a retreat, whose glory not the prime
 Of victories can reach. Deserts, in vain,
 Oppos'd their course ; and hostile lands, unknown ;
 And deep rapacious floods, dire-bank'd with death ;
 And mountains, in whose jaws destruction grin'd
 Hunger, and toil ; Armenian snows, and storms ;
 And circling myriads still of barbarous foes.
 Greece in their view, and glory yet untouch'd,
 Their steady column pierc'd the scattering herds,
 Which a whole empire pour'd ; and held its way
 Triumphant, by the sage-exalted chief †
 Fir'd and sustain'd. Oh, light and force of mind,
 Almost almighty in severe extremes !

The sea at last from Colchian mountains seen,
 Kind-hearted transport round their captains threw
 The soldiers' fond embrace ; o'erflow'd their eyes
 With tender floods, and loos'd the general voice
 To cries resounding loud — ‘ The sea ! the sea ! ’

“ In Attic bounds hence heroes, sages, wits,
 Shone thick as stars, the milky way of Greece !
 And though gay wit, and pleasing grace was theirs,
 All the soft modes of elegance and ease ;
 Yet was not courage less, the patient touch
 Of toiling art, and disquisition deep.

“ My spirit pours a vigour through the soul,
 Th' unfetter'd thought with energy inspires,
 Invincible in arts, in the bright field
 Of nobler science, as in that of arms.
 Athenians thus not less intrepid burst
 The bonds of tyrant darkness, than they spurn'd
 The Persian chains : while through the city, full
 Of mirthful quarrel, and of witty war,
 Incessant struggled taste refining taste,
 And friendly free discussion, calling forth
 From the fair jewel truth its latent ray.
 O'er all shone out the great Athenian sage, ‡
 And father of philosophy : the sun,
 From whose white blaze emerg'd each various sect
 Took various tints, but with diminish'd beam.
 Tutor of Athens ! he, in every street,
 Dealt priceless treasure ! goodness his delight,
 Wisdom his wealth, and glory his reward.
 Deep through the human heart, with playful art,
 His simple question stole : as into truth,
 And serious deeds, he smil'd the laughing race ;
 Taught moral happy life, whate'er can bless,
 Or grace mankind ; and what he taught he was.
 Compounded high, though plain, his doctrine broke
 In different schools. The bold poetic phrase
 Of figur'd Plato ; Xenophon's pure strain,
 Like the clear brook that steals along the vale ;
 Dissecting truth, the Stagyrte's keen eye ;
 Th' exalted Stoic pride ; the Cynic sneer ;
 The slow-consenting Academic doubt ;
 And, joining bliss to virtue the glad ease

‡ Socrates.

Of Epicurus, seldom understood.
 They, ever candid, reason still oppos'd
 To reason; and, since virtue was their aim,
 Each by sure practice try'd to prove his way
 The best. Then stood untouch'd the solid base
 Of Liberty, the liberty of mind:
 For systems yet, and soul-enslaving creeds,
 Slept with the monsters of succeeding times.
 From priestly darkness sprung th' enlightening arts
 Of fire, and sword, and rage, and horrid names.

"O, Greece! thou sapient nurse of finer arts!
 Which to bright science blooming fancy bore,
 Be this thy praise, that thou, and thou alone,
 In these hast led the way, in these excell'd,
 Crown'd with the laurel of assenting time.

"In thy full language, speaking mighty things;
 Like a clear torrent close, or else diffus'd
 A broad majestic stream, and rolling on
 Through all the winding harmony of sound:
 In it the power of eloquence, at large,
 Breath'd the persuasive or pathetic soul;
 Still'd by degrees the democratic storm,
 Or bade it threatening rise, and tyrants shook,
 Flush'd at the head of their victorious troops.
 In it the Muse, her fury never quench'd,
 By mean unyielding phrase, or jarring sound,
 Her unconfin'd divinity display'd;
 And, still harmonious, form'd it to her will:
 Or soft depress'd it to the shepherd's moan,
 Or rais'd it swelling to the tongue of gods.

"Heroic song was thine; the fountain-hard*,
 Whence each poetic stream derives its course.
 Thine the dread moral scene, thy chief delight!
 Where idle Fancy durst not mix her voice,
 When Reason spoke august; the fervent heart
 Or plain'd, or storm'd; and in th' impassion'd man,
 Concealing art with art, the poet sunk.
 This potent school of manners, (but when left
 To loose neglect, a land-corrupting plague,)
 Was not unworthy deem'd of public care,
 And boundless cost, by thee; whose every son,
 Ev'n last mechanic, the true taste possess'd
 Of what had flavour to the nourish'd soul.

"The sweet enforce of the poet's strain,
 Thine was the meaning music of the heart.
 Not the vain trill, that, void of passion, runs
 In giddy mazes, tickling idle ears;
 But that deep-searching voice, and artful hand,
 To which respondent shakes the varied soul.

"Thy fair ideas, thy delightful forms,
 By Love imagin'd, by the Graces touch'd,
 The boast of well-pleas'd Nature! Sculpture seiz'd,
 And bade them ever smile in Parian stone.
 Selecting beauty's choice, and that again
 Exalting, blending in a perfect whole,
 Thy workmen left ev'n Nature's self behind.
 From those far different, whose prolific hand
 Peoples a nation; they, for years on years,
 By the cool touches of judicious toil,
 Their rapid genius curbing, pour'd it all
 Through the live features of one breathing stone.
 There, beaming full, it shone, expressing gods:
 Jove's awful brow, Apollo's air divine,
 The fierce atrocious frown of sinew'd Mars,
 Or the sly graces of the Cyprian queen.
 Minutely perfect all! Each dimple sunk,
 And every muscle swell'd, as Nature taught.

* Homer.

In tresses, braided gay, the marble wav'd;
 Flow'd in loose robes, or thin transparent veils;
 Sprung into motion; soften'd into flesh;
 Was fir'd to passion, or refin'd to soul.

"Nor less thy pencil, with creative touch,
 Shed mimic life, when all thy brightest dames,
 Assembled, Zeuxis in his Helen mix'd.
 And when Apelles, who peculiar knew
 To give a grace that more than mortal smil'd,
 The soul of beauty! call'd the queen of Love,
 Fresh from the billows, blushing orient charms,
 Ev'n such enchantment then thy pencil pour'd,
 That cruel-thoughted War th' impatient torch
 Dash'd to the ground; and, rather than destroy
 The patriot picture, let the city 'scape. †

"First elder Sculpture taught her sister Art
 Correct design; where great ideas shone,
 And in the secret trace expression spoke:
 'Taught her the graceful attitude; the turn,
 And beauteous airs of head; the native act,
 Or bold, or easy; and, cast free behind,
 The swelling mantle's well-adjusted flow.
 Then the bright Muse, their elder sister, came;
 And bade her follow where she led the way:
 Bade earth, and sea, and air, in colours rise;
 And copious action on the canvass glow:
 Gave her gay fable; spread invention's store;
 Enlarg'd her view; taught composition high,
 And just arrangement, circling round one point,
 That starts to sight, binds and commands the whole.
 Caught from the heavenly Muse a nobler aim,
 And, scorning the soft trade of mere delight,
 O'er all thy temples, porticoes, and schools,
 Heroic deeds she trac'd, and warm display'd
 Each moral beauty to the ravish'd eye.
 There, as th' imagin'd presence of the god
 Arous'd the mind, or vacant hours induc'd
 Calm contemplation, or assembled youth
 Burn'd in ambitious circle round the sage,
 The living lesson stole into the heart,
 With more prevailing force than dwells in words.
 These rouse to glory; while, to rural life,
 The softer canvass oft repos'd the soul.
 There gaily broke the sun-illumin'd cloud;
 The lessening prospect, and the mountain blue,
 Vanish'd in air; the precipice frown'd, dire;
 White, down the rock the rushing torrent dash'd;
 The Sun shone, trembling, o'er the distant main;
 The tempest foam'd, immense; the driving storm
 Sadden'd the skies, and, from the doubling gloom,
 On the scath'd oak the ragged lightning fell;
 In closing shades, and where the current strays,
 With peace, and love, and innocence around,
 Pip'd the lone shepherd to his feeding flock:
 Round happy parents smil'd their younger selves;
 And friends convers'd, by death divided long.
 "To public Virtue thus the smiling Arts,
 Unblemish'd handmaids, serv'd! the Graces they
 To dress this fairest Venus. Thus rever'd,
 And plac'd beyond the reach of sordid care,
 The high awarders of immortal fame,
 Alone for glory thy great masters strove;

† When Demetrius besieged Rhodes, and could have reduced the city, by setting fire to that quarter of it, where stood the house of the celebrated Pro-
 togenes, he chose rather to raise the siege, than hazard the burning of a famous picture called
 Jalyus, the master-piece of that painter.

Courted by kings, and by contending states
Assum'd the boasted honour of their birth.

"In Architecture, too, thy rank supreme!
That art where most magnificent appears
The little builder man; by thee refin'd,
And, smiling high, to full perfection brought.
Such thy sure rules, that Goths of every age,
Who scorn'd their aid, have only loaded Earth
With labour'd heavy monuments of shame.
Not those gay domes that o'er thy splendid shore
Shot, all proportion, up. First unadorn'd,
And nobly plain, the manly Doric rose;
Th' Ionic then, with decent matron grace,
Her airy pillar heav'd; luxuriant last,
The rich Corinthian spread her wanton wreath.
The whole so measur'd true, so lessen'd off
By fine proportion, that the marble pile,
Form'd to repel the still or stormy waste
Of rolling ages, light as fabrics look'd
That from the magic wand aerial rise.

"These were the wonders that illumin'd Greece,
From end to end." — Here interrupting warm,
"Where are they now?" I cry'd, "say, goddess, where?"

And what the land thy darling thus of old?"

"Sunk!" she resum'd: "deep in the kindred
gloom

Of superstition, and of slavery sunk!
No glory now can touch their hearts, benumb'd
By loose dejected sloth and servile fear;
No science pierce the darkness of their minds;
No nobler art the quick ambitious soul
Of imitation in their breast awake.
Ev'n, to supply the needful arts of life,
Mechanic toil denies the hopeless hand.
Scarce any trace remaining, vestige grey,
Or nodding column on the desert shore,
To point where Corinth, or where Athens stood.
A faithless land of violence, and death!
Where Commerce parleys, dubious, on the shore;
And his wild impulse curious search restrains,
Afraid to trust th' inhospitable clime.
Neglected Nature fails; in sordid want
Sunk, and debas'd, their beauty beams no more.
The Sun himself seems angry, to regard,
Of light unworthy, the degenerate race;
And fires them oft with pestilential rays:
While Earth, blue poison steaming on the skies,
Indignant, shakes them from her troubled sides.
But as from man to man, Fate's first decree,
Impartial Death the tide of riches rolls,
So states must die, and Liberty go round.

"Fierce was the stand, ere virtue, valour, arts,
And the soul fir'd by me (that often, stung
With thoughts of better times and old renown,
From hydra-tyrants try'd to clear the land)
Lay quite extinct in Greece, their works effac'd
And gross o'er all unfeeling bondage spread.
Sooner I mov'd my much reluctant flight,
Pois'd on the doubtful wing: when Greece with Greece

Embroid'd in foul contention fought no more
For common glory, and for common weal:
But, false to freedom, sought to quell the free;
Broke the firm band of peace, and sacred love,
That lent the whole irrefragable force;
And, as around the partial trophy blush'd,
Prepar'd the way for total overthrow.

To turn their matchless mercenary arms.
Peaceful in Susa, then, sate the great king*;
And by the trick of treaties, the still waste
Of sly corruption, and barbaric gold,
Effected what his steel could ne'er perform.
Profuse he gave them the luxurious draught,
Inflaming all the land: unbalanc'd wide
Their tottering states; their wild assemblies rul'd,
As the winds turn at every blast the seas:
And by their listed orators, whose breath
Still with a factious storm infested Greece,
Rous'd them to civil war, or dash'd them down

Astonish'd Artaxerxes on his throne,
Gave up, fair-spread o'er Asia's sunny shore,
Their kindred cities, to perpetual chains.
What could so base, so infamous a thought,
In Spartan hearts inspire? Jealous, they saw
Respiring Athens rear again her walls ‡;
And the pale fury fir'd them, once again
To crush this rival city to the dust.
For now no more the noble social soul
Of Liberty my families combin'd;
But by short views, and selfish passions, broke,
Dire as when friends are rankled into foes,
They mix'd severe, and wag'd eternal war;
Nor felt they, furious, their exhausted force;
Nor, with false glory, discord, madness blind,
Saw how the blackening storm from Thracia came.
Long years roll'd on, by many a battle stain'd §,
The blush and boast of Fame! where courage, art,
And military glory, shone supreme:
But let detesting ages, from the scene
Of Greece self-mangled, turn the sickening eye.
At last, when bleeding from a thousand wounds,
She felt her spirits fail; and in the dust
Her latest heroes, Nicias, Conon, lay,
Agesilaus, and the Theban Friends ||:
The Macedonian vulture mark'd his time,
By the dire scent of Chæronea lur'd ¶,
And, fierce-descending, seiz'd his hapless prey.

"Thus tame submitted to the victor's yoke
Greece, once the gay, the turbulent, the bold;
For every Grace, and Muse, and Science born;
With arts of war, of government, elate;
To tyrants dreadful, dreadful to the best;
Whom I myself could scarcely rule: and thus

ROME.

BEING THE THIRD PART OF

LIBERTY,

A POEM.

The Contents of Part III.

As this part contains a description of the establishment of Liberty in Rome, it begins with a view of the Grecian colonies settled in the southern parts of Italy, which with Sicily constituted the Great Greece of the ancients. With these colonies the spirit of Liberty, and of republics, spreads over Italy. Transition to Pythagoras and his philosophy, which he taught through those free states and cities. Amidst the many small republics in Italy, Rome the destined seat of Liberty. Her establishment there dated from the expulsion of the Tarquins. How differing from that in Greece. Reference to a view of the Roman republic given in the first part of this poem: to mark its rise and fall, the peculiar purport of this. During its first ages, the greatest force of Liberty and virtue exerted. The source whence derived the heroic virtues of the Romans. Enumeration of these virtues. Thence their security at home: their glory, success, and empire, abroad. Bounds of the Roman empire, geographically described. The states of Greece restored to Liberty by Titus Quintus Flaminius, the highest instance of public generosity and beneficence. The loss of Liberty in Rome. Its causes, progress, and completion in the death of Brutus. Rome under the emperors. From Rome, the goddess of Liberty goes among the Northern nations; where, by infusing into them her spirit and general principles, she lays the ground-work of her future establishments: sends them in vengeance on the Roman empire, now totally enslaved; and then, with arts and sciences in her train, quits Earth during the dark ages. The celestial regions, to which Liberty retired, not proper to be opened to the view of mortals.

Hæz melting mix'd with air th' ideal forms,
 That painted still whate'er the goddess sung.
 Then I, impatient: "From extinguish'd Greece,
 To what new region stream'd the human day?"
 She softly sighing, as when Zephyr leaves,
 Resign'd to Boreas, the declining year,
 Resum'd: "Indignant, these last scenes I fled* ;
 And long ere then, Leucadia's cloudy cliff,

* The last struggles of liberty in Greece.

And the Ceraunian hills behind me thrown,
 All Latium stood arous'd. Ages before,
 Great mother of republics! Greece had pour'd,
 Swarm after swarm, her ardent youth around.
 On Asia, Afric, Sicily, they stoop'd,
 But chief on fair Hesperia's winding shore;
 Where, from Lacinium* to Etrurian vales,
 They roll'd increasing colonies along,
 And lent materials for my Roman reign.
 With them my spirit spread; and numerous states
 And cities rose, on Grecian models form'd;
 As its parental policy, and arts,
 Each had imbib'd. Besides, to each assign'd
 A guardian genius, o'er the public weal,
 Kept an unclosing eye; try'd to sustain,
 Or more sublime, the soul infus'd by me:
 And strong the battle rose, with various wave,
 Against the tyrant demons of the land.
 Thus they their little wars and triumphs knew;
 Their flows of fortune, and receding times,
 But almost all below the proud regard
 Of story vow'd to Rome, on deeds intent
 That truth beyond the flight of fable bore.

"Not so the Samian sage†; to him belongs
 The brightest witness of recording fame.
 For these free states his native isle‡ forsook,
 And a vain tyrant's transitory smile;
 He sought Crotona's pure salubrious air, [taught;
 And through Great Greece§ his gentle wisdom
 Wisdom that calm'd for listening years the mind||,
 Nor ever heard amid the storm of zeal.
 His mental eye first lanch'd into the deeps
 Of boundless ether; where unnumber'd orbs,
 Myriads on myriads, through the pathless sky
 Unerring roll, and wind their steady way.
 There he the full consenting choir beheld;
 There first discern'd the secret band of love,
 The kind attraction, that to central suns
 Binds circling earths, and world with world unites.
 Instructed thence, he great ideas form'd,
 Of the whole-moving, all-informing God,
 The Sun of beings! beaming unconfin'd
 Light, life, and love, and ever-active power:
 Whom nought can image, and who best approves
 The silent worship of the moral heart,
 That joys in bounteous Heaven, and spreads the joy.
 Nor scorn'd the soaring sage to stoop to life,
 And bound his reason to the sphere of man.
 He gave the four yet reigning virtues¶ name;
 Inspir'd the study of the finer arts,
 That civilize mankind, and laws devis'd
 Where with enlighten'd justice mercy mix'd.
 He ev'n, into his tender system, took
 Whatever shares the brotherhood of life:
 He taught, that life's indissoluble flame,
 From brute to man, and man to brute again,
 For ever shifting, runs th' eternal round;
 Thence try'd against the blood-polluted meal,
 And limbs yet quivering with some kindred soul,
 To turn the human heart. Delightful truth!

¶ The four cardinal virtues.

Had he beheld the living chain ascend,
And not a circling form, but rising whole.

" Amid these small republics one arose,
On yellow Tyber's bank, almighty Rome,
Fated for me. A nobler spirit warm'd
Her sons; and, rous'd by tyrants, nobler still
It burn'd in Brutus: the proud Tarquins chas'd,
With all their crimes; bade radiant eras rise,
And the long honours of the consul-line.

" Here, from the fairer, not the greater, plan
Of Greece I vary'd; whose unmixing states,
By the keen soul of emulation pierc'd,
Long wag'd alone the bloodless war of arts,
And their best empire gain'd. But to diffuse
O'er men an empire was my purpose now:
To let my martial majesty abroad;
Into the vortex of one state to draw
The whole mix'd force, and liberty, on Earth;
To conquer tyrants, and set nations free.

" Already have I given, with flying touch,
A broken view of this my amplest reign.
Now, while its first, last, periods you survey,
Mark how it labouring rose, and rapid fell. [world,

" When Rome in noon-tide empire grasp'd the
And, soon as her resistless legions shone,
The nations stoop'd around: though then appear'd
Her grandeur most, yet in her dawn of power,
By many a jealous equal people press'd,
Then was the toil, the mighty struggle then;
Then for each Roman, I an hero told;
And every passing sun, and Latian scene,
Saw patriot virtues then, and awful deeds,
That or surpass the faith of modern times,
Or, if believ'd, with sacred horror strike.

" For then, to prove my most exalted power,
I to the point of full perfection push'd,
To fondness or enthusiastic zeal,
The great, the reigning passion of the free.
That godlike passion! which, the bounds of self Divinely bursting, the whole public takes
Into the heart, enlarg'd, and burning high
With the mix'd ardour of unnumber'd selves;
Of all who safe beneath the voted laws
Of the same parent state, fraternal, live.
From this kind sun of moral nature flow'd
Virtues, that shine the light of human kind,
And, ray'd through story, warm remotest time.
These virtues, too, reflected to their source,
Increas'd its flame. The social charm went round,
The fair idea, more attractive still,
As more by virtue mark'd: till Romans, all
One band of friends, unconquerable grew. [voice,

" Hence, when their country rais'd her plaintive
The voice of pleading Nature was not heard;
And in their hearts the fathers throb'd no more:
Stern to themselves, but gentle to the whole.
Hence sweeten'd pain, the luxury of toil;
Patience, that baffled Fortune's utmost rage;
High-minded Hope, which at the lowest ebb,
When Brennus conquer'd, and when Cannæ bled,
The bravest impulse felt, and scorn'd despair.
Hence, Moderation a new conquest gain'd;
As on the vanquish'd, like descending Heaven,
Their dewy mercy dropp'd, their bounty beam'd,
And by the labouring hand were crowns bestow'd.
Fruitful of men, hence hard laborious life,
Which no fatigue can quell, no season pierce.
Hence, Independence, with his little pleas'd,
Serene, and self-sufficient, like a god;
In whom Corruption could not lodge one ch—

While he his honest roots to gold prefer'd;
While truly rich, and by his Sabine field,
The man maintain'd, the Roman's splendour all
Was in the public wealth and glory plac'd:
Or ready, a rough swain, to guide the plough;
Or else, the purple o'er his shoulder thrown,
In long majestic flow, to rule the state,
With Wisdom's purest eye; or, clad in steel,
To drive the steady battle on the foe.
Hence every passion, ev'n the proudest, stoop'd
To common good: Camillus, thy revenge;
Thy glory, Fabius. All submissive hence,
Consuls, dictators, still resign'd their rule,
The very moment that the laws ordain'd.
Though Conquest o'er them clapp'd her eagle-wings,
Her laurels wreath'd, and yok'd her snowy steeds
To the triumphal car; soon as expir'd
The latest hour of sway, taught to submit,
(A harder lesson than to command,)
Into the private Roman sunk the chief.
If Rome was serv'd, and glorious, careless they
By whom. Their country's fame they deem'd their own;

And, above envy, in a rival's train,
Sung the loud lōs by themselves deserv'd.
Hence matchless courage. On Cremera's bank,
Hence fell the Fabii; hence the Decii dy'd;
And Curtius plung'd into the flaming gulph.
Hence Regulus the wavering fathers firm'd,
By dreadful counsel never given before,
For Roman honour sued, and his own doom.
Hence he sustain'd to dare a death prepar'd
By Punic rage. On earth his manly look
Relentless fix'd, he from a last embrace,
By chains polluted, put his wife aside,
His little children climbing for a kiss; [friends,
Then dumb through rows of weeping wondering
A new illustrious exile! press'd along.
Nor less impatient did he pierce the crowds
Opposing his return, than if, escap'd
From long litigious suits, he glad forsook
The noisy town awhile, and city cloud,
To breathe Venafrian, or Tarentine air.
Need I these high particulars recount?
The meanest bosom felt a thirst for fame;
Flight their worst death, and shame their only fear.
Life had no charms, nor any terrors fate,
When Rome and glory call'd. But, in one view,
Mark the rare boast of these unequal'd times.
Ages revolv'd unsully'd by a crime:
Astrea reign'd, and scarcely needed laws
To bind a race elated with the pride
Of virtue, and disdaining to descend
To meanness, mutual violence, and wrongs.
While war around them rag'd, in happy Rome
All peaceful smil'd, all save the passing clouds
That often hang on Freedom's jealous brow!
And fair unblemish'd centuries elaps'd,
When not a Roman bled but in the field.
Their virtue such, that an unbalanc'd state,
Still between noble and plebeian tost,
As flow'd the wave of fluctuating power,
Was thence kept firm, and with triumphant prow
Rode out the storms. Oft though the native seeds,
That from the first their constitution shook,
(A latent ruin, growing as it grew,)
Stood on the threatening point of civil war
Ready to rush: yet could the lenient voice
Of wisdom, soothing the tumultuous soul,
These sons of virtue calm. Their generous hearts,

Unpetrify'd by self, so naked lay,
 And sensible to truth, that o'er the rage
 Of giddy faction, by oppression swell'd,
 Prevail'd a simple fable, and at once
 To peace recover'd the divided state.
 But if their often-cheated hopes refus'd
 The soothing touch; still, in the love of Rome,
 The dread dictator found a sure resource.
 Was she assaulted? was her glory stain'd?
 One common quarrel wide-inflam'd the whole.
 Foes in the forum, in the field were friends,
 By social danger bound; each fond for each,
 And for their dearest country all, to die.

"Thus up the hill of empire slow they toil'd:
 Till, the bold summit gain'd, the thousand states
 Of proud Italia blended into one;
 Then o'er the nations they resistless rush'd,
 And touch'd the limits of the failing world.

"Let Fancy's eye the distant lines unite.
 See that which borders wild the western main,
 Where storms at large resound, and tides immense:
 From Caledonia's dim cerulean coast,
 And moist Hibernia, to where Atlas, lodg'd
 Amid the restless clouds, and leaning Heaven,
 Hangs o'er the deep that borrows thence its name.
 Mark that oppos'd, where first the springing Morn
 Her roses sheds, and shakes around her dews:
 From the dire deserts by the Caspian lav'd,
 To where the Tigris and Euphrates, join'd,
 Impetuous tear the Babylonian plain;
 And blest Arabia aromatic breathes.
 See that dividing far the watery north,
 Parent of floods! from the majestic Rhine,
 Drunk by Batavian meads, to where, seven-
 mouth'd,

In Euxine waves the flashing Danube roars;
 To where the frozen Tanais * scarcely stirs
 The dead Meotic pool, or the long Rha †,
 In the black Scythian sea his torrent throws.
 Last, that beneath the burning zone behold:
 See where it runs, from the deep-loaded plains
 Of Mauritania to the Libyan sands,
 Where Ammon lifts amid the torrid waste
 A verdant isle, with shade and fountain fresh;
 And farther to the full Egyptian shore,
 To where the Nile from Ethiopian clouds,
 His never-drain'd ethereal urn, descends.
 In this vast space what various tongues, and states!
 What bounding rocks, and mountains, floods and seas!

What purple tyrants quell'd, and nations freed!

"O'er Greece descended chief, with stealth
 divine,

The Roman bounty in a flood of day:
 As at her Isthmian games, a fading pomp!
 Her full-assembled youth innumerable swarm'd.
 On a tribunal rais'd Flaminius sat;
 A victor he, from the deep phalanx pierc'd
 Of iron-coated Macedon ‡, and back
 The Grecian tyrant to his bounds repell'd.
 In the high thoughtless gaiety of game,
 While sport alone their unambitious hearts
 Possess'd; the sudden trumpet, sounding hoarse,
 Bade silence o'er the bright assembly reign.
 Then thus a herald: — 'To the states of Greece
 The Roman people, unconfin'd, restore

Their countries, cities, liberties, and laws:
 Taxes remit, and garrisons withdraw.'
 The crowd, astonish'd half, and half inform'd,
 Star'd dubious round; some question'd, some ex-
 claim'd,

(Like one who, dreaming, between hope and fear,
 Is lost in anxious joy,) 'Be that again,
 Be that again proclaim'd, distinct, and loud.'
 Loud, and distinct, it was again proclaim'd;
 And still as midnight in the rural shade,
 When the gale slumbers, they the words devour'd.
 Awhile severe amazement held them mute;
 Then, bursting broad, the boundless shout to Heaven

From many a thousand hearts ecstatic sprung.
 On every hand rebellow'd to their joy
 The swelling sea, the rocks, and vocal hills:
 Through all her turrets stately Corinth § shook;
 And, from the void above of shatter'd air,
 The flitting bird fell breathless to the ground.
 What piercing bliss! how keen a sense of fame,
 Did then, Flaminius, reach thy inmost soul!
 And with what deep-felt glory didst thou then
 Escape the fondness of transported Greece!
 Mix'd in a tempest of superior joy,
 They left the sports; like Bacchanals they flew,
 Each other straining in a strict embrace,
 Nor strain'd a slave; and loud acclaims till night
 Round the proconsul's tent repeated rung. [Hours;
 Then, crown'd with garlands, came the festive
 And music, sparkling wine, and converse warm,
 Their raptures wak'd anew. — 'Ye gods!' they cry'd,

'Ye guardian gods of Greece! And are we free?
 Was it not madness deem'd the very thought?
 And is it true? How did we purchase chains?
 At what a dire expense of kindred blood?
 And are they now dissolv'd? And scarce one drop
 For the fair first of blessings have we paid?
 Courage, and conduct, in the doubtful field,
 When rages wide the storm of mingling war,
 Are rare indeed; but how to generous ends
 To turn success, and conquest, rarer still:
 That the great gods and Romans only know.
 Lives there on Earth, almost to Greece unknown,
 A people so magnanimous, to quit
 Their native soil, traverse the stormy deep,
 And by their blood and treasure, spent for us,
 Redeem our states, our liberties, and laws!
 There does! there does! oh, saviour Titus! Rome!
 Thus through the happy night they pour'd their souls,

And in my last reflected beams rejoic'd.
 As when the shepherd, on the mountain brow,
 Sits piping to his flocks, and gamesome kids;
 Meantime the Sun, beneath the green Earth sunk,
 Slants upward o'er the scene a parting gleam:
 Short is the glory that the mountain gilds,
 Plays on the glittering flocks, and glads the swain;
 To western worlds irrevocable roll'd,
 Rapid, the source of light recalls his ray."

Here interposing I: — "Oh, queen of men!
 Beneath whose sceptre in essential rights
 Equal they live; though plac'd, for common good,
 Various, or in subjection, or command;
 And that by common choice: alas! the scene,
 With virtue, freedom, and with glory bright,

§ The Isthmian games were celebrated at Corinth.

Streams into blood, and darkens into woe."

Thus she pursued : — " Near this great era, Rome
Began to feel the swift approach of fate,
That now her vitals gain'd ; still more and more
Her deep divisions kindling into rage,
And war with chains and desolation charg'd.
From an unequal balance of her sons
These fierce contentions sprung ; and, as increas'd
This hated inequality, more fierce
They flam'd to tumult. Independence fail'd ;
Here by luxurious wants, by real there ;
And with this virtue every virtue sunk,
As, with the sliding rock, the pile sustain'd.
A last attempt, too late, the Gracchi made,
To fix the flying scale, and poise the state.
On one side swell'd aristocratic pride ;
With Usury, the villain ! whose fell gripe
Bends by degrees to baseness the free soul ;
And Luxury rapacious, cruel, mean,
Mother of Vice ! while on the other crept
A populace in want, with pleasure fir'd ;
Fit for proscriptions, for the darkest deeds,
As the proud feeder bade : inconstant, blind,
Deserting friends at need, and dup'd by foes ;
Loud and seditious, when a chief inspir'd
Their headlong fury, but, of him depriv'd,
Already slaves that lick'd the scourging hand.

" This firm republic, that against the blast
Of opposition rose ; that (like an oak,
Nurs'd on feracious Algidum, whose boughs
Still stronger shoot beneath the rigid axe)
By loss, by slaughter, from the steel itself,
Ev'n force and spirit drew ; smit with the calm,
The dead serene of prosperous fortune, pin'd.
Nought now her weighty legions could oppose ;
Her terror once on Afric's tawny shore,*
Now smok'd in dust, a stabling now for wolves ;
And every dreaded power receiv'd the yoke.
Besides, destructive, from the conquer'd east,
In the soft plunder came that worst of plagues,
That pestilence of mind, a fever'd thirst
For the false joys which luxury prepares.
Unworthy joys ! that wasteful leave behind
No mark of honour, in reflecting hour,
No secret ray to glad the conscious soul ;
At once involving in one ruin wealth,
And wealth-acquiring powers : while stupid self,
Of narrow gust, and hebetating sense
Devour the nobler faculties of bliss.
Hence Roman virtue slacken'd into sloth ;
Security relax'd the softening state ;
And the broad eye of government lay clos'd ;
No more the laws inviolable reign'd,
And public weal no more : but party rag'd,
And partial power, and licence unrestrain'd †,
Let discord through the deathful city loose.
First, mild Tiberius, on thy sacred head
The fury's vengeance fell ; the first, whose blood
Had since the consuls stain'd contending Rome.
Of precedent pernicious ! with thee bled
Three hundred Romans ; with thy brother, next,
Three thousand more ; till, into battles turn'd
Debates of peace, and forc'd the trembling laws,
The forum and comitia horrid grew,
A scene of barter'd power, or reeking gore.
When, half-asham'd, Corruption's thievish arts,
And ruffian force began to ssp the mounds
And majesty of laws ; if not in time

* Carthage. † Tib. Gracchus.

Repress'd severe, for human aid too strong
The torrent turns, and overbears the whole.

" Thus luxury, dissension, a mix'd rage
Of boundless pleasure and of boundless wealth,
Want wishing change, and waste repairing war,
Rapine for ever lost to peaceful toil,
Guilt unaton'd, profuse of blood revenge,
Corruption all avow'd, and lawless force,
Each heightening each, alternate shook the state.
Meantime ambition, at the dazzling head
Of hardy legions, with the laurels heap'd
And spoil of nations, in one circling blast
Combin'd in various storm, and from its base
The broad republic tore. By virtue built,
It touch'd the skies, and spread o'er shelter'd Earth
An ample roof : by virtue too sustain'd,
And balanc'd steady, every tempest sung
Innoxious by, or bade it firmer stand.
But when, with sudden and enormous change,
The first of mankind sunk into the last,
As once in virtue, so in vice extreme,
This universal fabric yielded loose,
Before ambition still ; and thundering down,
At last, beneath its ruins crush'd a world.
A conquering people, to themselves a prey,
Must ever fall ; when their victorious troops,
In blood and rapine savage grown, can find
No land to sack and pillage but their own.

" By brutal Marius, and keen Sylla, first
Effus'd the deluge dire of civil blood,
Unceasing woes began, and this, or that,
(Deep-drenching their revenge) nor virtue spar'd,
Nor sex, nor age, nor quality, nor name,
'Till Rome, into an human shambles turn'd,
Made deserts lovely. — Oh, to well-earn'd chains
Devoted race ! — If no true Roman then,
No Scævola there was, to raise for Me
A vengeful hand : was there no father, robb'd
Of blooming youth to prop his wither'd age ?
No son, a witness to his hoary sire
In dust and gore defil'd ? no friend, forlorn ?
No wretch that doubtful trembled for himself ?
None brave, or wild, to pierce a monster's heart,
Who, heaping horror round, no more deserv'd
The sacred shelter of the laws he spurn'd ?
No. Sad o'er all profound dejection sat,
And nerveless fear. The slave's asylum theirs :
Or flight, ill-judging, that the timid back
Turns weak to slaughter ; or partaken guilt.
In vain from Sylla's vanity I drew
An unexampled deed. The power resign'd,
And all unhop'd the commonwealth restor'd,
Amaz'd the public, and effac'd his crimes. [hand
Through streets yet streaming from his murderous
Unarm'd he stray'd, unguarded, unassail'd,
And on the bed of peace his ashes laid :
A grace, which I to his demission gave.
But with him dy'd not the despotic soul.
Ambition saw that stooping Rome could bear
A master, nor had virtue to be free.
Hence, for succeeding years, my troubled reign
No certain peace, no spreading prospect, knew.
Destruction gather'd round. Still the black soul,
Or of a Catiline, or Rullus ‡, swell'd

‡ Pub. Servilius Rullus, tribune of the people, proposed an Agrarian law, in appearance very advantageous for the people, but destructive of their liberty ; and which was defeated by the eloquence of Cicero, in his speech against Rullus.

With fell designs ; and all the watchful art
Of Cicero demanded, all the force,
All the state-wielding magic of his tongue ;
And all the thunder of my Cato's zeal.
With these I linger'd ; till the flame anew
Burst out in blaze immense, and wrapt the world.
The shameful contest sprung, to whom mankind
Should yield the neck : to Pompey, who conceal'd
A rage impatient of an equal name ;
Or to the nobler Cæsar, on whose brow
O'er daring vice deluding virtue smil'd,
And who no less a vain superior scorn'd.
Both bled, but bled in vain. New traitors rose,
The venal WILL be bought, the base have lords.
To these vile wars I left ambitious slaves ;
And from Philippi's field, from where in dust
The last of Romans, matchless Brutus ! lay,
Spread to the north untam'd a rapid wing.

" What though the first smooth Cæsar's arts
caress'd,
Merit and virtue, simulating me ?
Severely tender ! cruelly humane !
The chain to clinch, and make it softer sit
On the new-broken still ferocious state.
From the dark third *, succeeding, I beheld
Th' imperial monsters all. — A race on Earth
Vindictive, sent the scourge of human-kind !
Whose blind profusion drain'd a bankrupt world ;
Whose lust to forming Nature seems disgrace ;
And whose infernal rage bade every drop
Of ancient blood, that yet retain'd my flame,
To that of Pætus †, in the peaceful bath,
Or Rome's affrighted streets, inglorious flow.
But almost just the meanly-patient death,
That waits a tyrant's unprevented stroke.
Titus indeed gave one short evening gleam ;
More cordial felt, as in the midst it spread
Of storm, and horror. The delight of men ;
He who the day, when his o'erflowing hand
Had made no happy heart, concluded lost ;
Trajan and he, with the mild sire and son ‡,
His son of virtue ! eas'd awhile mankind ;
And arts reviv'd beneath their gentle beam.
Then was their last effort : what sculpture rais'd
To Trajan's glory, following triumphs stole ;
And mix'd with Gothic forms (the chissel's shame),
On that triumphal arch §, the forms of Greece.

" Meantime o'er rocky Thrace, and the deep vales
Of gelid Hemus, I pursued my flight ;
And, piercing farthest Scythia, westward swept
Sarmatia ¶, travers'd by a thousand streams.
A sullen land of lakes, and fens immense,
Of rocks, resounding torrents, gloomy heaths,

† Thræsa Pætus, put to death by Nero. Tacitus introduces the account he gives of his death thus :
— " After having inhumanly slaughtered so many illustrious men, he (Nero) burned at last with a desire of cutting off virtue itself in the person of Thræsa, &c."

‡ Antoninus Pius, and his adopted son Marcus Aurelius, afterwards called Antoninus Philosophus.

§ Constantine's arch, to build which, that of Trajan was destroyed, sculpture having been then almost entirely lost.

¶ The ancient Sarmatia contained a vast tract of country running all along the north of Europe, and Asia.

And cruel deserts black with sounding pine ;
Where Nature frowns : though sometimes into smiles

She softens ; and immediate, at the touch
Of southern gales, throws from the sudden glebe
Luxuriant pasture, and a waste of flowers.
But, cold-comprest, when the whole loaded heaven
Descends in snow, lost in one white abrupt,
Lies undistinguish'd earth ; and, seiz'd by frost,
Lakes, headlong streams, and floods, and oceans
sleep.

Yet there life glows ; the furry millions there,
Deep-dig their dens beneath the sheltering snows :
And there a race of men prolific swarms,
To various pain, to little pleasure us'd ;
On whom, keen-parching beat Riphæan winds ;
Hard like their soil, and like their climate fierce,
The nursery of nations ! — These I rous'd,
Drove land on land, on people people pour'd ;
Till from almost perpetual night they broke,
As if in search of day ; and o'er the banks
Of yielding empire, only slave-sustain'd,
Resistless rag'd, in vengeance urg'd by me.

" Long in the barbarous heart the bury'd seeds
Of freedom lay, for many a wintery age ;
And though my spirit work'd by slow degrees,
Nought but its pride and fierceness yet appear'd.
Then was the night of time, that parted worlds.
I quitted Earth the while. As when the tribes
Aërial, warn'd of rising winter, ride
Autumnal winds, to warmer climates borne ;
So, arts and each good genius in my train,
I cut the closing gloom, and soar'd to Heaven.

" In the bright regions there of purest day,
Far other scenes, and palaces, arise,
Adorn'd profuse with other arts divine.
All beauty here below, to them compar'd,
Would, like a rose before the mid-day Sun,
Shrink up its blossom ; like a bubble, break
The passing poor magnificence of kings.
For there the King of Nature, in full blaze,
Calls every splendour forth ; and there his court,
Amid ethereal powers, and virtues, holds :
Angel, archangel, tutelary gods,
Of cities, nations, empires, and of worlds.
But sacred be the veil, that kindly clouds
A light too keen for mortals : wraps a view
Too softening fair, for those that here in dust
Must cheerful toil out their appointed years.
A sense of higher life would only damp
The school-boy's task, and spoil his playful hours.
Nor could the child of reason, feeble man,
With vigour through this infant being drudge ;
Did brighter worlds, their unimagined bliss
Disclosing, dazzle and dissolve his mind."

BRITAIN:

BEING THE FOURTH PART OF

LIBERTY,

A POEM,

The Contents of Part IV.

Difference betwixt the ancients and moderns slightly touched upon. Description of the dark ages. The goddess of Liberty, who during these is supposed to have left Earth, returns, attended with Arts and Science. She first descends on Italy. Sculpture, Painting, and Architecture fix at Rome, to revive their several arts by the great models of antiquity there, which many barbarous invasions had not been able to destroy. The revival of these arts marked out. That sometimes arts may flourish for a while under despotic governments, though never the natural and genuine production of them. Learning begins to dawn. The Muse and Science attend Liberty, who in her progress towards Great Britain raises several free states and cities. These enumerated. Author's exclamation of joy, upon seeing the British seas and coasts rise in the vision, which painted whatever the goddess of Liberty said. She resumes her narration. The Genius of the Deep appears, and, addressing Liberty, associates Great Britain into his dominion. Liberty received and congratulated by Britannia, and the native Genii or Virtues of the island. These described. Animated by the presence of Liberty, they begin their operations. Their beneficent influence contrasted with the works and delusions of opposing demons. Concludes with an abstract of the English history, marking the several advances of Liberty, down to her complete establishment at the Revolution.

STRUCK with the rising scene, thus I, amaz'd:
 " Ah, goddess, what a change! Is earth the same?
 Of the same kind the ruthless race she feeds?
 And does the same fair Sun and ether spread
 Round this vile spot their all-enlivening soul?
 Lo! beauty fails; lost in unlovely forms
 Of little pomp, magnificence no more
 Exalts the mind, and bids the public smile:
 While to rapacious interest glory leaves
 Mankind, and every grace of life is gone."

To this the power, whose vital radiance calls
 From the brute mass of man an order'd world:

" Wait till the morning shines, and from the depth

Of Gothic darkness springs another day.
 True genius droops; the tender ancient taste
 Of beauty, then fresh-blooming in her prime,
 But faintly trembles through the callous soul,
 And grandeur, or of morals, or of life,
 Sinks into safe pursuits, and creeping cares.
 Ev'n cautious Virtue seems to stoop her flight,
 And aged life to deem the generous deeds
 Of youth romantic. Yet in cooler thought
 Well-reason'd, in researches piercing deep
 Through Nature's works, in profitable arts,
 And all that calm experience can disclose,
 (Slow guide, but sure,) behold the world ar-

Exalted rise, with other honours crown'd;
 And, where my Spirit wakes the finer powers,
 Athenian laurels still afresh shall bloom.

" Oblivious ages pass'd; while Earth, forsok
 By her best genii, lay to demons foul,
 And unchain'd furies, an abandon'd prey.
 Contention led the van; first small of size,
 But soon dilating to the skies she towers:
 Then, wide as air, the livid fury spread,
 And high her head above the stormy clouds
 She blaz'd in omens, swell'd the groaning winds
 With wild surmises, battlings, sounds of war:
 From land to land the maddening trumpet blew,
 And pour'd her venom through the heart of man.
 Shook to the Pole, the north obey'd her call.
 Forth rush'd the bloody power of Gothic war,
 War against human-kind: Rapine, that led
 Millions of raging robbers in his train:
 Unlistening, barbarous Force, to whom the sword
 Is reason, honour, law: the foe of arts
 By monsters follow'd, hideous to behold, [these
 That claim'd their place. Outrageous mix'd with Another species of tyrannic rule*,
 Unknown before, whose cancrous shackles seiz'd
 Th' envenom'd soul: a wilder fury, she
 Ev'n o'er her elder sister† tyranniz'd;
 Or, if perchance agreed, inflam'd her rage,
 Dire was her train, and loud; the sable band,
 Thundering, — ' Submit, ye laity! ye prophane!
 Earth is the Lord's, and therefore ours; let kings
 Allow the common claim, and half be theirs;
 If not, behold! the sacred lightning flies:'
 Scholastic Discord, with an hundred tongues,
 For science uttering jangling words obscure,
 Where frighted Reason never yet could dwell:
 Of peremptory feature, Cleric Pride,
 Whose reddening cheek no contradiction bears;
 And Holy Slander, his associate firm,
 On whom the lying spirit still descends:
 Mother of tortures! Persecuting Zeal,
 High-flashing in her hand the ready torch,
 Or poniard bath'd in unbelieving blood;
 Hell's fiercest fiend! of saintly brow demure,
 Assuming a celestial seraph's name,
 While she beneath the blasphemous pretence
 Of pleasing Parent Heaven, the source of love!
 Has wrought more horrors, more detested deeds,
 Than all the rest combin'd. Led on by her,
 And wild of head to work her fell designs,
 Came idiot Superstition; round with ears
 Innumerable strow'd, ten thousand monkish forms
 With legends ply'd them, and with tenets, meant
 To charm or scare the simple into slaves,
 And poison reason; gross, she swallows all,
 The most absurd believing ever most.
 Broad o'er the whole her universal night,
 The gloom still doubling, Ignorance diffus'd.

" Nought to be seen, but visionary monks
 To councils strolling, and embroiling creeds;
 Banditti saints‡, disturbing distant lands;
 And unknown nations, wandering for a home.
 All lay revers'd: the sacred arts of rule
 Turn'd to flagitious leagues against mankind,
 And arts of plunder more and more avow'd;
 Pure plain devotion to a solemn farce§;

To holy dotage-virtue, ev'n to guile,
To murder, and a mockery of oaths;
Brave ancient freedom to the rage of slaves*,
Proud of their state, and fighting for their chains;
Dishonour'd courage to the bravo's trade†,
To civil broil; and glory to romance.
Thus human life, unbing'd, to ruin reel'd,
And giddy Reason totter'd on her throne.

"At last Heaven's best inexplicable scheme,
Disclosing, bade new brightening eras smile.
The high command gone forth, Arts in my train,
And azure-mantled Science, swift we spread
A sounding pinion. Eager pity, mixt
With indignation, urg'd her downward flight.
On Latium first we stoop'd, for doubtful life
That panted, sunk beneath unnumber'd woes.
Ah, poor Italia! what a bitter cup
Of vengeance hast thou drain'd! Goths, Vandals,

Huns,

Lombards, barbarians broke from every land,
How many a ruffian form hast thou beheld!
What horrid jargons heard, where rage alone
Was all thy frighted ear could comprehend!
How frequent by the red inhuman hand,
Yet warm with brother's, husband's, father's blood,
Hast thou thy matrons and thy virgins seen
To violation dragg'd, and mingled death!
What conflagrations, earthquakes, ravage, floods,
Have turn'd thy cities into stony wilds;
And succourless, and bare, the poor remains
Of wretches forth to nature's common cast!
Added to these, the still continued waste
Of inbred foes‡, that on thy vitals prey,
And, double tyrants, seize the very soul.
Where hadst thou treasures for this rapine all?
These hungry myriads, that thy bowels tore,
Heap'd sack on sack, and bury'd in their rage
Wonders of art; whence this grey scene a mine
Of more than gold becomes, and orient gems,
Where Egypt, Greece, and Rome, united glow.

"Here Sculpture, Painting, Architecture, bent
From ancient models to restore their arts,
Remain'd. A little trace we how they rose.

"Amid the hoary ruins Sculpture first,
Deep-digging, from the cavern dark and damp,
Their grave for ages, bid her marble race
Spring to new light. Joy sparkled in her eyes,
And old remembrance thrill'd in every thought,
As she the pleasing resurrection saw.
In leaning site, respiring from his toils,
The well-known hero§, who deliver'd Greece,
His ample chest, all tempested with force,
Unconquerable rear'd. She saw the head,
Breathing the hero, small, of Grecian size,
Scarce more extensive than the sinewy neck;
The spreading shoulders, muscular, and broad;
The whole a mass of swelling sinews, touch'd
Into harmonious shape; she saw, and joy'd.
The yellow hunter, Meleager, rais'd
His beauteous front, and through the finish'd whole
Shows what ideas smil'd of old in Greece.
Of raging aspect, rush'd impetuous forth

And each keen sinew brac'd, the storm of war,
Ruffling, o'er all his nervous body frowns.
The dying Otho* from the gloom she drew.
Supported on his shorten'd arm he leans,
Prone agonizing; with incumbent fate,
Heavy declines his head; yet dark beneath
The suffering feature sullen vengeance lowers,
Shame, indignation, unaccomplish'd rage,
And still the cheated eye expects his fall.
All conquest-flush'd, from prostrate Python, came
The Quiver'd God.† In graceful act he stands,
His arm extended with the slacken'd bow.
Light flows his easy robe, and fair displays
A manly-soften'd form. The bloom of gods
Seems youthful o'er the beardless cheek to wave.
His features yet heroic ardour warms;
And sweet subsiding to a native smile,
Mixt with the joy elating conquest gives,
A scatter'd frown exalts his matchless air.
On Flora mov'd; her full-proportion'd limbs
Rise through the mantle fluttering in the breeze.
The queen of Love‡ arose, as from the deep
She sprung in all the melting pomp of charms.
Bashful she bends, her well-taught look aside
Turns in enchanting guise, where dubious mix
Vain conscious beauty, a dissembled sense
Of modest shame, and slippery looks of love.
The gazer grows enamour'd, and the stone,
As if exulting in its conquest, smiles.
So turn'd each limb, so swell'd with softening art,
That the deluded eye the marble doubts.
At last her utmost master-piece§ she found,
That Maro fir'd¶; the miserable sire,
Wrapt with his sons in fate's severest grasp.
The serpents, twisting round, their stringent folds
Inextricable tie. Such passion here,
Such agonies, such bitterness of pain,
Seem so to tremble through the tortur'd stone,
That the touch'd heart engrosses all the view.
Almost unmark'd the best proportions pass,
That ever Greece beheld; and, seen alone,
On the rapt eye th' imperious passions seize:
The father's double pangs, both for himself
And sons convuls'd: to Heaven his rueful look,
Imploring aid, and half-accusing, cast;
His fell despair with indignation mixt,
As the strong-curling monsters from his side
His full extended fury cannot tear.
More tender touch'd, with varied art, his sons
All the soft rage of younger passions show.
In a boy's helpless fate one sinks oppress'd!
While, yet unpierc'd, the frighted other tries
His foot to steal out of the horrid twine.

"She bore no more, but straight from Gothic rust
Her chisel clear'd¶, and dust and fragments drove Impetuous round. Successive as it went,
From son to son, with more enlivening touch,
From the brute rock it call'd the breathing form;

¶ It is reported of Michael Angelo Buonaroti, the most celebrated master of modern sculpture, that he wrought with a kind of inspiration, or enthusiastical fury, which produced the effect here mentioned.

Till, in a legislator's awful grace
Dress'd, Buonaroti bid a Moses rise,
And, looking love immense, a Saviour-God. *

" Of these observant, Painting felt the fire
Burn inward. Then ecstatic she diffus'd
The canvass, seiz'd the pallet, with quick hand
The colours brew'd; and on the void expanse
Her gay creation pour'd, her mimic world.
Poor was the manner of her eldest race,
Barren, and dry; just struggling from the taste,
That had for ages scar'd in cloisters dim
The superstitious herd: yet glorious then
Were deem'd their works; where undevelop'd lay
The future wonders that enrich'd mankind,
And a new light and grace o'er Europe cast.
Arts gradual gather streams. Enlarging this
To each his portion of her various gifts
The goddess dealt, to none indulging all;
No, not to Raphael. At kind distance still Perfection stands, like happiness, to tempt
Th' eternal chase. In elegant design
Improving Nature; in ideas fair,
Or great, extracted from the fine antique;
In attitude, expression, airs divine,
Her sons of Rome and Florence bore the prize.
To those of Venice she the magic art
Of colours melting into colours gave.
Theirs too it was by one embracing mass
Of light and shade that settles round the whole,
Or varies tremulous from part to part,
O'er all a binding harmony to throw,
To raise the picture, and repose the sight.
The Lombard school† succeeding, mingled both.

" Meantime dread fanes, and palaces, around,
Rear'd the magnificent front. Music again
Her universal language of the heart
Renew'd; and, rising from the plaintive vale,
To the full concert spread, and solemn quire.

" Ev'n bigots smil'd; to their protection took
Arts not their own, and from them borrow'd pomp:
For in a tyrant's garden these awhile
May bloom, though freedom be their parent soil.

" And now confest, with gently-glowing gleam,
The morning shone, and westward stream'd its light.
The Muse awoke. Not sooner on the wing
Is the gay bird of dawn. Artless her voice,
Untaught and wild, yet warbling through the woods
Romantic lays. But as her northern course
She, with her tutor Science, in my train,
Ardent pursu'd, her strains more noble grew:
While reason drew the plan, the heart inform'd
The moral page, and fancy lent it grace.

" Rome and her circling deserts cast behind,
I pass'd not idle to my great sojourn

" On Arno's‡ fertile plain, where the rich vine

§ The republics of Florence, Pisa, Lucca, and Sienna. They formerly had very cruel wars together, but at the time when this poem was written, were all peaceably subject to the Great Duke of Tuscany, except it be Lucca, which still maintained the form of a republic.

Instead of ruling power, ne'er meant for them,
Employ'd their little cares, and sav'd their fate.

" Beyond the rugged Appenines, that roll
Far through Italian bounds their wavy tops,
My path, too, I with public blessings strow'd;
Free states and cities, where the Lombard plain,
In spite of culture negligent and gross,
From her deep bosom pours unbidden joys,
And green o'er all the land a garden spreads.

" The barren rocks themselves beneath my foot
Relenting bloom'd on the Ligurian shore.
Thick-swarming people* there, like emmets, seiz'd
Amid surrounding cliffs, the scatter'd spots,
Which Nature left in her destroying rage†,
Made their own fields, nor sigh'd for other lands.
There, in white prospect, from the rocky hill,
Gradual descending to the shelter'd shore,
By me proud Genoa's marble turrets rose.
And while my genuine spirit warm'd her sons,
Beneath her Dorias, not unworthy, she
Vy'd for the trident of the narrow seas,
Ere Britain yet had open'd all the main.

" Nor be the then triumphant state‡ forgot,
Where, push'd from plunder'd earth, a remnant § still,

Inspir'd by me, through the dark ages kept
Of my old Roman flame some sparks alive:
The seeming god-built city! which my hand
Deep in the bosom fix'd of wondering seas.
Astonish'd mortals sail'd, with pleasing awe,
Around the sea-girt walls, by Neptune fenc'd,
And down the briny street; where on each hand,
Amazing seen amid unstable waves,
The splendid palace shines; and rising tides,
The green steps marking, murmur at the door.
To this fair queen of Adria's stormy gulph,
The mart of nations! long, obedient seas
Roll'd all the treasure of the radiant East;
But now no more. Than one great tyrant worse
(Whose shar'd oppression lightens, as diffus'd)
Each subject tearing, many tyrants rose.
The least the proudest. Join'd in dark cabal,
They jealous, watchful, silent, and severe,
Cast o'er the whole indissoluble chains:
The softer shackles of luxurious ease
They likewise added, to secure their sway.
Thus Venice fainter shines; and commerce thus,
Of toil impatient, flags the drooping sail.
Bursting, besides, his ancient bounds, he took
A larger circle ||; found another seat ¶,
Opening a thousand ports, and, charm'd with toil,
Whom nothing can dismay, far other sons.

* The Genoese territory is reckoned very populous, but the towns and villages for the most part lie hid among the Appenine rocks and mountains.

" The mountains then, clad with eternal snow,

 Accorded gracious with revolving power,
 Maintains them free ; and, in their happy streets,
 Nor cruel deed nor misery is known.
 For valour, faith, and innocence of life,
 Renown'd, a rough laborious people, there,
 Not only give the dreadful Alps to smile,
 And press their culture on retiring snows ;
 But, to firm order train'd and patient war,

 Of mercenary force, how to defend
 The tasteful little their hard toil has earn'd,
 And the proud arm of Bourbon to defy. [charm,

 And, by the Sun illumin'd, pouring bright
 A gemmy shower : hung o'er amazing rocks,

Here, with the shifted vision, burst my joy.
 " O the dear prospect ! O majestic view !
 See Britain's empire ! lo ! the watery vast
 Wide-waves, diffusing the cerulean plain.
 And now, methinks, like clouds at distance seen,
 Emerging white from deeps of ether, dawn
 My kindred cliffs ; whence, wafted in the gale,
 Ineffable, a secret sweetness breathes.
 Goddess, forgive ! — My heart, surpris'd, o'erflows
 With filial fondness for the land you bless."
 As parents to a child complacent deign
 Approvance, the celestial brightness smil'd ;
 Then thus : — " As o'er the wave-resounding deep,
 To my near reign, the happy isle, I steer'd
 With easy wing ; behold ! from surge to surge,
 Stalk'd the tremendous genius of the deep.
 Around him clouds, in mingled tempest, hung ;
 Thick-flashing meteors crown'd his starry head ;
 And ready thunder redden'd in his hand,
 Or from it stream'd compressed the gloomy cloud.
 Where'er he look'd, the trembling waves recoil'd.
 He needs but strike the conscious flood, and shook
 From shore to shore, in agitation dire,
 It works his dreadful will. To me his voice
 (Like that hoarse blast that round the cavern howls, Mixt with the murmurs of the falling main)
 Address'd, began : — ' By Fate commission'd, go,
 My sister-goddess now, to yon blest isle,
 Henceforth the partner of my rough domain,
 All my dread walks to Britons open lie.
 Those that refulgent, or with rosy morn,
 Or yellow evening, flame : those that, profuse
 Drunk by equator-suns, severely shine ;
 Or those that, to the Poles approaching, rise
 In billows rolling into alps of ice.
 Ev'n yet untouch'd by daring keel, be theirs
 The vast Pacific ; that on other worlds,
 Their future conquest, rolls resounding tides.
 Long I maintain'd inviolate my reign ;
 Nor Alexanders me, nor Cæsars brav'd.
 Still, in the crook of shore, the coward sail
 Till now low-crept ; and peddling commerce ply'd
 Between near-joining lands. For Britons, chief,
 It was reserv'd, with star-directed prow,
 To dare the middle deep, and drive assur'd
 To distant nations through the pathless main,
 Chief, for their fearless hearts the glory waits,
 Long months from land, while the black stormy
 night

Around them rages, on the groaning mast
 With unshook knee to know their giddy way ;
 To sing, unquell'd, amid the lashing wave ;
 To laugh at danger. Theirs the triumph be,
 By deep invention's keen pervading eye,
 The heart of courage, and the hand of toil,
 Each conquer'd ocean staining with their blood,
 Instead of treasure robb'd by ruffian war,
 Round social Earth to circle fair exchange,
 And bind the nations in a golden chain.
 To these I honour'd stoop. Rushing to light,
 A race of men behold ! whose daring deeds
 Will in renown exalt my nameless plains
 O'er those of fubling Earth, as hers to mine
 In terror yield. Nay, could my savage heart
 Such glories check, their unsubmitting soul
 Would all my fury brave, my tempest climb,
 And might in spite of me my kingdom force.'
 Here, waiting no reply, the shadowy power
 Eas'd the dark sky, and to the deeps return'd :

While the loud thunder rattling from his hand,
Auspicious, shook opponent Gallia's shore.

"Of this encounter glad, my way to land
I quick pursued, that from the smiling sea
Receiv'd me joyous. Loud acclaims were heard;
And music, more than mortal, warbling, fill'd
With pleas'd astonishment the labouring hind,
Who for awhile the unfinish'd furrow left,
And let the listening steer forget his toil.
Unseen by grosser eye, Britannia breath'd,
And her aerial train, these sounds of joy,
Full of old time, since first the rushing flood,
Urg'd by Almighty Power, this favour'd isle
Turn'd flashing from the continent aside,
Indented shore to shore responsive still,
Its guardian she—the goddess, whose staid eye
Beams the dark azure of the doubtful dawn.
Her tresses, like a flood of soften'd light,
Through clouds imbrown'd, in waving circles play.
Warm on her cheek sits beauty's brightest rose:
Of high demeanour, stately, shedding grace
With every motion. Full her rising chest;
And new ideas, from her finish'd shape,
Charm'd Sculpture taking might improve her art.
Such the fair guardian of an isle that boasts,
Profuse as vernal blooms, the fairest dames.
High shining on the promontory's brow,
Awaiting me, she stood; with hope inflam'd,
By my mixt spirit burning in her sons,
To firm, to polish, and exalt the state.

"The native Genii, round her, radiant smil'd.
Courage, of soft deportment, aspect calm,
Unboasting, suffering long, and, till provok'd,
As mild and harmless as the sporting child;
But, on just reason, once his fury rous'd,
No lion springs more eager to his prey:
Blood is a pastime; and his heart, elate,
Knows no depressing fear. That Virtue known
By the relenting look, whose equal heart
For others feels, as for another self:
Of various name, as various objects wake,
Warm into action, the kind sense within;
Whether the blameless poor, the nobly maim'd,
The lost to reason, the declin'd in life,
The helpless young that kiss no mother's hand,
And the grey second infancy of age,
She gives in public families to live,
A sight to gladden Heaven! whether she stands
Fair beckoning at the hospitable gate,
And bids the stranger take repose and joy;
Whether, to solace honest labour, she
Rejoices those that make the land rejoice;
Or whether to philosophy, and arts,
(At once the basis and the finish'd pride
Of government and life,) she spreads her hand;
Nor knows her gift profuse, nor seems to know,
Doubling her bounty, that she gives at all.
Justice to these her awful presence join'd,
The mother of the state! No low revenge,
No turbid passions in her breast ferment:
Tender, serene, compassionate of vice,
As the last woe that can afflict mankind.
She punishment awards; yet of the good
More piteous still, and of the suffering whole,
Awards it firm. So fair her just decree,
That, in his judging peers, each on himself
Pronounces his own doom. O, happy land!
Where reigns alone this justice of the free!
'Mid the bright groupe Sincerity his front,
Diffusive, rear'd; his pure untroubled eye

The fount of truth. The thoughtful Power, apart,
Now, pensive, cast on Earth his fix'd regard,
Now, touch'd celestial, lanch'd it on the sky.
The Genius he whence Britain shines supreme,
The land of light, and rectitude of mind.
He too the fire of fancy feeds intense,
With all the train of passions thence deriv'd:
Not kindling quick, a noisy transient blaze,
But gradual, silent, lasting, and profound.
Near him Retirement, pointing to the shade,
And Independence stood: the generous pair,
That simple life, the quiet-whispering grove,
And the still raptures of the free-born soul
To cates prefer, by virtue bought, not earn'd,
Proudly prefer them to the servile pomps,
And to the heart-embitter'd joys of slaves.
Or should the latter, to the public scene
Demanded, quit his sylvan friend awhile;
Nought can his firmness shake, nothing seduce
His zeal, still active for the common-weal;
Nor stormy tyrants, nor corruption's tools,
Foul ministers, dark-working by the force
Of secret-sapping gold. All their vile arts,
Their shameful honours, their perfidious gifts,
He greatly scorns; and, if he must betray
His plunder'd country, or his power resign,
A moment's parley were eternal shame:
Illustrious into private life again,
From dirty levees he unstain'd ascends,
And firm in senates stands the patriot's ground,
Or draws new vigour in the peaceful shade.
Aloof the bashful Virtue hover'd coy,
Proving by sweet distrust distrusted worth.
Rough Labour clos'd the train; and in his hand,
Rude, callous, sinew-swell'd, and black with toil,
Came manly Indignation. Sour he seems,
And more than seems, by lawful pride assail'd;
Yet kind at heart, and just, and generous, there
No vengeance lurks, no pale insidious gall:
Ev'n in the very luxury of rage,
He softening can forgive a gallant foe;
The nerve, support, and glory of the land!
Nor be Religion, rational and free,
Here pass'd in silence; whose enraptur'd eye
Sees Heaven with Earth connected, human things
Link'd to divine: who not from servile fear,
By rites for some weak tyrant incense fit,
The god of Love adores, but from a heart
Effusing gladness, into pleasing awe
That now astonish'd swells, now in a calm
Of fearless confidence that smiles serene;
That lives devotion, one continual hymn, [most
And then most grateful, when Heaven's bounty
Is right enjoy'd. This ever-cheerful power

O'er Albion was to rise. Each cheering each,
And, like the circling planets from the Sun,
All borrowing beams from me, a heighten'd zeal
Impatient fir'd us to commence our toils,
Or pleasures rather. Long the pungent time
Pass'd not in mutual hails; but, through the land
Darting our light, we shone the fogs away.

"The Virtues conquer with a single look.
Such grace, such beauty, such victorious light,
Live in their presence, stream in every glance,
That the soul won, enamour'd, and refin'd,
Grows their own image, pure ethereal flame.
Hence the foul demons, that oppose our reign,
Would still from us deluded mortals wrap;

Or in gross shades they drown the visual ray,
 Or by the fogs of prejudice, where mix
 Falsehood and truth confounded, foil the sense
 With vain refracted images of bliss.
 But chief around the court of flatter'd kings
 They roll the dusky rampart, wall o'er wall
 Of darkness pile, and with their thickest shade
 Secure the throne. No savage Alp, the den
 Of wolves, and bears, and monstrous things obscene,
 That vex the swain, and waste the country round,
 Protected lies beneath a deeper cloud.
 Yet there we sometimes send a searching ray.
 As, at the sacred opening of the morn,
 The prowling race retire; so, pierc'd severe,
 Before our potent blaze these demons fly,
 And all their works dissolve. — The whisper'd tale,
 That, like the fabling Nile, no fountain knows;
 Fair-fac'd deceit, whose wily conscious eye
 Ne'er looks direct. The tongue that licks the dust,
 But, when it safely dares, as prompt to sting:
 Smooth crocodile destruction, whose fell tears
 Ensnare. The Janus face of courtly pride;
 One to superiors heaves submissive eyes,
 On hapless worth the other scowls disdain.
 Cheeks that for some weak tenderness, alone,
 Some virtuous slip, can wear a blush. The laugh
 Prophane, when midnight howls disclose the heart,
 At starving virtue, and at virtue's fools.
 Determin'd to be broke, the plighted faith:
 Nay more, the godless oath that knows no ties.
 Soft-buzzing slander; silky moths, that eat
 An honest name. The harpy hand, and maw,
 Of avaricious Luxury; who makes
 The throne his shelter, venal laws his fort,
 And, by his service, who betrays his king.

To present grandeur how my Britain rose.

“ Bold were those Britons, who, the careless sons
 Of Nature, roam'd the forest-bounds, at once
 Their verdant city, high-embowering fane,
 And the gay circle of their woodland wars:
 For by the Druid † taught, that death but shifts
 The vital scene, they that prime fear despis'd;
 And, prone to rush on steel, disdain'd to spare
 An ill-sav'd life that must again return.
 Erect from Nature's hand, by tyrant force,
 And still more tyrant custom, unsubdued,
 Man knows no master save creating Heaven,
 Or such as choice or common good ordain.
 This general sense, with which the nations I
 Promiscuous fire, in Britons burn'd intense,
 Of future times prophetic. Witness, Rome,
 Who saw'st thy Cæsar, from the naked land,
 Whose only forts was British hearts, repell'd,
 To seek Pharsalian wreaths. Witness, the toil,
 The blood of ages, bootless to secure,
 Beneath an empire's ‡ yoke, a stubborn isle,
 Disputed hard, and never quite subdued. [scorn'd

‡ The Roman empire being miserably torn by the northern nations, Britain was for ever abandoned by the Romans in the year 426 or 427.

§ The Britons applying to Ætius, the Roman general, for assistance, thus expressed their miserable condition: — “ We know not which way to turn us. The barbarians drive us to sea, and the sea forces us back to the barbarians; between which we have only the choice of two deaths, either to be swallowed up by the waves, or butchered by the sword.”

|| King of the Silures, famous for his great exploits, and accounted the best general Great Britain had ever produced. The Silures were esteemed the bravest and most powerful of all the Britons: they inhabited Herefordshire, Radnorshire, Brecknockshire, Monmouthshire, and Glamorganshire.

¶ Queen of the Iceni: her story is well known.

** It is certain, that an opinion was fixed and general among them (the Goths) that death was but the entrance into another life; that all men who lived lazy and inactive lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures usual to such places, and there for ever grovelled in endless stench and misery. On the contrary, all who gave themselves to warlike actions and enterprises, to the conquest of their neighbours and the slaughter of their enemies, and died in battle, or of violent deaths upon bold adventures or resolutions, went immediately to the vast hall or palace of Odin, their god of war, who eternally kept open house for all such guests, where they were entertained at infinite tables, in perpetual feasts and

A right to feast, and drain immortal bowls

 The genial uproar of those shades, who fall
 In desperate fight, or by some brave attempt;
 And though more polish'd times the martial creed
 Disown, yet still the fearless habit lives.
 Nor were the surly gifts of war their all.
 Wisdom was likewise theirs, indulgent laws,
 The calm gradations of art-nursing peace,
 And matchless orders, the deep basis still
 On which ascends my British reign. Untam'd
 To the refining subtleties of slaves,
 They brought an happy government along,
 Form'd by that freedom, which, with secret voice,
 Impartial Nature teaches all her sons,
 And which of old through the whole Scythian mass
 I strong inspir'd. Monarchical their state,
 But prudently confin'd, and mingled wise
 Of each harmonious power: only, too much
 Imperious war into their rule infus'd,
 Prevail'd their general-king, and chieftain-thanes.

"In many a field, by civil fury stain'd,
 Bled the discordant heptarchy*; and long
 (Educing good from ill) the battle groan'd;
 Ere, blood-cemented, Anglo-Saxons saw
 Egbert† and Peace on one united throne.

"No sooner dawn'd the fair disclosing calm
 Of brighter days, when, lo! the North anew,
 With stormy nations black, on England pour'd
 Woes the severest e'er a people felt.
 The Danish raven‡, lur'd by annual prey,
 Hung o'er the land incessant. Fleet on fleet
 Of barbarous pirates unremitting tore
 The miserable coast. Before them stalk'd,
 Far-seen, the demon of devouring flame;
 Rapine, and murder, all with blood besmear'd,
 Without or ear, or eye, or feeling heart;
 While close behind them march'd the sallow power
 Of desolating famine, who delights
 In grass-grown cities, and in desert fields;
 And purple-spotted pestilence, by whom
 Ev'n friendship scar'd, in sickening horror sinks
 Each social sense and tenderness of life.
 Fixing at last, the sanguinary race
 Spread, from the Humber's loud-resounding shore,
 To where the Thames devolves his gentle maze,
 And with superior arm the Saxon aw'd.
 But superstition first, and monkish dreams,
 And monk-directed cloister-seeking kings,
 Had ate away his vigour, ate away
 His edge of courage, and depress'd the soul
 Of conquering freedom, which he once respir'd.

"Compendious war! (on Britain's glory bent,
 So Fate ordain'd) in that decisive day,
 The haughty Norman seiz'd at once an isle,
 From which, through many a century, in vain,
 The Roman, Saxon, Dane, had toil'd and bled.
 Of Gothic nations this the final burst;
 And, mix'd with the genius of these people all,
 These virtues mix'd in one exalted stream,
 Here the rich tide of English blood grew full.

"Awhile my spirit slept; the land awhile,
 Affrighted, droop'd beneath despotic rage.
 Instead of Edward's‡ equal gentle laws,
 The furious victor's partial will prevail'd.
 All prostrate lay; and, in the secret shade,
 Deep-stung, but fearful, Indignation gnash'd
 His teeth. Of freedom, property, despoil'd,
 And of their bulwark, arms; with castles crush'd,
 With ruffians quarter'd o'er the bridled land;

And ventilated states renew their bloom.

"Though with the temper'd monarchy here mix'd
Aristocratic sway, the people still,
Flatter'd by this or that, as interest lean'd,
No full perfection knew. For me reserv'd,

Had work'd that general liberty, that soul, [left
Which generous nature breathes, and which, when
By me to bondage was corrupted Rome,
I through the northern nations wide diffus'd.
Hence many a people, fierce with freedom, rush'd
From the rude iron regions of the North,
To Libyan deserts, swarm protruding swarm,
And pour'd new spirit through a slavish world.
Yet, o'er these Gothic states, the king and chiefs
Retain'd the high prerogative of war,
And with enormous property engross'd
The mingled power. But on Britannia's shore
Now present, I to raise my reign began
By raising the democracy, the third disclos'd
And broadest bulwark of the guarded state.
Then was the full, the perfect plan disclos'd
Of Britain's matchless constitution, mixt
Of mutual checking and supporting powers,

Neglecting faithful worth for fawning slaves;
Proudly regardless of their people's complaints,
And poorly passive of insulting foes;
Double, not prudent, obstinate, not firm,
Their mercy fear, necessity their faith;
Instead of generous fire, presumptuous, hot,
Rash to resolve, and slothful to perform;

† The Commons are generally thought to have been first represented in parliament towards the end of Henry the Third's reign. To a parliament called in the year 1264, each county was ordered to send four knights, as representatives of their respective shires; and to a parliament called in the year following, each county was ordered to send, as their representatives, two knights, and each city and borough as many citizens and burgesses. Till then, history makes no mention of them; whence a very strong argument may be drawn, to fix the original of the House of Commons to that era.

By counsels weak and wicked, easy rous'd
To paltry schemes of absolute command,
To seek their splendour in their sure disgrace,
And in a broken ruin'd people wealth:
When such o'ercast the state, no bond of love,
No heart, no soul, no unity, no nerve,
Combin'd the loose disjointed public, lost
To fame abroad, to happiness at home.

"But when an Edward and an Henry * breath'd
Through the charm'd whole one all-exerting soul:
Drawn sympathetic from his dark retreat,
When wide-attracted merit round them glow'd:
When counsels just, extensive, generous, firm,
Amid the maze of state, determin'd kept
Some ruling point in view: when, on the stock
Of public good and glory grafted, spread
Their palms, their laurels; or, if thence they stray'd,
Swift to return, and patient of restraint:
When legal state, pre-eminence of place,
They scorn'd to deem pre-eminence of ease,
To be luxurious drones, that only rob
The busy hive: as in distinction, power,
Indulgence, honour, and advantage, first;
When they too claim'd in virtue, danger, toil,
Superior rank; with equal hand, prepar'd
To guard the subject, and to quell the foe:
When such with me their vital influence shed,
No mutter'd grievance, hopeless sigh, was heard;
No foul distrust through wary senates ran,
Confin'd their bounty, and their ardour quench'd:
On aid, unquestion'd, liberal aid was given:
Safe in their conduct, by their valour fir'd,
Fond where they led victorious armies rush'd;

And for the future to secure their sway.

“ This then the purpose of my mildest sons.
But man is blind. A nation once inflam'd
(Chief, should the breath of factious fury blow,
With the wild rage of mad enthusiast swell'd)
Not easy cools again. From breast to breast,
From eye to eye, the kindling passions mix
In heighten'd blaze ; and, ever wise and just,
High Heaven to gracious ends directs the storm.
Thus, in one conflagration Britain wrapt,
And by confusion's lawless sons despoil'd, {ground,
King, lords, and commons, thundering to the
Successive, rush'd — Lo ! from their ashes rose,

Of private life, lay by those flames dissolv'd ;
And, from the wasteful, the luxurious king ||,
Was purchas'd that which taught the young to bend. ¶

Stronger restor'd, the commons tax'd the whole,
And built on that eternal rock their power.
The crown, of its hereditary wealth
Despoil'd, on senates more dependent grew,
And they more frequent, more assur'd. Yet liv'd,
And in full vigour spread that bitter root,

Oppos'd ferocious, when they touch themselves.
This wild delusive cant ; the rash cabal
Of hungry courtiers, ravenous for prey ;
The bigot, restless in a double chain
To bind anew the land ; the constant need
Of finding faithless means, of shifting forms,
And flattering senates, to supply his waste ;
These tore some moments from the careless prince,
And in his breast awak'd the kindred plan.
By dangerous softness long he min'd his way ;
By subtle arts, dissimulation deep ;
By sharing what corruption shower'd, profuse ;
By breathing wide the gay licentious plague,
And pleasing manners, fitted to deceive.

“ At last subsided the delirious joy,
On whose high billow, from the saintly reign
The nation drove too far. A pension'd king,
Against his country brib'd by Gallic gold ;
The port *, pernicious sold, the Scylla since,
And fell Charybdis of the British seas ;
Freedom attack'd abroad †, with surer blow
To cut it off at home ; the saviour league ‡
Of Europe broke ; the progress ev'n advanc'd

Such seas of blood and treasure Britain cost ;
The millions, by a generous people given,
Or squander'd vile, or to corrupt, disgrace,
And awe the land with forces not their own ||,
Employ'd ; the darling church herself betray'd ;
All these, broad-glaring, op'd the general eye,
And wak'd my spirit, the resisting soul.

“ Mild was, at first, and half asham'd, the check

Of Smithfield lighten'd in his eyes anew.
Yet silence reign'd. Each on another scowl'd

 See! wide alive, the foaming Channel † bright

 To drive him from the cordial face of friend;
 Or fierce to strike him at the midnight hour,

 To dare the keenest eye of open day.
 What though no glory to control the laws,
 And make injurious will their only rule,

Here the Prince called a council of war. It is not easy to imagine what a glorious show the fleet made. Five or six hundred ships in so narrow a channel, and both the English and French shores covered with numberless spectators, are no common sight. For my part, who was then on board the fleet, I own it struck me extremely.”

‡ The Prince placed himself in the main body, carrying a flag with English colours, and their highnesses' arms surrounded with this motto: “The Protestant Religion and the Liberties of England;” and underneath the motto of the House of Nassau, Je Maintiendrai, I will maintain. — Rapin.

 While (still superior bliss!) the dark abrupt
 Is kindly barr'd, the precipice of ill.
 Oh, luxury divine! O, poor to this,
 Ye giddy glories of despotic thrones!
 By this, by this indeed, is imag'd Heaven,
 By boundless good, without the power of ill.

“And now behold! exalted as the cope
 That swells immense o'er many-peopled earth,
 And like it free, my fabric stands complete,
 The Palace of the Laws. To the four Heavens
 Four gates impartial thrown, unceasing crowds,
 With kings themselves the hearty peasant mix'd
 Pour urgent in. And though to different ranks
 Responsive place belongs, yet equal spreads
 The sheltering roof o'er all; while plenty flows,
 And glad contentment echoes round the whole.
 Ye floods, descend! ye winds, confirming, blow!
 Nor outward tempest, nor corrosive time,
 Nought but the felon undermining hand
 Of dark corruption, can its frame dissolve,
 And lay the toil of ages in the dust.”

THE PROSPECT:

BEING THE FIFTH PART OF

LIBERTY,

A POEM.

The Contents of Part V.

The author addresses the goddess of Liberty, marking the happiness and grandeur of Great Britain, as arising from her influence. She resumes her discourse, and points out the chief virtues which are necessary to maintain her establishment there. Recommends, as its last ornament and finishing, sciences, fine arts, and public works. The encouragement of these urged from the example of France, though under a despotic government. The whole concludes with a prospect of future times, given by the goddess of Liberty: this described by the author, as it passes in vision before him.

HÆRÆ interposing, as the goddess paus'd!—

“Oh, blest Britannia! in thy presence blest,
 Thou guardian of mankind! whence spring, alone,
 All human grandeur, happiness, and fame:
 For toil, by thee protected, feels no pain;
 The poor man's lot with milk and honey flows;
 And, gilded with thy rays, ev'n death looks gay.
 Let other lands the potent blessings boast
 Of more exalting suns. Let Asia's woods,
 Untended, yield the vegetable fleece:

And let the little insect-artist form,
 On higher life intent, its silken tomb.
 Let wondering rocks, in radiant birth, disclose
 The various-tinctur'd children of the Sun.
 From the prone beam let more delicious fruits
 A flavour drink, that in one piercing taste
 Bids each combine. Let Gallic vineyards burst
 With floods of joy; with mild balsamic juice
 The Tuscan olive. Let Arabia breathe
 Her spicy gales, her vital gums distil.
 Turbid with gold let southern rivers flow:
 And orient floods draw soft, o'er pearls, their maze.
 Let Afric vaunt her treasures; let Peru
 Deep in her bowels her own ruin breed,
 The yellow traitor that her bliss betray'd, —
 Unequall'd bliss! — and to unequall'd rage!
 Yet nor the gorgeous East, nor golden South,
 Nor, in full prime, that new-discover'd world,
 Where flames the falling day, in wealth and praise,
 Shall with Britannia vie, while, goddess, she
 Derives her praise from thee, her matchless charms,
 Her hearty fruits the hand of freedom own,
 And, warm with culture, her thick-clustering fields
 Prolific teem. Eternal verdure crowns
 Her meads; her gardens smile eternal spring.
 She gives the hunter-horse, unquell'd by toil,
 Ardent, to rush into the rapid chase:
 She, whitening o'er her downs, diffusive, pours
 Unnumber'd flocks: she weaves the fleecy robe,
 That wraps the nations: she to lusty droves,
 The richest pasture spreads; and, herra, deep-wave
 Autumnal seas of pleasing plenty round.
 These her delights: and by no baneful herb,
 No darting tiger, no grim lion's glare,
 No fierce-descending wolf, no serpent roll'd
 In spires immense progressive o'er the land,
 Disturb'd. Enlivening these, add cities, full
 Of wealth, of trade, of cheerful toiling crowds;
 Add thriving towns; add villages and farms,
 Innumerable sow'd along the lively vale,
 Where bold unrivall'd peasants happy dwell:
 Add ancient seats, with venerable oaks
 Embosom'd high, while kindred floods below
 Wind through the mead; and those of modern
 hand,

More pompous, add, that splendid shine afar.
 Need I her limpid lakes, her rivers name,
 Where swarm the finny race? Thee, chief, O
 Thames!

On whose each tide, glad with returning sails,
 Flows in the mingled harvest of mankind?
 And thee, thou Severn, whose prodigious swell,
 And waves, resounding, imitate the main?
 Why need I name her deep capacious ports,
 That point around the world? and why her seas?
 All ocean is her own, and every land
 To whom her ruling thunder ocean bears.
 She too the mineral feeds: th' obedient lead,
 The warlike iron, nor the peaceful less,
 Forming of life art-civiliz'd the bond;
 And what the Tyrian merchant sought of old*,
 Not dreaming then of Britain's brighter fame.
 She rears to freedom an undaunted race:
 Compatriot, zealous, hospitable, kind,
 Hers the warm Cambrian: hers the lofty Scot,
 To hardship tam'd, active in arts and arms,
 Fir'd with a restless, an impatient flame,
 That leads him raptur'd where ambition calls:

* Tin.

And English merit hers; where meet, combin'd,
 Whate'er high fancy, sound judicious thought,
 An ample generous heart, undrooping soul,
 And firm tenacious valour can bestow.
 Great nurse of fruits, of flocks, of commerce, she!
 Great nurse of men! By thee, O goddess, taught,
 Her old renown I trace, disclose her source
 Of wealth, of grandeur, and to Britons sing
 A strain the Muses never touch'd before.

"But how shall this thy mighty kingdom stand?
 On what unyielding base? how finish'd shine?"

At this her eye, collecting all its fire,
 Beam'd more than human; and her awful voice,
 Majestic, thus she rais'd — "To Britons bear
 This closing strain, and with intenser note
 Loud let it sound in their awaken'd ear.

"On virtue can alone my kingdom stand.
 On public virtue, every virtue join'd.
 For, lost this social cement of mankind,
 The greatest empires, by scarce felt degrees,
 Will moulder soft away, till, tottering loose,
 They prone at last to total ruin rush.
 Unblest by virtue, government a league
 Becomes, a circling junto of the great,
 To rob by law; religion mild a yoke
 To tame the stooping soul, a trick of state
 To mask their rapine, and to share the prey.
 What are without it senates, save a face
 Of consultation deep and reason free,
 While the determin'd voice and heart are sold?
 What boasted freedom, save a sounding name?
 And what election, but a market vile
 Of slaves self-barter'd? Virtue! without thee,
 There is no ruling eye, no nerve, in states;
 War has no vigour, and no safety peace:
 Ev'n justice warps to party, laws oppress,
 Wide through the land their weak protection fails,
 First broke the balance, and then scorn'd the sword.
 Thus nations sink, society dissolves;
 Rapine and guile and violence break loose,
 Everting life, and turning love to gall;
 Man hates the face of man, and Indian woods
 And Libya's hissing sands to him are tame.

"By those three virtues be the frame sustain'd
 Of British Freedom: independent life;
 Integrity in office; and, o'er all
 Supreme, a passion for the common-weal. [gift,

"Hail! Independence, hail! Heaven's next best
 To that of life and an immortal soul!
 The life of life! that to the banquet high
 And sober meal gives taste; to the bow'd roof
 Fair-dream'd repose, and to the cottage charms
 Of public freedom, hail, thou secret source!
 Whose streams, from every quarter confluent, form
 My better Nile, that nurses human life.
 By rills from thee deduc'd, irriguous, fed,
 The private field looks gay, with Nature's wealth
 Abundant flows, and blooms with each delight
 That Nature craves. Its happy master there,
 The only freeman, walks his pleasing round:
 Sweet-featur'd Peace attending; fearless Truth;
 Firm Resolution; Goodness, blessing all
 That can rejoice; Contentment, surest friend;
 And, still fresh stores from Nature's book deriv'd,
 Philosophy, companion ever new.
 These cheer his rural, and sustain or fire,
 When into action call'd, his busy hours.
 Meantime true judging moderate desires,
 Economy and taste, combin'd, direct
 His clear affairs, and from debauching fiends

Secure his little kingdom. Nor can those Whom fortune heaps, without these virtues, reach
That truce with pain, that animated ease,
That self-enjoyment springing from within ;
That Independence, active, or retir'd,
Which make the soundest bliss of man below :
But, lost beneath the rubbish of their means,
And drain'd by wants to nature all unknown,
A wandering, tasteless, gaily wretched train,
Though rich, are beggars, and though noble, slaves.

“ Lo ! damn'd to wealth, at what a gross expense

They purchase disappointment, pain, and shame,
Instead of hearty hospitable cheer.
See ! how the hall with brutal riot flows ;
While in the foaming flood, fermenting, steep'd,
The country maddens into party-rage.
Mark ! those disgraceful piles of wood and stone ;
Those parks and gardens, where, his haunts betrimm'd,

And Nature by presumptuous art oppress'd,
The woodland genius mourns. See ! the full board
That streams disgust, and bowls that give no joy :
No truth invited there, to feed the mind ;
Nor wit, the wine rejoicing reason quaffs.
Hark ! how the dome with insolence resounds,
With those retain'd by vanity to scare
Repose and friends. To tyrant fashion mark
The costly worship paid, to the broad gaze
Of fools. From still delusive day to day,
Led an eternal round of lying hope,
See ! self-abandon'd, how they roam adrift,
Dash'd o'er the town, a miserable wreck !
Then to adorn some warbling eunuch turn'd,
With Midas' ears they crowd ; or to the buzz
Of masquerade unblushing ; or, to show
Their scorn of Nature, at the tragic scene
They mirthful sit, or prove the comic true.
But, chief, behold ! around the rattling board,
The civil robbers rang'd ; and ev'n the fair,
The tender fair, each sweetness laid aside,
As fierce for plunder as all-licens'd troops
In some sack'd city. Thus dissolv'd their wealth,
Without one generous luxury dissolv'd,
Or quarter'd on it many a needless want,
At the throng'd levee bends the venal tribe :
With fair but faithless smiles each varnish'd o'er,
Each smooth as those that mutually deceive,
And for their falsehood each despising each ;
Till shook their patron by the wintry winds,
Wide flies the wither'd shower, and leaves him bare.
O, far superior Afric's sable sons,
By merchant pilfer'd, to these willing slaves !
And, rich, as unsqueez'd favourite, to them,
Is he who can his virtue boast alone !

“ Britons ! be firm ! — nor let corruption sly
Twine round your heart indissoluble chains !
The steel of Brutus burst the grosser bonds
By Cæsar cast o'er Rome ; but still remain'd
The soft enchanting fetters of the mind,
And other Cæsars rose. Determin'd, hold
Your independence ! for, that once destroy'd,
Unfounded, freedom is a morning dream,
That flits aerial from the spreading eye.

“ Forbid it, Heaven ! that ever I need urge
Integrity in office on my sons !
Inculcate common honour — not to rob —
And whom ? — The gracious, the confiding hand,
That lavishly rewards ; the toiling poor,
Whose cup with many a bitter drop is mixt :

The guardian public ; every face they see,
And every friend ; nay, in effect, themselves.
As in familiar life, the villain's fate
Admits no cure ; so, when a desperate age
At this arrives, I the devoted race
Indignant spurn, and hopeless soar away.

“ But, ah, too little known to modern times !
Be not the noblest passion past unsung ;
That ray peculiar from unbounded love
Effus'd, which kindles the heroic soul :
Devotion to the public. Glorious flame !
Celestial ardour ! in what unknown worlds,
Profusely scatter'd through the blue immense,
Hast thou been blessing myriads, since in Rome,
Old virtuous Rome, so many deathless names
From thee their lustre drew ? since, taught by thee,
Their poverty put splendour to the blush,
Pain grew luxurious, and ev'n death delight ?
O, wilt thou ne'er, in thy long period, look,
With blaze direct, on this my last retreat ?

“ 'Tis not enough, from self right understood
Reflected, that thy rays inflame the heart :
Though Virtue not disdains appeals to self,
Dreads not the trial : all her joys are true,
Nor is there any real joy save hers.
Far less the tepid, the declaiming race,
Foes to corruption, to its wages friends,
Or those whom private passions for awhile,
Beneath my standard list, can they suffice
To raise and fix the glory of my reign ?

“ An active flood of universal love
Must swell the breast. First, in effusion wide,
The restless spirit roves creation round,
And seizes every being : stronger then
It tends to life, whate'er the kindred search
Of bliss allies : then, more collected still,
It urges human-kind : a passion grown,
At last, the central parent-public calls
Its utmost effort forth, awakes each sense,
The comely, grand, and tender. Without this,
This awful pant, shook from sublimer powers
Than those of self, this heaven-infus'd delight,
This moral gravitation, rushing prone
To press the public good, my system soon,
Traverse, to several selfish centres drawn,
Will reel to ruin : while for ever shut
Stand the bright portals of desponding Fame.

“ From sordid self shoot up no shining deeds,
None of those ancient lights, that gladden Earth,
Give grace to being, and arouse the brave
To just ambition, virtue's quickening fire !
Life tedious grows, an idly-bustling round,
Fill'd up with actions animal and mean,
A dull gazette ! Th' impatient reader scorns
The poor historic page ; till kindly comes
Oblivion, and redeems a people's shame.
Not so the times, when emulation-stung,
Greece shone in genius, science, and in arts,
And Rome in virtues dreadful to be told !
To live was glory then ! and charm'd mankind
Through the deep periods of devolving time,
Those, raptur'd, copy ! these, astonish'd, read.

“ True, a corrupted state, with every vice
And every meanness foul, this passion damps.
Who can, unshock'd, behold the cruel eye ?
The pale inveigling smile ? the ruffian front ?
The wretch abandon'd to relentless self,
Equally vile if miser or profuse ?
Powers not of God, assiduous to corrupt ?
The fell deputed tyrant, who devours

The poor and weak, at distance from redress ?
 Delirious faction bellowing loud my name ?
 The false fair-seeming patriot's hollow boast ?
 A race resolv'd on bondage, fierce for chains,
 Thy sacred rights a merchandise alone
 Esteeming, and to work their feeder's will
 By deeds, a horror to mankind, prepar'd,
 As were the drags of Romulus of old ?
 Who these indeed can undetesting see ! —
 But who unpitying ? To the generous eye
 Distress is virtue ! and, though self-betray'd,
 A people struggling with their fate must rouse
 The hero's throb. Nor can a land, at once,
 Be lost to virtue quite. How glorious then !
 'Tis luxury for gods ! to save the good,
 Protect the feeble, dash bold vice aside,
 Repress the wicked, and restore the frail.
 Posterity, besides, the young are pure,
 And sons may tinge their father's cheek with shame.
 " Should then the times arrive (which Heaven avert !)

That Britons bend unnerv'd, not by the force
 Of arms, more generous, and more manly, quell'd,
 But by corruption's soul-dejecting arts,
 Arts impudent ! and gross ! by their own gold,
 In part bestow'd, to bribe them to give all.
 With party raging, or immers'd in sloth,
 Should they Britannia's well-fought laurels yield
 To sily-conquering Gaul ; ev'n from her brow
 Let her own naval oak be basely torn,
 Or such as tremble at the stiffening gale,
 And nerveless sink while others sing rejoic'd.
 Or (darker prospect ! scarce one gleam behind
 Disclosing) should the broad corruptive plague
 Breathe from the city to the farthest hut,
 That sits serene within the forest shade ;
 Let fever'd people fire, inflame their wants,
 And their luxurious thirst, so gathering rage,
 That, were a buyer found, they stand prepar'd
 To sell their birthright for a cooling draught.
 Would shameless pens for plain corruption plead ;
 Let hir'd assassins of the commonweal !
 Seem'd the declaiming rant of Greece and Rome,
 Should public virtue grow the public scoff,
 Still private, failing, staggers through the land :
 Still round the city loose mechanic want,
 Fire-prowling nightly, makes the cheerful haunts
 Of men more hideous than Numidian wilds,
 Or from its fury sleeps the vale in peace ;
 And murders, horrors, perjuries abound :
 Say, till to lowest deeds the highest stoop ;
 Let the rich, like starving wretches, thirst for gold ;
 And those, on whom the vernal showers of Heaven
 All-bounteous fall, and that prime lot bestow,
 No power to live to Nature and themselves,
 In sick attendance wear their anxious days,
 With fortune, joyless, and with honours, mean.
 Meantime, perhaps, profusion flows around,
 The waste of war, without the works of peace ;
 No mark of millions, in the gulph absorpt
 Of uncreating vice, none but the rage
 Of rous'd corruption still demanding more.
 That very portion, which (by faithful skill

* Lord Molesworth, in his account of Denmark, says : — " It is observed, that in limited monarchies and commonwealths, a neighbourhood to the seat of the government is advantageous to the subjects ;
 while the distant provinces are less thriving, and more liable to oppression."

Employ'd) might make the smiling public rear
 Her ornamented head, drill'd through the hands
 Of mercenary tools, serves but to nurse
 A locust band within, and in the bud
 Leaves starv'd each work of dignity and use.

" I paint the worst. But should these times arrive,
 If any nobler passion yet remain,
 Let all my sons all parties fling aside,
 Despise their nonsense, and together join ;
 Let worth and virtue, scorning low despair,
 Exerted full, from every quiver shine,
 Commix'd in heighten'd blaze. Light flash'd to light,

Moral, or intellectual, more intense
 By giving glows. As on pure Winter's eve,
 Gradual, the stars effulge ; fainter, at first,
 They, straggling, rise ; but when the radiant host,
 In thick profusion pour'd, shine out immense,
 Each casting vivid influence on each,
 From pole to pole a glittering deluge plays,
 And worlds above rejoice, and men below.

" But why to Britons this superfluous strain ? —
 Good-nature, honest truth ev'n somewhat blunt,
 Of crooked baseness an indignant scorn,
 A zeal unyielding in their country's cause,
 And ready bounty, wont to dwell with them —
 Nor only wont — Wide o'er the land diffus'd,
 In many a blest retirement still they dwell.

" To softer prospect turn we now the view,
 To laurel'd science, arts, and public works,
 That lend my finish'd fabric comely pride,
 Grandeur, and grace. Of sullen genius be !
 Curs'd by the Muses ! by the Graces loath'd !
 Who deems beneath the public's high regard
 These last enlivening touches of my reign.
 However puff'd with power, and gorg'd with wealth,
 A nation be ; let trade enormous rise,
 Let East and South their mingled treasure pour,
 Till, swell'd impetuous, the corrupting flood
 Burst o'er the city, and devour the land :
 Yet these neglected, these recording arts,
 Wealth rots, a nuisance ; and, oblivious sunk,
 That nation must another Carthage lie.

If not by them, on monumental brass,
 On sculptur'd marble, on the deathless page,
 Imprest, renown had left no trace behind :
 In vain, to future times, the sage had thought,
 The legislator plann'd, the hero found
 A beauteous death, the patriot toil'd in vain.
 Th' awarders they of Fame's immortal wreath,
 They rouse ambition, they the mind exalt,
 Give great ideas, lovely forms infuse,
 Delight the general eye, and, drest by them,
 The moral Venus glows with double charms.

" Science, my close associate, still attends
 Where'er I go. Sometimes, in simple guise,
 She walks the furrow with the consul swain,
 Whispering unletter'd wisdom to the heart,
 Direct ; or, sometimes, in the pompous robe
 Of fancy drest, she charms Athenian wits,
 And a whole sapient city round her burns.
 Then o'er her brow Minerva's terrors nod ;
 With Xenophon, sometimes, in dire extremes,
 She breathes deliberate soul, and makes retreat †
 Unequall'd glory ; with the Theban sage,
 Epaminondas, first and best of men !

† The famous retreat of the Ten Thousand was chiefly conducted by Xenophon.

Sometimes she bids the deep-embattled host,
 Above the vulgar reach, resistless form'd,
 March to sure conquest — never gain'd before !*
 Nor on the treacherous seas of giddy state
 Unskilful she : when the triumphant tide
 Of high-swoln empire wears one boundless smile,
 And the gale tempts to new pursuits of fame,
 Sometimes, with Scipio, she collects her sail,
 And seeks the blissful shore of rural ease,
 Where, but th' Aonian maids, no syrens sing ;
 Or should the deep-brew'd tempest muttering rise,
 While rocks and shoals perfidious lurk around,
 With Tully she her wide reviving light
 To senates holds, a Catiline confounds,
 And saves awhile from Cæsar sinking Rome.
 Such the kind power, whose piercing eye dissolves
 Each mental fetter, and sets reason free ;
 For me inspiring an enlighten'd zeal,
 'The more tenacious as the more convinc'd
 How happy freemen, and how wretched slaves.
 To Britons not unknown, to Britons full
 The goddess spreads her stores, the secret soul
 That quickens trade, the breath unseen that wafts
 'To them the treasures of a balanc'd world.
 But finer arts (save what the Muse has sung
 In daring flight, above all modern wing)
 Neglected droop the head ; and public works,
 Broke by corruption into private gain,
 Not ornament, disgrace ; not serve, destroy.

“ Shall Britons, by their own joint wisdom rul'd
 Beneath one royal head, whose vital power
 Connects, enlivens, and exerts the whole ;
 In finer arts, and public works, shall they
 'To Gallia yield ? yield to a land that bends,
 Deprest, and broke, beneath the will of one ?
 Of one who, should th' unkingly thirst of gold,
 Of tyrant passions, or ambition, prompt,
 Calls locust armies o'er the blasted land :
 Drains from its thirsty bounds the springs of wealth,
 His own insatiate reservoir to fill :
 To the lone desert patriot merit frowns,
 Or into dungeons arts, when they, their chains,
 Indignant, bursting, for their nobler works
 All other licence scorn but Truth's and mine.
 Oh, shame to think ! shall Britons, in the field
 Unconquer'd still, the better laurel lose ?
 Ev'n in that monarch's † reign, who vainly dreamt,
 By giddy power, betray'd, and flatter'd pride,
 To grasp unbounded sway ; while, swarming round,
 His armies dar'd all Europe to the field ;
 To hostile hands while treasure flow'd profuse,
 And, that great source of treasure, subjects' blood,
 Inhuman squander'd, sicken'd every land ;
 From Britain, chief, while my superior sons,
 In vengeance rushing, dash'd his idle hopes,
 And bade his agonizing heart be low :
 Ev'n then, as in the golden calm of peace !
 What public works at home ! what arts arose !
 What various science shone ! what genius glow'd !

“ 'Tis not for me to paint, diffusive shot
 O'er fair extents of land, the shining road ;

* Epaminondas, after having beat the Lacedæmonians and their allies, in the battle of Leuctra, made an incursion at the head of a powerful army into Laconia. It was now six hundred years since the Dorians had possessed this country, and in all that time the face of an enemy had not been seen within their territories. — Plutarch in Agesilaus.

The flood-compelling arch ; the long canal*.
 Through mountains piercing, and uniting seas ;
 The dome resounding sweet with infant joy †,
 From famine sav'd, or cruel-handed shame,
 And that where valour counts his noble scars ;
 The land where social pleasure loves to dwell,
 Of the fierce demon, Gothic duel, freed ;
 The robber from his farthest forest chas'd ;
 The turbid city clear'd, and, by degrees,
 Into sure peace the best police refin'd,
 Magnificence, and grace, and decent joy.
 Let Gallic bards record, how honour'd arts,
 And science, by despotic bounty bless'd,
 At distance flourish'd from my parent-eye,
 Restoring ancient taste, how Boileau rose,
 How the big Roman soul shook, in Corneille,
 The trembling stage. In elegant Racine,
 How the more powerful, though more humble voice
 Of nature-painting Greece, resistless, breath'd
 The whole awaken'd heart. How Moliere's scene
 Chastis'd and regular, with well-judg'd wit,
 Not scatter'd wild, and native humour, grac'd,
 Was life itself. To public honours rais'd,
 How learning in warm seminaries spread ‡ ;
 And, more for glory than the small reward,
 How emulation strove. How their pure tongue
 Almost obtain'd what was deny'd their arms.
 From Rome, awhile, how Painting, courted long,
 With Poussin came : ancient design, that lifts
 A fairer front, and looks another soul.
 How the kind art §, that, of unvalued price,
 The fam'd and only picture, easy, gives,
 Refin'd her touch, and, through the shadow'd piece,
 All the live spirit of the painter pour'd.
 Coyest of arts, how Sculpture northward deign'd
 A look, and bade her Girardon arise.
 How lavish grandeur blaz'd ; the barren waste,
 Astonish'd, saw the sudden palace swell,
 And fountains spout amid its arid shades.
 For leagues, bright vistas opening to the view,
 How forests in majestic gardens smil'd.
 How menial arts, by their gay sisters taught,
 Wove the deep flow'r, the blooming foliage train'd
 In joyous figures o'er the silky lawn,
 The palace cheer'd, illum'd the story'd wall,
 And with the pencil vy'd the glowing loom. ¶

“ These laurels, Louis, by the droppings rais'd
 Of thy profusion, its dishonour'd shade, [brow ;
 And, green through future times, shall bind thy
 While the vain honours of perfidious war
 Wither abhor'd, or in oblivion lost.
 With what prevailing vigour had they shot,
 And stole a deeper root, by the full tide
 Of war-sunk millions fed ? Superior still,
 How had they branch'd luxuriant to the skies,
 In Britain planted, by the potent juice
 Of freedom swell'd ? Forc'd is the bloom of arts
 A false uncertain spring, when bounty gives,
 Weak without me, a transitory gleam.
 Fair shine the slippery days, enticing skies
 Of favour smile, and courtly breezes blow ;
 Till arts, betray'd, trust to the flattering air
 Their tender blossom : then malignant rise

¶ The tapestry of the Gobolins.

The blights of envy, of those insect-clouds,
That, blasting merit, often cover courts :
Say, should, perchance, some kind Mæcenas aid
The doubtful beamings of his prince's soul,
His wavering ardour fix, and unconfin'd
Diffuse his warm beneficence around ;
Yet death, at last, and wintry tyrants come,
Each sprig of genius killing at the root.
But when with me imperial bounty joins,
Wide o'er the public blows eternal Spring :
While mingled Autumn every harvest pours
Of every land ; whate'er invention, art,
Creating toil and Nature can produce."

Here ceas'd the goddess ; and her ardent wings,
Dipt in the colours of the heavenly bow,
Good waving radiance round, for sudden flight
Prepar'd, when thus, impatient, burst my prayer.
Oh, forming light of life ! O, better Sun !
Sun of mankind ! by whom the cloudy north,
Sublim'd, not envies Languedocian skies,
That, unstain'd ether all, diffusive smile :
*Then shall we call these ancient laurels ours ?
And when thy work complete ?*" Straight with her
hand,

Celestial red, she touch'd my darken'd eyes.
As at the touch of day the shades dissolve,
So quick, methought, the misty circle clear'd,
That dawns the dawn of being here below :
The future shone disclos'd, and, in long view,
Bright rising eras instant rush'd to light. [hold !

" They come ! great Goddess ! I the times believe times our fathers, in the bloody field,
Have earn'd so dear, and, not with less renown,
In the warm struggles of the Senate fight.
The times I see ! whose glory to supply,
For toiling ages, commerce round the world
Has wing'd unnumber'd sails, and from each land
Materials heap'd, that, well-employ'd, with Rome
Fight vie our grandeur, and with Greece our art.

" Lo ! princes I behold ! contriving still,
And still conducting firm some brave design ;
Kings ! that the narrow joyless circle scorn,
Burst the blockade of false designing men,
Of treacherous smiles, of adulation fell,
And of the blinding clouds around them thrown :
Their court rejoicing millions ; worth alone,
And virtue dear to them ; their best delight,
In just proportion, to give general joy :
Their jealous care thy kingdom to maintain ;
The public glory theirs ; unsparing love
Their endless treasure ; and their deeds their praise.
With thee they work. Nought can resist your force :
Life feels it quickening in her dark retreats ;
Strong spread the blooms of genius, science, art ;
His bashful bounds disclosing merit breaks ;
And, big with fruits of glory, virtue blows
Expansive o'er the land. Another race
Of generous youth, of patriot-sires, I see !
Not those vain insects fluttering in the blaze
Of court, and ball, and play ; those venal souls,
Corruption's veteran unrelenting bands,
That, to their vices slaves, can ne'er be free.

" I see the fountain's purg'd ; whence life derives
A clear or turbid flow ; see the young mind
Not fed impure by chance, by flattery fool'd.
Or by scholastic jargon bloated proud,
But fill'd and nourish'd by the light of truth.
Then, beam'd through fancy the refining ray,
And pouring on the heart, the passions feel
At once informing light and moving flame ;

Till moral, public, graceful action crowns
The whole. Behold ! the fair contention glows,
In all that mind or body can adorn,
And form to life. Instead of barren heads,
Barbarian pedants, wrangling sons of pride,
And truth-perplexing metaphysic wits,
Men, patriots, chiefs, and citizens are form'd.

" Lo ! Justice, like the liberal light of Heaven,
Unpurchas'd shines on all, and from her beam,
Appalling guilt, retire the savage crew,
That prowl amid the darkness they themselves
Have thrown around the laws. Oppression grieves :
See ! how her legal furies bite the lip,
While Yorks and Talbots their deep snares detect,
And seize swift justice through the clouds they raise.

" See ! social Labour lifts his guarded head,
And men not yield to government in vain.
From the sure land is rooted ruffian force,
And, the lewd nurse of villains, idle waste ; [bowl,
Lo ! raz'd their haunts, down dash'd their maddening
A nation's poison ! beauteous order reigns !
Manly submission, unimposing toil,
Trade without guile, civility that marks
From the foul herd of brutal slaves thy sons,
And fearless peace. Or should affronting war
To slow but dreadful vengeance rouse the just,
Unfailing fields of freemen I behold !

That know, with their own proper arm, to guard
Their own blest isle against a leaguering world.
Despairing Gaul her boiling youth restrains,
Dissolv'd her dream of universal sway :
The winds and seas are Britain's wide domain ;
And not a sail, but by permission, spreads.

" Lo ! swarming southward on rejoicing sons,
Gay colonies extend ; the calm retreat
Of undeserv'd distress, the better home
Of those whom bigots chase from foreign lands,
Not built on rapine, servitude, and woe,
And in their turn some petty tyrant's prey ;
But, bound by social freedom, firm they rise ;
Such as, of late, an Oglethorpe has form'd,
And, crowding round, the charm'd Savannah sees.

" Horrid with want and misery, no more
Our streets the tender passenger afflict.
Nor shivering age, nor sickness without friend,
Or home, or bed to bear his burning load,
Nor agonizing infant, that ne'er earn'd
Its guiltless pangs, I see ! The stores, profuse,
Which British bounty has to these assign'd,
No more the sacrilegious riot swell
Of cannibal devourers ! Right apply'd,
No starving wretch the land of freedom stains :
If poor, employment finds ; if old, demands ;
If sick, if maim'd, his miserable due ;
And will, if young, repay the fondest care.
Sweet sets the sun of stormy life, and sweet
The morning shines, in mercy's dews array'd.
Lo ! how they rise ! these families of Heaven !
That ! * chief, (but why — ye bigots ! — why so late ?)
Where blooms and warbles glad a rising age :
What smiles of praise ! and while their song ascends,
The listening seraph lays his lute aside.

" Hark ! the gay Muses raise a nobler strain,
With active nature, warm impassion'd truth,
Engaging fable, lucid order, notes
Of various string, and heart-felt image fill'd.
Behold ! I see the dread delightful school
Of temper'd passions, and of polish'd life,

* An hospital for foundlings.

Restor'd : behold ! the well-dissembled scene
 Calls from embellish'd eyes the lovely tear,
 Or lights up mirth in modest cheeks again.
 Lo ! vanish'd monster-land. Lo ! driven away
 Those that Apollo's sacred walls profane :
 Their wild creation scatter'd, where a world
 Unknown to Nature, chaos more confus'd,
 O'er the bruté scene its ouran-outangs * pours ;
 Detested forms ! that, on the mind imprest,
 Corrupt, confound, and barbarize an age.

" Behold ! all thine again the sister-arts,
 Thy graces they, knit in harmonious dance.
 Nurs'd by the treasure from a nation drain'd
 Their works to purchase, they to nobler rouse
 Their untam'd genius, their unfetter'd thought ;
 Of pompous tyrants, and of dreaming monks,
 The gaudy tools, and prisoners, no more.

" Lo ! numerous domes a Burlington confess :
 For kings and senates fit, the palace see !
 The temple breathing a religious awe ;
 Ev'n fram'd with elegance the plain retreat,
 The private dwelling. Certain in his aim,
 Taste, never idly working, saves expence.

" See ! Sylvan scenes, where Art, alone, pretends
 To dress her mistress, and disclose her charms :
 Such as a Pope in miniature has shown ;
 A Bathurst o'er the widening forest † spreads ;
 And such as form a Richmond, Chiswick, Stowe.

" August, around, what public works I see !
 Lo ! stately streets, lo ! squares that court the breeze,

In spite of those to whom pertains the care,
 Ingulphing more than founded Roman ways.
 Lo ! ray'd from cities o'er the brighten'd land,
 Connecting sea to sea, the solid road.
 Lo ! the proud arch (no vile exactor's stand)
 With easy sweep bestrides the chafing flood.
 See ! long canals, and deepen'd rivers, join
 Each part with each, and with the circling main
 The whole enliven'd isle. Lo ! ports expand,
 Free as the winds and waves, their sheltering arms.
 Lo ! streaming comfort o'er the troubled deep,
 On every pointed coast the light-house towers ;
 And, by the broad imperious mole repell'd,
 Hark ! how the baffled storm indignant roars."

As thick to view these varied wonders rose,
 Shook all my soul with transport, unassur'd,
 The vision broke ; and, on my waking eye,
 Rush'd the still ruins of dejected Rome.

ODE.

Tell me, thou soul of her I love,
 Ah ! tell me, whither art thou fled ;
 To what delightful world above,
 Appointed for the happy dead ?

Or dost thou, free, at pleasure, roam,
 And sometimes share thy lover's woe ;
 Where, void of thee, his cheerless home
 Can now, alas ! no comfort know ?

* A creature which, of all brutes, most resembles man. — See Dr. Tyson's treatise on this animal.

† Okely woods, near Cirencester.

Oh ! if thou hover'st round my walk,
 While under every well-known tree,
 I to thy fancy'd shadow talk,
 And every tear is full of thee ;

Should then the weary eye of grief,
 Beside some sympathetic stream,
 In slumber find a short relief,
 O visit thou my soothing dream !

THE HAPPY MAN.

He's not the Happy Man, to whom is given
 A plenteous fortune by indulgent Heaven ;
 Whose gilded roofs on shining columns rise,
 And painted walls enchant the gazer's eyes ;
 Whose table flows with hospitable cheer,
 And all the various bounty of the year ; [Spring,
 Whose valleys smile, whose gardens breathe the
 Whose carved mountains bleat, and forests sing ;
 For whom the cooling shade in Summer twines,
 While his full cellars give their generous wines ;
 From whose wide fields unbounded Autumn pours
 A golden tide into his swelling stores :
 Whose Winter laughs ; for whom the liberal gales
 Stretch the big sheet, and toiling commerce sails ;
 When yielding crowds attend, and pleasure serves ;
 While youth, and health, and vigour string his nerves.

Ev'n not all these, in one rich lot combin'd,
 Can make the Happy Man, without the mind ;
 Where Judgment sits clear-sighted, and surveys
 The chain of Reason with unerring gaze ;
 Where Fancy lives, and to the brightening eyes,
 His fairer scenes, and bolder figures rise ;
 Where social Love exerts her soft command,
 And plays the passions with a tender hand,
 Whence every virtue flows, in rival strife,
 And all the moral harmony of life.

SONG.

HARD is the fate of him who loves,
 Yet dares not tell his trembling pain,
 But to the sympathetic groves,
 But to the lonely listening plain.

Oh ! when she blesses next your shade,
 Oh ! when her footsteps next are seen
 In flowery tracts along the mead,
 In fresher mazes o'er the green,

Ye gentle spirits of the vale,
 To whom the tears of love are dear,
 From dying lillies waft a gale,
 And sigh my sorrows in her ear.

O, tell her what she cannot blame,
 Though fear my tongue must ever bind ;
 O, tell her that my virtuous flame
 Is as her spotless soul refin'd.

Not her own guardian angel eyes
 With chaster tenderness his care,
 Not purer her own wishes rise,
 Not holier her own sighs in prayer.

But if, at first, her virgin fear
Should start at love's suspected name,
With that of friendship soothe her ear —
True love and friendship are the same.

SONG.

For ever, Fortune, wilt thou prove
An unrelenting foe to love,
And when we meet a mutual heart,
Come in between, and bid us part?

Bid us sigh on from day to day,
And wish, and wish the soul away;
Till youth and genial years are flown,
And all the life of life is gone?

But busy, busy, still art thou,
To bind the loveless joyless vow,
The heart from pleasure to delude,
To join the gentle to the rude.

For once, O Fortune, hear my prayer,
And I absolve thy future care;
All other blessings I resign,
Make but the dear Amanda mine.

ODE.

O NIGHTINGALE, best poet of the grove,
That plaintive strain can ne'er belong to thee,
Blest in the full possession of thy love:
O lend that strain, sweet nightingale, to me!

'Tis mine, alas! to mourn my wretched fate:
I love a maid who all my bosom charms,
Yet lose my days without this lovely mate;
Inhuman Fortune keeps her from my arms.

You, happy birds! by Nature's simple laws
Lead your soft lives, sustain'd by Nature's fare;
You dwell wherever roving fancy draws,
And love and song is all your pleasing care:

But we, vain slaves of interest and of pride,
Dare not be blest lest envious tongues should blame:
And hence, in vain I languish for my bride;
O mourn with me, sweet bird, my hapless flame.

HYMN ON SOLITUDE.

HAIL, mildly pleasing Solitude,
Companion of the wise and good,
But, from whose holy, piercing eye,
The herd of fools and villains fly.

Oh! how I love with thee to walk,
And listen to thy whisper'd talk,
Which innocence and truth imparts,
And melts the most obdurate hearts.

A thousand shapes you wear with ease,
And still in every shape you please.
Now wrapt in some mysterious dream,
A lone philosopher you seem;
Now quick from hill to vale you fly,
And now you sweep the vaulted sky;
A shepherd next, you haunt the plain,
And warble forth your oaten strain.
A lover now, with all the grace
Of that sweet passion in your face;
Then, calm'd to friendship, you assume
The gentle-looking Hartford's bloom,
As, with her Musidora, she
(Her Musidora fond of thee)
Amid the long withdrawing vale,
Awakes the rivall'd nightingale.

Thine is the balmy breath of morn,
Just as the dew-bent rose is born;
And while meridian fervours beat,
Thine is the woodland dumb retreat;
But chief, when evening scenes decay,
And the faint landscape swims away,
Thine is the doubtful soft decline,
And that best hour of musing thine.

Descending angels bless thy train,
The virtues of the sage, and swain;
Plain Innocence, in white array'd,
Before thee lifts her fearless head:
Religion's beams around thee shine,
And cheer thy glooms with light divine:
About thee sports sweet Liberty;
And rapt Urania sings to thee.

Oh, let me pierce thy secret cell!
And in thy deep recesses dwell;
Perhaps from Norwood's oak-clad hill,
When Meditation has her fill,
I just may cast my careless eyes
Where London's spiry turrets rise,
Think of its crimes, its cares, its pain,
Then shield me in the woods again.

TO THE

REV. MR. MURDOCH,

RECTOR OF STRADDISHALL, IN SUFFOLK, 1738.

Thus safely low, my friend, thou canst not fall:
Here reigns a deep tranquillity o'er all;
No noise, no care, no vanity, no strife;
Men, woods, and fields, all breathe untroubled life.
Then keep each passion down, however dear;
Trust me the tender are the most severe.
Guard, while 'tis thine, thy philosophic ease,
And ask no joy but that of virtuous peace;
That bids defiance to the storms of Fate,
High bliss is only for a higher state.

AMBROSE PHILIPS.

AMBROSE PHILIPS, a poet and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1671, claiming his descent from an ancient Leicestershire family. He received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge; and, attaching himself to the Whig party, he published, in 1700, an epitome of Hacket's life of Archbishop Williams, by which he obtained an introduction to Addison and Steele. Soon after, he made an attempt in pastoral poetry, which, for a time, brought him into celebrity. In 1709, being then at Copenhagen, he addressed to the Earl of Dorset some verses, descriptive of that capital, which are regarded as his best performance; and these, together with two translations from Sappho's writings, stand pre-eminent in his works of this class. In 1712 he made his appearance as a dramatic writer, in the tragedy of "The Distrest Mother," acted at Drury-lane with great applause, and still considered as a stock play. It cannot, indeed, claim the merit of originality, being closely copied from Racine's "Andromacque;" but it is well written, and skilfully adapted to the English stage.

A storm now fell upon him relatively to his pastorals, owing to an exaggerated compliment from Tickell, who, in a paper of the Guardian, had made the true pastoral pipe descend in succession from Theocritus to Virgil, Spenser, and Philips. Pope, who found his own juvenile pastorals undervalued, sent to the same paper a comparison between his and those of Philips, in which he ironically gave the preference to the latter. The irony was not detected till it encountered the critical eye of Addison; and the consequence was, that it ruined the reputation of Philips as a composer of pastoral.

When the accession of George I. brought the Whigs again into power, Philips was made a Westminster justice, and, soon after, a commissioner for the lottery. In 1718, he was the editor of a periodical paper, called "The Freethinker." In 1724, he accompanied to Ireland his friend Dr. Boulter, created archbishop of Armagh, to whom he acted as secretary. He afterwards represented the county of Armagh in parliament; and the places of secretary to the Lord Chancellor, and Judge of the Prerogative Court, were also conferred upon him. He returned to England in 1748, and died in the following year, at the age of seventy-eight.

The verses which he composed, not only to young ladies in the nursery, but to Walpole when Minister of State, and which became known by the ludicrous appellation of namby-pamby, are easy and sprightly, but with a kind of infantile air, which fixed upon them the above name.

TO THE EARL OF DORSET.

Copenhagen, March 9. 1709.

FROM frozen climes, and endless tracts of snow,
From streams which northern winds forbid to flow,
What present shall the Muse to Dorset bring,
Or how, so near the Pole, attempt to sing?
The hoary winter here conceals from sight
All pleasing objects which to verse invite.
The hills and dales, and the delightful woods,
The flowery plains, and silver-streaming floods,
By snow disguis'd, in bright confusion lie,
And with one dazzling waste fatigue the eye.

No gentle breathing breeze prepares the spring,
No birds within the desert region sing.
The ships, unmov'd, the hoisterous winds defy,
While rattling chariots o'er the ocean fly.
The vast Leviathan wants room to play,
And spout his waters in the face of day.

The starving wolves along the main sea prowl,
And to the Moon in icy valleys howl.
O'er many a shining league the level main
Here spreads itself into a glassy plain:
There solid billows of enormous size,
Alps of green ice, in wild disorder rise.

And yet but lately have I seen, ev'n here,
The winter in a lovely dress appear.
Ere yet the clouds let fall the treasur'd snow,
Or winds began through hazy skies to blow,
At evening a keen eastern breeze arose,
And the descending rain unsullied froze.
Soon as the silent shades of night withdrew,
The ruddy morn disclos'd at once to view
The face of Nature in a rich disguise,
And brighten'd every object to my eyes:
For every shrub, and every blade of grass,
And every pointed thorn, seem'd wrought in glass;
In pearls and rubies rich the hawthorns show,
While through the ice the crimson berries glow.

The thick-sprung reeds, which watery marshes yield,
Seem'd polish'd lances in a hostile field.
The stag, in limpid currents, with surprise,
Sees crystal branches on his forehead rise.
The spreading oak, the beech, and towering pine,
Glaz'd over, in the freezing ether shine.
The frightened birds the rattling branches shun,
Which wave and glitter in the distant sun.
When, if a sudden gust of wind arise,
The brittle forest into atoms flies,
The crackling wood beneath the tempest bends,
And in a spangled shower the prospect ends :
Or, if a southern gale the region warm,
And by degrees unbind the wintery charm,
The traveller a miry country sees,
And journeys sad beneath the dropping trees :
Like some deluded peasant, Merlin leads [meads :
Through fragrant bowers, and through delicious
While here enchanted gardens to him rise,
And airy fabrics there attract his eyes,
His wandering feet the magic paths pursue,
And, while he thinks the fair illusion true,
The trackless scenes disperse in fluid air,
And woods, and wilds, and thorny ways appear.
A tedious road the weary wretch returns,
And, as he goes, the transient vision mourns.

A HYMN TO VENUS,

FROM THE GREEK OF SAPPHO.

O VENUS, beauty of the skies,
To whom a thousand temples rise,
Gaily false in gentle smiles,
Full of love-perplexing wiles,
O, goddess ! from my heart remove
The wasting cares and pains of love.

If ever thou hast kindly heard
A song in soft distress preferr'd,
Propitious to my tuneful vow,
O, gentle goddess, hear me now.
Descend, thou bright immortal guest,
In all thy radiant charms confest.

Thou once didst leave almighty Jove,
And all the golden roofs above :
The car thy wanton sparrows drew ;
Hovering in air they lightly flew ;
As to my bower they wing'd their way,
I saw their quivering pinions play.

The birds, dismiss'd, (while you remain,)
Bore back their empty car again :
Then you, with looks divinely mild,
In every heavenly feature smil'd,
And ask'd, what new complaints I made,
And why I call'd you to my aid ?

What phrenzy in my bosom rag'd,
And by what care to be assuag'd ?
What gentle youth I would allure,
Whom in my artful toils secure ?
Who does thy tender heart subdue,
Tell me, my Sappho, tell me who ?

Though now he shuns thy longing arms,
He soon shall court thy slighted charms ;
Though now thy offerings he despise,
He soon to thee shall sacrifice ;
Though now he freeze, he soon shall burn,
And be thy victim in his turn.

Celestial visitant, once more
Thy needful presence I implore !
In pity come and ease my grief,
Bring my distemper'd soul relief :
Favour thy suppliant's hidden fires,
And give me all my heart desires.

A FRAGMENT OF SAPPHO.

BLEST as the immortal gods is he,
The youth who fondly sits by thee,
And hears and sees thee all the while
Softly speak, and sweetly smile.

'Twas this deprived my soul of rest,
And rais'd such tumults in my breast ;
For while I gaz'd, in transport tost,
My breath was gone, my voice was lost.

My bosom glow'd ; the subtle flame
Ran quick through all my vital frame ;
O'er my dim eyes a darkness hung,
My ears with hollow murmurs rung.

In dewy damps my limbs were chill'd,
My blood with gentle horrors thrill'd ;
My feeble pulse forgot to play,
I fainted, sunk, and died away.

WILLIAM COLLINS.

WILLIAM COLLINS, a distinguished modern poet, was born at Chichester, in 1720 or 1721, where his father exercised the trade of a hatter. He received his education at Winchester College, whence he entered as a commoner of Queen's College, Oxford. In 1741, he procured his election into Magdalen college as a demy; and it was here that he wrote his poetical "Epistle to Sir Thomas Hanmer," and his "Oriental Eclogues;" of both which pieces the success was but moderate. In 1744, he came to London as a literary adventurer, and various were the projects which he formed in this capacity. In 1746, however, he ventured to lay before the public a volume of "Odes, Descriptive and Allegorical;" but so callous was the national taste at this time, that their sale did not pay for the printing. Collins, whose spirit was high, returned to the bookseller his copy-money, burnt all the unsold copies, and as soon as it lay in his power, indemnified him for his small loss; yet among these odes, were many pieces which now rank among the finest lyric compositions in the language. After this mortification, he obtained from the booksellers a small sum for an intended translation of Aristotle's Poetics, and paid a visit to an uncle, Lieutenant-colonel Martin, then with the army in Germany. The Colonel dying soon after, left Collins a legacy of 2000*l.*, a sum which raised him to temporary opulence; but he now soon became incapable of every mental exertion. Dreadful depression of spirits was an occasional attendant on his malady, for which he had no remedy but the bottle. It was about this time, that it was thought proper to confine him in a receptacle of lunatics. Dr. Johnson paid him a visit at Islington, when there was nothing of disorder in his mind, perceptible to any but himself. He was reading the New Testament. "I have but one book," said he, "but it is the best." He was finally consigned to the care of his sister, in whose arms he finished his short and melancholy course, in the year 1756.

It is from his Odes, that Collins derives his chief poetical fame; and in compensation for the neglect with which they were treated at their first appearance, they are now almost universally regarded as the first productions of the kind in our language with respect to vigour of conception, boldness and variety of personification, and genuine warmth of feeling. They are well characterised in an essay prefixed to his works in an ornamented edition published by Cadell and Davies, with which we shall conclude this article. "He will be acknowledged (says the author) to possess imagination, sweetness, bold and figurative language. His numbers dwell on the ear, and easily fix themselves in the memory. His vein of sentiment is by turns tender and lofty, always tinged with a degree of melancholy, but not possessing any claim to originality. His originality consists in his manner, in the highly figurative garb in which he clothes abstract ideas, in the felicity of his expressions, and his skill in embodying ideal creations. He had much of the mysticism of poetry, and sometimes became obscure by aiming at impressions stronger than he had clear and well-defined ideas to support. Had his life been prolonged, and with life had he enjoyed that ease which is necessary for the undisturbed exercise of the faculties, he would probably have risen far above most of his contemporaries."

ODE TO PITY.

O THOU, the friend of man assign'd,
With balmy hands his wounds to bind,
And charm his frantic woe:
When first Distress, with dagger keen,
Broke forth to waste his destin'd scene,
His wild unsated foe!

By Pella's bard, a magic name,
By all the griefs his thought could frame,
Receive my humble rite:
Long, Pity, let the nations view
Thy sky-worn robes of tenderest blue,
And eyes of dewy light!

But wherefore need I wander wide
To old Ilissus' distant side,
Deserted stream, and mute?
Wild Arun * too has heard thy strains,
And Echo, 'midst my native plains,
Been sooth'd by Pity's lute.

There first the wren thy myrtles shed
On gentlest Otway's infant head,
To him thy cell was shown;
And while he sung the female heart,
With youth's soft notes unspoil'd by art,
Thy turtles mix'd their own.

* A river in Sussex.

Come, Pity, come, by Fancy's aid,
E'en now my thoughts, relenting maid,
Thy temple's pride design :
Its southern site, its truth complete,
Shall raise a wild enthusiast heat
In all who view the shrine.

There Picture's toil shall well relate,
How Chance, or hard involving Fate,
O'er mortal bliss prevail :
The buskin'd Muse shall near her stand,
And, sighing, prompt her tender hand
With each disastrous tale.

There let me oft, retir'd by day,
In dreams of passion melt away,
Allow'd with thee to dwell :
There waste the mournful lamp of night,
Till, Virgin, thou again delight
To hear a British shell !

ODE TO FEAR.

Thou, to whom the world unknown
With all its shadowy shapes is shown ;
Who seest appall'd th' unreal scene,
While Fancy lifts the veil between :
Ah, Fear ! ah, frantic Fear !
I see, I see thee near.
I know thy hurried step, thy haggard eye !
Like thee I start, like thee disorder'd fly.
For, lo, what monsters in thy train appear !
Danger, whose limbs of giant mould
What mortal eye can fixt behold ?
Who stalks his round, a hideous form,
Howling amidst the midnight storm,
Or throws him on the ridgy steep
Of some loose hanging rock to sleep :
And with him thousand phantoms join'd,
Who prompt to deeds accurs'd the mind :
And those, the fiends, who, near allied,
O'er Nature's wounds and wrecks preside ;
While Vengeance, in the lurid air,
Lifts her red arm, expos'd and bare :
On whom that ravening brood of Fate,
Who lap the blood of Sorrow, wait ;
Who, Fear, this ghastly train can see,
And look not madly wild, like thee ?

EPODE

In earliest Greece, to thee, with partial choice,
The grief-full Muse address'd her infant tongue ;
The maids and matrons, on her awful voice,
Silent and pale, in wild amazement hung.

Yet he, the bard * who first invok'd thy name,
Disdain'd in Marathon its power to feel :
For not alone he nurs'd the poet's flame,
But reach'd from Virtue's hand the patriot's steel.

But who is he, whom later garlands grace,
Who left awhile o'er Hybla's dews to rove,
With trembling eyes thy dreary steps to trace,
Where thou and furies shar'd the baleful grove ?

* Æschylus

Wrapt in thy cloudy veil th' incestuous queen †,
Sigh'd the sad call her son and husband heard,
When once alone it broke the silent scene,
And he the wretch of Thebes no more appear'd.

O Fear ! I know thee by my throbbing heart,
Thy withering power inspir'd each mournful line ;
Though gentle Pity claim her mingled part,
Yet all the thunders of the scene are thine.

ANTISTROPHE.

Thou who such weary lengths hast past,
Where wilt thou rest, mad nymph, at last ?
Say, wilt thou shroud in haunted cell,
Where gloomy Rape and Murder dwell ?
Or in some hollow'd seat,
'Gainst which the big waves beat,
Hear drowning seamen's cries in tempests brought !
Dark power, with shuddering meek submitted
thought,

Be mine, to read the visions old,
Which thy awakening bards have told.

And, lest thou meet my blasted view,
Hold each strange tale devoutly true ;
Ne'er be I found, by thee o'er-aw'd,
In that thrice-hallow'd eve abroad,
When ghosts, as cottage-maids believe,
Their pebbled beds permitted leave,
And goblins haunt from fire, or fen,
Or mine, or flood, the walks of men !

O thou, whose spirit most possess
The sacred seat of Shakspeare's breast !
By all that from thy prophet broke,
In thy divine emotions spoke !
Hither again thy fury deal,
Teach me but once like him to feel :
His cypress wreath my meed decree,
And I, O Fear, will dwell with thee !

ODE.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1746.

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
By all their country's wishes blest !
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod,
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By Fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung ;
Their Honour comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay,
And Freedom shall awhile repair,
To dwell a weeping hermit there !

† Jocasta.

ODE, TO A LADY,

ON THE DEATH OF COL. CHARLES ROSS, IN THE ACTION AT FONTENOY.

Written May, 1745.

WHILE, lost to all his former mirth,
Britannia's genius bends to earth,
And mourns the fatal day :
While stain'd with blood he strives to tear
Unseemly from his sea-green hair
The wreaths of cheerful May :

The thoughts which musing Pity pays,
And fond Remembrance loves to raise,
Your faithful hours attend :
Still Fancy, to herself unkind,
Awakes to grief the soften'd mind,
And points the bleeding friend.

By rapid Scheld's descending wave
His country's vows shall bless the grave,
Where'er the youth is laid :
That sacred spot the village hind
With every sweetest turf shall bind,
And Peace protect the shade.

O'er him, whose doom thy virtues grieve,
Aërial forms shall sit at eve,
And bend the pensive head ;
And, fall'n to save his injur'd land,
Imperial Honour's awful hand
Shall point his lonely bed !

The warlike dead of every age,
Who fill the fair recording page,
Shall leave their sainted rest :
And, half-reclining on his spear,
Each wondering chief by turns appear
To hail the blooming guest.

Old Edward's sons, unknown to yield,
Shall crowd from Cressy's laurel'd field,
And gaze with fix'd delight :
Again for Britain's wrongs they feel,
Again they snatch the gleamy steel,
And wish th' avenging fight.

But, lo ! where, sunk in deep despair,
Her garments torn, her bosom bare,
Impatient Freedom lies !
Her matted tresses madly spread,
To every sod which wraps the dead,
She turns her joyless eyes.

Ne'er shall she leave that lowly ground,
Till notes of triumph bursting round
Proclaim her reign restor'd :
Till William seek the sad retreat,
And, bleeding at her sacred feet,
Present the sated sword.

If, weak to soothe so soft an heart,
These pictur'd glories nought impart,
'To dry thy constant tear :
If yet, in Sorrow's distant eye,
Expos'd and pale thou see'st him lie,
Wild war insulting near :

Where'er from time thou court'st relief,
The Muse shall still, with social grief,
Her gentlest promise keep :
E'en humble Harting's cottag'd vale
Shall learn the sad repeated tale,
And bid her shepherds weep.

ODE TO EVENING.

If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
May hope, chaste Eve, to soothe thy modest ear,
Like thy own solemn springs,
Thy springs, and dying gales ;

O nymph reserv'd, while now the bright-hair'd Sun
Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
With brede ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed :

Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-ey'd bat,
With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern wing,
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum :
Now teach me, maid compos'd,
To breathe some soften'd strain,

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale,
May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
As, musing slow, I hail
Thy genial lov'd return !

For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant hours, and elves
Who slept in buds the day,

And many a nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge,
And sheds the freshening dew, and lovelier still,
The pensive pleasures sweet
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene,
Or find some ruin 'midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.

Or if chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
Prevent my willing feet, be mine the hut,
That from the mountain's side
Views wilds and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires,
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

While Spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve !
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light :

While fallow fills Autumn thy lap with leaves,
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes :

So long, regardful of thy quiet rule,
 Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, smiling Peace,
 Thy gentlest influence own,
 And love thy favourite name!

ODE TO LIBERTY.

STROPHE.

Who shall awake the Spartan fire,
 And call in solemn sounds to life,
 The youths, whose locks divinely spreading,
 Like vernal hyacinths in sullen hue,
 At once the breath of fear and virtue shedding,
 Applauding Freedom lov'd of old to view?
 What new Alceus, fancy-blest,
 Shall sing the sword, in myrtles drest,
 At Wisdom's shrine awhile its flame concealing,
 (What place so fit to seal a deed renown'd?)
 Till she her brightest lightnings round revealing,
 It leap'd in glory forth, and dealt her prompted wound!
 O goddess, in that feeling hour,
 When most its sounds would court thy ears,
 Let not my shell's misguided power
 E'er draw thy sad, thy mindful tears.
 No, Freedom, no, I will not tell,
 How Rome, before thy face,
 With heaviest sound, a giant-statue, fell,
 Push'd by a wild and artless race,
 From off its wide ambitious base,
 When Time his northern sons of spoil awoke,
 And all the blended work of strength and grace
 With many a rude repeated stroke, [broke.
 And many a barbarous yell, to thousand fragments

EPODE.

Yet, e'en where'er the least appear'd
 Th' admiring world thy hand rever'd;
 Still, 'midst the scatter'd states around,
 Some remnants of her strength were found;
 They saw, by what escap'd the storm,
 How wondrous rose her perfect form;
 How in the great, the labour'd whole,
 Each mighty master pour'd his soul;
 For sunny Florence, seat of Art,
 Beneath her vines preserv'd a part,
 Till they, whom Science lov'd to name,
 (O, who could fear it!) quench'd her flame.
 And, lo, an humbler relic laid
 In jealous Pisa's olive shade!
 See small Marino joins the theme,
 Though least, not last in thy esteem;
 Strike, louder strike th' ennobling strings
 To those, whose merchants sons were kings;
 To him, who, deck'd with pearly pride,
 In Adria weds his green-hair'd bride:
 Hail, port of glory, wealth, and pleasure,
 Ne'er let me change this Lydian measure:
 Nor e'er her former pride relate
 To sad Liguria's bleeding state.
 Ah, no! more pleas'd thy haunts I seek,
 On wild Helvetia's mountains bleak:
 (Where, when the favour'd of thy choice,
 The daring archer heard thy voice;
 Forth from his eyrie rous'd in dread,
 The ravening eagle northward fled.)

Or dwell in willow'd meads more near,
 With those to whom the stork * is dear:
 Those whom the rod of Alva bruis'd,
 Whose crown a British queen refus'd!
 The magic works, thou feel'st the strains,
 One holier name alone remains;
 The perfect spell shall then avail,
 Hail, nymph, ador'd by Britain, hail!

ANTISTROPHE.

Beyond the measure vast of thought,
 The works, the wizard Time has wrought!
 The Gaul, 't is held of antique story,
 Saw Britain link'd to his now adverse strand †,
 No sea between, nor cliff sublime and hoary,
 He pass'd with unwet feet through all our land.
 To the blown Baltic then, they say,
 The wild waves found another way,
 Where Orcas howls, his wolfish mountains rounding;
 Till all the banded west at once 'gan rise,
 A wide wild storm e'en Nature's self confounding,
 Withering her giant sons with strange uncouth
 surprise.
 This pillar'd earth so firm and wide,
 By winds and inward labours torn,
 In thunders dread was push'd aside;
 And down the shouldering billows borne.
 And see, like gems, her laughing train,
 The little isles on every side,
 Mona ‡, once hid from those who search the main,
 Where thousand elfin shapes abide,
 And Wight, who checks the westering tide,
 For thee consenting Heaven has each bestow'd,
 A fair attendant on her sovereign pride:
 To thee this blest divorce she ow'd,
 For thou hast made her vales thy lov'd, thy last abode!

SECOND EPODE.

Then too, 't is said, an hoary pile,
 'Midst the green navel of our isle,

* The Dutch, amongst whom there are very severe penalties for those who are convicted of killing this bird. They are kept tame in almost all their towns, and particularly at the Hague, of the arms of which they make a part. The common people of Holland are said to entertain a superstitious sentiment, that if the whole species of them should become extinct, they should lose their liberties.

† This tradition is mentioned by several of our old historians. Some naturalists, too, have endeavoured to support the probability of the fact, by arguments drawn from the correspondent disposition of the two opposite coasts. I do not remember that any poetical use has been hitherto made of it.

‡ There is a tradition in the Isle of Man, that a mermaid, becoming enamoured of a young man of extraordinary beauty, took an opportunity of meeting him one day as he walked on the shore, and opened her passion to him, but was received with a coldness, occasioned by his horror and surprise at her appearance. This, however, was so misconstrued by the sea-lady, that, in revenge for his treatment of her, she punished the whole island, by covering it with a mist, so that all who attempted to carry on any commerce with it, either never arrived at it, but wandered up and down the sea, or were on a sudden wrecked upon its cliffs.

Thy shrine in some religious wood,
 O soul-enforcing goddess, stood!
 There oft the painted native's feet
 Were wont thy form celestial meet:
 Though now with hopeless toil we trace
 Time's backward rolls, to find its place;
 Whether the fiery-tressed Dane,
 Or Roman's self o'erturn'd the fane,
 Or in what heaven-left age it fell,
 'T were hard for modern song to tell.
 Yet still, if truth those beams infuse,
 Which guide at once, and charm the Muse,
 Beyond yon braided clouds that lie,
 Paving the light embroider'd sky:
 Amidst the bright pavilion'd plains,
 The beauteous model still remains,
 There happier than in islands blest,
 Or bowers by Spring or Hebe drest,
 The chiefs who fill our Albion's story,
 In warlike weeds, retir'd in glory,
 Hear their consorted Druids sing
 Their triumphs to th' immortal string.

How may the poet now unfold,
 What never tongue or numbers told?
 How learn delighted, and amaz'd,
 What hands unknown that fabric rais'd?
 E'en now, before his favour'd eyes,
 In Gothic pride it seems to rise!
 Yet Grecia's graceful orders join,
 Majestic, through the mix'd design;
 The secret builder knew to chuse,
 Each sphere-found gem of richest hues:
 Whate'er Heaven's purer mould contains,
 When nearer suns emblaze its veins;
 There on the walls the patriot's sight
 May ever hang with fresh delight,
 And, 'grav'd with some prophetic rage,
 Read Albion's fame through every age.

Ye forms divine, ye laureate band,
 That near her inmost altar stand!
 Now soothe her, to her blissful train
 Blithe Concord's social form to gain:
 Concord, whose myrtle wand can steep
 E'en Anger's blood-shot eyes in sleep:
 Before whose breathing bosom's halm,
 Rage drops his steel, and storms grow calm;
 Her let our sires and matrons hoar
 Welcome to Britain's ravag'd shore,
 Our youths, enamour'd of the fair,
 Play with the tangles of her hair,
 Till, in one loud applauding sound,
 The nations shout to her around,
 "O, how supremely art thou blest,
 Thou, lady, thou shalt rule the West!"

THE PASSIONS.

AN ODE FOR MUSIC.

WHEN Music, heavenly maid, was young,
 While yet in early Greece she sung,
 The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
 Throng'd around her magic cell,
 Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
 Possess'd beyond the Muse's painting;
 By turns they felt the glowing mind
 Disturb'd, delighted, rais'd, refin'd;
 Till once, 't is said, when all were fir'd,
 Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspir'd,

From the supporting myrtles round
 They snatch'd her instruments of sound,
 And, as they oft had heard apart
 Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
 Each, for madness rul'd the hour,
 Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
 Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
 And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
 E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rush'd, his eyes on fire,
 In lightnings own'd his secret stings,
 In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
 And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair —
 Low sullen sounds his grief beguil'd,
 A solemn, strange, and mingled air,
 'T was sad by fits, by starts 't was wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
 What was thy delighted measure?
 Still it whisper'd promis'd pleasure,
 And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!
 Still would her touch the strain prolong,
 And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
 She call'd on Echo still through all the song;
 And where her sweetest theme she chose,
 A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
 And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.

And longer had she sung — but, with a frown,
 Revenge impatient rose,
 He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder down,
 And, with a withering look,
 The war-denouncing trumpet took,
 And blew a blast so loud and dread,
 Were ne'er prophetic sound so full of woe.
 And ever and anon he beat,
 The doubling drum with furious beat; [twice.
 And though sometimes, each dreary pause be-
 Dejected Pity at his side
 Her soul-subduing voice applied,
 Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mien,
 While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fix'd,
 Sad proof of thy distressful state,
 Of differing themes the veering song was mix'd,
 And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes up-rais'd, as one inspir'd,
 Pale Melancholy sat retir'd,
 And from her wild sequester'd seat,
 In notes by distance made more sweet,
 Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive soul:
 And dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels join'd the sound; [stole.
 Through glades and glooms the mingled measure
 Or o'er some haunted streams with fond delay,
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 Love of peace, and lonely musing,
 In hollow murmurs died away.
 But, O, how alter'd was its sprightlier tone!
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung.

The hunter's call to Faun and Dryad known ;
 The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste-ey'd
 queen,
 Satyrs and sylvan boys were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green ;
 Brown Exercise rejoic'd to hear,
 And Sport leapt up, and seiz'd his beechen spear.
 Last came Joy's ecstatic trial,
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand address,
 But soon he saw the briak-awakening viol,
 Whose sweet entrancing voice he lov'd the best.
 They would have thought, who heard the strain,
 They saw in Tempé's vale her native maids,
 Amidst the festal sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
 While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings,
 Love fram'd with Mirth a gay fantastic round,
 Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound,
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.

O Music, sphere-descended maid,
 Friend of pleasure, wisdom's aid,
 Why, goddess, why to us denied,
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside ?
 As in that lov'd Athenian bower,
 You learn'd an all-commanding power,
 Thy mimic soul, O nymph endear'd,
 Can well recall what then it heard.
 Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to virtue, fancy, art ?
 Arise, as in that elder time,
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime !
 Thy wonders, in that god-like age,
 Fill thy recording sister's page —
 'T is said, and I believe the tale,
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
 Had more of strength, diviner rage,
 Than all which charms this laggard age,
 E'en all at once together found
 Cæcilia's mingled world of sound —
 O, bid our vain endeavours cease,
 Revive the just designs of Greece,
 Return in all thy simple state !
 Confirm the tales her sons relate !

DIRGE IN CYMBELINE.

SUNG BY GUIDERUS AND ANVIRAGUS OVER FIDELÉ, SUPPOSED TO BE DEAD.

To fair Fidele's grassy tomb
 Soft maids and village hinds shall bring
 Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom,
 And rifle all the breathing Spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear
 To vex with shrieks this quiet grove,
 But shepherd lads assemble here,
 And melting virgins own their love.

No wither'd witch shall here be seen,
 No goblins lead their midnight train,
 The female fays shall
 And dress thy gar

The red-breast oft at evening hours
 Shall kindly lend his little aid,
 With hoary moss, and gather'd flowers,
 To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds, and beating rain,
 In tempests shake thy sylvan cell ;
 Or 'midst the chase on every plain,
 The tender thought on thee shall dwell.

Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
 For thee the tear be duly shed ;
 Belov'd, till life can charm no more ;
 And mourn'd, till Pity's self be dead.

AN ODE

ON THE

POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS OF THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND ;

CONSIDERED AS

THE SUBJECT OF POETRY.

INSCRIBED TO MR. JOHN HOME.

HOMÉ, thou return'st from Thames, whose Naiads long

Have seen thee lingering with a fond delay, [day
 Mid those soft friends, whose hearts some future
 Shall melt, perhaps, to hear thy tragic song. *
 Go, not unmindful of that cordial youth † [side ;
 Whom, long endear'd, thou leav'st by Lavant's
 Together let us wish him lasting truth
 And joy untainted with his destin'd bride.
 Go ! nor regardless, while these numbers boast
 My short-liv'd bliss, forget my social name ;
 But think, far off, how, on the Southern coast,
 I met thy friendship with an equal flame !
 Fresh to that soil thou turn'st, where every vale
 Shall prompt the poet, and his song demand :
 To thee thy copious subjects ne'er shall fail ;
 Thou need'st but take thy pencil to thy hand,
 And paint what all believe, who own thy genial land.

There must thou wake perforce thy Doric quill ;
 'Tis Fancy's land to which thou sett'st thy feet ;
 Where still, 't is said, the fairy people meet,
 Beneath each birken shade, on mead or hill.
 There each trim lass, that skims the milky store
 To the swart tribes, their creamy bowls alots ;
 By night they sip it round the cottage-door,
 While airy minstrels warble jocund notes.
 There, every herd, by sad experience, knows
 How, wing'd with fate, their elf-shot arrows fly,
 When the sick ewe her summer food forgoes,
 Or, stretch'd on earth, the heart-smit heifers lie.
 Such airy beings awe th' untutor'd swain : [neglect ;
 Nor thou, tho' learn'd, his homelier thoughts
 Let thy sweet Muse the rural faith sustain ;
 These are the themes of simple, sure effect,
 That add new conquests to her boundless reign,
 And fill with double force her heart-commanding strain.

* How truly did Collins predict Home's powers !

† A gentleman of the name of introduced Home to Collins.

E'en yet preserv'd, how often mayst thou hear,
Where to the Pole the Boreal mountains run,
Taught by the father, to his listening son;
Strange lays, whose power had charm'd a Spenser's ear.

At every pause, before thy mind possest,
Old Runic bards shall seem to rise around,
With uncouth lyres, in many-colour'd vest,
Their matted hair with boughs fantastic crown'd:
Whether thou bidd'st the well-taught hind repeat
The choral dirge that mourns some chieftain brave,
When every shrieking maid her bosom beat,
And strew'd with choicest herbs his scented grave;
Or, whether sitting in the shepherd's shiel,
Thou hear'st some sounding tale of war's alarms;
When at the bugle's call, with fire and steel,
The sturdy clans pour'd forth their brawny
swarms,
And hostile brothers met, to prove each other's arms.

'T is thine to sing, how, framing hideous spells,
In Sky's lone isle, the gifted wizard-seer,
Lodg'd in the wintry cave with Fate's fell spear,
Or in the depth of Uist's dark forest dwells:
How they, whose sight such dreary dreams engross,
With their own vision oft astonish'd droop;
When, o'er the watery strath, or quaggy moss,
They see the gliding ghosts unbofied troop.
Or, if in sports, or on the festive green,
Their destin'd glance some fated youth descry,
Who now, perhaps, in lusty vigour seen,
And rosy health, shall soon lamented die.
For them the viewless forms of air obey;
Their bidding heed, and at their beck repair.
They know what spirit brews the stormful day,
And heartless, oft like moody madness, stare
To see the phantom train their secret work prepare.

To monarchs dear, some hundred miles astray,
Oft have I seen Fate give the fatal blow!
The seer, in Sky, shriek'd as the blood did flow,
When headless Charles warm on the scaffold lay!
As Boreas threw his young Aurora* forth,
In the first year of the first George's reign,
And battles rag'd in welkin of the North,
They moun'd in air, fell, fell Rebellion slain!
And as, of late, they joy'd in Preston's fight,
Saw at sad Falkirk all their hopes near crown'd!
They rav'd! divining thro' their second sight †,
Pale, reel Culloden, where these hopes were drown'd!
Illustrious William! ‡ Britain's guardian name!
One William sav'd us from a tyrant's stroke;
He, for a sceptre, gain'd heroic fame,
But thou, more glorious, Slavery's chain hast
broke,
To reign a private man, and bow to Freedom's yoke!

* By young Aurora, Collins undoubtedly meant the first appearance of the northern lights, which happened about the year 1715; at least, it is most highly probable, from this peculiar circumstance, that no ancient writer whatever has taken any notice of them, nor even any one modern, previous to the above period.

† Second sight is the term that is used for the divination of the Highlanders.

‡ The late Duke of Cumberland, who defeated the Pretender at the battle of Culloden.

These, too, thou 'lt sing! for well thy magic Man
Can to the topmost heaven of grandeur soar;
Or stoop to wail the swain that is no more!
Ah, homely swains! your homeward steps ne'er lose;

Let not dank Will § mislead you to the heath:
Dancing in mirky night, o'er fen and lake,
He glows, to draw you downward to your death,
In his bewitch'd, low, marshy, willow brake!
What though far off, from some dark dell espied,
His glimmering mazes cheer th' excursive sight,
Yet turn, ye wanderers, turn your steps aside,
Nor trust the guidance of that faithless light;
For watchful, lurking, 'mid th' unrustling reed,
At those mirk hours the wily monster lies,
And listens oft to hear the passing steed,
And frequent round him rolls his sullen eyes,
If chance his savage wrath may some weak wretch
surprise.

Ah, luckless swain, o'er all unblest, indeed!
Whom late bewilder'd in the dank, dark fen,
Far from his flocks, and smoking hamlet, then!
To that sad spot where hums the sedgy weed:
On him, enrag'd, the fiend, in angry mood,
Shall never look with pity's kind concern,
But instant, furious, raise the whelming flood
O'er its drown'd banks, forbidding all return!
Or, if he meditate his wish'd escape,
To some dim hill that seems uprising near,
To his faint eye, the grim and grisly shape,
In all its terrors clad, shall wild appear.
Meantime the watery surge shall round him rise,
Pour'd sudden forth from every swelling source!
What now remains but tears and hopeless sighs?
His fear-shook limbs have lost their youthful force,
And down the waves he floats, a pale and breathless
corse!

For him in vain his anxious wife shall wait,
Or wander forth to meet him on his way;
For him in vain, at to-fall of the day,
His babes shall linger at th' unclosing gate:
Ah, ne'er shall he return! Alone, if night
Her travell'd limbs in broken slumbers steep,
With drooping willows drest his mournful sprite
Shall visit sad, perchance, her silent sleep:
Then he, perhaps, with moist and watery hand,
Shall fondly seem to press her shuddering cheek,
And with his blue-swoln face before her stand,
And, shivering cold, these piteous accents speak:
"Pursue, dear wife, thy daily toils, pursue,
At dawn or dusk, industrious as before;
Nor e'er of me one helpless thought renew,
While I lie weltering on the osier'd shore,
Drown'd by the Kelpie's || wrath, nor e'er shall aid
thee more!"

Unbounded is thy range; with varied skill
Thy Muse may, like those feathery tribes which spring

From their rude rocks, extend her skirting wing
Round the moist marge of each cold Hebridean isle,

§ A fiery meteor, called by various names, such as Will with the Wisp, Jack with the Lantern, &c. It hovers in the air over marshy and fenny places.
|| The water-fiend.

To that hoar pile * which still its ruin shows :
In whose small vaults a Pigmy-folk is found,
Whose bones the delver with his spade upthrows,
And culls them, wond'ring, from the hallow'd
ground !

Or thither †, where beneath the show'ry west
The mighty kings of three fair realms are laid :
Once foes, perhaps together now they rest,
No slaves revere them, and no wars invade :
Yet frequent now, at midnight solemn hour,
The rifted mounds their yawning cells unfold,
And forth the monarchs stalk with sovereign power,
In pageant robes, and wreath'd with sheeny gold,
And on their twilight tombs ærial council hold.

But, oh, o'er all, forget not Kilda's race, [tides,
On whose bleak rocks, which brave the wasting
Fair Nature's daughter, Virtue, yet abides.
Go ! just, as they, their blameless manners trace !
Then to my ear transmit some gentle song,
Of those whose lives are yet sincere and plain,
Their bounded walks the rugged cliffs along,
And all their prospect but the wintery main.
With sparing temperance at the needful time
They drain the scented spring ; or, hunger-prest,
Along th' Atlantic rock, undreading, climb,
And of its eggs despoil the solan's ‡ nest.
Thus blest in primal innocence they live,
Suffic'd and happy with that frugal fare
Which tasteful toil and hourly danger give.
Hard is their shallow soil, and bleak and bare ;
Nor ever vernal bee was heard to murmur there !

Nor need'st thou blush that such false themes engage

Thy gentle mind, of fairer stores possess ;
For not alone they touch the village breast,
But fill'd in elder time th' historic page.
There, Shakspeare's self, with ev'ry garland crown'd,
Flew to those fairy climes his fancy sheen,
In musing hour ; his wayward sisters found,
And with their terrours dress'd the magic scene.
From them he sung, when, 'mid his bold design,
Before the Scot, afflicted, and aghast !
The shadowy kings of Banquo's fated line
Through the dark cave in gleamy pageant pass'd.
Proceed ! nor quit the tales which, simply told,
Could once so well my answering bosom pierce ;
Proceed, in forceful sounds, and colour bold,
The native legends of thy land rehearse ;
To such adapt thy lyre, and suit thy powerful verse.

In scenes like these, which, daring to depart
From sober truth, are still to Nature true,
And call forth fresh delight to Fancy's view,
Th' heroic Muse employ'd her Tasso's art.
How have I trembled, when, at Tancred's stroke,
Its gushing blood the gaping cypress pour'd !
When each live plant with mortal accents spoke,
And the wild blast upheav'd the vanish'd sword !

* One of the Hebrides is called the Isle of Pig-mies ; where it is reported that several miniature bones of the human species have been dug up in the ruins of a chapel there.

† Icolmkill, one of the Hebrides, where near sixty of the ancient Scottish, Irish, and Norwegian kings are interred.

‡ An aquatic bird like a goose, on the eggs of which the inhabitants of St. Kilda, another of the Hebrides, chiefly subsist.

How have I sat, when pip'd the pensive wind,
To hear his harp by British Fairfax strung !
Prevailing poet ! whose undoubting mind
Believ'd the magic wonders which he sung !
Hence, at each sound, imagination glows !
Hence, at each picture, vivid life starts here !
Hence his warm lay with softest sweetness flows !
Melting it flows, pure, murmuring, strong, and
clear,
And fills th' empassion'd heart, and wins th' harmonious ear !

All hail, ye scenes that o'er my soul prevail !
Ye splendid friths and lakes, which, far away,
Are by smooth Anan fill'd, or past'ral Tay,
Or Don's * romantic springs, at distance, hail !
The time shall come, when I, perhaps, may tread
Your lowly glens † o'erhung with spreading broom ;
Or o'er your stretching heaths, by Fancy led ;
Or o'er your mountains creep, in awful gloom !
Then will I dress once more the faded bower,
Where Jonson sat in Drummond's classic shade ‡ ;
Or crop, from Tiviotdale, each lyric flower, [laid !
And mourn, on Yarrow's banks, where Willy's
Meantime, ye powers, that on the plains which bore
The cordial youth, on Lothian's plains § attend !
Where'er Home dwells, on hill or lowly moor,
To him I lose, your kind protection lend,
And, touch'd with love like mine, preserve my absent friend !

ODE

ON

THE DEATH OF MR. THOMSON.

THE SCENE OF THE FOLLOWING STANZAS IS SUPPOSED TO LIE ON THE THAMES, NEAR RICHMOND.

In yonder grave a Druid lies
Where slowly winds the stealing wave :
The year's best sweets shall duteous rise,
To deck its poet's sylvan grave.

In yon deep bed of whispering reeds
His airy harp || shall now be laid,
That he, whose heart in sorrow bleeds,
May love through life the soothing shade.

Then maids and youths shall linger here,
And, while its sounds at distance swell,
Shall sadly seem in Pity's ear
To hear the woodland pilgrim's knell.

Remembrance oft shall haunt the shore
When Thames in summer wreaths is drest,
And oft suspend the dashing oar
To bid his gentle spirit rest !

* Three rivers in Scotland. † Valleys.

‡ Ben Jonson paid a visit on foot, in 1619, to the Scotch poet, Drummond, at his seat of Hawthornden, within four miles of Edinburgh.

§ Barrow, it seems, was at the Edinburgh University, which is in the county of Lothian.

|| The harp of Æolus, of which see a description
in the Castle of Indolence.

And oft as Ease and Health retire
 To breezy lawn, or forest deep,
 The friend shall view yon whitening spire*,
 And 'mid the varied landscape weep.

But thou, who own'st that earthly bed,
 Ah! what will every dirge avail?
 Or tears which Love and Pity shed,
 That mourn beneath the gliding sail!

Yet lives there one, whose heedless eye
 Shall scorn thy pale shrine glimmering near?
 With him, sweet bard, may Fancy die,
 And Joy desert the blooming year.

But thou, lorn stream, whose sullen tide
 No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend,
 Now waft me from the green hill's side
 Whose cold turf hides the buried friend!

* Mr. Thomson was buried in Richmond church.

And see, the fairy valleys fade,
 Dun Night has veil'd the solemn view!
 Yet once again, dear parted shade,
 Meek Nature's child, again adieu!

The genial meads† assign'd to bless
 Thy life, shall mourn thy early doom!
 Their hinds and shepherd-girls shall dress
 With simple hands thy rural tomb.

Long, long, thy stone, and pointed clay
 Shall melt the musing Briton's eyes,
 "O! vales, and wild woods," shall he say,
 "In yonder grave your Druid lies!"

† Mr. Thomson resided in the neighbourhood of Richmond some time before his death.

JOHN DYER.

JOHN DYER, an agreeable poet, was the son of a solicitor at Aberglasney, in Carmarthenshire, where he was born in 1700. He was brought up at Westminster-school, and was designed by his father for his own profession; but being at liberty, in consequence of his father's death, to follow his own inclination, he indulged what he took for a natural taste in painting, and entered as pupil to Mr. Richardson. After wandering for some time about South Wales and the adjacent counties as an itinerant artist, he appeared convinced that he should not attain to eminence in that profession. In 1727, he first made himself known as a poet, by the publication of his "Grongar Hill," descriptive of a scene afforded by his native country, which became one of the most popular pieces of its class, and has been admitted into numerous collections. Dyer then travelled to Italy, still in pursuit of professional improvement; and if he did not acquire this in any considerable degree, he improved his poetical taste, and laid in a store of new images. These he displayed in a poem of some length, published in 1740, which he entitled "The Ruins of Rome," that capital having been the principal object of his journeyings. Of this work it may be said, that it contains many passages of real poetry, and that the strain of moral and political reflection denotes a benevolent and enlightened mind.

His health being now in a delicate state, he was advised by his friends to take orders; and he was accordingly ordained by Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Lincoln; and, entering into the married state, he sat down on a small living in Leicestershire. This he exchanged for one in Lincolnshire; but the fenny country in which he was placed did not agree with his health, and he complained of the want of books and company. In 1757, he published his largest work, "The Fleece," a didactic poem, in four books, of which the first part is pastoral, the second mechanical, the third and fourth historical and geographical. This poem has never been very popular, many of its topics not being well adapted to poetry; yet the opinions of critics have varied concerning it. It is certain that there are many pleasing, and some grand and impressive passages in the work; but, upon the whole, the general feeling is, that the length of the performance necessarily imposed upon it a degree of tediousness.

Dyer did not long survive the completion of his book. He died of a gradual decline in 1758, leaving behind him, besides the reputation of an ingenious poet, the character of an honest, humane, and worthy person.

GRONGAR HILL.

SILENT nymph, with curious eye!
Who, the purple evening, lie
On the mountain's lonely van,
Beyond the noise of busy man;
Painting fair the form of things,
While the yellow linnet sings;
Or the tuneful nightingale
Charms the forest with her tale;—
Come, with all thy various dues,
Come and aid thy sister Muse;
Now, while Phœbus riding high,
Gives lustre to the land and sky!
Grongar Hill invites my song,
Draw the landscape bright and strong;
Grongar, in whose mossy cells
Sweetly musing Quiet dwells;
Grongar, in whose silent shade,
For the modest Muses made,

So oft I have, the evening still,
At the fountain of a rill,
Sate upon a flowery bed,
With my hand beneath my head;
While stray'd my eyes o'er Towy's flood,
Over mead and over wood,
From house to house, from hill to hill,
Till Contemplation had her fill.

About his chequer'd sides I wind,
And leave his brooks and meads behind,
And groves, and grottoes where I lay,
And vistas shooting beams of day:
Wide and wider spreads the vale,
As circles on a smooth canal:
The mountains round, unhappy fate!
Sooner or later, of all height,
Withdraw their summits from the skies,
And lessen as the others rise:
Still the prospect wider spreads,
Adds a thousand woods and meads;
Still it widens, widens still,
And sinks the newly-risen hill.

Now, I gain the mountain's brow,
What a landscape lies below !
No clouds, no vapours intervene ;
But the gay, the open scene
Does the face of Nature show,
In all the hues of Heaven's bow !
And, swelling to embrace the light,
Spreads around beneath the sight.

Old castles on the cliffs arise,
Proudly towering in the skies !
Rushing from the woods, the spires
Seem from hence ascending fires !
Half his beams Apollo sheds
On the yellow mountain-heads !
Gilds the fleeces of the flocks,
And glitters on the broken rocks !

Below me trees unnumber'd rise,
Beautiful in various dyes :
The gloomy pine, the poplar blue,
The yellow beech, the sable yew,
The slender fir that taper grows,
The sturdy oak with broad-spread boughs.
And beyond the purple grove,
Haunt of Phyllis, queen of love !
Gaudy as the opening dawn,
Lies a long and level lawn,
On which a dark hill, steep and high,
Holds and charms the wandering eye !
Deep are his feet in Towy's flood,
His sides are cloth'd with waving wood,
And ancient towers crown his brow,
That cast an awful look below ;
Whose ragged walls the ivy creeps,
And with her arms from falling keeps ;
So both a safety from the wind
On mutual dependence find.
'T is now th' raven's bleak abode ;
'T is now the apartment of the toad ;
And there the fox securely feeds ;
And there the poisonous adder breeds,
Conceal'd in ruins, moss, and weeds ;
While, ever and anon, there falls
Huge heaps of hoary moulder'd walls.
Yet Time has seen, that lifts the low,
And level lays the lofty brow,
Has seen this broken pile complete,
Big with the vanity of state ;
But transient is the smile of Fate !
A little rule, a little sway,
A sun-beam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

And see the rivers how they run,
Through woods and meads, in shade and sun,
Sometimes swift, sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go
A various journey to the deep,
Like human life, to endless sleep !
Thus is Nature's vesture wrought,
To instruct our wandering thought ;
Thus she dresses green and gay,
To disperse our cares away.

Ever charming, ever new,
When will the landscape tire the view !
The fountain's fall, the river's flow,
The woody valleys, warm and low ;
The windy summit, wild and high,
Roughly rushing on the sky !
The pleasant seat, the ruin'd tower,
The naked rock, the shady bower ;

The town and village, dome and farm,
Each give each a double charm,
As pearls upon an Ethiop's arm.

See on the mountain's southern side,
Where the prospect opens wide,
Where the evening gilds the tide ;
How close and small the hedges lie !
What streaks of meadows cross the eye !
A step methinks may pass the stream,
So little distant dangers seem ;
So we mistake the Future's face,
Ey'd through Hope's deluding glass ;
As yon summits soft and fair,
Clad in colours of the air,
Which to those who journey near,
Barren, brown, and rough appear ;
Still we tread the same coarse way,
The present 's still a cloudy day.

O may I with myself agree,
And never covet what I see ;
Content me with an humble shade,
My passions tam'd, my wishes laid ;
For, while our wishes wildly roll,
We banish quiet from the soul :
'T is thus the busy beat the air,
And misers gather wealth and care.

Now, ev'n now, my joys run high,
As on the mountain-turf I lie ;
While the wanton Zephyr sings,
And in the vale perfumes his wings ;
While the waters murmur deep ;
While the shepherd charms his sheep ;
While the birds unbounded fly,
And with music fill the sky,
Now, e'en now, my joys run high.

Be full, ye courts ; be great who will ;
Search for Peace with all your skill :
Open wide the lofty door,
Seek her on the marble floor.
In vain you search, she is not there ;
In vain ye search the domes of Care !
Grass and flowers Quiet treads,
On the meads, and mountain-heads,
Along with Pleasure, close ally'd,
Ever by each other's side :
And often, by the murmuring rill,
Hears the thrush, while all is still,
Within the groves of Grongar Hill.

THE RUINS OF ROME.

Aspice murorum moles, præruptaque saxa,
Obrutaque horrenti vesta theatra situ :
Hæc sunt Roma. Viden' velut ipsa cadavera tantæ
Urbis adhuc spirent imperiosa minas ?

JANUS VITALIS.

ENOUGH of Grongar, and the shady dales
Of winding Towy : Merlin's fabled haunt
I sing inglorious. Now the love of arts,
And what in metal or in stone remains
Of proud antiquity, through various realms
And various languages and ages fam'd,
Bears me remote, o'er Gallia's woody bounds,
O'er the cloud-piercing Alps remote ; beyond
The vale of Arno purpled with the vine,
Beyond the Umbrian and Etruscan hills,
To Latium's wide champain, forlorn and waste,
Where yellow Tiber his neglected wave

Mournfully rolls. Yet once again, my Muse,
Yet once again, and soar a loftier flight;
Lo the resistless theme, imperial Rome.

Fall'n, fall'n, a silent heap; her heroes all
Sunk in their urns; behold the pride of pomp,
The throne of nations fall'n; obscur'd in dust;
E'en yet majestic: the solemn scene
Elates the soul, while now the rising Sun
Flames on the ruins in the purer air
Towering aloft, upon the glittering plain,
Like broken rocks, a vast circumference:
Rent palaces, crush'd columns, rifled moles,
Fanes roll'd on fane, and tombs on buried tombs.

Deep lies in dust the Theban obelisk
Immense along the waste; minuter art,
Gliconian forms, or Phidian subtly fair,
O'erwhelming; as th' immense Leviathan
The finny brood, when near Ierne's shore
Outstretch'd, unwieldy, his island-length appears
Above the foamy flood. Globose and huge,
Gray mouldering temples swell, and wide o'ercast
The solitary landscape, hills and woods,
And boundless wilds; while the vine-mantled brows
The pendent goats unveil, regardless they
Of hourly peril, though the clefted domes
Tremble to every wind. The pilgrim oft
At dead of night, 'mid his orison hears
Aghast the voice of Time, disparting towers,
Tumbling all precipitate down-dash'd,
Rattling around, loud thundering to the Moon;
While murmurs soothe each awful interval
Of ever-falling waters; shrouded Nile,
Eridanus, and Tiber with his twins,
And palmy Euphrates*; they with drooping locks
Hang o'er their urns, and mournfully among
The plaintive-echoing ruins pour their streams.

Yet here, adventurous in the sacred search
Of ancient arts, the delicate of mind,
Curious and modest, from all climes resort.
Grateful society! with these I raise
The toilsome step up the proud Palatin,
Through spiry cypress groves, and towering pine,
Waving aloft o'er the big ruin's brows,
On numerous arches rear'd: and frequent stopp'd,
The sunk ground startles me with dreadful chasm,
Breathing forth darkness from the vast profound
Of aisles and halls, within the mountain's womb.
Nor these the nether works; all these beneath,
And all beneath the vales and hills around,
Extend the cavern'd sewers, massy, firm,
As the Sibylline grot beside the dead
Lake of Avernus; such the sewers huge,
Whither the great Tarquinian genius dooms
Each wave impure; and proud with added rains,
Hark how the mighty billows lash their vaults,
And thunder; how they heave their rocks in vain!
Though now incessant time has roll'd around
A thousand winters o'er the changeful world,
And yet a thousand since, th' indignant floods
Roar loud in their firm bounds, and dash and swell,
In vain; convey'd to Tiber's lowest wave.

Hence over airy plains, by crystal founts,
That weave their glittering waves with tuneful lapse,
Among the sleeky pebbles, agate clear,
Cerulean opiate, and the flowery vein
Of orient jasper, pleas'd I move along,
And vases boss'd, and huge inscriptive stones,

And intermingling vines; and figur'd nympha,
Floras and Chloes of delicious mould,
Cheering the darkness; and deep empty tombs,
And dells, and mouldering shrines, with old decay
Rustic and green, and wide-embowering shades,
Shot from the crooked clefts of nodding towers.
A solemn wilderness! with error sweet,
I wind the lingering step, where'er the path
Mazy conducts me, which the vulgar foot
O'er sculptures maim'd has made; Anubis, Sphinx,
Idols of antique guise, and horned Pan,
Terrific, monstrous shapes! preposterous gods
Of Fear and Ignorance, by the sculptor's hand
Hewn into form, and worshipp'd; as e'en now
Blindly they worship at their breathless mouths†
In varied appellations: men to these
(From depth to depth in darkening error fall'n)
At length ascrib'd th' inapplicable name.

How doth it please and fill the memory
With deeds of brave renown, while on each hand
Historic urns and breathing statues rise,
And speaking busts! Sweet Scipio, Marius stern,
Pompey superb, the spirit-stirring form
Of Cæsar raptur'd with the charm of rule
And boundless fame; impatient for exploits,
His eager eyes upcast, he soars in thought
Above all height: and his own Brutus see,
Desponding Brutus, dubious of the right,
In evil days, of faith, of public weal,
Solicitous and sad. Thy next regard
Be Tully's graceful attitude; unprais'd,
His outstretch'd arm he waves, in act to speak
Before the silent masters of the world,
And Eloquence arrays him. There behold,
Prepar'd for combat in the front of war,
The pious brothers; jealous Alba stands
In fearful expectation of the strife,
And youthful Rome intent: the kindred foes
Fall on each other's neck in silent tears;
In sorrowful benevolence embrace—
Howe'er, they soon unsheath the flashing sword,
Their country calls to arms;—now all in vain
The mother clasps the knee, and e'en the fair
Now weeps in vain; their country calls to arms.
Such virtue Clelia, Cocles, Manlius, rous'd:
Such were the Fabii, Decii; so inspir'd,
The Scipios battled, and the Gracchi spoke:
So rose the Roman state. Me now, of these Deep musing, high ambitious thoughts inflame
Greatly to serve my country, distant land,
And build me virtuous fame; nor shall the dust
Of these fall'n piles with show of sad decay
Avert the good resolve, mean argument,
The fate alone of matter.—Now the brow
We gain enraptur'd; beauteously distinct†
The numerous porticoes and domes upswell,
With obelisks and columns interpos'd,
And pine, and fir, and oak: so fair a scene
Sees not the dervise from the spiral tomb
Of ancient Chammos, while his eye beholds
Proud Memphis' reliques o'er th' Egyptian plain:
Nor hoary hermit from Hymettus' brow,
Though graceful Athens in the vale beneath.
Along the windings of the Muse's stream,
Lucid Illyssus weeps her silent schools,

* Fountains at Rome adorned with the statues of those rivers.

And groves, unvisited by bard or sage.
 Amid the towery ruins, huge, supreme,
 Th' enormous amphitheatre behold,
 Mountainous pile ! o'er whose capacious womb
 Pours the broad firmament its varied light ;
 While from the central floor the seats ascend
 Round above round, slow-widening to the verge
 A circuit vast and high ; nor less had held
 Imperial Rome, and her attendant realms,
 When drunk with rule she will'd the fierce delight,
 And op'd the gloomy caverns, whence out-rush'd
 Before th' innumerable shouting crowd
 The fiery, maddened, tyrants of the wilds,
 Lions and tygers, wolves and elephants,
 And desperate men, more fell. Abhor'd intent !
 By frequent converse with familiar death,
 To kindle brutal daring apt for war ;
 To lock the breast, and steel th' obdurate heart
 Amid the piercing cries of sore distress
 Impenetrable. — But away thine eye ;
 Behold yon steepy cliff ; the modern pile
 Perchance may now delight, while that *, rever'd
 In ancient days, the page alone declares,
 Or narrow coin through dim cerulean rust.
 The fane was Jove's, its spacious golden roof,
 O'er thick-surrounding temples beaming wide,
 Appear'd, as when above the morning hills
 Half the round Sun ascends ; and tower'd aloft,
 Sustain'd by columns huge, innumerable
 As cedars proud on Canaan's verdant heights
 Darkening their idols, when Astarte lur'd
 Too-prosperous Israel from his living strength.

And next regard yon venerable dome,
 Which virtuous Latium, with erroneous aim,
 Rais'd to her various deities, and nam'd
 Pantheon ; plain and round ; of this our world
 Majestic emblem ; with peculiar grace
 Before its ample orb, projected stands
 The many-pillar'd portal : noblest work
 Of human skill : here, curious architect,
 If thou essay'st, ambitious, to surpass
 Palladius, Angelus, or British Jones,
 On these fair walls extend the certain scale,
 And turn th' instructive compass : careful mark
 How far in hidden art, the noble plain
 Extends, and where the lovely forms commence
 Of flowing sculpture : nor neglect to note
 How range the taper columns, and what weight
 Their leafy brows sustain : fair Corinth first
 Boasted their order, which Callimachus
 (Reclining studious on Asopus' banks
 Beneath an urn of some lamented nymph)
 Haply compos'd ; the urn with foliage curl'd
 Thinly conceal'd, the chapter inform'd.

See the tall obelisks from Memphis old,
 One stone enormous each, or Thebes convey'd ;
 Like Albion's spires they rush into the skies.
 And there the temple †, where the summon'd state
 In deep of night conven'd : e'en yet methinks
 The vehement orator in rent attire
 Persuasion pours, Ambition sinks her crest ;
 And lo the villain, like a troubled sea,
 That tosses up her mire ! Ever disguis'd,
 Shall Treason walk ? Shall proud Oppression yoke
 The neck of Virtue ? Lo the wretch, abash'd,
 Self-betray'd Catiline ! O Liberty,

Parent of Happiness, celestial-born ;
 When the first man became a living soul,
 His sacred genius thou ; — be Britain's care ;
 With her, secure, prolong thy lov'd retreat ;
 Thence bless mankind ; while yet among her sons,
 E'en yet there are, to shield thine equal laws,
 Whose bosoms kindle at the sacred names
 Of Cecil, Raleigh, Walsingham, and Drake.
 May others more delight in tuneful airs ;
 In masque and dance excel ; to sculptur'd stone
 Give with superior skill the living look ;
 More pompous piles erect, or pencil soft
 With warmer touch the visionary board :
 But thou, thy nobler Britons teach to rule ;
 To check the ravage of tyrannic sway ;
 To quell the proud ; to spread the joys of peace,
 And various blessings of ingenious trade.
 Be these our arts ; and ever may we guard,
 Ever defend thee with undaunted heart !
 Inestimable good ! who giv'st us Truth,
 Whose hand upleads to light, divinest Truth,
 Array'd in every charm : whose hand benign
 Teaches unwearied Toil to clothe the fields,
 And on his various fruits inscribes the name
 Of Property : O nobly hail'd of old
 By thy majestic daughters, Judah fair,
 And Tyrus and Sidonia, lovely nymphs,
 And Libya bright, and all-enchancing Greece,
 Whose numerous towns and isles, and peopled seas,
 Rejoic'd around her lyre ; th' heroic note
 (Smit with sublime delight) Ausonia caught,
 And plann'd imperial Rome. Thy hand benign
 Rear'd up her towery battlements in strength ;
 Bent her wide bridges o'er the swelling stream
 Of Tuscan Tiber ; thine those solemn domes
 Devoted to the voice of humbler prayer !
 And thine those piles ‡ undeck'd, capacious, vast,
 In days of dearth where tender Charity
 Dispens'd her timely succours to the poor.
 Thine too those musically falling fountains,
 To slake the clammy lip ; adown they fall,
 Musical ever ; while from yon blue hills,
 Dim in the clouds, the radiant aqueducts
 Turn their innumerable arches o'er
 The spacious desert, brightening in the Sun,
 Proud and more proud in their august approach :
 High o'er irriguous vales and woods and towns,
 Glide the soft whispering waters in the wind,
 And here united pour their silver streams
 Among the figur'd rocks, in murmuring falls,
 Musical ever. These thy beauteous works :
 And what beside felicity could tell
 Of human benefit : more late the rest ;
 At various times their turrets chanc'd to rise,
 When impious Tyranny vouchsaf'd to smile.

Behold by Tiber's flood, where modern Rome §
 Couches beneath the ruins : there of old
 With arms and trophies gleam'd the field of Mars :
 There to their daily sports the noble youth
 Rush'd emulous ; to fling the pointed lance ;
 To vault the steed ; or with the kindling wheel
 In dusty whirlwinds sweep the trembling goal ;
 Or, wrestling, cope with adverse swelling breasts,
 Strong grappling arms, close heads, and distant feet ;
 Or clash the lifted gauntlets : there they form'd
 Their ardent virtues : in the bossy piles,

‡ The public granaries.

§ Modern Rome stands chiefly on the old Campus Martius.

The proud triumphal arches ; all their wars,
 Their conquests, honours, in the sculptures live.
 And see from every gate those ancient roads,
 With tombs high verg'd, the solemn paths of Fame :
 Deserve they not regard ? O'er whose broad flints
 Such crowds have roll'd, so many storms of war ;
 So many pomps ; so many wondering realms :
 Yet still through mountains pierc'd, o'er valleys
 rais'd,

In even state, to distant seas around, [Peace *,
 They stretch their pavements. Lo, the fane of Built by that prince, who to the trust of power
 Was honest, the delight of human-kind.
 Three nodding aisles remain ; the rest a heap
 Of sand and weeds ; her shrines, her radiant roofs,
 And columns proud, that from her spacious floor,
 As from a shining sea, majestic rose
 A hundred foot aloft, like stately beech
 Around the brim of Dion's glassy lake,
 Charming the mimic painter : on the walls
 Hung Salem's sacred spoils ; the golden board,
 And golden trumpets, now conceal'd, entomb'd
 By the sunk roof. — O'er which in distant view
 Th' Etruscan mountains swell, with ruins crown'd
 Of ancient towns ; and blue Soracte spires,
 Wrapping his sides in tempests. Eastward hence,
 Nigh where the Cestian pyramid † divides
 The mouldering wall, beyond yon fabric huge,
 Whose dust the solemn antiquarian turns,
 And thence, in broken sculptures cast abroad,
 Like Sibyl's leaves, collects the builder's name
 Rejoic'd, and the green medals frequent found
 Doom Caracalla to perpetual fame :
 The stately pines, that spread their branches wide
 In the dun ruins of its ample halls ‡,
 Appear but tufts ; as may whate'er is high
 Sink in comparison, minute and vile.

These, and unnumber'd, yet their brows uplift,
 Rent of their graces ; as Britannia's oaks
 On Merlin's mount, or Snowdon's rugged sides,
 Stand in the clouds, their branches scatter'd round,
 After the tempest ; Mausoleums, Cirques,
 Naumachios, Forums ; Trajan's column tall,
 From whose low base the sculptures wind aloft,
 And lead through various toils, up the rough steep,
 Its hero to the skies : and his dark tower §
 Whose execrable hand the city fir'd,
 And while the dreadful conflagration blaz'd,
 Play'd to the flames ; and Phœbus' letter'd dome || ;
 And the rough reliques of Carinæ's street,
 Where now the shepherd to his nibbling sheep
 Sits piping with his oaten reed ; as erst
 There pip'd the shepherd to his nibbling sheep,
 When th' humble roof Anchises' son explor'd
 Of good Evander, wealth-despising king,
 Amid the thickets : so revolves the scene ;
 So Time ordains, who rolls the things of pride
 From dust again to dust. Behold that heap
 Of mouldering urns (their ashes blown away,
 Dust of the mighty) the same story tell ;
 And at its base, from whence the serpent glides
 Down the green desert street, yon hoary monk
 Laments the same, the vision as he views,
 The solitary, silent, solemn scene,

|| The Palatin library.

Where Cæsars, heroes, peasants, hermits lie,
 Blended in dust together ; where the slave
 Rests from his labours ; where th' insulting proud
 Resigns his power ; the miser drops his hoard ;
 Where human folly sleeps. — There is a mood,
 (I sing not to the vacant and the young,)
 There is a kindly mood of melancholy,
 That wings the soul, and points her to the skies ;
 When tribulation clothes the child of man,
 When age descends with sorrow to the grave,
 'T is sweetly-soothing sympathy to pain,
 A gently-wakening call to health and ease.
 How musical ! when all-devouring Time,
 Here sitting on his throne of ruins hoar,
 While winds and tempests sweep his various lyre,
 How sweet thy diapason, Melancholy !
 Cool evening comes ; the setting Sun displays
 His visible great round between yon towers,
 As through two shady cliffs ; away, my Muse,
 Though yet the prospect pleases, ever new
 In vast variety, and yet delight
 The many-figur'd sculptures of the path
 Half beauteous, half effac'd ; the traveller
 Such antique marbles to his native land
 Oft hence conveys ; and every realm and state
 With Rome's august remains, heroes and gods,
 Deck their long galleries and winding groves ;
 Yet miss we not th' innumerable thefts,
 Yet still profuse of graces teems the waste.

Suffice it now th' Esquilian mount to reach
 With weary wing, and seek the sacred rests
 Of Maro's humble tenement ; a low
 Plain wall remains ; a little sun-gilt heap,
 Grotesque and wild ; the gourd and olive brown
 Weave the light roof : the gourd and olive fan
 Their amorous foliage, mingling with the vine,
 Who drops her purple clusters through the green.
 Here let me lie, with pleasing fancy sooth'd :
 Here flow'd his fountain ; here his laurels grew ;
 Here oft the meek good man, the lofty bard
 Fram'd the celestial song, or social walk'd
 With Horace and the ruler of the world :
 Happy Augustus ! who, so well inspir'd,
 Couldst throw thy pomps and royalties aside,
 Attentive to the wise, the great of soul,
 And dignify thy mind. Thrice glorious days,
 Auspicious to the Muses ! then rever'd,
 Then hallow'd was the fount, or secret shade,
 Or open mountain, or whatever scene
 The poet chose, to tune th' ennobling rhyme
 Melodious ; e'en the rugged sons of war,
 E'en the rude hinds rever'd the poet's name :
 But now — another age, alas ! is ours —
 Yet will the Muse a little longer soar,
 Unless the clouds of care weigh down her wing,
 Since Nature's stores are shut with cruel hand,
 And each aggrieves his brother ; since in vain
 The thirsty pilgrim at the fountain asks [dain. —

Sportive ; while oft the gaunt and rugged wolf
Turn'd her stretch'd neck and form'd your tender
limbs ;

So taught of Jove e'en the fell savage fed
Your sacred infancies, your virtues, toils,
The conquests, glories, of th' Ausonian state,
Wrapp'd in their secret seeds. Each kindred soul,
Robust and stout, ye grapple to your hearts,
And little Rome appears. Her cots arise,
Green twigs of osier weave the slender walls,
Green rushes spread the roofs ; and here and there
Opens beneath the rock the gloomy cave.

Elate with joy Etruscan Tiber views
Her spreading scenes enamelling his waves,
Her huts and hollow dells, and flocks and herds,
And gathering swains ; and rolls his yellow car
To Neptune's court with more majestic train.

Her speedy growth alarm'd the states around,
Jealous ; yet soon, by wondrous virtue won,
They sink into her bosom. From the plough
Rose her dictators ; fought, o'ercame, return'd,
Yes, to the plough return'd, and hail'd their peers ;
For then no private pomp, no household state,
The public only swell'd the generous breast.
Who has not heard the Fabian heroes sung ?
Dentatus' scars, or Mutius' flaming hand ?
How Manlius sav'd the Capitol ? the choice
Of steady Regulus ? As yet they stood,
Simple of life ; as yet seducing wealth
Was unexplor'd, and shame of poverty
Yet unimagined. — Shine not all the fields
With various fruitage ? murmur not the brooks
Along the flowery valleys ? They, content,
Feasted at Nature's hand, indelicate,
Blithe, in their easy taste ; and only sought
To know their duties ; that their only strife,
Their generous strife, and greatly to perform.
They through all shapes of peril and of pain,
Intent on honour, dar'd in thickest death
To snatch the glorious deed. Nor Trebia quell'd,
Nor Thrasymene, nor Cannæ's bloody field,
Their dauntless courage ; storming Hannibal
In vain the thunder of the battle roll'd,
The thunder of the battle they return'd
Back on his Punic shores ; till Carthage fell,
And danger fled afar. The city gleam'd
With precious spoils : alas, prosperity !
Ah, baneful state ! yet ebb'd not all their strength
In soft luxurious pleasures ; proud desire
Of boundless sway, and feverish thirst of gold,
Rous'd them again to battle. Beauteous Greece,
Torn from her joys, in vain with languid arm
Half rais'd her rusty shield ; nor could avail
The sword of Dacia, nor the Parthian dart ;
Nor yet the car of that fam'd British chief,
Which seven brave years, beneath the doubtful wing
Of Victory, dreadful roll'd its griding wheels
Over the bloody war : the Roman arms
Triumph'd, till Fame was silent to their foes.

And now the world unrivall'd they enjoy'd
In proud security : the crested helm,
The plated greave and corslet hung unbrac'd ;
Nor clank'd their arms, the spear and sounding shield,
But on the glittering trophy to the wind.

Dissolv'd in ease and soft delights they lie,
Till every sun annoys, and every wind
Has chilling force, and every rain offends :
For now the frame no more is girt with strength
Masculine, nor in lustiness of heart
Laughs at the winter storm, and summer-beam,
Superior to their rage : enfeebling vice

Withers each nerve, and opens every pore
To painful feeling : flowery bowers they seek
(As ether prompts, as the sick sense approves)
Or cool Nymphæan grotts ; or tepid baths
(Taught by the soft Ionians) ; they, along
The lawny vale, of every beauteous stone,
Pile in the roseat air with fond expense :
Through silver channels glide the vagrant waves,
And fall on silver beds crystalline down,
Melodious murmuring ; while Luxury
Over their naked limbs with wanton hand
Sheds roses, odours, sheds unheeded bane.

Swift is the flight of wealth ; unnumber'd wants,
Brood of voluptuousness, cry out aloud
Necessity, and seek the splendid bribe.
The citron board, the bowl emboss'd with gems,
And tender foliage wildly wreath'd around
Of seeming ivy, by that artful hand,
Corinthian Thericles ; whate'er is known
Of rarest acquisition ; Tyrian garbs,
Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,
And flavour'd Chian wines with incense fum'd
To slake patrician thirst ; for these, their rights
In the vile streets they prostitute to sale,
Their ancient rights, their dignities, their laws,
Their native glorious freedom. Is there none,
Is there no villain, that will bind the neck
Stretch'd to the yoke ? they come ; the market throng.
But who has most by fraud or force amass'd ?
Who most can charm corruption with his doles ?
He be the monarch of the state ; and lo !
Didius *, vile usurer, through the crowd he mounts,
Beneath his feet the Roman eagle cowers,
And the red arrows fill his grasp uncouth.
O Britons, O my countrymen, beware ;
Gird, gird your hearts ; the Romans once were free,
Were brave, were virtuous. — Tyranny, howe'er,
Deign'd to walk forth awhile in pageant state,
And with licentious pleasures fed the rout,
The thoughtless many : to the wanton sound
Of fifes and drums they danc'd, or in the shade
Sung Cæsar, great and terrible in war,
Immortal Cæsar ! Lo, a god, a god,
He cleaves the yielding skies ! Cæsar meanwhile
Gathers the ocean pebbles ; or the gnat
Enrag'd pursues ; or at his lonely meal
Starves a wide province ; tastes, dislikes, and flings
To dogs and sycophants. A god, a god !
The flowery shades and shrines obscene return.

But see along the north the tempests swell
O'er the rough Alps, and darken all their snows !
Sudden the Goth and Vandal, dreaded names,
Rush as the breach of waters, whelming all
Their domes, their villas ; down the festive piles,
Down fall their Parian porches, gilded baths,
And roll before the storm in clouds of dust.

Vain end of human strength, of human skill,
Conquest, and triumph, and domain, and pomp,
And ease, and luxury ! O Luxury,
Bane of elated life, of affluent states,
What dreary change, what ruin is not thine ?
How doth thy bowl intoxicate the mind !
To the soft entrance of thy rosy cave
How dost thou lure the fortunate and great !
Dreadful attraction ! while behind thee gapes
Th' unfathomable gulph where Asæra lies
O'erwhelm'd, forgotten ; and high-boasting Cham ;
And Elam's haughty pomp ; and beauteous Greece ;
And the great queen of Earth, imperial Rome.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE, a popular and agreeable poet, was born at Hales-Owen, Shropshire, in 1714. His father was an uneducated gentleman farmer, who cultivated an estate of his own, called the Leasowes. William, after passing through other instruction, was removed to that of a clergyman at Solihull, from whom he acquired a fund of classical literature, together with a taste for the best English writers. In 1732 he was entered of Pembroke College, Oxford, where he formed one of a set of young men who met in the evenings at one another's chambers, and read English works in polite literature. He also began to exercise his poetical talent upon some light topics; but coming to the possession of his paternal property, with some augmentation, he indulged himself in rural retirement, and forgetting his calls to college residence, he took up his abode at a house of his own, and commenced gentleman. In 1737 he printed anonymously a small volume of juvenile poems, which was little noticed. His first visit to London, in 1740, introduced him to the acquaintance of Dodsley, who printed his "Judgment of Hercules," dedicated to his Hagley neighbour, Mr. (afterwards Lord) Littleton. It was followed by a work written before it, "The School-mistress," a piece in Spenser's style and stanza, the heroine of which was a village dame, supposed to have given him his first instruction. The vein of benevolence and good sense, and the touches of the pathetic, by which this performance is characterised, render it extremely pleasing, and perhaps place it at the head of his compositions.

After amusing himself with a few rambles to places of public resort, Shenstone now sat down to the life which he invariably pursued, and which consisted in improving the picturesque beauties of the Leasowes, exercising his pen in casual effusions of verse and prose, and cultivating such society as lay within his reach. The fame of the Leasowes was widely spread by an elaborate description of Dodsley's, which drew multitudes of visitors to the place; and the house being originally only a farm, became inadequate to his grounds, and required enlargement. Hence he lay continually under the pressure of narrow circumstances, which preyed upon his spirits, and rendered him by no means a happy inhabitant of the little Eden he had created. Gray, from the perusal of his letters, deduces the following, perhaps too satirical, account. "Poor man! he was always wishing for money, for fame, and other distinctions; and his whole philosophy consisted in living against his will in retirement, and in a place which his taste had adorned, but which he only enjoyed when people of note came to see and commend it."

Shenstone died of a fever in February, 1763, in his fiftieth year, and was interred in the churchyard of Hales-Owen. Monuments to his memory were erected by several persons who loved the man, and esteemed his poetry. Of the latter, the general opinion is now nearly uniform. It is regarded as commonly correct, elegant, melodious, and tender in sentiment, and often pleasing and natural in description, but verging to the languid and feeble. His prose writings, published in a separate volume, display good sense and cultivated taste, and sometimes contain new and acute observations on mankind.

THE SCHOOL-MISTRESS.

IN IMITATION OF SPENSER.

*Auditæ voces, vagitus et ingens,
Infantumque animæ flentes in limine primo. VIAG.*

Advertisement.

What particulars in Spenser were imagined most proper for the author's imitation on this occasion, are his language, his simplicity, his manner of description, and a peculiar tenderness of sentiment remarkable throughout his works.

AS me! full sorely is my heart forlorn,
To think how modest Worth neglected lies
While partial Fame doth with her blasts adorn
Such deeds alone, as pride and pomp disguise;
Deeds of ill sort, and mischievous emprise:

Lend me thy clarion, goddess! let me try
To sound the praise of Merit, ere it dies,
Such as I oft have chaunced to espy,
Lost in the dreary shades of dull Obscurity.

In every village mark'd with little spire,
Embower'd in trees, and hardly known to Fame,
There dwells in lowly shed, and mean attire,
A matron old, whom we School-mistress name;
Who boasts unruly brats with birch to tame;
They griev'd sore, in piteous durance pent,
Aw'd by the power of this relentless dame;
And oft-times, on vagaries idly bent,
For unkempt hair, or task unconn'd, are sorely shent.

And all in sight doth rise a birchen tree,
Which Learning near her little dome did stowe;
Whilom a twig of small regard to see,
Though now so wide its waving branches flow;

And work the simple vassal's mickle woe ;
For not a wind might curl the leaves that blew,
But their limbs shudder'd, and their pulse beat
low ;

And as they look'd they found their horror grew,
And shap'd it into rods, and tingled at the view.

So have I seen (who has not, may conceive)
A lifeless phantom near a garden plac'd ;
So doth it wanton birds of peace bereave,
Of sport, of song, of pleasure, of repast ;
They start, they stare, they wheel, they look aghast ;
Sad servitude ! such comfortless annoy
May no bold Briton's riper age e'er taste !
Ne superstition clog his dance of joy,
No vision empty, vain, his native bliss destroy.

Near to this dome is found a patch so green,
On which the tribe their gambols do display ;
And at the door imprisoning-board is seen,
Lest weakly wights of smaller size should stray ;
Eager, perdie, to bask in sunny day !
The noises intermixed, which thence resound,
Do Learning's little tenement betray ;
Where sits the dame, disguis'd in look profound,
And eyes her fairy throng, and turns her wheel
around.

Her cap, far whiter than the driven snow,
Emblem right meet of decency does yield :
Her apron dy'd in grain, as blue, I trowe,
As is the hare-bell that adorns the field :
And in her hand, for sceptre, she does wield
Tway birchen sprays ; with anxious fear entwin'd,
With dark distrust, and sad repentance fill'd ;
And stedfast hate, and sharp affliction join'd,
And fury uncontroul'd, and chastisement unkind.

Few but have ken'd, in semblance meet pour-
tray'd,
The childish faces of old Eol's train ;
Libs, Notus, Auster : these in frowns array'd,
How then would fare or Earth, or Sky, or Main,
Were the stern god to give his slaves the rein ?
And were not she rebellious breasts to quell,
And were not she her statutes to maintain,
'The cot no more, I ween, were deem'd the cell,
Where comely peace of mind, and decent order dwell.

A russet stole was o'er her shoulders thrown ;
A russet kirtle fenc'd the nipping air ;
'T was simple russet, but it was her own ;
'T was her own country bred the flock so fair !
'T was her own labour did the fleece prepare ;
And, sooth to say, her pupils, rang'd around,
Through pious awe, did term it passing rare ;
For they in gaping wonderment abound,
And think, no doubt, she been the greatest wight on ground.

Albeit ne flattery did corrupt her truth,
Ne pompous title did debauch her ear ;
Goody, good-woman, gossip, n'aunt, forsooth,
Or dame, the sole additions she did hear ;
Yet these she challeng'd, these she held right dear :
Ne would esteem him act as mought behove,
Who should not honour'd eld with these revere :
For never title yet so mean could prove,
But there was eke a mind which did that title love.

One ancient hen she took delight to feed,
The plodding pattern of the busy dame ;
Which, ever and anon, impell'd by need,
Into her school, begirt with chickens, came !
Such favour did her past deportment claim :
And, if Neglect had lavish'd on the ground
Fragment of bread, she would collect the same ;
For well she knew, and quaintly could expound,
What sin it were to waste the smallest crumb she found.

Herbs too she knew, and well of each could speak
That in her garden sipp'd the silvery dew ;
Where no vain flower disclos'd a gaudy streak ;
But herbs for use, and physic, not a few,
Of grey renown, within those borders grew :
The tufted basil, pun-provoking thyme,
Fresh baum, and marygold of cheerful hue ;
'The lowly gill, that never dares to climb ;
And more I fain would sing, disdaining here to rhyme.

Yet euphrasy may not be left unsung,
That gives dim eyes to wander leagues around ;
And pungent radish, biting infants' tongue ;
And plantain ribb'd, that heals the reaper's wound ;
And marjoram sweet, in shepherd's posie found ;
And lavender, whose spikes of azure bloom
Shall be, ere-while, in arid bundles bound,
To lurk amidst the labours of her loom,
And crown her kerchiefs clean, with mickle rare perfume.

And here trim rosemarine, that whilom crown'd
The daintiest garden of the proudest peer ;
Ere, driven from its envied site, it found
A sacred shelter for its branches here ;
Where edg'd with gold its glittering skirts appear,
Oh wassel days ! O customs meet and well !
Ere this was banish'd from its lofty sphere :
Simplicity then sought this humble cell, [dwell
Nor ever would she more withthane and lordling

Here oft the dame, on Sabbath's decent eve,
Hymned such psalms as Sternhold forth did mete,
If winter 't were, she to her hearth did cleave,
But in her garden found a summer-seat :
Sweet melody ! to hear her then repeat
How Israel's sons, beneath a foreign king,
While taunting foe-men did a song entreat,
All, for the nonce, untuning every string,
Uphung their useless lyres — small heart had they
to sing.

For she was just, and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous deed ;
And in those elfins' ears, would oft deplore
The times, when Truth by Popish rage did bleed ;
And tortious death was true Devotion's meed ;
And simple Faith in iron chains did mourn,
That nould on wooden image place her creed ;
And lawny saints in smouldering flames did burn :
Ah ! dearest Lord, forefend, thilk days should e'er return.

In elbow-chair, like that of Scottish stem
By the sharp tooth of cankering eld defac'd,
In which, when he receives his diadem,
Our sovereign prince and liefest liege is plac'd,
The matron sate ; and some with rank she grac'd,

(The source of children's and of courtiers' pride!)
Redress'd affronts, for vile affronts there pass'd;
And warn'd them not the fretful to deride,
But love each other dear, whatever them betide.

Right well she knew each temper to descry;
To thwart the proud, and the submits to raise;
Some with vile copper-prize exalt on high,
And some entice with pittance small of praise,
And other some with baleful sprig she 'frays:
E'en absent, she the reins of power doth hold,
While with quaint arts the giddy crowd she sways:
Forewarn'd, if little bird their pranks behold,
'T will whisper in her ear, and all the scene unfold.

Lo now with state she utters the command!
Eftsoons the urchins to their tasks repair;
'Their books of stature small they take in hand,
Which with pellucid horn secured are,
To save from finger wet the letters fair:
The work so gay that on their back is seen,
St. George's high achievements does declare;
On which thilk wight that has y-gazing been,
Kens the forth-coming rod, unpleasing sight, I ween!

Ah luckless he, and born beneath the beam
Of evil star! it irks me whilst I write:
As erst the bard * by Mulla's silver stream,
Oft, as he told of deadly dolorous plight,
Sigh'd as he sung, and did in tears indite.
For brandishing the rod, she doth begin
To loose the brogues, the stripling's late delight!
And down they drop; appears his dainty skin,
Fair as the furry-coat of whitest ermilin.

O ruthless scene! when from a nook obscure,
His little sister doth his peril see:
All playful as she sate, she grows demure;
She finds full soon her wonted spirits flee;
She meditates a prayer to set him free:
Nor gentle pardon could this dame deny
(If gentle pardon could with dames agree)
To her sad grief that swells in either eye,
And wings her so that all for pity she could dye.

No longer can she now her shrieks command;
And hardly she forbears, through awful fear,
To rushen forth, and, with presumptuous hand,
To stay harsh Justice in its mid career.
On thee she calls, on thee her parent dear!
(Ah! too remote to ward the shameful blow!)
She sees no kind domestic visage near,
And soon a flood of tears begins to flow;
And gives a loose at last to unavailing woe.

But ah! what pen his piteous plight may trace?
Or what device his loud laments explain?
The form uncouth of his disguised face?
The pallid hue that dyes his looks amain?
The plenteous shower that does his cheek distain?
When he, in abject wise, implores the dame,
Ne hopeth aught of sweet reprieve to gain;
Or when from high she levels well her aim,
And, through the thatch, his cries each falling stroke proclaim.

The other tribe, aghast, with sore dismay,
Attend, and conn their tasks with mickle care:

* Spenser.

By turns, astony'd, every twig survey,
And, from their fellows' hateful wounds, beware;
Knowing, I wist, how each the same may share;
Till fear has taught them a performance meet,
And to the well-known chest the dame repair;
Whence oft with sugar'd cates she doth them greet,
And ginger-bread y-rare; now certes, doubly sweet!

See to their seats they hie with-merry glee,
And in besecmly order sitten there;
All but the wight of bum y-galled, he
Abhorreth bench, and stool, and fourm, and chair;
(This hand in mouth y-fix'd, that rends his hair;)
And eke with snubs profound, and heaving breast,
Convulsions intermitting! does declare
His grievous wrong; his dame's unjust behest;
And scorns her offer'd love and shuns to be caress'd.

His face besprent with liquid crystal shines,
His blooming face that seems a purple flower,
Which low to earth its drooping head declines,
All smear'd and sullied by a vernal shower.
O the hard bosoms of despotic power!
All, all, but she, the author of his shame,
All, all, but she, regret this mournful hour:
Yet hence the youth, and hence the flower shall claim,
If so I deem aright, transcending worth and fame.

Behind some door, in melancholy thought,
Mindless of food, he, dreary caitiff! pines,
Ne for his fellows' joyaunce careth aught,
But to the wind all merriment resigns;
And deems it shame, if he to peace inclines:
And many a sullen look ascanse is sent,
Which for his dame's annoyance he designs;
And still the more to pleasure him she's bent,
The more doth he, perverse, her haviour past resent.

Ah me! how much I fear lest pride it be!
But if that pride it be, which thus inspires,
Beware, ye dames, with nice discernment see,
Ye quench not too the sparks of nobler fires:
Ah! better far than all the Muses' lyres,
All coward arts, is Valour's generous heat;
The firm fixt breast which fit and right requires,
Like Vernon's patriot soul! more justly great
Than Craft that pimps for ill, or flowery false Deceit.

Yet nurs'd with skill, what dazzling fruits appear!
E'en now sagacious Foresight points to show
A little bench of heedless bishops here,
And there a chancellor in embryo,
Or bard sublime, if bard may e'er be so,
As Milton, Shakspeare, names that ne'er shall die!
Though now he crawl along the ground so low,
Nor weeting how the Muse should soar on high,
Wisheth, poor starveling elf! his paper kite may fly.

And this perhaps, who, censuring the design,
Low lays the house which that of cards doth build,
Shall Dennis be! if rigid Fate incline,
And many an epic to his rage shall yield;
And many a poet quit th' Aonian field;
And, sour'd by age, profound he shall appear,
As he who now with 'sdainful fury thrill'd
Surveys mine work; and levels many a sneer,
And furls his wrinkly front, and cries, "What stuff is here?"

But now Dan Phœbus gains the middle skie,
And Liberty unbars her prison-door ;
And like a rushing torrent out they fly,
And now the grassy cirque had cover'd o'er
With boisterous revel-rout and wild uproar ;
A thousand ways in wanton rings they run,
Heaven shield their short-liv'd pastimes, I implore !

For well may Freedom erst so dearly won,
Appear to British elf more gladsome than the Sun.

Enjoy, poor imps ! enjoy your sportive trade,
And chase gay flies, and cull the fairest flowers ;
For when my bones in grass-green sods are laid,
For never may ye taste more careless hours
In knightly castles, or in ladies' bowers.
O vain to seek delight in earthly thing !
But most in courts where proud Ambition towers ;
Deluded wight ! who weens fair Peace can spring
Beneath the pompous dome of kesar or of king.

See in each sprite some various bent appear !
These rudely carol most incondite lay ;
Those sauntering on the green, with jocund leer
Salute the stranger passing on his way ;
Some builden fragile tenements of clay ;
Some to the standing lake their courses bend,
With pebbles smooth at duck and drake to play ;
Thilk to the huxter's savory cottage tend,
In pastry kings and queens th' allotted mite to spend.

Here, as each season yields a different store,
Each season's stores in order ranged been ;
Apples with cabbage-net y-cover'd o'er,
Galling full sore th' unmoney'd wight, are seen ;
And goose-b'rie clad in livery red or green ;
And here of lovely dye, the catharine pear,
Fine pear ! as lovely for thy juice, I ween :
O may no wight e'er pennyless come there,
Lest smit with ardent love he pine with hopeless care !

See ! cherries here, ere cherries yet abound,
With thread so white in tempting posies ty'd,
Scattering like blooming maid their glances round,
With pamp'ring look draw little eyes aside ;
And must be bought, though penury betide,
The plum all azure and the nut all brown,
And here each season do those cakes abide,
Whose honour'd names * th' inventive city own,
Rendering through Britain's isle Salopia's praises known ;

Admir'd Salopia ! that with venial pride
Fyes her bright form in Severn's ambient wave,
Fam'd for her loyal cares in perils try'd,
Her daughters lovely, and her striplings brave :
Ah ! midst the rest, may flowers adorn his grave
Whose heart did first these dulcet cates display !
A motive fair to Learning's imps he gave,
Who cheerless o'er her darkling region stray ;
Till Reason's morn arise, and light them on their way.

ELEGY.

Describing the sorrow of an ingenuous mind, on the melancholy event of a licentious amour.

Why mourns my friend ? why weeps his downcast eye,

That eye where mirth, where fancy us'd to shine ?
Thy cheerful meads reprove that swelling sigh ;
Spring ne'er enamell'd fairer meads than thine.

Art thou not lodg'd in Fortune's warm embrace ?
Wert thou not form'd by Nature's partial care ?
Blest in thy song, and blest in every grace
That wins the friend, or that enchants the fair ?

" Damon," said he, " thy partial praise restrain ;
Not Damon's friendship can my peace restore ;
Alas ! his very praise awakes my pain,
And my poor wounded bosom bleeds the more.

" For oh ! that Nature on my birth had frown'd,
Or Fortune fix'd me to some lowly cell ;
Then had my bosom 'scap'd this fatal wound,
Nor had I bid these vernal sweets farewell.

" But led by Fortune's hand, her darling child,
My youth her vain licentious bliss admir'd ;
In Fortune's train the syren Flattery smil'd,
And rashly hallow'd all her queen inspir'd.

" Of folly studious, e'en of vices vain,
Ah vices ! gilded by the rich and gay !
I chas'd the guileless daughters of the plain,
Nor dropp'd the chase, till Jessy was my prey.

" Poor artless maid ! to stain thy spotless name,
Expense, and art, and toil, united strove ;
To lure a breast that felt the purest flame,
Sustain'd by virtue, but betray'd by love.

" School'd in the science of love's many wiles,
I cloth'd each feature with affected scorn ;
I spoke of jealous doubts, and fickle smiles,
And, feigning, left her anxious and forlorn.

" Then, while the fancy'd rage alarm'd her care,
Warm to deny, and zealous to disprove ;
I bade my words their wonted softness wear,
And seiz'd the minute of returning love.

" To thee, my Damon, dare I paint the rest ?
Will yet thy love a candid ear incline ?
Assur'd that virtue, by misfortune prest,
Feels not the sharpness of a pang like mine.

" Nine envious moons matur'd her growing shame ;
Ere-while to flaunt it in the face of day ;
When, scorn'd of virtue, stigmatiz'd by fame,
Low at my feet desponding Jessy lay.

" ' Henry,' she said, ' by thy dear form subdu'd,
See the sad reliques of a nymph undone !
I find, I find this rising sob renew'd :
I sigh in shades, and sicken at the Sun.

" ' Amid the dreary gloom of night, I cry,
When will the morn's once pleasing scenes return ?
Yet what can morn's returning ray supply,
But fogs that triumph, or but friends that mourn !

" ' Alas ! no more that joyous morn appears
That led the tranquil hours of spotless fame ;
For I have steep'd a father's couch in tears,
And ting'd a mother's glowing cheek with shame.

" ' The vocal birds that raise their matin strain,
The sportive lambs, increase my pensive moan ;
All seem to chase me from the cheerful plain,
And talk of truth and innocence alone.

" ' If through the garden's flowery tribes I stray,
Where bloom the jasmines that could once allure,
Hope not to find delight in us, they say,
For we are spotless, Jessy ; we are pure.

" ' Ye flowers ! that well reproach a nymph so frail ;
Say, could ye with my virgin fame compare ?
The brightest bud that scents the vernal gale
Was not so fragrant, and was not so fair.

" ' Now the grave old alarm the gentler young ;
And all my fame's abhorr'd contagion flee :
Trembles each lip, and falters every tongue,
That bids the morn propitious smile on me.

" ' Thus for your sake I shun each human eye ;
I bid the sweets of blooming youth adieu ;
To die I languish, but I dread to die,
Lest my sad fate should nourish pangs for you.

" ' Raise me from earth ; the pains of want remove,
And let me silent seek some friendly shore :
There only, banish'd from the form I love,
My weeping virtue shall relapse no more.

" ' Be but my friend ; I ask no dearer name ;
Be such the meed of some more artful fair ;
Nor could it heal my peace, or chase my shame,
That pity gave, what love refus'd to share.

" ' Force not my tongue to ask its scanty bread ;
Nor hurl thy Jessy to the vulgar crew ;
Not such the parent's board at which I fed !
Not such the precept from his lips I drew !

" ' Haply, when Age has silver'd o'er my hair,
Malice may learn to scorn so mean a spoil ;
Envy may slight a face no longer fair ;
And pity, welcome, to my native soil.'

" She spoke — nor was I born of savage race ;
Nor could these hands a niggard boon assign ;
Grateful she clasp'd me in a last embrace,
And vow'd to waste her life in prayers for mine.

" I saw her foot the lofty bark ascend ;
I saw her breast with every passion heave ;
I left her — torn from every earthly friend ;
Oh ! my hard bosom, which could bear to leave !

" — Brief let me be ; the fatal storm arose ;
The billows rag'd, the pilot's art was vain ;
O'er the tall mast the circling surges close ;
My Jessy — floats upon the watery plain !

" And see my youth's impetuous fires decay ;
Seek not to stop Reflection's bitter tear ;
But warn the frolic, and instruct the gay,
From Jessy floating on her watery bier !"

A PASTORAL BALLAD,

IN FOUR PARTS. 1743.

Arbusta humilesque myricæ. Vireæ.

I. ABSENCE.

Y<sup>e</sup> shepherds so cheerful and gay,
Whose flocks never carelessly roam ;
Should Corydon's happen to stray,
Oh ! call the poor wanderers home.
Allow me to muse and to sigh,
Nor talk of the change that ye find ;
None once was so watchful as I ;
I have left my dear Phyllis behind.

Now I know what it is, to have strove
With the torture of doubt and desire ;
What it is to admire and to love,
And to leave her we love and admire.
Ah ! lead forth my flock in the morn,
And the damps of each evening repel ;
Alas ! I am faint and forlorn :
— I have bade my dear Phyllis farewell.

Since Phyllis vouchsaf'd me a look,
I never once dreamt of my vine :
May I lose both my pipe and my crook,
If I knew of a kid that was mine !
I priz'd ev'ry hour that went by,
Beyond all that had pleas'd me before ;
But now they are past, and I sigh ;
And I grieve that I priz'd them no more.

But why do I languish in vain ;
Why wander thus pensively here ?
Oh ! why did I come from the plain,
Where I fed on the smiles of my dear ?
They tell me, my favourite maid,
The pride of that valley, is flown ;
Alas ! where with her I have stray'd,
I could wander with pleasure, alone.

When forc'd the fair nymph to forego,
What anguish I felt at my heart !
Yet I thought — but it might not be so —
'T was with pain that she saw me depart.
She gaz'd, as I slowly withdrew ;
My path I could hardly discern ;
So sweetly she bade me adieu,
I thought that she bade me return.

The pilgrim that journeys all day
To visit some far distant shrine,
If he bear but a relique away,
Is happy, nor heard to repine.
Thus widely remov'd from the fair,
Where my vows, my devotion, I owe,
Soft Hope is the relique I bear,
And my solace wherever I go.

II. HOPE.

My banks they are furnish'd with bees,
Whose murmur invites one to sleep ;
My grottoes are shaded with trees,
And my hills are white over with sheep.
I seldom have met with a loss,
Such health do my fountains bestow :
My fountains all border'd with moss,
Where the hare-bells and violets grow.

Not a pine in my grove is there seen,
 But with tendrils of woodbine is bound :
 Not a beech's more beautiful green,
 But a sweet-brier entwines it around.
 Not my fields, in the prime of the year,
 More charms than my cattle unfold ;
 Not a brook that is limpid and clear,
 But it glitters with fishes of gold.

One would think she might like to retire
 To the bower I have labour'd to rear ;
 Not a shrub that I heard her admire,
 But I hasted and planted it there.
 O how sudden the jessamine strove
 With the lilac to render it gay !
 Already it calls for my love,
 To prune the wild branches away.

From the plains, from the woodlands and groves,
 What strains of wild melody flow !
 How the nightingales warble their loves
 From thickets of roses that blow !
 And when her bright form shall appear,
 Each bird shall harmoniously join
 In a concert so soft and so clear,
 As — she may not be fond to resign.

I have found out a gift for my fair ;
 I have found where the wood-pigeons breed :
 But let me that plunder forbear,
 She will say 't was a barbarous deed.
 For he ne'er could be true, she averr'd,
 Who would rob a poor bird of its young :
 And I lov'd her the more when I heard
 Such tenderness fall from her tongue.

I have heard her with sweetness unfold
 How that pity was due to — a dove :
 That it ever attended the bold ;
 And she call'd it the sister of love.
 But her words such a pleasure convey,
 So much I her accents adore,
 Let her speak, and whatever she say,
 Methinks I should love her the more.

Can a bosom so gentle remain
 Unmov'd when her Corydon sighs ?
 Will a nymph that is fond of the plain,
 These plains and this valley despise ?
 Dear regions of silence and shade !
 Soft scenes of contentment and ease ?
 Where I could have pleasingly stray'd,
 If aught, in her absence, could please.

But where does my Phyllida stray ?
 And where are her grots and her bowers ?
 Are the groves and the valleys as gay,
 And the shepherds as gentle as ours ?
 The groves may perhaps be as fair,
 And the face of the valleys as fine ;
 The swains may in manners compare,
 But their love is not equal to mine.

III. SOLICITUDE.

Why will you my passion reprove ?
 Why term it a folly to grieve ?
 Ere I show you the charms of my love,
 She's fairer than you can believe.

With her mien she enamours the brave ;
 With her wit she engages the free ;
 With her modesty pleases the grave ;
 She is every way pleasing to me.

O you that have been of her train,
 Come and join in my amorous lays ;
 I could lay down my life for the swain,
 That will sing but a song in her praise.
 When he sings, may the nymphs of the town
 Come trooping, and listen the while ;
 Nay on him let not Phyllida frown ;
 — But I cannot allow her to smile.

For when Paridel tries in the dance
 Any favour with Phyllis to find,
 O how, with one trivial glance,
 Might she ruin the peace of my mind !
 In ringlets he dresses his hair,
 And his crook is bestudded around ;
 And his pipe — oh my Phyllis, beware
 Of a magic there is in the sound.

'T is his with mock passion to glow,
 'T is his in smooth tales to unfold,
 How her face is as bright as the snow,
 And her bosom, be sure, is as cold.
 How the nightingales labour the strain,
 With the notes of his charmer to vie ;
 How they vary their accents in vain,
 Repine at her triumphs, and die.

To the grove or the garden he strays,
 And pillages every sweet ;
 Then, suiting the wreath to his lays,
 He throws it at Phyllis's feet.
 " O Phyllis," he whispers, " more fair,
 More sweet than the jessamine's flower !
 What are pinks in a morn to compare ?
 What is eglantine after a shower ?

" Then the lily no longer is white ;
 The rose is depriv'd of its bloom ;
 Then the violets die with despoite,
 And the woodbines give up their perfume.
 Thus glide the soft numbers along,
 And he fancies no shepherd his peer ;
 — Yet I never should envy the song,
 Were not Phyllis to lend it an ear.

Let his crook be with hyacinths bound,
 So Phyllis the trophy despise :
 Let his forehead with laurels be crown'd,
 So they shine not in Phyllis's eyes.
 The language that flows from the heart,
 Is a stranger to Paridel's tongue ;
 — Yet may she beware of his art,
 Or sure I must envy the song.

IV. DISAPPOINTMENT.

Ye shepherds, give ear to my lay,
 And take no more heed of my sheep ;
 They have nothing to do but to stray ;
 I have nothing to do but to weep.
 Yet do not my folly reprove ;
 She was fair — and my passion begun ;
 She smil'd — and I could not but love ;
 She is faithless — and I am undone.

Perhaps I was void of all thought :
 Perhaps it was plain to foresee,
 That a nymph so complete would be sought,
 By a swain more engaging than me.
 Ah ! love every hope can inspire ;
 It banishes wisdom the while ;
 And the lip of the nymph we admire
 Seems for ever adorn'd with a smile.

She is faithless, and I am undone ;
 Ye that witness the woes I endure,
 Let reason instruct you to shun
 What it cannot instruct you to cure.
 Beware how you loiter in vain
 Amid nymphs of a higher degree :
 It is not for me to explain
 How fair, and how fickle they be.

Alas ! from the day that we met,
 What hope of an end to my woes ?
 When I cannot endure to forget
 The glance that undid my repose.
 Yet time may diminish the pain :
 The flower, and the shrub, and the tree,
 Which I rear'd for her pleasure in vain,
 In time may have comfort for me.

The sweets of a dew-sprinkled rose,
 The sound of a murmuring stream,
 The peace which from solitude flows,
 Henceforth shall be Corydon's theme.
 High transports are shown to the sight,
 But we 're not to find them our own ;
 Fate never bestow'd such delight,
 As I with my Phyllis had known.

O ye woods, spread your branches apace ;
 To your deepest recesses I fly ;
 I would hide with the beasts of the chase ;
 I would vanish from every eye.
 Yet my reed shall resound through the grove
 With the same sad complaint it begun ;
 How she smil'd — and I could not but love ;
 Was faithless — and I am undone !

THE DYING KID.

*Optima quæque dies miseris mortalibus ævi
 Prima fugit —* VIRG.

A TEAR bedews my Delia's eye,
 To think yon playful kid must die ;
 From crystal spring, and flowery mead,
 Must, in his prime of life, recede !

Erewhile, in sportive circles round
 She saw him wheel, and frisk, and bound ;
 From rock to rock pursue his way,
 And on the fearful margin play.

Pleas'd on his various freaks to dwell,
 She saw him climb my rustic cell ;
 Thence eye my lawns with verdure bright,
 And seem all ravish'd at the sight.

She tells with what delight he stood
 To trace his features in the flood ;
 Then skipp'd aloof with quaint amaze,
 And then drew near again to gaze.

She tells me how with eager speed
 He flew to hear my vocal reed ;
 And how with critic face profound,
 And stedfast ear, devour'd the sound.

His every frolic, light as air,
 Deserves the gentle Delia's care ;
 And tears bedew her tender eye,
 To think the playful kid must die. —

But knows my Delia, timely wise,
 How soon this blameless era flies ?
 While violence and craft succeed ;
 Unfair design, and ruthless deed !

Soon would the vine his wounds deplore,
 And yield her purple gifts no more ;
 Ah ! soon, eras'd from every grove
 Were Delia's name, and Strephon's love.

No more those bowers might Strephon see,
 Where first he fondly gaz'd on thee ;
 No more those beds of flowerets find,
 Which for thy charming brows he twin'd.

Each wayward passion soon would tear
 His bosom, now so void of care ;
 And, when they left his ebbing vein,
 What, but insipid age, remain ?

Then mourn not the decrees of Fate,
 That gave his life so short a date ;
 And I will join thy tenderest sighs,
 To think that youth so swiftly flies !

THE REV. CHARLES CHURCHILL.

THE REV. CHARLES CHURCHILL, a poet, once of great repute, was the son of a curate of St. John's Westminster, in which parish he was born in 1731. He received his early education at the celebrated public school in the vicinity, whence he was sent to Oxford; but to this university he was refused admission on account of deficient classical knowledge. Returning to school, he soon closed his further education by an early and imprudent marriage. Receiving holy orders from the indulgence of Dr. Sherlock, he went down to a curacy in Wales, where he attempted to remedy the scantiness of his income, by the sale of cyder; but this expedient only plunged him deeper in debt. Returning to London, he was chosen, on his father's death, to succeed him as curate and lecturer of St. John's. His finances still falling short, he took various methods to improve them; at the same time he displayed an immoderate fondness for theatrical exhibitions. This latter passion caused him to think of exercising those talents which he was conscious of possessing; and in March, 1761, he published, though anonymously, a view of the excellencies and defects of the actors in both houses, which he entitled "The Rosciad." It was much admired, and a second edition appeared with the author's name. Churchill was now at once raised from obscurity to eminence; and the Rosciad, which we have selected as his best work, is, in fact, the only one of his numerous publications on which he bestowed due labour. The delineations are drawn with equal energy and vivacity; the language and versification, though not without inequalities, are superior to the ordinary strain of current poetry, and many of the observations are stamped with sound judgment and correct taste.

The remainder of his life, though concurring with the period of his principal fame, is little worthy of notice. He became a party writer, joining with Wilkes and other oppositionists, and employed his pen assiduously in their cause. With this was joined a lamentable defect of moral feeling, exhibited by loose and irregular manners. Throwing off his black suit, he decorated his large and clumsy person with gold lace; and dismissing his wife, he debauched from her parents the daughter of a tradesman in Westminster. His writings at length became mere rhapsodies; and taking a journey to France for the purpose of visiting Mr. Wilkes, then an exile in that country, he was seized with a fever, which put a period to his life on November 4, 1764, at the age of 34.

THE ROSCIAD.

Roscius deceas'd, each high aspiring play'r
Push'd all his int'rest for the vacant chair.
The buskin'd heroes of the mimic stage
No longer whine in love, and rant in rage;
The monarch quits his throne, and condescends
Humbly to court the favour of his friends;
For pity's sake tells undeserv'd mishaps,
And, their applause to gain, recounts his claps.
Thus the victorious chiefs of ancient Rome,
To win the mob, a suppliant's form assume,
In pompous strain fight o'er th' extinguish'd war,
And show where honour bled in ev'ry scar.

But though bare merit might in Rome appear
The strongest plea for favour, 'tis not here;
We form our judgment in another way;
And they will best succeed, who best can pay:
Those, who would gain the votes of British tribes,
Must add to force of merit, force of bribes.

What can an actor give? In ev'ry age
Cash hath been rudely banish'd from the stage;
Monarchs themselves, to grief of ev'ry play'r,
Appear as often as their image there:

They can't, like candidate for other seat,
Pour seas of wine, and mountains raise of meat.
Wine! they could bribe you with the world as soon,
And of roast beef, they only know the tune:
But what they have they give; could Clive do more,
Though for each million he had brought home four?

Shuter keeps open house at Southwark fair,
And hopes the friends of humour will be there;
In Smithfield, Yates prepares the rival treat
For those who laughter love, instead of meat;
Foote, at Old House, for even Foote will be,
In self-conceit, an actor, bribes with tea;
Which Wilkinson at second-hand receives,
And at the New, pours water on the leaves.

The town divided, each runs sev'ral ways,
As passion, humour, int'rest, party sways.
Things of no moment, colour of the hair,
Shape of a leg, complexion brown or fair,
A dress well chosen, or a patch misplac'd,
Conciliate favour, or create distaste.

From galleries loud peals of laughter roll,
And thunder Shuter's praises — he 's so droll.
Embor'd, the ladies must have something smart,
Palmer! Oh! Palmer tops the janty part.
Seated in pit, the dwarf, with aching eyes,
Looks up, and vows that Barry's out of size;

Whilst to six feet the vig'rous stripling grown,
Declares that Garrick is another Coan.*

When place of judgment is by whim supply'd,
And our opinions have their rise in pride;
When, in discoursing on each mimic elf,
We praise and censure with an eye to self;
All must meet friends, and Ackman bids as fair
In such a court, as Garrick, for the chair.

At length agreed, all squabbles to decide,
By some one judge the cause was to be try'd;
But this their squabbles did afresh renew,
Who should be judge in such a trial: — Who?

For Johnson some, but Johnson, it was fear'd,
Would be too grave; and Sterne too gay appear'd:
Others for Francklin voted; but 't was known,
He sicken'd at all triumphs but his own:
For Colman many, but the peevish tongue
Of prudent Age found out that he was young:
For Murphy some few pilf'ring wits declar'd,
Whilst Folly clapp'd her hands, and Wisdom star'd.

To mischief train'd, e'en from his mother's womb,
Grown old in fraud, though yet in manhood's bloom,
Adopting arts, by which gay villains rise,
And reach the heights which honest men despise;
Dute at the bar, and in the senate loud,
Dull 'mongst the dullest, proudest of the proud;
A pert, prim, prater of the northern race,
Guilt in his heart, and famine in his face,
Stood forth: — and thrice he wav'd his lily hand —
And thrice he twirl'd his tye — thrice strok'd his band — [aim

“ At Friendship's call,” (thus oft with trait'rous
Men, void of faith, usurp Faith's sacred name)

At Friendship's call I come, by Murphy sent,
Who thus by me developes his intent.

But lest, transfus'd, the spirit should be lost,
That spirit which in storms of rhet'ric tost,
Bounces about, and flies like bottled beer,
In his own words his own intentions hear. [born,

“ Thanks to my friends. — But to vile fortunes
No robes of fur these shoulders must adorn.

Vain your applause, no aid from thence I draw;
Vain all my wit, for what is wit in law?

Twice (curs'd remembrance!) twice I strove to gain
Admittance 'mongst the law-instructed train,
Who, in the Temple and Gray's Inn, prepare
For clients' wretched feet the legal snare;
Dead to those arts, which polish and refine,
Deaf to all worth, because that worth was mine,
Twice did those blockheads startle at my name,
And, foul rejection, gave me up to shame.

No laws and lawyers then I bad adieu,
And plans of far more lib'ral note pursue.
Who will may be a judge — my kindling breast
Burns for that chair which Roscius once possess'd.
Here give your votes, your int'rest here exert,
And let success for once attend desert.”

With sleek appearance, and with ambling pace,
And, type of vacant head, with vacant face,
The Proteus Hill put in his modest plea, —

“ Let Favour speak for others, Worth for me.” —

For who, like him, his various powers could call
Into so many shapes, and shine in all?

Who could so nobly grace the motley list,
Actor, inspector, doctor, botanist?

Knows any one so well — sure no one knows, —

At once to play, prescribe, compound, compose?

* John Coan, a dwarf, who died in 1764. C.

Who can — But Woodward came, — Hill slipp'd
away,

Melting like ghosts, before the rising day.

† With that low cunning, which in fools supplies,
And amply too, the place of being wise,
Which Nature, kind, indulgent parent, gave
To qualify the blockhead for a knave; [charms,
With that smooth falsehood, whose appearance
And reason of each wholesome doubt disarms,
Which to the lowest depths of guile descends,
By vilest means pursues the vilest ends,
Wears Friendship's mask for purposes of spita,
Fawns in the day, and butchers in the night;
With that malignant envy, which turns pale,
And sickens, even if a friend prevail,
Which merit and success pursues with hate,
And damns the worth it cannot imitate;
With the cold caution of a coward's spleen,
Which fears not guilt, but always seeks a screen,
Which keeps this maxim ever in her view —
What's basely done, should be done safely too;

With that dull, rooted, callous impudence,
Which, dead to shame, and ev'ry nicer sense,
Ne'er blush'd, unless, in spreading Vice's snares,
She blunder'd on some virtue unawares;
With all these blessings, which we seldom find
Lavish'd by Nature on one happy mind,
A motley figure, of the Fribble tribe,

Which heart can scarce conceive, or pen describe,
Came simp'ring on; to ascertain whose sex

Twelve sage, impanell'd matrons would perplex.

Nor male, nor female; neither, and yet both;

Of neuter gender, though of Irish growth;

A six-foot suckling, mincing in its gait;

Affected, peevish, prim, and delicate;

Fearful it seem'd, though of athletic make,

Lest brutal breezes should too roughly shake

Its tender form, and savage motion spread,

O'er its pale cheeks, the horrid manly red.

Much did it talk, in its own pretty phrase,

Of genius and of taste, of play'rs and plays;

Much too of writings, which itself had wrote,

Of special merit, though of little note;

For Fate, in a strange humour, had decreed

That what it wrote, none but itself should read;

Much too it chatter'd of dramatic laws,

Misjudging critics, and misplac'd applause;

Then, with a self-complacent jutting air,

It smil'd, it smirk'd, it wriggled to the chair;

And, with an awkward briskness not its own,

Looking around, and perking on the throne,

Triumphant seem'd, when that strange savage dame,

Known but to few, or only known by name,

Plain Common-Sense appear'd, by Nature there

Appointed, with plain Truth, to guard the chair.

The pageant saw, and blasted with her frown,

To its first state of nothing melted down.

Nor shall the Muse (for even there the pride

Of this vain nothing shall be mortified)

Nor shall the Muse (should Fate ordain her rhymes

Fond, pleasing thought! to live in after-times)

With such a trifler's name her pages blot;

Known be the character, the thing forgot;

† This severe character was intended for Mr. Fitzpatrick, a person who had rendered himself remarkable by his activity in the playhouse riots of 1763, relative to the taking half prices. He was the hero of Garrick's Fribbleriad. E.

Let it, to disappoint each future aim,
Live without sex, and die without a name!
 Cold-blooded critics, by enervate sires
 Scarce hammer'd out, when Nature's feeble fires
 Glimmer'd their last; whose sluggish blood, half froze,
 Creeps lab'ring through the veins; whose heart
     ne'er glows
 With fancy-kindled heat;—a servile race,
 Who in mere want of fault, all merit place;
 Who blind obedience pay to ancient schools,
 Bigots to Greece, and slaves to musty rules;
 With solemn consequence declar'd that none
 Could judge that cause but Sophocles alone.
 Dupes to their fancied excellence, the crowd,
 Obsequious to the sacred dictate, bow'd.

When, from amidst the throng, a youth stood forth,
 Unknown his person, not unknown his worth;
 His look bespoke applause; alone he stood,
 Alone he stemm'd the mighty critic flood.
 He talk'd of ancients, as the man became
 Who priz'd our own, but envied not their fame;
 With noble rev'rence spoke of Greece and Rome,
 And scorn'd to tear the laurel from the tomb.

"But more than just to other countries grown,
 Must we turn base apostates to our own?
 Where do these words of Greece and Rome excel,
 That England may not please the ear as well?
 What mighty magic 's in the place or air,
 That all perfection needs must centre there?
 In states, let strangers blindly be prefer'd;
 In state of letters, merit should be heard.
 Genius is of no country, her pure ray
 Spreads all abroad, as gen'ral as the day;
 Foe to restraint, from place to place she flies,
 And may hereafter e'en in Holland rise.
 May not (to give a pleasing fancy scope,
 And cheer a patriot heart with patriot hope)
 May not some great extensive genius raise
 The name of Britain 'bove Athenian praise;
 And, whilst brave thirst of fame his bosom warms,
 Make England great in letters as in arms?
 There may — there hath — and Shakspeare's Muse aspires

Beyond the reach of Greece: with natives fires
 Mounting aloft, he wings his daring flight,
 Whilst Sophocles below stands trembling at his height.

"Why should we then abroad for judges roam,
 When abler judges we may find at home?
 Happy in tragic and in comic pow'rs,
 Have we not Shakspeare? — Is not Jonson ours?
 For them, your nat'ral judges, Britons, vote;
 They'll judge like Britons, who like Britons wrote."

He said, and conquer'd — Sense resum'd her sway,
 And disappointed pedants stalk'd away.
 Shakspeare and Jonson, with deserv'd applause,
 Joint-judges were ordain'd to try the cause.
 Meantime the stranger ev'ry voice employ'd,
 To ask or tell his name — Who is it? — Lloyd.

Thus, when the aged friends of Job stood mute,
 And, tamely prudent, gave up the dispute,
 Elihu, with the decent warmth of youth,
 Boldly stood forth the advocate of Truth;
 Confuted B falsehood, and disabled Pride,
 Whilst baffled Age stood snarling at his side.

The day of trial 's fix'd, nor any fear
 Last day of trial should be put off here.
 Causes but seldom for delay can call
 In courts where forms are few, fees none at all.

The morning came, nor find I that the Sun,
 As he on other great events hath done,
 Put on a brighter robe than what he wore
 To go his journey in the day before.

Full in the centre of a spacious plain,
 On plan entirely new, where nothing vain,
 Nothing magnificent appear'd, but Art
 With decent modesty perform'd her part,
 Rose a tribunal: from no other court
 It borrow'd ornament, or sought support:
 No juries here were pack'd to kill or clear,
 No bribes were taken, nor oaths broken here;
 No gownmen, partial to a client's cause,
 To their own purpose tun'd the pliant laws,
 Each judge was true and steady to his trust,
 As Mansfield wise, and as old Foster * just.

In the first seat, in robe of various dyes,
 A noble wildness flashing from his eyes,
 Sat Shakspeare. — In one hand a wand he bore,
 For mighty wonders fam'd in days of yore;
 The other held a globe, which to his will
 Obedient turn'd, and own'd the master's skill:
 Things of the noblest kind his genius drew,
 And look'd through Nature at a single view:
 A loose he gave to his unbounded soul,
 And taught new lands to rise, new seas to roll;
 Call'd into being scenes unknown before,
 And, passing Nature's bounds, was something more.

Next Jonson sat, in ancient learning train'd,
 His rigid judgment Fancy's flights restrain'd,
 Correctly prun'd each wild luxuriant thought,
 Mark'd out her course, nor spar'd a glorious fault.
 The book of man he read with nicest art,
 And ransack'd all the secrets of the heart;
 Exerted penetration's utmost force,
 And trac'd each passion to its proper source;
 Then strongly mark'd, in liveliest colours drew,
 And brought each foible forth to public view.
 The coxcomb felt a lash in ev'ry word,
 And fools, hung out, their brother fools deterr'd.
 His comic humour kept the world in awe,
 And Laughter frighten'd Folly more than Law.

But, hark! — The trumpet sounds, the crowd gives
     way,

And the procession comes in just array.

Now should I, in some sweet poetic line,
 Offer up incense at Apollo's shrine;
 Invoke the Muse to quit her calm abode,
 And waken mem'ry with a sleeping ode.
 For how should mortal man, in mortal verse,
 Their titles, merits, or their names rehearse?
 But give, kind Dullness, memory and rhyme,
 We'll put off Genius till another time.

First, Order came, — with solemn step, and slow,
 In measur'd time his feet were taught to go.
 Behind, from time to time, he cast his eye,
 Lest this should quit his place, that step awry.
 Appearances to save his only care;
 So things seem right, no matter what they are.
 In him his parents saw themselves renew'd,
 Begotten by sir Critic on saint Prude.

Then came drum, trumpet, hautboy, fiddle, flute:
 Next snuffer, sweeper, shifter, soldier, mute:
 Legions of angels all in white advance;
 Furies, all fire, come forward in a dance;
 Pantomime figures then are brought to view,
 Fools hand in hand with fools go two by two.

* Sir Michael Foster, one of the judges of the King's Bench.

Next came the treasurer of either house ;
One with full purse, t' other with not a soua
Behind, a group of figures awe create,
Set off with all th' impertinence of state ;
By lace and feather consecrate to fame,
Expletive kings, and queens without a name.

Here Havard, all serene, in the same strains,
Loves, hates, and rages, triumphs, and complains ;
His easy vacant face proclaim'd a heart
Which could not feel emotions, nor impart.
With him came mighty Davies. On my life,
That Davies hath a very pretty wife :—
Statesman all over !—In plots famous grown !—
He mouths a sentence, as curs mouth a bone.

Next Holland came.—With truly tragic stalk,
He creeps, he flies.—A hero should not walk.
As if with Heav'n he warr'd, his eager eyes
Planted their batteries against the skies ;
Attitude, action, air, pause, start, sigh, groan,
He borrow'd, and made use of as his own.
By fortune thrown on any other stage,
He might, perhaps, have pleas'd an easy age ;
But now appears a copy, and no more,
Of something better we have seen before.
The actor who would build a solid fame,
Must Imitation's servile arts disclaim ;
Not from himself, on his own bottom stand ;
He hate e'en Garrick thus at second-hand.

Behind came King.—Bred up in modest lore,
Dashful and young he sought Hibernia's shore ;
Hibernia, fam'd, 'bove ev'ry other grace,
For matchless intrepidity of face.
From her his features caught the gen'rous flame,
And bid defiance to all sense of shame.
Outor'd by her all rivals to surpass,
Amongst Drury's sons he comes, and shines in Brass.

Lo Yates !—Without the least finesse of art
He gets applause—I wish he'd get his part.
When hot Impatience is in full career,
How vilely “ Hark'e ! Hark'e ! ” grates the ear.
When active Fancy from the brain is sent,
And stands on tip-toe for some wish'd event,
He hate those careless blunders which recall
Suspended sense, and prove it fiction all.

In characters of low and vulgar mould,
Where Nature's coarsest features we behold,
Where, destitute of ev'ry decent grace,
Inmanner'd jests are blurted in your face,
There Yates with justice strict attention draws,
Acts truly from himself, and gains applause.
But when to please himself, or charm his wife,
He aims at something in politer life,
When, blindly thwarting Nature's stubborn plan,
He treads the stage, by way of gentleman,
The clown, who no one touch of breeding knows,
Looks like Tom Errand dress'd in Clincher's clothes.
Fond of his dress, fond of his person grown,
Laugh'd at by all, and to himself unknown,
From side to side he struts, he smiles, he prates,
And seems to wonder what's become of Yates.

Woodward, endow'd with various tricks of face,
Great master in the science of grimace,
From Ireland ventures, fav'rite of the town,
Sur'd by the pleasing prospect of renown ;
A speaking Harlequin, made up of whim,
He twists, he twines, he tortures ev'ry limb,
Plays to the eye with a mere monkey's art,
And leaves to sense the conquest of the heart.
We laugh indeed, but on reflection's birth,
We wonder at ourselves, and curse our mirth.

His walk of parts he fatally misplac'd,
And inclination fondly took for taste ;
Hence hath the town so often seen display'd
Beau in burlesque, high life in masquerade.

But when bold wits, not such as patch up plays,
Cold and correct, in these insipid days,
Some comic character, strong featur'd, urge
To probability's extremest verge,
Where modest Judgment her decree suspends,
And for a time, nor censures, nor commends,
Where critics can't determine on the spot
Whether it is in Nature found or not,
There Woodward safely shall his pow'rs exert,
Nor fail of favour where he shows desert.
Hence he in Bobadil such praises bore,
Such worthy praises, Kiteley scarce had more.

By turns transform'd into all kind of shapes,
Constant to none, Foote laughs, cries, struts, and scrapes :

Now in the centre, now in van or rear,
The Proteus shifts, bawd, parson, auctioneer.
His strokes of humour, and his bursts of sport,
Are all contain'd in this one word, Distort.

Doth a man stutter, look a-squint, or halt ?
Mimics draw humour out of Nature's fault,
With personal defects their mirth adorn,
And hang misfortunes out to public scorn.
E'en I, whom Nature cast in hideous mould,
Whom, having made, she trembled to behold,
Beneath the load of mimicry may groan,
And find that Nature's errors are my own.

Shadows behind of Foote and Woodward came ;
Wilkinson this, Obrien was that name.
Strange to relate, but wonderfully true,
That even shadows have their shadows too !
With not a single comic pow'r endu'd,
The first a mere mere mimic's mimic stood ;
The last by Nature form'd to please, who shows,
In Jonson's Stephen, which way Genius grows ;
Self quite put off, affects, with too much art,
To put on Woodward in each mangled part ;
Adopts his shrug, his wink, his stare ; nay, more,
His voice, and croaks ; for Woodward croak'd before.

When a dull copier simple grace neglects,
And rests his imitation in defects,
We readily forgive ; but such vile arts
Are double guilt in men of real parts.

By Nature form'd in her perversest mood,
With no one requisite of art endu'd,
Next Jackson came.—Observe that settled glare,
Which better speaks a puppet than a player :
List to that voice — did ever Discord hear
Sounds so well fitted to her untun'd ear ?
When, to enforce some very tender part,
The right-hand sleeps by instinct on the heart ;
His soul, of every other thought bereft,
Is anxious only where to place the left ;
He sobs and pants to soothe his weeping spouse,
To soothe his weeping mother, turns and bows.
Awkward, embarrass'd, stiff, without the skill
Of moving gracefully, or standing still,
One leg, as if suspicious of his brother,
Desirous seems to run away from t' other.

Some errors, handed down from age to age,
Plead custom's force, and still possess the stage.
That's vile — Should we a parent's faults adore,
And err, because our fathers err'd before :
If, inattentive to the author's mind,
Some actors made the jest they could not find ;

If by low tricks they marr'd fair Nature's mien,
 And blurr'd the graces of the simple scene;
 Shall we, if reason rightly is employ'd,
 Not see their faults, or seeing not avoid?
 When Falstaff stands detected in a lie,
 Why, without meaning, rolls Love's glassy eye?
 Why? — There's no cause — at least no cause we know —

It was the fashion twenty years ago.
 Fashion, a word which knaves and fools may use
 Their knavery and folly to excuse.
 To copy beauties, forfeits all pretence
 To fame — to copy faults, is want of sense.

Yet (though in some particulars he fails,
 Some few particulars, where mode prevails)
 If in these hallow'd times, when sober, sad,
 All gentlemen are melancholy mad,
 When 'tis not deem'd so great a crime by half
 To violate a vestal, as to laugh,
 Rude Mirth may hope presumptuous to engage
 An act of toleration for the stage,
 And courtiers will, like reasonable creatures,
 Suspend vain fashion, and unscrew their features,
 Old Falstaff, play'd by Love, shall please once more,
 And humour set the audience in a roar.

Actors I've seen, and of no vulgar name,
 Who, being from one part possess'd of fame,
 Whether they are to laugh, cry, whine, or bawl,
 Still introduce that fav'rite part in all.
 Here, Love, be cautious — ne'er be thou betray'd
 To call in that wag Falstaff's dangerous aid;
 Like Goths of old, howe'er he seems a friend,
 He'll seize that throne, you wish him to defend.
 In a peculiar mould by Humour cast,
 For Falstaff fram'd — Himself, the first and last, —
 He stands aloof from all — maintains his state,
 And scorns, like Scotsmen, to assimilate.
 Vain all disguise — too plain we see the trick,
 Though the Knight wears the weeds of Dominic.
 And Boniface, disgrac'd, betrays the smack,
 In Anno Domini, of Falstaff's sack.

Arms cross'd, brows bent, eyes fix'd, feet marching slow,
 A band of malecontents with spleen o'erflow;
 Wrapt in Conceit's impenetrable fog,
 Which Pride, like Phoebus, draws from ev'ry bog,
 They curse the managers, and curse the town,
 Whose partial favour keeps such merit down.

But if some man, more hardy than the rest,
 Should dare attack these gnatlings in their nest;
 At once they rise with impotence of rage,
 Whet their small stings, and buzz about the stage.
 " 'Tis breach of privilege! — Shall any dare
 To arm satiric truth against a player?
 Prescriptive rights we plead time out of mind;
 Actors, unlash'd themselves, may lash mankind."

What! shall Opinion then, of nature free
 And lib'ral as the vagrant air, agree
 To rust in chains like these, impos'd by things
 Which, less than nothing, ape the pride of kings?
 No — though half-poets with half-players join
 To curse the freedom of each honest line;
 Though rage and malice dim their faded cheek;
 What the Muse freely thinks, she'll freely speak.
 With just disdain of ev'ry paltry sneer,
 Stranger alike to flattery and fear,
 In purpose fix'd, and to herself a rule,
 Public contempt shall wait the public fool.

Austin would always glisten in French silks,
 Ackman would Norris be, and Packer Wilks.

For who, like Ackman, can with humour please?
 Who can, like Packer, charm with sprightly ease?
 Higher than all the rest, see Bransby strut:
 A mighty Gulliver in Lilliput!
 Ludicrous Nature! which at once could show
 A man so very high, so very low.

If I forget thee, Blakes, or if I say
 Aught hurtful, may I never see thee play.
 Let critics, with a supercilious air,
 Decry thy various merit, and declare
 Frenchman is still at top; — but scorn that rage
 Which, in attacking thee, attacks the age.
 French follies, universally embrac'd,
 At once provoke our mirth, and form our taste.

Long, from a nation ever hardly us'd,
 At random censur'd, wantonly abus'd,
 Have Britons drawn their sport, with partial view
 Form'd gen'ral notions from the rascal few;
 Condemn'd a people, as for vices known,
 Which, from their country banish'd, seek our own.
 At length, howe'er, the slavish chain is broke,
 And Sense, awaken'd, scorns her ancient yoke:
 Taught by thee, Moody, we now learn to raise
 Mirth from their foibles; from their virtues, praise.

Next came the legion, which our Summer Bayes,
 From alleys, here and there, contriv'd to raise,
 Flush'd with vast hopes, and certain to succeed
 With wits who cannot write, and scarce can read.
 Vet'rans no more support the rotten cause,
 No more from Elliot's worth they reap applause;
 Each on himself determines to rely,
 Be Yates disbanded, and let Elliot fly,
 Never did play'rs so well an author fit,
 To Nature dead, and foes declar'd to Wit.
 So loud each tongue, so empty was each head,
 So much they talk'd, so very little said,
 So wondrous dull, and yet so wondrous vain,
 At once so willing, and unfit to reign,
 That Reason swore, nor would the oath recall,
 Their mighty master's soul inform'd them all.

As one with various disappointments sad,
 Whom Dullness only kept from being mad,
 Apart from all the rest great Murphy came —
 Common to fools and wits, the rage of fame.
 What though the sons of Nonsense hail him sire,
 AUDITOR, AUTHOR, MANAGER, and SQUIRE,
 His restless soul's ambition stops not there,
 To make his triumphs perfect, dub him PLAYER.

In person tall, a figure form'd to please;
 If symmetry could charm, depriv'd of ease;
 When motionless he stands, we all approve;
 What pity 'tis the thing was made to move.

His voice, in one dull, deep, unvaried sound,
 Seems to break forth from caverns under ground.
 From hollow chest the low sepulchral note
 Unwilling heaves, and struggles in his throat.

Could authors butcher'd give an actor grace,
 All must to him resign the foremost place.
 When he attempts, in some one fav'rite part,
 To ape the feelings of a manly heart,
 His honest features the disguise defy,
 And his face loudly gives his tongue the lie.

Still in extremes, he knows no happy mean,
 Or raving mad, or stupidly serene.
 In cold-wrought scenes the lifeless actor flags,
 In passion, tears the passion into rags.
 Can none remember? — Yes — I know all must —
 When in the Moor he ground his teeth to dust,
 When o'er the stage he Folly's standard bore,
 Whilst Common-Sense stood trembling at the door.

How few are found with real talents bless'd,
Fewer with Nature's gifts contented rest.
Man from his sphere eccentric starts astray ;
All hunt for fame ; but most mistake the way.
Bred at St. Omer's to the shuffling trade,
The hopeful youth a Jesuit might have made,
With various readings stor'd his empty skull,
Learn'd without sense, and venerably dull ;
Or, at some banker's desk, like many more,
Content to tell that two and two make four,
His name had stood in CITY ANNALS fair,
And prudent Dullness mark'd him for a mayor.

What then could tempt thee, in a critic age,
Such blooming hopes to forfeit on a stage ?
Could it be worth thy wondrous waste of pains
To publish to the world thy lack of brains ?
Or might not Reason e'en to thee have shown
Thy greatest praise had been to live unknown ?
Yet let not vanity, like thine, despair :
Fortune makes Folly her peculiar care.

A vacant throne high plac'd in Smithfield view,
To sacred Dullness and her first-born due,
Thither with haste in happy hour repair,
Thy birthright claim, nor fear a rival there.
Whate'er himself shall own thy juster claim,
And venal Ledgers puff their Murphy's name,
Whilst Vaughan * or Dapper, call him which you
will,

shall blow the trumpet, and give out the bill.

There rule secure, from critics and from sense,
For once shall Genius rise to give offence ;
Eternal peace shall bless the happy shore,
And little factions break thy rest no more.
From Covent Garden crowds promiscuous go,
Whom the Muse knows not, nor desires to know.
Yet 'rans they seem'd, but knew of arms no more
Than if, till that time, arms they never bore :
Like Westminster militia train'd to fight,
They scarcely knew the left hand from the right.
Asham'd among such troops to show the head,
Their chiefs were scatter'd, and their heroes fled.

Sparks at his glass sat comfortably down
To sep'rate frown from smile, and smile from frown ;
Smith, the genteel, the airy, and the smart,
Smith was just gone to school to say his part ;
Loss (a misfortune which we often meet)
Was fast asleep at dear Statira's feet ;
Statira, with her hero to agree,
Stood on her feet as fast asleep as he ;
Macklin, who largely deals in half-form'd sounds,
Who wantonly transgresses Nature's bounds,
Whose acting 's hard, affected, and constrain'd,
Whose features, as each other they disdain'd,
At variance set, inflexible and coarse,
He'er know the workings of united force,
He'er kindly soften to each other's aid,
Nor show the mingled pow'rs of light and shade,
No longer for a thankless stage concern'd,
No worthier thoughts his mighty genius turn'd,
Parangu'd, gave lectures, made each simple elf
Almost as good a speaker as himself ;
Whilst the whole town, mad with mistaken zeal,
In awkward rage for elocution feel ;
Dull cits and grave divines his praise proclaim,
And join with Sheridan's their Macklin's name ;
Whate'er, who never car'd a single pin
Whether he left out nonsense, or put in,

* A gentleman who published, at this juncture, a sermon entitled The Retort.

Who aim'd at wit, though, levell'd in the dark,
The random arrow seldom hit the mark,
At Islington, all by the placid stream
Where city swains in lap of Dullness dream,
Where, quiet as her strains their strains do flow,
That all the patron by the bards may know,
Secret as night, with Rolt's experienc'd aid,
The plan of future operations laid,
Projected schemes the summer months to cheer,
And spin out happy folly through the year.

But think not, though these dastard chiefs are fled,
That Covent Garden troops shall want a head :
Harlequin comes their chief ! — See from afar,
The hero seated in fantastic car !
Wedded to Novelty, his only arms
Are wooden swords, wands, talismans, and charms ;
On one side Folly sits, by some call'd Fun,
And on the other, his arch-patron, Lun.
Behind, for liberty a-thirst in vain,
Sense, helpless captive, drags the galling chain.
Six rude mis-shapen beasts the chariot draw,
Whom Reason loaths, and Nature never saw ;
Monsters, with tails of ice, and heads of fire ;
Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimeras dire.
Each was bestrode by full as monstrous wight,
Giant, Dwarf, Genius, Elf, Hermaphrodite.
The town, as usual, met him in full cry ;
The town, as usual, knew no reason why.
But Fashion so directs, and moderns raise
On Fashion's mouldering base their transient praise.

Next, to the field a band of females draw
Their force ; for Britain owns no Salique law :
Just to their worth, we female rights admit,
Nor bar their claim to empire or to wit.

First, giggling, plotting chamber-maids arrive,
Hoydens and romps, led on by gen'ral Clive.
In spite of outward blemishes, she shone
For humour fam'd, and humour all her own.
Easy, as if at home, the stage she trod,
Nor sought the critic's praise, nor fear'd his rod.
Original in spirit and in ease,
She pleas'd by hiding all attempts to please.
No comic actress ever yet could raise,
On Humour's base, more merit or more praise.

With all the native vigour of sixteen,
Among the merry troop conspicuous seen,
See lively Pope advance in jig and trip,
Corinna, Cherry, Honeycomb, and Snip.
Not without art, but yet to Nature true,
She charms the town with humour just, yet new.
Cheer'd by her promise, we the less deplore
The fatal time when Clive shall be no more.

Lo ! Vincent comes — with simple grace array'd,
She laughs at paltry arts, and scorns parade.
Nature through her is by reflection shown,
Whilst Gay once more knows Polly for his own.

Talk not to me of diffidence and fear —
I see it all, but must forgive it here.
Defects like these which modest terrors cause,
From impudence itself extort applause.
Candour and Reason still take Virtue's part ;
We love e'en foibles in so good a heart.

Let Tommy Arne, with usual pomp of style,
Whose chief, whose only merit 's to compile,
Who, meanly pilfering here and there a bit,
Deals music out as Murphy deals out wit,
Publish proposals, laws for taste prescribe,
And chant the praise of an Italian tribe ;
Let him reverse kind Nature's first decrees,
And teach e'en Brent a method not to please ;

But never shall a truly British age
 Bear a vile race of eunuchs on the stage.
 The boasted work 's call'd national in vain,
 If one Italian voice pollutes the strain.
 Where tyrants rule, and slaves with joy obey,
 Let slavish minstrels pour th' enervate lay ;
 To Britons far more noble pleasures spring,
 In native notes whilst Beard and Vincent sing.

Might figure give a title unto fame,
 What rival should with Yates dispute her claim ?
 But justice may not partial trophies raise,
 Nor sink the actress in the woman's praise.
 Still hand in hand her words and actions go,
 And the heart feels more than the features show :
 For, through the regions of that beauteous face,
 We no variety of passions trace ;
 Dead to the soft emotions of the heart,
 No kindred softness can those eyes impart ;
 The brow, still fix'd in Sorrow's sullen frame,
 Void of distinction, marks all parts the same.

What 's a fine person, or a beauteous face,
 Unless deportment gives them decent grace ?
 Bless'd with all other requisites to please,
 Some want the striking elegance of ease ;
 The curious eye their awkward movement tires ;
 They seem like puppets led about by wires.
 Others, like statues, in one posture still,
 Give great ideas of the workman's skill ;
 Wond'ring, his art we praise the more we view,
 And only grieve he gave not motion too.
 Weak of themselves are what we beauties call,
 It is the manner which gives strength to all.
 This teaches every beauty to unite,
 And brings them forward in the noblest light.
 Happy in this, behold, amidst the throng,
 With transient gleam of grace, Hart sweeps along.

If all the wonders of external grace,
 A person finely turn'd, a mould of face,
 Where, union rare, Expression's lively force
 With Beauty's softest magic holds discourse,
 Attract the eye ; if feelings, void of art,
 Rouse the quick passions, and inflame the heart ;
 If music, sweetly breathing from the tongue,
 Captives the ear, Bride must not pass unsung.

When fear, which rank ill-nature terms conceit,
 By time and custom conquer'd, shall retreat ;
 When judgment, tutor'd by experience sage,
 Shall shoot abroad, and gather strength from age ;
 When Heav'n in mercy shall the stage release
 From the dull slumbers of a still-life piece ;
 When some stale flow'r, disgraceful to the walk,
 Which long hath hung, though wither'd on the stalk,

Shall kindly drop, then Bride shall make her way,
 And merit find a passage to the day ;
 Brought into action, she at once shall raise
 Her own renown, and justify our praise.

Form'd for the tragic scene, to grace the stage,
 With rival excellence of love and rage,
 Mistress of each soft art, with matchless skill
 To turn and wind the passions as she will ;
 To melt the heart with sympathetic woe,
 Awake the sigh, and teach the tear to flow ;
 To put on Frenzy's wild distracted glare,
 And freeze the soul with horror and despair ;
 With just desert enroll'd in endless fame,
 Conscious of worth superior, Cibber came.

When poor Alicia's madd'ning brains are rack'd,
 And strongly imag'd griefs her mind distract :

Struck with her grief, I catch the madness too !
 My brain turns round, the headless trunk I view !
 The roof cracks, shakes, and falls ! — New horrors
 rise,

And Reason buried in the ruin lies.

Nobly disdainful of each slavish art,
 She makes her first attack upon the heart :
 Pleas'd with the summons, it receives her laws,
 And all is silence, sympathy, applause.

But when, by fond ambition drawn aside,
 Giddy with praise, and puff'd with female pride,
 She quits the tragic scene, and, in pretence
 To comic merit, breaks down Nature's fence ;
 I scarcely can believe my ears or eyes,
 Or find out Cibber through the dark disguise.

Pritchard, by Nature for the stage design'd,
 In person graceful, and in sense refin'd ;
 Her art as much as Nature's friend became,
 Her voice as free from blemish as her fame,
 Who knows so well in majesty to please,
 Attempter'd with the graceful charms of ease ?

When Congreve's favour'd pantomime to grace,
 She comes a captive queen of Moorish race ;
 When Love, Hate, Jealousy, Despair, and Rage,
 With wildest tumults in her breast engage ;
 Still equal to herself is Zara seen ;
 Her passions are the passions of a queen.

When she to murder whets the timorous Thane,
 I feel ambition rush through ev'ry vein ;
 Persuasion hangs upon her daring tongue,
 My heart grows flint, and ev'ry nerve 's new-strung.

In comedy — " Nay there," cries Critic, " hold,
 Pritchard 's for comedy too fat and old.
 Who can, with patience, bear the grey coquette,
 Or force a laugh with over-grown Juliet ?
 Her speech, look, action, humour, all are just ;
 But then, her age and figure give disgust."

Are foibles then, and graces of the mind,
 In real life, to size, or age confin'd ?
 Do spirits flow, and is good-breeding plac'd
 In any set circumference of waist ?
 As we grow old, doth affectation cease,
 Or gives not age new vigour to caprice ?
 If in originals these things appear,
 Why should we bar them in the copy here ?
 The nice punctilio-mongers of this age,
 The grand minute reformers of the stage,
 Slaves to propriety of ev'ry kind,
 Some standard-measure for each part should find,
 Which when the best of actors shall exceed,
 Let it devolve to one of smaller breed.

All actors too upon the back should bear
 Certificate of birth,—time, when ;—place, where.
 For how can critics rightly fix their worth,
 Unless they know the minute of their birth ?
 An audience too, deceiv'd, may find too late
 That they have clapp'd an actor out of date.

Figure, I own, at first may give offence,
 And harshly strike the eye's too curious sense ;
 But when perfections of the mind break forth,
 Humour's chaste sallies, judgment's solid worth ;
 When the pure genuine flame, by Nature taught,
 Springs into sense, and ev'ry action's thought ;
 Before such merit all objections fly ;
 Pritchard's genteel, and Garrick's six feet high.

Oft have I, Pritchard, seen thy wondrous skill,
 Confess'd thee great, but find thee greater still.
 That worth, which shone in scatter'd rays before,
 Collected now, breaks forth with double pow'r.

The Jealous Wife! on that thy trophies raise,
Inferior only to the author's praise.

From Dublin, fam'd in legends of romance
For mighty magic of enchanted lance,
With which her heroes arm'd victorious prove,
And like a flood rush o'er the land of Love,
Mossop and Barry came — names ne'er design'd
By Fate in the same sentence to be join'd.
Rais'd by the breath of popular acclaim,
They mounted to the pinnacle of Fame;
There the weak brain, made giddy with the height,
Spurr'd on the rival chiefs to mortal fight.
Thus sportive boys, around some bason's brim,
Behold the pipe-drawn bladders circling swim:
But if from lungs more potent, there arise
Two bubbles of a more than common size,
Eager for honour they for fight prepare,
Bubble meets bubble, and both sink to air.

Mossop, attach'd to military plan,
Still kept his eye fix'd on his right-hand man.
Whilst the mouth measures words with seeming skill,

The right-hand labours, and the left lies still;
For he resolv'd on scripture-grounds to go,
What the right doth, the left-hand shall not know.
With studied impropriety of speech,
He soars beyond the hackney critic's reach;
To epithets allots emphatic state,
Whilst principals, ungrac'd, like lacquies wait;
In ways first trodden by himself excels,
And stands alone in indeclinables;
Conjunction, preposition, adverb join
To stamp new vigour on the nervous line:
In monosyllables his thunders roll,
HE, SHE, IT, AND, WE, YE, THEY, fright the soul.

In person taller than the common size,
Behold where Barry draws admiring eyes!
When lab'ring passions, in his bosom pent,
Convulsive rage, and struggling heave for vent;
Spectators, with imagin'd terrors warm,
Anxious expect the bursting of the storm:
But, all unfit in such a pile to dwell,
His voice comes forth, like Echo from her cell;
To swell the tempest needful aid denies,
And all a-down the stage in feeble murmur dies.

What man, like Barry, with such pains can err
In elocution, action, character?

What man could give, if Barry was not here,
Such well-applauded tenderness to Lear?
Who else can speak so very, very fine,
That sense may kindly end with ev'ry line?

Some dozen lines before the ghost is there,
Behold him for the solemn scene prepare.
See how he frames his eyes, poises each limb,
Puts the whole body into proper trim. —
From whence we learn, with no great stretch of art,
Five lines hence comes a ghost, and ha! a start.

When he appears most perfect, still we find
Something which jars upon, and hurts the mind.
Whatever lights upon a part are thrown,
We see too plainly they are not his own.
No flame from Nature ever yet he caught;
Nor knew a feeling which he was not taught;
He rais'd his trophies on the base of art,
And conn'd his passions, as he conn'd his part.

Quin, from afar, lur'd by the scent of fame,
A stage Leviathan, put in his claim,
Pupil of Betterton and Booth. Alone,
Sullen he walk'd, and deem'd the chair his own.

For how should moderns, mushrooms of the day,
Who ne'er those masters knew, know how to play?
Grey-bearded vet'rans, who, with partial tongue,
Extol the times when they themselves were young,
Who, having lost all relish for the stage,
See not their own defects, but lash the age,
Receiv'd with joyful murmurs of applause,
Their darling chief, and lin'd his fav'rite cause.

Far be it from the candid Muse to tread
Insulting o'er the ashes of the dead,
But, just to living merit, she maintains,
And dares the test, whilst Garrick's genius reigns;
Ancients in vain endeavour to excel,
Happily prais'd, if they could act as well.
But though prescription's force we disallow,
Nor to antiquity submissive bow;
Though we deny imaginary grace,
Founded on accidents of time and place;
Yet real worth of ev'ry growth shall bear
Due praise, nor must we, Quin, forget thee there.

His words bore sterling weight, nervous and strong,

In manly tides of sense they roll'd along.
Happy in art, he chiefly had pretence
To keep up numbers, yet not forfeit sense.
No actor ever greater heights could reach
In all the labour'd artifice of speech.

Speech! Is that all? — And shall an actor found
An universal fame on partial ground?
Parrots themselves speak properly by rote,
And, in six months, my dog shall howl by note.
I laugh at those, who, when the stage they tread,
Neglect the heart, to compliment the head;
With strict propriety their cares confin'd
To weigh out words, while passion halts behind.
To syllable-dissectors they appeal,
Allow them accent, cadence, — fools may feel;
But, spite of all the criticising elves,
Those who would make us feel, must feel themselves.

His eyes, in gloomy socket taught to roll,
Proclaim'd the sullen habit of his soul.
Heavy and phlegmatic he trod the stage,
Too proud for tenderness, too dull for rage.
When Hector's lovely widow shines in tears,
Or Rowe's gay rake dependant virtue jeers,
With the same cast of features he is seen
To chide the libertine, and court the queen.
From the tame scene, which without passion flows,
With just desert his reputation rose;
Nor less he pleas'd, when, on some surly plan,
He was, at once, the actor and the man.

In Brute he shone unequal'd: all agree
Garrick's not half so great a brute as he.
When Cato's labour'd scenes are brought to view,
With equal praise the actor labour'd too;
For still you'll find, trace passions to their root,
Small difference 'twixt the stoic and the brute.
In fancied scenes, as in life's real plan,
He could not, for a moment, sink the man.
In whate'er cast his character was laid,
Self still, like oil, upon the surface play'd.
Nature, in spite of all his skill, crept in:
Horatio, Dorax, Falstaff, — still 't was Quin.

Next follows Sheridan — a doubtful name,
As yet unsettled in the rank of Fame.
This, fondly lavish in his praises grown,
Gives him all merit; that allows him none.
'Between them both we'll steer the middle course,
Nor, loving praise, rob Judgment of her force.

Just his conceptions, natural and great :
 His feelings strong, his words enforc'd with weight.
 Was speech-fam'd Quin himself to hear him speak,
 Envy would drive the colour from his cheek :
 But step-dame Nature, niggard of her grace,
 Deny'd the social pow'rs of voice and face.
 Fix'd in one frame of features, glare of eye,
 Passions, like chaos, in confusion lie :
 In vain the wonders of his skill are try'd
 To form distinctions Nature hath deny'd.
 His voice no touch of harmony admits,
 Irregularly deep and shrill by fits :
 The two extremes appear like man and wife,
 Coupled together for the sake of strife.

His action 's always strong, but sometimes such,
 That candour must declare he acts too much.
 Why must impatience fall three paces back ?
 Why paces three return to the attack ?
 Why is the right leg too forbid to stir,
 Unless in motion semicircular ?
 Why must the hero with the Nailor vie,
 And hurl the close-clench'd fist at nose or eye ?
 In royal John, with Philip angry grown,
 I thought he would have knock'd poor Davies
 down.

Inhuman tyrant ! was it not a shame,
 To fright a king so harmless and so tame ?
 But, spite of all defects, his glories rise ;
 And Art, by Judgment form'd, with Nature vies :
 Behold him sound the depth of Hubert's soul,
 Whilst in his own contending passions roll ;
 View the whole scene, with critic judgment scan,
 And then deny him merit if you can.
 Where he falls short, 't is Nature's fault alone ;
 Where he succeeds, the merit 's all his own.

Last Garrick came. — Behind him throng a train
 Of snarling critics, ignorant as vain.

One finds out, — " He 's of stature somewhat
 low —

Your hero always should be tall, you know. —
 True nat'ral greatness all consists in height."
 Produce your voucher, Critic. — " Sergeant Kite."

Another can't forgive the paltry arts
 By which he makes his way to shallow hearts ;
 Mere pieces of finesse, traps for applause —
 " Avaunt, unnat'ral start, affected pause."

For me, by Nature form'd to judge with phlegm,
 I can't acquit by wholesale, nor condemn.
 The best things carried to excess are wrong :
 The start may be too frequent, pause too long ;

But, only us'd in proper time and place,
 Severest judgment must allow them grace.

If bunglers, form'd on Imitation's plan,
 Just in the way that monkies mimic man,
 Their copied scene with mangled arts disgrace,
 And pause and start with the same vacant face ;
 We join the critic laugh ; those tricks we scorn,
 Which spoil the scenes they mean them to adorn.
 But when, from Nature's pure and genuine source,
 These strokes of acting flow with gen'rous force,
 When in the features all the soul 's pourtray'd,
 And passions, such as Garrick's, are display'd,
 To me they seem from quickest feelings caught :
 Each start is Nature ; and each pause is Thought.

When Reason yields to Passion's wild alarms,
 And the whole state of man is up in arms ;
 What but a critic could condemn the play'r,
 For pausing here, when Cool-Sense pauses there ?
 Whilst, working from the heart, the fire I trace,
 And mark it strongly flaming to the face ;
 Whilst, in each sound, I hear the very man ;
 I can't catch words, and pity those who can.

Let wits, like spiders, from the tortur'd brain,
 Fine-draw the critic-web with curious pain :
 The gods, — a kindness I with thanks must pay, —
 Have form'd me of a coarser kind of clay ;
 Not stung with envy, nor with pain diseas'd,
 A poor dull creature, still with Nature pleas'd ;
 Hence to thy praises, Garrick, I agree,
 And, pleas'd with Nature, must be pleas'd with thee.

Now I might tell, how silence reign'd throughout,
 And deep attention hush'd the rabble rout :
 How ev'ry claimant, tortur'd with desire,
 Was pale as ashes, or as red as fire :
 But, loose to fame, the Muse more simply acts,
 Rejects all flourish, and relates mere facts.

The judges, as the several parties came, [claim,
 With temper heard, with judgment weigh'd each
 And, in their sentence happily agreed,
 In name of both, great Shakspeare thus decreed.

" If manly sense ; if Nature link'd with Art ;
 If thorough knowledge of the human heart ;
 If pow'rs of acting vast and unconfin'd ;
 If fewest faults with greatest beauties join'd ;
 If strong expression, and strange pow'rs which lie
 Within the magic circle of the eye ;
 If feelings which few hearts, like his, can know,
 And which no face so well as his can show,
 Deserve the preference — Garrick, take the chair ;
 Nor quit it — till thou place an equal there."

EDWARD YOUNG.

EDWARD YOUNG, a poet of considerable celebrity, was the only son of Dr. Edward Young, fellow of Winchester College, and rector of Upham, Hampshire. He was born at his father's living, in 1684, and was educated at Winchester school, whence he was removed to New College, and afterwards to Corpus Christi College, Oxford. By the favour of Archbishop Tenison he obtained a law-fellowship at All-Souls. At this time his chief pursuit appears to have been poetry; and it is little to his credit, with respect to his choice of patrons, that he has sought them through all the political changes of the time. Tragedy was one of his favourite pursuits, in which his "Revenge," dedicated in 1721 to the Duke of Wharton, was regarded as his principal effort. Many other performances, however, took their turn, of which the most noted at this time were his "Paraphrase on Part of the Book of Job;" and "The Love of Fame, or the Universal Passion."

Young, now in his forty-fourth year, having given up his prospects as a layman, took orders, and was nominated one of the Royal Chaplains. He published some prose works as the fruits of his new profession, of which were, "The True Estimate of Human Life," representing only its dark side; and "An Apology for Princes, or the Reverence due to Government," a sermon, well suited to a court chaplain. In 1730 he was presented, by his college, to the rectory of Welwyn, in Hertfordshire; and in the following year he married Lady Elizabeth Lee, widow of Colonel Lee, and daughter of the Earl of Lichfield. This lady he lost in 1741, after she had borne him one son. Other affecting family losses occurred about that period, and aggravated his disposition to melancholy; and it was in this year that he commenced his famous poem, the "Night Thoughts." This production is truly original in design and execution: it imitates none, and has no imitators. Its spirit is, indeed, gloomy and severe, and its theology awful and overwhelming. It seems designed to pluck up by the roots every consolation for human evils, except that founded on the scheme of Christianity which the writer adopted; yet it presents reflections which are inculcated with a force of language, and sublimity of imagination, almost unparalleled. It abounds with the faults characteristic of the writer, and is spun out to a tedious length, that of nine books; but if not often read through, it will never sink into neglect. It was evidently the favourite work of the author, who ever after wished to be known as the composer of the "Night Thoughts." The numerous editions of the work sufficiently prove the hold which it has taken of the public mind.

The lyric attempts of Young were singularly unfortunate, not one of his pieces of that class having a claim for perusal; and, indeed, many of his other poetical writings display inequalities, and defects of taste and judgment, very extraordinary for a writer of his rank. In an edition of his works, published during his life, in four vols. 8vo., he himself excluded several compositions, which he thought of inferior merit, and expunged many dedications, of which he was doubtless ashamed. A letter to him, from Archbishop Secker, proves, however, that at a late period of life he had not ceased to solicit preferment. He latterly fell under domestic sway, and was entirely subdued to the controul of a housekeeper. Young continued to exist till April 1765, when he expired in his 84th year.

A PARAPHRASE

ON PART OF

THE BOOK OF JOB.

THUICK happy Job long liv'd in regal state,
Nor saw the sumptuous East a prince so great;
Whose worldly stores in such abundance flow'd,
Whose heart with such exalted virtue glow'd.
At length misfortunes take their turn to reign,
And ills on ills succeed! a dreadful train!
What now but deaths, and poverty, and wrong,
The sword wide-wasting, the reproachful tongue,

And spotted plagues, that mark'd his limbs all o'er
So thick with pains, they wanted room for more!
A change so sad what mortal here could bear?
Exhausted woe had left him nought to fear;
But gave him all to grief. Low earth he press'd,
Wept in the dust, and sorely smote his breast.
His friends around the deep affliction mourn'd,
Felt all his pangs, and groan for groan return'd;
In anguish of their hearts their mantles rent,
And seven long days in solemn silence spent!
A debt of reverence to distress so great!
Then Job contain'd no more; but curs'd his fate.
His day of birth, its inauspicious light,
He wishes sunk in shades of endless night,

And blotted from the year ; nor fears to crave
Death, instant death ; impatient for the grave,
That seat of peace, that mansion of repose,
Where rest and mortals are no longer foes ;
Where counsellors are hush'd, and mighty kings
(Oh happy turn ! ) no more are wretched things.

His words were daring, and displeas'd his friends ;
His conduct they reprove, and he defends ;
And now they kindled into warm debate,
And sentiments oppos'd with equal heat ;
Fix'd in opinion, both refuse to yield,
And summon all their reason to the field :
So high at length their arguments were wrought,
They reach'd the last extent of human thought :
A pause ensued — When, lo ! Heaven interpos'd,
And awefully the long contention clos'd.
Full o'er their heads, with terrible surprise,
A sudden whirlwind blacken'd all the skies :
(They saw, and trembled ! ) from the darkness broke
A dreadful voice, and thus th' Almighty spoke :

“ Who gives his tongue a loose so bold and vain,
Censures my conduct, and reproves my reign ;
Lifts up his thought against me from the dust,
And tells the World's Creator what is just ?
Of late so brave, now lift a dauntless eye,
Face my demand, and give it a reply : —
Where didst thou dwell at Nature's early birth ?
Who laid foundations for the spacious Earth ?
Who on its surface did extend the line,
Its form determine, and its bulk confine ?
Who fix'd the corner-stone ? What hand, declare,
Hung it on nought, and fasten'd it on air ;
When the bright morning stars in concert sung,
When Heaven's high arch with loud hosannahs
rung,

When shouting sons of God the triumph crown'd,
And the wide concave thunder'd with the sound ?
Earth's numerous kingdoms, hast thou view'd them
all ?

And can thy span of knowledge grasp the ball ?
Who heav'd the mountain, which sublimely stands,
And casts its shadow into distant lands ?

“ Who, stretching forth his sceptre o'er the deep,
Can that wide world in due subjection keep ?
I broke the globe, I scoop'd its hollow side,
And did a basin for the floods provide ;
I chain'd them with my word ; the boiling sea,
Work'd up in tempests, hears my great decree ;
' Thus far, thy floating tide shall be convey'd ;
And here, O main, be thy proud billows stay'd.' ”

“ Hast thou explor'd the secrets of the deep,
Where, shut from use, unnumber'd treasures sleep ?
Where, down a thousand fathoms from the day,
Springs the great fountain, mother of the sea ?
Those gloomy paths did thy bold foot e'er tread,
Whole worlds of waters rolling o'er thy head ?

“ Hath the cleft centre open'd wide to thee ?
Death's inmost chambers didst thou ever see ?
E'er knock at his tremendous gate, and wade
To the black portal through th' incumbent shade ?
Deep are those shades ; but shades still deeper hide
My counsels from the ken of human pride.

“ Where dwells the light ? In what refulgent dome ?
And where has darkness made her dismal home ?
Thou know'st, no doubt, since thy large heart is fraught

With ripen'd wisdom, through long ages brought ;
Since Nature was call'd forth when thou wast by,
And into being rose beneath thine eye !

“ Are mists begotten ? Who their father knew ?
From whom descend the pearly drops of dew ?
To bind the stream by night, what hand can boast,
Or whiten morning with the hoary frost ?
Whose powerful breath, from northern regions blown,
Touches the sea, and turns it into stone :
A sudden desert spreads o'er realms defac'd,
And lays one half of the creation waste ? [see

“ Thou know'st me not ; thy blindness cannot
How vast a distance parts thy God from thee.
Canst thou in whirlwinds mount aloft ? Canst thou
In clouds and darkness wrap thy awful brow ?
And, when day triumphs in meridian light,
Put forth thy hand, and shade the world with night ?

“ Who launch'd the clouds in air, and bid them
roll

Suspended seas aloft, from pole to pole ?
Who can refresh the burning sandy plain,
And quench the summer with a waste of rain ?
Who, in rough deserts far from human toil,
Made rocks bring forth, and desolation smile ?
There blooms the rose, where human face ne'er show'd,
And spreads its beauties to the Sun alone.

“ To check the shower, who lifts his hand on high,
And shuts the sluices of th' exhausted sky,
When Earth no longer mourns her gaping veins,
Her naked mountains, and her russet plains ;
But, new in life, a cheerful prospect yields
Of shining rivers, and of verdant fields ;
When groves and forests lavish all their bloom,
And Earth and Heaven are fill'd with rich perfume ?

“ Hast thou e'er scal'd my wintry skies, and seen
Of hail and snows my northern magazine ?
These the dread treasures of mine anger are,
My funds of vengeance for the day of war,
When clouds rain death, and storms at my command

Rage through the world, or waste a guilty land.

“ Who taught the rapid winds to fly so fast,
Or shakes the centre with his eastern blast ?
Who from the skies can a whole deluge pour ?
Who strikes through Nature with the solemn roar
Of dreadful thunder, points it where to fall,
And in fierce lightning wraps the flying ball ?
Not he who trembles at the darted fires,
Falls at the sound, and in the flash expires.

“ Who drew the comet out to such a size,
And pour'd his flaming train o'er half the skies ?
Did thy resentment hang him out ? Does he
Glare on the nation, and denounce, from thee ?

“ Who on low Earth can moderate the rein,
That guides the stars along th' ethereal plain ?
Appoint their seasons, and direct their course,
Their lustre brighten, and supply their force ?
Canst thou the skies' benevolence restrain,
And cause the Pleiades to shine in vain ?
Or, when Orion sparkles from his sphere,
Thaw the cold season, and unbind the year ?
Bid Mazzaroth his destin'd station know,
And teach the bright Arcturus where to glow ?
Mine is the night, with all her stars ; I pour
Myriads, and myriads I reserve in store. [born,

“ Dost thou pronounce where day-light shall be
And draw the purple curtain of the morn ;
Awake the Sun, and bid him come away,
And glad thy world with his obsequious ray ?
Hast thou, enthron'd in flaming glory, driven
Triumphant round the spacious ring of Heaven ?
That pomp of light, what hand so far displays,
That distant Earth lies basking in the blaze ?

"Who did the soul with her rich powers invest,
And light up reason in the human breast?
To shine, with fresh increase of lustre bright,
When stars and Sun are set in endless night?
To these my various questions make reply."

Th' Almighty spoke; and, speaking, shook the sky.
What then, Chaldaean sire, was thy surprise!
Thus thou, with trembling heart and down-cast
eyes: —

"Once and again, which I in groans deplore,
My tongue has err'd; but shall presume no more.
My voice is in eternal silence bound,
And all my soul falls prostrate to the ground."

He ceas'd: when, lo, again th' Almighty spoke;
The same dread voice from the black whirlwind
broke.

"Can that arm measure with an arm divine?
And canst thou thunder with a voice like mine?
Or in the hollow of thy hand contain
The bulk of waters, the wide-spreading main,
When, mad with tempests, all the billows rise
In all their rage, and dash the distant skies?"

"Come forth, in beauty's excellence array'd;
And be the grandeur of thy power display'd;
Put on omnipotence, and, frowning, make
The spacious round of the creation shake;
Dispatch thy vengeance, bid it overthrow
Triumphant vice, lay lofty tyrants low,
And crumble them to dust. When this is done,
I grant thy safety lodg'd in thee alone;
Of thee thou art, and mayst undaunted stand
Behind the buckler of thine own right-hand.

"Fond man! the vision of a moment made!
Dream of a dream! and shadow of a shade!
What worlds hast thou produc'd, what creatures
fram'd;

What insects cherish'd, that thy God is blam'd?
When pain'd with hunger, the wild raven's brood
Loud calls on God, importunate for food:
Who hears their cry, who grants their hoarse request,
And stills the clamour of the craving nest?"

"Who in the stupid ostrich has subdued
A parent's care, and fond inquietude?
While far she flies, her scatter'd eggs are found,
Without an owner, on the sandy ground;
Cast out on fortune, they at mercy lie,
And borrow life from an indulgent sky:
Adopted by the Sun, in blaze of day,
They ripen under his prolific ray.

Unmindful she, that some unhappy tread,
May crush her young in their neglected bed.
What time she skims along the field with speed,
She scorns the rider, and pursuing steed.

"How rich the peacock! what bright glories run
From plume to plume, and vary in the Sun!
He proudly spreads them to the golden ray,
Gives all his colours, and adorns the day;
With conscious state the spacious round displays,
And slowly moves amid the waving blaze.

"Who taught the hawk to find, in seasons wise,
Perpetual summer, and a change of skies?
When clouds deform the year, she mounts the wind,
Shoots to the south, nor fears the storm behind;
The Sun returning, she returns again,
Lives in his beams, and leaves ill days to men.

"Though strong the hawk, though practis'd well
to fly,
An eagle drops her in a lower sky;
An eagle, when, deserting human sight,
She seeks the Sun in her unwearied flight:

Did thy command her yellow pinion lift
So high in air, and set her on the clift,
Where far above thy world she dwells alone,
And proudly makes the strength of rocks her own;
Thence wide o'er Nature takes her dread survey,
And with a glance predestinates her prey?
She feasts her young with blood; and, hovering o'er
Th' unslaughter'd host, enjoys the promis'd gore.

"Know'st thou how many moons, by me assign'd,
Roll o'er the mountain goat, and forest hind,
While pregnant they a mother's load sustain?
They bend in anguish, and cast forth their pain.
Hale are their young, from human frailties freed;
Walk unsustain'd, and unassisted feed;
They live at once; forsake the dam's warm side;
Take the wide world, with Nature for their guide;
Bound o'er the lawn, or seek the distant glade;
And find a home in each delightful shade. [me,

"Will the tall reem, which knows no Lord but
Low at the crib, and ask an alms of thee?
Submit his unworn shoulder to the yoke,
Break the stiff clod, and o'er thy furrow smoke?
Since great his strength, go trust him, void of care;
Lay on his neck the toil of all the year;
Bid him bring home the seasons to thy doors,
And cast his load among thy gather'd stores.

"Didst thou from service the wild ass discharge,
And break his bonds, and bid him live at large,
Through the wide waste, his ample mansion, roam,
And lose himself in his unbounded home?
By Nature's hand magnificently fed,
His meal is on the range of mountains spread;
As in pure air aloft he bounds along,
He sees in distant smoke the city throng;
Conscious of freedom, scorns the smother'd train,
The threatening driver, and the servile rein.

"Survey the warlike horse! didst thou invest
With thunder his robust distended chest?
No sense of fear his dauntless soul allays;
'Tis dreadful to behold his nostrils blaze;
To paw the vale he proudly takes delight,
And triumphs in the fullness of his might;
High rais'd he snuffs the battle from afar,
And burns to plunge amid the raging war;
And mocks at death, and throws his foam around,
And in a storm of fury shakes the ground.
How does his firm, his rising heart advance
Full on the brandish'd sword, and shaken lance:
While his fix'd eye-balls meet the dazzling shield,
Gaze, and return the lightning of the field!
He sinks the sense of pain in generous pride,
Nor feels the shaft that trembles in his side;
But neighs to the shrill trumpet's dreadful blast
Till death; and when he groans, he groans his last.

"But, fiercer still, the lordly lion stalks,
Grimly majestic in his lonely walks;
When round he glares, all living creatures fly;
He clears the desert with his rolling eye.
Say, mortal, does he rouse at thy command,
And roar to thee, and live upon thy hand?
Dost thou for him in forests bend thy bow,
And to his gloomy den the morsel throw,
Where bent on death lie hid his tawny brood,
And, couch'd in dreadful ambush, pant for blood;
Or, stretch'd on broken limbs, consume the day,
In darkness wrapt, and slumber o'er their prey?
By the pale Moon they take their destin'd round,
And lash their sides, and furious tear the ground.
Now shrieks and dying groans the desert fill;
They rage, they rend; their ravenous jaws distil

With crimson foam ; and, when the banquet 's o'er,
They stride away, and paint their steps with gore ;
In flight alone the shepherd puts his trust,
And shudders at the talon in the dust.

" Mild is my behemoth, though large his frame ;
Smooth is his temper, and repress his flame,
While unprovok'd. This native of the flood
Lifts his broad foot, and puts ashore for food ;
Earth sinks beneath him, as he moves along
To seek the herbs, and mingle with the throng.
See with what strength his harden'd loins are bound,
All over proof and shut against a wound.
How like a mountain cedar moves his tail !
Nor can his complicated sinews fail.

Built high and wide, his solid bones surpass
The bars of steel ; his ribs are ribs of brass ;
His port majestic and his armed jaw
Give the wide forest, and the mountain, law.
The mountains feed him ; there the beasts admire
The mighty stranger, and in dread retire ;
At length his greatness nearer they survey,
Graze in his shadow, and his eye obey.
The fens and marshes are his cool retreat,
His noontide shelter from the burning heat ;
Their sedgy bosoms his wide couch are made,
And groves of willows give him all their shade.

" His eye drinks Jordan up, when fir'd with drought

He trusts to turn its current down his throat ;
In lessen'd waves it creeps along the plain :
He sinks a river, and he thirsts again.

" Go to the Nile, and, from its fruitful side,
Cast forth thy line into the swelling tide :
With slender hair leviathan command,
And stretch his vastness on the loaded strand.
Will he become thy servant ? Will he own
Thy lordly nod, and tremble at thy frown ?
Or with his sport amuse thy leisure day,
And, bound in silk, with thy soft maidens play ?

" Shall pompous banquets swell with such a prize ?
And the bowl journey round his ample size ?
Or the debating merchants share the prey,
And various limbs to various marts convey ?
Through his firm skull what steel its way can win ?
What forceful engine can subdue his skin ?
Fly far, and live ; tempt not his matchless might :
The bravest shrink to cowards in his sight ;
The rashest dare not rouse him up : Who then
Shall turn on me, among the sons of men ?

" Am I a debtor ? Hast thou ever heard
Whence come the gifts that are on me conferr'd ?
My lavish fruit a thousand valleys fills,
And mine the herds that graze a thousand hills :
Earth, sea, and air, all Nature is my own ;
And stars and Sun are dust beneath my throne.
And dar'st thou with the World's great Father vie,
Thou, who dost tremble at my creature's eye ?

" At full my large leviathan shall rise,
Boast all his strength, and spread his wondrous size.
Who, great in arms, e'er stripp'd his shining mail,
Or crown'd his triumph with a single scale ?
Whose heart sustains him to draw near ? Behold,
Destruction yawns ; his spacious jaws unfold,
And marshall'd round the wide expanse, disclose
Teeth edg'd with death, and crowding rows on rows :
What hideous fangs on either side arise !
And what a deep abyss between them lies !
Meté with thy lance, and with thy plummet sound,
The one how long, the other how profound.

His bulk is charg'd with such a furious soul,
That clouds of smoke from his spread nostrils roll,
As from a furnace ; and, when rous'd his ire,
Fate issues from his jaws in streams of fire.
The rage of tempests, and the roar of seas,
Thy terror, this thy great superior please ;
Strength on his ample shoulder sits in state ;
His well-join'd limbs are dreadfully complete ;
His flakes of solid flesh are slow to part ;
As steel his nerves ; as adamant his heart.

" When, late awak'd, he rears him from the floods,
And, stretching forth his stature to the clouds,
Writhes in the Sun aloft his scaly height,
And strikes the distant hills with transient light,
Far round are fatal damps of terror spread,
The mighty fear, nor blush to own their dread.

" Large is his front ; and, when his burnish'd
eyes

Lift their broad lids, the morning seems to rise.

" In vain may death in various shapes invade,
The swift-wing'd arrow, the descending blade ;
His naked breast their impotence defies ;
The dart rebounds, the brittle falchion flies.
Shut in himself, the war without he hears,
Safe in the tempest of their rattling spears ;
The cumber'd strand their wasted volleys strow ;
His sport, the rage and labour of the foe.

" His pastimes like a cauldron boil the flood,
And blacken ocean with the rising mud ;
The billows feel him, as he works his way ;
His hoary footsteps shine along the sea ;
The foam high-wrought with white divides the green,
And distant sailors point where Death has been.

" His like Earth bears not on her spacious face ;
Alone in Nature stands his dauntless race,
For utter ignorance of fear renown'd,
In wrath he rolls his baleful eye around ;
Makes every swoln, disdainful heart subside,
And holds dominion o'er the sons of pride."
Then the Chaldean eas'd his labouring breast,
With full conviction of his crime oppress.

" Thou canst accomplish all things, Lord of Might !

And every thought is naked to thy sight.
But, oh ! thy ways are wonderful, and lie
Beyond the deepest reach of mortal eye.
Oft have I heard of thine almighty power ;
But never saw thee till this dreadful hour.
O'erwhelm'd with shame, the Lord of Life I see,
Abhor myself, and give my soul to thee.
Nor shall my weakness tempt thine anger more :
Man is not made to question, but adore."

THE COMPLAINT:

OR,

NIGHT-THOUGHTS.

PREFACE.

As the occasion of this poem was real, not fictitious; so the method pursued in it was rather imposed, by what spontaneously arose in the author's mind on that occasion, than meditated or designed; which will appear very probable from the nature of it. For it differs from the common mode of poetry, which is, from long narrations to draw short morals. Here, on the contrary, the narrative is short, and the morality arising from it makes the bulk of the poem. The reason of it is, that the facts mentioned did naturally pour these moral reflections on the thought of the writer.

NIGHT THE FIRST.

ON

LIFE, DEATH, AND IMMORTALITY.

TO THE RIGHT HON. ARTHUR ONSLOW, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tri'd Nature's sweet restorer, balmy Sleep!
He, like the world, his ready visit pays
Where fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes;
Swift on his downy pinion flies from woe,
And lights on lids unsullied with a tear.

From short (as usual) and disturb'd repose,
I wake: How happy they, who wake no more!
Yet that were vain, if dreams infest the grave.
I wake, emerging from a sea of dreams
Tumultuous; where my wreck'd desponding thought,
From wave to wave of fancied misery,
At random drove, her helm of reason lost.
Though now restor'd, 't is only change of pain,
(A bitter change!) severer for severe.
The Day too short for my distress; and Night,
E'en in the zenith of her dark domain,
Is sunshine to the colour of my fate.

Night, sable goddess! from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world.
Silence, how dead! and darkness, how profound!
Nor eye, nor listening ear, an object finds;
Creation sleeps. 'T is, as the general pulse
Of life stood still, and Nature made a pause;
An awful pause! prophetic of her end.
And let her prophecy be soon fulfill'd;
Fate! drop the curtain; I can lose no more.

Silence and Darkness! solemn sisters! twins
From ancient Night, who nurse the tender thought
To reason, and on reason build resolve,
(That column of true majesty in man,)
Assist me: I will thank you in the grave;
The grave, your kingdom: there this frame shall fall
A victim sacred to your dreary shrine.
But what are ye? —

Thou, who didst put to flight
Primeval Silence, when the morning stars,
Exulting, shouted o'er the rising ball!
O thou, whose word from solid darkness struck
That spark, the Sun; strike wisdom from my soul;
My soul, which flies to thee, her trust, her treasure,
As misers to their gold, while others rest.

Through this opaque of Nature, and of soul,

This double night, transmit one pitying ray,
To lighten, and to cheer. O lead my mind,
(A mind that fain would wander from its woe,)
Lead it through various scenes of life and death;
And from each scene, the noblest truths inspire.
Nor less inspire my conduct, than my song;
Teach my best reason, reason; my best will Teach rectitude; and fix my firm resolve
Wisdom to wed, and pay her long arrear:
Nor let the phial of thy vengeance, pour'd
On this devoted head, be pour'd in vain.

The bell strikes one. We take no note of time
But from its loss. To give it then a tongue,
Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke,
I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
It is the knell of my departed hours:
Where are they? With the years beyond the flood.
It is the signal that demands dispatch;
How much is to be done? My hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd, and o'er life's narrow verge
Look down — On what? a fathomless abyss!
A dread eternity! how surely mine!
And can eternity belong to me,
Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour?

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful, is man!
How passing wonder He, who made him such!
Who centered in our make such strange extremes!
From different natures marvelously mixt,
Connection exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal, sully'd and absorpt!
Though sully'd and dishonour'd, still divine!
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless immortal! insect infinite!
A worm! a god! — I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost! at home a stranger,
Thought wanders up and down, surpris'd, aghast,
And wondering at her own: How Reason reels!
O what a miracle to man is man,
Triumphantly distress'd! what joy, what dread!
Alternately transported, and alarm'd!
What can preserve my life? or what destroy?
An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave;
Legions of angels can't confine me there.

'T is past conjecture; all things rise in proof:
While o'er my limbs sleep's soft dominion spread,
What though my soul fantastic measures trod
O'er fairy fields; or mourn'd along the gloom
Of pathless woods; or, down the craggy steep
Hurl'd headlong, swam with pain the mantled pool;
Or scal'd the cliff; or danc'd on hollow winds,
With antic shapes, wild natives of the brain?
Her ceaseless flight, though devious, speaks her nature
Of subtler essence than the trodden clod;
Active, aerial, towering, unconfin'd,
Unfetter'd with her gross companion's fall.
E'en silent night proclaims my soul immortal:
E'en silent night proclaims eternal day.
For human weal, Heaven husbands all events;
Dull sleep instructs, nor sport vain dreams in vain.

Why then their loss deplore, that are not lost?
Why wanders wretched thought their tombs around,
In infidel distress? Are angels there?
Slumbers, rak'd up in dust, ethereal fire?

They live! they greatly live a life on Earth
Unkindled, unconceiv'd; and from an eye
Of tenderness let heavenly pity fall

On me, more justly number'd with the dead.
 This is the desert, this the solitude :
 How populous, how vital, is the grave !
 This is creation's melancholy vault,
 The vale funereal, the sad cypress gloom ;
 The land of apparitions, empty shades !
 All, all on Earth, is shadow, all beyond
 Is substance ; the reverse is folly's creed :
 How solid all, where change shall be no more !

This is the bud of being, the dim dawn,
 The twilight of our day, the vestibule :
 Life's theatre as yet is shut, and Death,
 Strong Death, alone can heave the massy bar,
 This gross impediment of clay remove,
 And make us embryos of existence free.
 From real life, but little more remote
 Is he, not yet a candidate for light,
 The future embryo, slumbering in his sire.
 Embryos we must be, till we burst the shell,
 Yon ambient azure shell, and spring to life,
 The life of gods, O transport ! and of man.

Yet man, fool man ! here buries all his thoughts ;
 Inters celestial hopes without one sigh.
 Prisoner of Earth, and pent beneath the Moon,
Here pinions all his wishes ; wing'd by Heaven
 To fly at infinite ; and reach it there,
 Where seraphs gather immortality,
 On life's fair tree, fast by the throne of God.
 What golden joys ambrosial clustering glow,
 In his full beam, and ripen for the just,
 Where momentary ages are no more ! [expire !
 Where Time, and Pain, and Chance, and Death
 And is it in the flight of threescore years,
 To push eternity from human thought,
 And smother souls immortal in the dust ?
 A soul immortal, spending all her fires,
 Wasting her strength in strenuous idleness,
 Thrown into tumult, raptur'd or alarm'd,
 At aught this scene can threaten or indulge,
 Resembles ocean into tempest wrought,
 To waft a feather, or to drown a fly.

Where falls this censure ? It o'erwhelms myself ;
 How was my heart incrustated by the world !
 O how self-fetter'd was my grovelling soul !
 How, like a worm, was I wrapt round and round
 In silken thought, which reptile Fancy spun,
 Till darken'd Reason lay quite clouded o'er
 With soft conceit of endless comfort here,
 Nor yet put forth her wings to reach the skies !

Night-visions may befriend (as sung above) :
 Our waking dreams are fatal. How I dreamt
 Of things impossible ! (Could sleep do more ?)
 Of joys perpetual in perpetual change !
 Of stable pleasures on the tossing wave !
 Eternal sunshine in the storms of life !
 How richly were my noon-tide trances hung
 With gorgeous tapestries of pictur'd joys !
 Joy behind joy, in endless perspective !
 Till at Death's toll, whose restless iron tongue
 Calls daily for his millions at a meal,
 Starting I woke, and found myself undone.
 Where now my phrenzy's pompous furniture ?
 The cobweb'd cottage, with its ragged wall
 Of mouldering mud, is royalty to me !
 The spider's most attenuated thread
 Is cord, is cable, to man's tender tie
 On earthly bliss ! it breaks at every breeze.

O ye blest scenes of permanent delight !
 Full, above measure ! lasting, beyond bound !
 A perpetuity of bliss is bliss.

Could you, so rich in rapture, fear an end,
 That ghastly thought would drink up all your joy,
 And quite unparadise the realms of light.
 Safe are you lodg'd above these rolling spheres ;
 The baleful influence of whose giddy dance
 Sheds sad vicissitude on all beneath.

Here teems with revolutions every hour ;
 And rarely for the better ; or the best,
 More mortal than the common births of fate.
 Each moment has its sickle, emulous
 Of Time's enormous scythe, whose ample sweep
 Strikes empires from the root ; each moment plays
 His little weapon in the narrower sphere
 Of sweet domestic comfort, and cuts down
 The fairest bloom of sublunary bliss.

Bliss ! sublunary bliss ! — proud words, and vain !
 Implicit treason to divine decree !

A bold invasion of the rights of Heaven !
 I clasp'd the phantoms, and I found them air.
 O had I weigh'd it ere my fond embrace !
 What darts of agony had miss'd my heart !

Death ! great proprietor of all ! 't is thine
 To tread out empire, and to quench the stars.
 The Sun himself by thy permission shines ;
 And, one day, thou shalt pluck him from his sphere.
 Amid such mighty plunder, why exhaust
 Thy partial quiver on a mark so mean ?
 Why thy peculiar rancour wreak'd on me ?
 Insatiate archer ! could not one suffice ?
 Thy shaft flew thrice ; and thrice my peace was slain
 And thrice, ere thrice yon Moon had fill'd her horn.
 O Cynthia ! why so pale ? Dost thou lament
 Thy wretched neighbour ? Grieve to see thy whirl
 Of ceaseless change outwhirl'd in human life ?
 How wanes my borrow'd bliss ! from fortune's smile,
 Precarious courtesy ! not virtue's sure,
 Self-given, solar ray of sound delight.

In every vary'd posture, place, and hour,
 How widow'd every thought of every joy !
 Thought, busy thought ! too busy for my peace !
 Through the dark postern of time long elaps'd,
 Led softly, by the stillness of the night,
 Led, like a murderer, (and such it proves !)
 Strays (wretched rover !) o'er the pleasing past ;
 In quest of wretchedness perversely strays ;
 And finds all desert now ; and meets the ghosts
 Of my departed joys ; a numerous train !
 I rue the riches of my former fate ;
 Sweet comfort's blasted clusters I lament ;
 I tremble at the blessings once so dear ;
 And every pleasure pains me to the heart.

Yet why complain ? or why complain for one ?
 Hangs out the Sun his lustre but for me,
 The singl. man ? Are angels all beside ?
 I mourn for millions : 't is the common lot ;
 In this shape, or in that, has Fate entail'd
 The mother's throes on all of woman born,
 Not more the children, than sure heirs, of pain.

War, Famine, Pest, Volcano, Storm, and Fire,
 Intestine broils, Oppression, with her heart
 Wrapt up in triple brass, besiege mankind.
 God's image disinherited of day,
Here, plung'd in mines, forgets a Sun was made.
There, beings deathless as their haughty lord,
 Are hammer'd to the galling oar for life ;
 And plow the winter's wave, and reap despair.
 Some, for hard masters, broken under arms,
 In battle lopt away, with half their limbs,
 Beg bitter bread through realms their valour sav'd,
 If so the tyrant, or his minion, doom.

ant, and incurable Disease, (fell pair!)
 In hopeless multitudes remorseless seize
 At once; and make a refuge of the grave.
 How groaning hospitals eject their dead!
 What numbers groan for sad admission there!
 What numbers, once in Fortune's lap high-fed,
 Solicit the cold hand of Charity!
 To shock us more, solicit it in vain!
 The silken sons of pleasure! since in pains
 You rue more modish visits, visit here,
 And breathe from your debauch: give, and reduce
Perfit's dominion o'er you: but so great
 Your impudence, you blush at what is right.
 Happy! did sorrow seize on such alone.
 Not prudence can defend, or virtue save;
 Disease invades the chastest temperance;
 And punishment the guiltless; and alarm,
 Through thickest shades, pursues the fond of peace.
 Ian's caution often into danger turns;
 And his guard, falling, crushes him to death.
 Not happiness itself makes good her name;
 Our very wishes give us not our wish.
 How distant oft the thing we doat on most,
 From that for which we doat, felicity!
 The smoothest course of Nature has its pains!
 And truest friends, through error, wound our rest.
 Without misfortune, what calamities!
 And what hostilities, without a foe!
 For are foes wanting to the best on Earth.
 But endless is the list of human ills,
 And sighs might sooner fail, than cause to sigh.
 A part how small of the terraqueous globe
 Is tenanted by man! the rest a waste,
 Rocks, deserts, frozen seas, and burning sands;
 Wild haunts of monsters, poisons, stings, and death.
 Such is Earth's melancholy map! but, far
 More sad! this Earth is a true map of man.
 So bounded are its haughty lord's delights
 To woe's wide empire; where deep troubles toss,
 Loud sorrows howl, envenom'd passions bite,
 Lethal calamities our vitals seize,
 And threatening fate wide opens to devour.
 What then am I, who sorrow for myself!
 In age, in infancy, from others' aid
 Is all our hope; to teach us to be kind.
 That, Nature's first, last lesson to mankind:
 The selfish heart deserves the pain it feels.
 More generous sorrow, while it sinks, exalts;
 And conscious virtue mitigates the pang.
 Nor virtue, more than prudence, bids me give
 A swollen thought a second channel; who divide,
 They weaken too, the torrent of their grief.
 Take then, O World! thy much indebted tear:
 How sad a sight is human happiness,
 To those whose thought can pierce beyond an hour!
 Thou! whate'er thou art, whose heart exults!
 Wouldst thou I should congratulate thy fate? [me.
 I know thou wouldst; thy pride demands it from
 Let thy pride pardon, what thy nature needs,
 The salutary censure of a friend.
 Thou happy wretch! by blindness thou art blest;
 By dotage dandled to perpetual smiles.
 Know, smiler! at thy peril art thou pleas'd!
 Thy pleasure is the promise of thy pain.
 Misfortune, like a creditor severe,
 But rises in demand for her delay;
 She makes a scourge of past prosperity,
 To sting thee more, and double thy distress.
 Lorenzo, Fortune makes her court to thee,
 Thy fond heart dances, while the Siren sings.

Dear is thy welfare; think me not unkind;
 I would not damp, but to secure thy joys.
 Think not that fear is sacred to the storm:
 Stand on thy guard against the smiles of Fate.
 Is Heaven tremendous in its frowns? Most sure;
 And in its favours formidable too:
 Its favours here are trials, not rewards;
 A call to duty, not discharge from care;
 And should alarm us, full as much as woes;
 Awake us to their cause and consequence;
 And make us tremble, weigh'd with our desert;
 Awe Nature's tumult, and chastise her joys,
 Lest, while we clasp, we kill them; nay, invert
 To worse than simple misery, their charms.
 Revolted joys, like foes in civil war,
 Like bosom friendships to resentment sour'd,
 With rage envenom'd rise against our peace.
 Beware what Earth calls happiness; beware
 All joys, but joys that never can expire.
 Who builds on less than an immortal base,
 Fond as he seems, condemns his joys to death.
 Mine died with thee, Philander! thy last sigh
 Dissolv'd the charm; the disenchanted Earth
 Lost all her lustre. Where her glittering towers?
 Her golden mountains, where? all darken'd down
 To naked waste; a dreary vale of tears;
 The great magician's dead! Thou poor, pale piece
 Of out-cast earth, in darkness! what a change
 From yesterday! Thy darling hope so near,
 (Long-labour'd prize!) O how ambition flush'd
 Thy glowing cheek! Ambition truly great,
 Of virtuous praise. Death's subtle seed within (Sly, treacherous miner!) working in the dark,
 Smil'd at thy well-concerted scheme, and beckon'd
 The worm to riot on that rose so red,
 Unfaded ere it fell; one moment's prey!
 Man's foresight is conditionally wise;
 Lorenzo! wisdom into folly turns
 Oft, the first instant, its idea fair
 To labouring thought is born. How dim our eye!
 The present moment terminates our sight; [next;
 Clouds, thick as those on doomsday, drown the
 We penetrate, we prophesy in vain.
 Time is dealt out by particles; and each,
 Ere mingled with the streaming sands of life,
 By Fate's inviolable oath is sworn
 Deep silence, "Where eternity begins."
 By Nature's law, what may be, may be now;
 There's no prerogative in human hours.
 In human hearts what bolder thought can rise
 Than man's presumption on to-morrow's dawn?
 Where is to-morrow? In another world.
 For numbers this is certain; the reverse
 Is sure to none; and yet on this perhaps,
 This peradventure, infamous for lies,
 As on a rock of adamant, we build
 Our mountain hopes, spin out eternal schemes,
 As we the fatal sisters could out-spin,
 And, big with life's futurities, expire.
 Not e'en Philander had bespoke his shroud:
 Nor had he cause; a warning was deny'd:
 How many fall as sudden, not as safe!
 As sudden, though for years admonish'd home.
 Of human ills the last extreme beware,
 Beware, Lorenzo! a slow sudden death.
 How dreadful that deliberate surprise!
 Be wise to-day; 't is madness to defer;
 Next day the fatal precedent will plead;
 Thus on, till wisdom is push'd out of life.
 Procrastination is the thief of time;

Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
And to the mercies of a moment leaves
The vast concerns of an eternal scene.
If not so frequent, would not this be strange?
That 't is so frequent, this is stranger still.

Of man's miraculous mistakes, this bears
The palm, "That all men are about to live,"
For ever on the brink of being born.
All pay themselves the compliment to think
They one day shall not drivel: and their pride
On this reversion takes up ready praise;
At least, their own; their future selves applaud;
How excellent that life they ne'er will lead!
Time lodg'd in their own hands is folly's vails;
That lodg'd in fate's, to wisdom they consign;
The thing they can't but purpose, they postpone;
'T is not in folly, not to scorn a fool;
And scarce in human wisdom, to do more.
All promise is poor dilatory man,
And that through every stage: when young, indeed,
In full content we, sometimes, nobly rest,
Unanxious for ourselves; and only wish,
As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
At thirty man suspects himself a fool;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan;
At fifty chides his infamous delay,
Pushes his prudent purpose to resolve;
In all the magnanimity of thought
Resolves; and re-resolves; then dies the same.

And why? Because he thinks himself immortal.
All men think all men mortal, but themselves;
Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
Strikes through their wounded hearts the sudden dread;
But their hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
Soon close; where, past the shaft, no trace is found.

As from the wing, no scar the sky retains;
The parted wave no furrow from the keel;
So dies in human hearts the thoughts of death.
E'en with the tender tear which Nature sheds
O'er those we love, we drop it in their grave.
Can I forget Philander? That were strange!
O my full heart! — But should I give it vent,
The longest night, though longer far, would fail,
And the lark listen to my midnight song.

The sprightly lark's shrill matin wakes the morn;
Grief's sharpest thorn hard pressing on my breast,
I strive, with wakeful melody, to cheer
The sullen gloom, sweet Philomel! like thee,
And call the stars to listen: every star
Is deaf to mine, enamour'd of thy lay.
Yet be not vain; there are, who thine excel,
And charm through distant ages: wrapt in shade,
Prisoner of darkness! to the silent hours,
How often I repeat their rage divine,
To lull my griefs, and steal my heart from woe!
I roll their raptures, but not catch their fire.
Dark, though not blind, like thee, Mæonides!
Or, Milton! thee; ah, could I reach your strain!
Or his, who made Mæonides our own.
Man too he sung: immortal man I sing;
Oft bursts my song beyond the bounds of life;
What, now, but immortality can please?
O had he press'd his theme, pursued the track,
Which opens out of darkness into day!
O had he, mounted on his wing of fire,
Soar'd where I sink, and sung immortal man!
How had it blest mankind, and rescued me!

NIGHT THE SECOND.

ON

TIME, DEATH, AND FRIENDSHIP.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF WILMINGTON.

"When the cock crew, he wept" — smote by that eye
Which looks on me, on all: that power, who bids
This midnight sentinel, with clarion shrill,
Emblem of that which shall awake the dead,
Rouse souls from slumber, into thoughts of Heaven.
Shall I, too, weep? Where then is fortitude?
And, fortitude abandon'd, where is man?
I know the terms on which he sees the light;
He that is born, is 'listed; life is war;
Eternal war with woe. Who bears it best,
Deserves it least. — On other themes I'll dwell.
Lorenzo! let me turn my thoughts on thee,
And thine, on themes may profit; profit there
Where most they need. Themes, too, the genuine growth

Of dear Philander's dust. He thus, though dead,
May still befriend — What themes? Time's wondrous price,

Death, friendship, and Philander's final scene.
So could I touch these themes, as might obtain
Thine ear, nor leave thy heart quite disengag'd,
The good deed would delight me; half impress
On my dark cloud an Iris; and from grief
Call glory. — Dost thou mourn Philander's fate?
I know thou say'st it: Says thy life the same?
He mourns the dead, who lives as they desire.
Where is that thirst, that avarice of time,
(O glorious avarice!) thought of death inspires,
As rumour'd robberies endear our gold?
O time! than gold more sacred; more a load
Than lead, to fools; and fools reputed wise.
What moment granted man without account?
What years are squander'd, wisdom's debt unpaid!
Our wealth in days, all due to that discharge.
Haste, haste, he lies in wait, he's at the door,
Insidious Death! should his strong hand arrest,
No composition sets the prisoner free.

Eternity's inexorable chain
Fast binds; and vengeance claims the full arrears.

How late I shudder'd on the brink! how late
Life call'd for her last refuge in despair!
That time is mine, O Mead! to thee I owe;
Fain would I pay thee with eternity.
But ill my genius answers my desire;
My sickly song is mortal, past thy cure.
Accept the will; — that dies not with my strain.

For what calls thy disease, Lorenzo? not
For Esculapian, but for moral aid.
Thou think'st it folly to be wise too soon.
Youth is not rich in time, it may be poor;
Part with it as with money, sparing; pay
No moment, but in purchase of its worth;
And what its worth, ask death-beds; they can tell.
Part with it as with life, reluctant; big
With holy hope of nobler time to come;
Time higher aim'd, still nearer the great mark
Of men and angels; virtue more divine.

Is this our duty, wisdom, glory, gain?
(These Heaven benign in vital union binds)
And sport we like the natives of the bough,
When vernal vans inspire? Amusement reigns

Ian's great demand : to trifle, is to live :
and is it then a trifle, too, to die ?

Thou say'st I preach, Lorenzo ! 't is confest.
What if, for once, I preach thee quite awake ?
Who wants amusement in the flame of battle ?
Is it not treason to the soul immortal,
Her foes in arms, eternity the prize ?
Will toys amuse, when medicines cannot cure ?
When spirits ebb, when life's enchanting scenes
Their lustre lose, and lessen in our sight,
As lands, and cities with their glittering spires,
To the poor shatter'd bark, by sudden storm
Thrown off to sea, and soon to perish there ?
Will toys amuse ? No : thrones will then be toys,
And earth and skies seem dust upon the scale.

Redeem we time ? — Its loss we dearly buy.
What pleads Lorenzo for his high-priz'd sports ?
He pleads time's numerous blanks ; he loudly pleads

The straw-like trifles on life's common stream.
From whom those blanks and trifles, but from thee ?
No blank, no trifle, Nature made, or meant.
Virtue, or purpos'd virtue, still be thine ;
This cancels thy complaint at once. This leaves
No act no trifle, and no blank in time.
This greatness, fills, immortalizes all ;
This, the blest art of turning all to gold ;
This the good heart's prerogative to raise
A royal tribute from the poorest hours ;
Immense revenue ! every moment pays,
If nothing more than purpose in thy power ;
Thy purpose firm, is equal to the deed :
Who does the best his circumstance allows,
Does well, acts nobly ; angels could no more.
Our outward act indeed admits restraint ;
It is not in things o'er thought to domineer ;
Guard well thy thought ; our thoughts are heard in Heaven.

On all important time, through every age,
Though much, and warm, the wise have urg'd ; the
man

Is yet unborn, who duly weighs an hour.
"I've lost a day" — the prince who nobly cried
Had been an emperor without his crown ;
Of Rome ? Say, rather, lord of human race :
He spoke, as if deputed by mankind.
Should all speak : so Reason speaks in all :
From the soft whispers of that God in man,
Why fly to folly, why to phrenzy fly,
For rescue from the blessing we possess ?
Time, the supreme ! — Time is Eternity ;
Pregnant with all eternity can give ;
Pregnant with all that makes archangels smile.
Who murders time, he crushes in the birth
A power ethereal, only not ador'd.

Ah ! how unjust to Nature and himself,
Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man !
Like children babbling nonsense in their sports,
We censure Nature for a span too short ;
That span too short, we tax as tedious too ;
Fortune invention, all expedients tire,
To lash the lingering moments into speed,
And whirl us (happy riddance !) from ourselves.
Art, brainless Art ! our furious charioteer
(For Nature's voice unstifled would recall)
Drives headlong towards the precipice of death ;
Death, most our dread ; death thus more dreadful
made :

O what a riddle of absurdity !
Leisure is pain ; takes off our chariot-wheels ;

How heavily we drag the load of life !
Blest leisure is our curse ; like that of Cain,
It makes us wander ; wander Earth around
To fly that tyrant, Thought. As Atlas groan'd
The world beneath, we groan beneath an hour.
We cry for mercy to the next amusement ;
The next amusement mortgages our fields ;
Slight inconvenience ! Prisons hardly frown,
From hateful Time if prisons set us free.
Yet when Death kindly tenders us relief,
We call him cruel ; years to moments shrink,
Ages to years. The telescope is turn'd.
To man's false optics (from his folly false)
Time, in advance, behind him hides his wings,
And seems to creep, decrepit with his age ;
Behold him, when past by ; what then is seen,
But his broad pinions swifter than the winds ?
And all mankind, in contradiction strong,
Rueful, aghast ! cry out on his career.

Leave to thy foes these errours, and these ills ;
To Nature just, their cause and cure explore.
Not short Heaven's bounty, boundless our expense ;
No niggard, Nature ; men are prodigals.
We waste, not use our time ; we breathe, not live.
Time wasted is existence, us'd is life,
And bare existence, man, to live ordain'd,
Wrings, and oppresses with enormous weight.
And why ? since Time was given for use, not waste,
Injoin'd to fly ; with tempest, tide, and stars,
To keep his speed, nor ever wait for man ;
Time's use was doom'd a pleasure ; waste, a pain ;
That man might feel his error, if unseen :
And, feeling, fly to labour for his cure ;
Not, blundering, split on idleness for ease.
Life's cares are comforts ; such by Heaven design'd ;
He that has none, must make them, or be wretched.
Cares are employments, and without employ
The soul is on a rack ; the rack of rest,
To souls most adverse ; action all their joy.

Here then, the riddle, mark'd above, unfolds ;
Then time turns torment, when man turns a fool.
We rave, we wrestle, with great Nature's plan ;
We thwart the Deity ; and 't is decreed,
Who thwart his will, shall contradict their own.
Hence our unnatural quarrels with ourselves ;
Our thoughts at enmity ; our bosom-broil ;
We push Time from us, and we wish him back :
Lavish of lustrums, and yet fond of life ;
Life we think long, and short ; Death seek, and shun :

Body and soul, like peevish man and wife,
United jar, and yet are loth to part.

Oh the dark days of vanity ! while here,
How tasteless ! and how terrible, when gone !
Gone ! they ne'er go ; when past, they haunt us
still ;

The spirit walks of ev'ry day deceased ;
And smiles an angel, or a fury frowns.
Nor death, nor life delight us. If time past,
And time possest, both pain us, what can please ?
That which the Deity to please ordain'd,
Time us'd. The man who consecrates his hours
By vigorous effort, and an honest aim,
At once he draws the sting of life and death ;
He walks with Nature ; and her paths are peace.

Our error's cause and cure are seen : see next
Time's nature, origin, importance, speed ;
And thy great gain from urging his career. —
All-sensual man, because untouch'd, unseen,
He looks on Time as nothing. Nothing else

Is truly man's; 't is fortune's — Time's a god.
 Hast thou ne'er heard of Time's omnipotence;
 For, or against, what wonders he can do!
 And will: to stand blank neuter he disdains.
 Not on those terms was Time (Heaven's stranger!)
 sent

On his important embassy to man.
 Lorenzo! no: On the long-destin'd hour,
 From everlasting ages growing ripe,
 That memorable hour of wondrous birth,
 When the Dread Sire, on emanation bent,
 And big with Nature, rising in his might,
 Call'd forth creation (for then Time was born),
 By Godhead streaming through a thousand worlds;
 Not on those terms, from the great days of Heaven,
 From old Eternity's mysterious orb,
 Was Time cut off, and cast beneath the skies;
 'The skies, which watch him in his new abode,
 Measuring his motions by revolving spheres;
 That horologe machinery divine. [play,
 Hours, days, and months, and years, his children
 Like numerous wings around him, as he flies:
 Or, rather, as unequal plumes, they shape
 His ample pinions, swift as darted flame,
 To gain his goal, to reach his ancient rest,
 And join anew Eternity, his sire;
 In his immutability to nest,
 When worlds, that count his circles now, unhing'd
 (Fate the loud signal sounding) headlong rush
 To timeless night and chaos, whence they rose.

Why spur the speedy? Why with levities
 New-wing thy short, short day's too rapid flight?
 Know'st thou, or what thou dost, or what is done?
 Man flies from Time, and Time from man; too soon
 In sad divorce this double flight must end;
 And then, where are we? where, Lorenzo! then
 Thy sports? thy pomps? — I grant thee, in a state
 Not unambitious; in the ruffled shroud,
 Thy Parian tomb's triumphant arch beneath.
 Has Death his fopperies? Then well may Life
 Put on her plume, and in her rainbow shine.
 Ye well-array'd! ye lilies of our land!
 Ye lilies male! who neither toil, nor spin,
 (As sister lilies might) if not so wise
 As Solomon, more sumptuous to the sight!
 Ye delicate! who nothing can support,
 Yourselves most insupportable! for whom
 The winter rose must blow, the Sun put on
 A brighter beam in Leo; silky-soft
 Favonius breathe still softer, or be chid;
 And other worlds send odours, sauce, and song,
 And robes, and notions, fram'd in foreign looms!
 O ye Lorenzos of our age! who deem
 One moment unarm'd, a misery
 Not made for feeble man! who call aloud
 For every bawble drivell'd o'er by sense;
 For rattles, and conceits of every cast,
 For change of follies, and relays of joy,
 To drag your patient through the tedious length
 Of a short winter's day — say, sages! say,
 Wit's oracles! say, dreamers of gay dreams!
 How will you weather an eternal night,
 Where such expedients fail? [sleep

O treacherous Conscience! while she seems to
 On rose and myrtle, lull'd with syren song;
 While she seems, nodding o'er her charge, to drop
 On headlong appetite the slacken'd rein,
 And give us up to licence unrecall'd,
 Unmark'd; — see, from behind her secret stand,
 The sly informer minutes every fault,

And her dread diary with horror fills.
 Not the gross act alone employs her pen;
 She reconnoitres Fancy's airy band;
 A watchful foe! the formidable spy,
 Listening, o'erbears the whispers of our camp:
 Our dawning purposes of heart explores,
 And steals our embryos of iniquity.
 As all-rapacious usurers conceal
 Their doomsday-book from all-consuming heirs;
 Thus, with indulgence most severe, she treats
 Us spendthrifts of inestimable time;
 Unnoted, notes each moment misapplied;
 In leaves more durable than leaves of brass
 Writes our whole history: which Death shall read
 In every pale delinquent's private ear;
 And Judgment publish; publish to more worlds
 Than this; and endless age in groans resound.
 Lorenzo, such that sleeper in thy breast!
 Such is her slumber; and her vengeance such
 For slighted counsel; such thy future peace!
 And think'st thou still thou canst be wise too soon?

But why on time so lavish is my song?
 On this great theme kind Nature keeps a school,
 To teach her sons herself. Each night we die,
 Each morn are born anew: each day, a life!
 And shall we kill each day? If Trifling kills;
 Sure Vice must butcher. O what heaps of slain
 Cry out for vengeance on us! Time destroy'd
 Is suicide, where more than blood is spilt.
 Time flies, Death urges, knells call, Heaven invites,
 Hell threatens: All exerts; in effort, all;
 More than creation labours! — labours more?
 And is there in creation what, amidst
 This tumult universal, wing'd dispatch,
 And ardent energy, supinely yawns?
 Man sleeps; and man alone; and man, whose fate,
 Fate irreversible, entire, extreme,
 Endless, hair-hung, breeze-shaken, o'er the gulf
 A moment trembles; drops! and man, for whom
 All else is in alarm! man, the sole cause
 Of this surrounding storm! and yet he sleeps,
 As the storm rock'd to rest. — Throw years away?
 Throw empires, and be blameless. Moments seize;
 Heaven's on their wing: a moment we may wish,
 When worlds want wealth to buy. Bid Day stand
 still,

Bid him drive back his car, and reimport
 The period past, re-give the given hour.
 Lorenzo, more than miracles we want;
 Lorenzo — O for yesterdays to come!
 Such is the language of the man awake;
 His ardour such, for what oppresses thee.
 And is his ardour vain, Lorenzo? No;
 That more than miracle the gods indulge;
 To-day is yesterday return'd; return'd
 Full-power'd to cancel, expiate, raise, adorn,
 And reinstate us on the rock of peace.
 Let it not share its predecessor's fate;
 Nor, like its elder sisters, die a fool.
 Shall it evaporate in fume? fly off
 Fuliginous, and stain us deeper still?
 Shall we be poorer for the plenty pour'd?
 More wretched for the clemencies of Heaven?

Where shall I find him? Angels! tell me where.
 You know him: he is near you: point him out:
 Shall I see glories beaming from his brow?
 Or trace his footsteps by the rising flowers?
 Your golden wings, now hovering o'er him, shed
 Protection; now, are waving in applause
 To that blest son of foresight! lord of fate!

That awful independent on to-morrow !
 Whose work is done ; who triumphs in the past ;
 Whose yesterdays look backwards with a smile ;
 For, like the Parthian, wound him as they fly ;
 That common, but opprobrious lot ! past hours,
 If not by guilt, yet wound us by their flight,
 If folly bounds our prospect by the grave,
 All feeling of futurity benumb'd ;
 All god-like passion for eternals quencht ;
 All relish of realities expir'd ;
 Renounc'd all correspondence with the skies ;
 Our freedom chain'd ; quite wingless our desire ;
 In sense dark-prison'd all that ought to soar ;
 Prone to the centre ; crawling in the dust ;
 Dismounted every great and glorious aim ;
 Embrut'd every faculty divine ;
 Heart-bury'd in the rubbish of the world.
 The world, that gulf of souls, immortal souls,
 Souls elevate, angelic, wing'd with fire
 To reach the distant skies, and triumph there
 On thrones, which shall not mourn their masters
 chang'd :

Though we from Earth ; ethereal, they that fell
 Such veneration due, O man, to man.
 Who venerate themselves, the world despise.
 For what, gay friend ! is this escutcheon'd world,
 Which hangs out Death in one eternal night ;
 A night, that glooms us in the noon-tide ray,
 And wraps our thought, at banquets, in the shroud ?
 Life's little stage is a small eminence,
 Nigh-high the grave above ; that home of man,
 Where dwells the multitude : We gaze around ;
 We read their monuments ; we sigh ; and while
 We sigh, we sink ; and are what we deplor'd ;
 Lamenting, or lamented, all our lot !

Is Death at distance ? No ; he has been on thee,
 And giv'g sure earnest of his final blow.
 Those hours that lately smil'd, where are they now ?
 Pallid to thought, and ghastly ! drown'd, all drown'd
 In that great deep, which nothing disembogues !
 And, dying, they bequeath'd thee small renown.
 The rest are on the wing : how fleet their flight !
 Already has the fatal train took fire ;
 A moment, and the world's blown up to thee ;
 The Sun is darkness, and the stars are dust.

'T is greatly wise to talk with our past hours ;
 And ask them, what report they bore to Heaven ;
 And how they might have borne more welcome
 news.

Their answers form what men experience call ;
 If wisdom's friend, her best ; if not, worst foe.
 To reconcile them ! Kind Experience cries,
 There's nothing here, but what as nothing weighs ;
 The more our joy, the more we know it vain ;
 And by success are tutor'd to despair."

For is it only thus, but must be so.
 Who knows not this, though gray, is still a child.
 Loose then from Earth the grasp of fond desire,
 Weigh anchor, and some happier clime explore.

Art thou so moor'd thou canst not disengage,
 Nor give thy thoughts a ply to future scenes ?
 Since by life's passing breath, blown up from Earth,
 Light as the summer's dust, we take in air
 A moment's giddy flight, and fall again ;
 Join the dull mass, increase the trodden soil,
 And sleep, till Earth herself shall be no more ;
 Since then (as emmets, their small world o'erthrown)
 We, sore amaz'd, from out Earth's ruins crawl,
 And rise to fate extreme of foul or fair,
 As man's own choice (controller of the skies !)

As man's despotic will, perhaps one hour,
 (O how omnipotent is time !) decrees ;
 Should not each warning give a strong alarm ?
 Warning, far less than that of bosom torn
 From bosom, bleeding o'er the sacred dead !
 Should not each dial strike us as we pass,
 Portentous, as the written wall, which struck,
 O'er midnight bowls, the proud Assyrian pale,
 Ere-while high-flusht with insolence and wine ?
 Like that, the dial speaks ; and points to thee,
 Lorenzo ! loth to break thy banquet up.
 " O man, thy kingdom is departing from thee ;
 And, while it lasts, is emptier than my shade."
 Its silent language such : nor need'st thou call
 Thy Magi, to decypher what it means.
 Know, like the Median, fate is in thy walls :
 Dost ask, How ? Whence ? Belshazzar-like, amaz'd ?
 Man's make encloses the sure seeds of death ;
 Life feeds the murderer : Ingrate ! he thrives
 On her own meal, and then his nurse devours.

But here, Lorenzo, the delusion lies :
 That solar shadow, as it measures life,
 It life resembles too : life speeds away
 From point to point, though seeming to stand still.
 The cunning fugitive is swift by stealth :
 Too subtle is the movement to be seen ;
 Yet soon man's hour is up, and we are gone.
 Warnings point out our danger ; gnomons, time :
 As these are useless when the Sun is set ;
 So those, but when more glorious reason shines.
 Reason should judge in all ; in reason's eye,
 That sedentary shadow travels hard.
 But such our gravitation to the wrong,
 So prone our hearts to whisper what we wish,
 'T is later with the wise than he's aware :
 A Wilmington goes slower than the Sun :
 And all mankind mistake their time of day ;
 E'en age itself. Fresh hopes are hourly sown
 In furrow'd brows. To gentle life's descent
 We shut our eyes, and think it is a plain.
 We take fair days in winter, for the spring ;
 And turn our blessing into bane. Since oft
 Man must compute that age he cannot feel,
 He scarce believes he's older for his years.
 Thus, at life's latest eve, we keep in store
 One disappointment sure, to crown the rest ;
 The disappointment of a promis'd hour.

On this, or similar, Philander ! thou
 Whose mind was moral, as the preacher's tongue ;
 And strong, to wield all science, worth the name ;
 How often we talk'd down the summer's Sun,
 And cool'd our passions by the breezy stream !
 How often thaw'd and shorten'd winter's eve,
 By conflict kind, that struck out latent truth,
 Best found, so sought ; to the recluse more coy !
 Thoughts disentangle passing o'er the lip ;
 Clean runs the thread ; if not, 't is thrown away,
 Or kept to tie up nonsense for a song ;
 Song, fashionably fruitless ; such as stains
 The fancy, and unhallow'd passion fires ;
 Chiming her saints to Cytherea's fane.

Know'st thou, Lorenzo ! what a friend contains ?
 As bees mixt nectar draw from fragrant flowers,
 So men from friendship, wisdom and delight ;
 Twins ty'd by Nature ; if they part, they die.
 Hast thou no friend to set thy mind abroad ?
 Good sense will stagnate. Thoughts shut up want
 air,
 And spoil, like bales unopen'd to the Sun.
 Had thought been all, sweet speech had been denied ;

Speech, thought's canal! speech, thought's criterion too!

Thought, in the mine, may come forth gold, or dross;
When coin'd in word, we know its real worth.

If sterling, store it for thy future use:

'T will buy thee benefit; perhaps renown.

Thought, too, deliver'd, is the more possess;

Teaching, we learn; and, giving, we retain

The births of intellect; when dumb, forgot

Speech ventilates our intellectual fire;

Speech burnishes our mental magazine;

Brightens, for ornament; and whets, for use.

What numbers, sheath'd in erudition, lie,

Plung'd to the hilts in venerable tomes,

And rusted in; who might have borne an edge,

And play'd a sprightly beam, if born to speech;

If born blest heirs of half their mother's tongue!

'T is thought's exchange, which, like th' alternate push

Of waves conflicting, breaks the learned scum,
And defecates the student's standing pool.

In contemplation is his proud resource?

'T is poor, as proud, by converse unsustain'd.

Rude thought runs wild in contemplation's field;

Converse, the menage, breaks it to the bitt

Of due restraint; and emulation's spur

Gives graceful energy, by rivals aw'd.

'T is converse qualifies for solitude;

As exercise, for salutary rest.

By that untutor'd, Contemplation raves;

And Nature's fool, by Wisdom is undone.

Wisdom, though richer than Peruvian mines,

And sweeter than the sweet ambrosial hive,

What is she, but the means of happiness?

That unobtain'd, than folly more a fool;

A melancholy fool, without her bells.

Friendship, the means of wisdom, richly gives

The precious end, which makes our wisdom wise.

Nature, in zeal for human amity,

Denies, or damps, an undivided joy.

Joy is an import; joy is an exchange;

Joy flies monopolists: it calls for two;

Rich fruit! Heaven-planted! never pluckt by one.

Needful auxiliars are our friends, to give

To social man true relish of himself.

Full on ourselves, descending in a line,

Pleasure's bright beam is feeble in delight:

Delight intense is taken by rebound;

Reverberated pleasures fire the breast.

Celestial Happiness, whene'er she stoops

To visit Earth, one shrine the goddess finds,

And one alone, to make her sweet amends

For absent Heaven — the bosom of a friend;

Where heart meets heart, reciprocally soft,

Each other's pillow to repose divine.

Beware the counterfeit; in passion's flame

Hearts melt, but melt like ice, soon harder froze.

True love strikes root in reason; passion's foe:

Virtue alone entenders us for life:

I wrong her much — entenders us for ever:

Of Friendship's fairest fruits, the fruit most fair

Is virtue kindling at a rival fire,

And, emulously, rapid in her race.

O the soft enmity! endearing strife!

This carries friendship to her noon-tide point,

And gives the rivet of eternity. [themes,

From Friendship, which outlives my former

Glorious survivor of old Time and Death;

From Friendship, thus, that flower of heavenly seed;

The wise extract Earth's most Hyblean bliss,
Superior wisdom, crown'd with smiling joy.

But for whom blossoms this Elysian flower?
Abroad they find, who cherish it at home.

Lorenzo! pardon what my love extorts,

An honest love, and not afraid to frown.

Though choice of follies fasten on the great,

None clings more obstinate than fancy, fond,

That sacred Friendship is their easy prey;

Caught by the wafture of a golden lure,

Or fascination of a high-born smile.

Their smiles, the great, and the coquet, throw out

For others' hearts, tenacious of their own;

And we no less of ours, when such the bait.

Ye fortune's cofferers! Ye powers of wealth!

Can gold gain friendship? Impudence of hope!

As well mere man an angel might beget.

Love, and love only, is the loan for love.

Lorenzo! pride repress; nor hope to find

A friend, but what has found a friend in thee.

All like the purchase; few the price will pay;

And this makes friends such miracles below.

What if (since daring on so nice a theme)

I show thee friendship delicate, as dear,

Of tender violations apt to die?

Reserve will wound it; and distrust, destroy.

Deliberate in all things with thy friend.

But since friends grow not thick on every bough,

Nor every friend unrotten at the core;

First, on thy friend, deliberate with thyself;

Pause, ponder, sift; not eager in the choice,

Nor jealous of the chosen; fixing, fix;

Judge before friendship, then confide till death.

Well, for thy friend; but nobler far for thee;

How gallant danger for Earth's highest prize!

A friend is worth all hazards we can run.

"Poor is the friendless master of a world:

A world in purchase for a friend is gain."

So sung he, (angels hear that angels sing!

Angels from friendship gather half their joy,)

So sung Philander, as his friend went round

In the rich ichor, in the generous blood

Of Bacchus, purple god of joyous wit,

A brow solute, and ever-laughing eye.

He drank long health, and virtue, to his friend;

His friend, who warm'd him more, who more in-spir'd.

Friendship's the wine of life; but friendship new

(Not such was his) is neither strong, nor pure.

O! for the bright complexion, cordial warmth,

And elevating spirit, of a friend,

For twenty summers ripening by my side,

All feculence of falsehood long thrown down;

All social virtues rising in his soul;

As crystal clear; and smiling as they rise!

Here nectar flows; it sparkles in our sight;

Rich to the taste, and genuine from the heart:

High-flavour'd bliss for gods! on Earth how rare!

On Earth how lost! — Philander is no more.

Think'st thou the theme intoxicates my song?

Am I too warm? Too warm I cannot be.

I lov'd him much; but now I love him more.

Like birds, whose beauties languish, half-conceal'd,

Till, mounted on the wing, their glossy plumes

Expanded shine with azure, green, and gold;

How blessings brighten as they take their flight!

His flight Philander took; his upward flight,

If ever soul ascended. Had he dropt,

(That eagle genius!) O had he let fall

the feather as he flew ; I, then, had wrote,
 That friends might flatter ; prudent foes forbear ;
 Rivals scarce damn ; and Zoilus reprieve.
 Yet what I can, I must ; it were profane
 To quench a glory lighted at the skies,
 And cast in shadows his illustrious close.
 Strange ! the theme most affecting, most sublime,
 Momentous most to man, should sleep unsung !
 And yet it sleeps, by genius unawak'd,
 Pagan or Christian ; to the blush of wit.
 Man's highest triumph ! man's profoundest fall !
 The death-bed of the just ! is yet undrawn
 By mortal hand ! it merits a divine :
 Angels should paint it, angels ever there :
 Here, on a post of honour, and of joy.

Dare I presume, then ? but Philander bids ;
 And glory tempts, and inclination calls —
 Yet am I struck ; as struck the soul, beneath
 Eternal groves' impenetrable gloom ;
 Or, in some mighty ruin's solemn shade ;
 Or, gazing by pale lamps on high-born dust,
 In vaults ; thin courts of poor unflatter'd kings ;
 Or, at the midnight altar's hallow'd flame.
 Is it religion to proceed ? I pause —
 And enter, aw'd, the temple of my theme.
 Is it his death-bed ? No : it is his shrine :
 Behold him, there, just rising to a god.

The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
 Is privileg'd beyond the common walk
 Of virtuous life, quite in the verge of Heaven.
 Fly, ye profane ! If not, draw near with awe,
 Receive the blessing, and adore the chance,
 That threw in this Bethesda your disease ;
 Unrestor'd by this, despair your cure.
 For, here, resistless demonstration dwells ;
 A death-bed 's a detector of the heart.
 Here tir'd dissimulation drops her mask,
 Through life's grimace, that mistress of the scene !
 Here real, and apparent, are the same.
 You see the man ; you see his hold on Heaven,
 And sound his virtue ; as Philander's sound.
 Heaven waits not the last moment ; owns her friends
 In this side death, and points them out to men ;
 A lecture, silent, but of sovereign power !
 To vice, confusion ; and to virtue, peace.

Whatever farce the boastful hero plays,
 Virtue alone has majesty in death !
 And greater still, the more the tyrant frowns.
 Philander ! he severely frown'd on thee.
 No warning given ! Unceremonious Fate !
 A sudden rush from life's meridian joy !
 A wrench from all we love ! from all we are !
 A restless bed of pain ! a plunge opaque
 Beyond conjecture ! feeble Nature's dread !
 Strong Reason's shudder at the dark unknown !
 A sun extinguish'd ! a just-opening grave !
 And oh ! the last, last, — what ? (can words express ?
 Thought reach it ?) the last — silence of a friend !"
 Where are those horrors, that amazement, where,
 This hideous group of ills, which singly shock,
 Demand from man ? — I thought him man till now.

Through Nature's wreck, through vanquish'd agonies, [gloom,]
 Like the stars struggling through this midnight
 What gleams of joy ! what more than human peace !
 Where, the frail mortal ? the poor abject worm ?
 No, not in death, the mortal to be found.
 His conduct is a legacy for all ;
 Richer than Mammon's for his single heir.
 His comforters he comforts ; great in ruin,

With unreluctant grandeur, gives, not yields
 His soul sublime ; and closes with his fate.

How our hearts burnt within us at the scene !
 Whence this brave bound o'er limits fix'd to man ?
 His God sustains him in his final hour !
 His final hour brings glory to his God !
 Man's glory Heaven vouchsafes to call her own.
 We gaze, we weep ; mixt tears of grief, of joy !
 Amazement strikes ! devotion bursts to flame !
Christians adore ! and Infidels believe !

As some tall tower, or lofty mountain's brow,
 Detains the Sun, illustrious, from its height ;
 While rising vapours, and descending shades,
 With damps and darkness, drown the spacious vale ;
 Undamp't by doubt, undarken'd by despair,
 Philander, thus, augustly rears his head,
 At that black hour, which general horror sheds
 On the low level of th' inglorious throng :
 Sweet Peace, and heavenly Hope, and humble Joy,
 Divinely beam on his exalted soul ;
 Destruction gild, and crown him for the skies,
 With incommunicable lustre bright.

NIGHT THE THIRD.

NARCISSA.

TO HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF PORTLAND.

Ignoscenda quidem, scirent si ignoscere manes.

VING.

FROM dreams, where thought in fancy's maze runs mad,

To reason, that heaven-lighted lamp in man,
 Once more I wake ; and at the destin'd hour,
 Punctual as lovers to the moment sworn,
 I keep my assignation with my woe.

O ! lost to virtue, lost to manly thought,
 Lost to the noble sallies of the soul !
 Who think it solitude to be alone.
 Communion sweet ! communion large and high !
 Our reason, guardian angel, and our God !
 Then nearest these, when others most remote ;
 And all, ere long, shall be remote, but these.
 How dreadful, then, to meet them all alone,
 A stranger ! unacknowledg'd ! un approv'd !
 Now woo them ; wed them ; bind them to thy breast ;
 To win thy wish, creation has no more.

Or if we wish a fourth, it is a friend —
 But friends, how mortal ! dangerous the desire !

Take Phœbus to yourselves, ye basking bards
 Inebriate at fair Fortune's fountain-head ;
 And reeling through the wilderness of joy ;
 Where Sense runs savage, broke from Reason's chain !
 And sings false peace, till smother'd by the pall.
 My fortune is unlike ; unlike my song ;
 Unlike the deity my song invokes.

I to Day's soft-ey'd sister pay my court,
 (Endymion's rival !) and her aid implore ;
 Now first implor'd in succour to the Muse.

Thou, who didst lately borrow Cynthia's form *,
 And modestly forego thine own ! O thou,
 Who didst thyself, at midnight hours, inspire !
 Say, why not Cynthia patroness of song ?
 As thou her crescent, she thy character
 Assumes ; still more a goddess by the change.

Are there demurring wits, who dare dispute

* At the Duke of Norfolk's masquerade.

This revolution in the world inspir'd?
 Ye train Pierian! to the lunar sphere,
 In silent hour, address your ardent call
 For aid immortal; less her brother's right.
 She, with the spheres harmonious, nightly leads
 The mazy dance, and hears their matchless strain,
 A strain for gods, denied to mortal ear.
 Transmit it heard, thou silver queen of Heaven!
 What title, or what name, endears the most!
 Cynthia! Cyllené! Phœbe! or dost bear
 With higher gust, fair Portland of the skies?
 Is that the soft enchantment calls thee down,
 More powerful than of old Circean charm?
 Come; but from heavenly banquets with thee bring
 The soul of song, and whisper in my ear
 The theft divine; or in propitious dreams [breast
 (For dreams are thine) transfuse it through the
 Of thy first votary. — But not thy last;
 If, like thy namesake, thou art ever kind.

And kind thou wilt be; kind on such a theme;
 A theme so like thee, a quite lunar theme,
 Soft, modest, melancholy, female, fair!
 A theme that rose all-pale, and told my soul
 'T was night; on her fond hopes perpetual night;
 A night which struck a damp, a deadlier damp,
 Than that which smote me from Philander's tomb.
 Narcissa follows, ere his tomb is clos'd.
 Woes cluster; rare are solitary woes;
 They love a train, they tread each other's heel;
 Her death invades his mournful right, and claims
 The grief that started from my lids for him:
 Seizes the faithless, alienated tear,
 Or shares it, ere it falls. So frequent death,
 Sorrow he more than causes, he confounds;
 For human sighs his rival strokes contend,
 And make distress, distraction. Oh Philander!
 What was thy fate? A double fate to me;
 Portent, and pain! a menace, and a blow!
 Like the black raven hovering o'er my peace,
 Not less a bird of omen, than of prey.
 It call'd Narcissa long before her hour;
 It call'd her tender soul, by break of bliss,
 From the first blossom, from the buds of joy;
 Those few our noxious fate unblasted leaves
 In this inclement clime of human life.

Sweet harmonist! and beautiful as sweet!
 And young as beautiful! and soft as young!
 And gay as soft! and innocent as gay!
 And happy (if aught happy here) as good!
 For fortune fond had built her nest on high.
 Like birds quite exquisite of note and plume,
 Transfixt by fate (who loves a lofty mark),
 How from the summit of the grove she fell,
 And left it unharmonious! All its charms
 Extinguish'd in the wonders of her song!
 Her song still vibrates in my ravish'd ear,
 Still melting there, and with voluptuous pain
 (O to forget her!) thrilling through my heart!

Song, beauty, youth, love, virtue, joy; this group
 Of bright ideas, flowers of Paradise,
 As yet unforfeit! in one blaze we bind,
 Kneel and present it to the skies; as all
 We guess of Heaven: and these were all her own,
 And she was mine; and I was — was! — most blest —

Gay title of the deepest misery!
 As bodies grow more ponderous, robb'd of life;
 Good lost weighs more in grief, than gain'd in joy,
 Like blossom'd trees o'erturn'd by vernal storm,
 Lovely in death the beautiful ruin lay;

And if in death still lovely, lovelier there,
 Far lovelier! pity swells the tide of love.
 And will not the severe excuse a sigh?
 Scorn the proud man that is ashamed to weep;
 Our tears indulg'd indeed deserve our shame.
 Ye that e'er lost an angel! pity me.

Soon as the lustre languish'd in her eye,
 Dawning a dimmer day on human sight;
 And on her cheek, the residence of spring,
 Pale omen sat; and scatter'd fears around
 On all that saw, (and who would cease to gaze,
 That once had seen?) with haste, parental haste,
 I flew, I snatch'd her from the rigid North,
 Her native bed, on which bleak Boreas blew,
 And bore her nearer to the Sun; the Sun
 (As if the Sun could envy) check'd his beam,
 Deny'd his wonted succour; nor with more
 Regret beheld her drooping, than the bells
 Of lilies; fairest lilies, not so fair!

Queen lilies! and ye painted populace!
 Who dwell in fields, and lead ambrosial lives!
 In morn and evening dew, your beauties bathe,
 And drink the Sun; which gives your cheeks to glow,

And out-blush (mine excepted) every fair;
 You gladder grew, ambitious of her hand,
 Which often cropt your odours, incense meet
 To thought so pure! Ye lovely fugitives!
 Coëval race with man! for man you smile!
 Why not smile at him too? You share indeed
 His sudden pass; but not his constant pain.

So man is made; nought ministers delight,
 But what his glowing passions can engage;
 And glowing passions, bent on aught below,
 Must, soon or late, with anguish turn the scale;
 And anguish, after rapture, how severe!
 Rapture? Bold man! who tempt'at the wash
 divine,

By plucking fruit denied to mortal taste,
 While here, presuming on the rights of Heaven,
 For transport dost thou call on every hour,
 Lorenzo? At thy friend's expense, be wise;
 Lean not on Earth; 't will pierce thee to the heart;
 A broken reed, at best; but oft, a spear;
 On its sharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires.

Turn, hopeless thought! turn from her:—
 Thought repell'd

Resenting rallies, and wakes every woe
 Snatch'd ere thy prime! and in thy bridal hour!
 And when kind fortune, with thy lover, smil'd!
 And when high-flavour'd thy fresh opening joys!
 And when blind man pronounc'd thy bliss complete!
 And on a foreign shore; where strangers wept!
 Strangers to thee; and more surprising still,
 Strangers to kindness, wept: their eyes let fall
 Inhuman tears! strange tears! that trickled down
 From marble hearts! obdurate tenderness!
 A tenderness that call'd them more severe;
 In spite of Nature's soft persuasion, steel'd!
 While Nature melted, Superstition rav'd;
 That mourn'd the dead; and this denied a grave

Their sighs incens'd; sighs foreign to the will!
 Their will the tiger suck'd, outrag'd the storm.
 For, oh! the curst ungodliness of zeal!
 While sinful flesh relented, spirit nurs'd
 In blind Infallibility's embrace,
 The sainted spirit petrify'd the breast;
 Denied the charity of dust, to spread
 O'er dust! a charity their dogs enjoy.

...do? What succour? What resource?

With pious sacrilege, a grave I stole ;
 With impious piety, that grave I wrong'd ;
 Short in my duty ! coward in my grief !
 More like her murderer, than friend, I crept,
 With soft-suspended step, and muffled deep
 In midnight darkness, whisper'd my last sigh.
 I whisper'd what should echo through their realms ;
 Nor writ her name, whose tomb should pierce the skies.

Presumptuous fear ! How durst I dread her foes,
 While Nature's loudest dictates I obey'd ?
 Pardon necessity, blest shade ! Of grief
 And indignation rival bursts I pour'd ;
 Half execration mingled with my prayer ;
 Kindled at man, while I his God ador'd ;
 Sore grudg'd the savage land her sacred dust ;
 Stamp'd the curst soil ; and with humanity
 (Denied Narcissa) wish'd them all a grave.

Glows my resentment into guilt ? What guilt
 Can equal violations of the dead ?

The dead how sacred ! Sacred is the dust
 Of this Heaven-labour'd form, erect, divine !
 This Heaven-assum'd majestic robe of Earth,
 He deign'd to wear, who hung the vast expanse
 With azure bright, and cloth'd the Sun in gold.
 When every passion sleeps that can offend ;
 When strikes us every motive that can melt ;
 When man can wreak his rancour uncontrol'd,
 That strongest curb on insult and ill-will ;
 Then, spleen to dust ! the dust of innocence !
 An angel's dust ! — This Lucifer transcends ;
 When he contended for the patriarch's bones,
 'T was not the strife of malice, but of pride ;
 The strife of pontiff pride, not pontiff gall.

For less than this is shocking in a race
 Most wretched, but from streams of mutual love ;
 And uncreated, but for love divine,
 And, but for love divine, this moment lost,
 By fate resorb'd, and sunk in endless night.
 Man hard of heart to man ! of horrid things
 Most horrid ! 'Mid stupendous, highly strange !
 Yet oft his courtesies are smoother wrongs ;
 Pride brandishes the favours he confers,
 And contumelious his humanity ;
 What then his vengeance ? Hear it not, ye stars !
 And thou, pale Moon ! turn paler at the sound ;
 Man is to man the sorest, surest ill.

A previous blast foretels the rising storm ;
 O'erwhelming turrets threaten ere they fall ;
 Volcanoes bellow ere they disembogue ;
 Earth trembles ere her yawning jaws devour ;
 And smoke betrays the wide-consuming fire :
 Ruin from man is most conceal'd when near,
 And sends the dreadful tidings in the blow.
 Is this the flight of fancy ? Would it were !
 Heaven's Sovereign saves all beings, but himself,
 That hideous sight, a naked human heart.

Fir'd is the Muse ? And let the Muse be fir'd :
 Who not inflam'd, when what he speaks, he feels,
 And in the nerve most tender, in his friends ?
 Shame to mankind ! Philander had his foes :
 He felt the truths I sing, and I in him.
 But he, nor I, feel more ; past ills, Narcissa !
 Are sunk in thee, thou recent wound of heart !
 Which bleeds with other cares, with other pangs ;
 Pangs numerous, as the numerous ills that swarm'd
 O'er thy distinguish'd fate, and, clustering there
 Thick as the locusts on the land of Nile,
 Made death more deadly, and more dark the grave.
 Reflect (if not forgot my touching tale)

How was each circumstance with aspics arm'd ?
 An aspic, each ! and all, an hydra woe :
 What strong Herculean virtue could suffice ? —
 Or is it virtue to be conquer'd here ?
 This hoary cheek a train of tears bedews ;
 And each tear mourns its own distinct distress ;
 And each distress, distinctly mourn'd, demands
 Of grief still more, as heighten'd by the whole.
 A grief like this proprietors excludes :
 Not friends alone such obsequies deplore ;
 They make mankind the mourner ; carry sighs
 Far as the fatal Fame can wing her way ;
 And turn the gayest thought of gayest age,
 Down their right channel, through the vale of death.
 The vale of death ! that hush'd Cimmerian vale,
 Where darkness, brooding o'er unfinish'd fates,
 With raven wing incumbent, waits the day
 (Dread day !) that interdicts all future change !
 That subterranean world ! that land of ruin !
 Fit walk, Lorenzo, for proud human thought !
 There let my thought expatiate, and explore
 Balsamic truths and healing sentiments,
 Of all most wanted, and most welcome, here.
 For gay Lorenzo's sake, and for thy own,
 My soul ! " The fruits of dying friends survey ;
 Expose the vain of life ; weigh life and death ;
 Give death his eulogy ; thy fear subdue ;
 And labour that first palm of noble minds,
 A manly scorn of terroure from the tomb."

This harvest reap from thy Narcissa's grave.
 As poets feign'd from Ajax' streaming blood
 Arose, with grief inscrib'd, a mournful flower ;
 Let wisdom blossom from my mortal wound.
 And first, of dying friends ; what fruit from these
 It brings us more than triple aid ; an aid
 To chase our thoughtlessness, fear, pride, and guilt.

Our dying friends come o'er us like a cloud,
 To damp our brainless ardours ; and abate
 That glare of life which often blinds the wise.
 Our dying friends are pioneers, to smooth
 Our rugged pass to death ; to break those bars
 Of terroure and abhorrence Nature throws
 Cross our obstructed way ; and, thus to make
Welcome, as safe, our port from every storm.
 Each friend by fate snatch'd from us, is a plume
 Pluck'd from the wing of human vanity,
 Which makes us stoop from our aerial heights,
 And, damp't with omen of our own decease,
 On drooping pinions of ambition lower'd,
 Just skim Earth's surface, ere we break it up,
 O'er putrid earth to scratch a little dust,
 And save the world a nuisance. Smitten friends
 Are angels sent on errands full of love ;
 For us they languish, and for us they die :
 And shall they languish, shall they die, in vain ?
 Ungrateful, shall we grieve their hovering shades,
 Which wait the revolution in our hearts ?
 Shall we disdain their silent, soft address ;
 Their posthumous advice, and pious prayer ?
 Senseless, as herds that graze their hallow'd graves,
 Tread under foot their agonies and groans ;
 Frustrate their anguish, and destroy their deaths ?

Lorenzo ! no ; the thought of death indulge ;
 Give it its wholesome empire ! let it reign,
 That kind chastiser of thy soul in joy !
 Its reign will spread thy glorious conquests far,
 And still the tumults of thy ruffled breast :
 Auspicious era ! golden days, begin !
 The thought of death shall, like a god, inspire.
 And why not think on death ? Is life the thorn

Of every thought? and wish of every hour?
 And song of every joy? Surprising truth!
 The beaten spaniel's fondness not so strange.
 To wave the numerous ills that seize on life
 As their own property, their lawful prey;
 Ere man has measur'd half his weary stage,
 His luxuries have left him no reserve,
 No maiden relishes, unbroach'd delights;
 On cold-serv'd repetitions he subsists,
 And in the tasteless present chews the past;
 Disgusted chews, and scarce can swallow down.
 Like lavish ancestors, his earlier years
 Have disinherited his future hours,
 Which starve on arts, and glean their former field.
 Live ever here, Lorenzo! — shocking thought!
 So shocking, they who wish, disown it, too;
 Disown from shame, what they from folly crave.
 Live ever in the womb, nor see the light?
 For what live ever here? — With labouring step
 To tread our former footsteps? Pace the round
 Eternal? To climb life's worn, heavy wheel,
 Which draws up nothing new? To beat, and beat
 The beaten track? To bid each wretched day
 The former mock? To surfeit on the same,
 And yawn our joys? Or thank a misery
 For change, though sad? To see what we have seen?
 Hear, till unheard, the same old slabber'd tale?
 To taste the tasted, and at each return
 Less tasteful? O'er our palates to decant
 Another vintage? Strain a fatter year,
 Through loaded vessels, and a laxer tone?
 Crazy machines to grind Earth's wasted fruits!
 Ill-ground, and worse-concocted! Load, not life!
 The rational foul kennels of excess!
 Still-streaming thoroughfares of dull debauch!
 Trembling each gulp, lest death should snatch the bowl.

Such of our fine-ones is the wish refin'
 So would they have it: elegant desire!
 Why not invite the bellowing stalls, and wilds?
 But such examples might their riot awe.
 Through want of virtue, that is, want of thought, (Though on bright thought they father all their flights,)

To what are they reduc'd? To love, and hate
 The same vain world; to censure, and espouse,
 This painted shrew of life, who calls them fool
 Each moment of each day; to flatter bad
 Through dread of worse; to cling to this rude rock,
 Barren, to them, of good, and sharp with ills,
 And hourly blacken'd with impending storms,
 And infamous for wrecks of human hope —
 Scar'd at the gloomy gulf, that yawns beneath.
 Such are their triumphs! such their pangs of joy!

'T is time, high time, to shift this dismal scene.
 This hugg'd, this hideous state, what art can cure?
 One only; but that one, what all may reach;
 Virtue — she, wonder-working goddess! charms
 That rock to bloom; and tames the painted shrew,
 And, what will more surprise, Lorenzo! gives
 To life's sick, nauseous iteration, change;
 And straitens Nature's circle to a line.
 Believ'st thou this, Lorenzo? lend an ear,
 A patient ear, thou 'lt blush to disbelieve.

A languid, leaden, iteration reigns,
 And ever must, o'er those, whose joys are joys
 Of sight, smell, taste: the cuckoo-seasons sing
 The same dull note to such as nothing prize,
 But what those seasons, from the teeming Earth,
 To doating sense indulge. But nobler mi-

Which relish fruits unripen'd by the Sun,
 Make their days various; various as the dyes
 On the dove's neck, which wanton in his rays.
 On minds of dove-like innocence possess,
 On lighten'd minds, that bask in virtue's beams,
 Nothing hangs tedious, nothing old revolves
 In that, for which they long; for which they live.
 Their glorious efforts, wing'd with heavenly hope,
 Each rising morning sees still higher rise;
 Each counteous dawn its novelty presents
 To worth maturing, new strength, lustre, fame;
 While Nature's circle, like a chariot-wheel
 Rolling beneath their elevated aims,
 Makes their fair prospect fairer every hour;
 Advancing virtue, in a line to bliss;
Virtue, which Christian motives best inspire!
 And bliss, which Christian schemes alone ensure.
 And shall we then, for Virtue's sake, commence
 Apostates; and turn infidels for joy?
 A truth it is, few doubt, but fewer trust,
 "He sins against this life, who slights the next."
 What is this life? How few their favourite know!
 Fond in the dark, and blind in our embrace,
 By passionately loving life, we make
 Lov'd life unlovely; hugging her to death.
 We give to time eternity's regard;
 And, dreaming, take our passage for our port.
 Life has no value as an end, but means;
 An end deplorable! a means divine!
 When 't is our all, 't is nothing! worse than nought;
 A nest of pains: when held as nothing, much:
 Like some fair hum'rists, life is most enjoy'd,
 When courted least; most worth, when disesteem'd:
 Then 't is the seat of comfort, rich in peace;
 In prospect richer far; important! awful!
 Not to be mention'd, but with shouts of praise!
 Not to be thought on, but with tides of joy!
 The mighty basis of eternal bliss!
 Where now the barren rock? the painted shrew?
 Where now, Lorenzo! life's eternal round?
 Have I not made my triple promise good?
 Vain is the world; but only to the vain.
 To what compare we then this varying scene,
 Whose worth ambiguous rises, and declines?
 Waxes, and wanes? (In all propitious, night
 Assists me here) compare it to the Moon;
 Dark in herself, and indigent; but rich
 In borrow'd lustre from a higher sphere.
 When gross guilt interposes, labouring Earth,
 O'ershadow'd, mourns a deep eclipse of joy;
 Her joys, at brightest, pallid, to that font
 Of full effulgent glory, whence they flow.
 Nor is that glory distant: Oh Lorenzo!
 A good man, and an angel! these between
 How thin the barrier! what divides their fate?
 Perhaps a moment, or perhaps a year;
 Or, if an age, it is a moment still;
 A moment, or eternity's forgot.
 Then be, what once they were, who now are gods;
 Be what Philander was, and claim the skies.
 Starts timid Nature at the gloomy pass?
 The soft transition call it; and be cheer'd:
 Such it is often, and why not to thee?
 To hope the best, is pious, brave, and wise;
 And may itself procure, what it presumes.
 Life is much flatter'd, Death is much traduc'd;
 Compare the rivals, and the kinder crown.
 "Strange competition!" — True, Lorenzo! strange!
 So little life can cast into the scale.
 't makes the soul dependent on the dust;

Death gives her wings to mount above the spheres.
Through chinks, styl'd organs, dim life peeps at
light;

Death bursts th' involving cloud, and all is day;
All eye, all ear, the disembod' d power.

Death has feign'd evils, Nature shall not feel;

Life, ill substantial, Wisdom cannot shun.

Is not the mighty Mind, that son of Heaven?

By tyrant Life dethron'd, imprison'd, pain'd?

By Death enlarg'd, ennobled, deify'd?

Death but entombs the body; life the soul.

"Is Death then guiltless? How he marks his way
With dreadful waste of what deserves to shine!

Art, genius, fortune, elevated power!

With various lustres these light up the world,

Which Death puts out, and darkens human race."

I grant, Lorenzo! this indictment just:

The sage, peer, potentate, king, conqueror!

Death humbles these; more barbarous life, the man.

Life is the triumph of our mouldering clay;

Death, of the spirit infinite! divine!

Death has no dread, but what frail life imparts;

Nor life true joy, but what kind death improves.

No bliss has life to boast, till death can give

Far greater; life's a debtor to the grave,

Dark lattice! letting in eternal day.

Lorenzo! blush at fondness for a life,
Which sends celestial souls on errands vile,

To cater for the sense; and serve at boards,

Where every ranger of the wilds, perhaps

Each reptile, justly claims our upper hand.

Luxurious feast! a soul, a soul immortal,

In all the dainties of a brute bemir'd!

Lorenzo! blush at terror for a death,

Which gives thee to repose in festive bowers,

Where nectars sparkle, angels minister,

And more than angels share, and raise, and crown,

And eternize, the birth, bloom, bursts of bliss.

What need I more? O Death, the palm is thine.

Then welcome, Death! thy dreaded harbingers,

Age, and disease; disease, though long my guest;

That plucks my nerves, those tender strings of life;

Which, pluck'd a little more, will toll the bell,

That call my few friends to my funeral;

Where feeble Nature drops, perhaps, a tear,

While Reason and Religion, better taught,

Congratulate the dead, and crown his tomb

With wreath triumphant. Death is victory;

It binds in chains the raging ills of life:

Lust and ambition, wrath and avarice,

Dragg'd at his chariot-wheel, applaud his power.

That ills corrosive, cares importunate,

Are not immortal too, O Death! is thine.

Our day of dissolution! — name it right;

'T is our great pay-day; 't is our harvest, rich

And ripe. What though the sickle, sometimes keen,

Just scars us as we reap the golden grain?

More than thy balm, O Gilead! heals the wound.

Birth's feeble cry, and Death's deep dismal groan,

Are slender tributes low-tax'd Nature pays

For mighty gain: the gain of each, of life!

But O! the last the former so transcends,

Life dies, compar'd; life lives beyond the grave.

And feel I, Death! no joy from thought of thee?

Death, the great counsellor, who man inspires

With every nobler thought, and fairer deed!

Death, the deliverer, who rescues man!

Death, the rewarder, who the rescued crowns!

Death, that absolves my birth; a curse without it!

Rich death, that realizes all my cares,
Toils, virtues, hopes; without it a chitnera!

Death, of all pain the period, not of joy;

Joy's source, and subject, still subsist unhurt:

One, in my soul; and one, in her great Sire;

Though the four winds were warring for my dust.

Yes, and from winds, and waves, and central night,

Though prison'd there, my dust too I reclaim,

(To dust, when drop proud Nature's proudest spheres,)

And live entire. Death is the crown of life:

Were death denied, poor man would live in vain;

Were death denied, to live would not be life;

Were death denied, e'en fools would wish to die.

Death wounds to cure: we fall; we rise, we reign!

Spring from our fetters; fasten in the skies;

Where blooming Eden withers in our sight:

Death gives us more than was in Eden lost.

This king of terrors is the prince of peace.

When shall I die to vanity, pain, death?

When shall I die? — When shall I live for ever?

NIGHT THE FOURTH.

THE CHRISTIAN TRIUMPH.

Containing our only Cure for the Fear of Death; and proper Sentiments of that inestimable Blessing.

TO THE HONOURABLE MR. YORKE

A MUCH-INDEXED Muse, O Yorke! intrudes.

Amid the smiles of fortune, and of youth,

Thine ear is patient of a serious song. —

How deep implanted in the breast of man

The dread of death! I sing its sovereign cure.

Why start at Death? Where is he? Death ar-
riv'd,

Is past; not come or gone, he's never here.

Ere hope, sensation fails; black-boding man

Receives, not suffers, Death's tremendous blow.

The knell, the shroud, the mattock, and the grave;

The deep damp vault, the darkness, and the worm;

These are the hugbears of a winter's eve,

The terrors of the living, not the dead.

Imagination's fool, and error's wretch,

Man makes a death, which Nature never made;

Then on the point of his own fancy falls;

And feels a thousand deaths, in fearing one.

But were death frightful, what has age to fear?

If prudent, age should meet the friendly foe,

And shelter in his hospitable gloom.

I scarce can meet a monument, but holds

My younger; every date cries — "Come away."

And what recalls me? Look the world around

And tell me what: the wisest cannot tell.

Should any born of woman give his thought

Full range on just dislike's unbounded field;

Of things, the vanity; of men, the flaws;

Flaws in the best; the many, flaw all o'er;

As leopards, spotted, or, as Ethiops, dark;

Vivacious ill; good dying immature;

(How immature, Narcissa's marble tells!)

And at his death bequeathing endless pain;

His heart, though bold, would sicken at the sight,

And spend itself in sighs, for future scenes.

But grant to life (and just it is to grant

To lucky life) some perquisites of joy;

A time there is, when, like a thrice-told tale,
Long-ripled life of sweet can yield no more,
But from our comment on the comedy,
Pleasing reflections on parts well sustain'd,
Or purpos'd emendations where we fail'd,
Or hopes of plaudits from our candid Judge,
When, on their exit, souls are bid unrobe,
Toss Fortune back her tinsel, and her plume,
And drop this mask of flesh behind the scene.

With me, that time is come; my world is dead;
A new world rises, and new manners reign:
Foreign comedians, a spruce band! arrive,
To push me from the scene, or hiss me there.
What a pert race starts up! the strangers gaze,
And I at them; my neighbour is unknown;
Nor that the worst: Ah me! the dire effect
Of loitering here, of death defrauded long;
Of old so gracious (and let that suffice),
My very master knows me not. —

Shall I dare say, peculiar is the fate?
I've been so long remember'd, I'm forgot.
An object ever pressing dims the sight,
And hides behind its ardour to be seen.
When in his courtiers' ears I pour my plaint,
'They drink it as the nectar of the great;
And squeeze my hand, and beg me come to-morrow.
Refusal! canst thou wear a smother form?

Indulge me, nor conceive I drop my theme:
Who cheapens life, abates the fear of death:
Twice told the period spent on stubborn Troy,
Court favour, yet untaken, I besiege;
Ambition's ill-judged effort to be rich.
Alas! ambition makes my little less;
Embittering the possess. Why wish for more?
Wishing, of all employments, is the worst;
Philosophy's reverse; and health's decay.
Were I as plump as stall'd theology,
Wishing would waste me to this shade again.
Were I as wealthy as a South-sea dream,
Wishing is an expedient to be poor.
Wishing, that constant hectic of a fool;
Caught at a court; purg'd off by purer air,
And simpler diet; gifts of rural life!

Blest be that hand divine, which gently laid
My heart at rest, beneath this humble shed.
The world's a stately bark, on dangerous seas,
With pleasure scen, but boarded at our peril;
Here, on a single plank, thrown safe ashore,
I hear the tumult of the distant throng,
As that of seas remote, or dying storms:
And meditate on scenes, more silent still;
Pursue my theme, and fight the fear of death.
Here, like a shepherd gazing from his hut,
Touching his reed, or leaning on his staff,
Eager ambition's fiery chase I see;
I see the circling hunt, of noisy men,
Burst law's enclosure, leap the mounds of right,
Pursuing, and pursued, each other's prey;
As wolves, for rapine; as the fox, for wiles;
Till Death, that mighty hunter, earths them all.

Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
What though we wade in wealth, or soar in fame?
Earth's highest station ends in, "Here he lies,"
And "Dust to dust" concludes her noblest song.
If this song lives, posterity shall know
One, though in Britain born, with courtiers bred,
Who thought e'en gold might come a day too late;
Nor on his subtle death-bed plann'd his scheme
For future vacancies in church or state;
Some avocation deeming it — to die,

Unbit by rage canine of dying rich;
Guilt's blunder! and the loudest laugh of Hell.

O my coëvals! remnants of yourselves!
Poor human ruins, tottering o'er the grave!
Shall we, shall aged men, like aged trees,
Strike deeper their vile root, and closer cling,
Still more enamour'd of this wretched soil?
Shall our pale, wither'd hands, be still stretch'd out,
Trembling, at once, with eagerness and age?
With avarice and convulsions, grasping hard?
Grasping at air! for what has Earth beside?
Man wants but little; nor that little, long:
How soon must he resign his very dust,
Which frugal Nature lent him for an hour!
Years unexperienc'd rush on numerous ills;
And soon as man, expert from time, has found
The key of life, it opes the gates of death.

When in this vale of years I backward look,
And miss such numbers, numbers too of such,
Firmer in health, and greener in their age,
And stricter on their guard, and fitter far
To play life's subtle game, I scarce believe
I still survive; and am I fond of life,
Who scarce can think it possible, I live?
Alive by miracle! or, what is next,
Alive by Mead! if I am still alive,
Who long have buried what gives life to live,
Firmness of nerve, and energy of thought.
Life's lee is not more shallow than impure
And vapid; sense and reason show the door,
Call for my bier, and point me to the dust.

O thou great Arbitrer of life and death!
Nature's immortal, immaterial Sun!
Whose all-prolific beam late call'd me forth
From darkness, teeming darkness, where I lay
The worm's inferior, and, in rank, beneath
The dust I tread on, high to bear my brow,
To drink the spirit of the golden day,
And triumph in existence; and could know
No motive, but my bliss; and hast ordain'd
A rise in blessing! with the patriarch's joy,
Thy call I follow to the land unknown;
I trust in thee, and know in whom I trust;
Or life, or death, is equal; neither weighs:
All weight in this — O let me live to thee!

Though Nature's terrors, thus, may be repress;
Still frowns grim Death; guilt points the tyrant's spear.

And whence all human guilt? From death forgot.
Ah me! too long I set at nought the swarm
Of friendly warnings, which around me flew;
And smil'd, unsmitten: small my cause to smile!
Death's admonitions, like shafts upward shot,
More dreadful by delay, the longer ere
They strike our hearts, the deeper is their wound;
O think how deep. Lorenzo! here it stings:
Who can appease its anguish? how it burns!
What hand the barb'd, envenom'd, thought can draw?
What healing hand can pour the balm of peace,
And turn my sight undaunted on the tomb?

With joy — with grief, that healing hand I see;
Ah! too conspicuous! it is fix'd on high.
On high? — What means my phrenzy? I blaspheme;
Alas! how low! how far beneath the skies!
The skies it form'd; and now it bleeds for me —
But bleeds the balm I want — Yet still it bleeds;
Draw the dire steel — ah no! the dreadful blessing
What heart or can sustain, or dares forego!
There hangs all human hope; that nail supports
The falling universe: that gone, we drop;

Horror receives us, and the dismal wish
Creation had been smother'd in her birth —
Darkness is his curtain, and his bed the dust;
When stars and Sun are dust beneath his throne!
In Heaven itself can such indulgence dwell?
O what a groan was there! a groan not his.
He seiz'd our dreadful right; the load sustain'd;
And heav'd the mountain from a guilty world.
A thousand worlds, so bought, were bought too dear;
Sensations new in angels' bosoms rise;
Suspend their song! and make a pause in bliss.

O for their song; to reach my lofty theme!
Inspire me, Night! with all thy tuneful spheres;
Whilst I with seraphs share seraphic themes!
And show to men the dignity of man;
Lest I blaspheme my subject with my song.
Shall Pagan pages glow celestial flame,
And Christian languish? on our hearts, not heads,
Falls the foul infamy: my heart! awake.
What can awake thee, unawak'd by this,
"Expended deity on human weal?"
Feel the great truths, which burst the tenfold night
Of heathen error, with a golden flood
Of endless day: to feel, is to be fir'd;
And to believe, Lorenzo! is to feel.

Thou most indulgent, most tremendous Power!
Still more tremendous, for thy wondrous love!
That arms, with awe more awful, thy commands;
And foul transgression dips in sevenfold night!
How our hearts tremble at thy love immense!
In love immense, inviolably just!
Thou, rather than thy justice should be stain'd,
Didst stain the cross; and work of wonders far
The greatest, that thy dearest far might bleed.

Bold thought! shall I dare speak it, or repress?
Should man more execrate, or boast, the guilt
Which rous'd such vengeance? which such love in-flam'd? [arms,

O'er guilt (how mountainous!) with out-stretch'd
Stern justice and soft-smiling love embrace,
Supporting, in full majesty, thy throne,
When seem'd its majesty to need support,
Or that, or man, inevitably lost;
What, but the fathomless of thought divine,
Could labour such expedient from despair,
And rescue both? both rescue! both exalt!
O how are both exalted by the deed!
The wondrous deed! or shall I call it more?
A wonder in Omnipotence itself!

A mystery no less to gods than men!
Not thus, our infidels the Eternal draw,
A God all o'er, consummate, absolute,
Full-orb'd, in his whole round of rays complete:
They set at odds Heaven's jarring attributes;
And, with one excellence, another wound;
Maim Heaven's perfection, break its equal beams,
Bid mercy triumph over — God himself,
Undeified by their opprobrious praise:
A God all mercy, is a God unjust.

Ye brainless wits! ye baptiz'd infidels!
Ye worse for mending! wash'd to fouler stains!
The ransom was paid down; the fund of Heaven,
Heaven's inexhaustible, exhausted fund,
Amazing, and amaz'd, pour'd forth the price,
All price beyond: though curious to compute,
Archangels fail'd to cast the mighty sum:
Its value vast, ungrasp'd by minds create,
For ever hides, and glows, in the Supreme.

And was the ransom paid? it was: and paid
(What can exalt the bounty more?) for you!

The Sun beheld it — no, the shocking scene
Drove back his chariot: midnight veil'd his face;
Not such as this; not such as Nature makes;
A midnight Nature shudder'd to behold;
A midnight new! a dread eclipse (without Opposing spheres) from her Creator's frown!
Sun! didst thou fly thy Maker's pain? Or start
At that enormous load of human guilt, [cross;
Which bow'd his blessed head; o'erwhelmed his
Made groan the centre; burst Earth's marble womb,
With pangs, strange pangs! deliver'd of her dead?
Hell howl'd; and Heaven that hour let fall a tear;
Heaven wept, that men might smile! Heaven bled, that man

Might never die! —

And is devotion virtue? 'T is compell'd.
What heart of stone but glows at thoughts like these?
Such contemplations mount us; and should mount
The mind still higher; nor ever glance on man
Unraptur'd, uninflam'd. — Where roll my thoughts
To rest from wonders? other wonders rise;
And strike where'er they roll: my soul is caught:
Heaven's sovereign blessings, clustering from the cross,

Rush on her, in a throng, and close her round,
The prisoner of amaze! — in his blest life
I see the path, and in his death the price,
And in his great ascent the proof supreme
Of immortality. — And did he rise?
Hear, O ye nations! hear it, O ye dead!
He rose! he rose! he burst the bars of death.
Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates!
And give the King of glory to come in.
Who is the King of glory? he who left
His throne of glory, for the pang of death!
Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates!
And give the King of glory to come in.
Who is the King of glory? he who slew
The ravenous foe, that gorg'd all human race!
The King of glory, he, whose glory fill'd
Heaven with amazement at his love to man;
And with divine complacency beheld
Powers most illumin'd, wilder'd in the theme.

The theme, the joy, how then shall man sustain?
Oh the burst gates! crush'd sting! demolish'd throne! [Heaven!

Last gasp! of vanquish'd Death. Shout Earth and
This sum of good to man. Whose nature, then,
Took wing, and mounted with him from the tomb!
Then, then, I rose; then first humanity
Triumphant pass'd the crystal ports of light,
(Stupendous guest!) and seiz'd eternal youth,
Seiz'd in our name. E'er since, 't is blasphemous
To call man mortal. Man's mortality [ration
Was, then, transferr'd to death; and Heaven's du-
Unalienably seal'd to this frail frame,
This child of dust — Man, all immortal! hail;
Hail, Heaven! all lavish of strange gifts to man!
Thine all the glory; man's the boundless bliss.

Where am I rapt by this triumphant theme,
On Christian joy's exulting wing, above
Th' Aonian mount? Alas! small cause for joy!
What if to pain immortal? if extent
Of being, to preclude a close of woe?
Where, then, my boast of immortality?
I boast it still, though cover'd o'er with guilt;
For guilt, not innocence, his life he pour'd,
'T is guilt alone can justify his death!
Nor that, unless his death can justify
Relenting guilt in Heaven's indulgent sight.

If, sick of folly, I relent ; he writes
My name in Heaven, with that inverted spear
(A spear deep-dipt in blood !) which pierc'd his side,
And open'd there a font for all mankind,
Who strive, who combat crimes, to drink, and live:
This, only this, subdues the fear of death.

And what is this ? — Survey the wondrous cure :
And at each step, let higher wonder rise !
“ Pardon for infinite offence ! and pardon
Through means that speak its value infinite !
A pardon bought with blood ! with blood divine !
With blood divine of him I made my foe !
Persisted to provoke ! though woo'd, and aw'd,
Blest, and chastis'd, a flagrant rebel still !
A rebel, 'midst the thunders of his throne !
Nor I alone ! a rebel universe !
My species up in arms ! not one exempt !
Yet for the foulest of the foul he dies,
Most joy'd, for the redeem'd from deepest guilt !
As if our race were held of highest rank ;
And godhead dearer, as more kind to man ! ”

Bound, every heart ! and every bosom, burn !
O what a scale of miracles is here !
Its lowest round, high planted on the skies ;
Its towering summit lost beyond the thought
Of man or angel ! O that I could climb
The wonderful ascent, with equal praise !
Praise ! flow for ever (if astonishment
Will give thee leave :) my praise ! for ever flow ;
Praise ardent, cordial, constant, to high Heaven
More fragrant, than Arabia sacrific'd,
And all her spicy mountains in a flame.

So dear, so due to Heaven, shall praise descend,
With her soft plume (from plausive angel's wing
First pluck'd by man) to tickle mortal ears,
Thus diving in the pockets of the great ?
Is praise the perquisite of every paw,
Though black as Hell, that grapples well for gold ?
Oh love of gold ! thou meanest of amours !
Shall praise her odours waste on virtue's dead,
Embalm the base, perfume the stench of guilt,
Earn dirty bread by washing Ethiops fair,
Removing filth, or sinking it from sight,
A scavenger in scenes, where vacant posts,
Like gibbets yet untenanted, expect
Their future ornaments ? From courts and thrones,
Return, apostate Praise ! thou vagabond !
Thou prostitute ! to thy first love return,
Thy first, thy greatest, once unrivall'd theme.

There flow redundant ; like Meander flow,
Back to thy fountain ; to that Parent Power,
Who gives the tongue to sound, the thought to soar,
The soul to be. Men homage pay to men,
Thoughtless beneath whose dreadful eye they bow
In mutual awe profound of clay to clay,
Of guilt to guilt ; and turn their back on thee,
Great Sir ! whom thrones celestial ceaseless sing :
To prostrate angels, an amazing scene !

O the presumption of man's awe for man !
Man's Author ! End ! Restorer ! Law ! and Judge !
Thine, all ; day thine, and thine this gloom of night,
With all her wealth, with all her radiant worlds :
What, night eternal, but a frown from thee ?
What, Heaven's meridian glory, but thy smile ?
And shall not praise be thine, not human praise ?
While Heaven's high host on hallelujahs live ?

O may I breathe no longer than I breathe
My soul in praise to him, who gave my soul,
And all her infinite of prospect fair,
Cut through the shades of Hell, great love ! by thee,

O most adorable ! most unador'd !
Where shall thy praise begin, which ne'er should end ?

Where'er I turn, what claim on all applause !
How is night's sable mantle labour'd o'er,
How richly wrought with attributes divine ! pomp,
What wisdom shines ! what love ! this midnight
This gorgeous arch, with golden worlds inlay'd !
Built with divine ambition ! nought to thee ;
For others this profusion : thou, apart,
Above ! beyond ! O tell me, mighty Mind !
Where art thou ? Shall I dive into the deep ?
Call to the Sun, or ask the roaring winds,
For their Creator ! Shall I question loud
The thunder, if in that th' Almighty dwells ?
Or holds he furious storms in straiten'd reins,
And bids fierce whirlwinds wheel his rapid car ?
What mean these questions ? Trembling, I retract ;
My prostrate soul adores the present God :
Praise I a distant deity ? He tunes
My voice (if tun'd) ; the nerve, that writes, sustains :
Wrapt in his being, I resound his praise :
But though past all diffus'd, without a shore,
His essence ; local is his throne, (as meet,)
To gather the disperst, (as standards call
The listed from afar) : to fix a point,
A central point, collective of his sons,
Since finite every nature but his own.

The nameless He, whose nod is Nature's birth ;
And Nature's shield, the shadow of his hand ;
Her dissolution, his suspended smile !
The great First-Last ! pavilion'd high he sits,
In darkness from excessive splendour borne,
By gods unseen, unless through lustre lost.
His glory, to created glory, bright,
As that to central horrors ; he looks down
On all that soars ; and spans immensity.

Though night unnumber'd worlds unfolds to view,
Boundless creation ! what art thou ? A beam,
A mere effluvium of his majesty :
And shall an atom of this atom-world
Mutter, in dust and sin, the theme of Heaven ?
Down to the centre should I send my thought
Through beds of glittering ore, and glowing gems,
Their beggar'd blaze wants lustre for my lay ;
Goes out in darkness : if, on towering wing,
I send it through the boundless vault of stars !
The stars, though rich, what dross their gold to thee,
Great ! good ! wise ! wonderful ! eternal King !
If to those conscious stars thy throne around,
Praise ever-pouring, and imbibing bliss ;
And ask their strain ; they want it, more they want,
Poor their abundance, humble their sublime,
Languid their energy, their ardour cold,
Indebted still, their highest rapture burns ;
Short of its mark, defective, though divine. [alone ;

Still more — This theme is man's, and man's
Their vast appointments reach it not : they see
On Earth a bounty not indulg'd on high ;
And downward look for Heaven's superior praise !
First born of ether ! high in fields of light !
View man, to see the glory of your God !
Could angels envy, they had envied here ;
And some did envy ; and the rest, though gods,
Yet still gods unredeem'd, (there triumphs man,
Tempted to weigh the dust against the skies,)
They less would feel, though more adorn, my theme.
They sung Creation (for in that they shar'd) :
How rose in melody, that child of love !
Creation's great superior, man ! is thine ;

Thine is redemption ; they just gave the key :
 'T is thine to raise, and eternize, the song ;
 Though human, yet divine : for should not this
laine man o'er man, and kindle seraphs here ?
Redemption ! 't was creation more sublime ;
Redemption ! 't was the labour of the skies ;
 Far more than labour — It was death in Heaven.
 A truth so strange ! 't were bold to think it true ;
 Not far bolder still to disbelieve !

Here pause, and ponder : was there death in Heaven ?

What then on Earth ? On Earth, which struck the blow ?

Who struck it ? Who ? — O how is man enlarg'd
 Seen through this medium ! how the pigmy towers !
 How counterpois'd his origin from dust !
 How counterpois'd, to dust his sad return !
 How voided his vast distance from the skies !
 How near he presses on the seraph's wing !
 Which is the seraph ? Which the born of clay ?
 How this demonstrates, through the thickest cloud
 Of guilt, and clay condens'd, the son of Heaven !
 The double son ; the made, and the re-made !
 And shall Heaven's double property be lost ?
 Man's double madness only can destroy.

To man the bleeding cross has promis'd all ;
 The bleeding cross has sworn eternal grace ;
 Who gave his life, what grace shall he deny ?
 O ye ! who, from this rock of ages, leap,
 Apostates, plunging headlong in the deep !
 What cordial joy, what consolation strong,
 Whatever winds arise, or billows roll,
 Our interest in the master of the storm !
 Cling there, and in wreck'd Nature's ruin smile ;
 While vile apostates tremble in a calm.

Man ! know thyself. All wisdom centres there :
 To none man seems ignoble, but to man ;
 Angels that grandeur, men o'erlook, admire :
 How long shall human nature be their book,
 Degenerate mortal ! and unread by thee ?
 The beam dim reason sheds shows wonders there ;
 What high contents ! Illustrious faculties !
 But the grand comment, which displays at full
 Our human height, scarce sever'd from divine,
 By Heaven compos'd, was publish'd on the cross.

Who looks on that, and sees not in himself
 An awful stranger, a terrestrial god ?
 A glorious partner with the Deity
 In that high attribute, immortal life ?
 If a God bleeds, he bleeds not for a worm :
 I gaze, and, as I gaze, my mounting soul
 Catches strange fire, Eternity ! at thee ;
 And drops the world — or rather, more enjoys :
 How chang'd the face of Nature ! how improv'd !
 What seem'd a chaos, shines a glorious world,
 Or, what a world, an Eden ; heighten'd all !
 It is another scene ! another self !
 And still another, as time rolls along ;
 And that a self far more illustrious still.
 Beyond long ages, yet roll'd up in shades
 Unpierc'd by bold conjecture's keenest ray,
 What evolutions of surprising fate !
 How Nature opens, and receives my soul
 In boundless walks of raptur'd thought ! where gods
 Encounter and embrace me ! What new births
 Of strange adventure, foreign to the Sun ;
 Where what now charms, perhaps, what'er exists,
 Old time, and fair creation, are forgot !

Is this extravagant ? Of man we form
 Extravagant conception, to be just :

Conception unconfin'd wants wings to reach him :
 Beyond its reach, the Godhead only, more.
He, the great Father ! kindled at one flame
 The world of rationals ; one spirit pour'd
 From spirit's awful fountain : pour'd himself
 Through all their souls ; but not in equal stream,
 Profuse, or frugal, of th' aspiring God,
 As his wise plan demanded ; and when past
 Their various trials in their various spheres,
 If they continue rational, as made,
 Resorbs them all into himself again ;
 His throne their centre, and his smile their crown.

Why doubt we, then, the glorious truth to sing,
 Though yet unsung, as deem'd, perhaps, too bold ?
 Angels are men of a superior kind ;
 Angels are men in lighter habit clad,
 High o'er celestial mountains wing'd in flight ;
 And men are angels loaded for an hour,
 Who wade this miry vale, and climb with pain,
 And slippery step, the bottom of the steep.
 Angels their failings, mortals have their praise ;
 While here, of corps ethereal, such enroll'd,
 And summon'd to the glorious standard soon,
 Which flames eternal crimson through the skies.
 Nor are our brothers thoughtless of their kin,
 Yet absent ; but not absent from their love.
 Michael has fought our battles ; Raphael sung
 Our triumphs ; Gabriel on our errands flown,
 Sent by the Sovereign : and are these, O man !
 Thy friends, thy warm allies ? and thou (shame burn
 The cheek to cinder !) rival to the brute ?

Religion's All. Descending from the skies
 To wretched man, the goddess, in her left,
 Holds out this world, and, in her right, the next ;
 Religion ! the sole voucher man is man ;
 Supporter sole of man above himself ;
 E'en in this night of frailty, change, and death,
 She gives the soul a soul that acts a god.
 Religion ! Providence ! an after-state !
Here is firm footing ; here is solid rock !
 This can support us ; all is sea besides ;
 Sinks under us ; bestorms, and then devours.
 His hand the good man fastens on the skies,
 And bids Earth roll, nor feels her idle whirl.

As when a wretch, from thick, polluted air,
 Darkness and stench, and suffocation-damps,
 And dungeon-horrours, by kind fate, discharg'd,
 Climbs some fair eminence, where ether pure
 Surrounds him, and Elysian prospects rise,
 His heart exults, his spirits cast their load :
 As if new-born, he triumphs in the change ;
 So joys the soul, when, from inglorious aims,
 And sordid sweets, from feculence and froth
 Of ties terrestrial, set at large, she mounts
 To reason's region, her own element,
 Breathes hopes immortal, and affects the skies.

Religion ! thou the soul of happiness ;
 And, groaning Calvary, of thee ! There shine
 The noblest truths ; there strongest motives sting ;
 There sacred violence assaults the soul ;
 There, nothing but compulsion is forborne.
 Can love allure us ? or can terror awe ?
He weeps ! — the falling drop puts out the Sun ;
He sighs — the sigh Earth's deep foundation shakes.
 If in his love so terrible, what then
 His wrath inflam'd ? his tenderness on fire ?
 Like soft, smooth oil, outblazing other fires ?
 Can prayer, can praise, avert it ? — Thou, my All !
 My theme ! my inspiration ! and my crown !
 My strength in age ! my rise in low estate !

My soul's ambition, pleasure, wealth! — my world!
 My light in darkness! and my life in death!
 My boast through time! bliss through eternity!
 Eternity, too short to speak thy praise!
 Or fathom thy profound of love to man!
 To man, of men the meanest, e'en to me;
 My sacrifice! my God! — what things are these!
 What then art thou? by what name shall I call thee?

Knew I the name devout archangels use,
 Devout archangels should the name enjoy,
 By me unrivall'd; thousands more sublime,
 None half so dear, as that, which, though unspoke,
 Still glows at heart: O how omnipotence
 Is lost in love! Thou great philanthropist!
 Father of angels! but the friend of man!
 Like Jacob, fondest of the younger born!
 Thou, who didst save him, snatch the smoking brand
 From out the flames, and quench it in thy blood!
 How art thou pleas'd, by bounty to distress!
 To make us groan beneath our gratitude,
 Too big for birth! to favour, and confound!
 To challenge, and to distance all return!
 Of lavish love stupendous heights to soar,
 And leave praise panting in the distant vale!
 Thy right, too great, defrauds thee of thy due;
 And sacrilegious our sublimest song.
 But since the naked will obtains thy smile,
 Beneath this monument of praise unpaid,
 And future life symphonious to my strain,
 (That noblest hymn to Heaven!) for ever lie
 Intomb'd my fear of death! and every fear,
 The dread of every evil, but thy frown.

Whom see I, yonder, so demurely smile?
 Laughter a labour, and might break their rest.
 Ye quietists, in homage to the skies!
 Serene! of soft address! who mildly make
 An unobtrusive tender of your hearts,
 Abhorring violence; who halt indeed;
 But, for the blessing, wrestle not with Heaven!
 Think you my song too turbulent? too warm?
 Are passions, then, the pagans of the soul?
Reason alone baptiz'd? alone ordain'd
 To touch things sacred? Oh for warmer still!
 Guilt chills my zeal, and age benumbs my powers:
 Oh for an humbler heart! and prouder song!
 Thou, my much-injur'd theme! with that soft eye
 Which melted o'er doom'd Salem, deign to look
 Compassion to the coldness of my breast;
 And pardon to the winter in my strain.

Oh ye cold-hearted, frozen, formalists!
 On such a theme, 't is impious to be calm;
 Passion is reason, transport temper, here.
 Shall Heaven, which gave us ardour, and has shown
 Her own for man so strongly, not disdain
 What smooth emollients in theology,
 Recumbent virtue's downy doctors, preach;
 That prose of piety, a lukewarm praise?
 Rise odours sweet from incense winflam'd?
 Devotion, when lukewarm, is undevout;
 But when it glows, its heat is struck to Heaven;
 To human hearts her golden harps are strung;
 High Heaven's orchestra chaunts amen to man.

Hear I, or dream I hear, their distant strain,
 Sweet to the soul, and tasting strong of Heaven,
 Soft-wafted on celestial pity's plume,
 Through the vast spaces of the universe,
 To cheer me in this melancholy gloom?
 Oh when will Death (now stingless), like a friend
 Admit me of their choir? O when will I

This mouldering, old, partition-wall throw down?
 Give beings, one in nature, one abode?
 Oh Death divine! that giv'st us to the skies!
 Great future! glorious patron of the past,
 And present! when shall I thy shrine adore?
 From Nature's continent, immensely wide,
 Immensely blest, this little isle of life,
 This dark, incarcerated colony,
 Divides us. Happy day! that breaks our chain;
 That manumits; that calls from exile home;
 That leads to Nature's great metropolis,
 And re-admits us, through the guardian hand
 Of elder brothers, to our Father's throne;
 Who bears our Advocate, and, through his wounds
 Beholding man, allows that tender name.

'T is this makes Christian triumph a command:

'T is this makes joy a duty to the wise;

'T is impious in a good man to be sad.

See thou, Lorenzo! where hangs all our hope?
 Touch'd by the cross, we live; or, more than die;
 That touch which touch'd not angels; more divine
 Than that which touch'd confusion into form,
 And darkness into glory: partial touch!
 Ineffably pre-eminent regard!

Sacred to man, and sovereign through the whole
 Long golden chain of miracles, which hangs
 From Heaven through all duration, and supports
 In one illustrious and amazing plan,
 Thy welfare, Nature! and thy God's renown;
 That touch, with charm celestial, heals the soul
 Diseas'd, drives pain from guilt, lights life in death.
 Turns Earth to Heaven, to heavenly thrones transforms

The ghastly ruins of the mouldering tomb.

Dost ask me when? When he who died returns;
 Returns, how chang'd! Where then the man of woe?

In glory's terrors all the Godhead burns;
 And all his courts, exhausted by the tide
 Of deities, triumphant in his train,
 Leave a stupendous solitude in Heaven;
 Replenish'd soon, replenish'd with increase
 Of pomp, and multitude; a radiant band
 Of angels new; of angels from the tomb.

Is this my fancy thrown remote? and rise
 Dark doubts between the promise and event?
 I send thee not to volumes for thy cure;
 Read Nature; Nature is a friend to truth;
 Nature is Christian; preaches to mankind;
 And bids dead matter aid us in our creed.
 Hast thou ne'er seen the comet's flaming flight?
 Th' illustrious stranger, passing, terror sheds
 On gazing nations; from his fiery train
 Of length enormous, takes his ample round
 Through depths of ether; coasts unnumber'd worlds,
 Of more than solar glory; doubles wide
 Heaven's mighty cape; and then revisits Earth,
 From the long travel of a thousand years.
 Thus, at the destin'd period, shall return
 He, once on Earth, who bids the comet blaze:
 And, with him, all our triumph o'er the tomb.

Nature is dumb on this important point;
 Or hope precarious in low whisper breathes;
Faith speaks aloud, distinct; e'en adders hear:
 But turn, and dart into the dark again.
Faith builds a bridge across the gulf of Death,
 To break the shock blind Nature cannot shun,
 And lands thought smoothly on the further shore.
 Truth's terror is the mountain faith removes;
 Mountain barrier between man and peace.

is faith disarms destruction ; and absolves
 rom every clamorous charge, the guiltless tomb.
 Why disbelieve? Lorenzo! — "Reason bids, ll-sacred reason." — Hold her sacred still ;
 or shalt thou want a rival in thy flame :
 ll-sacred reason / source, and soul, of all emanding praise, on Earth, or Earth above !
 ly heart is thine : deep in its inmost folds,
 ive thou with life ; live dearer of the two.
 Fear I the blessed cross, by fortune stamp'd
 n passive Nature, before thought was born ?
 y birth's blind bigot ! fir'd with local zeal !
 lo ! Reason re-baptis'd me when adult ;
 Veigh'd true, and false, in her impartial scale ;
 y heart became the convert of my head,
 nd made that choice, which once was but my fate.

On argument alone my faith is built : "
Reason pursu'd is faith ; and unpursued
 There proof invites, 't is reason, then, no more :
 nd such our proof, That, or our faith is right,
 r Reason lies, and Heaven design'd it wrong :
 bsolve we this ? What, then, is blasphemy ?

Fond as we are, and justly fond, of faith,
Reason, we grant, demands our first regard ;
 he mother honour'd, as the daughter dear.
Reason the root, fair faith is but the flower ;
 he fading flower shall die ; but reason lives
 mmortal, as her Father in the skies.
 hen faith is virtue, reason makes it so.
 Wrong not the Christian ; think not reason yours :
 't is reason our great Master holds so dear ;
 't is reason's injur'd rights his wrath resents ;
 't is reason's voice obey'd his glories crown ;
 o give lost reason life, he pour'd his own :
 believe, and show the reason of a man ;
 believe, and taste the pleasure of a God !
 believe, and look with triumph on the tomb :
 hrough reason's wounds alone thy faith can die ;
 hich dying, tenfold terror gives to death,
 nd dips in venom his twice-mortal sting.

Learn hence what honours, what loud peans, due
 o those, who push our antidote aside ;
 hose boasted friends to reason, and to man,
 hose fatal love stabs every joy, and leaves
 Death's terror heighten'd, gnawing on his heart.
 hese pompous sons of reason idoliz'd
 nd vilified at once ; of reason dead,
 hen deify'd, as monarchs were of old ;
 What conduct plants proud laurels on their brow ?
 hile love of truth through all their camp resounds,
 hey draw Pride's curtain o'er the noon-tide ray,
 ipike up their inch of reason, on the point
 f philosophic wit, call'd argument ;
 And then, exulting in their taper, cry,
 ' Behold the Sun : " and, Indian-like, adore.

Talk they of morals ? O thou bleeding Love !
 Thou maker of new morals to mankind !
 The grand morality is love of thee.
 As wise as Socrates, if such they were,
 Nor will they 'bate of that sublime renown,)
 As wise as Socrates, might justly stand
 The definition of a modern fool.

A Christian is the highest style of man :
 And is there, who the blessed cross wipes off,
 As a foul blot from his dishonour'd brow ?
 If angels tremble, 't is at such a sight :
 The wretch they quit, desponding of their charge,
 More struck with grief or wonder, who can tell ?

Ye sold to sense ! ye citizens of Earth !
 For such alone the Christian banner fly)

Know ye how wise your choice, how great your gain ?
 Behold the picture of Earth's happiest man :
 " He calls his wish, it comes ; he sends it back,
 And says, he call'd another ; that arrives,
 Meets the same welcome ; yet he still calls on ;
 Till one calls him, who varies not his call,
 But holds him fast, in chains of darkness bound,
 Till Nature dies, and judgment sets him free ;
 A freedom far less welcome than his chain."

But grant man happy ; grant him happy long :
 Add to life's highest prize her latest hour ;
 That hour, so late, is nimble in approach,
 That, like a post, comes on in full career :
 How swift the shuttle flies, that weaves thy shroud !
 Where is the fable of thy former years ?
 Thrown down the gulf of time ; as far from thee
 As they had ne'er been thine ; the day in hand,
 Like a bird struggling to get loose, is going ;
 Scarce now possess'd, so suddenly 't is gone ;
 And each swift moment fled, is death advanc'd
 By strides as swift ; Eternity is all ;
 And whose Eternity ? Who triumphs there ?
 Bathing for ever in the font of bliss !
 For ever basking in the Deity !
 Lorenzo ! who ? — Thy conscience shall reply.

O give it leave to speak ; 't will speak ere long,
 Thy leave unask'd : Lorenzo ! hear it now,
 While useful its advice, its accent mild.
 By the great edict, the divine decree,
 Truth is deposited with man's last hour ;
 An honest hour, and faithful to her trust :
 Truth, eldest daughter of the Deity ;
 Truth, of his council, when he made the worlds ;
 Nor less, when he shall judge the worlds he made ;
 Though silent long, and sleeping ne'er so sound,
 Smother'd with errors, and oppress'd with toys,
 That Heaven-commissioned hour no sooner calls,
 But, from her cavern in the soul's abyss,
 Like him they fable under Ætna whelm'd,
 The goddess bursts, in thunder, and in flame ;
 Loudly convinces, and severely pains.
 Dark demons I discharge, and hydra stings ;
 The keen vibration of bright truth — is Hell :
 Just definition ! though by schools untaught.
 Ye deaf to truth ! peruse this parson'd page,
 And trust, for once, a prophet, and a priest ;
 " Men may live fools, but fools they cannot die."

NIGHT THE FIFTH.

THE RELAPSE.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF LITCHFIELD.

LORENZO ! to recriminate is just.
 Fondness for fame is avarice of air.
 I grant the man is vain who writes for praise.
 Praise no man e'er deserv'd, who sought no more.
 As just thy second charge. I grant the Muse
 Has often blush'd at her degenerate sons,
 Retain'd by sense to plead her filthy cause ;
 To raise the low, to magnify the mean,
 And subtilize the gross into refin'd :
 As if to magic numbers' powerful charm
 'T was given, to make a civet of their song
 Obscene, and sweeten ordure to perfume.
 Wit, a true pagan, deifies the brute,
 And lifts our swine-enjoyments from the mire.
 The fact notorious, nor obscure the cause,

We wear the chains of pleasure and of pride.
 These share the man ; and these distract him too ;
 Draw different ways, and clash in their commands.
Pride, like an eagle, builds among the stars,
 But pleasure, lark-like, nests upon the ground.
 Joys shar'd by brute-creation, pride resents ;
Pleasure embraces : man would both enjoy,
 And both at once : a point how hard to gain !
 But, what can't wit, when stung by strong desire ?

Wit dares attempt this arduous enterprise.
 Since joys of sense can't rise to reason's taste ;
 In subtle sophistry's laborious forge,
Wit hammers out a reason new, that stoops
 To sordid scenes, and meets them with applause.
Wit calls the graces the chaste zone to loose ;
 Nor less than a plump god to fill the bowl :
 A thousand phantoms, and a thousand spells,
 A thousand opiates scatters, to delude,
 To fascinate, inebriate, lay asleep,
 And the fool'd mind delightfully confound. [more ;
 Thus that which shock'd the judgment, shocks no
 That which gave pride offence, no more offends.
Pleasure and pride, by nature mortal foes,
 At war eternal, which in man shall reign,
 By wit's address, patch up a fatal peace,
 And hand in hand lead on the rank debauch,
 From rank, refin'd to delicate and gay.
Art, cursed art ! wipes off th' indebted blush
 From Nature's cheek, and bronzes every shame.
 Man smiles in ruin, glories in his guilt,
 And infamy stands candidate for praise.

All writ by man in favour of the soul,
 These sensual ethics far, in bulk, transcend.
 The flowers of eloquence, profusely pour'd
 O'er spotted vice, fill half the letter'd world.
 Can powers of genius exorcise their page,
 And consecrate enormities with song ?
 But let not these inexpiable strains
 Condemn the Muse that knows her dignity ;
 Nor meanly stops at time, but holds the world
 As 't is, in Nature's ample field, a point,
 A point in her esteem ; from whence to start,
 And run the round of universal space,
 To visit being universal there,
 And being's Source, that utmost flight of mind !
 Yet, spite of this so vast circumference,
 Well knows, but what is moral, nought is great.
 Sing syrens only ? Do not angels sing ?
 There is in poesy a decent pride,
 Which well becomes her when she speaks to pruse,
 Her younger sister ; haply, not more wise.

Think'st thou, Lorenzo ! to find pastimes here ?
 No guilty passion blown into a flame,
 No foible flatter'd, dignity disgrac'd,
 No fairy field of fiction, all on flower,
 No rainbow colours, here, or silken tale :
 But solemn counsels, images of awe,
Truths, which eternity lets fall on man [spheres,
 With double weight, through these revolving
 This death-deep silence, and incumbent shade :
Thoughts, such as shall revisit your last hour ;
 Visit uncall'd, and live when life expires ;
 And thy dark pencil, midnight ! darker still
 In melancholy dipt, embrowns the whole.

Yet this, even this, my laughter-loving friends !
 Lorenzo ! and thy brothers of the smile !
 If, what imports you most, can most engage,
 Shall steal your ear, and chain you to my song.
 Or if you fail me, know, the wise shall taste
 The truths I sing ; the truths I sing shall feel ;

And, feeling, give assent ; and their assent
 Is ample recompense ; is more than praise.
 But chiefly thine, O Litchfield ! nor mistake ;
 Think not un introduc'd I force my way ;
 Narcissa, not unknown, not unallied,
 By virtue, or by blood, illustrious youth !
 To thee, from blooming amaranthine bowers,
 Where all the language harmony, descends
 Uncall'd, and asks admittance for the Muse :
 A Muse that will not pain thee with thy praise ;
 Thy praise she drops, by nobler still inspir'd.

O thou ! Blest Spirit ! whether the supreme,
 Great antemundane Father ! in whose breast
 Embryo creation, unborn being, dwelt,
 And all its various revolutions roll'd
 Present, though future ; prior to themselves ;
 Whose breath can blow it into nought again ;
 Or, from his throne some delegated power,
 Who, studious of our peace, dost turn the thought
 From vain and vile, to solid and sublime !
 Unseen thou lead'st me to delicious draughts
 Of inspiration, from a purer stream,
 And fuller of the god, than that which burst
 From fam'd Castalia : nor is yet allay'd
 My sacred thirst ; though long my soul has rang'd
 Through pleasing paths of moral and divine,
 By thee sustain'd, and lighted by the stars.

By them best lighted are the paths of thought ;
Nights are their days, their most illumin'd hours.
 By day, the soul, o'erborne by life's career,
 Stunn'd by the din, and giddy with the glare,
 Reels far from reason, jostled by the throng.
 By day the soul is passive, all her thoughts
 Impos'd, precarious, broken ere mature.
 By night, from objects free, from passion cool,
 Thoughts uncontroll'd, and unimpress'd, the birds
 Of pure election, arbitrary range,
 Not to the limits of one world confin'd ;
 But from ethereal travels light on Earth,
 As voyagers drop anchor, for repose.

Let Indians, and the gay, like Indians, fond
 Of feather'd fopperies, the Sun adore :
Darkness has more divinity for me ;
 It strikes thought inward ; it drives back the soul
 To settle on herself, our point supreme !
 There lies our theatre ! there sits our judge.
Darkness the curtain drops o'er life's dull scene ;
 'T is the kind hand of Providence stretch'd out
 'Twixt man and vanity ; 't is reason's reign,
 And virtue's too ; these tutelary shades
 Are man's asylum from the tainted throng.
Night is the good man's friend, and guardian too ;
 It no less rescues virtue, than inspires.

Virtue, for ever frail, as fair, below,
 Her tender nature suffers in the crowd,
 Nor touches on the world, without a stain :
 The world's infectious ; few bring back at eve,
 Immaculate, the manners of the morn.
 Something we thought, is blotted ! we reach'd,
 Is shaken ; we renounc'd, returns again.
 Each salutation may slide in a sin
 Unthought before, or fix a former flaw.
 Nor is it strange : light, motion, concourse, noise,
 All, scatter us abroad ; thought outward bound,
 Neglectful of our home affairs, flies off
 In fume and dissipation, quits her charge,
 And leaves the breast unguarded to the foe.

Present example gets within our guard,
 And acts with double force, by few repell'd.
Ambition fires ambition ; love of gain

trikes, like a pestilence, from breast to breast ;
lust, pride, perfidy, blue vapours breathe ;
 and inhumanity is caught from man,
 from smiling man. A slight, a single glance,
 and shot at random, often has brought home
 a sudden fever to the throbbing heart,
 Of envy, rancour, or impure desire.
 We see, we hear, with peril ; safety dwells remote from multitude ; the world 's a school
 Of wrong, and what proficients swarm around !
 We must or imitate, or disapprove ;
 Must list as their accomplices, or foes ;
That stains our innocence ; this wounds our peace.
 From Nature's birth, hence, wisdom has been smit
 With sweet recess, and languish'd for the shade.

This sacred shade, and solitude, what is it ?
 'T is the felt presence of the Deity.
 Few are the faults we flatter when alone,
Vice sinks in her allurements, is ungilt,
 And looks, like other objects, black by night.
 By night an atheist half-believes a God.

Night is fair virtue's immemorial friend ;
 The conscious Moon, through every distant age,
 Has held a lamp to wisdom, and let fall,
 In contemplation's eye, her purging ray.
 The fam'd Athenian, he who woo'd from Heaven
Philosophy the fair, to dwell with men,
 And form their manners, not inflame their pride,
 While o'er his head, as fearful to molest
 His labouring mind, the stars in silence slide,
 And seem all gazing on their future guest,
 See him soliciting his ardent suit
 In private audience : all the live-long night,
 Rigid in thought, and motionless, he stands ;
 Nor quits his theme, or posture, till the Sun
 Rude drunkard rising rosy from the main ! )
 Disturbs his nobler intellectual beam,
 And gives him to the tumult of the world. [waste
 Hail, precious moments ! stol'n from the black
 Of murder'd time ! Auspicious midnight ! hail !
 The world excluded, every passion hush'd,
 And open'd a calm intercourse with Heaven,
 Here the soul sits in council ; ponders past,
 Predetermines future action ; sees, not feels,
 Tumultuous life, and reasons with the storm :
 All her lies answers, and thinks down her charms.

What awful joy ! what mental liberty !
 I am not pent in darkness ; rather say,
 (If not too bold,) in darkness I'm embower'd.
 Delightful gloom ! the clustering thoughts around
 Spontaneous rise, and blossom in the shade ;
 But droop by day, and sicken in the sun.
 Thought borrows light elsewhere ; from that first fire,
 Fountain of animation ! whence descends
Urania, my celestial guest ! who deigns
 Nightly to visit me, so mean ; and now,
 Conscious how needful discipline to man,
 From pleasing dalliance with the charms of night
 My wandering thought recalls, to what excites
 Far other beat of heart ! Narcissa's tomb !
 Or is it feeble Nature calls me back,
 And breaks my spirit into grief again ?
 Is it a Stygian vapour in my blood ?
 A cold, slow puddle, creeping through my veins ?
 Or is it thus with all men ? — Thus with all.
 What are we ? How unequal ! Now we soar,
 And now we sink : to be the same, transcends
 Our present prowess. Dearly pays the soul
 For lodging ill ; too dearly rents her clay.
Reason, a baffled counsellor ! but adds

The blush of weakness to the bane of woe.
 The noblest spirit, fighting her hard fate,
 In this damp, dusty region, charg'd with storms,
 But feebly flutters, yet untaught to fly ;
 Or, flying, short her flight, and sure her fall.
 Our utmost strength, when down, to rise again ;
 And not to yield, though beaten, all our praise.

'T is vain to seek in men for more than man.
 Though proud in promise, big in previous thought,
Experience damps our triumph. I who late,
 Emerging from the shadows of the grave,
 Where grief detain'd me prisoner, mounting high,
 Threw wide the gates of everlasting day,
 And call'd mankind to glory, shook off pain,
Mortality shook off, in ether pure,
 And struck the stars ; now feel my spirits fail ;
 They drop me from the zenith ; down I rush,
 Like him whom fable fledg'd with waxen wings,
 In sorrow drown'd — but not in sorrow lost.
 How wretched is the man who never mourn'd !
 I dive for precious pearl in sorrow's stream :
 Not so the thoughtless man that only grieves ;
 Takes all the torment, and rejects the gain
 (Inestimable gain !) and gives Heaven leave
 To make him but more wretched, not more wise.

If wisdom is our lesson (and what else
 Ennobles man ? what else have angels learnt ?)
Grief ! more proficients in thy school are made,
 Than genius, or proud learning, e'er could boast.
Voracious learning, often over-fed,
 Digests not into sense her motley meal.
 This book-case, with dark booty almost burst,
 This forager on others' wisdom, leaves
 Her native farm, her reason, quite untill'd.
 With mixt manure she surfeits the rank soil,
 Dung'd, but not dress'd ; and rich to beggary.
 A pomp untameable of weeds prevails.
 Her servant's wealth, encumber'd wisdom mourns.
 And what says genius ? " Let the dull be wise."
Genius, too hard for right, can prove it wrong ;
 And loves to boast, where blush men less inspir'd.
 It pleads exemption from the laws of sense ;
 Considers reason as a leveller ;
 And scorns to share a blessing with the crowd.
 That wise it could be, thinks an ample claim
 To glory, and to pleasure gives the rest.
 Crassus but sleeps, Ardelio is undone.
Wisdom less shudders at a fool, than wit.

But wisdom smiles, when humbled mortals weep.
 When sorrow wounds the breast, as ploughs the glebe,
 And hearts obdurate feel her softening shower ;
 Her seed celestial, then, glad wisdom sows ;
 Her golden harvest triumphs in the soil.
 If so, Narcissa ! welcome my Relapse ;
 I'll raise a tax on my calamity,
 And reap rich compensation from my pain.
 I'll range the plenteous intellectual field ;
 And gather every thought of sovereign power
 To chase the moral maladies of man ;
Thoughts, which may bear transplanting to the skies,
 Though natives of this coarse penurious soil :
 Nor wholly wither there, where seraphs sing,
 Refin'd, exalted, not annull'd, in Heaven.
Reason, the sun that gives them birth, the same
 In either clime, though more illustrious there.
 These choicely cull'd, and elegantly rang'd,
 Shall form a garland for Narcissa's tomb ;
 And, peradventure, of no fading flowers.

Say on what themes shall puzzled choice descend ?

"Th' importance of contemplating the tomb;
Why men decline it; suicide's foul birth;
 The various kind of grief; the faults of age;
 And death's dread character — invite my song."

And, first, th' importance of our end survey'd.
 Friends counsel quick dismissal of our grief:
 Mistaken kindness! our hearts heal too soon.
 Are they more kind than he, who struck the blow?
 Who bid it do his errand in our hearts,
 And banish peace, till nobler guests arrive,
 And bring it back, a true and endless peace?
 Calamities are friends: as glaring day
 Of these unnumber'd lustres robs our sight;
 Prosperity puts out unnumber'd thoughts
 Of import high, and light divine, to man.

The man how blest, who, sick of gaudy scenes,
 (Scenes apt to thrust between us and ourselves!)
 Is led by choice to take his favourite walk,
 Beneath death's gloomy, silent, cypress shades,
 Unpierc'd by vanity's fantastic ray;
 To read his monuments, to weigh his dust,
 Visit his vaults, and dwell among the tombs!
 Lorenzo! read with me Narcissa's stone;
 (Narcissa was thy favourite!) let us read
 Her moral stone! few doctors preach so well;
 Few orators so tenderly can touch
 The feeling heart. What pathos in the date!
 Apt words can strike: and yet in them we see
 Faint images of what we, here, enjoy.
 What cause have we to build on length of life?
 Temptations seize, when fear is laid asleep;
 And ill foreboded is our strongest guard.

See from her tomb, as from an humbler shrine,
Truth, radiant goddess! sallies on my soul,
 And puts Delusion's dusky train to flight;
 Disperses the mists our sultry passions raise,
 From objects low, terrestrial, and obscene:
 And shows the real estimate of things;
 Which no man, unafflicted, ever saw;
 Pulls off the veil from Virtue's rising charms;
 Detects Temptation in a thousand lies.
Truth bids me look on men, as autumn leaves,
 And all they bleed for, as the summer's dust,
 Driven by the whirlwind: lighted by her beams,
 I widen my horizon, gain new powers,
 See things invisible, feel things remote,
 Am present with futurities; think nought
 To man so foreign, as the joys possess;
 Nought so much his, as those beyond the grave.

No folly keeps its colour in her sight;
 Pale worldly wisdom loses all her charms;
 In pompous promise, from her schemes profound,
 If future fate she plans, 't is all in leaves,
 Like Sibyl, unsubstantial, fleeting bliss!
 At the first blast it vanishes in air.
 Not so, celestial: wouldst thou know, Lorenzo!
 How differ worldly wisdom, and divine?
 Just as the waning, and the waxing Moon.
 More empty worldly wisdom every day;
 And every day more fair her rival shines.
 When later, there 's less time to play the fool.
 Soon our whole term for wisdom is expir'd:
 (Thou know'st she calls no council in the grave:)
 And everlasting fool is writ in fire,
 Or real wisdom wafts us to the skies.

As worldly schemes resemble Sibyls' leaves,
 The good man's days to Sibyls' books compare,
 (In ancient story read, thou know'st the tale,)
 In price still rising, as in number less,
 Inestimable quite his final hour.

For that who thrones can offer, offer thrones:
 Insolvent worlds the purchase cannot pay.
 "Oh let me die his death!" all Nature cries.
 "Then live his life." — All Nature faults there.
 Our great physician daily to consult,
 To commune with the grave, our only cure.

What grave prescribes the best? — A friend's.
 and yet,
 From a friend's grave how soon we disengage!
 E'en to the dearest, as his marble, cold.
 Why are friends raviſht from us? 'T is to bind,
 By soft affection's ties, on human hearts,
 The thought of death, which reason, too supine,
 Or misemploy'd, so rarely fastens there.
 Nor reason, nor affection, no, nor both
 Combin'd, can break the witchcrafts of the world.
 Behold, th' inexorable hour at hand!
 Behold, th' inexorable hour forgot!
 And to forget it, the chief aim of life,
 Though well to ponder it, is life's chief end.

Is Death, that ever-threatening, ne'er remote,
 That all-important, and that only sure,
 (Come when he will) an unexpected guest?
 Nay, though invited by the loudest calls
 Of blind imprudence, unexpected still?
 Though numerous messengers are sent before,
 To warn his great arrival. What the cause,
 The wondrous cause, of this mysterious ill?
 All Heaven looks down astonish'd at the sight.

Is it, that life has sown her joys so thick,
 We can't thrust in a single care between?
 Is it, that life has such a swarm of cares,
 The thought of death can't enter for the throng?
 Is it, that time steals on with downy feet,
 Nor wakes indulgence from her golden dream?
 To-day is so like yesterday, it cheats;
 We take the lying sister for the same.
 Life glides away, Lorenzo! like a brook;
 For ever changing, unperceiv'd the change.
 In the same brook none ever bath'd him twice:
 To the same life none ever twice awoke.
 We call the brook the same; the same we think
 Our life, though still more rapid in its flow;
 Nor mark the much, irrevocably laps'd,
 And mingled with the sea. Or shall we say
 (Retaining still the brook to bear us on)
 That life is like a vessel on the stream?
 In life embark'd, we smoothly down the tide
 Of time descend, but not on time intent;
 Amus'd, unconscious of the gliding wave;
 Till on a sudden we perceive a shock;
 We start, awake, look out; what see we there?
 Our brittle bark is burst on Charon's shore.

Is this the cause death flies all human thought?
 Or is it judgment, by the will struck blind,
 That domineering mistress of the soul!
 Like him so strong, by Dalilah the fair?
 Or is it fear turns startled reason back,
 From looking down a precipice so steep?
 'T is dreadful; and the dread is wisely plac'd,
 By Nature, conscious of the make of man.
 A dreadful friend it is, a terror kind,
 A flaming sword to guard the tree of life.
 By that unaw'd, in life's most smiling hour,
 The good-man would repine; would suffer joys,
 And burn impatient for his promis'd skies.
 The bad, on each punctilious pique of pride,
 Or gloom of humour, would give rage the rein;
 Bound o'er the barrier, rush into the dark,
 — the schemes of Providence below.

What groan was that, Lorenzo? — Furies! rise,
And drown in your less execrable yell
Britannia's shame. There took her gloomy flight,
On wing impetuous, a black sullen soul,
Blasted from Hell, with horrid lust of death.
Thy friend, the brave, the gallant Altamont,
So call'd, so thought — And then he fled the field.
Less base the fear of death, than fear of life.
O Britain, infamous for suicide!
An island in thy manners, far disjoin'd
From the whole world of *rational*s beside!
In ambient waves plunge thy polluted head,
Wash the dire stain, nor shock the continent.
But thou be shock'd, while I detect the cause
Of self-assault, expose the monster's birth,
And bid abhorrence hiss it round the world.
Blame not thy clime, nor chide the distant Sun;
The Sun is innocent, thy clime absolv'd:
Immoral climes kind Nature never made.
The cause I sing, in Eden might prevail,
And proves, it is thy folly, not thy fate.

The soul of man (let man in homage bow,
Who names his soul), a native of the skies!
High-born, and free, her freedom should maintain,
Unsold, unmortgag'd for Earth's little bribes.
Th' illustrious stranger, in this foreign land,
Like strangers, jealous of her dignity,
Studious of home, and ardent to return,
Of Earth suspicious, Earth's enchanted cup
With cool reserve light touching, should indulge
On immortality, her godlike taste, [there.
There take large draughts; make her chief banquet

But some reject this sustenance divine;
To beggarly vile appetites descend; [Heaven:
Ask alms of Earth, for guests that came from
Sink into slaves; and sell, for present hire,
Their rich reversion, and (what shares its fate)
Their native freedom, to the prince who sways
This nether world. And when his payments fail,
When his foul basket gorges them no more,
Or their pall'd palates loath the basket full;
Are instantly, with wild demoniac rage,
For breaking all the chains of Providence,
And bursting their confinement; though fast barr'd
By laws divine and human; guarded strong
With horrors doubled to defend the pass,
The blackest, nature, or dire guilt can raise;
And moted round with fathomless destruction,
Sure to receive, and overwhelm them in their fall.

Such, Britons! is the cause, to you unknown,
Or worse, o'erlook'd; o'erlook'd by magistrates,
Thus criminals themselves. I grant the deed
Is madness: but the madness of the heart.
And what is that? Our utmost bound of guilt.
A sensual, unreflecting life, is big
With monstrous births, and suicide, to crown
The black infernal brood. The bold to break
Heaven's law supreme, and desperately rush
Through sacred Nature's murder, on their own,
Because they never think of death, they die.
'T is equally man's duty, glory, gain,
At once to shun, and meditate, his end.
When by the bed of languishment we sit,
(The seat of wisdom / if our choice, not fate,)
Or, o'er our dying friends, in anguish hang,
Wipe the cold dew, or stay the sinking head,
Number their moments, and, in every clock,
Start at the voice of an eternity;
See the dim lamp of life just feebly lift
An agonizing beam, at us to gaze,

Then sink again, and quiver into death,
That most pathetic herald of our own!
How read we such sad scenes? As sent to man
In perfect vengeance? No; in pity sent;
To melt him down, like wax, and then impress,
Indelible, Death's image on his heart;
Bleeding for others, trembling for himself.
We bleed, we tremble, we forget, we smile.
The mind turns fool, before the cheek is dry.
Our quick-returning folly cancels all;
As the tide rushing raises what is writ
In yielding sands, and smooths the letter'd shore.

Lorenzo! hast thou ever weigh'd a sigh?
Or study'd the philosophy of tears?
(A science, yet unlectur'd in our schools!)
Hast thou descended deep into the breast,
And seen their source? If not, descend with me,
And trace these briny rivulets to their springs.

Our funeral tears from different causes rise,
As if from separate cisterns in the soul,
Of various kinds, they flow. From tender hearts,
By soft contagion call'd, some burst at once,
And stream obsequious to the leading eye.
Some ask more time, by curious art distill'd.
Some hearts, in secret hard, unapt to melt,
Struck by the magic of the public eye,
Like Moses' smitten rock, gush out amain.
Some weep to share the fate of the deceas'd,
So high in merit, and to them so dear.
They dwell on praises, which they think they share;
And thus, without a blush, commend themselves.
Some mourn, in proof, that something they could
love:

They weep not to relieve their grief, but show.
Some weep in perfect justice to the dead,
As conscious all their love is in arrear.
Some mischievously weep, not unappris'd.
Tears, sometimes, aid the conquest of an eye.
With what address the soft Ephesians draw
Their sable net-work o'er entangled hearts!
As seen through crystal, how their roses glow,
While liquid pearl runs trickling down their cheek!
Of hers not prouder Egypt's wanton queen,
Carousing gems, herself dissolv'd in love.
Some weep at death, abstracted from the dead,
And celebrate, like Charles, their own decease.
By kind construction some are deem'd to weep,
Because a decent veil conceals their joy.

Some weep in earnest, and yet weep in vain;
As deep in indiscretion, as in woe.
Passion, blind passion! impotently pours
Tears, that deserve more tears; while reason sleeps,
Or gazes like an idiot, unconcern'd;
Nor comprehends the meaning of the storm;
Knows not it speaks to her, and her alone.
Irrationals all sorrow are beneath,
That noble gift! that privilege of man!
From sorrow's pang, the birth of endless joy.
But these are barren of that birth divine:
They weep impetuous, as the summer storm,
And full as short! The cruel grief soon tam'd,
They make a pastime of the stingless tale;
Far as the deep resounding knell they spread
The dreadful news, and hardly feel it more.
No grain of wisdom pays them for their woe. [death
Half-round the globe, the tears pump'd up by
Are spent in watering vanities of life;
In making folly flourish still more fair,
When the sick soul, her wonted stay withdrawn,
Reclines on earth, and sorrows in the dust;

Instead of learning, there, her true support,
Though there thrown down her true support to learn,
Without Heaven's aid, impatient to be blest,
She crawls to the next shrub, or bramble vile,
Though from the stately cedar's arms she fell;
With stale, forsworn embraces, clings anew,
The stranger weds, and blossoms, as before,
In all the fruitless fopperies of life:

Presents her weed, well fancied, at the ball,
And raffles for the death's head on the ring.

So wept Aurelia, till the destin'd youth
Stepp'd in, with his receipt for making smiles,
And blanching sables into bridal bloom.

So wept Lorenzo fair Clarissa's fate;
Who gave that angel boy, on whom he dotes;
And died to give him, orphan'd in his birth!
Not such, Narcissa, my distress for thee.

I'll make an altar of thy sacred tomb,
To sacrifice to wisdom. What wast thou?

"Young, gay, and fortunate!" Each yields a theme.

I'll dwell on each, to shun thought more severe;
(Heaven knows I labour with severer still!)

I'll dwell on each, and quite exhaust thy death.

A soul without reflection, like a pile

Without inhabitant, to ruin runs.

And, first, thy youth. What says it to gray hairs?

Narcissa, I'm become thy pupil now—

Early, bright, transient, chaste, as morning dew,
She sparkled, was exhal'd, and went to Heaven.

Time on this head has snow'd; yet still 't is borne
Aloft; nor thinks but on another's grave.

Cover'd with shame I speak it, age severe
Old worn-out vice sets down for virtue fair;

With graceless gravity, chastising youth,

That youth chastis'd surpassing in a fault.

Father of all, forgetfulness of death:

As if, like objects passing on the sight,

Death had advanc'd too near us to be seen:

Or, that life's loan time ripen'd into right;

And men might plead prescription from the grave;

Deathless, from repetition of reprieve.

Deathless? far from it! such are dead already;

Their hearts are buried, and the world their grave.

Tell me, some god! my guardian angel! tell,

What thus infatuates? what enchantment plants

The phantom of an age, 'twixt us and death

Already at the door? He knocks, we hear,

And yet we will not hear. What mail defends

Our untouch'd hearts? What miracle turns off

The pointed thought, which from a thousand quivers

Is daily darted, and is daily shunn'd?

We stand, as in a battle, throngs on throngs

Around us falling; wounded oft ourselves;

Though bleeding with our wounds, immortal still!

We see Time's furrows on another's brow,

And Death entrench'd, preparing his assault.

How few themselves in that just mirror see!

Or, seeing, draw their inference as strong!

There death is certain; doubtful here: he must,

And soon; we may, within an age, expire. [green;

Though gray our heads, our thoughts and aims are

Like damag'd clocks, whose hand and bell dissent;

Folly sings six, while Nature points at twelve.

Absurd longevity! More, more, it cries:

More life, more wealth, more trash of every kind.

And wherefore mad for more, when relish fails?

Object, and appetite, must club for joy;

Shall folly labour hard to mend the bow,

Baubles, I mean, that strike us from without,

While Nature is relaxing every string?

Ask thought for joy; grow rich, and board within.

Think you the soul, when this life's rattles cease,

Has nothing of more manly to succeed?

Contract the taste immortal: learn e'en now

To relish what alone subsists hereafter.

Divine, or none, henceforth your joys for ever.

Of age the glory is, to wish to die.

That wish is praise, and promise; it applauds

Past life, and promises our future bliss.

What weakness see not children in their sires?

Grand-climacterical absurdities!

Gray-hair'd authority, to faults of youth,

How shocking! it makes folly thrice a fool;

And our first childhood might our last despise.

Peace and esteem is all that age can hope.

Nothing but wisdom gives the first; the last,

Nothing, but the repute of being wise.

Folly bars both; our age is quite undone.

What folly can be ranker? Like our shadows,

Our wishes lengthen, as our sun declines.

No wish should loiter, then, this side the grave.

Our hearts should leave the world, before the knell

Calls for our carcasses to mend the soil.

Enough to live in tempest, die in port;

Age should fly concourse, cover in retreat

Defects of judgment, and the will subdue;

Walk thoughtful on the silent, solemn shore

Of that vast ocean it must sail so soon;

And put good-works on board; and wait the wind

That shortly blows us into worlds unknown;

If unconsider'd too, a dreadful scene!

All should be prophets to themselves; foresee

Their future fate; their future fate foretaste;

This art would waste the bitterness of death.

The thought of death alone, the fear destroys.

A disaffection to that precious thought

Is more than midnight darkness on the soul,

Which sleeps beneath it, on a precipice,

Puff'd off by the first blast, and lost for ever.

Dost ask, Lorenzo, why so warmly prest,

By repetition hammer'd on thine ear,

The thought of death? That thought is the machine,

The grand machine! that heaves us from the dust,

And rears us into men. That thought, plied home,

Will soon reduce the ghastly precipice

O'er-hanging Hell, will soften the descent,

And gently slope our passage to the grave;

How warmly to be wish'd! What heart of flesh

Would trifle with tremendous? dare extremes?

Yawn o'er the fate of infinite? What hand,

Beyond the blackest brand of censure bold,

(To speak a language too well known to thee,)

Would at a moment give its all to chance,

And stamp the die for an eternity?

Aid me, Narcissa! aid me to keep pace

With Destiny; and ere her scissors cut

My thread of life, to break this tougher thread

Of moral death, that ties me to the world.

Sting thou my slumbering reason to send forth

A thought of observation on the foe;

To sally; and survey the rapid march

Of his ten thousand messengers to man;

Who, Jehu-like, behind him turns them all.

All accident apart, by Nature sign'd,

My warrant is gone out, though dormant yet;

Perhaps behind one moment lurks my fate.

Must I then forward only look for Death?

Backward I turn mine eye, and find him there.

Man is a self-survivor every year.

Man, like a stream, is in perpetual flow.

Death 's a destroyer of quotidian prey.
 By youth, my noon-tide, his ; my yesterday ;
 The bold invader shares the present hour.
 Each moment on the former shuts the grave.
 While man is growing, life is in decrease ;
 And cradles rock us nearer to the tomb.
 Our birth is nothing but our death begun ;
 As tapers waste that instant they take fire.

Shall we then fear, lest that should come to pass,

Which comes to pass each moment of our lives ?
 If fear we must, let that death turn us pale,
 Which murders strength and ardour ; what remains
 Should rather call on death, than dread his call.
 We partners of my fault, and my decline ! [knell
 Thoughtless of death, but when your neighbour's
 Rude visitant ! ) knocks hard at your dull sense,
 And with its thunder scarce obtains your ear !
 He death your theme, in every place and hour ;
 For longer want, ye monumental sires !
 A brother tomb to tell you ye shall die.
 That death you dread (so great is Nature's skill ! )
 Know, you shall court before you shall enjoy.

But you are learn'd ; in volumes, deep you sit ;
 In wisdom, shallow : pompous ignorance !
 Would you be still more learned than the learn'd ?
 Learn well to know how much need not be known,
 And what that knowledge, which impairs your sense.

Our needful knowledge, like our needful food,
 Unhedge'd, lies open in life's common field ;
 And bids all welcome to the vital feast.

You scorn what lies before you in the page
 Of Nature, and Experience, moral truth :
 Of indispensable, eternal fruit ;

Fruit, on which mortals feeding, turn to gods :
 And dive in science for distinguish'd names,
 Dishonest fomentation of your pride !

Linking in virtue, as you rise in fame.
 Your learning, like the lunar beam, affords
 Light, but not heat ; it leaves you undevout,
 Frozen at heart, while speculation shines.

Awake, ye curious indagators ! fond
 Of knowing all, but what avails you known.
 If you would learn Death's character, attend.

All casts of conduct, all degrees of health,
 All dies of fortune, and all dates of age,
 Together shook in his impartial urn,

Come forth at random : or, if choice is made,
 The choice is quite sarcastic, and insults
 All bold conjecture, and fond hopes of man.

What countless multitudes not only leave,
 But deeply disappoint us, by their deaths !
 Though great our sorrow, greater our surprise.

Like other tyrants, Death delights to smite,
 What, smitten, most proclaims the pride of power,
 And arbitrary nod. His joy supreme,

To bid the wretch survive the fortunate ;
 The feeble wrap th' athletic in his shroud ;
 And weeping fathers build their children's tomb :

He thine, Narcissa ! — What though short thy date ?
 Virtue, not rolling suns, the mind matures.
 That life is long, which answers life's great end.

The time that bears no fruit, deserves no name ;
 The man of wisdom is the man of years.
 In hoary youth Methusalems may die ;

How misdated on their flattering tombs !
 Narcissa's youth has lectur'd me thus far.
 And can her gaiety give counsel too ?

That, like the Jews' fam'd oracle of gems,
 Sparkles instruction ; such as throws new light,

And opens more the character of death ;
 Ill-known to thee, Lorenzo ! this thy vaunt :
 " Give Death his due, the wretched, and the old ;
 E'en let him sweep his rubbish to the grave ;
 Let him not violate kind Nature's laws,
 But own man born to live as well as die."

Wretched and old thou giv'st him ; young and gay
 He takes ; and plunder is a tyrant's joy.
 What if I prove, " That furthest from the fear,
 Are often nearest to the stroke of fate ?"

All, more than common, menaces an end.
 A blaze betokens brevity of life :

As if bright embers should emit a flame,
 Glad spirits sparkled from Narcissa's eye,
 And made youth younger, and taught life to live.

As Nature's opposites wage endless war,
 For this offence, as treason to the deep
 Inviolable stupor of his reign,

Where lust, and turbulent ambition, sleep,
 Death took swift vengeance. As he life detests,
 More life is still more odious ; and, reduc'd

By conquest, aggrandizes more his power.
 But wherefore aggrandiz'd ? By Heaven's decree,
 To plant the soul on her eternal guard,

In awful expectation of our end.
 Thus runs Death's dread commission : " Strike, but so
 As most alarms the living by the dead."

Hence stratagem delights him, and surprise,
 And cruel sport with man's securities.
 Not simple conquest, triumph is his aim : [most.

And, where least fear'd, there conquest triumphs
 This proves my bold assertion not too bold.

What are his arts to lay our fears asleep ?
 Tiberian arts his purposes wrap up
 In deep dissimulation's darkest night.

Like princes unconfest in foreign courts,
 Who travel under cover, Death assumes
 The name and look of life, and dwells among us.

He takes all shapes that serve his black designs :
 Though master of a wider empire far
 Than that o'er which the Roman eagle flew.

Like Nero, he 's a fiddler, charioteer,
 Or drives his phaeton, in female guise ;
 Quite unsuspected, till the wheel beneath,

His disarray'd oblation he devours.
 He most affects the forms least like himself,
 His slender self. Hence burly corpulence

Is his familiar wear, and sleek disguise.
 Behind the rosy bloom he loves to lurk,
 Or ambush in a smile ; or wanton dive

In dimples deep ; love's eddies, which draw in Unwary hearts, and sink them in despair.
 Such, on Narcissa's couch he loiter'd long

Unknown ; and, when detected, still was seen
 To smile ; such peace has innocence in death !
 Most happy they ! whom least his arts deceive.

One eye on Death, and one full fix'd on Heaven,
 Becomes a mortal, and immortal man ;
 Long on his wiles a piqu'd and jealous spy,

I've seen, or dreamt I saw, the tyrant dress ;
 Lay by his horrors, and put on his smiles.
 Say, Muse, for thou remember'st, call it back,

And show Lorenzo the surprising scene ;
 If 't was a dream, his genius can explain.

'T was in a circle of the gay I stood.
 Death would have enter'd ; Nature push'd him back ;
 Supported by a doctor of renown,

His point he gain'd. Then artfully dismiss
 The sage ; for Death design'd to be conceal'd.
 He gave an old vivacious usurer

His meagre aspect, and his naked bones ;
In gratitude for plumping up his prey,
A pamper'd spendthrift ; whose fantastic air,
Well-fashion'd figure, and cockaded brow,
He took in change, and underneath the pride
Of costly linen, tuck'd his filthy shroud.
His crooked bow he straighten'd to a cane ;
And hid his deadly shafts in Myra's eye.

The dreadful masquerader, thus equipt,
Out-sallies on adventures. Ask you where ?
Where is he not ? For his peculiar haunts,
Let this suffice ; sure as night follows day,
Death treads in pleasure's footsteps round the world,
When pleasure treads the paths which reason shuns.
When, against reason, riot shuts the door,
And gaiety supplies the place of sense,
Then, foremost at the banquet and the ball,
Death leads the dance, or stamps the deadly die ;
Nor ever fails the midnight bowl to crown.
Gaily carousing to his gay compeers,
Only he laughs, to see them laugh at him,
As absent far ; and when the revel burns,
When fear is banish'd, and triumphant thought,
Calling for all the joys beneath the Moon,
Against him turns the key, and bids him sup
With their progenitors — he drops his mask ;
Frowns out at full ; they start, despair, expire.

Scarce with more sudden terrour and surprise,
From his black masque of nitre, touch'd by fire,
He bursts, expands, roars, blazes, and devours.
And is not this triumphant treachery,
And more than simple conquest, in the fiend ?

And now, Lorenzo, dost thou wrap thy soul
In soft security, because unknown
Which moment is commission'd to destroy ?
In death's uncertainty thy danger lies.
Is death uncertain ? Therefore thou be fit ;
Fixt as a centinel, all eye, all ear,
All expectation of the coming foe.
Rouse, stand in arms, nor lean against thy spear ;
Lest slumber steal one moment o'er thy soul,
And fate surprise thee nodding. Watch, be strong ;
Thus give each day the merit, and renown,
Of dying well ; though doom'd but once to die.
Nor let life's period hidden, (as from most,)
Hide too from thee the precious use of life.

Early, not sudden, was Narcissa's fate.
Soon, not surprising, Death his visit paid.
Her thought went forth to meet him on his way,
Nor griety forgot it was to die :
Though fortune too, (our third and final theme,)
As an accomplice, play'd her gaudy plumes,
And every glittering gewgaw, on her sight,
To dazzle, and debauch it from its mark.
Death's dreadful advent is the mark of man ;
And every thought that misses it, is blind.
Fortune, with youth and gaiety, conspir'd
To weave a triple wreath of happiness
(If happiness on Earth) to crown her brow.
And could Death charge through such a shining shield ?

That shining shield invites the tyrant's spear,
As if to damp our elevated aims,
And strongly preach humility to man.
O how portentous is prosperity !
How, comet-like, it threatens, while it shines !
Few years but yield us proof of Death's ambition,
To cull his victims from the fairest fold,
And sheath his shafts in all the pride of life.
When flooded with abundance, purpled o'er

With recent honours, bloom'd with every bliss,
Set up in ostentation, made the gaze,
The gaudy centre, of the public eye,
When fortune thus has toss'd her child in air,
Snatcht from the covert of an humble state,
How often have I seen him dropt at once,
Our morning's envy ! and our evening's sigh !
As if her bounties were the signal given,
The flowery wreath to mark the sacrifice,
And call Death's arrows on the destin'd prey.

High fortune seems in cruel league with fate.
Ask you for what ? To give his war on man
The deeper dread, and more illustrious spoil ;
Thus to keep daring mortals more in awe,
And burns Lorenzo still for the sublime
Of life ? To hang his airy nest on high,
On the slight timber of the topmost bough,
Rockt at each breeze, and menacing a fall ?
Granting grim Death at equal distance there ;
Yet peace begins just where ambition ends.
What makes man wretched ? Happiness denied ?
Lorenzo ! no : 'T is happiness disdain'd.
She comes too meanly drest to win our smile ;
And calls herself Content, a homely name !
Our flame is transport, and content our scorn.
Ambition turns, and shuts the door against her,
And weds a tail, a tempest, in her stead ;
A tempest to warm transport near of kin.
Unknowing what our mortal state admits,
Life's modest joys we ruin, while we raise ;
And all our ecstasies are wounds to peace ;
Peace, the full portion of mankind below.

And since thy peace is dear, ambitious youth !
Of fortune fond ! as thoughtless of thy fate !
As late I drew Death's picture, to stir up
Thy wholesome fears ; now, drawn in contrast, at Gay Fortune's, thy vain hopes to reprimand.
See, high in air, the sportive goddess hangs,
Unlocks her casket, spreads her glittering ware,
And calls the giddy winds to puff abroad
Her random bounties o'er the gaping throng.
All rush rapacious ; friends o'er trodden friends ;
Sons o'er their fathers ; subjects o'er their kings ;
Priests o'er their gods ; and lovers o'er the fair,
(Still more ador'd) to snatch the golden shower.

Gold glitters most, where virtue shines no more ;
As stars from absent suns have leave to shine.
O what a precious pack of votaries
Unkennel'd from the prisons, and the stews,
Pour in, all opening in their idol's praise ;
All, ardent, eye each wafture of her hand,
And, wide expanding their voracious jaws,
Morsel on morsel swallow down unchew'd,
Untasted, through mad appetite for more ;
Gorg'd to the throat, yet lean and ravenous still.
Sagacious all, to trace the smallest game,
And bold to seize the greatest. If (blest chance !)
Court-zephyrs sweetly breathe, they lanch, they fly,
O'er just, o'er sacred, all-forbidden ground,
Drunk with the burning scent of place or power,
Stanch to the foot of lucre, till they die.

Or, if for men you take them, as I mark
Their manners, thou their various fates survey.
With aim mis-measur'd, and impetuous speed,
Some darting, strike their ardent wish far off,
Through fury to possess it : some succeed,
But stumble, and let fall the taken prize.
From some, by sudden blasts, 't is whirl'd away,
And lodg'd in bosoms that ne'er dreamt of gain.
e it sticks so close, that, when torn off,

Torn is the man, and mortal is the wound.
 Some, o'er-enamour'd of their bags, run mad,
 Groan under gold, yet weep for want of bread.
 Together some (unhappy rivals!) seize,
 And rend abundance into poverty;
 Loud croaks the raven of the law, and smiles:
 Smiles too the goddess; but smiles most at those,
 (Just victims of exorbitant desire!)
 Who perish at their own request, and, whelm'd
 Beneath her load of lavish grants, expire.
Fortune is famous for her numbers slain;
 The number small, which happiness can bear.
 Though various for awhile their fates; at last
 One curse involves them all: at Death's approach,
 All read their riches backward into loss,
 And mourn, in just proportion to their store.

And Death's approach (if orthodox my song)
 Is hasten'd by the lure of Fortune's smiles.
 And art thou still a glutton of bright gold?
 And art thou still rapacious of thy ruin?
Death loves a shining mark, a signal blow;
 A blow which, while it executes, alarms;
 And startles thousands with a single fall.
 As when some stately growth of oak, or pine,
 Which nods aloft, and proudly spreads her shade,
 The Sun's defiance, and the flock's defence;
 By the strong strokes of labouring hinds subdued,
 Loud groans her last, and, rushing from her height
 In cumbrous ruin, thunders to the ground:
 The conscious forest trembles at the shock,
 And hill, and stream, and distant dale, resound.

These high-aim'd darts of Death, and these alone,
 Should I collect, my quiver would be full.
 A quiver, which, suspended in mid air,
 Or near Heaven's Archer, in the zodiac, hung,
 (So could it be,) should draw the public eye,
 The gaze and contemplation of mankind!
 A constellation awful, yet benign,
 To guide the gay through life's tempestuous wave;
 Nor suffer them to strike the common rock,
 "From greater danger, to grow more secure,
 And, wrapt in happiness, forget their fate."

Lysander, happy past the common lot,
 Was warn'd of danger, but too gay to fear.
 He woo'd the fair Aspasia: she was kind:
 In youth, form, fortune, fame, they both were blest;
 All who knew, envied; yet in envy lov'd:
 Can fancy form more finish'd happiness?
 Fixt was the nuptial hour. Her stately dome
 Rose on the sounding beach. The glittering spires
 Float in the wave, and break against the shore:
 So break those glittering shadows, human joys.
 The faithless morning smil'd: he takes his leave,
 To re-embrace, in ecstasies, at eve.
 The rising storm forbids. The news arrives:
 Untold, she saw it in her servant's eye.
 She felt it seen (her heart was apt to feel);
 And, drown'd, without the furious ocean's aid,
 In suffocating sorrows, shares his tomb.
 Now, round the sumptuous, bridal monument,
 The guilty billows innocently roar;
 And the rough sailor, passing, drops a tear;
 A tear? — Can tears suffice? — But not for me.
 How vain our efforts! and our arts how vain!
 The distant train of thought I took to shun,
 Has thrown me on my fate — These died together;
 Happy in ruin! undivorc'd by death!
 Or ne'er to meet, or ne'er to part, is peace —
Narcissa! Pity bleeds at thought of thee.
 Yet thou wast only near me; not myself.

Survive myself? — That cures all other woe.
Narcissa lives; Philander is forgot.
 O the soft commerce! O the tender ties,
 Close-twisted with the fibres of the heart!
 Which, broken, break them; and drain off the soul
 Of human joy; and make it pain to live —
 And is it then to live? When such friends part,
 'T is the survivor dies — My heart, no more.

NIGHT THE SIXTH.

THE INFIDEL RECLAIMED.

IN TWO PARTS.

Containing the Nature, Proof, and Importance, of Immortality.

PART I.

Where, among other Things, Glory and Riches are particularly considered.

TO THE RIGHT HON. HENRY PELHAM, FIRST LORD
 COMMISSIONER OF THE TREASURY, AND CHAN-CELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Preface.

Few ages have been deeper in dispute about religion than this. The dispute about religion, and the practice of it, seldom go together. The shorter, therefore, the dispute, the better. I think it may be reduced to this single question, Is man
immortal, or is he not? If he is not, all our disputes are mere amusements, or trials of skill.
 In this case, truth, reason, religion, which give our discourses such pomp and solemnity, are (as will be shown) mere empty sound, without any meaning in them. But if man is immortal, it will behove him to be very serious about eternal consequences; or, in other words, to be truly religious. And this great fundamental truth, un-established, or unawakened in the minds of men, is, I conceive, the real source and support of all our infidelity; how remote soever the particular objections advanced may seem to be from it.
Sensible appearances affect most men much more than abstract reasonings; and we daily see bodies drop around us, but the soul is invisible. The power which inclination has over the judgment, is greater than can be well conceived by those that have not had an experience of it; and of what numbers is it the sad interest that souls should not survive! The heathen world confessed, that they rather hoped, than firmly believed, immortality!
 And how many heathens have we still amongst us! The sacred page assures us, that life and immortality is brought to light by the Gospel: but by how many is the Gospel rejected, or overlooked!
 From these considerations, and from my being accidentally privy to the sentiments of some particular persons, I have been long persuaded that most, if not all, our infidels (whatever name they take, and whatever scheme, for argument's sake, and to keep themselves in countenance, they patronise) are supported in their deplorable error,
 by some doubt of their immortality, at the bottom.
 And I am satisfied, that men once thoroughly convinced of their immortality, are not far from being Christians. For it is hard to conceive, that a man, fully conscious eternal pain or happiness will certainly be his lot, should not earnestly, and impartially, inquire after the surest means of escaping one, and securing the other. And of such an earnest and impartial inquiry, I well know the consequence.

Here, therefore, in proof of this most fundamental truth, some plain arguments are offered; arguments derived from principles which infidels admit in common with believers; arguments, which appear to me altogether irresistible; and such as, I am satisfied, will have great weight with all, who give themselves the small trouble of looking seriously into their own bosoms, and of observing, with any tolerable degree of attention, what daily passes round about them in the world. If some arguments shall, here, occur, which others have declined, they are submitted, with all deference, to better judgments in this, of all points the most important. For, as to the being of a God, that is no longer disputed; but it is undisputed for this reason only; viz. because, where the least pretence to reason is admitted, it must for ever be indisputable. And of consequence no man can be betrayed into a dispute of that nature by vanity; which has a principal share in animating our modern combatants against other articles of our belief.

SHE * (for I know not yet her name in Heaven)

Not early, like Narcissa, left the scene;
Nor sudden, like Philander. What avail?
This seeming mitigation but inflames;
This fancied medicine heightens the disease.
The longer known, the closer still she grew;
And gradual parting is a gradual death.
'T is the grim tyrant's engine, which extorts,
By tardy pressure's still increasing weight,
From hardest hearts, confession of distress.

O the long, dark approach through years of pain,
Death's gallery! (might I dare to call it so)
With dismal doubt, and sable terror, hung:
Sick hope's pale lamp, its only glimmering ray:
There, fate my melancholy walk ordain'd,
Forbid self-love itself to flatter, there.
How oft I gaz'd, prophetically sad!
How oft I saw her dead, while yet in smiles!
In smiles she sunk her grief to lessen mine. -
She spoke me comfort, and increas'd my pain.
Like powerful armies trenching at a town,
By slow, and silent, but resistless sap,
In his pale progress gently gaining ground,
Death urg'd his deadly siege; in spite of art,
Of all the balmy blessings Nature lends
To succour frail humanity. Ye stars!
(Not now first made familiar to my sight)
And thou, O Moon! bear witness; many a night
He tore the pillow from beneath my head,
Tied down by sore attention to the shock,
By ceaseless depredations on a life
Dearer than that he left me. Dreadful post
Of observation! darker every hour!
Less dread the day that drove me to the brink,
And pointed at eternity below;
When my soul shuddered at futurity;
When, on a moment's point, th' important die,
Of life and death spun doubtful, ere it fell,
And turn'd up life; my title to more woe.

* Referring to Night V.

But why more woe? More comfort let it be,
Nothing is dead, but that which wish'd to die;
Nothing is dead, but wretchedness and pain;
Nothing is dead, but what encumber'd, gall'd,
Block'd up the pass, and barr'd from real life.
Where dwells that wish most ardent of the wise?
Too dark the Sun to see it; highest stars
Too low to reach it; Death, great Death alone,
O'er stars and Sun triumphant, lands us there.

Nor dreadful our transition; though the mind,
An artist at creating self-alarms,
Rich in expedients for inquietude,
Is prone to paint it dreadful. Who can take
Death's portrait true? The tyrant never saw.
Our sketch all random strokes, conjecture all;
Close shuts the grave, nor tells one single tale.
Death, and his image rising in the brain,
Bear faint resemblance; never are alike;
Fear shakes the pencil; Fancy loves excess;
Dark Ignorance is lavish of her shades:
And these the formidable picture draw.

But grant the worst; 't is past; new prospects rise;
And drop a veil eternal o'er her tomb.
Far other views our contemplation claim,
Views that o'erpay the rigours of our life;
Views that suspend our agonies in death.
Wrapt in the thought of immortality,
Wrapt in the single, the triumphant thought!
Long life might lapse, age unperceiv'd come on;
And find the soul unsated with her theme.
Its nature, proof, importance, fire my song.
O that my song could emulate my soul!
Like her, immortal. No! — the soul disdains
A mark so mean; far nobler hope inflames;
If endless ages can outweigh an hour,
Let not the laurel, but the palm, inspire.

Thy nature, immortality! who knows?
And yet who knows it not? It is but life
In stronger thread of brighter colour spun,
And spun for ever; dipt by cruel fate
In Stygian dye, how black, how brittle here!
How short our correspondence with the Sun!
And while it lasts, inglorious! Our best deeds,
How wanting in their weight! Our highest joys,
Small cordials to support us in our pain,
And give us strength to suffer. But how great,
To mingle interests, converse amities,
With all the sons of reason, scatter'd wide
Through habitable space, wherever born,
Howe'er endow'd! To live free citizens
Of universal Nature! To lay hold
By more than feeble faith on the Supreme!
To call Heaven's rich unfathomable mines
(Mines, which support archangels in their state)
Our own! To rise in science, as in bliss,
Initiate in the secrets of the skies!
To read creation; read its mighty plan
In the bare bosom of the Deity!
The plan, and execution, to collate!
To see, before each glance of piercing thought,
All cloud, all shadow, blown remote; and leave
No mystery — but that of love divine,
Which lifts us on the seraph's flaming wing,
From Earth's aceldama, this field of blood,
Of inward anguish, and of outward ill,
From darkness, and from dust, to such a scene!
Love's element! true joy's illustrious home!
From Earth's sad contrast (now deplor'd) more fair!
ite vicissitude of fate!
n of our blackest hour!

Lorenzo, these are thoughts that make man, man,
 The wise illumine, aggrandize the great.
 How great, (while yet we tread the kindred clod,
 And every moment fear to sink beneath
 The clod we tread; soon trodden by our sons,)
 How great, in the wild whirl of time's pursuits,
 To stop, and pause, involv'd in high presage,
 Through the long vista of a thousand years,
 To stand contemplating our distant selves,
 As in a magnifying mirror seen,
 Enlarg'd, ennobled, elevate, divine!
 To prophesy our own futurities;
 To gaze in thought on what all thought transcends!
 To talk, with fellow-candidates, of joys
 As far beyond conception as desert,
 Ourselves th' astonish'd talkers, and the tale!

Lorenzo, swells thy bosom at the thought?
 The swell becomes thee: 't is an honest pride.
 Revere thyself; — and yet thyself despise.
 His nature no man can o'er-rate; and none
 Can under-rate his merit. Take good heed,
 Nor there be modest, where thou should'st be proud;
 That almost universal error shun.

How just our pride, when we behold those heights!
 Not those ambition paints in air, but those
 Reason points out, and ardent virtue gains;
 And angels emulate: our pride how just! [quit
 When mount we? When these shackles cast? When
 This cell of the creation? this small nest,
 Stuck in a corner of the universe,
 Wrapt up in fleecy cloud, and fine-spun air?
 Fine-spun to sense; but gross and feculent
 To souls celestial; souls ordain'd to breathe
 Ambrosial gales, and drink a purer sky;
 Greatly triumphant on time's further shore,
 Where virtue reigns, enrich'd with full arrears;
 While pomp imperial begs an alms of peace.

In empire high, or in proud science deep,
 Ye born of Earth! on what can you confer,
 With half the dignity, with half the gain,
 The gust, the glow of rational delight,
 As on this theme, which angels praise and share?
 Man's fates and favours are a theme in Heaven.

What wretched repetition cloy's us here!
 What periodic potions for the sick!
 Distemper'd bodies! and distemper'd minds!
 In an eternity, what scenes shall strike!
 Adventures thicken! novelties surprise!
 What webs of wonder shall unravel, there!
 What full day pour on all the paths of Heaven,
 And light th' Almighty's footsteps in the deep!
 How shall the blessed day of our discharge
 Unwind, at once, the labyrinths of fate,
 And straighten its inextricable maze!

If inextinguishable thirst in man
 To know; how rich, how full, our banquet there!
 There, not the moral world alone unfolds;
 The world material, lately seen in shades,
 And, in those shades, by fragments only seen,
 And seen those fragments by the labouring eye,
 Unbroken, then, illustrious and entire,
 Its ample sphere, its universal frame,
 In full dimensions, swells to the survey;
 And enters, at one glance, the ravisht sight.
 From some superior point (where, who can tell?
 Suffice it, 't is a point where gods reside)
 How shall the stranger man's illumin'd eye,
 In the vast ocean of unbounded space,
 Behold an infinite of floating worlds
 Divide the crystal waves of ether pure,

In endless voyage, without port? The least
 Of these disseminated orbs, how great!
 Great as they are, what numbers these surpass,
 Huge, as leviathan, to that small race,
 Those twinkling multitudes of little life,
 He swallows unperceiv'd? Stupendous these!
 Yet what are these stupendous to the whole!
 As particles, as atoms ill perceiv'd;
 As circulating globules in our veins;
 So vast the plan. Fecundity divine!
 Exuberant source! perhaps, I wrong thee still.

If admiration is a source of joy,
 What transport hence! yet this the least in Heaven.
 What this to that illustrious robe he wears,
 Who toss'd this mass of wonders from his hand,
 A specimen, an earnest of his power?
 'T is to that glory, whence all glory flows,
 As the mead's meanest floweret to the Sun,
 Which gave it birth. But what, this Sun of Heaven?
 This bliss supreme of the supremely blest?
 Death, only Death, the question can resolve.
 By Death, cheap-bought th' ideas of our joy;
 The bare ideas! solid happiness
 So distant from its shadow chas'd below.

And chase we still the phantom through the fire,
 O'er bog, and brake, and precipice, till death?
 And toil we still for sublunary pay?
 Defy the dangers of the field and flood,
 Or, spider-like, spin out our precious all,
 Our more than vitals spin (if no regard
 To great futurity) in curious webs
 Of subtle thought, and exquisite design;
 (Fine net-work of the brain!) to catch a fly?
 The momentary buzz of vain renown!
 A name; a mortal immortality!

Or (meaner still!) instead of grasping air,
 For sordid lucre, plunge we in the mire?
 Drudge, sweat, through every shame, for every gain,
 For vile contaminating trash; throw up
 Our hope in Heaven, our dignity with man?
 And deify the dirt, matur'd to gold?
 Ambition, avarice; the two demons these,
 Which goad through every slough our human herd,
 Hard-travell'd from the cradle to the grave.
 How low the wretches stoop! How steep they climb!
 These demons burn mankind; but most possess
 Lorenzo's bosom, and turn out the skies.

Is it in time to hide eternity?
 And why not in an atom on the shore
 To cover ocean? or a mote, the Sun?
 Glory and wealth! have they this blinding power?
 What if to them I prove Lorenzo blind?
 Would it surprise thee? Be thou then surpris'd;
 Thou neither know'st; their nature learn from me.

Mark well, as foreign as these subjects seem,
 What close connection ties them to my theme.

First, what is true ambition? The pursuit
 Of glory, nothing less than man can share.
 Were they as vain as gaudy-minded man,
 As flatulent with fumes of self-applause,
 Their arts and conquests animals might boast,
 And claim their laurel crowns, as well as we;
 But not celestial. Here we stand alone;
 As in our form, distinct, pre-eminent;
 If prone in thought, our stature is our shame:
 And man should blush, his forehead meets the skies.
 The visible and present are for brutes,
 A slender portion! and a narrow bound!
 These reason, with an energy divine,
 O'erleaps; and claims the future and unseen;

The vast unseen! the future fathomless!
 When the great soul buoys up to this high point,
 Leaving gross Nature's sediments below,
 Then, and then only, Adam's offspring quits
 The sage and hero of the fields and woods,
 Asserts his rank, and rises into man.
This is ambition: this is human fire.

Can parts or place (two bold pretenders!) make
 Lorenzo great, and pluck him from the throng?

Genius and art, ambition's boasted wings,
 Our boast but ill deserve. A feeble aid!
 Dedalian enginery! If these alone
 Assist our flight, fame's flight is glory's fall.
 Heart-merit wanting, mount we ne'er so high,
 Our height is but the gibbet of our name.
 A celebrated wretch, when I behold;
 When I behold a genius bright, and base,
 Of towering talents, and terrestrial aims;
 Methinks I see, as thrown from her high sphere,
 The glorious fragments of a soul immortal,
 With rubbish mix'd, and glittering in the dust.
 Struck at the splendid, melancholy sight,
 At once compassion soft, and envy, rise —
 But wherefore envy? Talents, angel-bright,
 If wanting worth, are shining instruments
 In false ambition's hand, to finish faults
 Illustrious, and give infamy renown.

Great ill is an achievement of great powers.
 Plain sense but rarely leads us far astray.
Reason the means, affections choose our end;
 Means have no merit, if our end amiss.
 If wrong our hearts, our heads are right in vain;
 What is a Pelham's head, to Pelham's heart?
 Hearts are proprietors of all applause.
 Right ends, and means, make wisdom: worldly-wise
 Is but half-witted, at its highest praise.

Let genius then despair to make thee great;
 Nor flatter station. What is station high?
 'T is a proud mendicant; it boasts, and begs;
 It begs an alms of homage from the throng,
 And oft the throng denies its charity.
 Monarchs and ministers are awful names!
 Whoever wear them, challenge our devoir.
 Religion, public order, both exact
 External homage, and a supple knee,
 To beings pompously set up, to serve
 The meanest slave; all more is merit's due,
 Her sacred and inviolable right,
 Nor ever paid the monarch, but the man.
 Our hearts ne'er bow but to superior worth;
 Nor ever fail of their allegiance there.
 Fools, indeed, drop the man in their account,
 And vote the mantle into majesty.
 Let the small savage boast his silver fur;
 His royal robe unborrow'd, and unbought,
 His own, descending fairly from his sires.
 Shall man be proud to wear his livery,
 And souls in ermin scorn a soul without?
 Can place or lessen us, or aggrandize?
 Pygmies are pygmies still, though perch'd on alps;
 And pyramids are pyramids in vales.
 Each man makes his own stature, builds himself:
 Virtue alone outbuilds the pyramids:
 Her monuments shall last, when Egypt's fall.
 Of these sure truths dost thou demand the cause?
 The cause is lodg'd in immortality.
 Hear, and assent. Thy bosom burns for power;
 What station charms thee? I'll instal
 'T is thine. And art thou greater
 Then thou before wast something!

Has thy new post betray'd thee into pride?
 That treacherous pride betrays the dignity;
 That pride defames humanity, and calls
 The being mean, which staffs or strings can raise.
 That pride, like hooded hawks, in darkness soars,
 From blindness bold, and towering to the skies.
 'T is born of ignorance, which knows not man;
 An angel's second; nor his second, long.
 A Nero quitting his imperial throne,
 And courting glory from the tinkling string,
 But faintly shadows an immortal soul,
 With empire's self, to pride, or rapture, fir'd.
 If nobler motives minister no cure,
 E'en vanity forbids thee to be vain.

High worth is elevated place: 't is more;
 It makes the post stand candidate for thee;
 Makes more than monarchs, makes an honest man;
 Though no exchequer it commands, 't is wealth;
 And though it wears no ribband, 't is renown;
 Renown, that would not quit thee, though disgrac'd,
 Nor leave thee pendant on a master's smile.
Other ambition Nature interdicts;
 Nature proclaims it most absurd in man,
 By pointing at his origin, and end;
 Milk, and a swathe, at first, his whole demand;
 His whole domain, at last, a turf, or stone;
 To whom, between, a world may seem too small.

Souls truly great dart forward on the wing
 Of just ambition, to the grand result:
 The curtains fall: there, see the buskin'd chief
 Unshod behind this momentary scene;
 Reduc'd to his own stature, low or high,
 As vice or virtue, sinks him, or sublimes;
 And laugh at this fantastic mummery,
 This antic prelude of grotesque events,
 Where dwarfs are often stilted, and betray
 A littleness of soul by worlds o'er-run,
 And nations laid in blood. Dread sacrifice
 To Christian pride! which had with horror shock'd
 The darkest Pagans offer'd to their gods.

O thou most Christian enemy to peace;
 Again in arms? Again provoking fate?
 That prince, and that alone, is truly great,
 Who draws the sword reluctant, gladly sheathes;
 On empire builds what empire far outweighs,
 And makes his throne a scaffold to the skies.

Why this so rare? Because forgot of all
 The day of death; that venerable day,
 Which sits as judge; that day, which shall pronounce
 On all our days, absolve them, or condemn.
 Lorenzo, never shut thy thought against it;
 Be levees ne'er so full, afford it room,
 And give it audience in the cabinet.
 That friend consulted, flatteries apart,
 Will tell thee fair, if thou art great, or mean.

To dote on aught may leave us, or be left,
 Is that ambition? Then let flames descend,
 Point to the centre their inverted spires,
 And learn humiliation from a soul,
 Which boasts her lineage from celestial fire.
 Yet these are they the world pronounces wise;
 The world which cancels Nature's right and wrong,
 And casts new wisdom: e'en the grave man lends
 His solemn face, to countenance the coin.
 Wisdom for parts is madness for the whole.
 This stamps the paradox, and gives us leave
 To call the wisest weak, the richest poor,
 The most ambitious, unambitious, mean;
 Triumph, mean; and abject on a throne.
 'Tis ambition can make it less than mad in man,

To put forth all his ardour, all his art,
And give his soul her full unbounded flight,
But reaching him, who gave her wings to fly.
When blind ambition quite mistakes her road,
And downward pores, for that which shines above,
Substantial happiness, and true renown ;
Then, like an idiot gazing on the brook,
We leap at stars, and fasten in the mud ;
At glory grasp, and sink in infamy.

Ambition ! powerful source of good and ill !
Thy strength in man, like length of wing in birds,
When disengag'd from Earth, with greater ease,
And swifter flight, transports us to the skies ;
By toys entangled, or in gilt bemir'd,
It turns a curse ; it is our chain, and scourge,
In this dark dungeon, where confin'd we lie,
Close grated by the sordid bars of sense ;
All prospect of eternity shut out ;
And, but for execution, ne'er set free.

With error in ambition justly charged,
Find we Lorenzo wiser in his wealth ?
What if thy rental I reform ? and draw
An inventory new to set thee right ?
Where thy true treasure ? Gold says, " Not in me : "
And, " Not in me," the diamond. Gold is poor ;
India's insolvent ; seek it in thyself,
Seek in thy naked self, and find it there ;
In being so descended, form'd, endow'd ;
Sky-born, sky-guided, sky-returning race !
Erect, immortal, rational, divine !
In senses which inherit Earth, and Heavens ;
Enjoy the various riches Nature yields ;
Far nobler ! give the riches they enjoy ;
Give taste to fruits ; and harmony to groves ;
Their radiant beams to gold, and gold's bright fire ;
Take in, at once, the landscape of the world,
At a small inlet, which a grain might close,
And half-create the wondrous world they see.
Our senses, as our reason, are divine.
But for the magic organ's powerful charm,
Earth were a rude, uncolour'd chaos, still.

Objects are but th' occasion ; ours th' exploit ;
Ours is the cloth, the pencil, and the paint,
Which Nature's admirable picture draws ;
And beautifies creation's ample dome.
Like Milton's Eve, when gazing on the lake,
Man makes the matchless image, man admires.
Say, then, shall man, his thoughts all sent abroad,
Superior wonders in himself forgot,
His admiration waste on objects round,
When Heaven makes him the soul of all he sees ?
Absurd ! not rare ! so great, so mean, is man.
What wealth in senses such as these ! What wealth
In fancy, fir'd to form a fairer scene
Than sense surveys ! In memory's firm record,
Which, should it perish, could this world recall
From the dark shadows of o'erwhelming years !
In colours fresh, originally bright,
Preserve its portrait, and report its fate !
What wealth in intellect, that sovereign power,
Which sense and fancy summons to the bar ;
Interrogates, approves, or reprehends ;
And from the mass those underlings import,
From their materials sifted, and refin'd,
And in truth's balance accurately weigh'd,
Forms art, and science, government, and law ;
The solid basis, and the beauteous frame,
The vitals, and the grace of civil life !
And manners (and exception !) set aside,
Strikes out, with master hand, a copy fair

Of his idea, whose indulgent thought
Long, long, ere chaos teem'd, plann'd human bliss.
What wealth in souls that soar, dive, range
around,

Disdaining limit, or from place, or time ;
And hear at once, in thought extensive, hear
Th' Almighty fiat, and the trumpet's sound !
Bold, on creation's outside walk, and view
What was, and is, and more than e'er shall be ;
Commanding, with omnipotence of thought,
Creations new in fancy's field to rise !
Souls, that can grasp whate'er th' Almighty made,
And wander wild through things impossible !
What wealth, in faculties of endless growth,
In quenchless passions violent to crave,
In liberty to choose, in power to reach,
And in duration (how thy riches rise !)
Duration to perpetuate — boundless bliss !

Ask you, what power resides in feeble man
That bliss to gain ? Is virtue's, then, unknown ?
Virtue, our present peace, our future prize.
Man's unprecarious, natural estate,
Improveable at will, in virtue lies ;
Its tenure sure ; its income is divine.

High-built abundance, heap on heap ! for what ?
To breed new wants, and beggar us the more ;
Then make a richer scramble for the throng ?
Soon as this feeble pulse, which leaps so long
Almost by miracle, is tir'd with play,
Like rubbish from dislodging engines thrown,
Our magazines of hoarded trifles fly ;
Fly diverse ; fly to foreigners, to foes ;
New masters court, and call the former fool
(How justly !) for dependence on their stay.
Wide scatter, first, our playthings ; then, our dust.

Dost court abundance for the sake of peace ?
Learn, and lament thy self-defeated scheme :
Riches enable to be richer still ;
And, richer still, what mortal can resist ?
Thus wealth (a cruel task-master !) enjoins
New toils, succeeding toils, an endless train !
And murders peace, which taught it first to shine.
The poor are half as wretched as the rich ;
Whose proud and painful privilege it is,
At once, to bear a double load of woe ;
To feel the stings of envy, and of want,
Outrageous want ! both Indies cannot cure.

A competence is vital to content.
Much wealth is corpulence, if not disease ;
Sick, or encumber'd, is our happiness.
A competence is all we can enjoy.
O be content, where Heaven can give no more !
More, like a flash of water from a lock,
Quickens our spirits' movement for an hour ;
But soon its force is spent, nor rise our joys
Above our native temper's common stream.
Hence disappointment lurks in every prize,
As bees in flowers ; and stings us with success.

The rich man, who denies it, proudly feigns ;
Nor knows the wise are privy to the lie.
Much learning shows how little mortals know ;
Much wealth, how little worldlings can enjoy ;
At best, it babies us with endless toys,
And keeps us children till we drop to dust.
As monkeys at a mirror stand amaz'd,
They fail to find what they so plainly see ;
Thus men, in shining riches, see the face
Of happiness, nor know it is a shade ;
But gaze, and touch, and peep, and peep again,
And wish, and wonder it is absent still.

How few can rescue opulence from want!
 Who lives to nature, rarely can be poor;
 Who lives to fancy, never can be rich.
 Poor is the man in debt; the man of gold,
 In debt to fortune, trembles at her power.
 The man of reason smiles at her, and death.
 O what a patrimony this! A being
 Of such inherent strength and majesty,
 Not worlds possess can raise it; worlds destroy'd
 Can't injure; which holds on its glorious course,
 When thine, O Nature! ends; too blest to mourn
 Creation's obsequies. What treasure, this!
 The monarch is a beggar to the man.

Immortal! Ages past, yet nothing gone!
 More without eve! a race without a goal!
 Unshorten'd by progression infinite!
 Futurity for ever future! Life
 Beginning still where computation ends!

'T is the description of a Deity!

'T is the description of the meanest slave:

The meanest slave dares then Lorenzo scorn?

The meanest slave thy sovereign glory shares.

Proud youth! fastidious of the lower world!

Man's lawful pride includes humility:

Stoops to the lowest; is too great to find

Inferiors; all immortal! brothers all!

Proprietors eternal of thy love.

Immortal! What can strike the seas so strong,

As this the soul? It thunders to the thought;

Reason amazes; gratitude o'erwhelms;

No more we slumber on the brink of fate;

Rous'd at the sound, th' exulting soul ascends,

And breathes her native air; an air that feeds

Ambitions high, and fans ethereal fires;

Quick kindles all that is divine within us;

Nor leaves one loitering thought beneath the stars.

Has not Lorenzo's bosom caught the flame?

Immortal! Were but one immortal, how

Would others envy! How would thrones adore!

Because 't is common, is the blessing lost?

How this ties up the bounteous hand of Heaven!

O vain, vain, vain, all else! Eternity!

A glorious, and a needful refuge, that,

From vile imprisonment, in object views.

'T is immortality, 't is that alone,

Amid life's pains, abatement, emptiness,

The soul can comfort, elevate, and fill.

That only, and that amply, this performs;

Lifts us above life's pains, her joys above;

Their terror thaws, and thaws their lustre loss;

Eternity depending covers all;

Eternity depending all achieves;

Sets Earth at distance; casts her into shades;

Blends her distinctions; abrogates her powers;

The low, the lofty, joyous, and severe,

Fortune's dread frowns, and fascinating smiles,

Make one promiscuous and neglected heap,

The man beneath; if I may call him man,

Whom immortality's full force inspires.

Nothing terrestrial touches his high thought;

Suns shine unseen, and thunders roll unheard,

By minds quite conscious of their high descent,

Their present province, and their future prize;

Divinely darting upward every wish,

Warm on the wing, in glorious absence lost!

Doubt you this truth? Why labours your belief?

If Earth's whole orb by some due distanc'd eye

Were seen at once, her towering Alps would sink

And levell'd Atlas leave an even sphere.

Thus Earth, and all that earthly minds admire,

Is swallow'd in Eternity's vast round.

To that stupendous view when souls awake,

So large of late, so mountainous to men,

Time's toys subside; and equal all below.

Enthusiastic, this? Then all are weak,

But rank enthusiasts. To this godlike height

Some souls have soar'd; or martyrs ne'er had hind

And all may do, what has by men been done.

Who, beaten by these sublunary storms,

Boundless, interminable joys can weigh,

Unraptur'd, unexalted, uninflam'd?

What slave unblest, who from to-morrow's dawn

Expects an empire? He forgets his chain,

And, thron'd in thought, his ahorn sceptre wags

And what a sceptre waits us! what a throne!

Her own immense appointments to compute,

Or comprehend her high prerogatives,

In this her dark minority, how tails,

How vainly pants, the human soul divine!

The great the bounty seems for earthly joy;

What heart but trembles at so strange a bliss?

In spite of all the truths the Muse has sung,

Ne'er to be priz'd enough! enough revolv'd!

Are there who wrap the world so close about them,

They see no further than the clouds; and dwell

On heedless Vanity's fantastic toe,

Till, stumbling at a straw, in their career, (sing)

Headlong they plunge, where end both dance and

Are there, Lorenzo? Is it possible?

Are there on Earth (let me not call them men)

Who lodge a soul immortal in their breasts;

Unconscious as the mountain of its ore;

Or rock, of its inestimable gem?

When rocks shall melt, and mountains vanish, how

Shall know their treasure; treasure, then, no man.

Are there (still more amazing!) who resist

The rising thought? who smother, in its birth,

The glorious truth? who struggle to be brutes?

Who through this bosom-barrier burst their way,

And, with revers'd ambition, strive to sink?

Who labour downwards through th' opposing power

Of instinct, reason, and the world against them,

To dismal hopes, and shelter in the shock

Of endless night; night darker than the grave's!

Who fight the proofs of immortality?

With horrid seal, and execrable arts,

Work all their engines, level their black fires,

To blot from man this attribute divine,

(Than vital blood far dearer to the wise,)

Blasphemers, and rank atheists to shameless!

To contradict them, see all Nature rise!

What object, what event, the Moon beneath,

But argues, or endears, an after-acres?

To reason proves, or weds it to desire?

All things proclaim it needful; some advance

One precious step beyond, and prove it sure.

A thousand arguments swarm round my pen.

From Heaven, and Earth, and man.

By Nature, as her common habit,

So pressing Providence a truth to

Which truth untaught, all other

Thou! whose all-provident

Whose hand direct

Eternity's inhabitants

As a

Of moment infinite! but relish'd most
By those who love thee most, who most adore.

Nature, thy daughter, ever-changing birth
Of thee the great Inevitable, to man
Speaks wisdom: is his oracle supreme;
And he who most consults her, is most wise.
Lorenzo, to this heavenly Delphos haste;
And come back all-immortal; all-divine:
Look Nature through, 't is revelation all; [night
All change; no death. Day follows night, and
The dying day; stars rise, and set, and rise;
Earth takes th' example. See, the Summer gay,
With her green chaplet, and ambrosial flowers,
Droops into pallid Autumn: Winter gray,
Horrid with frost, and turbulent with storm,
Blows Autumn, and his golden fruits, away:
Then melts into the Spring: soft Spring, with breath
Favonian, from warm chambers of the south,
Recalls the first. All, to re-flourish, fades;
As in a wheel, all sinks, to re-ascend:
Emblems of man, who passes, not expires.

With this minute distinction, emblems just,
Nature revolves, but man advances; both
Eternal, that a circle, this a line.
That gravitates, this soars. Th' aspiring soul,
Ardent, and tremulous, like flame, ascends,
Zeal and ardour her wings, to Heaven.
The world of matter, with its various forms,
All dies into new life. Life born from death
Rolls the vast mass, and shall for ever roll.
No single atom, once in being, lost,
With change of counsel charges the Most High.

What hence infers Lorenzo? Can it be?
Matter immortal? And shall spirit die?
Above the nobler, shall less noble rise?
Shall man alone, for whom all else revives,
No resurrection know? Shall man alone,
Imperial man! be sown in barren ground,
Less privileg'd than grain, on which he feeds?
Is man, in whom alone is power to prize
The bliss of being, or with previous pain
Deplore its period, by the spleen of fate
Severely doom'd death's single unredeem'd?
If Nature's revolution speaks aloud,
In her gradation, hear her louder still.
Look Nature through, 't is next gradation all.
By what minute degrees her scale ascends!
Each middle nature join'd at each extreme,
To that above it join'd, to that beneath.
Parts, into parts reciprocally shot,
Abhor divorce: what love of union reigns!
Here, dormant matter waits a call to life; [sense;
Half-life, half-death, join'd there; here life and
There, sense from reason steals a glimmering ray;
Reason shines out in man. But how preserv'd
The chain unbroken upward, to the realms
Of incorporeal life? those realms of bliss
Where death hath no dominion? Gr-
Half-mortal, half-immortal; earthy,
And part ethereal; grant the soul
Eternal; or in man the series ends
Wide yawns the gap; connection
Check'd reason has
Striving to climb,
A scheme, analog
Analogy, man's in An

Renounce his reason, rather than renounce
The dust belov'd, and run the risk of Heaven?
O what indignity to deathless souls!
What treason to the majesty of man!
Of man immortal! Hear the lofty style:
"If so decreed, th' Almighty Will be done.
Let Earth dissolve, yon ponderous orbs descend,
And grind us into dust. The soul is safe;
The man emerges; mounts above the wreck,
As towering flame from Nature's funeral pyre;
O'er devastation, as a gainer, smiles;
His charter, his inviolable rights,
Well pleas'd to learn from thunder's impotence,
Death's pointless darts, and Hell's defeated storms."

But these chimeras touch not thee, Lorenzo!
The glories of the world thy sevenfold shield.
Other ambition than of crowns in air,
And superlunary felicities,
Thy bosom warm. I'll cool it, if I can;
And turn those glories that enchant, against thee.
What ties thee to this life, proclaims the next.
If wise, the cause that wounds thee is thy cure.
Come, my ambitious! let us mount together
(To mount, Lorenzo never can refuse);
And from the clouds, where pride delights to dwell,
Look down on Earth. — What see'st thou? Wondrous things!

Terrestrial wonders, that eclipse the skies.
What lengths of labour'd lands! what loaded seas!
Loaded by man for pleasure, wealth, or war!
Seas, winds, and planets, into service brought,
His art acknowledge, and promote his ends.
Nor can th' eternal rocks his will withstand:
What level'd mountains! and what lifted vales!
O'er vales and mountains sumptuous cities swell,
And gild our landscape with their glittering spires.
Some mid the wondering waves majestic rise;
And Neptune holds a mirror to their charms.
Far greater still! (what cannot mortal might?)
See, wide dominions ravish'd from the deep!
The narrow'd deep with indignation foams.
Or southward turn; to delicate and grand,
The finer arts there ripen in the sun.
How the tall temples, as to meet their gods,
Ascend the skies! the proud triumphal arch
Shows us half Heaven beneath its ample bend.
High through mid-air, Aere, streams are taught to flow;

Whole rivers, there, laid by in basins, sleep.
Here, plains turn oceans; there, vast oceans join
Through kingdoms channell'd deep from shore to shore!

And chang'd creation takes its face from man.
Beats thy brave breast for formidable scenes,
Where fame and empire wait upon the sword?
See fields in blood; hear naval thunders rise;
Britannia's voice! that awes the world to peace.

"How yon enormous mole, projecting, breaks mid-sea, furious waves! Their roar amidst, speaks the Deity, and says, "O main!
"ar, nor farther; new restraints obey."
disembowell'd! measur'd are the skies!
detected in their deep recess!
widens! vanquish'd Nature yields!
s are extorted! art prevails!
ment of genius, spirit, power!

Earth's cover'd o'er with proofs of souls immortal;
And proofs of immortality forgot.

To flatter thy grand foible, I confess,
These are ambition's works: and these are great:
But this, the least immortal souls can do;
Transcend them all.—But what can these transcend?
Dost ask me what?—One sigh for the distress.
What then for infidels? A deeper sigh.
'Tis moral grandeur makes the mighty man:
How little they, who think aught great below!
All our ambitions Death defeats, but one;
And that it crowns. Here cease we: but, ere long,
More powerful proof shall take the field against thee,
Stronger than death, and smiling at the tomb.

PART II.

Containing the Nature, Proof, and Importance, of Immortality.

PREFACE.

As we are at war with the power, it were well if we were at war with the manners, of France. A land of levity is a land of guilt. A serious mind is the native soil of every virtue; and the single character that does true honour to mankind. The soul's immortality has been the favourite theme with the serious of all ages. Nor is it strange; it is a subject by far the most interesting, and important, that can enter the mind of man. Of highest moment this subject always was and always will be. Yet this its highest moment seems to admit of increase, at this day; a sort of occasional importance is superadded to the natural weight of it; if that opinion which is advanced in the preface to the preceding Night, be just. It is there supposed, that all our infidels, whatever scheme, for argument's sake, and to keep themselves in countenance, they patronize, are betrayed into their deplorable error, by some doubts of their immortality, at the bottom. And the more I consider this point, the more I am persuaded of the truth of that opinion. Though the distrust of a futurity is a strange error; yet it is an error into which bad men may naturally be distressed. For it is impossible to bid defiance to final ruin, without some refuge in imagination, some presumption of escape. And what presumption is there? There are but two in nature; but two, within the compass of human thought. And these are—That either God will not, or can not punish. Considering the divine attributes, the first is too gross to be digested by our strongest wishes. And since omnipotence is as much a divine attribute as holiness, that God cannot punish, is as absurd a supposition as the former. God certainly can punish as long as wicked men exist. In non-existence, therefore, is their only refuge; and, consequently, non-existence is their strongest wish. And strong wishes have a strange influence on our opinions; they bias the judgment in a manner, almost incredible. And since on this member of their alternative, there are some very small appearances in their favour, and none at all on the other, they catch at this reed, they lay hold on this chimera, to save themselves from the shock and horror of an immediate and absolute despair.

On reviewing my subject, by the light which this argument, and others of like tendency, threw upon it, I was more inclined than ever to pursue it, as it appeared to me to strike directly at the main root of all our infidelity. In the following pages it is, accordingly, pursued at large; and some arguments for immortality, new at least to me, are ventured on in them. There also the writer has made an attempt to set the gross absurdities and horrors of annihilation in a fuller and more affecting view, than is (I think) to be met with elsewhere.

The gentlemen, for whose sake this attempt was chiefly made, profess great admiration for the wisdom of heathen antiquity: what pity it is they are not sincere! If they were sincere, how would it mortify them to consider, with what contempt and abhorrence their notions would have been received by those whom they so much admire! What degree of contempt and abhorrence would fall to their share, may be conjectured by the following matter of fact (in my opinion) extremely memorable. Of all their heathen worthies, Socrates (it is well known) was the most guarded, dispassionate, and composed: yet this great master of temper was angry; and angry at his last hour; and angry with his friend; and angry for what deserved acknowledgment; angry for a right and tender instance of true friendship towards him. Is not this surprising? What could be the cause? The cause was for his honour; it was a truly noble, though, perhaps, a too punctilious regard for immortality: for, his friend asking him, with such an affectionate concern as became a friend, "Where he should deposit his remains?" it was resented by Socrates as implying a dishonourable supposition, that he could be so mean, as to have a regard for any thing, even in himself, that was not immortal.

This fact, well considered, would make our infidels withdraw their admiration from Socrates; or make them endeavour, by their imitation of this illustrious example, to share his glory: and consequently, it would incline them to peruse the following pages with candour and impartiality: which is all I desire; and that, for their sakes: for I am persuaded, that an unprejudiced infidel must, necessarily, receive some advantageous impressions from them.

Contents of the Seventh Night.

In the Sixth Night, arguments were drawn from Nature, in proof of immortality: here, others are drawn from man: from his discontent; from his passions and powers; from the gradual growth of reason; from his fear of death; from the nature of hope, and of virtue; from knowledge and love, as being the most essential properties of the soul; from the order of creation; from the nature of ambition; avarice; pleasure. A digression on the grandeur of the passions. Immortality alone renders our present state intelligible. An objection from the Stoic's disbelief of immortality answered. Endless questions unresolvable, but on supposition of our immortality. The natural, most melancholy, and pathetic complaint of a worthy man, under the persuasion of no futurity. The gross absurdities and horrors of annihilation urged home on Lorenzo. The soul's vast importance; from whence it arises. The difficulty of being an infidel. The infamy, the cause, and the character of an infidel state. What true free-thinking is. The necessary punishment of the false. Man's ruin is from himself. An infidel accuses himself of guilt, and hypocrisy; and that of the worst sort. His obligation to Christians. What danger he incurs by virtue. Vice recommended to him. His high pretences to virtue and benevolence exploded. The conclusion, on the nature of faith, reason, and hope, with an apology for this attempt.

HEAVEN gives the needful, but neglected, call. That day, what hour, but knocks at human hearts, to wake the soul to sense of future scenes? Heavens stand, like Mercuries, in every way, and kindly point us to our journey's end. Hope, who couldst make immortals! art thou dead? give thee joy: nor will I take my leave; soon to follow. Man but dives in death; rises from the Sun, in fairer day to rise; the grave, his subterranean road to bliss. Heaven, infinite indulgence plann'd it so; through various parts our glorious story runs; Time gives the preface, endless age unrolls the volume (ne'er unroll'd!) of human fate. This, Earth and skies already * have proclaim'd. the world's a prophecy of worlds to come; and who, what God fortels (who speaks in things, still louder than in words) shall dare deny? Nature's arguments appear too weak, turn a new leaf, and stronger read in man. Man sleeps on, untaught by what he sees, when he prove infidel to what he feels? He, whose blind thought futurity denies, unconscious bears, Bellerophon! like thee, his own indictment; he condemns himself; who reads his bosom, reads immortal life; Nature, there, imposing on her sons, as written fables; man was made a lie. Why discontent for ever harbour'd there? incurable consumption of our peace! resolve me, why the cottager and king, the whom sea-sever'd realms obey, and he who steals his whole dominion from the waste, repelling winter blasts with mud and straw, disquieted alike, draw sigh for sigh, a fate so distant, in complaint so near? Is it, that things terrestrial can't content? deep in rich pasture, will thy flocks complain? act so; but to their master is denied to share their sweet serene. Man, ill at ease, in this, not his own place, this foreign field, where Nature foddors him with other food than was ordain'd his cravings to suffice, poor in abundance, famish'd at a feast, ghts on for something more, when most enjoy'd. Is Heaven then kinder to thy flocks than thee? not so; thy pasture richer, but remote; in part, remote; for that remoter part man bleats from instinct, tho' perhaps, debauch'd by sense, his reason sleeps, nor dreams the cause.

* Night the Sixth.

The cause how obvious, when his reason wakes! His grief is but his grandeur in disguise; And discontent is immortality.

Shall sons of ether, shall the blood of Heaven, Set up their hopes on Earth, and stable here With brutal acquiescence in the mire? Lorenzo! no! they shall be nobly pain'd; The glorious foreigners, distress'd, shall sigh On thrones; and thou congratulate the sigh: Man's misery declares him born for bliss; His anxious heart asserts the truth I sing, And gives the sceptic in his head the lie. Our heads, our hearts, our passions, and our powers, Speak the same language; call us to the skies; Unripen'd these in this inclement clime, Scarce rise above conjecture and mistake; And for this land of trifles those too strong Tumultuous rise, and tempest human life: What prize on Earth can pay us for the storm? Meet objects for our passions, Heaven ordain'd, Objects that challenge all their fire, and leave No fault, but in defect. Blest Heaven! avert A bounded ardour for unbounded bliss! O for a bliss unbounded! far beneath A soul immortal, is a mortal joy. Nor are our powers to perish immature; But, after feeble effort here, beneath A brighter sun, and in a nobler soil, Transplanted from this sublunary bed, Shall flourish fair, and put forth all their bloom.

Reason progressive, instinct is complete; Swift instinct leaps; slow reason feebly climbs. Brutes soon their zenith reach; their little all Flows in at once; in ages they no more Could know, or do, or covet, or enjoy. Were man to live coëval with the Sun, The patriarch-pupil would be learning still; Yet, dying, leave his lesson half unlearn'd. Men perish in advance, as if the Sun Should set ere noon, in eastern oceans drown'd; If fit, with dim, illustrious to compare, The Sun's meridian with the soul of man. To man, why, step-dame Nature! so severe? Why thrown aside thy master-piece half-wrought, While meaner efforts thy last hand enjoy? Or, if abortively poor man must die, Nor reach, what reach he might, why die in dread? Why curst with foresight? Wise to misery? Why of his proud prerogative the prey? Why less pre-eminent in rank, than pain? His immortality alone can tell; Full ample fund to balance all amiss, And turn the scale in favour of the just!

His immortality alone can solve The darkest of enigmas, human hope; Of all the darkest, if at death we die. Hope, eager hope, th' assassin of our joy, All present blessings treading under foot, Is scarce a milder tyrant than despair. With no past toils content, still planning new, Hope turns us o'er to death alone for ease. Possession, why more tasteless than pursuit? Why is a wish far dearer than a crown? That wish accomplish'd, why, the grave of bliss? Because, in the great future buried deep, Beyond our plans of empire, and renown, Lies all that man with ardour should pursue; And he who made him, bent him to the right.

Man's heart th' Almighty to the future sets, By secret and inviolable springs;

And makes his hope his sublunary joy.
 Man's heart eats all things, and is hungry still;
 "More, more!" the glutton cries, for something
new;

So rages appetite, if man can't mount,
 He will descend. He starves on the possest.
 Hence, the world's master, from ambition's spire,
 In Caprea plung'd; and div'd beneath the brute.
 In that rank sty why wallow'd empire's son
 Supreme? Because he could no higher fly;
 His riot was ambition in despair.

Old Rome consulted birds; Lorenzo! thou,
 With more success, the flight of hope survey;
 Of restless hope, for ever on the wing.
 High-perch'd o'er every thought that falcon sits,
 To fly at all that rises in her sight;

And, never stooping, but to mount again
 Next moment, she betrays her aim's mistake,
 And owns her quarry lodg'd beyond the grave.

There should it fail us, (it must fail us there,
 If being fails,) more mournful riddles rise,
 And virtue vies with hope in mystery.

Why virtue? Where its praise, its being, fled?
 Virtue is true self-interest pursued:

What true self-interest of quite-mortal man?

To close with all that makes him happy here.

If vice (as sometimes) is our friend on Earth,

Then vice is virtue; 't is our sovereign good.

In self-applause is virtue's golden prize;

No self-applause attends it on thy scheme:

Whence self-applause? From conscience of the right.

And what is right, but means of happiness?

No means of happiness when virtue yields;

That basis failing, falls the building too,

And lays in ruin every virtuous joy.

The rigid guardian of a blameless heart,
 So long rever'd, so long reputed wise,
 Is weak; with rank knight-errandries o'er-run.

Why beats thy bosom with illustrious dreams
 Of self-exposure, laudable, and great?

Of gallant enterprise, and glorious death?

Die for thy country! — Thou romantic fool!

Seize, seize the plank thyself, and let her sink:

Thy country! what to thee? — The Godhead, what?
 (I speak with awe!) though he should bid thee bleed!

If, with thy blood, thy final hope is spilt?

Nor can Omnipotence reward the blow,

Be deaf; preserve thy being; disobey.

Nor is it disobedience: know, Lorenzo!

Whate'er th' Almighty's subsequent command,
 His first command is this — "Man, love thyself."
 In this alone, free agents are not free.

Existence is the basis, bliss the prize;

If virtue costs existence, 't is a crime;

Bold violation of our law supreme,
 Black suicide; though nations, which consult

Their gain, at thy expense, resound applause.

Since virtue's recompense is doubtful, here,

If man dies wholly, well may we demand,

Why is man suffer'd to be good in vain?

Why to be good in vain, is man enjoin'd?

Why to be good in vain, is man betray'd?

Betray'd by traitors lodg'd in his own breast,
 By sweet complacencies from virtue felt?

Why whispers Nature lies on virtue's part?

Or if blind instinct (which assumes the name
 Of sacred conscience) plays the fool in man,

Why reason made accomplice in th'

Why are the wisest loudest in th'

Can man by reason's beam be led astray?

Or, at his peril, imitate his God?

Since virtue sometimes ruins us on Earth,

Or both are true; or man survives the grave.

Or man survives the grave; or own, Lorenzo,
 Thy boast supreme, a wild absurdity.

Dauntless thy spirit; cowards are thy scorn.

Grant man immortal, and thy scorn is just.

The man immortal, rationally brave,

Dares rush on death — because he cannot die.

But if man loses all, when life is lost,

He lives a coward, or a fool expires.

A daring infidel, (and such there are,

From pride, example, lucre, rage, revenge,

Or pure heroical defect of thought,)

Of all Earth's madmen, most deserves a chain.

When to the grave we follow the renown'd

For valour, virtue, science, all we love,

And all we praise; for worth, whose noon-tide beam,

Enabling us to think in higher style,

Mends our ideas of ethereal powers;

Dream we, that lustre of the moral world

Goes out in stench, and rottenness the close?

Why was he wise to know, and warm to praise,

And strenuous to transcribe, in human life,

The Mind Almighty? Could it be, that Fate,

Just when the lineaments began to shine,

And dawn the Deity, should snatch the draught,

With night eternal blot it out, and give

The skies alarm, lest angels too might die?

If human souls, why not angelic too

Extinguish'd? and a solitary God,

O'er ghastly ruin, frowning from his throne?

Shall we this moment gaze on God in man:

The next, lose man for ever in the dust?

From dust we disengage, or man mistakes;

And there, where least his judgment fears a flaw.

Wisdom and worth how boldly he commends!

Wisdom and worth are sacred names; rever'd,

Where not embrac'd; applauded! deified!

Why not compassion'd too? If spirits die,

Both are calamities, inflicted both,

To make us but more wretched. Wisdom's eye

Acute, for what? To spy more miseries;

And worth, so recompens'd, new-points their stings.

Or man surmounts the grave, or gain is loss,

And worth exalted humbles us the more.

Thou wilt not patronise a scheme that makes

Weakness and vice, the refuge of mankind.

"Has virtue, then, no joys?" — Yes, joys dear-bought.

Talk ne'er so long, in this imperfect state,

Virtue and vice are at eternal war.

Virtue's a combat; and who fights for nought?

Or for precarious, or for small reward?

Who virtue's self-reward so loud resound,

Would take degrees angelic here below,

And virtue, while they compliment, betray,

By feeble motives, and unfaithful guards.

The crown, th' unfading crown, her soul inspires:

'T is that, and that alone, can countervail

The body's treacheries, and the world's assaults:

On Earth's poor pay our famish'd virtue dies.

Truth incontestable! in spite of all

A Bayle has preach'd, or a Voltaire believ'd.

In man the more we dive, the more we see

Heaven's signet stamping an immortal make.

Dive to the bottom of his soul, the base

Sustaining all; what find we? Knowledge, love.

As light and heat, essential to the Sun,

These to the soul. And why, if souls expire?

How little lovely here? How little known?
 Small knowledge we dig up with endless toil;
 And love unfeign'd may purchase perfect hate.
 Why starv'd, on Earth, our angel appetites;
 While brutal are indulg'd their fulsome fill?
 Were then capacities divine conferr'd,
 As a mock-diadem, in savage sport,
 Blank insult of our pompous poverty,
 Which reaps but pain, from seeming claims so fair?
 In future age lies no redress? And shuts
 Eternity the door on our complaint?
 If so, for what strange ends were mortals made!
 The worst to wallow, and the best to weep;
 The man who merits most, must most complain:
 Can we conceive a disregard in Heaven,
 That the worst perpetrate, or best endure?
 This cannot be. To love, and know, in man
 Boundless appetite, and boundless power;
 And these demonstrate boundless objects too.
 Objects, powers, appetites, Heaven suits in all;
 For, Nature through, e'er violates this sweet,
 Eternal concord, on her tuneful string.
 Is man the sole exception from her laws?
 Eternity struck off from human hope,
 (I speak with truth but veneration too,)
 Can man be a monster, the reproach of Heaven,
 A stain, a dark impenetrable cloud
 On Nature's beauteous aspect; and deforms,
 Amazing blot!) deforms her with her lord.
 Is such man's allotment, what is Heaven?
 Or own the soul immortal, or blaspheme.
 Or own the soul immortal, or invert
 All order. Go, mock-majesty! go, man!
 And bow to thy superiors of the stall;
 Through every scene of sense superior far:
 They graze the turf untill'd; they drink the stream
 Unbrew'd, and ever full, and un-embitter'd
 With doubts, fears, fruitless hopes, regrets, despairs;
 Mankind's peculiar! reason's precious dower!
 To foreign clime they ransack for their robes;
 Or brothers cite to the litigious bar;
 Their good is good entire, unmix'd, unmarr'd;
 They find a Paradise in every field,
 In boughs forbidden where no curses hang:
 Their ill no more than strikes the sense; unstretch'd
 By previous dread, or murmur in the rear:
 When the worst comes, it comes unfear'd; one stroke
 Begins, and ends, their woe: they die but once;
 Lest, incommunicable privilege! for which
 Proud man, who rules the globe, and reads the stars,
 Philosopher, or hero, sighs in vain.
 Account for this prerogative in brutes.
 No day, no glimpse of day, to solve the knot,
 But what beams on it from eternity.
 The sole, and sweet solution! that unties
 The difficult, and softens the severe;
 The cloud on Nature's beauteous face dispels;
 Restores bright order; casts the brute beneath;
 And re-enthrones us in supremacy
 Of joy, e'en here: admit immortal life,
 And virtue is knight-errantry no more;
 Each virtue brings in hand a golden dower,
 Or richer in reversion: Hope exults;
 And though much bitter in our cup is thrown,
 Predominates, and gives the taste of Heaven.
 Wherefore is the Deity so kind!
 Astonishing beyond astonishment!
 Heaven our reward — for Heaven enjoy'd below.
 Still unsubdued thy stubborn heart? — For there
 The traitor lurks who doubts the truth I sing.

Reason is guiltless; will alone rebels.
 What, in that stubborn heart, if I should find
 New, unexpected witnesses against thee?
 Ambition, pleasure, and the love of gain!
 Canst thou suspect, that these, which make the soul
 The slave of Earth, should own her heir of Heaven?
 Canst thou suspect what makes us disbelieve
 Our immortality, should prove it sure?
 First, then, ambition summon to the bar.
 Ambition's shame, extravagance, disgust,
 And inextinguishable nature, speak.
 Each much deposes; hear them in their turn.
 Thy soul, how passionately fond of fame!
 How anxious, that fond passion to conceal;
 We blush, detected in designs on praise,
 Though for best deeds, and from the best of men;
 And why? Because immortal. Art divine
 Has made the body tutor to the soul;
 Heaven kindly gives our blood a moral flow;
 Bids it ascend the glowing cheek, and there
 Upbraid that little heart's inglorious aim,
 Which stoops to court a character from man;
 While o'er us, in tremendous judgment, sit
 Far more than man, with endless praise, and blame.
 Ambition's boundless appetite out-speaks
 The verdict of its shame. When souls take fire
 At high presumptions of their own desert,
 One age is poor applause; the mighty shout,
 The thunder by the living few begun,
 Late time must echo; worlds unborn, resound.
 We wish our names eternally to live: [thought,
 Wild dream! which ne'er had haunted human
 Had not our natures been eternal too.
 Instinct points out an interest in hereafter;
 But our blind reason sees not where it lies;
 Or, seeing, gives the substance for the shade.
 Fame is the shade of immortality,
 And in itself a shadow. Soon as caught,
 Contemn'd; it shrinks to nothing in the grasp.
 Consult th' ambitious, 't is ambition's cure.
 "And is this all?" cried Caesar at his height,
 Disgusted. This third proof ambition brings
 Of immortality. The first in fame,
 Observe him near, your envy will abate:
 Sham'd at the disproportion vast, between
 The passion and the purchase, he will sigh
 At such success, and blush at his renown.
 And why? Because far richer prize invites
 His heart; far more illustrious glory calls;
 It calls in whispers, yet the deafest hear.
 And can ambition a fourth proof supply?
 It can, and stronger than the former three;
 Yet quite o'erlook'd by some reputed wise.
 Though disappointments in ambition pain,
 And though success disgusts; yet still, Lorenzo!
 In vain we strive to pluck it from our hearts;
 By Nature planted for the noblest ends.
 Absurd the fam'd advice to Pyrrhus given,
 More prais'd, than ponder'd; specious, but unsound;
 Sooner that hero's sword the world had quell'd,
 Than reason, his ambition. Man must soar.
 An obstinate activity within,
 An insuppressible spring, will toss him up,
 In spite of fortune's load. Not kings alone,
 Each villager has his ambition too;
 No Sultan prouder than his fetter'd slave:
 Slaves build their little Babylons of straw,
 Echo the proud Assyrian in their hearts,
 And cry, — "Behold the wonders of my might!"
 And why? Because immortal as their lord;

And souls immortal must for ever beave
At something great ; the glitter, or the gold ;
The praise of mortals, or the praise of Heaven.

Nor absolutely vain is human praise,
When human is supported by divine.
I'll introduce Lorenzo to himself ;
Pleasure and pride (bad masters !) share our hearts.
As love of pleasure is ordain'd to guard
And feed our bodies, and extend our race ;
The love of praise is planted to protect,
And propagate the glories of the mind.

What is it, but the love of praise, inspires,
Matures, refines, embellishes, exalts,
Earth's happiness ? From that, the delicate,
The grand, the marvellous, of civil life,
Want and convenience, under-workers, lay
The basis, on which love of glory builds.
Nor is thy life, O virtue ! less in debt
To praise, thy secret stimulating friend.
Were men not proud, what merit should we miss !
Pride made the virtues of the pagan world.
Praise is the salt that seasons right to man,
And whets his appetite for moral good.
Thirst of applause is virtue's second guard ;
Reason, her first ; but reason wants an aid ;
Our private reason is a flatterer ;
Thirst of applause calls public judgment in,
To poise our own, to keep an even scale,
And give endanger'd virtue fairer play.

Here a fifth proof arises, stronger still :
Why this so nice construction of our hearts ?
These delicate moralities of sense ;

This constitutional reserve of aid
To succour virtue, when our reason fails ;
If virtue, kept alive by care and toil,
And, oft, the mark of injuries on Earth,
When labour'd to maturity (its bill
Of disciplines, and pains, unpaid) must die ?
Why freighted-rich, to dash against a rock ?
Were man to perish when most fit to live,
O how mis-spent were all these stratagems,
By skill divine inwoven in our frame !
Where are Heaven's holiness and mercy fled ?
Laughs Heaven, at once, at virtue, and at man ?
If not, why that discourag'd, this destroy'd ?

Thus far ambition. What says avarice ?
This her chief maxim, which has long been thine :
" The wise and wealthy are the same. " — I grant it.
To store up treasure, with incessant toil,
This is man's province, this his highest praise.
To this great end keen instinct stings him on.
To guide that instinct, reason ! is thy charge ;
'T is thine to tell us where true treasure lies :
But, reason failing to discharge her trust,
Or to the deaf discharging it in vain,
A blunder follows ; and blind industry,
Gall'd by the spur, but stranger to the course,
(The course where stakes of more than gold are won,)
O'er-loading, with the cares of distant age,
The jaded spirits of the present hour,
Provides for an eternity below.

" Thou shalt not covet," is a wise command ;
But bounded to the wealth the Sun surveys :
Look farther, the command stands quite revers'd,
And avarice is a virtue most divine.
Is faith a refuge for our happiness ?
Most sure : and is it not for reason too ?
Nothing this world unriddles, but the next.
Whence inextinguishable thirst of gain ?
From inextinguishable life in man :

Man, if not meant, by worth, to reach the skies,
Had wanted wing to fly so far in guilt.
Sour grapes, I grant, ambition, avarice,
Yet still their root is immortality :
These its wild growths so bitter, and so base,
(Pain and reproach !) religion can reclaim,
Refine, exalt, throw down their poisonous lee,
And make them sparkle in the bowl of bliss.

See, the third witness laughs at bliss remote,
And falsely promises an Eden here :
Truth she shall speak for once, though prone to lie,
A common cheat, and Pleasure is her name.
To pleasure never was Lorenzo deaf ;
Then hear her now, now first thy real friend.

Since Nature made us not more fond than proud
Of happiness (whence hypocrites in joy !
Makers of mirth ! artificers of smiles !)
Why should the joy most poignant sense affords
Burn us with blushes, and rebuke our pride ? —
Those heaven-born blushes tell us man descends,
E'en in the zenith of his earthly bliss :
Should reason take her infidel repose,
This honest instinct speaks our lineage high ;
This instinct calls on darkness to conceal
Our rapturous relation to the stalls.
Our glory covers us with noble shame,
And he that 's unconfounded, is unmann'd.
The man that blushes is not quite a brute.
Thus far with thee, Lorenzo ! will I close.
Pleasure is good, and man for pleasure made ;
But pleasure full of glory, as of joy ;
Pleasure, which neither blushes, nor expires.

The witnesses are heard ; the cause is o'er ;
Let conscience file the sentence in her court,
Dearer than deeds that half a realm convey :
Thus seal'd by truth, th' authentic record runs.

" Know, all ; know, infidels, — unapt to know !
'T is immortality your nature solves ;
'T is immortality decyphers man,
And opens all the mysteries of his make.
Without it, half his instincts are a riddle :
Without it, all his virtues are a dream.
His very crimes attest his dignity ;
His sateless thirst of pleasure, gold, and fame,
Declares him born for blessings infinite :
What less than infinite makes un-absurd
Passions, which all on Earth but more inflames ?
Fierce passions, so mis-measur'd to this scene,
Stretch'd out, like eagles' wings, beyond our nest,
Far, far beyond the worth of all below,
For Earth too large, presage a nobler flight,
And evidence our title to the skies."

Ye gentle theologues, of calmer kind !
Whose constitution dictates to your pen,
Who, cold yourselves, think ardour comes from Hell !

Think not our passions from corruption sprung,
Though to corruption now they lend their wings ;
That is their mistress, not their mother. All
(And justly) reason deem divine : I see,
I feel a grandeur, in the passions too,
Which speaks their high descent, and glorious end !
Which speaks them rays of an eternal fire.
In Paradise itself they burnt as strong,
Ere Adam fell, though wiser in their aim.
Like the proud Eastern, struck by Providence,
What though our passions are run mad, and stoop
With low, terrestrial appetite, to graze
On trash, on toys, dethron'd from high desire ?
Yet still through their disgrace, no feeble ray

Of greatness shines, and tells us whence they fell :
But these (like that fall'n monarch when reclaim'd),
When reason moderates the rein aright,
Shall re-ascend, remount their former sphere,
Where once they soar'd illustrious; ere seduc'd
By wanton Eve's debauch, to stroll on Earth,
And set the sublunary world on fire.

But grant their phrenzy lasts; their phrenzy fails
To disappoint one providential end,
For which Heaven blew up ardour in our hearts :
Were reason silent, boundless passion speaks
A future scene of boundless objects too,
And brings glad tidings of eternal day.
Eternal day ! 'T is that enlightens all ;
And all, by that enlighten'd, proves it sure.
Consider man as an immortal being,
Intelligible all ; and all is great ;
A crystalline transparency prevails,
And strikes full lustre through the human sphere :
Consider man as mortal, all is dark,
And wretched ; reason weeps at the survey.

The learn'd Lorenzo cries, " And let her weep,
Weak modern reason : ancient times were wise.
Authority, that venerable guide,
Stands on my part ; the fam'd Athenian porch
(And who for wisdom so renown'd as they ?)
Denied this immortality to man."
I grant it ; but affirm, they prov'd it too.
A riddle this ! — Have patience ; I'll explain.

What noble vanities, what moral flights,
Glittering through their romantic wisdom's page,
Make us, at once, despise them, and admire ?
Fable is flat to these high-season'd sires ;
They leave th' extravagance of song below.
" Flesh shall not feel ; or, feeling, shall enjoy
The dagger or the rack ; to them, alike
A bed of roses, or the burning bull."
In men exploding all beyond the grave,
Strange doctrine, this ! As doctrine, it was strange ;
But not as prophecy ; for such it prov'd,
And, to their own amazement, was fulfill'd :
They feign'd a firmness Christians need not feign.
The Christian truly triumph'd in the flame :
The Stoic saw, in double wonder lost,
Wonder at them, and wonder at himself,
To find the bold adventures of his thought,
Not hold, and that he strove to lie in vain.

Whence, then, those thoughts ? those towering thoughts, that flew [ pride.
Such monstrous heights ? — From instinct, and from
The glorious instinct of a deathless soul,
Confus'dly conscious of her dignity,
Suggested truths they could not understand.
In lust's dominion, and in passion's storm,
Truth's system broken, scatter'd fragments lay,
As light in chaos, glimmering through the gloom :
Smit with the pomp of lofty sentiments,
Pleas'd pride proclaim'd, what reason disbeliev'd.
Pride, like the Delphic priestess, with a swell,
Rav'd nonsense, destin'd to be future sense,
When life immortal, in full day, should shine ;
And Death's dark shadows fly the gospel sun.
They spoke, what nothing but immortal souls
Could speak ; and thus the truth they question'd, prov'd.

Can then absurdities, as well as crimes,
Speak man immortal ? All things speak him so.
Much has been urg'd : and dost thou call for more ?
Call ; and with endless questions be distress'd,
All unresolvable, if Earth is all.

" Why life ; a moment ; infinite, desire ?
Our wish, eternity ? Our home, the grave ?
Heaven's promise dormant lies in human hope ;
Who wishes life immortal, proves it too.
Why happiness pursued, though never found ?
Man's thirst of happiness declares it is
(For Nature never gravitates to nought) ;
That thirst unquench'd declares it is not here.
My Lucia, thy Clarissa, call to thought ;
Why cordial friendship riveted so deep,
As hearts to pierce at first, at parting, rend,
If friend, and friendship, vanish in an hour ?
Is not this torment in the mask of joy ?
Why by reflection marr'd the joys of sense ?
Why past, and future, preying on our hearts,
And putting all our present joys to death ?
Why labours reason ? instinct were as well ;
Instinct far better ; what can choose, can err :
O how infallible the thoughtless brute !
'T were well his Holiness were half as sure.
Reason with inclination, why at war ?
Why sense of guilt ? why conscience up in arms ?"

Conscience of guilt, is prophecy of pain,
And bosom-counsel to decline the blow.
Reason with inclination ne'er had jarr'd,
If nothing future paid forbearance here :
Thus on — These, and a thousand pleas uncall'd,
All promise, some ensure, a second scene ;
Which, were it doubtful, would be dearer far
Than all things else most certain ; were it false,
What truth on Earth so precious as the lie ?
This world it gives us, let what will ensue ;
This world it gives, in that high cordial, hope :
The future of the present is the soul :
How this life groans, when sever'd from the next !
Poor mutilated wretch, that disbelieves !
By dark distrust his being cut in two,
In both parts perishes ; life void of joy,
Sad prelude of eternity in pain !

Couldst thou persuade me, the next life could fail
Our ardent wishes ; how should I pour out
My bleeding heart in anguish, new, as deep !
Oh ! with what thoughts, thy hope, and my despair,
Abhor'd annihilation ! blasts the soul,
And wide extends the bounds of human woe !
Could I believe Lorenzo's system true,
In this black channel would my ravings run.
" Grief from the future borrow'd peace, erewhile.
The future vanish'd ! and the present pain'd !
Strange import of unprecedented ill !
Fall, how profound ! Like Lucifer's, the fall !
Unequal fate ! His fall, without his guilt !
From where fond hope built her pavilion high,
The gods among, hurl'd headlong, hurl'd at once
To night ! To nothing, darker still than night !
If 't was a dream, why wake me, my worst foe,
Lorenzo ! boastful of the name of friend !
O for delusion ! O for error still !
Could vengeance strike much stronger than to plant
A thinking being in a world like this,
Not over-rich before, now beggar'd quite ;
More curst than at the fall ? — The Sun goes out !
The thorns shoot up ! What thorns in every thought !
Why sense of better ? It imbitters worse.
Why sense ? why life ? If but to sigh, then sink
To what I was ! twice nothing ! and much woe !
Woe, from Heaven's bounties ! woe from what was wont

To flatter most, high intellectual powers. [ scheme,
Thought, virtue, knowledge ! Blessings, by thy

All poison'd into pains. First, knowledge, once
My soul's ambition, now her greatest dread.
To know myself, true wisdom? — No, to shun
That shocking science, parent of despair!
Avert thy mirror; if I see, I die.

“Know my Creator? Climb his blest abode
By painful speculation, pierce the veil,
Dive in his nature, read his attributes,
And gaze in admiration — on a foe,
Obtruding life, withholding happiness!
From the full rivers that surround his throne,
Not letting fall one drop of joy on man;
Man gasping for one drop, that he might cease
To curse his birth, nor envy reptiles more!
Ye sable clouds! ye darkest shades of night!
Hide him, for ever hide him, from my thought,
Once all my comfort; source, and soul of joy!
Now leagu'd with furies, and with thee*, against me.

“Know his achievements? Study his renown?
Contemplate this amazing universe,
Dropt from his hand, with miracles replete!
For what? 'Mid miracles of nobler name,
To find one miracle of misery?
To find the being, which alone can know
And praise his works, a blemish on his praise?
Through Nature's ample range, in thought to stroll,

And start at man, the single mourner there,
Breathing high hope! chain'd down to pangs, and death?

“Knowing is suffering: and shall virtue share
The sigh of knowledge? — Virtue shares the sigh.
By straining up the steep of excellent,
By battles fought, and, from temptation, won,
What gains she, but the pang of seeing worth,
Angelic worth, soon shuffled in the dark
With every vice, and swept to brutal dust?
Merit is madness; virtue is a crime;
A crime to reason, if it costs us pain
Unpaid: what pain, amidst a thousand more,
To think the most abandon'd, after days
Of triumph o'er their betters, find in death
As soft a pillow, nor make fouler clay!

“Duty! religion! These, our duty done,
Imply reward. Religion is mistake.
Duty! — There's none, but to repel the cheat.
Ye cheats! away: ye daughters of my pride!
Who feign yourselves the favourites of the skies:
Ye towering hopes, abortive energies!
That toss and struggle, in my lying breast,
To scale the skies, and build presumptions there,
As I were heir of an eternity.
Vain, vain ambitions! trouble me no more.
Why travel far in quest of sure defeat?
As bounded as my being, be my wish.
All is inverted, wisdom is a fool.
Sense! take the rein; blind passion! drive us on;
And ignorance! befriend us on our way;
Ye new, but truest patrons of our peace!
Yes; give the pulse full empire; live the brute,
Since, as the brute, we die. The sum of man,
Of godlike man! to revel, and to rot.

“But not on equal terms with other brutes:
Their revels a more poignant relish yield,
And safer too; they never poisons choose.
Instinct, than reason, makes more wholesome meals,
And sends all-marring murmur far away.
For sensual life they best philosophize;

* Lorenzo.

Theirs that serene, the sages sought in vain:
'T is man alone expostulates with Heaven;
His, all the power, and all the cause, to mourn.
Shall human eyes alone dissolve in tears?
And bleed, in anguish, none but human hearts?
The wide-stretch'd realm of intellectual woe,
Surpassing sensual far, is all our own.
In life so fatally distinguish'd, why
Cast in one lot, confounded, lump'd, in death?

“Ere yet in being, was mankind in guilt?
Why thunder'd this peculiar clause against us,
All-mortal and all-wretched? — Have the skies
Reasons of state, their subjects may not scan,
Nor humbly reason, when they soberly sigh?
All-mortal and all-wretched! — 'T is too much:
Unparallel'd in Nature: 't is too much
On being unrequested at thy hands,
Omnipotent! for I see nought but power. [exit,

“And why see that? Why thought? To toil, and Then make our bed in darkness, needs no thought.
What superfluities are reasoning souls!
O give eternity! or thought destroy.
But without thought our curse were half unfelt;
Its blunted edge would spare the throbbing heart;
And, therefore, 't is bestow'd, I thank thee, reason!
For aiding life's too small calamities,
And giving being to the dread of death.
Such are thy bounties! — Was it then too much
For me, to trespass on the brutal rights?
Too much for Heaven to make one emmet more?
Too much for chaos to permit my mass
A longer stay with essences unwrought,
Unfashion'd, untormented into man?
Wretched preferment to this round of pains!
Wretched capacity of phrenzy, thought!
Wretched capacity of dying, life!
Life, thought, worth, wisdom, all (O foul revolt!)
Once friends to peace, gone over to the foe.

“Death, then, has chang'd his nature too:
O Death!

Come to my bosom, thou best gift of Heaven!
Best friend of man! since man is man no more.
Why in this thorny wilderness so long,
Since there's no promis'd land's ambrosial bower,
To pay me with its honey for my stings?
If needful to the selfish schemes of Heaven
To sting us sore, why mock our misery?
Why this so sumptuous insult o'er our heads?
Why this illustrious canopy display'd?
Why so magnificently lodg'd despair?
At stated periods, sure returning, roll
These glorious orbs, that mortals may compute
Their length of labours, and of pains; nor lose
Their misery's full measure? — Smiles with flowers,
And fruits, promiscuous, ever-teeming Earth,
That man may languish in luxurious scenes,
And in an Eden mourn his wither'd joys?
Claim Earth and skies man's admiration, due
For such delights! Blest animals! too wise
To wonder; and too happy to complain!

“Our doom decreed demands a mournful scene:
Why not a dungeon dark, for the condemn'd?
Why not the dragon's subterranean den,
For man to howl in? Why not his abode
Of the same dismal colour with his fate?
A Thebes, a Babylon, at vast expense
Of time, toil, treasure, art, for owls and adders,
As congruous, as, for man, this lofty dome,
Which prompts proud thought, and kindles high desire;

From her humble chamber in the dust, [flames,
While proud thought swells, and high desire in-
The poor worm calls us for her inmates there ;
And, round us, Death's inexorable hand
Draws the dark curtain close ; undrawn no more.

" Undrawn no more ! — Behind the cloud of Death,
Once, I beheld the Sun ; a Sun which gilt
That sable cloud, and turn'd it all to gold :
How the grave's alter'd ! Fathomless, as Hell !
A real Hell to those who dreamt of Heaven.
Annihilation ! How it yawns before me !
Next moment I may drop from thought, from sense,
The privilege of angels, and of worms,
An outcast from existence ! and this spirit,
This all-pervading, this all-conscious soul,
This particle of energy divine,
Which travels Nature, flies from star to star,
And visits gods, and emulates their powers,
For ever is extinguish'd. Horror ! death !
Death of that death I fearless once survey'd ! —
When horror universal shall descend,
And Heaven's dark concave urn all human race,
In that enormous, unrefunding tomb,
How just this verse ! this monumental sigh !

" *Beneath the lumber of demolish'd worlds,
Deep in the rubbish of the general wreck,
Swept ignominious to the common mass
Of matter, never dignified with life,
Here lie proud rationals ; the sons of Heaven !
The lords of Earth ! the property of worms !
Beings of yesterday ! and not to-morrow !
Who liv'd in terror, and in pangs expir'd !
All gone to rot in chaos ; or to make
Their happy transit into blocks or brutes,
Nor longer sully their Creator's name.*"

Lorenzo ! hear, pause, ponder, and pronounce.
What is this history ? If such is man,
Mankind's historian, though divine, might weep.
And dares Lorenzo smile ? — I know thee proud ;
For once let pride befriend thee ; pride looks pale
At such a scene, and sighs for something more.
Amid thy boasts, presumptions, and displays,
And art thou then a shadow ? Less than shade ?
Nothing ? Less than nothing ? To have been,
And not to be, is lower than unborn.

Art thou ambitious ? Why then make the worm
Thine equal ? Runs thy taste of pleasure high ?
Why patronise sure death of every joy ?
Thy riches ? Why choose beggary in the grave,
Of every hope a bankrupt ! and for ever ?
Ambition, pleasure, avarice, persuade thee
To make that world of glory, rapture, wealth,
They lately prov'd *, the soul's supreme desire.

What art thou made of ? Rather, how unmade ?
Great Nature's master-appetite destroy'd,
An endless life, and happiness, despis'd ?
Or both wish'd, here, where neither can be found ?
Such man's perverse, eternal war with Heaven !
Darest thou persist ? And is there nought on Earth,
But a long train of transitory forms,
Rising, and breaking, millions in an hour ?
Bubbles of a fantastic deity, blown up
In sport, and then in cruelty destroy'd ?
Oh ! for what crime, unmerciful Lorenzo !
Destroys thy scheme the whole of human race ?
Kind is fell ! Lucifer, compar'd to thee :
Oh ! spare this waste of being half-divine ;
And vindicate th' economy of Heaven.

* In Night VI.

Heaven is all love ; all joy in giving joy :
It never had created, but to bless :
And shall it, then, strike off the list of life,
A being blest, or worthy so to be ?
Heaven starts at an annihilating God.

Is that, all Nature starts at, thy desire ?
Art such a clod to wish thyself all clay ?
What is that dreadful wish ? — The dying groan
Of Nature, murder'd by the blackest guilt.
What deadly poison has thy nature drunk ;
To nature undebauch'd no shock so great ;
Nature's first wish is endless happiness ;
Annihilation is an after-thought,
A monstrous wish, unborn till virtue dies.
And, oh ! what depth of horror lies enclos'd !
For non-existence no man ever wish'd,
But, first, he wish'd the Deity destroy'd.

If so ; what words are dark enough to draw
Thy picture true ? The darkest are too fair.
Beneath what baleful planet, in what hour
Of desperation, by what fury's aid,
In what infernal posture of the soul,
All Hell invited, and all Hell in joy
At such a birth, a birth so near of kin,
Did thy foul fancy whelp so black a scheme
Of hopes abortive, faculties half-blown,
And deities begun, reduc'd to dust ?

There's nought (thou say'st) but one eternal flux
Of feeble essences, tumultuous driven
Through time's rough billows into night's abyss.
Say, in this rapid tide of human ruin,
Is there no rock, on which man's tossing thought
Can rest from terror, dare his fate survey,
And boldly think it something to be born ?
Amid such hourly wrecks of being fair,
Is there no central, all-sustaining base,
All-realising, all-connecting power,
Which, as it call'd forth all things, can recall,
And force destruction to refund her spoil ?
Command the grave restore her taken prey ?
Bid death's dark vale its human harvest yield,
And earth and ocean pay their debt of man,
True to the grand deposit trusted there ?
Is there no potentate whose out-stretch'd arm,
When ripening time calls forth th' appointed hour,
Pluck'd from foul devastation's famish'd maw,
Binds present, past, and future, to his throne ?
His throne, how glorious, thus divinely grac'd,
By germinating beings clustering round !
A garland worthy the divinity !
A throne, by Heaven's omnipotence in smiles,
Built (like a pharos towering in the waves)
Amidst immense effusions of his love !
An ocean of communicated bliss !

An all-prolific, all-preserving god !
This were a god indeed. — And such is man,
As here presum'd : he rises from his fall.
Think'st thou Omnipotence a naked root,
Each blossom fair of Deity destroy'd ?
Nothing is dead ; nay, nothing sleeps ; each soul,
That ever animated human clay,
Now wakes ; is on the wing : and where, O where,
Will the swarm settle ? — When the trumpet's call,
As sounding brass, collects us, round Heaven's throne
Conglob'd, we bask in everlasting day,
(Paternal splendour !) and adhere for ever.
Had not the soul this outlet to the skies,
In this vast vessel of the universe,
How should we gasp, as in an empty void !
How in the pangs of famish'd hope expire !

How bright my prospect shines; how gloomy thine!

A trembling world! and a devouring God!
Earth, but the shambles of Omnipotence!
Heaven's face all stain'd with causeless massacres
Of countless millions, born to feel the pang
Of being lost. Lorenzo! can it be?
This bids us shudder at the thoughts of life.
Who would be born to such a phantom world,
Where nought substantial but our misery?
Where joy (if joy) but heightens our distress,
So soon to perish, and revive no more?
'The greater such a joy, the more it pains.
A world, so far from great, (and yet how great
It shines to thee!) there's nothing real in it;
Being, a shadow; consciousness, a dream;
A dream, how dreadful! Universal blank
Before it, and behind! Poor man, a spark
From non-existence struck by wrath divine,
Glittering a moment, nor that moment sure,
'Midst upper, nether, and surrounding night,
His sad, sure, sudden, and eternal tomb!

Lorenzo! dost thou feel these arguments?
Or is there nought but vengeance can be felt?
How hast thou dar'd the Deity dethrone?
How dar'd indict him of a world like this?
If such the world, creation was a crime;
For what is crime but cause of misery?
Retract, blasphemers! and unriddle this,
Of endless arguments above, below,
Without us, and within, the short result!
"If man's immortal, there's a God in Heaven."

But wherefore such redundancy? such waste
Of argument? One sets my soul at rest!
One obvious, and at hand, and, oh! — at heart.
So just the skies, Philander's life so pain'd,
His heart so pure; that, or succeeding scenes
Have palms to give, or ne'er had he been born.
"What an old tale is this!" Lorenzo cries. —
I grant this argument is old; but truth
No years impair; and had not this been true,
Thou never hadst despis'd it for its age.
Truth is immortal as thy soul; and fable
As fleeting as thy joys: be wise, nor make
Heaven's highest blessing, vengeance; O be wise!
Nor make a curse of immortality.

Say, know'st thou what it is, or what thou art?
Know'st thou the importance of a soul immortal?
Behold this midnight glory: worlds on worlds!
Amazing pomp! redouble this amaze;
Ten thousand add; add twice ten thousand more;
Then weigh the whole; one soul outweighs them
all;

And calls th' astonishing magnificence
Of unintelligent creation poor.

For this, believe not me; no man believe;
Trust not in words, but deeds; and deeds no less
Than those of the Supreme; nor his, a few;
Consult them all; consulted, all proclaim
Thy soul's importance: tremble at thyself;
For whom Omnipotence has wak'd so long:
Has wak'd, and work'd, for ages; from the birth
Of Nature to this unbelieving hour.

In this small province of his vast domain,
(All Nature bow, while I pronounce his name!)
What has God done, and not for this sole end,
To rescue souls from death? The soul's high price
Is writ in all the conduct of the skies.
The soul's high price is the Creation's key,
Unlocks its mysteries, and naked lays

The genuine cause of every deed divine:
That is the chain of ages, which maintains
Their obvious correspondence, and unites
Most distant periods in one blest design:
That is the mighty hinge, on which have turn'd
All revolutions, whether we regard
The natural, civil, or religious, world;
The former two but servants to the third:
To that their duty done, they both expire,
Their mass new-cast, forgot their deeds renew'd:
And angels ask, "Where once they shone so fair?"

To lift us from this abject, to sublime;
This flux, to permanent; this dark, to day;
This foul, to pure; this turbid, to serene;
This mean, to mighty! — for this glorious end
Th' Almighty, rising, his long sabbath broke!
The world was made; was ruin'd; was restor'd;
Laws from the skies were publish'd; were repeal'd;
On Earth kings, kingdoms, rose; kings, kingdoms,
fell;

Fam'd sages light'd up the pagans world;
Prophets from Sion darted a keen glance
Through distant age; saints travell'd; martyrs bled;
By wonders sacred Nature stood controll'd;
The living were translated; dead were rais'd;
Angels, and more than angels, came from Heaven;
And, oh! for this, descended lower still:
Guilt was Hell's gloom; astonish'd at his guest,
For one short moment Lucifer ador'd:
Lorenzo! and wilt thou do less? — For this,
That hallow'd page, fools scoff at, was inspir'd,
Of all these truths — thrice-venerable code!
Deists! perform your quarantine; and then
Fall prostrate, ere you touch it, lest you die.

Nor less intensely bent infernal powers
To mar, than those of light, this end to gain.
O what a scene is here! — Lorenzo! wake!
Rise to the thought; exert, expand thy soul,
To take the vast idea: it denies
All else the name of great. Two warring worlds!
Not Europe against Afric; warring worlds!
Of more than mortal! mounted on the wing!
On ardent wings of energy and zeal,
High-hovering o'er this little brand of strife!
This sublunary ball — But strife, for what?
In their own cause conflicting? No; in time,
In man's. His single interest blows the flame;
His the sole stake; his fate the trumpet sounds,
Which kindles war immortal. How it burns!
Tumultuous swarms of deities in arms!
Force, force opposing, till the waves run high,
And tempest Nature's universal sphere.
Such opposites eternal, steadfast, stern,
Such foes implacable, are good, and ill; [then
Yet man, vain man, would mediate peace between

Think not this fiction, "There was war in Heaven."
From Heaven's high crystal mountain, where it hung,
Th' Almighty's out-stretch'd arm took down his bow,
And shot his indignation at the deep:
Re-thunder'd Hell, and darted all her fires.
And seems the stake of little moment still?
And slumbers man, who singly caus'd the storm?
He sleeps. — And art thou shock'd at mysteries?
The greatest, thou. How dreadful to reflect,
What ardour, care, and counsel mortals cause
In breasts divine! how little in their own!

Where'er I turn, how new proofs pour upon me!
How happily this wondrous view supports
My former argument! How strongly strikes
Immortal life's full demonstration, here!

Why this exertion? Why this strange regard
From Heaven's Omnipotent indulg'd to man? —
Because, in man, the glorious dreadful power,
Extremely to be pain'd, or blest, for ever.
Duration gives importance; swells the price.
An angel, if a creature of a day,
What would he be? A trifle of no weight;
Or stand, or fall; no matter which; he's gone.
Because immortal, therefore is indulg'd
This strange regard of deities to dust.
Hence, Heaven looks down on Earth with all her eyes:
Hence, the soul's mighty moment in her sight:
Hence, every soul has partisans above,
And every thought a critic in the skies:
Hence, clay, vile clay! has angels for its guard,
And every guard a passion for his charge:
Hence, from all age, the cabinet divine
Has held high counsel o'er the fate of man.

Nor have the clouds those gracious counsels hid:
Angels undrew the curtain of the throne,
And Providence came forth to meet mankind:
In various modes of emphasis and awe,
He spoke his will, and trembling Nature heard;
He spoke it loud, in thunder and in storm.
Witness, thou Sinai! whose cloud-cover'd height,
And shaken basis, own'd the present God;
Witness, ye billows! whose returning tide,
Breaking the chain that fasten'd it in air,
Swept Egypt, and her menaces, to Hell:
Witness, ye flames! th' Assyrian tyrant blew
To sevenfold rage, as impotent, as strong:
And thou, Earth! witness, whose expanding jaws
Clos'd o'er presumption's sacrilegious sons*:
Has not each element, in turn, subscribed
The soul's high price, and sworn it to the wise?
Has not flame, ocean, ether, earthquake, strove
To strike this truth through adamant man?
If not all adamant, Lorenzo! hear;
All is delusion; Nature is wrapt up
In tenfold night, from reason's keenest eye;
There's no consistence, meaning, plan, or end,
In all beneath the Sun, in all above
(As far as man can penetrate), or Heaven
Is an immense, inestimable prize;
Or all is nothing, or that prize is all. —
And shall each toy be still a match for Heaven,
And full equivalent for groans below?
Who would not give a trifle to prevent
What he would give a thousand worlds to cure?

Lorenzo! thou hast seen (if thine to see)
All Nature, and her God (by Nature's course,
And Nature's course controll'd) declare for me:
The skies above proclaim, "immortal man!"
And, "man immortal!" all below resounds.
The world's a system of theology,
Read by the greatest strangers to the schools;
If honest, learn'd; and sages o'er a plough.
Is not, Lorenzo! then, impos'd on thee
This hard alternative; or, to renounce
Thy reason, or thy sense; or, to believe?
What then is unbelief? 'T is an exploit;
A strenuous enterprise: to gain it, man
Must burst through every bar of common sense;
Of common shame, magnanimously wrong;
And what rewards the sturdy combatant?
His prize, repentance; infamy, his crown.

But wherefore, infamy? — For want of faith,
Down the steep precipice of wrong he slides;

* Korah, &c.

There's nothing to support him in the right.
Faith in the future wanting is, at least
In embryo, every weakness, every guilt;
And strong temptation ripens it to birth.
If this life's gain invites him to the deed,
Why not his country sold, his father slain?
'T is virtue to pursue our good supreme;
And his supreme, his only good is here.
Ambition, avarice, by the wise disdain'd,
Is perfect wisdom, while mankind are fools,
And think a turf, or tomb-stone, covers all:
These find employment, and provide for sense
A richer pasture, and a larger range;
And sense by right divine ascends the throne,
When virtue's prize and prospect are no more;
Virtue no more we think the will of Heaven.
Would Heaven quite beggar virtue, if belov'd?
"Has virtue charms?" — I grant her heavenly fair;
But if unportion'd, all will interest wed;
Though that our admiration, this our choice.
The virtues grow on immortality;
That root destroy'd, they wither and expire.
A deity believ'd, will nought avail;
Rewards and punishments make God ador'd;
And hopes and fears give conscience all her power.
As in the dying parent dies the child,
Virtue, with immortality, expires.
Who tells me he denies his soul immortal,
Whate'er his boast, has told me, he's a knave.
His duty 't is, to love himself alone;
Nor care though mankind perish, if he smiles.
Who thinks ere long the man shall wholly die,
Is dead already; nought but brute survives.
And are there such? — Such candidates there are
For more than death; for utter loss of being,
Being, the basis of the Deity!
Ask you the cause? — The cause they will not tell:
Nor need they: O the sorceries of sense!
They work this transformation on the soul,
Dismount her, like the serpent at the fall,
Dismount her from her native wing, (which soar'd
Ere-while ethereal heights,) and throw her down,
To lick the dust, and crawl in such a thought.
Is it in words to paint you? O ye fall'n!
Fall'n from the wings of reason, and of hope!
Erect in stature, prone in appetite!
Patrons of pleasure, posting into pain!
Lovers of argument, averse to sense!
Boasters of liberty, fast bound in chains!
Lords of the wide creation, and the shame!
More senseless than th' irrationals you scorn! [pity,
More base than those you rule! Than those you
Far more undone! O ye most infamous
Of beings, from superior dignity!
Deepest in woe from means of boundless bliss!
Ye curst by blessings infinite! because
Most highly favour'd, most profoundly lost!
Ye motley mass of contradiction strong!
And are you, too, convinc'd, your souls fly off
In exhalation soft, and die in air,
From the full flood of evidence against you?
In the coarse drudgeries and sinks of sense,
Your souls have quite worn out the make of Heaven,
By vice new-cast, and creatures of your own:
But though you can deform, you can't destroy;
To curse, not uncreate, is all your power.
Lorenzo! this black brotherhood renounce;
Renounce St. Evremont, and read St. Paul.
Ere rapt by miracle, by reason wing'd,

His mounting mind made long abode in Heaven.
 This is freethinking, unconfin'd to parts,
 To send the soul, on curious travel bent,
 Through all the provinces of human thought;
 To dart her flight through the whole sphere of man;
 Of this vast universe to make the tour;
 In each recess of space, and time, at home;
 Familiar with their wonders; diving deep;
 And, like a prince of boundless interests there,
 Still most ambitious of the most remote;
 To look on truth unbroken, and entire;
 Truth in the system, the full orb; where truths
 By truths enlighten'd, and sustain'd, afford
 An arch-like, strong foundation, to support
 Th' incumbent weight of absolute, complete
Conviction; here, the more we press, we stand
 More firm: who most examine, most believe.
Parts, like half-sentences, confound; the whole
 Conveys the sense, and God is understood;
 Who not in fragments writes to human race:
 Read his whole volume, sceptic! then reply.

This, this, is thinking free, a thought that grasps
 Beyond a grain, and looks beyond an hour.
 Turn up thine eyes, survey this midnight scene;
 What are Earth's kingdoms, to yon boundless orbs,
 Of human souls, one day, the destin'd range?
 And what yon boundless orbs, to godlike man?
 Those numerous worlds that throng the firmament,
 And ask more space in Heaven, can roll at large
 In man's capacious thought, and still leave room
 For ampler orbs, for new creations, there.
 Can such a soul contract itself, to gripe
 A point of no dimension, of no weight?
 It can; it does: the world is such a point:
 And, of that point, how small a part enslaves!

How small a part — of nothing, shall I say?
 Why not? — Friends, our chief treasure! how they drop!

Lucia, Narcissa fair, Philander, gone!
 The grave, like fabled Cerberus, has op'd
 A triple mouth; and, in an awful voice,
 Loud calls my soul, and utters all I sing.
 How the world falls to pieces round about us,
 And leaves us in a ruin of our joy!
 What says this transportation of my friends?
 It bids me love the place where now they dwell,
 And scorn this wretched spot they leave so poor.
 Eternity's vast ocean lies before thee;
 There; there, Lorenzo! thy Clarissa sails.
 Give thy mind sea-room; keep it wide of Earth,
 That rock of souls immortal; cut thy cord;
 Weigh anchor; spread thy sails; call every wind;
 Eye thy Great Pole-star; make the land of life.

Two kinds of life has double-natur'd man,
 And two of death; the last far more severe.
 Life animal is nurtur'd by the Sun;
 Thrives on his bounties, triumphs in his beams.
 Life rational subsists on higher food,
 Triumphant in his beams, who made the day.
 When we leave that Sun, and are left by this,
 (The fate of all who die in stubborn guilt,)
 'T is utter darkness; strictly double death.
 We sink by no judicial stroke of Heaven,
 But Nature's course; as sure as plummets fall.
 Since God, or man, must alter, ere they meet,
 (Since light and darkness blend not in one sphere,)
 'T is manifest, Lorenzo! who must change.

If, then, that double death should prove thy lot,
 Blame not the bowels of the Deity;
 Man shall be blest, as far as man permits.

Not man alone, all *rational*s, Heaven arms
 With an illustrious, but tremendous, power
 To counteract its own most gracious ends;
 And this, of strict necessity, not choice;
 That power denied, men, angels, were no more
 But passive engines, void of praise or blame.
 A nature rational implies the power
 Of being blest, or wretched, as we please;
 Else idle reason would have nought to do;
 And he that would be barr'd capacity
 Of pain, courts incapacity of bliss.
 Heaven wills our happiness, allows our doom;
Invites us ardently, but not compels;
 Heaven but persuades, almighty man decrees;
 Man is the maker of immortal fates.
 Man falls by man, if finally he falls;
 And fall he must, who learns from death alone
 The dreadful secret — That he lives for ever.

Why this to thee? — Thee yet, perhaps, in doubt
 Of second life? But wherefore doubtful still?
 Eternal life is nature's ardent wish:

What ardently we wish, we soon believe:
 Thy tardy faith declares that wish destroy'd:
 What has destroy'd it? — Shall I tell thee what?
 When fear'd the future, 't is no longer wish'd;
 And, when unwish'd, we strive to disbelieve.

"Thus infidelity our guilt betrays."
 Nor that the sole detection! Blush, Lorenzo!
 Blush for hypocrisy, if not for guilt.
 The future fear'd? — An infidel, and fear?
 Fear what? A dream? A fable? — How thy dread,
 Unwilling evidence, and therefore strong,
 Affords my cause an undesign'd support!
 How disbelief affirms what it denies!

"It, unawares, asserts immortal life."

Surprising! infidelity turns out
 A creed, and a confession of our sins:
 Apostates, thus, are orthodox divines.

Lorenzo! with Lorenzo clash no more;
 Nor longer a transparent vizard wear.
 Think'st thou, religion only has her mask?
 Our infidels are Satan's hypocrites,
Pretend the worst, and, at the bottom, fail.
 When visited by thought (thought will intrude),
 Like him they serve, they tremble and believe.
 Is their hypocrisy so foul as this;
 So fatal to the welfare of the world?
 What detestation, what contempt, their due!
 And, if unpaid, be thank'd for their escape
 That Christian candour they strive hard to scorn:
 If not for that asylum, they might find
 A Hell on Earth; nor 'scape a worse below.

With insolence, and impotence of thought,
 Instead of racking fancy, to refute,
 Reform thy manners, and the truth enjoy. —
 But shall I dare confess the dire result?
 Can thy proud reason brook so black a brand?
 From purser manners, to sublimar faith,
 Is Nature's unavoidable ascent;
 An honest deist, where the Gospel shines,
 Matur'd to nobler, in the Christian ends.
 When that blest change arrives, e'en cast aside
 This song superfluous; life immortal strikes
 Conviction, in a flood of light divine.
 A Christian dwells, like Uriel*, in the Sun;
 Meridian evidence puts doubt to flight;
 And ardent hope anticipates the skies.
 Of that bright Sun, Lorenzo! scale the sphere;

'T is easy ! it invites thee ; it descends [came :
From Heaven to woo, and waft thee whence it
Read and revere the sacred page ; a page
Where triumphs immortality ; a page
Which not the whole creation could produce ;
Which not the conflagration shall destroy :
'T is printed in the mind of gods for ever,
In Nature's ruins not one letter lost.

In proud disdain of what e'en gods adore,
Dost smile? — Poor wretch! thy guardian angel
weeps.

Angels, and men, assent to what I sing ;
 Wits smile, and thank me for my midnight dream.
 How vicious hearts fume phrenzy to the brain !
 Parts push us on to pride, and pride to shame ;
 Pert infidelity is wit's cockade,
 To grace the brazen brow that braves the skies,
 By loss of being, dreadfully secure.
 Lorenzo ! if thy doctrine wins the day,
 And drives my dreams, defeated, from the field ;
 If this is all, if Earth a final scene,
 Take heed ; stand fast ; be sure to be a knave,
 A knave in grain ! ne'er deviate to the right :
 Shouldst thou be good — how infinite thy loss !
Guilt only makes annihilation gain.
 Blest scheme ! which life deprives of comfort, death
 Of hope ; and which vice only recommends.
 If so, where, infidels ! your bait, thrown out
 To catch weak converts ? where your lofty boast
 Of zeal for virtue, and of love to man ?
Annihilation ! I confess, in these.

What can reclaim you? Dare I hope profound
Philosophers the converts of a song?
Yet know, its title * flatters you, not me;
Yours be the praise to make my title good;
Mine, to bless Heaven, and triumph in your praise.
But since so pestilential your disease,
Though sovereign is the medicine I prescribe,
As yet, I'll neither triumph, nor despair:
But hope, ere long, my midnight dream will wake
Your hearts, and teach your wisdom — to be wise:
For why should souls immortal, made for bliss,
E'er wish, (and wish in vain!) that souls could die?
What ne'er can die, oh! grant to live; and crown
The wish, and aim, and labour of the skies;
Increase, and enter on the joys of Heaven:
Thus shall my title pass a sacred seal,
Receive an imprimatur from above,
While angels shout — An Infidel Reclaim'd!

To close, Lorenzo ! spite of all my pains, [ever ?
Still seems it strange, that thou shouldst live for
Is it less strange, that thou shouldst live at all ?
This is a miracle ; and that no more.
Who gave beginning, can exclude an end.
Deny thou art : then, doubt if thou shalt be.
A miracle with miracles enclos'd,
Is man : and starts his faith at what is strange ?
What less than wonders, from the wonderful ;
What less than miracles, from God, can flow ?
Admit a God — that mystery supreme !
That cause uncaus'd ! all other wonders cease ;
Nothing is marvellous for him to do :
Deny him — all is mystery besides :
Millions of mysteries ! each darker far,
Than that thy wisdom would, unwisely, shun.
If weak thy faith, why choose the harder side ?
We nothing know, but what is marvellous ;
Yet what is marvellous, we can't believe.

So weak our reason, and so great our God,
What most surprises in the sacred page,
Or full as strange, or stranger, must be true.
Faith is not reason's labour, but repose.

To faith, and virtue, why so backward, man ?
From hence : — The present strongly strikes us all ;
The future, faintly ; can we, then, be men ?
If men, Lorenzo ! the reverse is right.
Reason is man's peculiar : sense, the brute's.
The present is the scanty realm of sense ;
The future, reason's empire unconfin'd :
On that expending all her godlike power,
She plans, provides, expatiates, triumphs, there ;
There builds her blessings ! there expects her praise ;
And nothing asks of fortune, or of men.
And what is reason ? Be she, thus, defin'd ;
Reason is upright stature in the soul.

Oh ! be a man ; and strive to be a god.
 “ For what ? (thou say’st) To damp the joys of life ? ”
 No ; to give heart and substance to thy joys.
 That tyrant, hope ; mark how she domineers ;
 She bids us quit realities, for dreams ;
 Safety and peace, for hazard and alarm ;
 That tyrant o’er the tyrants of the soul,
 She bids ambition quit its taken prize,
 Spurn the luxuriant branch on which it sits,
 Though bearing crowns, to spring at distant game ;
 And plunge in toils and dangers — for repose.
 If hope precarious, and of things, when gain’d,
 Of little moment, and as little stay,
 Can sweeten toils and dangers into joys ;
 What then, that hope, which nothing can defeat,
 Our leave unask’d ? Rich hope of boundless bliss !
 Bliss, past man’s power to paint it ; time’s to clum !

*This hope is Earth's most estimable prize :
This is man's portion, while no more than man :
Hope, of all passions, most befriends us here ;
Passions of prouder name befriend us less.
Joy has her tears ; and transport has her death ;
Hope, like a cordial, innocent, though strong,
Man's heart, at once, inspirits, and serenest ;
Nor makes him pay his wisdom for his joys ;
'T is all our present state can safely bear,
Health to the frame ! and vigour to the mind !
A joy attemper'd ! a chastis'd delight !
Like the fair summer evening, mild and sweet !
'T is man's full cup ; his Paradise below !*

A blest hereafter, then, or hop'd, or gain'd,
Is all ; our whole of happiness : full proof,
I chose no trivial or inglorious theme.
And know, ye foes to song ! (well-meaning men,
Though quite forgotten half your Bible's praise * !)
Important truths, in spite of verse, may please :
Grave minds you praise ; nor can you praise too much :
If there is weight in an eternity,
Let the grave listen ; — and be graver still.

NIGHT THE EIGHTH.

VIRTUE'S APOLOGY;

OR,

THE MAN OF THE WORLD ANSWERED.

IN WHICH ARE CONSIDERED,

The Love of this Life; the Ambition and Pleasure, with the Wit and Wisdom of the World.

AND has all Nature, then, espous'd my part?
Have I brib'd Heaven and Earth to plead against thee?

And is thy soul immortal? — What remains?
All, all, Lorenzo! — Make immortal, blest.
Unblest immortals! — What can shock us more?
And yet Lorenzo still affects the world;
There, stows his treasure; thence, his title draws,
Man of the world (for such wouldst thou be call'd).
And art thou proud of that inglorious style?
Proud of reproach? for a reproach it was,
In ancient days; and CHRISTIAN — in an age
When men were men, and not asham'd of Heaven —
Fir'd their ambition, as it crown'd their joy.
Sprinkled with dew from the Castalian font,
Fain would I re-baptize thee, and confer
A purer spirit, and a nobler name.

Thy fond attachments fatal, and inflam'd,
Point out my path, and dictate to my song:
'To thee, the world how fair! How strongly strikes
Ambition! and gay pleasure stronger still!
Thy triple bane! the triple bolt that lays
Thy virtue dead! Be these my triple theme;
Nor shall thy wit, or wisdom, be forgot.

Common the theme; not so the song; if she
My song invokes, Urania deigns to smile.
The charm that chains us to the world, her foe,
If she dissolves, the man of earth, at once,
Starts from his trance, and sighs for other scenes;
Scenes, where these sparks of night, these stars,
shall shine

Unnumber'd suns (for all things, as they are,
The blest behold); and, in one glory, pour
Their blended blaze on man's astonish'd sight;
A blaze — the least illustrious object there.

Lorenzo! since eternal is at hand,
To swallow time's ambitions; as the vast
Leviathan, the bubbles vain, that ride
High on the foaming billow; what avail
High titles, high descent, attainments high,
If unattain'd our highest? O Lorenzo!
What lofty thoughts, these elements above,
What towering hopes, what sallies from the Sun,
What grand surveys of destiny divine,
And pompous presage of unfathom'd fate,
Should roll in bosoms, where a spirit burns,
Bound for eternity! In bosoms read
By him, who foibles in archangels sees!
On human hearts he bends a jealous eye,
And marks, and in Heaven's register enrolls
The rise and progress of each option there;
Sacred to doomsday! That the page unfolds,
And spreads us to the gaze of gods and men.

And what an option, O Lorenzo! thine?
This world! and this, unrivall'd by the skies!
A world, where lust of pleasure, grandeur, gold,

Three demons that divide its' realm between them,
With strokes alternate buffet to and fro
Man's restless heart, their sport, their flying ball;
Till, with the giddy circle sick and tir'd,
It pants for peace, and drops into despair.
Such is the world Lorenzo sets above
That glorious promise angels were esteem'd
Too mean to bring; a promise, their Ador'd
Descended to communicate, and press,
By counsel, miracle, life, death, on man.
Such is the world Lorenzo's wisdom wooes,
And on its thorny pillow seeks repose;
A pillow, which, like opiates ill-prepar'd,
Intoxicates, but not composes; fills
The visionary mind with gay chimeras,
All the wild trash of sleep, without the rest;
What unfeign'd travel, and what dreams of joy!

How frail, men, things! how momentary, both!
Fantastic chase of shadows hunting shades!
The gay, the busy, equal, though unlike;
Equal in wisdom, differently wise! [wastes,
Through flowery meadows, and through drossy
One bustling, and one dancing, into death.
There's not a day, but, to the man of thought,
Betrays some secret, that throws new reproach
On life, and makes him sick of seeing more.
The scenes of business tell us — "What are men;"
The scenes of pleasure — "What is all beside;"
There, others we despise; and here, ourselves.
Amid disgust eternal, dwells delight?
'T is approbation strikes the string of joy.

What wondrous prize has kindled this career,
Stuns with the din, and chokes us with the dust,
On life's gay stage, one inch above the grave?
The proud run up and down in quest of eyes;
The sensual, in pursuit of something worse;
The grave, of gold; the politic, of power;
And all, of other butterflies, as vain!
As eddies draw things frivolous and light,
How is man's heart by vanity drawn in;
On the swift circle of returning toys, [gulf'd;
Whirl'd, straw-like, round and round, and then, in
Where gay delusion darkens to despair!

"This is a beaten track." — Is this a track
Should not be beaten? never beat enough,
Till enough learn'd the truths it would inspire.
Shall truth be silent, because folly frowns?
Turn the world's history; what find we there,
But fortune's sports, or nature's cruel claims,
Or woman's artifice, or man's revenge,
And endless inhumanities on man?
Fame's trumpet seldom sounds, but, like the knell,
It brings bad tidings: how it hourly blows
Man's misadventures round the listening world!
Man is the tale of narrative old time;
Sad tale; which high as Paradise begins;
As if, the toil of travel to delude,
From stage to stage, in his eternal round,
The days, his daughters, as they spin our hours
On fortune's wheel, where accident unthought,
Oft, in a moment, snaps life's strongest thread,
Each, in her turn, some tragic story tells,
With, now-and-then, a wretched farce between,
And fills his chronicle with human woes.

Time's daughters, true as those of men, deceive us;
Not one, but puts some cheat on all mankind:
While in their father's bosom, not yet ours,
They flatter our fond hopes; and promise much
Of amiable; but hold him not o'erwise,
Who dares to trust them; and laugh round the year.

At still-confiding, still-confounded, man,
 Confiding, though confounded; hoping on,
 Untaught by trial, unconvinc'd by proof,
 And ever-looking for the never-seen.
 Life to the last, like harden'd felons, lies;
 Nor owns itself a cheat, till it expires.
 Its little joy goes out by one and one,
 And leaves poor man, at length, in perfect night;
 Night darker than what, now, involves the Pole.

O thou, who dost permit these ills to fall [mourn!
 For gracious ends, and wouldst that man should
 O thou, whose hands this goodly fabric fram'd,
 Who know'st it best, and wouldst that man should know!

What is this sublunary world? A vapour;
 A vapour all it holds; itself, a vapour;
 From the damp bed of chaos, by thy beam
 Exhal'd, ordain'd to swim its destin'd hour
 In ambient air, then melt, and disappear.
Earth's days are number'd, nor remote her doom;
 As mortal, though less transient, than her sons;
 Yet they dote on her, as the world and they
 Were both eternal, solid; thou, a dream.

They dote! on what? Immortal views apart,
 A region of outsides! a land of shadows!
 A fruitful field of flowery promises!
 A wilderness of joy! perplex'd with doubts,
 And sharp with thorns! a troubled ocean, spread
 With bold adventurers, their all on board!
 No second hope, if here their fortune frowns;
 Frown soon it must. Of various rates they sail,
 Of ensigns various; all alike in this,
All restless, anxious; tost with hopes, and fears,
 In calmest skies; obnoxious all to storm;
 And stormy the most general blast of life:
All bound for happiness; yet few provide
 The chart of knowledge, pointing where it lies;
 Or virtue's helm, to shape the course design'd:
All, more or less, capricious fate lament,
 Now lifted by the tide, and now resorb'd,
 And further from their wishes than before:
All, more or less, against each other dash,
 To mutual hurt, by gusts of passion driven,
 And suffering more from folly, than from fate.

Ocean! thou dreadful and tumultuous home
 Of dangers, at eternal war with man!
Death's capital, where most he domineers,
 With all his chosen terrors frowning round,
 (Though lately feasted high at Albion's cost *)
 Wide-opening, and loud-roaring still for more!
 Too faithful mirror! how dost thou reflect
 The melancholy face of human life!

The strong resemblance tempts me further still:
 And, haply, Britain may be deeper struck
 By moral truth, in such a mirror seen,
 Which Nature holds for ever at her eye.

Self-flatter'd, unexperienc'd, high in hope,
 When young, with sanguine cheer and streamers gay,
 We cut our cable, launch into the world,
 And fondly dream each wind and star our friend;
 All, in some darling enterprise embark'd:
 But where is he can fathom its extent?
 Amid a multitude of artless hands,
Ruin's sure perquisite! her lawful prize!
 Some steer aright; but the black blast blows hard,
 And puffs them wide of hope: with hearts of proof,
 Full against wind and tide, some win their way;
 And when strong effort has deserv'd the port,

And tugg'd it into view, 't is won! 't is lost!
 Though strong their oar, still stronger is their fate:
 They strike; and while they triumph, they expire.
 In stress of weather, most; some sink outright;
 O'er them, and o'er their names, the billows close;
 To-morrow knows not they were ever born.
Others a short memorial leave behind,
 Like a flag floating, when the bark 's ingulf'd;
 It floats a moment, and is seen no more:
 One Caesar lives; a thousand are forgot.
 How few, beneath auspicious planets born,
 (Darlings of Providence! fond Fate's elect!)
 With swelling sails make good the promis'd port,
 With all their wishes freighted; yet e'en these,
 Freight with all their wishes, soon complain;
 Free from misfortune, not from nature free,
 They still are men; and when is man secure?
 As fatal time, as storm! the rush of years
 Beats down their strength; their numberless escapes
 In ruin end: and, now, their proud success
 But plants new terrors on the victor's brow:
 What pain to quit the world, just made their own!
 Their nest so deeply down'd, and built so high!
 Too low they build, who build beneath the stars.

Woe then apart, (if woe apart can be
 From mortal man,) and fortune at our nod,
 The gay! rich! great, triumphant! and august!
 What are they? — The most happy (strange to say!)
 Convince me most of human misery;
 What are they? Smiling wretches of to-morrow!
 More wretched, then, than e'er their slave can be;
 Their treacherous blessings, at the day of need,
 Like other faithless friends, unmask, and sting:
Then, what provoking indigence in wealth!
 What aggravated impotence in power!
 High titles, then, what insult of their pain!
 If that sole anchor, equal to the waves,
Immortal hope! defies not the rude storm,
 Takes comfort from their foaming billows' rage,
 And makes a welcome harbour of the tomb.

Is this a sketch of what thy soul admires?
 "But here," thou say'st, "the miseries of life
 Are huddled in a group. A more distinct
 Survey, perhaps, might bring thee better news."
 Look on life's stages: they speak plainer still;
 The plainer they, the deeper wilt thou sigh.
 Look on thy lovely boy; in him behold
 The best that can befall the best on Earth;
 The boy has virtue by his mother's side:
 Yes, on Florello look: a father's heart
 Is tender, though the man's is made of stone;
 The truth, through such a medium seen, may make
 Impression deep, and fondness prove thy friend.

Florello, lately cast on this rude coast
 A helpless infant; now, a heedless child;
 To poor Clarissa's throes, thy care succeeds;
 Care full of love, and yet severe as hate!
 O'er thy soul's joy how oft thy fondness frowns!
 Needful austerities his will restrain;
 As thorns fence-in the tender plant from harm.
 As yet, his reason cannot go alone;
 But asks a sterner nurse to lead it on.
 His little heart is often terrified;
 The blush of morning, in his cheek, turns pale;
 Its pearly dew-drop trembles in his eye;
 His harmless eye! and drowns an angel there.
 Ah! what avails his innocence? The task
 Enjoin'd must discipline his early powers;
 He learns to sigh, ere he is known to sin;
 Guiltless, and sad! a wretch before the fall!

How cruel this ! more cruel to forbear.
 Our nature such, with necessary pains,
 We purchase prospects of precarious peace :
 Though not a father, this might steal a sigh.
 Suppose him disciplin'd aright (if not,
 'T will sink our poor account to poorer still) ;
 Ripe from the tutor, proud of liberty,
 He leaps enclosure, bounds into the world !
 The world is taken, after ten years' toil,
 Like ancient Troy ; and all its joys his own.
 Alas ! the world 's a tutor more severe ;
 Its lessons hard, and ill deserve his pains ;
 Unteaching all his virtuous nature taught,
 Or books (fair virtue's advocates !) inspir'd.

For who receives him into public life ?
Men of the world, the terræ-filial breed,
 Welcome the modest stranger to their sphere,
 (Which glitter'd long, at distance, in his sight,)
 And, in their hospitable arms, enclose :
 Men, who think nought so strong of the romance,
 So rank knight-errant, as a real friend :
 Men, that act up to reason's golden rule,
 All weakness of affection quite subdued :
 Men, that would blush at being thought sincere,
 And feign, for glory, the few faults they want ;
 That love a lie, where truth would pay as well ;
 As if, to them, vice shone her own reward.

Lorenzo ! canst thou bear a shocking sight ?
Such, for Florello's sake, 't will now appear :
 See, the steel'd files of season'd veterans,
 Train'd to the world, in burnish'd falsehood bright ;
 Deep in the fatal stratagems of peace ;
 All soft sensation, in the throng, rubb'd off ;
 All their keen purpose, in politeness sheath'd ;
 His friends eternal — during interest ;
 His foes implacable — when worth their while ;
 At war with every welfare, but their own ;
 As wise as Lucifer, and half as good ;
 And by whom none, but Lucifer, can gain —
 Naked, through these (so common fate ordains),
 Naked of heart, his cruel course he runs,
 Stung out of all, most amiable in life, [feign'd ;
 Prompt truth, and open thought, and smiles un-
 Affection, as his species, wide diffus'd ;
 Noble presumptions to mankind's renown ;
 Ingenuous trust, and confidence of love.

These claims to joy (if mortals joy might claim)
 Will cost him many a sigh ; till time, and pains,
 From the slow mistress of this school, experience,
 And her assistant, pausing, pale, distrust,
 Purchase a dear-bought clue to lead his youth
 Through serpentine obliquities of life,
 And the dark labyrinth of human hearts.
 And happy ! if the clue shall come so cheap ;
 For, while we learn to fence with public guilt,
 Full oft we feel its foul contagion too,
 If less than heavenly virtue is our guard.
 Thus, a strange kind of curst necessity
 Brings down the sterling temper of his soul,
 By base alloy, to bear the current stamp,
Below call'd wisdom ; sinks him into safety,
 And brands him into credit with the world ;
 Where specious titles dignify disgrace,
 And Nature's injuries are arts of life ;
 Where brighter reason prompts to bolder crimes ;
 And heavenly talents make infernal hearts ;
 That unsurmountable extreme of guilt !

Poor Machiavel ! who labour'd hard his plan,
 Forgot, that genius need not go to school ;
 Forgot, that man, without a tutor wise,

His plan had practis'd long before 't was writ.
 The world 's all title-page ; there 's no contents ;
 The world 's all face ; the man who shows his heart,
 Is hooted for his nudities, and scorn'd.
 A man I knew, who liv'd upon a smile,
 And well it fed him ; he look'd plump and fair ;
 While rankest venom foam'd through every vein.
 Lorenzo ! what I tell thee, take not ill !
 Living, he fawn'd on every fool alive ;
 And, dying, curs'd the friend on whom he liv'd.
 To such proficient thou art half a saint.
 In foreign realms (for thou hast travell'd far)
 How curious to contemplate two state-rooks,
 Studious their nests to feather in a trice,
 With all the necromantics of their art,
 Playing the game of faces on each other,
 Making court sweet-meats of their latent gall,
 In foolish hope to steal each other's trust ;
 Both cheating, both exulting, both deceiv'd ;
 And sometimes both (let Earth rejoice) undone !
 Their parts we doubt not ; but be that their shame ;
 Shall men of talents, fit to rule mankind,
 Stoop to mean wiles, that would disgrace a fool ;
 And lose the thanks of those few friends they serve ?
 For who can thank the man he cannot see ?

Why so much cover ? It defeats itself. [hearts
 Ye, that know all things ! know ye not, men's
 Are therefore known, because they are conceal'd ?
 For why conceal'd ? — The cause they need not tell
 I give him joy, that 's awkward at a lie ;
 Whose feeble nature truth keeps still in awe ;
 His incapacity is his renown.

'T is great, 't is manly, to disdain disguise ;
 It shows our spirit, or it proves our strength.
 Thou say'st, " 'T is needful : " is it therefore right ?
 Howe'er, I grant it some small sign of grace,
 To strain at an excuse : and wouldst thou then
 Escape that cruel need ? Thou may'st, with ease ;
 Think no post needful that demands a knave.
 When late our civil helm was shifting hands,
 So Pulteney thought : think better if you can.

But this, how rare ! the public path of life
 Is dirty : — yet, allow that dirt is due,
 It makes the noble mind more noble still :
 The world 's no neuter ; it will wound, or save ;
 Or virtue quench, or indignation fire. [man : "
 You say, " The world, well known, will make a
 The world, well-known, will give our hearts to Heaven,

Or make us demons, long before we die.

To show how fair the world, thy mistress, shines,
 Take either part, sure ills attend the choice ;
 Sure, though not equal, detriment ensues.
 Not virtue's self is deify'd on Earth ;
 Virtue has her relapses, conflicts, foes ;
 Foes, that ne'er fail to make her feel their hate.
 Virtue has her peculiar set of pains.
 True friends to virtue, last, and least, complain ;
 But if they sigh, can others hope to smile ?
 If wisdom has her miseries to mourn,
 How can poor folly lead a happy life ?
 And if both suffer, what has Earth to boast,
 Where he most happy, who the least laments ?
 Where much, much patience, the most envied state,
 And some forgiveness, needs the best of friends ?
 For friend, or happy life, who looks not higher,
 Of neither shall he find the shadow here.

The world's sworn advocate, without a fee,
 Lorenzo smartly, with a smile, replies ;

us far thy song is right ; and all must own

virtue has her peculiar set of pains. —
 And joys peculiar who to vice denies?
 Vice it is, with nature to comply:
 Pride, and sense, are so predominant,
 To check, not overcome them, makes a saint.
 Can Nature in a plainer voice proclaim
 Pleasure, and glory, the chief good of man?"

Can pride, and sensuality, rejoice?
 From purity of thought, all pleasure springs;
 And, from an humble spirit, all our peace.
 Ambition, pleasure! let us talk of these:
 Of these, the Porch, and Academy, talk'd;
 Of these, each following age had much to say.
 Yet, unexhausted, still the needful theme.
 Who talks of these, to mankind all at once
 He talks; for were the saints from either free?
 Are these thy refuge? — No: these rush upon thee;
 Thy vitals seize, and, vulture-like, devour:
 'I'll try if I can pluck thee from thy rock,
 Prometheus! from this barren ball of Earth;
 If reason can unchain thee, thou art free.

And, first, thy Caucasus, ambition, calls;
 Mountain of torments! eminence of woes!
 Of courted woes! and courted through mistake!
 'Tis not ambition charms thee; 'tis a cheat
 Will make thee start, as H — at his Moor.
 Dost grasp at greatness? First, know what it is:
 Think'st thou thy greatness in distinction lies?
 Not in the feather, wave it e'er so high,
 By fortune stuck, to mark us from the throng,
 's glory lodg'd: 'tis lodg'd in the reverse;
 In that which joins, in that which equals, all,
 The monarch and his slave; — "a deathless soul,
 Unbounded prospect, and immortal kin,
 A Father-God, and brothers in the skies;"
 Elder, indeed, in time; but less remote
 In excellence, perhaps, than thought by man;
 Why greater what can fall, than what can rise?

If still delirious, now, Lorenzo! go;
 And with thy full-blown brothers of the world,
 Throw scorn around thee; cast it on thy slaves;
 Thy slaves and equals: how scorn cast on them
 Rebounds on thee! If man is mean, as man,
 Art thou a god? If fortune makes him so,
 Beware the consequence: a maxim that,
 Which draws a monstrous picture of mankind,
 Where, in the drapery, the man is lost;
 Externals fluttering, and the soul forgot.
 Thy greatest glory, when dispos'd to boast,
 Boast that aloud, in which thy servants share.

We wisely strip the steed we mean to buy:
 Judge we, in their caparisons, of men?
 It nought avails thee, where, but what, thou art;
 All the distinctions of this little life
 Are quite cutaneous, foreign to the man.
 When, through death's streights, Earth's subtle
 serpents creep,
 Which wriggle into wealth, or climb renown.
 As crooked Satan the forbidden tree,
 They leave their party-colour'd robe behind,
 All that now glitters, while they rear aloft
 Their brazen crests, and hiss at us below.
 Of fortune's fucus strip them, yet alive:
 Strip them of body, too; nay, closer still,
 Away with all, but moral, in their minds;
 And let what then remains impose their name,
 Pronounce them weak, or worthy; great, or mean.
 How mean that snuff of glory fortune lights,
 And death puts out! Dost thou demand a test,
 A test, at once, infallible, and short,

Of real greatness? That man greatly lives,
 Whate'er his fate, or fame, who greatly dies;
 High-flush'd with hope, where heroes shall despair.
 If this a true criterion, many courts,
 Illustrious, might afford but few grandees.

Th' Almighty, from his throne, on Earth surveys
 Nought greater, than an honest, humble heart;
 An humble heart, his residence! pronounc'd
 His second seat; and rival to the skies.
 The private path, the secret acts of men,
 If noble, far the noblest of our lives!
 How far above Lorenzo's glory sits
 Th' illustrious master of a name unknown;
 Whose worth unrivall'd, and unwitness'd, loves
 Life's sacred shades, where gods converse with men;
 And peace, beyond the world's conception, smiles!
 As thou (now dark), before we part, shalt see.

But thy great soul this skulking glory scorns.
 Lorenzo's sick, but when Lorenzo's seen;
 And when he shrugs at public business, lies.
 Denied the public eye, the public voice,
 As if he liv'd on others' breath, he dies.
 Fain would he make the world his pedestal;
 Mankind the gazers, the sole figure, he.
 Knows he, that mankind praise against their will,
 And mix as much detraction as they can?
 Knows he, that faithless fame her whisper has,
 As well as trumpet? That his vanity
 Is so much tickled from not hearing all?
 Knows this all-knower, that from itch of praise,
 Or, from an itch more sordid, when he shines,
 Taking his country by five hundred ears,
 Senates at once admire him, and despise,
 With modest laughter lining loud applause,
 Which makes the smile more mortal to his fame?
 His fame, which (like the mighty Cæsar), crown'd
 With laurels, in full senate, greatly falls,
 By seeming friends, that honour, and destroy.
 We rise in glory, as we sink in pride:
 Where boasting ends, there dignity begins:
 And yet, mistaken beyond all mistake,
 The blind Lorenzo's proud — of being proud;
 And dreams himself ascending in his fall.

An eminence, though fancy'd, turns the brain:
 All vice wants hellebore; but of all vice,
 Pride loudest calls, and for the largest bowl;
 Because, unlike all other vice, it flies,
 In fact, the point in fancy most pursued.
 Who court applause, oblige the world in this;
 They gratify man's passion to refuse.
 Superior honour, when assum'd, is lost;
 E'en good men turn banditti, and rejoice,
 Like Kouli-Kan, in plunder of the proud.

Though somewhat disconcerted, steady still
 To the world's cause, with half a face of joy,
 Lorenzo cries — "Be, then, ambition cast;
 Ambition's dearer far stands unimpeach'd,
 Gay pleasure! proud ambition is her slave;
 For her, he soars at great, and hazards ill;
 For her, he fights, and bleeds, or overcomes;
 And paves his way, with crowns, to reach her smile:
 Who can resist her charms?" — Or, should? Lorenzo!

What mortal shall resist, where angels yield?
 Pleasure's the mistress of ethereal powers;
 For her contend the rival gods above;
 Pleasure's the mistress of the world below;
 And well it was for man, that pleasure charms;
 How would all stagnate, but for pleasure's ray!
 How would the frozen stream of action cease!

What is the pulse of this so busy world?
The love of pleasure: that, through every vein,
Throws motion, warmth; and shuts out death from life.

Though various are the tempers of mankind,
Pleasure's gay family hold all in chains:
Some most affect the black; and some, the fair;
Some honest pleasure court; and some, obscene.
Pleasures obscene are various, as the throng
Of passions, that can err in human hearts;
Mistake their objects, or transgress their bounds.
Think you there's but one whoredom? Whoredom,
all,

But when our reason licenses delight:
Dost doubt, Lorenzo? Thou shalt doubt no more.
Thy father chides thy gallantries, yet hugs
An ugly common harlot, in the dark;
A rank adulterer with others' gold!
And that hag, vengeance, in a corner, charms.
Hatred her brothel has, as well as love,
Where horrid epicures debauch in blood.
Whate'er the motive, pleasure is the mark:
For her, the black assassin draws his sword;
For her, dark statesmen trim their midnight lamp,
To which no single sacrifice may fall;
For her, the saint abstains; the miser starves;
The Stoic proud, for pleasure, pleasure scorn'd;
For her, affliction's daughters grief indulge,
And find, or hope, a luxury in tears;
For her, guilt, shame, toil, danger, we defy;
And with an aim voluptuous, rush on death.
Thus universal her despotic power!

And as her empire wide, her praise is just.
Patron of pleasure! doater on delight!
I am thy rival! pleasure I profess;
Pleasure the purpose of my gloomy song.
Pleasure is nought but virtue's gayer name:
I wrong her still, I rate her worth too low;
Virtue the root, and pleasure is the flower;
And honest Epicurus' foes were fools.

But this sounds harsh, and gives the wise offence!
If o'erstrain'd wisdom still retains the name,
How knits austerity her cloudy brow,
And blames, as bold, and hazardous, the praise
Of pleasure, to mankind, unprais'd, too dear!
Ye modern Stoics! hear my soft reply;
Their senses men will trust: we can't impose;
Or, if we could, is imposition right?
Own honey sweet; but, owning, add this sting;
"When mixt with poison, it is deadly too."
Truth never was indebted to a lie.
Is nought but virtue to be prais'd, as good?
Why then is health preferr'd before disease?
What nature loves is good without our leave;
And where no future drawback cries, "Beware,"
Pleasure, though not from virtue, should prevail.
'T is balm to life, and gratitude to Heaven;
How cold our thanks for bounties unenjoy'd!
The love of pleasure is man's eldest-born,
Born in his cradle, living to his tomb:
Wisdom, her younger sister, though more grave,
Was meant to minister, and not to mar,
Imperial pleasure, queen of human hearts.
Lorenzo! thou, her majesty's renown'd,
Though uncoif'd counsel, learned in the world!
Who think'st thyself a Murray, with disdain
May'st look on me. Yet, my Demosthenes!
Canst thou plead pleasure's cause as well as I?
Know'st thou her nature, purpose, parentage?
Attend my song, and thou shalt know!

And know thyself; and know thyself to be
(Strange truth) the most abstemious man alive.
Tell not Calista; she will laugh thee dead;
Or send thee to her hermitage with L. —
Absurd presumption! Thou who never knew'st
A serious thought! shalt thou dare dream of joy?
No man e'er found a happy life by chance;
Or yawn'd it into being, with a wish;
Or, with the shout of grovelling appetite,
E'er smelt it out, and grubb'd it from the dirt.
An art it is, and must be learnt; and learnt
With unremitting effort, or be lost;
And leaves us perfect blockheads, in our bliss.
The clouds may drop down titles and estates;
Wealth may seek us; but wisdom must be sought;
Sought before all; but (how unlike all else
We seek on Earth!) 't is never sought in vain.

First, pleasure's birth, rise, strength, and grandeur see.

Brought forth by wisdom, nurs'd by discipline,
By patience taught, by perseverance crown'd,
She rears her head majestic; round her throne,
Erected in the bosom of the just,
Each virtue, listed, forms her manly guard.
For what are virtues? (formidable name!)
What, but the fountain, or defence, of joy? {mands.
Why, then, commanded? Need mankind com-
At once to merit, and to make, their bliss?
Great Legislator! scarce so great, as kind!
If men are rational, and love delight,
Thy gracious law but flatters human choice;
In the transgression lies the penalty;
And they the most indulge, who most obey.

Of pleasure, next, the final cause explore;
Its mighty purpose, its important end.
Not to turn human brutal, but to build
Divine on human, pleasure came from Heaven.
In aid to reason was the goddess sent;
To call up all its strength by such a charm.
Pleasure, first, succours virtue; in return,
Virtue gives pleasure an eternal reign.
What, but the pleasure of food, friendship, faith,
Supports life natural, civil, and divine?
'T is from the pleasure of repast, we live;
'T is from the pleasure of applause, we please;
'T is from the pleasure of belief, we pray;
(All prayer would cease, if unbeliev'd the priest;)
It serves ourselves, our species, and our God;
And to serve more, is past the sphere of man.
Glide, then, for ever, pleasure's sacred stream!
Through Eden, as Euphrates ran, it runs,
And fosters every growth of happy life;
Makes a new Eden where it flows; — but such
As must be lost, Lorenzo! by thy fall. {see,
"What mean I by thy fall?" — Thou 'lt shortly
While pleasure's nature is at large display'd;
Already sung her origin, and ends.
Those glorious ends, by kind, or by degree,
When pleasure violates, 't is then a vice,
And vengeance too; it hastens into pain.
From due refreshment, life, health, reason, joy,
From wild excess, pain, grief, distraction, death;
Heaven's justice, this proclaims, and that her love.
What greater evil can I wish my foe,
Than his full draught of pleasure, from a cask
Unbroach'd by just authority, ungaug'd
By temperance, by reason unrefin'd?
A thousand demons lurk within the lee.
Heaven, others, and ourselves! uninjur'd these,
Sink deep; the deeper, then, the more divine:

Angels are angels, from indulgence there ;
'T is unrepenting pleasure makes a god.

Dost think thyself a god from other joys ?
A victim rather ! shortly sure to bleed.
The wrong must mourn : can Heaven's appointments fail ?

Can man outwit Omnipotence ? Strike out
A self-wrought happiness unmeant by him
Who made us, and the world we would enjoy ?
Who forms an instrument, ordains from whence
Its dissonance, or harmony, shall rise.
Heaven bade the soul this mortal frame inspire :
Bade virtue's ray divine inspire the soul
With unprecipitous flows of vital joy ;
And, without breathing, man as well might hope
For life, as without piety, for peace.

" Is virtue, then, and piety the same ?"
No ; piety is more ; 't is virtue's source ;
Mother of every worth, as that of joy.
Men of the world this doctrine ill digest :
They smile at piety ; yet boast aloud
Good-will to men ; nor know they strive to part
What nature joins ; and thus confute themselves.
With piety begins all good on Earth ;
'T is the first-born of rationality.

Conscience, her first law broken, wounded lies ;
Enfeebled, lifeless, impotent to good ;
A feign'd affection bounds her utmost power.
Some we can't love, but for the Almighty's sake ;
A foe to God was ne'er true friend to man ;
Some sinister intent taints all he does ;
And, in his kindest actions, he 's unkind.

On piety, humanity is built ;
And on humanity, much happiness ;
And yet still more on piety itself.
A soul in commerce with her God is Heaven ;
Feels not the tumults and the shocks of life ;
The whirls of passions, and the strokes of heart.
A Deity believ'd, is joy begun ;
A Deity ador'd, is joy advanc'd ;
A Deity belov'd, is joy matur'd.
Each branch of piety delight inspires ;
Faith builds a bridge from this world to the next,
O'er death's dark gulf, and all its horror hides ;
Praise, the sweet exhalation of our joy,
That joy exalts, and makes it sweeter still ;
Prayer ardent opens Heaven, lets down a stream
Of glory on the consecrated hour
Of man, in audience with the Deity.
Who worships the Great God, that instant joins
The first in Heaven, and sets his foot on Hell.

Lorenzo ! when wast thou at church before ?
Thou think'st the service long : but is it just ?
Though just, unwelcome ; thou hadst rather tread
Unhallow'd ground ; the Muse, to win thine ear,
Must take an air less solemn. She complies.
Good conscience ! at the sound the world retires ;
Verse disaffects it, and Lorenzo smiles ;
Yet has she her seraglio full of charms ;
And such as age shall heighten, not impair.
Art thou dejected ? Is thy mind o'ercast ?
Amid her fair-ones, thou the fairest choose, [truth ;
To chase thy gloom. — " Go, fix some weighty
Chain down some passion ; do some generous good ;
Teach ignorance to see, or grief to smile ;
Correct thy friend ; befriend thy greatest foe ;
Or with warm heart, and confidence divine, [thee."
Spring up, and lay strong hold on him who made
Thy gloom is scatter'd, sprightly spirits flow ;
Though wither'd is thy vine, and harp unstrung.

Dost call the bowl, the viol, and the dance,
Loud mirth, mad laughter ? Wretched comforters !
Physicians ! more than half of thy disease.
Laughter, though never censur'd yet as sin,
(Pardon a thought that only seems severe,)
Is half-immortal : is it much indulg'd ?
By venting spleen, or dissipating thought,
It shows a scorner, or it makes a fool ;
And sins, as hurting others, or ourselves.
'T is pride, or emptiness, applies the straw,
That tickles little minds to mirth effuse !
Of grief approaching, the portentous sign !
The house of laughter makes a house of woe.
A man triumphant is a monstrous sight ;
A man dejected is a sight as mean.
What cause for triumph, where such ills abound ?
What for dejection, where presides a power,
Who call'd us into being to be blest ?
So grieve, as conscious grief may rise to joy ;
So joy, as conscious joy to grief may fall.
Most true, a wise man never will be sad ;
But neither will sonorous, bubbling mirth,
A shallow stream of happiness betray :
Too happy to be sportive, he 's serene.

Yet wouldst thou laugh (but at thy own expense),
This counsel strange should I presume to give —
" Retire, and read thy Bible, to be gay."
There truths abound of sovereign aid to peace ;
Ah ! do not prize them less, because inspir'd,
As thou, and thine, are apt and proud to do.
If not inspir'd, that pregnant page had stood,
Time's treasure ; and the wonder of the wise !
Thou think'st, perhaps, thy soul alone at stake ;
Alas ! — Should men mistake thee for a fool ; —
What man of taste for genius, wisdom, truth, —
Though tender of thy fame, could interpose ?
Believe me, sense, here, acts a double part,
And the true critic is a Christian too.

But these, thou think'st, are gloomy paths to joy.
True joy in sunshine ne'er was found at first ;
They, first, themselves offend, who greatly please ;
And travel only gives us sound repose.
Heaven sells all pleasure ; effort is the price ;
The joys of conquest are the joys of man ;
And glory the victorious laurel spreads
O'er pleasure's pure, perpetual, placid stream.

There is a time, when toil must be preferr'd,
Or joy, by mistim'd fondness, is undone.
A man of pleasure is a man of pains.
Thou wilt not take the trouble to be blest.
False joys, indeed, are born from want of thought :
From thoughts full bent, and energy, the true ;
And that demands a mind in equal poise,
Remote from gloomy grief and glaring joy.
Much joy not only speaks small happiness,
But happiness that shortly must expire.
Can joy, unbottom'd in reflection, stand ?
And, in a tempest, can reflection live ?
Can joy, like thine, secure itself an hour ?
Can joy, like thine, meet accident unshock'd ?
Or ope the door to honest poverty ?
Or talk with threatening death, and not turn pale ?
In such a world, and such a nature, these
Are needful fundamentals of delight ;
These fundamentals give delight indeed ;
Delight, pure, delicate, and durable ;
Delight, unshaken, masculine, divine ;
A constant, and a sound, but serious joy.

Is joy the daughter of severity ?
It is ; — yet far my doctrine from severe.

"Rejoice for ever:" it becomes a man:
Exalts, and sets him nearer to the gods.

"Rejoice for ever!" Nature cries, "Rejoice!"

And drinks to man, in her nectareous cup,
Mixt up of delicates for every sense;
To the great Founder of the bounteous feast,
Drinks glory, gratitude, eternal praise;
And he that will not pledge her, is a churl.
Ill firmly to support, good fully taste,
Is the whole science of felicity:

Yet sparing pledge: her bowl is not the best
Mankind can boast. — "A rational repast;
Exertion, vigilance, a mind in arms,
A military discipline of thought,
To foil temptation in the doubtful field;
And ever-waking ardour for the right."

'T is these first give, then guard, a cheerful heart.
Nought that is right, think little; well aware,
What reason bids, God bids; by his command
How aggrandiz'd, the smallest thing we do!
Thus, nothing is insipid to the wise:
To thee, insipid all, but what is mad;
Joys season'd high, and tasting strong of guilt.

"Mad!" (thou reply'st, with indignation fir'd)
"Of ancient sages proud to tread the steps,
I follow nature." — Follow nature still,
But look it be thine own: is conscience, then,
No part of nature? Is she not supreme?
Thou regicide! O raise her from the dead!
Then follow nature, and resemble God.

When, spite of conscience, pleasure is pursued,
Man's nature is unnaturally pleas'd;
And what 's unnatural is painful too
At intervals, and must disgust e'en thee!
The fact thou know'st; but not, perhaps, the cause.
Virtue's foundations with the world's were laid;
Heaven mixt her with our make, and twisted close
Her sacred interests with the strings of life.
Who breaks her awful mandate, shocks himself,
His better self; and is it greater pain,
Our soul should murmur, or our dust repine?
And one, in their eternal war, must bleed.

If one must suffer, which should least be spar'd?
The pains of mind surpass the pains of sense:
Ask, then, the gout, what torment is in guilt.
The joys of sense to mental joys are mean:
Sense on the present only feeds; the soul
On past, and future, forages for joy.
'T is hers, by retrospect, through time to range;
And forward time's great sequel to survey.
Could human courts take vengeance on the mind,
Axes might rust, and racks and gibbets fall:
Guard then, thy mind, and leave the rest to fate.

Lorenzo! wilt thou never be a man?
The man is dead, who for the body lives,
Lur'd, by the beating of his pulse, to list
With every lust that wars against his peace:
And sets him quite at variance with himself.
Thyself, first, know; then love: a self there is
Of virtue fond, that kindles at her charms.
A self there is, as fond of every vice,
While every virtue wounds it to the heart:
Humility degrades it, justice robs,
Blest bounty beggars it, fair truth betrays,
And god-like magnanimity destroys.
This self, when rival to the former, scorn;
When not in competition, kindly treat;
Defend it, feed it: — but when virtue bids,
Toss it or to the fowls, or to the flames.

And why? 'T is love of pleasure bids thee bleed;
Comply, or own self-love extinct, or blind.

For what is vice? Self-love in a mistake:
A poor blind merchant buying joys too dear.
And virtue, what? 'T is self-love in her wits,
Quite skilful in the market of delight.
Self-love's good sense is love of that dread power,
From whom herself, and all she can enjoy.
Other self-love is but disguis'd self-hate;
More mortal than the malice of our foes;
A self-hate, now, scarce felt; then felt full-sore,
When being curst; extinction, loud implor'd;
And every thing preferr'd to what we are.

Yet this self-love Lorenzo makes his choice:
And, in this choice triumphant, boasts of joy.
How is his want of happiness betray'd,
By disaffection to the present hour!
Imagination wanders far afield:
The future pleases: why? The present pains —
"But that 's a secret." Yes, which all men know;
And know from thee, discover'd unawares.
Thy ceaseless agitation, restless roll
From cheat to cheat, impatient of a pause;
What is it? — 'T is the cradle of the soul,
From instinct sent, to rock her in disease,
Which her physician, reason, will not cure.
A poor expedient! yet thy best; and while
It mitigates thy pain, it owns it too.

Such are Lorenzo's wretched remedies!
The weak have remedies; the wise have joys.
Superior wisdom is superior bliss.
And what sure mark distinguishes the wise?
Consistent wisdom ever wills the same;
Thy fickle wish is ever on the wing.
Sick of herself, is folly's character;
As wisdom's is, a modest self-applause.
A change of evils is thy good supreme;
Nor, but in motion, canst thou find thy rest.
Man's greatest strength is shown in standing still.
The first sure symptom of a mind in health
Is rest of heart, and pleasure felt at home.
False pleasure from abroad her joys imports;
Rich from within, and self-sustain'd, the true;
The true is fixt, and solid as a rock;
Slippery the false, and tossing, as the wave.
This, a wild wanderer on Earth, like Cain;
That, like the fabled, self-enamour'd boy,
Home-contemplation her supreme delight;
She dreads an interruption from without.
Smit with her own condition; and the more
Intense she gazes, still it charms the more.

No man is happy, till he thinks, on Earth
There breathes not a more happy than himself:
Then envy dies, and love o'erflows on all;
And love o'erflowing makes an angel here.
Such angels, all, entitled to repose
On him who governs fate: though tempest frowns,
Though nature shakes, how soft to lean on Heaven!
To lean on him, on whom archangels lean!
With inward eyes, and silent as the grave,
They stand collecting every beam of thought,
Till their hearts kindle with divine delight;
For all their thoughts, like angels, seen of old
In Israel's dream, come from, and go to, Heaven:
Hence, are they studious of sequester'd scenes;
While noise, and dissipation, comfort thee.

Were all men happy, revelings would cease,
That opiate for inquietude within.
Lorenzo! never man was truly blest,

But it compos'd, and gave him such a cast,
As folly might mistake for want of joy.
A cast, unlike the triumph of the proud ;
A modest aspect, and a smile at heart.
O for a joy from thy Philander's spring !
A spring perennial, rising in the breast,
And permanent, as pure ! no turbid stream
Of rapturous exultation, swelling high ;
Which, like land-floods, impetuous pour awhile,
Then sink at once, and leave us in the mire.
What does the man, who transient joy prefers ?
What, but prefer the bubbles to the stream ?

Vain are all sudden sallies of delight ;
Convulsions of a weak, distemper'd joy.
Joy 's a fixt state ; a tenure, not a start.
Bliss there is none, but unprecarious bliss :
That is the gem : sell all, and purchase that.
Why go a-begging to contingencies,
Not gain'd with ease, nor safely lov'd, if gain'd ?
At good fortuitous, draw back, and pause ;
Suspect it ; what thou canst ensure, enjoy ;
And nought but what thou giv'st thyself, is sure.
Reason perpetuates joy that reason gives,
And makes it as immortal as herself :
To mortals, nought immortal, but their worth.

Worth, conscious worth ! should absolutely reign ;
And other joys ask leave for their approach ;
Nor, unexamined, ever leave obtain.
Thou art all anarchy ; a mob of joys
Wage war, and perish in intestine broils ;
Not the least promise of internal peace !
No bosom-comfort ! or unborrow'd bliss !
Thy thoughts are vagabonds ; all outward-bound,
Mid sands, and rocks, and storms, to cruise for pleasure ;

If gain'd, dear-bought ; and better miss'd than gain'd.
Much pain must expiate what much pain procur'd.
Fancy, and sense, from an infected shore,
Thy cargo bring ; and pestilence the prize.
Then, such thy thirst, (insatiable thirst !
By fond indulgence but inflam'd the more !)
Fancy still cruises, when poor sense is tir'd.

Imagination is the Paphian shop,
Where feeble happiness, like Vulcan, lame,
Bids foul ideas, in their dark recess,
And hot as Hell (which kindled the black fires),
With wanton art, those fatal arrows form,
Which murder all thy time, health, wealth, and fame.
Wouldst thou receive them, other thoughts there are,
On angel-wing, descending from above,
Which these, with art divine, would counter-work,
And form celestial armour for thy peace.

In this is seen imagination's guilt ;
But who can count her follies ? She betrays thee,
To think in grandeur there is something great.
For works of curious art, and ancient fame,
Thy genius hungers, elegantly pain'd ;
And foreign climes must cater for thy taste.
Hence, what disaster ! — Though the price was paid,
That persecuting priest, the Turk of Rome,
Whose foot (ye gods !) though cloven, must be kiss'd,
Detain'd thy dinner on the Latian shore ;
(Such is the fate of honest Protestants !)
And poor magnificence is starv'd to death.
Hence just resentment, indignation, ire !
Be pacified ; if outward things are great,
'T is magnanimity great things to scorn ;
Pompous expenses, and parades august,
And courts, that insalubrious soil to peace.
True happiness ne'er enter'd at an eye ;

True happiness resides in things unseen.
No smiles of fortune ever blest the bad,
Nor can her frowns rob innocence of joys ;
That jewel wanting, triple crowns are poor :
So tell his holiness, and be reveng'd.

Pleasure, we both agree, is man's chief good ;
Or only contest, what deserves the name.
Give pleasure's name to nought, but what has pass'd
Th' authentic seal of reason, (which, like Yorke, Demurs on what it passes,) and defies
The tooth of Time ; when past, a pleasure still ;
Dearer on trial, lovelier for its age,
And doubly to be priz'd, as it promotes
Our future, while it forms our present, joy.
Some joys the future overcast ; and some
Throw all their beams that way, and gild the tomb.
Some joys endear eternity ; some give
Abhor'd annihilation dreadful charms.
Are rival joys contending for thy choice ?
Consult thy whole existence, and be safe ;
That oracle will put all doubt to flight.
Short is the lesson, though my lecture long,
Be good — and let Heaven answer for the rest.

Yet, with a sigh o'er all mankind, I grant
In this our day of proof, our land of hope,
The good man has his clouds that intervene ;
Clouds, that obscure his sublunary day,
But never conquer : e'en the best must own,
Patience, and resignation, are the pillars
Of human peace on Earth. The pillars, these :
But those of Seth not more remote from thee,
Till this heroic lesson thou hast learnt ;
To frown at pleasure, and to smile in pain.
Fir'd at the prospect of unclouded bliss,
Heaven in reversion, like the Sun, as yet
Beneath th' horizon, cheers us in this world ;
It sheds, on souls susceptible of light,
The glorious dawn of our eternal day.

" This," says Lorenzo, " is a fair harangue :
But can harangues blow back strong Nature's
stream ;

Or stem the tide Heaven pushes through our veins,
Which sweeps away man's impotent resolves,
And lays his labour level with the world ?"

Themselves men make their comment on mankind ;
And think nought is, but what they find at home :
Thus weakness to chimera turns the truth.
Nothing romantic has the Muse prescrib'd.
Above *, Lorenzo saw the man of Earth,
The mortal man ; and wretched was the sight.
To balance that, to comfort, and exalt,
Now see the man immortal : him, I mean,
Who lives as such ; whose heart, full bent on Heaven,
Leans all that way, his bias to the stars.
The world's dark shades, in contrast set, shall raise
His lustre more ; though bright, without a soil :
Observe his awful portrait, and admire ;
Nor stop at wonder ; imitate, and live.

Some angel guide my pencil, while I draw,
What nothing less than angel can exceed !
A man on Earth devoted to the skies ;
Like ships in seas, while in, above the world.

With aspect mild, and elevated eye,
Behold him seated on a mount serene,
Above the fogs of sense, and passion's storm ;
All the black cares, and tumults, of this life,
Like harmless thunders, breaking at his feet,
Excite his pity, not impair his peace.

* In a former Night.

Earth's genuine sons, the sceptred, and the slave,
A mingled mob! a wandering herd! he sees,
Bewilder'd in the vale; in all unlike!
His full reverse in all! what higher praise?
What stronger demonstration of the right?

The present all their care; the future, his.
When public welfare calls, or private want,
They give to fame; his bounty he conceals.
Their virtues varnish nature; his exalt.
Mankind's esteem they court; and he, his own.
Theirs, the wild chase of false felicities;
His, the compos'd possession of the true.
Alike throughout is his consistent peace,
All of one colour, and an even thread;
While party-colour'd shreds of happiness,
With hideous gaps between, patch up for them
A madman's robe; each puff of fortune blows
The tatters by, and shows their nakedness.

He sees with other eyes than theirs: where they
Behold a sun, he spies a Deity:
What makes them only smile, makes him adore.
Where they see mountains, he but atoms sees;
An empire, in his balance, weighs a grain.
They things terrestrial worship, as divine:
His hopes immortal blow them by, as dust,
That dims his sight and shortens his survey,
Which longs, in infinite, to lose all bound.
Titles and honours (if they prove his fate)
He lays aside to find his dignity;
No dignity they find in aught besides.
They triumph in externals (which conceal Man's real glory), proud of an eclipse.
Himself too much he prizes to be proud,
And nothing thinks so great in man, as man.
'Too dear he holds his interest, to neglect
Another's welfare, or his right invade;
Their interest, like a lion, lives on prey.
They kindle at the shadow of a wrong;
Wrong he sustains with temper, looks on Heaven,
Nor stoops to think his injurer his foe; [peace.
Nought, but what wounds his virtue, wounds his
A cover'd heart their character defends;
A cover'd heart denies him half his praise.
With nakedness his innocence agrees;
While their broad foliage testifies their fall.
Their no-joys end, where his full feast begins:
His joys create, theirs murder, future bliss.
To triumph in existence, his alone;
And his alone, triumphantly to think
His true existence is not yet begun.
His glorious course was, yesterday, complete;
Death, then, was welcome; yet life still is sweet.

But nothing charms Lorenzo, like the firm
Undaunted breast—And whose is that high praise?
They yield to pleasure, though they danger brave,
And show no fortitude, but in the field;
If there they show it, 't is for glory shown;
Nor will that cordial always man their hearts.
A cordial his sustains that cannot fail;
By pleasure unsubdued, unbroke by pain,
He shares in that Omnipotence he trusts.
All-bearing, all-attempting, till he falls;
And when he falls, writes VICI on his shield.
From magnanimity, all fear above;
From nobler recompense, above applause;
Which owes to man's short out-look all its charms.

Backward to credit what he never felt,
Lorenzo cries, — "Where shines this miracle?
From what root rises this immortal man?"

A root that grows not in Lorenzo's ground;
The root dissect, nor wonder at the flower.

He follows nature (not like thee*) and shows us
An uninverted system of a man.
His appetite wears reason's golden chain,
And finds, in due restraint, its luxury.
His passion, like an eagle well reclaim'd,
Is taught to fly at nought, but infinite.
Patient his hope, unanxious is his care,
His caution fearless, and his grief (if grief
The gods ordain) a stranger to despair.
And why? — Because, affection, more than meet.
His wisdom leaves not disengag'd from Heaven.
Those secondary goods that smile on Earth,
He, loving in proportion, loves in peace.
They most the world enjoy, who least admire.
His understanding 'scapes the common cloud
Of fumes, arising from a boiling breast.
His head is clear, because his heart is cool,
By worldly competitions uninflam'd.
The moderate movements of his soul admit
Distinct ideas, and matur'd debate,
An eye impartial, and an even scale;
Whence judgment sound, and unrepenting choice.
Thus, in a double sense, the good are wise;
On its own dunghill, wiser than the world.
What, then, the world? It must be doubly weak.
Strange truth! as soon would they believe their Creed.

Yet thus it is; nor otherwise can be;
So far from aught romantic, what I sing.
Bliss has no being, virtue has no strength,
But from the prospect of immortal life.
Who think Earth all, or (what weighs just the same
Who care no further, must prize what it yields;
Fond of its fancies, proud of its parades.
Who thinks Earth nothing, can't its charms admire
He can't a foe, though most malignant, hate,
Because that hate would prove his greater foe.
'T is hard for them (yet who so loudly boast
Good-will to men?) to love their dearest friend;
For may not he invade their good supreme,
Where the least jealousy turns love to gall?
All shines to them, that for a season shines.
Each act, each thought, he questions, "What is weight,

Its colour what, a thousand ages hence?"
And what it there appears, he deems it now.
Hence, pure are the recesses of his soul.
The god-like man has nothing to conceal.
His virtue, constitutionally deep,
Has habit's firmness, and affection's flame;
Angels, allied, descend to feed the fire;
And death, which others slays, makes him a god.

And now, Lorenzo! bigot of this world!
Wont to disdain poor bigots caught by Heaven!
Stand by thy scorn, and be reduc'd to nought:
For what art thou?—Thou boaster! while thy glare,
Thy gaudy grandeur, and mere worldly worth,
Like a broad mist, at distance, strikes us most;
And like a mist, is nothing when at hand;
His merit, like a mountain, on approach,
Swells more, and rises nearer to the skies,
By promise now, and by possession soon,
(Too soon, too much, it cannot be) his own.

From this thy just annihilation rise,
Lorenzo! rise to something, by reply.
The world, thy client, listens, and expects;
And longs to crown thee with immortal praise.

* See p. 588.

Canst thou be silent? No; for wit is thine;
 And wit talks most, when least she has to say,
 And reason interrupts not her career.
 She 'll say — That mists above the mountains rise;
 And, with a thousand pleasantries, amuse;
 She 'll sparkle, puzzle, flutter, raise a dust,
 And fly conviction, in the dust she rais'd.

Wit, how delicious to man's dainty taste!
 'T is precious, as the vehicle of sense;
 But, as its substitute, a dire disease.
 Pernicious talent! flatter'd by the world,
 By the blind world, which thinks the talent rare.
 Wisdom is rare, Lorenzo! wit abounds;
Passion can give it; sometimes wine inspires
 The lucky flash; and madness rarely fails.
 Whatever cause the spirit strongly stirs,
 Confers the bays, and rivals thy renown.
 For thy renown, 't were well, was this the worst;
Chance often hits it; and, to pique the more,
 See dulness, blundering on vivacities,
 Shakes her sage head at the calamity,
 Which has expos'd, and let her down to thee.
 But wisdom, awful wisdom! which inspects,
 Discerns, compares, weighs, separates, infers,
 Seizes the right, and holds it to the last;
 How rare! in senates, synods, sought in vain;
 Or, if there found, 't is sacred to the few;
 While a lewd prostitute to multitudes,
 Frequent, as fatal, wit: in civil life,
Wit makes an enterpriser; sense, a man.
Wit hates authority; commotion loves,
 And thinks herself the lightning of the storm.
 In states, 't is dangerous; in religion, death:
 Shall wit turn Christian, when the dull believe?
Sense is our helmet, wit is but the plume;
 The plume exposes, 't is our helmet saves.
Sense is the diamond, weighty, solid, sound;
 When cut by wit, it casts a brighter beam;
 Yet, wit apart, it is a diamond still.
Wit, widow'd of good sense, is worse than nought;
 It hoists more sail to run against a rock.
 Thus, a half-Chesterfield is quite a fool;
 Whom dull fools scorn, and bless their want of wit.

How ruinous the rock I warn thee, shun,
 Where Syrens sit, to sing thee to thy fate!
 A joy, in which our reason bears no part,
 Is but a sorrow tickling, ere it stings.
 Let not the cooings of the world allure thee;
 Which of her lovers ever found her true?
 Happy! of this bad world who little know: —
 And yet, we much must know her, to be safe.
 To know the world, not love her, is thy point;
 She gives but little, nor that little, long.
 There is, I grant, a triumph of the pulse;
 A dance of spirits, a mere froth of joy;
 Our thoughtless agitation's idle child,
 That mantles high, that sparkles and expires,
 Leaving the soul more vapid than before.
 An animal ovation! such as holds
 No commerce with our reason, but subsists
 On juices, through the well-ton'd tubes, well
 strain'd;
 A nice machine! scarce ever tun'd aright;
 And when it jars — thy Syrens sing no more,
 Thy dance is done; the demi-god is thrown (Short apotheosis!) beneath the man,
 In coward gloom immers'd, or fell despair.

Art thou yet dull enough despair to dread,
 And startle at destruction? If thou art,
 Accept a buckler, take it to the field;

(A field of battle is this mortal life!)
 When danger threatens, lay it on thy heart;
 A single sentence proof against the world;
 "Soul, body, fortune! every good pertain
 To one of these; but prize not all alike;
 The goods of fortune to the body's health,
 Body to soul, and soul submit to God."
 Wouldst thou build lasting happiness? Do this;
 The invert'd pyramid can never stand.

Is this truth doubtful? It outshines the Sun;
 Nay the Sun shines not, but to show us this,
 The single lesson of mankind on Earth.
 And yet — yet what? — No news! mankind is mad.
 Such mighty numbers list against the right,
 (And what can't numbers, when bewitch'd, achieve)
 They talk themselves to something like belief,
 That all Earth's joys are theirs: as Athens' foe
 Grinn'd from the port, on every sail his own.

They grin; but wherefore? and how long laugh?
 Half ignorance, their mirth; and half, a lie;
 To cheat the world, and cheat themselves, any smile.

Hard either task! The most abandon'd own,
 That others, if abandon'd, are undone:
 Then for themselves, the moment reason wakes,
 (And Providence denies it long repose,)
 O how laborious is their gaiety!

They scarce can swallow their ebullient spleen,
 Scarce muster patience to support the farce,
 And pump sad laughter till the curtain falls.
 Scarce, did I say? Some cannot sit it out;
 Oft their own daring hands the curtain draw,
 And show us what their joy, by their despair.
 The clotted hair! gor'd breast! blaspheming eye!
 Its impious fury still alive in death!
 Shut, shut the shocking scene. — But Heaven denies
 A cover to such guilt; and so should man.
 Look round, Lorenzo! see the reeking blade,
 Th' envenom'd phial, and the fatal ball;
 The strangling cord, and suffocating stream;
 The loathsome rottenness, and foul decays
 From raging riot (slower suicides!)
 And pride in these, more execrable still!
 How horrid all to thought! — But horrors, these,
 That vouch the truth; and aid my feeble song.
 From vice, sense, fancy, no man can be blest:
 Bliss is too great, to lodge within an hour:
 When an immortal being aims at bliss,
 Duration is essential to the name.

O for a joy from reason! joy from that,
 Which makes man man; and, exercis'd aright,
 Will make him more: a bounteous joy! that gives,
 And promises; that weaves, with art divine,
 The richest prospect into present peace:
 A joy ambitious! Joy in common held
 With thrones ethereal, and their greater far;
 A joy high-privileg'd from chance, time, death!
 A joy, which death shall double, judgment crown!
 Crown'd higher, and still higher, at each stage,
 Through blest eternity's long day: yet still,
 Not more remote from sorrow, than from him,
 Whose lavish hand, whose love stupendous, pours
 So much of Deity on guilty dust.
 There, O my Lucia! may I meet thee there,
 Where not thy presence can improve my bliss!

Affects not this the sages of the world?
 Can nought affect them, but what fools them too?
 Eternity, depending on an hour, [praise.
 Makes serious thought man's wisdom, joy, and

Nor need you blush (though sometimes your designs

May shun the light) at your designs on Heaven :
Sole point ! where over-bashful is your blame.

Are you not wise ? — You know you are : yet hear
One truth, amid your numerous schemes, mislaid,
Or overlook'd, or thrown aside, if seen ;

“ Our schemes to plan by this world, or the next,
Is the sole difference between wise and fool.”

All worthy men will weigh you in this scale ;
What wonder then, if they pronounce you light ?
Is their esteem alone not worth your care ?

Accept my simple scheme, of common sense ; [own.
Thus, save your fame, and make two worlds your

The world replies not ; — but the world persists ;
And puts the cause off to the longest day,
Planning evasions for the day of doom.

So far, at that re-hearing, from redress,
They then turn witnesses against themselves :

Hear that, Lorenzo ! nor be wise to-morrow.

Haste, haste ! A man, by nature, is in haste ;

For who shall answer for another hour ?

'T is highly prudent, to make one sure friend ;

And that thou canst not do, this side the skies.

Ye sons of Earth ! (nor willing to be more !)
Since veræ you think from priestcraft somewhat free,
Thus, in an age so gay, the Muse plain truths (Truths, which, at church, you might have heard in prose)

Has ventur'd into light ; well-pleas'd the verse

Should be forgot, if you the truths retain :

And crown her with your welfare, not your praise.

But praise she need not fear : I see my fate ;

And headlong leap, like Curtius, down the gulf,

Since many an ample volume, mighty tome,

Must die ; and die unwept ; O thou minute,

Devoted page ! go forth among thy foes ;

Go nobly proud of martyrdom for truth,

And die a double death : mankind, incens'd,

Denies thee long to live : nor shalt thou rest

When thou art dead ; in Stygian shades arraign'd

By Lucifer, as traitor to his throne,

And bold blasphemer of his friend — the world ;

The world, whose legions cost him slender pay,

And volunteers around his banner swarm ;

Prudent, as Prussia, in her zeal for Gaul !

“ Are all, then, fools ?” Lorenzo cries — Yea, all,

But such as hold this doctrine (new to thee) ;

“ The mother of true wisdom is the will ;”

The noblest intellect, a fool without it.

World-wisdom much has done, and more may do,

In arts and sciences, in wars and peace ;

But art and science, like thy wealth, will leave thee,

And make thee twice a beggar at thy death.

This is the most indulgence can afford ; —

“ Thy wisdom all can do, but — make thee wise.”

Nor think this censure is severe on thee :

Satan, thy master, I dare call a dunce.

NIGHT THE NINTH AND LAST.

THE CONSOLATION.

CONTAINING, AMONG OTHER THINGS,

- I. A Moral Survey of the Nocturnal Heavens.
- II. A Night Address to the Deity.

HUMBLY INSCRIBED TO

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE, ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.

— Fatis contraria fata rependens. — VIRG.

As when a traveller, a long day past
In painful search of what he cannot find,
At night's approach, content with the next cot,
There ruminates, awhile, his labour lost ;
Then cheers his heart with what his fate affords,
And chants his sonnet to deceive the time,
Till the due season calls him to repose :
Thus I, long-travell'd in the ways of men,
And dancing, with the rest, the giddy mase,
Where disappointment smiles at hope's career ;
Warn'd by the languor of life's evening ray,
At length have hous'd me in an humble shed ;
Where, future wandering banish'd from my thought,
And waiting, patient, the sweet hour of rest,
I chase the moments with a serious song.

Song soothes our pains ; and age has pains to soothe.

When age, care, crime, and friends embrac'd at heart, [shade,

Torn from my bleeding breast, and death's dark
Which hovers o'er me, quench th' ethereal fire ;
Canst thou, O Night ! indulge one labour more ?
One labour more indulge ! then sleep, my strain !
Till, haply, wak'd by Raphael's golden lyre,
Where night, death, age, care, crime, and sorrow,
cease ;

To bear a part in everlasting lays ;
Though far, far higher set, in aim, I trust,
Symphonious to this humble prelude here.

Has not the Muse asserted pleasures pure,
Like those above ; exploding other joys ?
Weigh what was urg'd, Lorenzo ! fairly weigh ;
And tell me, hast thou cause to triumph still ?
I think, thou wilt forbear a boast so bold.
But if, beneath the favour of mistake,
Thy smile's sincere ; not more sincere can be
Lorenzo's smile, than my compassion for him.
The sick in body call for aid ; the sick
In mind are covetous of more disease ;
And when at worst, they dream themselves quite well
To know ourselves diseas'd, is half our cure.
When nature's blush by custom is wip'd off,
And conscience, deaden'd by repeated strokes,
Has into manners naturaliz'd our crimes ;
The curse of curses is, our curse to love ;
To triumph in the blackness of our guilt,
(As Indians glory in the deepest jet,)
And throw aside our senses with our pence.

But grant no guilt, no shame, no least alloy ;
Grant joy and glory quite unsully'd shone ;
Yet, still, it ill deserves Lorenzo's heart.
No joy, no glory, glitters in thy sight,
But, through the thin partition of an hour,
I see its sables wove by dratiny ;

and that in sorrow buried ; this, in shame ;
While howling furies ring the doleful knell ;
And conscience, now so soft thou scarce canst hear
Her whisper, echoes her eternal peal.

Where, the prime actors of the last year's scene ;
Their port so proud, their buskin, and their plume ?
How many sleep, who kept the world awake
With lustre, and with noise ! Has Death proclaim'd
A truce, and hung his sated lance on high ?
It is brandish'd still ; nor shall the present year
Be more tenacious of her human leaf,
Or spread of feeble life a thinner fall.

But needless monuments to wake the thought ;
Life's gayest scenes speak man's mortality,
Though in a style more florid, full as plain,
As mausoleums, pyramids, and tombs.
What are our noblest ornaments, but deaths
Turn'd flatterers of life, in paint or marble,
The well-stain'd canvass, or the featur'd stone ?
Our fathers grace, or rather haunt, the scene.
By peoples her pavilion from the dead.

" Profest diversions ! — cannot these escape ? " —
Far from it : these present us with a shroud ;
And talk of death, like garlands o'er a grave.
As some bold plunderers, for bury'd wealth,
We ransack tombs for pastime ; from the dust
Call up the sleeping hero ; bid him tread
The scene for our amusement : how like gods
We sit ; and, wrapt in immortality,
Shed generous tears on wretches born to die ;
Their fate deploring, to forget our own !
What all the pomps and triumphs of our lives,
But legacies in blossom ? Our lean soil,
Luxuriant grown, and rank in vanities,
From friends interr'd beneath, a rich manure !
Like other worms, we banquet on the dead ;
Like other worms, shall we crawl on, nor know
Our present frailties, or approaching fate ?

Lorenzo ! such the glories of the world !
What is the world itself ? Thy world — a grave.
Where is the dust that has not been alive ?
The spade, the plough, disturb our ancestors ;
From human mould we reap our daily bread.
The globe around Earth's hollow surface shakes,
And is the ceiling of her sleeping sons.
O'er devastation we blind revels keep ;
Whole bury'd towns support the dancer's heel.
The moist of human frame the Sun exhales ;
Winds scatter through the mighty void the dry ;
Earth repossesses part of what she gave,
And the freed spirit mounts on wings of fire ;
Each element partakes our scatter'd spoils ;
As Nature, wide, our ruins spread : man's death
Inhabits all things, but the thought of man.

Nor man alone ; his breathing bust expires,
His tomb is mortal ; empires die : where now
The Roman ? Greek ? they stalk, an empty name !
Yet few regard them in this useful light ;
Though half our learning is their epitaph.
When down thy vale, unlock'd by midnight thought,
That loves to wander in thy sunless realms,
O Death ! I stretch my view ; what visions rise !
What triumphs ! toils imperial ! arts divine !
In wither'd laurels glide before my sight !
What lengths of far-fam'd ages, billow'd high
With human agitation, roll along
In unsubstantial images of air !
The melancholy ghosts of dead renown,
Whispering faint echoes of the world's applause,
With penitential aspect, as they pass,

All point at Earth, and hiss at human pride,
The wisdom of the wise, and prancings of the great.

But, O Lorenzo ! far the rest above,
Of ghastly nature, and enormous size,
One form assaults my sight, and chills my blood,
And shakes my frame. Of one departed world
I see the mighty shadow : oozy wreath
And dismal sea-weed crown her ; o'er her urn
Reclin'd, she weeps her desolated realms,
And bloated sons ; and, weeping, prophesies
Another's dissolution, soon, in flames.
But, like Cassandra, prophecies in vain ;
In vain, to many ; not, I trust, to thee.

For, know'st thou not, or art thou loth to know,
The great decree, the counsel of the skies ?
Deluge and conflagration, dreadful powers !
Prime ministers of vengeance ! chain'd in caves
Distinct, apart the giant furies roar ;
Apart ; or, such their horrid rage for ruin,
In mutual conflict would they rise, and wage
Eternal war, till one was quite devour'd.
But not for this ordain'd their boundless rage ;
When Heaven's inferior instruments of wrath,
War, famine, pestilence, are found too weak
To scourge a world for her enormous crimes,
These are let loose, alternate : down they rush,
Swift and tempestuous, from th' eternal throne,
With irresistible commission arm'd,
The world, in vain corrected, to destroy,
And ease creation of the shocking scene.

See'st thou, Lorenzo ! what depends on man ?
The fate of Nature ; as for man, her birth.
Earth's actors change Earth's transitory scenes,
And make creation groan with human guilt.
How must it groan, in a new deluge whelm'd,
But not of waters ! at the destin'd hour,
By the loud trumpet summon'd to the charge,
See, all the formidable sons of fire,
Eruptions, earthquakes, comets, lightnings, play
Their various engines ; all at once disgorge
Their blazing magazines ; and take, by storm,
This poor terrestrial citadel of man.

Amazing period ! when each mountain-height
Out-burns Vesuvius ; rocks eternal pour
Their melted mass, as rivers once they pour'd ;
Stars rush ; and final ruin fiercely drives
Her ploughshare o'er creation ! — while aloft,
More than astonishment ! if more can be !
Far other firmament than e'er was seen,
Than e'er was thought by man ! far other stars !
Stars animate, that govern these of fire ;
Far other sun ! — A sun, O how unlike
The babe at Bethlem ! how unlike the man
That groan'd on Calvary ! — Yet he it is ;
That Man of Sorrows ! O how chang'd ! what pomp !
In grandeur terrible, all Heaven descends !
And gods, ambitious, triumph in his train.
A swift archangel, with his golden wing,
As blots and clouds, that darken and disgrace
The scene divine, sweeps stars and suns aside.
And now, all dross remov'd, Heaven's own pure day,
Full on the confines of our ether, flames.
While (dreadful contrast !) far, how far beneath !
Hell, bursting, belches forth her blazing seas,
And storms sulphureous ; her voracious jaws
Expanding wide, and roaring for her prey.
Lorenzo ! welcome to this scene ; the last
In Nature's course ; the first in wisdom's thought.
This strikes, if aught can strike thee ; this awakes
The most supine ; this snatches man from death.

Rouse, rouse, Lorenzo, then, and follow me,
Where truth, the most momentous man can bear,
Loud calls my soul, and ardour wings her flight.
I find my inspiration in my theme;
The grandeur of my subject is my Muse.

At midnight, when mankind is wrapt in peace,
And worldly fancy feeds on golden dreams;
To give more dread to man's most dreadful hour,
At midnight, 't is presum'd this pomp will burst
From tenfold darkness; sudden as the spark
From smitten steel; from nitrous grain, the blaze.
Man, starting from his couch, shall sleep no more!
The day is broke, which never more shall close!
Above, around, beneath, amazement all!
Terror and glory join'd in their extremes!
Our God in grandeur, and our world on fire!
All Nature struggling in the pangs of death!
Dost thou not hear her? Dost thou not deplore
Her strong convulsions, and her final groan?
Where are we now? Ah me! the ground is gone
On which we stood: Lorenzo! while thou may'st,
Provide more firm support, or sink for ever! [late!
Where? How? From whence? Vain hope! it is too
Where, where, for shelter, shall the guilty fly,
When consternation turns the good man pale?

Great day! for which all other days were made;
For which Earth rose from chaos, man from Earth;
And an eternity, the date of Gods,
Descended on poor earth-created man!
Great day of dread, decision, and despair!
At thought of thee, each sublunary wish
Lets go its eager grasp, and drops the world;
And catches at each reed of hope in Heaven.
At thought of thee! — and art thou absent then?
Lorenzo! no; 't is here; it is begun; —
Already is begun the grand assize,
In thee, in all: deputed conscience scales
The dread tribunal, and forestalls our doom;
Forestalls; and, by forestalling, proves it sure.
Why on himself should man void judgment pass?
Is idle Nature laughing at her sons?
Who conscience sent, her sentence will support,
And God above assert that god in man.
Thrice happy they! that enter now the court
Heaven opens in their bosoms: but, how rare,
Ah me! that magnanimity, how rare!
What hero, like the man who stands himself;
Who dares to meet his naked heart alone;
Who hears intrepid, the full charge it brings,
Resolv'd to silence future murmurs there?
The coward flies; and, flying, is undone.
(Art thou a coward? No:) the coward flies;
'Thinks, but thinks slightly; asks, but fears to know;
Asks, "What is truth?" with Pilate; and retires;
Dissolves the court, and mingles with the throng;
Asylum sad! from reason, hope, and Heaven!

Shall all, but man, look out with ardent eye,
For that great day, which was ordain'd for man?
O day of consummation! mark supreme
(If men are wise) of human thought! nor least,
Or in the sight of angels, or their King!
Angels, whose radiant circles, height o'er height,
Order o'er order, rising, blaze o'er blaze,
As in a theatre, surround this scene,
Intent on man, and anxious for his fate.
Angels look out for thee; for thee, their Lord,
To vindicate his glory; and for thee,
Creation universal calls aloud,
To dis-involve the moral world, and give
To Nature's renovation brighter charms.

Shall man alone, whose fate, whose final fate,
Hangs on that hour, exclude it from his thought?
I think of nothing else; I see! I feel it!
All Nature, like an earthquake, trembling round!
All deities, like summer's swarms, on wing!
All basking in the full meridian blaze!
I see the Judge enthron'd! the flaming guard!
The volume open'd! open'd every heart!
A sun-beam pointing out each secret thought;
No patron! intercessor none! now past
The sweet, the clement, mediatorial hour!
For guilt no plea! to pain, no pause! no bound!
Inexorable, all! and all, extreme!

Nor man alone; the foe of God and man,
From his dark den, blaspheming, drags his chain,
And rears his brazen front, with thunder scarr'd:
Receives his sentence, and begins his hell.
All vengeance past, now, seems abundant grace:
Like meteors in a stormy sky, how roll
His baleful eyes; he curses whom he dreads;
And deems it the first moment of his fall.

'T is present to my thought! — and yet where is it?
Angels can't tell me; angels cannot guess
The period; from created beings lock'd
In darkness. But the process, and the place,
Are less obscure; for these may man inquire.
Say, thou great close of human hopes and fears!
Great key of hearts! great finisher of fates!
Great end! and great beginning! say, Where art thou?

Art thou in time, or in eternity?
Nor in eternity, nor time, I find thee.
These, as two monarchs, on their borders meet,
(Monarchs of all elaps'd, or unarriv'd!)
As in debate, how best their powers ally'd,
May swell the grandeur, or discharge the wrath,
Of him, whom both their monarchies obey.

Time, this vast fabric for him built (and doom'd
With him to fall) now bursting o'er his head;
His lamp, the Sun, extinguish'd; from beneath
The frown of hideous darkness, calls his sons
From their long slumber! from Earth's heaving womb,

To second birth! contemporary throng!
Rous'd at one call, upstart'd from one bed,
Prest in one crowd, appall'd with one amaze,
He turns them o'er, Eternity! to thee.
Then (as a king depos'd disdains to live)
He falls on his own scythe; nor falls alone;
His greatest foe falls with him; Time, and he
Who murder'd all Time's offspring, Death, expire.

Time was! Eternity now reigns alone!
Awful eternity! offended queen!
And her resentment to mankind, how just!
With kind intent, soliciting access,
How often has she knock'd at human hearts!
Rich to repay their hospitality,
How often call'd! and with the voice of God!
Yet bore repulse, excluded as a cheat!
A dream! while foulest foes found welcome there!
A dream, a cheat, now, all things, but her smile.

For, lo! her twiceten thousand gates thrown wide,
As thrice from Indus to the frozen Pole,
With banners streaming as the comet's blaze,
And clarions, louder than the deep in storms,
Sonorous as immortal breath can blow,
Pour forth their myriads, potentates, and powers,
Of light, of darkness; in a middle field,
Wide, as creation! populous, as wide!
A neutral region! there to mark th' event

Of that great drama, whose preceding scenes
 Detain'd them close spectators, through a length
 Of ages, ripening to this grand result;
 Ages, as yet unnumber'd, but by God;
 Who now pronouncing sentence, vindicates
 The rights of virtue, and his own renown.

Eternity, the various sentence past,
 Assigns the sever'd throng distinct abodes,
 Sulphureous, or ambrosial: what ensues?
 The deed predominant! the deed of deeds!
 Which makes a Hell of Hell, a Heaven of Heaven.
 The goddess, with determin'd aspect, turns
 Her adamant key's enormous size
 Through destiny's inextricable wards,
 Deep driving every bolt, on both their fates.
 Then, from the crystal battlements of Heaven,
 Down, down, she hurls it through the dark profound,
 Ten thousand thousand fathom; there to rust,
 And ne'er unlock her resolution more.
 The deep resounds; and Hell, through all her
 glooms,

Returns, in groans, the melancholy roar.

O how unlike the chorus of the skies!
 O how unlike those shouts of joy, that shake
 The whole ethereal! How the concave rings!
 Nor strange! when deities their voice exalt;
 And louder far, than when creation rose.
 To see creation's godlike aim, and end,
 So well accomplish'd! so divinely clos'd!
 To see the mighty dramatist's last act
 (As meet) in glory rising o'er the rest.
 No fancy'd god, a god indeed, descends,
 To solve all knots; to strike the moral home;
 To throw full day on darkest scenes of time;
 To clear, commend, exalt, and crown the whole.
 Hence, in one peal of loud, eternal praise,
 The charm'd spectators thunder their applause!
 And the vast void beyond, applause resounds.

What then am I? —

Amidst applauding worlds,
 And worlds celestial, is there found on Earth,
 A peevish, dissonant, rebellious string,
 Which jars on the grand chorus, and complains?
Censure on thee, Lorenzo! I suspend,
 And turn it on myself; how greatly due!
 All, all is right, by God ordain'd or done;
 And who, but God, resum'd the friends he gave?
 And have I been complaining, then, so long?
Complaining of his favours, pain, and death?
 Who, without pain's advice, would e'er be good?
 Who, without death, but would be good in vain?
 Pain is to save from pain; all punishment,
 To make for peace; and death to save from death;
 And second death, to guard immortal life;
 To rouse the careless, the presumptuous awe,
 And turn the tide of souls another way;
 By the same tenderness divine ordain'd,
 That planted Eden, and high-bloom'd for man
 A fairer Eden, endless, in the skies.

Heaven gives us friends to bless the present scene;
 Resumes them, to prepare us for the next.
 All evils natural are moral goods;
 All discipline, indulgence, on the whole.
 None are unhappy: all have cause to smile,
 But such as to themselves that cause deny.
 Our faults are at the bottom of our pains;
 Error, in acts, or judgment, is the source
 Of endless sighs: we sin, or we mistake;
 And Nature tax, when false opinion stings.
 Let impious grief be banish'd, joy indulg'd;

But chiefly then, when grief puts in her claim,
 Joy from the joyous, frequently betrays,
 Oft lives in vanity, and dies in woe.
 Joy, amidst ills, corroborates, exalts;
 'T is joy, and conquest; joy, and virtue too.
 A noble fortitude in ills, delights
 Heaven, Earth, ourselves; 't is duty, glory, peace.
Affliction is the good man's shining scene;
Prosperity conceals his brightest ray;
 As night to stars, woe lustre gives to man.
 Heroes in battle, pilots in the storm,
 And virtue in calamities, admire;
 The crown of manhood is a winter-joy;
 An evergreen, that stands the northern blast,
 And blossoms in the rigour of our fate.
 'T is a prime part of happiness, to know
 How much unhappiness must prove our lot;
 A part which few possess! I'll pay life's tax,
 Without one rebel murmur, from this hour,
 Nor think it misery to be a man;
 Who thinks it is, shall never be a God.
 Some ills we wish for, when we wish to live.

What spoke proud passion? — "Wish my being lost?"

Presumptuous! blasphemous! absurd! and false!
 The triumph of my soul is — That I am;
 And therefore that I may be — what? Lorenzo!
 Look inward, and look deep; and deeper still;
 Unfathomably deep our treasure runs
 In golden veins, through all eternity!
 Ages, and ages, and succeeding still
 New ages, where the phantom of an hour,
 Which courts, each night, dull slumber, for repair,
 Shall wake, and wonder, and exult, and praise,
 And fly through infinite, and all unlock;
 And (if deserv'd) by Heaven's redundant love,
 Made half-adorable itself, adore;
 And find, in adoration, endless joy!
 Where thou, not master of a moment here,
 Frail as the flower, and fleeting as the gale,
 May'st boast a whole eternity, enrich'd
 With all a kind Omnipotence can pour.
 Since Adam fell, no mortal, uninspir'd,
 Has ever yet conceiv'd, or ever shall,
 How kind is God, how great (if good) is man.
 No man too largely from Heaven's love can hope,
 If what is hop'd he labours to secure.

Ills? — there are none: — All-gracious! none
 from thee;

From man full many! numerous is the race
 Of blackest ills, and those immortal too,
 Begot by madness on fair liberty;
 Heaven's daughter, Hell-debauch'd! her hand alone
 Unlocks destruction to the sons of men,
 First barr'd by thine: high-wall'd with adamant,
 Guarded with terrors reaching to this world,
 And cover'd with the thunders of thy law;
 Whose threats are mercies, whose injunctions, guides,
 Assisting, not restraining, reason's choice;
 Whose sanctions, unavoidable results
 From Nature's course, indulgently reveal'd;
 If unreveal'd, more dangerous, nor less sure.
 Thus, an indulgent father warns his sons,
 "Do this; fly that" — nor always tells the cause;
 Pless'd to reward, as duty to his will,
 A conduct needful to their own repose.
 Great God of wonders! (if, thy love survey'd, Aught else the name of wonderful retains)

What rocks are these, on which to build our trust!
 Thy ways admit no blemish; none I find;
 Or this alone — “That none is to be found.”
 Not one, to soften censure's hardy crime;
 Not one, to palliate peevish grief's complaint,
 Who like a demon, murmuring from the dust,
 Dares into judgment call her Judge. — Supreme!
 For all I bless thee; most, for the severe;
 Her * death — my own at hand — the fiery gulf,
 That flaming bound of wrath omnipotent!
 It thunders; — but it thunders to preserve;
 It strengthens what it strikes; its wholesome dread
 Averts the dreaded pain; its hideous groans
 Join Heaven's sweet hallelujahs in thy praise,
 Great source of good alone! How kind in all!
 In vengeance kind! pain, death, gehenna, save.

Thus, in thy world material, Mighty Mind!
 Not that alone which solaces, and shines,
 The rough and gloomy, challenges our praise.
 The winter is as needful as the spring;
 The thunder, as the Sun; a stagnant mass
 Of vapours breeds a pestilential air;
 Nor more propitious the Favonian breeze
 To Nature's health, than purifying storms;
 The dread volcano ministers to good.
 Its smother'd flames might undermine the world.
 Loud Ætnas fulminate in love to man;
Comets good omens are when duly scann'd;
 And, in their use, eclipses learn to shine.

Man is responsible for ills receiv'd;
 Those we call wretched are a chosen band,
 Compell'd to refuge in the right, for peace.
 Amid my list of blessings infinite,
 Stand this the foremost, “That my heart has bled.”
 'T is Heaven's last effort of good will to man;
 When pain can't bless, Heaven quits us in despair.
 Who fails to grieve, when just occasion calls,
 Or grieves too much, deserves not to be blest;
 Inhuman, or effeminate, his heart;
Reason absolves the grief, which reason ends.
 May Heaven ne'er trust my friend with happiness,
 Till it has taught him how to bear it well,
 By previous pain; and made it safe to smile!
Such smiles are mine, and such may they remain;
 Nor hazard their extinctions, from excess.
 My change of heart a change of style demands;
 The consolation cancels the complaint,
 And makes a convert of my guilty song.
 And when o'erlabour'd, and inclin'd to breathe,
 A panting traveller some rising ground,
 Some small ascent, has gain'd, he turns him round,
 And measures with his eye the various vales,
 The fields, woods, meads, and rivers, he has past;
 And, satiate of his journey, thinks of home,
 Endear'd by distance, nor affects more toil;
 Thus I, though small, indeed, is that ascent
 The Muse has gain'd, review the paths she trod;
 Various, extensive, beaten but by few;
 And, conscious of her prudence in repose,
 Pause; and with pleasure meditate an end,
 Though still remote; so fruitful is my theme.
 Through many a field of moral, and divine,
 The muse has stray'd; and much of sorrow seen
 In human ways; and much of false and vain;
 Which none, who travel this bad road, can miss.
 O'er friends deceas'd full heartily she wept;
 Of love divine the wonders she display'd;
 Prov'd man immortal; show'd the source of joy;

* Lucia.

The grand tribunal rais'd; assign'd the bounds
 Of human grief; in few, to close the whole,
 The moral Muse has shadow'd out a sketch,
 Though not in form, nor with a Raphael-stroke,
 Of most our weakness needs believe, or do,
 In this our land of travel and of hope,
 For peace on Earth, or prospect of the skies.

What then remains? Much! much! a mighty debt thine:
 To be discharg'd: these thoughts, O Night! are
 From thee they came, like lovers' secret sighs,
 While others slept. So Cynthia (poets feign)
 In shadows veil'd, soft sliding from her sphere,
 Her shepherd cheer'd; of her enamour'd less,
 Than I of thee. — And art thou still unsung,
 Beneath whose brow, and by whose aid, I sing?
 Immortal silence! where shall I begin?
 Where end? Or how steal music from the spheres,
 To soothe their goddess?

O majestic Night!
 Nature's great ancestor! day's elder-born!
 And fated to survive the transient Sun!
 By mortals, and immortals, seen with awe!
 A starry crown thy raven brow adorns,
 An azure zone, thy waist; clouds, in Heaven's loom
 Wrought through varieties of shape and shade,
 In ample folds of drapery divine,
 Thy flowing mantleform; and Heaven throughout,
 Voluminously pour thy pompous train.
 Thy gloomy grandeurs (Nature's most august,
 Inspiring aspect!) claim a grateful verse;
 And, like a sable curtain starr'd with gold,
 Drawn o'er my labours past, shall close the scene.
 And what, O man! so worthy to be sung?
 What more prepares us for the songs of Heaven?
Creation, of archangels is the theme!
 What, to be sung, so needful? What so well
 Celestial joys prepare us to sustain?
 The soul of man, his face design'd to see
 Who gave these wonders to be seen by man,
 Has here a previous scene of objects great,
 On which to dwell; to stretch to that expanse
 Of thought, to rise to that exalted height
 Of admiration, to contract that awe,
 And give her whole capacities that strength,
 Which best may qualify for final joy.
 The more our spirits are enlarg'd on Earth,
 The deeper draught shall they receive of Heaven.

Heaven's King! whose face unveil'd consum-
 mates bliss;
 Redundant bliss! which fills that mighty void,
 The whole creation leaves in human hearts!
 Thou, who didst touch the lip of Jesse's son,
 Rapt in sweet contemplation of these fires,
 And set his harp in concert with the spheres;
 While of thy works material the supreme
 I dare attempt, assist my daring song:
 Loose me from Earth's enclosure, from the Sun's
Contracted circle set my heart at large;
 Eliminate my spirit, give it range
 Through provinces of thought yet unexplor'd;
 Teach me by this stupendous scaffolding,
 Creation's golden steps, to climb to thee.
 Teach me with art great Nature to controul,
 And spread a lustre o'er the shades of night.
 Feel I thy kind assent? and shall the Sun
 Be seen at midnight, rising in my song?
 Lorenzo! come, and warm thee: thou, whose heart,
 Whose little heart, is moor'd within a nook
 Of this obscure terrestrial, anchor weigh.

Another ocean calls, a nobler port ;
 I am thy pilot, I thy prosperous gale.
 Gainful thy voyage through yon azure main ;
 Main, without tempest, pirate, rock, or shore ;
 And whence thou mayst import eternal wealth ;
 And leave to beggar'd minds the pearl and gold.
 Thy travels dost thou boast o'er foreign realms ?
 Thou stranger to the world ! thy tour begin ;
 Thy tour through Nature's universal orb.
Nature delineates her whole chart at large,
 On soaring souls, that sail among the spheres ;
 And man how purblind, if unknown the whole !
 Who circles spacious Earth, then travels here,
 Shall own, he never was from home before !
 Come, my Prometheus *, from thy pointed rock
 Of false ambition if unchain'd, we 'll mount ;
 We 'll, innocently, steal celestial fire,
 And kindle our devotion at the stars ;
 A theft, that shall not chain, but set thee free.

Above our atmosphere's intestine wars,
 Rain's fountain-head, the magazine of hail ;
 Above the northern nests of feather'd snows,
 The brew of thunders, and the flaming forge
 That forms the crooked lightning ; above the caves
 Where infant tempests wait their growing wings,
 And tune their tender voices to that roar,
 Which soon, perhaps, shall shake a guilty world ;
 Above misconstrued omens of the sky,
 Far-travell'd comets' calculated blaze ;
 Elance thy thought, and think of more than man.
 Thy soul, till now, contracted, wither'd, shrunk,
 Blighted by blasts of Earth's unwholesome air,
 Will blossom here ; spread all her faculties
 To these bright ardours ; every power unfold,
 And rise into sublimities of thought.
Stars teach, as well as shine. At Nature's birth,
 Thus their commission ran — " Be kind to man."
 Where art thou, poor benighted traveller ! [fail.
 The stars will light thee, though the Moon should
 Where art thou, more benighted ! more astray !
 In ways immoral ? The stars call thee back ;
 And, if obey'd their counsel, set thee right.

This prospect vast, what is it ? — Weigh'd aright,
 'T is Nature's system of divinity,
 And every student of the night inspires.
 'T is elder scripture, writ by God's own hand :
 Scripture authentic ! uncorrupt by man.
 Lorenzo ! with my radius (the rich gift
 Of thought nocturnal !) I'll point out to thee
 Its various lessons ; some that may surprise
 An un-adept in mysteries of night ;
 Little, perhaps, expected in her school,
 Nor thought to grow on planet, or on star.
 Bulls, lions, scorpions, monsters here we feign ;
 Ourselves more monstrous, not to see what here
 Exists indeed ; — a lecture to mankind.

What read we here ? — Th' existence of a God ?
 Yes ; and of other beings, man above ;
 Natives of ether ! Sons of higher climes !
 And, what may move Lorenzo's wonder more,
 Eternity is written in the skies.
 And whose eternity ? — Lorenzo ! thine ;
 Mankind's eternity. Nor faith alone,
 Virtue grows here ; here springs the sovereign cure
 Of almost every vice ; but chiefly thine ;
Wrath, pride, ambition, and impure desire.

Lorenzo ! thou canst wake at midnight too,
 Though not on morals bent : ambition, pleasure !

Those tyrants I for thee so lately * fought,
 Afford their harass'd slaves but slender rest.
 Thou, to whom midnight is immoral noon,
 And the Sun's noon-tide blaze, prime dawn of day ;
 Not by thy climate, but capricious crime,
 Commencing one of our Antipodes !
 In thy nocturnal rove one moment halt,
 'Twixt stage and stage, of riot, and cabal ;
 And lift thine eye (if bold an eye to lift,
 If bold to meet the face of injur'd Heaven)
 To yonder stars : for other ends they shine,
 Than to light revellers from shame to shame,
 And, thus, be made accomplices in guilt.

Why from yon arch, that infinite of space,
 With infinite of lucid orbs replete,
 Which set the living firmament on fire,
 At the first glance, in such an overwhelm
 Of wonderful, on man's astonish'd sight,
 Rushes Omnipotence ? — To curb our pride ;
 Our reason rouse, and lead it to that power,
 Whose love lets down these silver chains of light ;
 To draw up man's ambition to himself,
 And bind our chaste affections to his throne.
 Thus the three virtues, least alive on Earth,
 And welcom'd on Heaven's coast with most applause,

An humble, pure, and heavenly-minded heart,
 Are here inspir'd : — And canst thou gaze too long ?

Nor stands thy wrath, depriv'd of its reproof,
 Or un-upbraided by this radiant choir.

The planets of each system represent
 Kind neighbours ; mutual amity prevails ;
 Sweet interchange of rays, receiv'd, return'd ;
 Enlightening, and enlighten'd ! All, at once
 Attracting, and attracted ! Patriot-like,
 None sins against the welfare of the whole ;
 But their reciprocal, unselfish aid,
 Affords an emblem of millennial love.
 Nothing in Nature, much less conscious being,
 Was e'er created solely for itself :
 Thus man his sovereign duty learns in this
Material picture of benevolence.

And know, of all our supercilious race,
 Thou most inflammable ! thou wasp of men !
 Man's angry heart, inspected, would be found
 As rightly set, as are the starry spheres ;
 'T is Nature's structure, broke by stubborn will,
 Breeds all that un-celestial discord there.
 Wilt thou not feel the bias Nature gave ?
 Canst thou descend from converse with the skies,
 And seize thy brother's throat ? — For what — a
clod,

An inch of earth ? The planets cry, " Forbear !"
 They chase our double darkness ; Nature's gloom,
 And (kinder still !) our intellectual night.

And see, Day's amiable sister sends
 Her invitation, in the softest rays
 Of mitigated lustre ; courts thy sight,
 Which suffers from her tyrant-brother's blaze.
Night grants thee the full freedom of the skies,
 Nor rudely reprimands thy lifted eye ;
 With gain, and joy, she bribes thee to be wise.
Night opes the noblest scenes, and sheds an awe,
 Which gives those venerable scenes full weight,
 And deep reception, in th' intender'd heart ;
 While light peeps through the darkness, like a spy ;
 And darkness shows its grandeur by the light.
 Nor is the profit greater than the joy,

If human hearts at glorious objects glow,
And admiration can inspire delight.

What speak I more, than I, this moment, feel?
With pleasing stupor first the soul is struck
(Stupor ordain'd to make her truly wise!)
Then into transport starting from her trance,
With love, and admiration, how she glows!
This gorgeous apparatus! this display!
This ostentation of creative power!
This theatre! — what eye can take it in?
By what divine enchantment was it rais'd,
For minds of the first magnitude to launch
In endless speculation, and adore?
One sun by day, by night ten thousand shine:
And light us deep into the Deity;
How boundless in magnificence and might!
O what a confluence of ethereal fires,
From urns unnumber'd, down the steep of Heaven,
Streams to a point, and centres in my sight!
Nor tarries there; I feel it at my heart.
My heart, at once, it humbles, and exalts;
Lays it in dust, and calls it to the skies.
Who sees it unexalted? or unaw'd?
Who sees it, and can stop at what is seen?
Material offspring of Omnipotence!
Inanimate, all-animating birth!
Work worthy him who made it! worthy praise!
All praise! praise more than human! nor deny'd
Thy praise divine! — But though man, drown'd in sleep,

Withholds his homage, not alone I wake;
Bright legions swarm unseen, and sing, unheard
By mortal ear, the glorious Architect,
In this his universal temple hung
With lustres, with innumerable lights,
That shed religion on the soul: at once,
The temple, and the preacher! O how loud
It calls devotion! genuine growth of night!

Devotion! daughter of astronomy!
An undevout astronomer is mad.
True, all things speak a God; but in the small,
Men trace out him; in great, he seizes man;
Seizes, and elevates, and wraps, and fills
With new inquiries, 'mid associates new.
Tell me, ye stars! ye planets! tell me, all
Ye starr'd, and planeted, inhabitants! What is it?
What are these sons of wonder? Say, proud arch,
(Within whose azure palaces they dwell),
Built with divine ambition! in disdain
Of limit built! built in the taste of Heaven!
Vast concave! ample dome! wast thou design'd
A meet apartment for the Deity? —
Not so; that thought alone thy state impairs,
Thy lofty sinks, and shallows thy profound,
And straitens thy diffusive; dwarfs the whole,
And makes an universe an orrery.

But when I drop mine eye, and look on man,
Thy right regain'd, thy grandeur is restor'd,
O Nature! wide flies off the expanding round.
As when whole magazines, at once, are fir'd,
The smitten air is hollow'd by the blow;
The vast dislosion dissipates the clouds;
Shock'd ether's hillows dash the distant skies;
Thus (but far more) th' expanding round flies off,
And leaves a mighty void, a spacious womb,
Might teem with new creation; re-inflam'd
Thy luminaries triumph, and assume
Divinity themselves. Nor was it strange,
Matter high-wrought to such surprising pomp,
Such god-like glory, stole the style of gods,

From ages dark, obtuse, and steep'd in sense;
For, sure, to sense, they truly are divine;
And half-absolv'd idolatry from guilt;
Nay, turn'd it into virtue. Such it was
In those, who put forth all they had of man
Unlost, to lift their thought, nor mounted higher;
But, weak of wings, on planets perch'd; and thought
What was their highest, must be their ador'd.

But they how weak, who could no higher mount!
And are there, then, Lorenzo! those, to whom
Unseen, and unexistent, are the same?
And if incomprehensible is join'd,
Who dare pronounce it madness, to believe?
Why has the mighty builder thrown aside
All measure in his work; stretch'd out his line
So far, and spread amazement o'er the whole?
Then (as he took delight in wide extremes)
Deep in the bosom of his universe,
Dropt down that reasoning mite, that insect, man,
To crawl, and gaze, and wonder at the scene? —
That man might ne'er presume to plead amazement
For disbelief of wonders in himself.
Shall God be less miraculous, than what
His hand has form'd? Shall mysteries descend
From un-mysterious? Things more elevate,
Be more familiar? Uncreated lie
More obvious than created, to the grasp
Of human thought? The more of wonderful
Is heard in him, the more we should assent.
Could we conceive him, God he could not be;
Or he not God, or we could not be men.
A God alone can comprehend a God;
Man's distance how immense! On such a theme,
Know this, Lorenzo! (seem it ne'er so strange)
Nothing can satisfy, but what confounds;
Nothing, but what astonishes, is true.
The scene thou seest, attests the truth I sing,
And every star sheds light upon thy creed.
These stars, this furniture, this coast of Heaven,
If but reported, thou hadst ne'er believ'd;
But thine eye tells thee, the romance is true.
The grand of Nature is th' Almighty's oath,
In reason's court, to silence unbelief.

How my mind, opening at this scene, imbibes
The moral emanations of the skies,
While nought, perhaps, Lorenzo less admires!
Has the Great Sovereign sent ten thousand worlds
To tell us, he resides above them all,
In glory's unapproachable recess?
And dare Earth's bold inhabitants deny
The sumptuous, the magnificent embassy
A moment's audience? Turn we, nor will bear
From whom they come, or what they would import
For man's emolument; sole cause that stoops
Their grandeur to man's eye? Lorenzo! rouse;
Let thought, awaken'd, take the lightning's wing,
And glance from east to west, from pole to pole.
Who sees, but is confounded, or convinc'd?
Renounces reason, or a God adores?
Mankind was sent into the world to see:
Sight gives the science needful to their peace;
That obvious science asks small learning's aid.
Wouldst thou on metaphysic pinions soar?
Or wound thy patience amid logic thorns?
Or travel history's enormous round?
Nature no such hard task enjoins: she gave
A make to man directive of his thought;
A make set upright, pointing to the stars,
As who shall say, "Read thy chief lesson there."
Too late to read this manuscript of Heaven,

When, like a parchment-scroll shrunk up by flames,
It folds Lorenzo's lesson from his sight.

Lesson how various! Not the God alone,
I see his ministers: I see, diffus'd
In radiant orders, essences sublime,
Of various offices, of various plume,
In heavenly liveries distinctly clad,
Azure, green, purple, pearl, or downy gold,
Or all commix'd; they stand, with wings outspread,
Listening to catch the master's least command,
And fly through Nature, ere the moment ends;
Numbers innumerable! — Well conceiv'd
By Pagan, and by Christian! O'er each sphere
Presides an angel, to direct its course,
And feed, or fan, its flames; or to discharge
Other high trusts unknown. For who can see
Such pomp of matter, and imagine, mind,
For which alone inanimate was made,
More sparingly dispens'd? That nobler son,
Far liker the great Sire! — 'T is thus the skies
Inform us of superiors numberless,
As much in excellence, above mankind,
As above Earth, in magnitude, the spheres.
These, as a cloud of witnesses, hang o'er us;
In a throng'd theatre are all our deeds;
Perhaps, a thousand demigods descend
On every beam we see, to walk with men.
Aweful reflection! Strong restraint from ill!

Yet, here, our virtue finds still stronger aid
From these ethereal glories sense surveys.
Something, like magic, strikes from this blue vault;
With just attention is it view'd? We feel
A sudden succour, unimplor'd, unthought;
Nature herself does half the work of man.
Seas, rivers, mountains, forests, deserts, rocks,
The promontory's height, the depth profound
Of subterranean, excavated grotts,
Black brow'd, and vaulted high, and yawning wide
From Nature's structure, or the scoop of Time,
If ample of dimension, vast of size, —
E'en these an aggrandizing impulse give;
Of solemn thought enthusiastic heights
E'en these infuse. — But what of vast in these?
Nothing; — or we must own the skies forgot.
Much less in art! — Vain art! Thou pigmy power!
How dost thou swell and strut, with human pride,
To show thy littleness! What childish toys,
Thy watery columns squirted to the clouds!
Thy basen'd rivers, and imprison'd seas!
Thy mountains moulded into forms of men!
Thy hundred-gated capitals! or those
Where three days' travel left us much to ride;
Gazing on miracles by mortals wrought,
Arches triumphal, theatres immense,
(Or nodding gardens pendent in mid-air!
Or temples proud to meet their Gods half-way!
Yet these affect us in no common kind.
What then the force of such superior scenes?
Enter a temple, it will strike an awe:
What awe from this the Deity has built!
A good man seen, though silent, counsel gives:
The touch'd spectator wishes to be wise:
In a bright mirror his own hands have made,
Here we see something like the face of God.
Seems it not then enough, to say, Lorenzo!
To man abandon'd, "Hast thou seen the skies?"

And yet, so thwarted Nature's kind design
By daring man, he makes her sacred awe
(That guard from ill) his shelter, his temptation
To more than common guilt, and quite inverts

Celestial art's intent. The trembling stars
See crimes gigantic, stalking through the gloom
With front erect, that hide their head by day,
And making night still darker by their deeds.
Slumbering in covert, till the shades descend,
Rapine and murder, link'd, now prowl for prey.
The miser earths his treasure; and the thief,
Watching the mole, half-beggars him ere morn.
Now plots, and foul conspiracies, awake;
And, muffling up their horrors from the Moon,
Havock and devastation they prepare,
And kingdoms tottering in the field of blood.
Now sons of riot in mid-revel rage.
What shall I do? — Suppress it? or proclaim? —
Why sleeps the thunder? Now, Lorenzo! now,
His best friend's couch the rank adulterer
Ascends secure; and laughs at gods and men.
Preposterous madmen, void of fear or shame,
Lay their crimes bare to these chaste eyes of Heaven;
Yet shrink, and shudder, at a mortal's sight.
Were Moon and stars for villains only made?
To guide, yet screen them, with tenebrious light?
No, they were made to fashion the sublime
Of human hearts, and wiser make the wise. [liv'd

Those ends were answer'd once; when mortals
Of stronger wing, of aquiline ascent
In theory sublime. O how unlike
Those vermin of the night, this moment sung,
Who crawl on Earth, and on her venom feed!
Those ancient sages, human stars! they met
Their brothers of the skies, at midnight hour;
Their counsel ask'd; and, what they ask'd, obey'd.
The Stagirite, and Plato, he who drank
The poison'd bowl, and he of Tusculum,
With him of Corduba (immortal names!)
In these unbounded, and Elysian, walks,
An area fit for gods, and godlike men, (paths
They took their nightly round, through radiant
By seraphs trod; instructed, chiefly, thus,
To tread in their bright footsteps here below;
To walk in worth still brighter than the skies.
There they contracted their contempt of Earth;
Of hopes eternal kindled, there, the fire;
There, as in near approach, they glow'd, and grew
(Great visitants!) more intimate with God,
More worth to men, more joyous to themselves.
Through various virtues, they, with ardour, ran
The zodiac of their learn'd illustrious lives.

In Christian hearts, O for a Pagan zeal!
A needful, but opprobrious prayer! as much
Our ardour less, as greater is our light.
How monstrous this in mortals! Scarce more strange
Would this phenomenon in Nature strike,
A sun, that froze her, or a star, that warm'd.
What taught these heroes of the moral world?
To these thou giv'st thy praise, give credit too.
These doctors ne'er were pension'd to deceive thee;
And Pagan tutors are thy taste. — They taught,
That narrow views betray to misery:
That wise it is to comprehend the whole:
That virtue rose from Nature, ponder'd well,
The single base of virtue built to Heaven:
That God and Nature our attention claim:
That Nature is the glass reflecting God,
As, by the sea, reflected is the Sun,
Too glorious to be gaz'd on in his sphere.
That mind immortal loves immortal aims:
That boundless mind affects a boundless space:
That vast surveys, and the sublime of things,
The soul assimilate, and make her great:

That, therefore, Heaven her glories, as a fund.
Of inspiration, thus spreads out to man.
Such are their doctrines; such the night inspir'd.
And what more true? What truth of greater weight?

The soul of man was made to walk the skies;
Delightful outlet of her prison here!
There, disencumber'd from her chains, the ties
Of toys terrestrial, she can rove at large;
There, freely can respire, dilate, extend,
In full proportion let loose all her powers;
And, undeluded, grasp at something great.
Nor, as a stranger, does she wander there;
But, wonderful herself, through wonder strays;
Contemplating their grandeur, finds her own;
Dives deep in their economy divine,
Sits high in judgment on their various laws,
And, like a master, judges not amiss.
Hence greatly pleas'd, and justly proud, the soul
Grows conscious of her birth celestial; breathes
More life, more vigour, in her native air;
And feels herself at home amongst the stars;
And, feeling, emulates our country's praise.

What call we, then, the firmament, Lorenzo? —
As earth the body, since the skies sustain
The soul with food, that gives immortal life,
Call it, the noble pasture of the mind;
Which there expatiates, strengthens, and exults,
And riots through the luxuries of thought.
Call it, the garden of the Deity,
Blossom'd with stars, redundant in the growth
Of fruit ambrosial; moral fruit to man.
Call it, the breast-plate of the true High-Priest,
Ardent with gems oracular, that give,
In points of highest moment, right response;
And ill neglected, if we prize our peace.

Thus have we found a true astrology;
Thus have we found a new, and noble sense,
In which alone stars govern human fates.
O that the stars (as some have feign'd) let fall
Bloodshed, and havock, on embattled realms,
And rescued monarchs from so black a guilt!
Bourbon! this wish how generous in a foe! [God,
Wouldst thou be great, wouldst thou become a
And stick thy deathless name among the stars,
For mighty conquests on a needle's point?
Instead of forging chains for foreigners,
Bastile thy tutor: grandeur all thy aim?
As yet thou know'st not what it is: how great,
How glorious, then, appears the mind of man,
When in it all the stars, and planets, roll!
And what it seems, it is: great objects make
Great minds, enlarging as their views enlarge;
Those still more godlike, as these more divine.

And more divine than these, thou canst not see.
Dazzled, o'er-power'd, with the delicious draught
Of miscellaneous splendours, how I reel
From thought to thought, inebriate, without end!
An Eden, this! a Paradise unlost!

I meet the Deity in every view,
And tremble at my nakedness before him!
O that I could but reach the tree of life!
For here it grows, unguarded from our taste;
No flaming sword denies our entrance here;
Would man but gather, he might live for ever.

Lorenzo! much of moral hast thou seen.
Of curious arts art thou more fond? Then mark
The mathematic glories of the skies,
In number, weight, and measure, all ordain'd.
Lorenzo's boasted builders, chance, and fate,

Are left to finish his aërial towers;
Wisdom and choice, their well-known characters
Here deep impress; and claim it for their own.
Though splendid all, no splendour void of use;
Use rivals beauty; art contends with power;
No wanton waste, amid effuse expense;
The great economist adjusting all
To prudent pomp, magnificently wise.
How rich the prospect! and for ever new!
And newest to the man that views it most;
For newer still in infinite succeeds.
Then, these aërial racers, O how swift!
How the shaft loiters from the strongest string!
Spirit alone can distance the career.
Orb above orb ascending without end!
Circle in circle, without end, enclos'd!
Wheel, within wheel; Ezekiel! like to thine!
Like thine, it seems a vision or a dream;
Though seen, we labour to believe it true!
What involution! what extent! what swarms
Of worlds, that laugh at Earth! immensely great!
Immensely distant from each other's spheres!
What, then, the wondrous space through which they roll?

At once it quite ingulfs all human thought;
'T is comprehension's absolute defeat.
Nor think thou seest a wild disorder here;
Through this illustrious chaos to the sight,
Arrangement neat, and chastest order, reign.
The path prescrib'd, inviolably kept,
Upbraids the lawless sallies of mankind.
Worlds, ever thwarting, never interfere;
What knots are ty'd! How soon are they dissolv'd,
And set the seeming marry'd planets free!
They rove for ever, without error rove;
Confusion unconfus'd! nor less admire
This tumult untumultuous; all on wing!
In motion, all! yet what profound repose!
What fervid action, yet no noise! as aw'd
To silence by the presence of their Lord;
Or hush'd by his command in love to man,
And bid let fall soft beams on human rest,
Restless themselves. On yon cerulean plain,
In exultation to their God, and thine,
They dance, they sing eternal jubilee,
Eternal celebration of his praise.

But, since their song arrives not at our ear,
Their dance perplex'd exhibits to the sight
Fair hieroglyphic of his peerless power.
Mark, how the labyrinthian turns they take,
The circles intricate, and mystic maze,
Weave the grand cypher of Omnipotence;
To Gods, how great! how legible to man!

Leaves so much wonder greater wonder still?
Where are the pillars that support the skies?
What more than Atlantean shoulder props
Th' incumbent load? what magic, what strange art,
In fluid air these ponderous orbs sustains?
Who would not think them hung in golden chains?
And so they are; in the high will of Heaven,
Which fixes all; makes adamant of air,
Or air of adamant; makes all of nought,
Or nought of all; if such the dread decree.

Imagine from their deep foundations torn
The most gigantic sons of Earth, the broad
And towering Alps, all tost into the sea;
And, light as down, or volatile as air,
Their bulks enormous, dancing on the waves,
In time, and measure, exquisite; while all
The winds, in emulation of the spheres,

Tune their sonorous instruments aloft ;
The concert swell, and animate the ball.
Would this appear amazing ? What, then, worlds,
In a far thinner element sustain'd,
And acting the same part, with greater skill,
More rapid movement, and for noblest ends ?

More obvious ends to pass, are not these stars
The seats majestic, proud imperial thrones,
On which angelic delegates of Heaven,
At certain periods, as the Sovereign nods,
Discharge high trusts of vengeance, or of love ;
To clothe, in outward grandeur, grand design,
And acts most solemn still more solemnize ?
Ye citizens of air ! what ardent thanks,
What full effusion of the grateful heart,
Is due from man indulg'd in such a sight !
A sight so noble ! and a sight so kind !
It drops new truths at every new survey !
Feels not Lorenzo something stir within,
That sweeps away all period ? As these spheres
Measure duration, they no less inspire
The godlike hope of ages without end. [take
The boundless space, through which these rovers
Their restless roam, suggests the sister-thought
Of boundless time. Thus, by kind Nature's skill,
To man unlabour'd, that important guest,
Eternity, finds entrance at the sight :
And an eternity, for man ordain'd,
Or these his destin'd midnight counsellors,
The stars, had never whisper'd it to man.
Nature informs, but ne'er insults, her sons.
Could she then kindle the most ardent wish
To disappoint it ?—That is blasphemy.
Thus, of thy creed a second article,
Momentous, as the existence of a God,
Is found (as I conceive) where rarely sought :
And thou mayst read thy soul immortal, here.

Here, then, Lorenzo ! on these glories dwell ;
Nor want the guilt-illuminated roof,
That calls the wretched gay to dark delights
Assemblies ?—This is one divinely bright ;
Here, unendanger'd in health, wealth, or fame,
Range through the fairest, and the Sultan scorn.
He, wise as thou, no crescent holds so fair,
As that, which on his turban awes a world ;
And thinks the Moon is proud to copy him.
Look on her, and gain more than worlds can give,
A mind superior to the charms of power.
Thou muffled in delusions of this life !
Can yonder Moon turn ocean in his bed,
From side to side, in constant ebb and flow,
And purify from stench his watery realms ?
And fails her moral influence ? wants she power
To turn Lorenzo's stubborn tide of thought
From stagnating on Earth's infected shore,
And purge from nuisance his corrupted heart ?
Fails her attraction when it draws to Heaven ?
Nay, and to what thou valuest more, Earth's joy ?
Minds elevate, and panting for unseen,
And defecate from sense, alone obtain
Full relish of existence un-deflower'd,
The life of life, the zest of worldly bliss :
All else on Earth amounts—to what ? To this :
“ Bad to be suffer'd ; blessings to be left : ”
Earth's richest inventory boasts no more.

Of higher scenes be, then, the call obey'd.
O let me gaze !—Of gazing there's no end.
O let me think !—Thought too is wilder'd here ;
In mid-way flight imagination tires ;
Yet soon re-prunes her wing to soar anew,

Her point unable to forbear, or gain ;
So great the pleasure, so profound the plan !
A banquet, this, where men and angels meet,
Eat the same manna, mingle Earth and Heaven.
How distant some of the nocturnal suns !
So distant (says the sage), 't were not absurd
To doubt, if beams, set out at Nature's birth,
Are yet arriv'd at this so foreign world ;
Though nothing half so rapid as their flight.
An eye of awe and wonder let me roll,
And roll for ever : who can satiate sight
In such a scene ? in such an ocean wide
Of deep astonishment ? where depth, height, breadth,
Are lost in their extremes ; and where to count
The thick-sown glories in this field of fire,
Perhaps a seraph's computation fails.
Now, go, Ambition ! boast thy boundless might
In conquest o'er the tenth part of a grain.

And yet Lorenzo calls for miracles,
To give his tottering faith a solid base.
Why call for less than is already thine ?
Thou art no novice in theology ;
What is a miracle ?—'T is a reproach,
'T is an implicit satire, on mankind ;
And while it satisfies, it censures too.
To common sense, great Nature's course proclaims
A Deity : when mankind falls asleep,
A miracle is sent, as an alarm ;
To wake the world, and prove him o'er again,
By recent argument, but not more strong.
Say, which imports more plenitude of power,
Or Nature's laws to fix, or to repeal ?
To make a sun, or stop his mid career ?
To countermand his orders, and send back
The flaming courier to the freighted East,
Warm'd, and astonish'd, at his evening ray ;
Or bid the Moon, as with her journey tir'd,
In Ajalon's soft, flowery vale repose ?
Great things are these ; still greater, to create.
From Adam's bower look down through the whole train

Of miracles ;—resistless is their power ?
They do not, can not, more amaze the mind,
Than this, call'd un-miraculous survey,
If duly weigh'd, if rationally seen,
If seen with human eyes. The brute, indeed,
Sees nought but spangles here ; the fool, no more.
Say'st thou, “ The course of Nature governs all ? ”
The course of Nature is the art of God.
The miracles thou call'st for, this attests ;
For say, Could Nature Nature's course control ?
But miracles apart, who sees him not,
Nature's Controller, Author, Guide, and End !
Who turns his eye on Nature's midnight face,
But must inquire — “ What hand behind the scene,
What arm Almighty, put these wheeling globes
In motion, and wound up the vast machine ?
Who rounded in his palm these spacious orbs ?
Who bow'd them flaming through the dark profound,
Numerous as glittering gems of morning-dew,
Or sparks from populous cities in a blaze,
And set the bosom of old night on fire ?
Peopled her desert, and made horror smile ? ”
Or, if the military style delights thee, [man,)
(For stars have fought their battles, leagu'd with “ Who marshals this bright host ? enrolls their names ?

Appoints their post, their marches, and returns
Punctual at stated periods ? Who dishands
These veteran troops, their final duty done,

If e'er disbanded?" — He, whose potent word,
Like the loud trumpet, levy'd first their powers
In night's inglorious empire, where they slept
In beds of darkness: arm'd them with fierce flames,
Arrang'd, and disciplin'd, and cloth'd in gold;
And call'd them out of chaos to the field,
Where now they war with vice and unbelief.
O let us join this army! joining these,
Will give us hearts intrepid, at that hour,
When brighter flames shall cut a darker night;
When these strong demonstrations of a God
Shall hide their heads, or tumble from their spheres,
And one eternal curtain cover all!

Struck at that thought, as new awak'd, I lift
A more enlighten'd eye, and read the stars
To man still more propitious; and their aid
(Though guiltless of idolatry) implore;
Nor longer rob them of their noblest name.
O ye dividers of my time! Ye bright
Accomptants of my days, and months, and years,
In your fair calendar distinctly marked!
Since that authentic, radiant register,
Though man inspects it not, stands good against him;
Since you and years roll on, though man stands
still;

Teach me my days to number, and apply
My trembling heart to wisdom; now beyond
All shadow of excuse for fooling on.
Age smooths our path to prudence! sweeps aside
The snares keen appetite and passion spread
To catch stray souls; and woe to that gray head,
Whose folly would undo what age has done!
Aid then, aid, all ye stars! — Much rather, thou,
Great Artist! thou, whose finger set aright
This exquisite machine, with all its wheels,
Though intervolv'd, exact; and pointing out
Life's rapid and irrevocable flight,
With such an index fair as none can miss,
Who lifts an eye, nor sleeps till it is clos'd;
Open mine eye, dread Deity! to read
The tacit doctrine of thy works; to see
Things as they are, un-alter'd through the glass
Of worldly wishes. Time, eternity!
( 'T is these, mis-measured, ruin all mankind)
Set them before me; let me lay them both
In equal scale, and learn their various weight.
Let time appear a moment, as it is;
And let eternity's full orb, at once,
Turn on my soul, and strike it into Heaven.
When shall I see far more than charms me now?
Gaze on creation's model in thy breast
Unveil'd, nor wonder at the transcript more?
When this vile, foreign dust, which smothers all
That travel Earth's deep vale, shall I shake off?
When shall my soul her incarnation quit,
And, re-adopted to thy blest embrace,
Obtain her apotheosis in thee?

Dost think, Lorenzo, this is wandering wide?
No, 't is directly striking at the mark;
To wake thy dead devotion * was my point;
And how I bless night's consecrating shades,
Which to a temple turn an universe;
Fill us with great ideas, full of Heaven,
And antidote the pestilential Earth!
In every storm, that either frowns, or falls,
What an asylum has the soul in prayer!
And what a fane is this, in which to pray!
And what a God must dwell in such a fane!

O what a genius must inform the skies!
And is Lorenzo's salamander heart
Cold, and untouch'd, amid the sacred fires?
O ye nocturnal sparks! ye glowing embers,
On Heaven's broad hearth! who burn, or burn no
more,

Who blaze, or die, as great Jehovah's breath
Or blows you, or forbears: assist my song;
Pour your whole influence; exorcise his heart,
So long possess; and bring him back to man.
And is Lorenzo a demurrer still?
Pride in thy parts provokes thee to contest
Truths, which, contested, put thy parts to shame.
Nor shame they more Lorenzo's head than heart,
A faithless heart, how despicably small!
Too strait aught great, or generous, to receive!
Fill'd with an atom! fill'd, and foul'd, with self!
And self-mistaken! self, that lasts an hour!
Instincts and passions, of the nobler kind,
Lie suffocated there; or they alone,
Reason apart, would wake high hope; and open,
To ravish'd thought, that intellectual sphere,
Where order, wisdom, goodness, providence,
Their endless miracles of love display,
And promise all the truly-great desire.
The mind that would be happy, must be great;
Great, in its wishes; great, in its surveys;
Extended views a narrow mind extend;
Push out its corrugate, expansive make,
Which, ere long, more than planets shall embrace.
A man of compass makes a man of worth;
Divine contemplate, and become divine.

As man was made for glory, and for bliss,
All littleness is in approach to woe;
Open thy bosom, set thy wishes wide,
And let in manhood; let in happiness;
Admit the boundless theatre of thought
From nothing, up to God; which makes a man.
Take God from Nature, nothing great is left!
Man's mind is in a pit, and nothing sees;
Man's heart is in a jakes, and loves the mire.
Emerge from thy profound; erect thine eye;
See thy distress! how close art thou besieg'd!
Besieg'd by Nature, the proud sceptic's foe!
Enclos'd by these innumerable worlds,
Sparkling conviction on the darkest mind,
As in a golden net of Providence.
How art thou caught, sure captive of belief!
From this thy blest captivity, what art,
What blasphemy to reason, sets thee free!
This scene is Heaven's indulgent violence:
Canst thou bear up against this tide of glory?
What is earth bosom'd in these ambient orbs,
But, faith in God impos'd, and press'd on man?
Dar'st thou still litigate thy desperate cause,
Spite of these numerous, awful witnesses,
And doubt the deposition of the skies?
O how laborious is thy way to ruin!

Laborious! 't is impracticable quite;
To sink beyond a doubt, in this debate,
With all his weight of wisdom and of will,
And crime flagitious, I defy a fool.
Some wish they did; but no man disbelieves.
God is a spirit; spirit cannot strike
These gross, material organs; God by man
As much is seen, as man a God can see,
In these astonishing exploits of power.
What order, beauty, motion, distance, size!
Conception of design, how exquisite!
How complicate, in their divine police!

pt means ! great ends ! consent to general good !
 ach attribute of these material gods,
 > long (and that with specious pleas) ador'd,
 separate conquest gains o'er rebel thought ;
 nd leads in triumph the whole mind of man.

Lorenzo ! this may seem harangue to thee ;
 uch all is apt to seem, that thwarts our will.
 nd dost thou, then, demand a simple proof
 f this great master-moral of the skies,
 nskill'd, or dis-inclin'd, to read it there ?
 ince 't is the basis, and all drops without it,
 'ake it, in one compact, unbroken chain.
 uch proof insists on an attentive ear ;
 I will not make one amid a mob of thoughts,
 nd, for thy notice, struggle with the world.
 etire ;—the world shut out ;—thy thoughts call
 home ;—

agination's airy wing repress ;—
 lock up thy senses ;—let no passion stir ;—
 'ake all to reason ;—let her reign alone ;
 hen, in thy soul's deep silence, and the depth
 f Nature's silence, midnight, thus inquire,
 s I have done ; and shall inquire no more.
 n Nature's channel, thus the questions run :—

“ What am I ? and from whence ?—I nothing
 know

ut that I am ; and, since I am, conclude omething eternal : had there e'er been nought, ought still had been ; eternal there must be. — at what eternal ?—Why not human race ?
 And Adam's ancestors without an end ?—
 hat 's hard to be conceiv'd, since every link
 f that long-chain'd succession is so frail.
 an every part depend, and not the whole ?

et grant it true ; new difficulties rise ;
 'm still quite out at sea ; nor see the shore. [too ?
 Whence Earth, and these bright orbs ?—Eternal rant matter was eternal ; still these orbs
 Would want some other father ;—much design
 s seen in all their motions, all their makes ;
Design implies intelligence, and art ;

hat can't be from themselves—or man : that art
 an scarce can comprehend, could man bestow ?
 And nothing greater yet allow'd than man. —
 Who, motion, foreign to the smallest grain,
 hot through vast masses of enormous weight ?
 Who bid brute matter's restive lump assume uch various forms, and gave it wings to fly ?
 Has matter innate motion ? then each atom,
 Asserting its indisputable right

o dance, would form an universe of dust :
 Has matter none ? Then whence these glorious forms
 And boundless flights, from shapeless, and repos'd ?
 Has matter more than motion ? has it thought,
 udgment, and genius ? is it deeply learn'd
 n mathematics ? Has it fram'd such laws,
 Which but to guess, a Newton made immortal ?—

f so, how each sage atom laughs at me,
 Who think a clod inferior to a man !

f art, to form ; and counsel, to conduct ;
 And that with greater far than human skill,
 Besides not in each block ;—a Godhead reigns.
 Grant, then, invisible, eternal, Mind ;
 hat granted, all is solv'd—But, granting that,
 Draw I not o'er me a still darker cloud ?
 Grant I not that which I can ne'er conceive ?

A being without origin, or end !—

ail, human liberty ! There is no God—
 Yet, why ? On either scheme that knot subsists ;
 Subsist it must, in God, or human race :

If in the last, how many knots beside,
 Indissoluble all ?—Why choose it there,
 Where, chosen, still subsist ten thousand more ?
 Reject it, where, that chosen, all the rest
 Dispers'd, leave reason's whole horizon clear ;
 This is not reason's dictate ; reason says, [scale ;'
 ' Close with the side where one grain turns the
 What vast preponderance is here ! can reason
 With louder voice exclaim—' Believe a God ?
 And reason heard, is the sole mark of man.
 What things impossible must man think true,
 On any other system ! and how strange
 To disbelieve, through mere credulity !"
 If, in this chain, Lorenzo finds no flaw,
 Let it for ever bind him to belief.

And where the link, in which a flaw he finds ?
 And, if a God there is, that God how great !
 How great that power, whose providential care
 Through these bright orbs' dark centres darts a ray !
 Of Nature universal threads the whole !
 And hangs creation, like a precious gem,
 Though little, on the footstool of his throne !

That little gem, how large ! a weight let fall
 From a fix'd star, in ages can it reach
 This distant Earth ? Say, then, Lorenzo ! where,
 Where ends this mighty building ? Where, begin
 The suburbs of Creation ? Where, the wall
 Whose battlements look o'er into the vale
 Of non-existence ? Nothing's strange abode !
 Say, at what point of space Jehovah dropp'd
 His slacken'd line, and laid his balance by ;
 Weigh'd worlds, and measur'd infinite, no more ?
 Where, rears his terminating pillar high
 Its extra-mundane head ? and says, to gods,
 In characters illustrious as the Sun,
 “ I stand, the plan's proud period ; I pronounce
 The work accomplish'd ; the creation clos'd :
 Shout, all ye gods ! nor shout, ye gods alone ;
 Of all that lives, or, if devoid of life,
 That rests, or rolls, ye heights, and depths, resound !
 Resound ! resound ! ye depths, and heights, re-
 sound !”

Hard are those questions ;—answer harder still.
 Is this the sole exploit, the single birth,
 The solitary son of power divine ?
 Or has th' Almighty Father, with a breath,
 Impregnated the womb of distant space ?
 Has he not bid, in various provinces,
 Brother-creations the dark bowels burst
 Of night primeval ; barren, now, no more ?
 And he the central sun, transpiercing all
 Those giant-generations, which disport,
 And dance, as motes, in his meridian ray ;
 That ray withdrawn, benighted, or absorb'd,
 In that abyss of horror, whence they sprung ;
 While Chaos triumphs, repossess of all
 Rival creation ravish'd from his throne ?
 Chaos ! of Nature both the womb, and grave !

Think'st thou my scheme, Lorenzo, spreads too wide ?

Is this extravagant ?—No ; this is just ;
 Just in conjecture, though 't were false in fact.
 If 't is an error, 't is an error sprung
 From noble root, high thought of the Most-High.
 But wherefore error ? who can prove it such ?—
 He that can set Omnipotence a bound.
 Can man conceive beyond what God can do ?
 Nothing but quite impossible is hard.
 He summons into being, with like ease,
 A whole creation, and a single grain.

Speaks he the word? a thousand worlds are born!
 A thousand worlds! there's space for millions more;
 And in what space can his great fiat fail?
 Condemn me not, cold critic! but indulge
 The warm imagination: why condemn?
 Why not indulge such thoughts, as swell our hearts
 With fuller admiration of that power, [swell?
 Who gives our hearts with such high thoughts to
 Why not indulge in his augmented praise?
 Darts not his glory a still brighter ray,
 The less is left to chaos, and the realms
 Of hideous night, where fancy strays aghast;
 And, though most talkative, makes no report?

Still seems my thought enormous? Think again;
Experience 'self shall aid thy lame belief.
Glasses (that revelation to the sight!)
 Have they not led us in the deep disclose
 Of fine-spun Nature, exquisitely small,
 And, though demonstrated, still ill-conceiv'd?
 If then, on the reverse, the mind would mount
 In magnitude, what mind can mount too far,
 To keep the balance, and creation poise?
Defect alone can err on such a theme;
 What is too great, if we the cause survey?
 Stupendous Architect! thou, thou art all!
 My soul flies up and down in thoughts of thee,
 And finds herself but at the centre still!

I Am, thy name! existence all thine own!
Creation 's nothing; flatter'd much if styl'd
 "The thin, the fleeting atmosphere of God." [voice

O for the voice — of what? of whom? — What
 Can answer to my wants, in such ascent,
 As dares to deem one universe too small?
 Tell me, Lorenzo! (for now fancy glows,
 Fir'd in the vortex of Almighty power)
 Is not this home-creation, in the map
 Of universal Nature, as a speck,
 Like fair Britannia in our little ball:
 Exceeding fair, and glorious, for its size,
 But, elsewhere, far out-measur'd, far outshone?
 In fancy (for the fact beyond us lies)
 Canst thou not figure it, an isle, almost Too small for notice, in the vast of being;
 Sever'd by mighty seas of unbuilt space
 From other realms; from ample continents
 Of higher life, where nobler natives dwell;
 Less northern, less remote from Deity,
 Glowing beneath the line of the Supreme;
 Where souls in excellence make haste, put forth
 Luxuriant growths; nor the late autumn wait
 Of human worth, but ripen soon to gods?

Yet why drown fancy in such depths as these?
 Return, presumptuous rover, and confess
 The bounds of man; nor blame them, as too small.
 Enjoy we not full scope in what is seen?
 Full ample the dominions of the Sun!
 Full glorious to behold, how far, how wide
 The matchless monarch, from his flaming throne,
 Lavish of lustre, throws his beams about him,
 Further, and faster, than a thought can fly,
 And feeds his planets with eternal fires!
 This Heliopolis, by greater far
 Than the proud tyrant of the Nile, was built;
 And he alone, who built it, can destroy.
 Beyond this city, why strays human thought?
 One wonderful! enough for man to know!
 One infinite! enough for man to range!
 One firmament! enough for man to read!
 O what voluminous instruction here!
 What page of wisdom is denied him? None;

If learning his chief lesson makes him wise.
 Nor is instruction, here, our only gain;
 There dwells a noble pathos in the skies,
 Which warms our passions, proselytes our hearts.
 How eloquently shines the glowing Pole!
 With what authority it gives its charge,
 Remonstrating great truths in style sublime,
 Though silent, loud! heard Earth around; above
 The planets heard; and not unheard in Hell;
 Hell has her wonder, though too proud to praise.
 Is Earth, then, more infernal? has she those,
 Who neither praise (Lorenzo!) nor admire?

Lorenzo's admiration, pre-engag'd,
 Ne'er ask'd the Moon one question; never held
 Least correspondence with a single star;
 Ne'er rear'd an altar to the queen of Heaven
 Walking in brightness; or her train ador'd.
 Their sublunary rivals have long since
 Engross'd his whole devotion; stars malign,
 Which made the fond astronomer run mad,
 Darken his intellect, corrupt his heart;
 Cause him to sacrifice his fame and peace
 To momentary madness, call'd delight.
 Idolater, more gross than ever kiss'd
 The lifted hand to Luna, or pour'd out
 The blood to Jove! — O thou, to whom belongs
 All sacrifice! O thou Great Jove unfeign'd;
 Divine Instructor! Thy first volume, this,
 For man's perusal; all in capitals!
 In Moon, and stars (Heaven's golden alphabet!)
 Emblaz'd to seize the sight; who runs, may run.
 Who reads, can understand. 'T is unconfin'd
 To Christian land, or Jewry; fairly writ
 In language universal, to mankind:
 A language, lofty to the learn'd; yet plain
 To those that feed the flock, or guide the plough,
 Or, from his husk, strike out the bounding grain,
 A language, worthy the Great Mind, that speaks:
Preface, and comment, to the sacred page!
 Which oft refers its reader to the skies,
 As pre-supposing his first lesson there,
 And scripture 'self a fragment, that unread.
 Stupendous book of wisdom, to the wise;
 Stupendous book! and open'd, Night! by thee.

By thee much open'd, I confess, O Night!
 Yet more I wish; but how shall I prevail?
 Say, gentle Night! whose modest, maiden beams
 Give us a new creation, and present
 The world's great picture soften'd to the sight;
 Nay, kinder far, far more indulgent still,
 Say, thou, whose mild dominion's silver key
 Unlocks our hemisphere, and sets to view
 Worlds beyond number; worlds conceal'd by day
 Behind the proud, and envious star of noon!
 Canst thou not draw a deeper scene? — And show
 The mighty potentate, to whom belong
 These rich regalia pompously display'd
 To kindle that high hope? Like him of Uz,
 I gaze around; I search on every side —
 O for a glimpse of him my soul adores!
 As the chas'd hart, amid the desert waste,
 Pants for the living stream; for him who made her,
 So pants the thirsty soul, amid the blank
 Of sublunary joys. Say, goddess! where?
 Where blazes his bright court? Where burns his throne? [round
 Thou know'st; for thou art near him; by thee,
 His grand pavilion, sacred fame reports
 The sable curtain drawn. If not, can none
 Of r rain, so swift of wing,

Who travel far, discover where he dwells?
A star his dwelling pointed out below.
 Ye Pleiades! Arcturus! Mazaroth!
 And thou, Orion! of still keener eye!
 Say ye, who guide the wilder'd in the waves,
 And bring them out of tempest into port!
 On which hand must I bend my course to find him?
 These courtiers keep the secret of their King;
 I wake whole nights, in vain, to steal it from them.
 I wake; and, waking, climb night's radiant scale,

From sphere to sphere; the steps by Nature set
 For man's ascent; at once to tempt and aid;
 To tempt his eye, and aid his towering thought;
 Till it arrives at the great God of all.

In ardent contemplation's rapid car,
 From Earth, as from my barrier, I set out.
 How swift I mount! diminish'd Earth recedes;
 I pass the Moon; and, from her farther side,
 Pierce Heaven's blue curtain; strike into remote;
 Where, with his lifted tube, the subtle sage
 His artificial, airy journey takes,
 And to celestial lengthens human sight.
 I pause at every planet on my road,
 And ask for him who gives their orbs to roll,
 Their foreheads fair to shine. From Saturn's ring,
 In which, of Earths an army might be lost,
 With the bold comet take my bolder flight,
 Amid those sovereign glories of the skies,
 Of independent, native lustre, proud;
 The souls of systems! and the lords of life,
 'Through their wide empires!—What behold I now?
 A wilderness of wonder burning round;
 Where larger suns inhabit higher spheres;
 Perhaps the villas of descending gods;
 Nor halt I here; my toil is but begun;
 'T is but the threshold of the Deity;
 Or, far beneath it, I am grovelling still.
 Nor is it strange; I built on a mistake;
 The grandeur of his works, whence folly sought
 For aid, to reason sets his glory higher;
 Who built thus high for worms (mere worms to him)
 O where, Lorenzo! must the Builder dwell?

Pause, then, and, for a moment, here respire—
 If human thought can keep its station here.
 Where am I?—Where is Earth?—Nay, where art thou,

O Sun?—Is the Sun turn'd recluse?—And are
 His boasted expeditions short to mine?—
 To mine, how short! On Nature's alps I stand,
 And see a thousand firmaments beneath!
 A thousand systems! as a thousand grains!
 So much a stranger, and so late arriv'd,
 How can man's curious spirit not inquire,
 What are the natives of this world sublime,
 Of this so foreign, un-terrestrial sphere,
 Where mortal, untranslated, never stray'd?

"O ye, as distant from my little home,
 As swiftest sun-beams in an age can fly!
 Far from my native element I roam,
 In quest of new, and wonderful, to man.
 What province this, of his immense domain,
 Whom all obeys? or mortals here, or gods?
 Ye borderers on the coasts of bliss! what are you?
 A colony from Heaven? Or, only rais'd, [realms,
 By frequent visit from Heaven's neighbouring
 To secondary gods, and half-divine?—
 Whate'er your nature, this is past dispute,
 Far other life you live, far other tongue
 You talk, far other thought, perhaps, you think,

Than man. How various are the works of God!
 But say, what thought? is reason here enthron'd,
 And absolute? or sense in arms against her?
 Have you two lights? or need you no reveal'd?
 Enjoy your happy realms their golden age?
 And had your Eden an abstemious Eve?
 Our Eve's fair daughters prove their pedigree,
 And ask their Adams—'Who would not be wise?'
 Or, if your mother fell, are you redeem'd?
 And if redeem'd—is your Redeemer scorn'd?
 Is this your final residence? if not,
 Change you your scene, translated? or by death?
 And if by death, what death?—Know you disease?
 Or horrid war?—With war, this fatal hour,
 Europa groans (so call we a small field, [putes
 Where kings run mad). In our world, Death de-
Intemperance to do the work of age;
 And hanging up the quiver Nature gave him,
 As slow of execution, for dispatch
 Sends forth imperial butchers; bids them slay
 Their sheep (the silly sheep they fleec'd before)
 And toss him twice ten thousand at a meal.
 Sit all your executioners on thrones?
 With you, can rage for plunder make a god?
 And bloodshed wash out every other stain?—
 But you, perhaps, can't bleed: from matter gross
 Your spirits clean, are delicately clad
 In fine-spun ether, privileg'd to soar,
 Unloaded, uninfected; how unlike
 The lot of man! How few of human race
 By their own mud unmurder'd! How we wage
 Self-war eternal! Is your painful day
 Of hardy conflict o'er? Or, are you still Raw candidates at school? And have you those
 Who disaffect reversions, as with us?
 But what are we? You never heard of man,
 Or Earth, the bedlam of the universe!
 Where reason (undis-eas'd with you) runs mad,
 And nurses folly's children as her own;
 Fond of the foulest. In the sacred mount
 Of holiness, where reason is pronounc'd
Infallible; and thunders, like a god;
 E'en there, by saints, the demons are outdone;
 What these think wrong, our saints refine to right;
 And kindly teach dull Hell her own black arts;
 Satan, instructed, o'er their morals smiles.—
 But this, how strange to you, who know not man!
 Has the least rumour of our race arriv'd?
 Call'd here Elijah in his flaming car?
 Pass'd by you the good Enoch, on his road
 To those fair fields, whence Lucifer was hurl'd;
 Who brush'd, perhaps, your sphere in his descent,
 Stain'd your pure crystal ether, or let fall
 A short eclipse from his portentous shade?
 O! that the fiend had lodg'd on some broad orb
 Athwart his way; nor reach'd his present home,
 Then blacken'd Earth with footsteps foul'd in Hell,
 Nor wash'd in ocean, as from Rome he pass'd
 To Britain's isle; too, too, conspicuous there!"

But this is all digression: where is he,
 That o'er Heaven's battlements the felon hurl'd
 To groans, and chains, and darkness? Where is he,
 Who sees creation's summit in a vale?
 He, whom, while man is man, he can't but seek;
 And if he finds, commences more than man?
 O for a telescope his throne to reach!
 Tell me, ye learn'd on Earth! or blest above!
 Ye searching, ye Newtonian angels! tell, [where?
 Where, your great Master's orb? His planets
 Those conscious satellites, those morning-stars,

First-born of Deity! from central love,
By veneration most profound, thrown off;
By sweet attraction, no less strongly drawn;
Aw'd, and yet raptur'd; raptur'd, yet serene;
Past thought illustrious, but with borrow'd beams;
In still approaching circles, still remote,
Revolving round the Sun's eternal Sire?
Or sent, in lines direct, on embassies
To nations — in what latitude? — Beyond
Terrestrial thought's horizon! — And on what
High errands sent? — Here human effort ends;
And leaves me still a stranger to his throne.

Full well it might! I quite mistook my road;
Born in an age more curious than devout;
More fond to fix the place of Heaven, or Hell,
Than studious this to shun, or that secure.
'T is not the curious, but the pious path,
That leads me to my point: Lorenzo! know,
Without or star, or angel, for their guide,
Who worship God, shall find him. Humble love,
And not proud reason, keeps the door of Heaven;
Love finds admission, where proud science fails.
Man's science is the culture of his heart;
And not to lose his plummet in the depths
Of Nature, or the more profound of God.
Either to know, is an attempt that sets
The wisest on a level with the fool.
To fathom Nature (ill-attempted here!)
Past doubt is deep philosophy above;
Higher degrees in bliss archangels take,
As deeper learn'd; the deepest, learning still.
For, what a thunder of Omnipotence
(So might I dare to speak) is seen in all!
In man! in Earth! in more amazing skies!
'Teaching this lesson, pride is loth to learn —
"Not deeply to discern, not much to know, Mankind was born to wonder, and adore."

And is there cause for higher wonder still,
Than that which struck us from our past surveys?
Yes; and for deeper adoration too.
From my late airy travel unconfin'd,
Have I learn'd nothing? — Yes, Lorenzo! this;
Each of these stars is a religious house;
I saw their altars smoke, their incense rise;
And heard hosannas ring through every sphere,
A seminary fraught with future gods.
Nature all o'er is consecrated ground,
Teeming with growths immortal and divine.
The great proprietor's all-bounteous hand
Leaves nothing waste; but sows these fiery fields
With seeds of reason, which to virtues rise
Beneath his genial ray: and, if escap'd
The pestilential blasts of stubborn will,
When grown mature, are gather'd for the skies.
And is devotion thought too much on Earth,
When beings, so superior, homage boast,
And triumph in prostration to the throne?
But wherefore more of planets, or of stars?
Ethereal journeys, and, discover'd there,
Ten thousand worlds, ten thousand ways devout,
All Nature sending incense to the throne,
Except the bold Lorenzos of our sphere?
Opening the solemn sources of my soul,
Since I have pour'd, like feign'd Eridanus,
My flowing numbers o'er the flaming skies,
Nor see, of fancy, or of fact, what more
Invites the Muse — Here turn we, and review
Our past nocturnal landscape wide: — Then say,
Say, then, Lorenzo! with what burst of heart,
The whole, at once, revolving in his thought,

Must man exclaim, adoring, and aghast?
"O what a root! O what a branch, is here!
O what a Father! What a family!
Worlds! systems! and creations! — And creations,
In one agglomerated cluster, hung,
Great Vine! * on thee; on thee the cluster hangs;
The filial cluster! infinitely spread
In glowing globes, with various being fraught;
And drinks (nectareous draught!) immortal life.
Or, shall I say (for who can say enough?)
A constellation of ten thousand gems,
(And, O! of what dimension! of what weight!)
Set in one signet, flames on the right hand
Of Majesty Divine! The blazing seal,
That deeply stamps, on all created mind,
Indelible, his sovereign attributes,
Omnipotence, and love! That, passing bound;
And this, surpassing that. Nor stop we here,
For want of power in God, but thought in man.
E'en this acknowledg'd, leaves us still in debt:
If greater aught, that greater all is thine,
Dread Sire! — Accept this miniature of thee;
And pardon an attempt from mortal thought,
In which archangels might have fail'd, unblam'd."

How such ideas of th' Almighty's power,
And such ideas of th' Almighty's plan,
(Ideas not absurd,) distend the thought
Of feeble mortals! Nor of them alone!
The fulness of the Deity breaks forth
In inconceivables to men, and gods.
Think, then, O think, nor ever drop the thought,
How low must man descend, when gods adore!
Have I not, then, accomplish'd my proud boast?
Did I not tell thee, "We would mount, Lorenzo †,
And kindle our devotion at the stars?"

And have I fail'd? And did I flatter thee?
And art all adamant? And dost confute
All urg'd, with one irrefragable smile?
Lorenzo! mirth how miserable here!
Swear by the stars, by him who made them, swear,
Thy heart, henceforth, shall be as pure as they:
Then thou, like them, shalt shine; like them, shalt
rise

From low to lofty; from obscure to bright;
By due gradation, Nature's sacred law.
The stars, from whence? — Ask Chaos — he can tell.
These bright temptations to idolatry,
From darkness and confusion, took their birth;
Sons of deformity! from fluid dregs
Tartarean, first they rose to masses rude;
And then, to spheres opaque; then dimly shone;
Then brighten'd; then blas'd out in perfect day.
Nature delights in progress; in advance
From worse to better; but, when minds ascend,
Progress, in part, depends upon themselves.
Heaven aids exertion; greater makes the great;
The voluntary little lessens more.

O be a man! and thou shalt be a God!
And half self-made! — Ambition how divine!
O thou, ambitious of disgrace alone!
Still undevout? Unkindled? — Though high-taught,
School'd by the skies, and pupil of the stars;
Rank coward to the fashionable world!
Art thou asham'd to bend thy knee to Heaven?
Curst fume of pride, exhal'd from deepest Hell!
Pride in religion is man's highest praise.
Bent on destruction! and in love with death!
Not all these luminaries, quench'd at once,

Were half so sad, as one benighted mind,
Which gropes for happiness, and meets despair.
How, like a widow in her weeds, the night,
Amid her glimmering tapers, silent sits!
How sorrowful, how desolate, she weeps
Perpetual dews, and saddens Nature's scene!
A scene more sad sin makes the darken'd soul,
All comfort kills, nor leaves one spark alive.

Though blind of heart, still open is thine eye:
Why such magnificence in all thou seest?
Of matter's grandeur, know, one end is this.
To tell the rational, who gazes on it —
“ Though that immensely great, still greater he,
Whose breast, capacious, can embrace, and lodge,
Unburthen'd, Nature's universal scheme;
Can grasp creation with a single thought;
Creation grasp; and not exclude its Sire.” —
To tell him farther — “ It behoves him much
To guard th' important, yet depending, fate
Of being, brighter than a thousand suns:
One single ray of thought outshines them all.” —
And if man hears obedient, soon he'll soar
Superior heights, and on his purple wing,
His purple wing bedropt with eyes of gold,
Rising, where thought is now denied to rise,
Look down triumphant on these dazzling spheres.

Why then persist? — No mortal ever liv'd,
But, dying, he pronounc'd (when words are true)
The whole that charms thee, absolutely vain;
Vain, and far worse! — Think thou, with dying men;
O condescend to think as angels think!
O tolerate a chance for happiness!
Our nature such, ill choice ensures ill fate;
And Hell had been, though there had been no God.
Dost thou not know, my new astronomer!
Earth, turning from the Sun, brings night to man?
Man, turning from his God, brings endless night;
Where thou canst read no morals, find no friend,
Amend no manners, and expect no peace.
How deep the darkness! and the groan, how loud!
And far, how far, from lambent are the flames! —
Such is Lorenzo's purchase! such his praise!
The proud, the politic, Lorenzo's praise!
Though in his ear, and levell'd at his heart,
I've half read o'er the volume of the skies.

For think not thou hast heard all this from me;
My song but echoes what great Nature speaks.
What has she spoken? Thus the goddess spoke,
Thus speaks for ever: — “ Place, at Nature's head,
A sovereign, which o'er all things rolls his eye,
Extends his wing, promulgates his commands,
But, above all, diffuses endless good:
To whom, for sure redress, the wrong'd may fly;
The vile, for mercy; and the pain'd, for peace;
By whom, the various tenants of these spheres,
Diversified in fortunes, place, and powers,
Itais'd in enjoyment, as in worth they rise,
Arrive at length (if worthy such approach)
At that blest fountain-head, from which they
stream;

Where conflict past redoubles present joy;
And present joy looks forward on increase;
And that, on more; no period! every step
A double boon! a promise, and a bliss.”
How easy sits this scheme on human hearts!
It suits their make; it soothes their vast desires;
Passion is pleas'd; and reason asks no more;
'T is rational! 't is great! — But what is thine?
It darkens! shocks. excruciates! and confounds!
Leaves us quite naked, both of help, and hope,

Sinking from bad to worse; few years, the sport
Of fortune; then the morsel of despair.

Say, then, Lorenzo! (for thou know's't it well)
What 's vice? — Mere want of compass in our thought.

Religion, what? — The proof of common-sense.
How art thou hooted, where the least prevails!
Is it my fault, if these truths call thee fool?
And thou shalt never be miscall'd by me.
Can neither shame, nor terror, stand thy friend?
And art thou still an insect in the mire?
How, like thy guardian angel, have I flown;
Snatch'd thee from Earth; escorted thee through all
Th' ethereal armies; walk'd thee, like a god,
Through splendours of first magnitude, arrang'd
On either hand; clouds thrown beneath thy feet;
Close-cruis'd on the bright Paradise of God;
And almost introduc'd thee to the throne!
And art thou still carousing, for delight,
Rank poison; first fermenting to mere froth,
And then subsiding into final gall?
To beings of sublime, immortal make,
How shocking is all joy, whose end is sure!
Such joy, more shocking still, the more it charms!
And dost thou choose what ends ere well-begun;
And infamous, as short? And dost thou choose
(Thou, to whose palate glory is so sweet)
To wade into perdition, through contempt,
Not of poor bigots only, but thy own?
For I have peep'd into thy cover'd heart,
And seen it blush beneath a boastful brow;
For, by strong guilt's most violent assault,
Conscience is but disabled, not destroy'd.

O thou most awful being; and most vain!
Thy will, how frail! how glorious is thy power!
Though dread eternity has sown her seeds
Of bliss, and woe, in thy despotic breast;
Though Heaven and Hell depend upon thy choice;
A butterfly comes 'cross, and both are fled.
Is this the picture of a rational?
'This horrid image, shall it be most just?
Lorenzo! No: it cannot, — shall not, be, .
If there is force in reason; or, in sounds
Chanted beneath the glimpses of the Moon,
A magic, at this planetary hour,
When slumber locks the general lip, and dreams
Through senseless mazes hunt souls un-inspir'd.
Attend — The sacred mysteries begin —
My solemn night-born adjuration hear;
Hear, and I'll raise thy spirit from the dust;
While the stars gaze on this enchantment new,
Enchantment, not infernal, but divine!

“ By silence, Death's peculiar attribute;
By darkness, guilt's inevitable doom;
By darkness, and by silence, sisters dread!
That draw the curtain round Night's ebon throne,
And raise ideas, solemn as the scene!
By Night, and all of awful, Night presents
To thought or sense (of awful much, to both,
The goddess brings!) By these her trembling fires,
Like Vesta's, ever-burning; and, like hers,
Sacred to thoughts immaculate, and pure!
By these bright orators, that prove, and praise,
And press thee to revere the Deity;
Perhaps, too, aid thee, when rever'd awhile,
To reach his throne; as stages of the soul,
Through which, at different periods, she shall pass,
Refining gradual, for her final height,
And purging off some dross at every sphere!
By this dark pall thrown o'er the silent world!

By the world's kings, and kingdoms, most renown'd,
From short ambition's zenith set for ever,
Sad presage to vain boasters, now in bloom !
By the long list of swift mortality,
From Adam downward to this evening knell,
Which midnight waves in fancy's startled eye,
And shocks her with an hundred centuries ;
Round Death's black banner throng'd, in human thought !

By thousands, now, resigning their last breath,
And calling thee — wert thou so wise to hear !
By tombs o'er tombs arising ; human earth
Ejected, to make room for — human earth ;
The monarch's terror / and the sexton's trade !
By pompous obsequies that shun the day,
The torch funereal, and the nodding plume,
Which makes poor man's humiliation proud ;
Boast of our ruin / triumph of our dust !
By the damp vault that weeps o'er royal bones ;
And the pale lamp that shows the ghastly dead,
More ghastly through the thick incumbent gloom !
By visits (if there are) from darker scenes,
The gliding spectre ! and the groaning grave !
By groans, and graves, and miseries that groan
For the grave's shelter ! By desponding men,
Senseless to pains of death, from pangs of guilt !
By guilt's last audit ! By yon Moon in blood,
The rocking firmament, the falling stars,
And thunder's last discharge, great Nature's knell !
By second chaos and eternal night." —
Be wise — Nor let Philander blame my charm ;
But own not ill-discharg'd my double debt,
Love to the living ; duty to the dead !

For know I'm but executor ; he left
This moral legacy ; I make it o'er
By his command ; Philander hear in me ;
And Heaven in both. — If deaf to these, O ! hear
Florello's tender voice ; his weal depends
On thy resolve ; it trembles at thy choice ;
For his sake — love thyself : example strikes
All human hearts ; a bad example more ;
More still a father's ; that ensures his ruin.
As parent of his being, wouldst thou prove
Th' unnatural parent of his miseries,
And make him curse the being which thou gavest ?
Is this the blessing of so fond a father ?
If careless of Lorenzo ! spare, Oh ! spare
Florello's father, and Philander's friend !
Florello's father ruin'd, ruins him ;
And from Philander's friend the world expects
A conduct, no dishonour to the dead.
Let passion do, what nobler motive should ;
Let love, and emulation, rise in aid
To reason : and persuade thee to be — blest,

This seems not a request to be denied ;
Yet (such the infatuation of mankind !)
'T is the most hopeless, man can make to man.
Shall I then rise in argument, and warmth ?
And urge Philander's posthumous advice,
From topics yet unbroach'd ? —
But, Oh ! I faint ! My spirits fail ! — Nor strange !
So long on wing, and in no middle clime !
To which my great Creator's glory call'd ;
And calls — but, now, in vain. Sleep's dewy wand
Has strok'd my drooping lips, and promises
My long arrear of rest ; the downy god
(Wont to return with our returning peace)
Will pay, ere long, and bless me with repose.
Haste, haste, sweet stranger ! from the nocturnal's
cot,

The ship-boy's hammock, or the soldier's straw,
Whence sorrow never chas'd thee ; with thee bring,
Not hideous visions, as of late ; but draughts
Delicious of well-tasted, cordial, rest ;
Man's rich restorative ; his balmy bath,
That supple, lubricates, and keeps in play
The various movements of this nice machine,
Which asks such frequent periods of repair.
When tir'd with vain rotations of the day,
Sleep winds us up for the succeeding dawn ;
Fresh we spin on, till sickness clogs our wheels,
Or Death quite breaks the spring, and motion ends.
When will it end with me ?

— " THOU only know'st,
Thou, whose broad eye the future, and the past,
Joins to the present ; making one of three
To mortal thought ! Thou know'st, and thou alone,
All-knowing ! — all-unknown ! — and yet well-
known !

Near, though remote ! and, though unfathom'd, felt !
And, though invisible, for ever seen !
And seen in all ! the great and the minute :
Each globe above, with its gigantic race,
Each flower, each leaf, with its small people
swarm'd,

(Those puny vouchers of Omnipotence !)
To the first thought, that asks, ' From whence ? ' declare

Their common source. Thou fountain, running o'er
In rivers of communicated joy !
Who gav'st us speech for far, far humbler themes !
Say, by what name shall I presume to call
Him I see burning in these countless suns,
As Moses, in the bush ? Illustrious Mind !
The whole creation, less, far less, to thee,
Than that to the creation's ample round.
How shall I name thee ? — How my labouring soul
Heaves underneath the thought, too big for birth !

" Great system of perfections ! mighty cause
Of causes mighty ! cause uncaus'd ! sole root
Of Nature, that luxuriant growth of God !
First Father of effects ! that progeny
Of endless series ; where the golden chain's
Last link admits a period, who can tell ?
Father of all that is or heard, or hears !
Father of all that is or seen, or sees !
Father of all that is, or shall arise !
Father of this immeasurable mass
Of matter multiform ; or dense, or rare ;
Opaque, or lucid ; rapid, or at rest ;
Minute, or passing bound ! in each extreme
Of like amaze, and mystery, to man.
Father of these bright millions of the night !
Of which the least full godhead had proclaim'd,
And thrown the gazer on his knee — Or, say,
Is appellation higher still, thy choice ?
Father of matter's temporary lord !
Father of spirits ! nobler offspring ! sparks
Of high paternal glory ; rich endow'd
With various measures, and with various modes
Of instinct, reason, intuition ; beams
More pale, or bright from day divine, to break
The darker matter organus'd (the ware
Of all created spirit) ; beams, that rise
Each over other in superior light,
Till the last ripens into lustre strong,
Of next approach to godhead. Father fond (Far sonder than e'er bore that name on Earth)
Of intellectual beings ! beings blest
Wh powers to please thee ! not of passive ply

To laws they know not ; beings lodg'd in seats
 Of well-adapted joys, in different domes
 Of this imperial palace for thy sons ;
 Of this proud, populous, well-policy'd,
 Though boundless habitation, plann'd by thee :
 Whose several clans their several climates suit ;
 And transposition, doubtless, would destroy.
 Or, Oh ! indulge, immortal King, indulge
 A title less august indeed, but more
 Endearing ; ah ! how sweet in human ears,
 Sweet in our ears, and triumph in our hearts !
Father of immortality to man !
 A theme that lately * set my soul on fire —
 And thou the next ! yet equal ! thou, by whom
That blessing was convey'd ; far more ! was bought :
 Ineffable the price ! by whom all worlds
 Were made ; and one redeem'd ! illustrious light
 From light illustrious ! Thou, whose regal power,
 Finite in time, but infinite in space,
 On more than adamantine basis fix'd,
 O'er more, far more, than diadems and thrones,
 Inviolably reigns ; the dread of gods !
 And Oh ! the friend of man ! beneath whose foot,
 And by the mandate of whose awful nod,
 All regions, revolution, fortunes, fates,
 Of high, of low, of mind, and matter, roll
 Through the short channels of expiring time,
 Or shoreless ocean of eternity,
 Calm, or tempestuous (as thy spirit breathes),
 In absolute subjection ! — And, O thou
 The glorious third ! distinct, not separate !
 Beaming from both / with both incorporate ;
 And (strange to tell !) incorporate with dust !
 By condescension, as thy glory, great,
 Enshrin'd in man ! of human hearts, if pure,
 Divine inhabitant ! the tie divine
 Of Heaven with distant Earth ! by whom I trust,
 (If not inspir'd) uncensur'd this address
 To thee, to them — to whom ! — Mysterious power !
 Reveal'd ! — yet unreveal'd ! darkness in light !
 Number in unity ! our joy ! our dread !
 The triple holt that lays all wrong in ruin !
 That animates all right, the triple sun !
 Sun of the soul ! her never-setting sun !
 Triune, unutterable, unconceiv'd,
 Abconding, yet demonstrable, great God !
 Greater than greatest ! Better than the best !
 Kinder than kindest ! with soft pity's eye,
 Or (stronger still to speak it) with thine own,
 From thy bright home, from that high firmament,
 Where thou, from all eternity, hast dwelt ;
 Beyond archangels' unassisted ken ;
 From far above what mortals highest call ;
 From elevation's pinnacle ; look down,
 Through — What ? confounding interval ! through
 all
 And more than labouring fancy can conceive ;
 Through radiant ranks of essences unknown ;
 Through hierarchies from hierarchies detach'd
 Round various banners of omnipotence,
 With endless change of rapturous duties fir'd ;
 Through wondrous beings interposing swarms,
 All clustering at the call, to dwell in thee ;
 Through this wide waste of worlds ! this vista vast,
 All sanded o'er with suns ; suns turn'd to night
 Before thy feeblest beam — Look down — down —
 down,
 On a poor breathing particle in dust,

* Nights the Sixth and Seventh.

Or, lower, an immortal in his crimes.
 His crimes forgive ! forgive his virtues, too !
 Those smaller faults, half-converts to the right
 Nor let me close these eyes, which never more
 May see the Sun (though night's descending scale
 Now weighs up morn), unpity'd, and unblest !
 In thy displeasure dwells eternal pain ;
 Pain, our aversion ; pain, which strikes me now ;
 And, since all pain is terrible to man,
 Though transient, terrible ; at thy good hour,
 Gently, ah gently, lay me in my bed,
 My clay-cold bed ! by nature now, so near ;
 By nature, near ; still nearer by disease !
 Till then, be this, an emblem of my grave :
 Let it out-preach the preacher ; every night
 Let it out-cry the boy at Philip's ear ;
 That tongue of death ! that herald of the tomb !
 And when (the shelter of thy wing implor'd)
 My senses, sooth'd, shall sink in soft repose,
 O sink this truth still deeper in my soul,
 Suggested by my pillow, sign'd by fate,
 First, in fate's volume, at the page of man —
Man's sickly soul, though turn'd and toss'd for ever,

From side to side, can rest on nought but thee :
Here, in full trust ; hereafter, in full joy ;
 On thee, the promis'd, sure, eternal down
 Of spirits, toil'd in travel through this vale.
 Nor of that pillow shall my soul despond ;
 For — Love almighty ! Love almighty ! (sing, Exult, creation !) Love almighty, reigns !
 That death of death ! that cordial of despair !
 And loud eternity's triumphant song !

“ Of whom, no more : — For, O thou Patron-
 God !

Thou God and mortal ! Thence more God to man !
 Man's theme eternal ! man's eternal theme !
 Thou canst not 'scape uninjur'd from our praise.
 Uninjur'd from our praise can he escape,
 Who, disembosom'd from the Father, bows
 The Heaven of Heavens, to kiss the distant Earth !
 Breathes out in agonies a sinless soul !
 Against the cross, Death's iron sceptre breaks !
 From famish'd ruin plucks her human prey !
 Throws wide the gates celestial to his foes !
 Their gratitude, for such a boundless debt,
 Deputes their suffering brothers to receive !
 And, if deep human guilt in payment fails ;
 As deeper guilt prohibits our despair !
 Enjoins it, as our duty, to rejoice !
 And (to close all) omnipotently kind,
 Takes his delights among the sons of men.” *

What words are these — And did they come from Heaven ?

And were they spoke to man ? to guilty man ?
 What are all mysteries to love like this ?
 The songs of angels, all the melodies
 Of choral gods, are wafted in the sound ;
 Heal and exhilarate the broken heart ;
 Though plung'd, before, in horrors dark as night :
 Rich prelibation of consummate joy !
 Nor wait we dissolution to be blest.

This final effort of the moral Muse,
 How justly titled † ? nor for me alone :
 For all that read ; what spirit of support,
 What heights of Consolation, crown my song !
 Then, farewell Night ! of darkness, now, no
 more :

* Prov. chap. viii.

† The Consolation.

Joy breaks; shines; triumphs; 't is eternal day.
 Shall that which rises out of nought complain
 Of a few evils, paid with endless joys?
 My soul! henceforth, in sweetest union join
 The two supports of human happiness,
 Which some, erroneous, think can never meet;
 True taste of life, and constant thought of death!
 The thought of death, sole victor of its dread!
Hope, be thy joy; and probity, thy skill;
 Thy patron he, whose diadem has dropp'd
 Yon gems of Heaven; eternity, thy prize:
 And leave the racers of the world their own,
 Their feather, and their froth, for endless toils:
 They part with all for that which is not bread;
 They mortify, they starve, on wealth, fame, power;
 And laugh to scorn the fools that aim at more.
 How must a spirit, late escap'd from Earth,
 Suppose Philander's, Lucia's, or Narcissa's,
 The truth of things new-blazing in its eye,
 Look back, astonish'd, on the ways of men,
 Whose lives' whole drift is to forget their graves!
 And when our present privilege is past,
 To scourge us with due sense of its abuse,
 The same astonishment will seize us all.
 What then must pain us, would preserve us now.
 Lorenzo! 't is not yet too late; Lorenzo!
 Seize wisdom, ere 't is torment to be wise;
 That is, seize wisdom, ere she seizes thee.
 For what, my small philosopher, is Hell?
 'T is nothing but full knowledge of the truth,
 When truth, resisted long, is sworn our foe:
 And calls eternity to do her right.

Thus, darkness aiding intellectual light,
 And sacred silence whispering truths divine,
 And truths divine converting pain to peace,
 My song the midnight raven has outwing'd,
 And shot, ambitious of unbounded scenes,
 Beyond the flaming limits of the world,
 Her gloomy flight. But what avails the flight
 Of fancy, when our hearts remain below?
Virtue abounds in flatteries and foes;
 'T is pride to praise her; penance to perform.
 To more than words to more than worth of
 tongue,

Lorenzo! rise, at this auspicious hour;
 An hour, when Heaven's most intimate with man;
 When, like a falling star, the ray divine
 Glides swift into the bosom of the just;
 And just are all, determin'd to reclaim;
 Which sets that title high within thy reach.
 Awake, then: thy Philander calls: awake!
 Thou, who shalt wake, when the creation sleeps;
 When, like a taper, all these suns expire;
 When Time, like him of Gaza in his wrath,
 Plucking the pillars that support the world,
 In Nature's ample ruins lies entomb'd;
 And midnight, universal midnight! reigns.

LOVE OF FAME,

THE

UNIVERSAL PASSION;

IN SEVEN CHARACTERISTICAL SATIRES.

—Fulgente trahit constrictos gloria curru
 Non minus ignotos generosia. Hor.

SATIRE I.

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF DORSET.

—Tanto major Famæ sitis est, quam
 Virtutia. Juv. Sat. I.

My verse is Satire; Dorset, lend your ear,
 And patronize a Muse you cannot fear.
 To poets sacred is a Dorset's name;
 Their wonted passport through the gates of Fame;
 It bribes the partial reader into praise,
 And throws a glory round the shelter'd lays:
 The dazzled judgment fewer faults can see,
 And gives applause to Blackmore, or to me.
 But you decline the mistress we pursue:
 Others are fond of Fame, but Fame of you.
 Instructive Satire, true to virtue's cause!
 Thou shining supplement of public laws!
 When flatter'd crimes of a licentious age
 Reproach our silence, and demand our rage;
 When purchas'd follies, from each distant land,
 Like arts, improve in Britain's skilful hand;
 When the Law shows her teeth, but dares not bite,
 And South-sea treasures are not brought to light;
 When churchmen Scripture for the classics quit,
 Polite apostates from God's grace to wit;
 When men grow great from their revenue spent,
 And fly from bailiffs into parliament;
 When dying sinners, to blot out their score,
 Bequeath the church the leavings of a whore;
 To chafe our spleen, when themes like these increase,
 Shall panegyric reign, and censure cease?

Shall poesy, like law, turn wrong to right,
 And dedications wash an Æthiop white,
 Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,
 On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post?
 Shall funeral eloquence her colours spread,
 And scatter roses on the wealthy dead?
 Shall authors smile on such illustrious days,
 And satirize with nothing—but their praise?

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
 Nor hears that virtue, which he loves, complain?
 Donne, Dorset, Dryden, Rochester, are dead,
 And guilt's chief foe, in Addison, is fled;
 Congreve, who, crown'd with laurels, fairly won,
 Sits smiling at the goal, while others run,
 He will not write; and (more provoking still!)
 Ye gods! he will not write, and Marvius will.

Doubly distress, what author shall we find,
 Discreetly daring, and severely kind,
 The courtly Roman's* shining path to tread,
 And sharply smile prevailing folly dead?
 Will no superior genius snatch the quill,
 And save me, on the brink, from writing ill?
 Though vain the strife, I'll strive my voice to raise:
 What will not men attempt for sacred praise?

* Horace.

The love of praise, howe'er conceal'd by art,
Reigns, more or less, and glows, in every heart:
The proud, to gain it, toils on toils endure;
The modest shun it, but to make it sure.
O'er globes, and sceptres, now on thrones it swells;
Now, trims the midnight lamp in college cells:
'T is Tory, Whig; it plots, prays, preaches, pleads,
Harangues in senates, squeaks in masquerades.
Here, to Steele's humour makes a bold pretence;
There, bolder, aims at Pulteney's eloquence.
It aids the dancer's heel, the writer's head,
And heaps the plain with mountains of the dead;
Nor ends with life; but nods in sable plumes,
Adorns our hearse, and flatters on our tombs.

What is not proud? the pimp is proud to see
So many like himself in high degree:
The whore is proud her beauties are the dread
Of peevish virtue, and the marriage-bed;
And the bribe'd cuckold, like crown'd victims born
To slaughter, glories in his gilded horn.

Some go to church, proud humbly to repent,
And come back much more guilty than they went:
One way they look, another way they steer,
Pray to the gods, but would have mortals hear;
And when their sins they set sincerely down,
They 'll find that their religion has been one.

Others with wistful eyes on glory look,
When they have got their picture towards a book:
Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign,
Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine.
If at his title T — had dropp'd his quill,
T — might have pass'd for a great genius still.
But T — alas! (excuse him if you can)
Is now a scribbler, who was once a man.
Imperious, some a classic fame demand,
For heaping up, with a laborious hand,
A waggon-load of meanings for one word,
While A's depos'd, and B with pomp restor'd.

Some, for renown, on scraps of learning dote,
And think they grow immortal as they quote.
To patch-work learn'd quotations are ally'd;
Both strive to make our poverty our pride.

On glass how witty is a noble peer!
Did ever diamond cost a man so dear?

Polite diseases make some idiots vain;
Which, if unfortunately well, they feign.

Of folly, vice, disease, men proud we see;
And (stranger still!) of blockheads' flattery;
Whose praise defames; as if a fool should mean,
By spitting on your face, to make it clean.

Nor is 't enough all hearts are swoln with pride,
Her power is mighty, as her realm is wide.
What can she not perform? The love of Fame
Made bold Alphonsus his Creator blame:
Empedocles hurl'd down the burning steep:
And (stronger still!) made Alexander weep.
Nay, it holds Delia from a second bed,
Though her lov'd lord has four half months been dead.

This passion with a pimple have I seen
Retard a cause, and give a judge the spleen.
By this inspir'd (O ne'er to be forgot!)
Some lords have learn'd to spell, and some to knot.
It makes Globose a speaker in the house;
He hems, and is deliver'd of his mouse.
It makes dear self on well-bred tongues prevail,
And I the little hero of each tale.
Sick with the Love of Fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin?
My growing subject seems but just begun,
And, chariot-like, I kindle as I run.

Aid me, great Homer! with thy epic rules,
To take a catalogue of British fools.
Satire! had I thy Dorset's force divine,
A knave or fool should perish in each line;
Though for the first all Westminster should plead,
And for the last all Gresham intercede.

Begin. Who first the catalogue shall grace?
To quality belongs the highest place.
My lord comes forward; forward let him come!
Ye vulgar! at your peril, give him room:
He stands for fame on his forefathers' feet,
By heraldry, prov'd valiant or discreet:
With what a decent pride he throws his eyes
Above the man by three descents less wise!
If virtues at his noble hands you crave,
You bid him raise his father's from the grave.
Men should press forward in Fame's glorious chase;
Nobles look backward, and so lose the race.

Let high-birth triumph! What can be more great?
Nothing — but merit in a low estate.

To virtue's humblest son let none prefer
Vice, though descended from the Conqueror.
Shall men, like figures, pass for high, or base,
Slight, or important, only by their place?
Titles are marks of honest men, and wise;
The fool, or knave, that wears a title, lies.

They that on glorious ancestors enlarge,
Produce their debt, instead of their discharge.
Dorset, let those who proudly boast their line,
Like thee, in worth hereditary, shine.

Vain as false greatness is, the Muse must own
We want not fools to buy that Bristol stone.
Mean sons of earth, who on a South-sea tide
Of full success, swam into wealth and pride,
Knock with a purse of gold at Anstis' gate,
And beg to be descended from the great.

When men of infamy to grandeur soar,
They light a torch to show their shame the more.
Those governments which curb not evils, cause!
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

Belus with solid glory will be crown'd;
He buys no phantom, no vain empty sound;
But builds himself a name; and, to be great,
Sinks in a quarry an immense estate!
In cost and grandeur, Chandos he 'll outdo;
And Burlington, thy taste is not so true.
The pile is finish'd; every toil is past;
And full perfection is arriv'd at last;
When lo! my lord to some small corner runs,
And leaves state-rooms to strangers and to duns.

The man who builds, and wants wherewith to pay
Provides a home from which to run away.
In Britain, what is many a lordly seat,
But a discharge in full for an estate?

In smaller compass lies Pygmalion's fame;
Not domes, but antique statues, are his flame:
Not Fountaine's self more Parian charms has known
Nor is good Pembroke more in love with stone.
The bailiffs come (rude men, prophanely bold!)
And bid him turn his Venus into gold.

"No, sirs," he cries; "I'll sooner rot in jail:
Shall Grecian arts be truck'd for English bail?"
Such heads might make their very busts laugh:
His daughter starves; but Cleopatra's safe.*

Men, overloaded with a large estate,
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit:
The rich may be polite; but, oh! 't is sad
To say you're curious, when we swear you're mad.

* A famous statue.

By your revenue measure your expense ;
 And to your funds and acres join your sense.
 No man is bless'd by accident or guess ;
 True wisdom is the price of happiness :
 Yet few without long-discipline are sage ;
 And our youth only lays up sighs for age.
 But how, my Muse, canst thou resist so long
 The bright temptation of the courtly throng,
 Thy most inviting theme ? The court affords
 Much food for satire ; — it abounds in lords.
 " What lords are those saluting with a grin ?"
 One is just out, and one as lately in.
 " How comes it then to pass, we see preside
 On both their brows an equal share of pride ?"
 Pride, that impartial passion, reigns through all,
 Attends our glory, nor deserts our fall.
 As in its home it triumphs in high place,
 And frowns a haughty exile in disgrace.
 Some lords it bids admire their hands so white,
 Which bloom, like Aaron's, to their ravish'd sight :
 Some lords it bids resign ; and turns their wands,
 Like Moses', into serpents in their hands.
 These sink, as divers, for renown ; and boast,
 With pride inverted, of their honours lost.
 But against reason sure 't is equal sin,
 The boast of merely being out, or in.

What numbers here, through odd ambition strive
 To seem the most transported things alive !
 As if by joy, desert was understood :
 And all the fortunate were wise and good.
 Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
 And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.
 Completely dress'd by Monteuil * and grimace,
 They take their birth-day suit and public face :
 Their smiles are only part of what they wear,
 Put off at night, with Lady B——'s hair.
 What bodily fatigue is half so bad ?
 With anxious care they labour to be glad.

What numbers, here, would into fame advance,
 Conscious of merit, in the coxcomb's dance ;
 The tavern ! park ! assembly ! mask ! and play !
 Those dear destroyers of the tedious day !
 That wheel of fops ! that saunter of the town !
 Call it diversion, and the pill goes down.
 Fools grin on fools, and, stout-like, support,
 Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court.
 Courts can give nothing to the wise and good,
 But scorn of pomp, and love of solitude.
 High stations tumult, but not bliss, create :
 None think the great unhappy, but the great :
 Fools gaze, and envy ; envy darts a sting,
 Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.

I envy none their pageantry and show ;
 I envy none the gilding of their woe.
 Give me, indulgent gods ! with mind serene,
 And guiltless heart, to range the sylvan scene ;
 No splendid poverty, no smiling care,
 No well-bred hate, or servile grandeur, there :
 There pleasing objects useful thoughts suggest ;
 The sense is ravish'd, and the soul is blest ;
 On every thorn delightful wisdom grows ;
 In every rill a sweet instruction flows.
 But some, untaught, o'erhear the whispering rill,
 In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still :
 Nor shouts up folly to a nobler bloom
 In her own native soil, the drawing-room.

The squire is proud to see his coursers strain,
 Or well-breath'd beagles sweep along the plain.

* A famous tailor.

Say, dear Hippolytus, (whose drink is ale,
 Whose erudition is a Christmas tale,
 Whose mistress is saluted with a smack,
 And friend receiv'd with thumps upon the back,)
 When thy sleek gelding nimbly leaps the mound,
 And Ringwood opens on the tainted ground,
 Is that thy praise ? Let Ringwood's fame alone ;
 Just Ringwood leaves each animal his own ;
 Nor envies, when a gypsy you commit,
 And shake the clumsy bench with country wit ;
 When you the dullest of dull things have said,
 And then ask pardon for the jest you made.

Here breathe, my Muse ! and then thy task renew :
 Ten thousand fools unsung are still in view.
 Fewer lay-atheists made by church debates ;
 Fewer great beggars fam'd for large estates ;
 Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind ;
 Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind ;
 Fewer grave lords to Scrope discreetly bend ;
 And fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend.
 Is there a man of an eternal vein,
 Who lulls the town in winter with his strain,
 At Bath, in summer, chants the reigning lass,
 And sweetly whistles as the waters pass ?
 Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
 That runs for ages without winding-up ?
 Is there, whom his tenth epic mounts to fame ?
 Such, and such only, might exhaust my theme :
 Nor would these heroes of the task be glad,
 For who can write so fast as men run mad ?

SATIRE II.

My Muse, proceed, and reach thy destin'd end ;
 Though toils and danger the bold task attend.
Heroes and gods make other poems fine ;
 Plain Satire calls for sense in every line :
 Then, to what swarms thy faults I dare expose !
 All friends to vice and folly are thy foes.
 When such the foe, a war eternal wage ;
 'T is most ill-nature to repress thy rage :
 And if these strains some nobler Muse excite,
 I'll glory in the verse I did not write.

So weak are human-kind by nature made,
 Or to such weakness by their vice betray'd,
 Almighty Vanity ! to thee they owe
 Their act of pleasure, and their balm of woe.
 Thou, like the Sun, all colours dost contain,
 Varying, like rays of light, on drops of rain.
 For every soul finds reason to be proud,
 Though hiss'd and hooted by the pointing crowd.

Warm in pursuit of foxes and renown,
 Hippolytus * demands the sylvan crown ;
 But Florio's fame, the product of a shower,
 Grows in his garden, an illustrious flower !
 Why teems the Earth ? Why melt the vernal skies ?
 Why shines the Sun ? To make Paul Diack † rise.
 From morn to night has Florio gazing stood,
 And wonder'd how the gods could be so good :
 What shape ! What hue ! Was ever nymph so fair ?
 He dotes ! he dies ! he too is rooted there.
 O solid bliss ! which nothing can destroy,
 Except a cat, bird, snail, or idle boy.
 In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
 And wakes next day a most inglorious wight ;
 The tulip's dead ! See thy fair sister's fate,
 O C—— ! and be kind, ere 't is too late.

* This refers to the first Satire.

† The name of a tulip.

Nor are those enemies I mention'd, all ;
Beware, O florist, thy ambition's fall.
A friend of mine indulg'd this noble flame ;
A Quaker serv'd him, Adam was his name ;
To one lov'd tulip oft the master went,
Hung o'er it, and whole days in rapture spent ;
But came, and miss'd it, one ill-fated hour :
He rag'd ! he roar'd ! " What demon cropt my flower ? "

Serene, quoth Adam, " Lo ! 't was crush'd by me ;
Fall'n is the Baal to which thou bow'dst thy knee. "

But all men want amusement ; and what crime
In such a Paradise to fool their time ?
None : but why proud of this ? To fame they soar :
We grant they're idle, if they 'll ask no more.

We smile at florists, we despise their joy,
And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy :
But are those wiser whom we most admire,
Survey with envy, and pursue with fire ?
What 's he who sighs for wealth, or fame, or power ?
Another Florio doting on a flower !
A short-liv'd flower ; and which has often sprung
From sordid arts, as Florio's out of dung.

With what, O Codrus ! is thy fancy smit ?
The flower of learning, and the bloom of wit.
Thy gaudy shelves with crimson bindings glow,
And Epictetus is a perfect beau.

How fit for thee, bound up in crimson too,
Gilt, and like them, devoted to the view !
Thy books are furniture. Methinks 't is hard
That science should be purchas'd by the yard ;
And Tonson, turn'd upholsterer, send home
The gilded leather to fit up thy room.

If not to some peculiar end design'd,
Study 's the specious trifling of the mind ;
Or is at best a secondary aim,
A chase for sport alone, and not for game.
If so, sure they who the mere volume prize,
But love the thicket where the quarry lies.

On buying books Lorenzo long was bent,
But found at length that it reduc'd his rent ;
His farms were flown ; when, lo ! a sale comes on,
A choice collection ! what is to be done ?
He sells his last ; for he the whole will buy ;
Sells e'en his house ; nay, wants whereon to lie :
So high the generous ardour of the man
For Romans, Greeks, and Orientals ran.
When terms were drawn, and brought him by the clerk,

Lorenzo sign'd the bargain — with his mark.
Unlearned men of books assume the care,
As eunuchs are the guardians of the fair.

Not in his authors' liveries alone
Is Codrus' erudite ambition shown :
Editions various, at high prices bought,
Inform the world what Codrus would be thought ;
And to this cost another must succeed,
To pay a sage, who says that he can read ;
Who titles knows, and indexes has seen ;
But leaves to Chesterfield what lies between ;
Of pompous books who shuns the proud expense,
And humbly is contented with their sense.

O Stanhope, whose accomplishments make good
The promise of a long-illustrious blood,
In arts and manners eminently grac'd,
The strictest honour ! and the finest taste !
Accept this verse ; if Satire can agree
With so consummate an humanity.

By your example would Hilario mend,
How would it grace the talents of my friend ;

Who, with the charms of his own genius smit,
Conceives all virtues are compris'd in wit !
But time his fervent petulance may cool ;
For though he is a wit, he is no fool.
In time he 'll learn to use, not waste, his sense ;
Nor make a frailty of an excellence.

He spares nor friend nor foe ; but calls to mind,
Like doom's-day, all the faults of all mankind.

What though wit tickles ? tickling is unsafe,
If still 't is painful while it makes us laugh.

Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart ?

Parts may be prais'd, good-nature is ador'd ;
Then draw your wit as seldom as your sword ;
And never on the weak ; or you 'll appear
As there no hero, no great genius here.

As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set :

Their want of edge from their offence is seen ;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen.

The fame men give is for the joy they find ;
Dull is the jester, when the joke's unkind.

Since Marcus, doubtless, thinks himself a wit,
To pay my compliment, what place so fit ?

His most facetious letters * came to hand,
Which my First Satire sweetly reprimand :

If that a just offence to Marcus gave,
Say, Marcus, which art thou, a fool, or knave ?

For all but such with caution I forbore ;
That thou wast either, I ne'er knew before :

I know thee now, both what thou art, and who ;
No mask so good, but Marcus must shine through :

False names are vain, thy lines their author tell ;
Thy best concealment had been writing well :

But thou a brave neglect of fame hast shown,
Of others' fame, great genius ! and thy own.

Write on unheeded ; and this maxim know,
The man who pardons, disappoints his foe.

In malice to proud wits, some proudly lull
Their peevish reason ; vain of being dull ;

When some home joke has stung their solemn souls,
In vengeance they determine — to be fools ;

Through spleen, that little Nature gave, make less,
Quite zealous in the ways of heaviness ;

To lumps inanimate a fondness take ;
And disinherit sons that are awake.

These, when their utmost venom they would spit,
Most barbarously tell you — " He's a wit. "

Poor negroes, thus to show their burning spite
To cacademons, say, they 're devilish white.

Lampridius, from the bottom of his breast,
Sighs o'er one child ; but triumphs in the rest.

How just his grief ! one carries in his head
A less proportion of the father's lead ;

And is in danger, without special grace,
To rise above a justice of the peace.

The dung-hill breed of men a diamond scorn,
And feel a passion for a grain of corn ;

Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight,
Who wins their hearts by knowing black from white,

Who with much pains, exerting all his sense,
Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence.

The booby father craves a booby son ;
And by Heaven's blessing thinks himself undone.

Wants of all kinds are made to fame a plea ;
One learns to lisp ; another not to see :

Miss D —, tottering, catches at your hand ;
Was ever thing so pretty born to stand ?

* Letters sent to the author, signed Marcus.

Whilst these, what Nature gave, disown through pride,

Others affect what Nature has denied ;
What Nature has denied, fools will pursue :
As apes are ever walking upon two.

Crassus, a grateful sage, our awe and sport !
Supports grave forms ; for forms the sage support.
He hems ; and cries, with an important air,
“ If yonder clouds withdraw, it will be fair : ”
Then quotes the Stagyrte, to prove it true :
And adds, “ The learn’d delight in something
new.”

Is ’t not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravely plead ?
As far a formalist from wisdom sits,
In judging eyes, as libertines from wits.

These subtle wights (so blind are mortal men,
Though Satire couch them with her keenest pen)
For ever will hang out a solemn face,
To put off nonsense with a better grace :
As pedlars with some hero’s head make bold,
Illustrious mark ! where pins are to be sold.
What ’s the bent brow, or neck in thought reclin’d ?
The body’s wisdom to conceal the mind.
A man of sense can artifice disdain ;
As men of wealth may venture to go plain ;
And be this truth eternal ne’er forgot,
Solemnity ’s a cover for a sol.

I find the fool, when I behold the screen ;
For ’t is the wise man’s interest to be seen.

Hence, Chesterfield, that openness of heart,
And just disdain for that poor mimic art ;
Hence (manly praise !) that manner nobly free,
Which all admire, and I commend, in thee.

With generous scorn how oft hast thou survey’d
Of court and town the noontide masquerade ;
Where swarms of knaves the vizor quite disgrace,
And hide secure behind a naked face !
Where Nature’s end of language is declin’d,
And men talk only to conceal the mind :
Where generous hearts the greatest hazard run,
And he who trusts a brother, is undone !

These all their care expend on outward show
For wealth and fame : for fame alone, the beau.
Of late at White’s was young Florello seen !
How blank his look ! how discompos’d his mien !
So hard it proves in grief sincere to feign !
Sunk were his spirits ; for his coat was plain.

Next day his breast regain’d its wonted peace ;
His health was mended with a silver lace.

A curious artist, long inured to toils
Of gentler sort, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir’d,
So touch’d his curls, his mighty soul was fir’d.
The well-swoln ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame ;
His sumptuous watch-case, though conceal’d it lies,
Like a good conscience, solid joy supplies.
He only thinks himself (so far from vain !)
Stanhope in wit, in breeding Deloraine.
Whene’er, by seeming chance, he throws his eye
On mirrors that reflect his Tyrian dye,
With how sublime a transport leaps his heart !
But Fate ordains that dearest friends must part.
In active measures, brought from France, he wheels,
And triumphs, conscious of his learned heels.

So have I seen, on some bright summer’s day,
A calf of genius, debonnair and gay,
Dance on the bank, as if inspir’d by fame,
Of the pretty fellow in the stream.

Morose is sunk with shame, whene’er surpris’d
In linen clean, or peruke undisguis’d.
No sublunary chance his vestments fear ;
Valued, like leopards, as their spots appear.
A fam’d surtout he wears, which once was blue,
And his foot swims in a capacious shoe ;
One day his wife (for who can wives reclaim ?)
Levell’d her barbarous needle at his fame :
But open force was vain ; by night she went,
And, while he slept, surpris’d the darling rent :
Where yawn’d the frieze is now become a doubt,
“ And glory, at one entrance, quite shut out.” *

He scorns Florello, and Florello him ;
This hates the filthy creature ; that, the prim :
Thus, in each other, both these fools despise
Their own dear selves, with undiscerning eyes ;
Their methods various, but alike their aim ;
The stolen and the fopling are the same.

Ye Whigs and Tories ! thus it fares with you,
When party-rage too warmly you pursue ;
Then both club nonsense, and impetuous pride,
And fully joins whom sentiments divide.
You vent your spleen, as monkeys, when they pass,
Scratch at the mimic monkey in the glass ;
While both are one : and henceforth be it known,
Fools of both sides shall stand for fools alone.

“ But who art thou ? ” methinks Florello cries :
“ Of all thy species art thou only wise ? ”

Since smallest things can give our sins a twitch,
As crossing straws retard a passing witch,
Florello, thou my monitor shalt be ;
I’ll conjure thus some profit out of thee.
O thou myself ! abroad our counsels roam,
And, like ill husbands, take no care at home :
Thou too art wounded with the common dart,
And Love of Fame lies throbbing at thy heart ;
And what wise means to gain it hast thou chose ?
Know, fame and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time ?
While I a moment name, a moment ’s past ;
I’m nearer death in this verse, than the last :
What then is to be done ? Be wise with speed ;
A fool at forty is a fool indeed.

And what so foolish as the chase of fame ?
How vain the prize ! how impotent our aim !
For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time,
That rise, and fall, that swell, and are no more,
Born, and forgot, ten thousand in an hour ?

SATIRE III.

TO THE RIGHT HON. MR. DODINGTON.

LONG, Dodington, in debt I long have sought
To ease the burthen of my grateful thought ;
And now a poet’s gratitude you see ;
Grant him two favours, and he ’ll ask for three :
For whose the present glory, or the gain ?
You give protection, I a worthless strain.
You love and feel the poet’s sacred flame,
And know the basis of a solid fame ;
Though prone to like, yet cautious to commend,
You read with all the malice of a friend ;
Nor favour my attempts that way alone,
But, more to raise my verse, conceal your own.

* Milton.

An ill-tim'd modesty ! turn ages o'er,
When wanted Britain bright examples more ?
Her learning, and her genius too, decays ;
And dark and cold are her declining days ;
As if men now were of another cast,
They meanly live on alms of ages past.
Men still are men ; and they who boldly dare,
Shall triumph o'er the sons of cold despair ;
Or, if they fail, they justly still take place
Of such who run in debt for their disgrace ;
Who borrow much, then fairly make it known,
And damn it with improvements of their own.
We bring some new materials, and what's old
New-cast with care, and in no borrow'd mould ;
Late times the verse may read, if these refuse ;
And from sour critics vindicate the Muse.

"Your work is long," the critics cry. 'Tis true,
And lengthens still, to take in fools like you :
Shorten my labour, if its length you blame ;
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game ;
As hunted hags, who, while the dogs pursue,
Renounce their four legs, and start up on two.

Like the bold bird upon the banks of Nile,
That picks the teeth of the dire crocodile,
Will I enjoy (dread feast !) the critic's rage,
And with the fell destroyer feed my page.
For what ambitious fools are more to blame,
Than those who thunder in the critic's name ?
Good authors damn'd, have their revenge in this,
To see what wretches gain the praise they miss.

Balbutius, muffled in his sable cloak,
Like an old Druid from his hollow oak,
As ravens solemn, and as boding, cries,
"Ten thousand worlds for the three unities !"
Ye doctors sage, who through Parnassus teach,
Or quit the tub, or practise what you preach.

One judges as the weather dictates ; right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night :
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles, or parentage ;
Since his great ancestors in Flanders fell,
The poem doubtless must be written well.
Another judges by the writer's look ;
Another judges, for he bought the book ;
Some judge, their knack of judging wrong to keep ;
Some judge, because it is too soon to sleep.

Thus all will judge, and with one single aim,
To gain themselves, not give the writer fame.
The very best ambitiously advise,
Half to serve you, and half to pass for wise.

Critics on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state ;
Hot, envious, noisy, proud, the scribbling fry
Burn, hiss, and bounce, waste paper, stink, and die.
Rail on, my friends ! what more my verse can crown
Than Compton's smile, and your obliging frown ?

Not all on books their criticism waste :
The genius of a dish some justly taste,
And eat their way to fame ; with anxious thought
The salmon is refus'd, the turbot bought.
Impatient art rebukes the Sun's delay,
And bids December yield the fruits of May ;
Their various cares in one great point combine
The business of their lives, that is — to dine.
Half of their precious day they give the feast ;
And to a kind digestion spare the rest.
Apicius, here, the taster of the town,
Feeds twice a week, to settle their renown.

These worthies of the palate guard with care
The sacred annals of their bills of fare ;

In those choice books their panegyrics read,
And scorn the creatures that for hunger feed.
If man by feeding well commences great,
Much more the worm to whom that man is meat.

To glory some advance a lying claim,
Thieves of renown, and pilferers of fame :
Their front supplies what their ambition lacks ;
They know a thousand lords, behind their backs.
Cottil is apt to wink upon a peer,
When turn'd away, with a familiar leer ;
And Harvey's eyes, unmercifully keen,
Have murder'd fops, by whom she ne'er was seen.
Niger adopts stray libels ; wisely prone
To covet shame still greater than his own.
Bathyllus, in the winter of threescore,
Belies his innocence, and keeps a whore.
Absence of mind Brabantio turns to fame,
Learns to mistake, nor knows his brother's name ;
Has words and thoughts in nice disorder set,
And takes a memorandum to forget.
Thus vain, not knowing what adorns or blots,
Men forge the patents that create them sots.

As love of pleasure into pain betrays,
So most grow infamous through love of praise.
But whence for praise can such an ardour rise,
When those, who bring that incense, we despise ?
For such the vanity of great and small,
Contempt goes round, and all men laugh at all.
Nor can e'en Satire blame them ; for 't is true,
They have most ample cause for what they do.
O fruitful Britain ! doubtless thou wast meant
A nurse of fools, to stock the continent.
Though Phœbus and the Nine for ever mow,
Rank folly underneath the scythe will grow.
The plenteous harvest calls me forward still,
Till I surpass in length my lawyer's bill ;
A Welsh descent, which well-paid heralds damn ;
Or, longer still, a Dutchman's epigram.
When cloy'd, in fury I throw down my pen,
In comes a coxcomb, and I write again.

See Tityrus, with merriment possest,
Is burst with laughter ere he hears the jest :
What need he stay ? for, when the joke is o'er,
His teeth will be no whiter than before.
Is there of these, ye fair ! so great a dearth,
That you need purchase monkeys for your mirth ?

Some, vain of paintings, bid the world admire ;
Of houses some ; nay, houses that they hire :
Some (perfect wisdom !) of a beauteous wife ;
And boast, like Cordeliers, a scourge for life. [airs ;

Sometimes, through pride, the sexes change their
My lord has vapours, and my lady swears ;
Then, stranger still ! on turning of the wind,
My lord wears breeches, and my lady's kind.

To show the strength, and infamy of pride,
By all 't is follow'd, and by all denied.
What numbers are there, which at once pursue
Praise, and the glory to contemn it, too !
Vincenna knows self-praise betrays to shame,
And therefore lays a stratagem for fame ;
Makes his approach in modesty's disguise,
To win applause ; and takes it by surprise.
"To err," says he, "in small things is my fate."
You know your answer, "He's exact in great."
"My style," says he, "is rude and full of faults."
"But oh ! what sense ! what energy of thoughts !"
That he wants algebra, he must confess ;
"But not a soul to give our arms success."
"Ah ! That's a hit indeed," Vincenna cries ;
"But who in heat of blood was ever wise ?"

I own 't was wrong, when thousands call'd me back,
To make that hopeless, ill-advis'd, attack ;
All say, 't was madness ; nor dare I deny ;
Sure never fool so well deserv'd to die."
Could this deceive in others, to be free,
It ne'er, Vincenna, could deceive in thee ;
Whose conduct is a comment to thy tongue,
So clear, the dullest cannot take thee wrong.
Thou on one sleeve wilt thy revenues wear ;
And haunt the court, without a prospect there.
Are these expedients for renown ? Confess
Thy little self, that I may scorn thee less.

Be wise, Vincenna, and the court forsake ;
Our fortunes there, nor thou nor I shall make.
Even men of merit, ere their point they gain,
In hardy service make a long campaign ;
Most manfully besiege the patron's gate,
And, oft repuls'd, as oft attack the great
With painful art, and application warm,
And take, at last, some little place by storm ;
Enough to keep two shoes on Sunday clean,
And starve upon discreetly, in Sheer-Lane.
Already this thy fortune can afford ;
Then starve without the favour of my lord.
'T is true, great fortunes some great men confer :
But often, even in doing right, they err :
From caprice, not from choice, their favours come :
'They give, but think it toil to know to whom :
The man that 's nearest, yawning, they advance :
'T is inhumanity to bless by chance.
If merit sues, and greatness is so loth
To break its downy trance, I pity both.

I grant at court, Philander, at his need,
(Thanks to his lovely wife,) finds friends indeed.
Of every charm and virtue she 's possess :
Philander ! thou art exquisitely blest ;
'The public envy ! Now then, 't is allow'd,
'The man is found, who may be justly proud :
But, see ! how sickly is ambition's taste !
Ambition feeds on trash, and loaths a feast ;
For, lo ! Philander, of reproach afraid,
In secret loves his wife, but keeps her maid.

Some nymphs sell reputation ; others buy ;
And love a market where the rates run high :
Italian music 's sweet, because 't is dear ;
Their vanity is tickled, not their ear :
Their tastes would lessen, if the prices fell,
And Shakspeare's wretched stuff do quite as well ;
Away the disenchanted fair would throng,
And own, that English is their mother tongue.

To show how much our northern tastes refine,
Imported nymphs our peeresses outshine ;
While tradesmen starve, these Philomels are gay ;
For generous lords had rather give than pay.

Behold the masquerade's fantastic scene !
The legislature join'd with Drury-Lane !
When Britain calls, th' embroider'd patriots run,
And serve their country — if the dance is done.
" Are we not then allow'd to be polite ?"
Yes, doubtless ! but first set your notions right.
Worth, of politeness is the needful ground ;
Where that is wanting, this can ne'er be found.
Triflers not e'en in trifles can excel ;
'T is solid bodies only polish well.

Great, chosen prophet ! for these latter days,
To turn a willing world from righteous ways !
Well, Heydegger, dost thou thy master serve ;
Well has he seen his servant should not starve.
Thou to his name hast splendid temples rais'd ;
In various forms of worship seen him prais'd

Gaudy devotion, like a Roman, shown,
And sung sweet anthems in a tongue unknown.
Inferior offerings to thy god of vice
Are duly paid, in fiddles, cards, and dice ;
Thy sacrifice supreme, an hundred maids !
That solemn rite of midnight masquerades !
If maids the quite exhausted town denies,
An hundred head of cuckolds may suffice.
Thou smil'st, well pleas'd with the converted land,
To see the fifty churches at a stand.
And that thy minister may never fail,
But what thy hand has planted still prevail,
Of minor prophets a succession sure
The propagation of thy zeal secure.

See commons, peers, and ministers of state,
In solemn council met, and deep debate !
What god-like enterprise is taking birth ?
What wonder opens on th' expecting Earth ?
'T is done ! with loud applause the council rings !
Fix'd is the fate of whores and fiddle-strings !

Though bold these truths, thou, Muse, with truths like these,

Wilt none offend, whom 't is a praise to please :
Let others flatter to be flatter'd ; thou,
Like just tribunals, bend an awful brow.
How terrible it were to common-sense,
To write a satire, which gave none offence !
And, since from life I take the draughts you see,
If men dislike them, do they censure me ?
The fool, and knave, 't is glorious to offend,
And god-like an attempt the world to mend ;
The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall,
Knaves know the game, and honest men pay all.

How hard for real worth to gain its price !
A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
If blest with pliant, though but slender, sense,
Feign'd modesty, and real impudence :
A supple knee, smooth tongue, an easy grace,
A curse within, a smile upon his face :
A beauteous sister, or convenient wife,
Are prizes in the lottery of life ;
Genius and virtue they will soon defeat,
And lodge you in the bosom of the great.
To merit, is but to provide a pain
For men's refusing what you ought to gain.

May, Dodington, this maxim fail in you,
Whom my presaging thoughts already view
By Walpole's conduct fir'd, and friendship grac'd,
Still higher in your prince's favour plac'd ;
And lending, here, those awful councils aid,
Which you, abroad, with such success obey'd !
Bear this from one, who holds your friendship dear ;
What most we wish, with ease we fancy near.

SATIRE IV.

TO THE RIGHT HON. SIR SPENCER COMPTON.

Round some fair tree th' ambitious woodbines
grows,
And breathes her sweets on the supporting boughs :
So sweet the verse, th' ambitious verse, should be,
(O ! pardon mine) that hopes support from thee ;
Thee, Compton, born o'er senates to preside,
Their dignity to raise, their councils guide ;
Deep to discern, and widely to survey,
And kingdoms' fates, without ambition, weigh ;
Of distant virtues nice extremes to blend,
— wn's assertor, and the people's friend :

Nor dost thou scorn, amid sublimer views,
To listen to the labours of the Muse;
Thy smiles protect her, while thy talents fire,
And 't is but half thy glory to inspire.
Vex'd at a public fame, so justly won,
The jealous Chremes is with spleen undone;
Chremes, for airy pensions of renown,
Devotes his service to the state and crown:
All schemes he knows, and, knowing, all improves,
Though Britain's thankless, still this patriot loves:
But patriots differ; some may shed their blood,
He drinks his coffee, for the public good;
Consults the sacred steam, and there foresees
What storms, or sunshine, Providence decrees;
Knows, for each day, the weather of our fate;
A quidnunc is an almanac of state.

You smile, and think this statesman void of use;
Why may not time his secret worth produce?
Since apes can roast the choice Castanian nut;
Since steeds of genius are expert at put;
Since half the Senate "Not content" can say,
Geese nations save, and puppies plots betray.

What makes him model realms, and counsel kings?

An incapacity for smaller things:
Poor Chremes can't conduct his own estate,
And thence has undertaken Europe's fate.
Gehenno leaves the realm to Chremes' skill,
And boldly claims a province higher still:
To raise a name, th' ambitious boy has got,
At once, a Bible, and a shoulder-knot;
Deep in the secret, he looks through the whole,
And pities the dull rogue that saves his soul;
To talk with rev'rence you must take good heed,
Nor shock his tender reason with the Creed;
Howe'er well-bred, in public he complies,
Obliging friends alone with blasphemies.

Peerage is poison, good estates are bad
For this disease; poor rogues run seldom mad.
Have not attainders brought unhop'd relief,
And falling stocks quite cur'd an unbelief?
While the Sun shines, Blunt talks with wondrous
force;

But thunder mars small beer, and weak discourse.
Such useful instruments the weather show,
Just as their mercury is high or low:
Health chiefly keeps an atheist in the dark;
A fever argues better than a Clarke:
Let but the logic in his pulse decay,
The Grecian he'll renounce, and learn to pray;
While C—— mourns, with an unfeigned zeal,
Th' apostate youth, who reason'd once so well.

C——, who makes merry with the Creed,
He almost thinks he disbelieves indeed;
But only thinks so: to give both their due,
Satan, and he, believe, and tremble too.
Of some for glory such the boundless rage,
That they're the blackest scandal of their age.

Narcissus the Tartarian club disclaims;
Nay, a free-mason, with some terour, names;
Omits no duty; nor can envy say,
He miss'd, these many years, the church, or play:
He makes no noise in parliament, 't is true;
But pays his debts, and visit, when 't is due;
His character and gloves are ever clean,
And then, he can out-bow the bowing dean;
A smile eternal on his lip he wears,
Which equally the wise and worthless shares.
In gay fatigues, this most undaunted chief,
Patient of idleness beyond belief,

Most charitably lends the town his face,
For ornament, in every public place;
As sure as cards, he to th' assembly comes,
And is the furniture of drawing-rooms:
When ombre calls, his hand and heart are free,
And, join'd to two, he fails not — to make three:
Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace?
To deck my list, by nature were design'd
Such shining expletives of human kind,
Who want, while through blank life they dream
along,

Sense to be right, and passion to be wrong.

To counterpoise this hero of the mode,
Some for renown are singular and odd;
What other men dislike, is sure to please,
Of all mankind, these dear antipodes;
Through pride, not malice, they run counter still,
And birth-days are their days of dressing ill.
Arbuthnot is a fool, and F—— a sage,
S——ly will fright you, E—— engage;
By nature streams run backward, flame descends,
Stones mount, and Sussex is the worst of friends;
They take their rest by day, and wake by night,
And blush, if you surprise them in the right;
If they by chance blurt out, ere well aware,
A swan is white, or Queensberry is fair.

Nothing exceeds in ridicule, no doubt,
A fool in fashion, but a fool that's out.
His passion for absurdity's so strong,
He cannot bear a rival in the wrong;
Though wrong the mode, comply; more sense is shown

In wearing others' follies, than your own.
If what is out of fashion most you prize,
Methinks you should endeavour to be wise.
But what in oddness can be more sublime
Than Sloane, the foremost toyman of his time?
His nice ambition lies in curious fancies,
His daughter's portion a rich shell inhances,
And Ashmole's baby-house is, in his view,
Britannia's golden mine, a rich Peru!
How his eyes languish! how his thoughts adore
That painted coat, which Joseph never wore!
He shows, on holidays, a sacred pin,
That touch'd the ruff, that touch'd Queen Bess's chin.

"Since that great dearth our chronicles deplore,
Since that great plague that swept as many more,
Was ever year unblest as this?" he'll cry,
"It has not brought us one new butterfly!"
In times that suffer such learn'd men as these,
Unhappy I——y! how came you to please?

Not gaudy butterflies are Lico's game;
But, in effect, his chase is much the same:
Warm in pursuit, he levées all the great,
Stanch to the foot of title and estate:
Where'er their lordships go, they never find
Or Lico, or their shadows, lag behind;
He sets them sure, where'er their lordships run,
Close at their elbows, as a morning-dun;
As if their grandeur by contagion wrought,
And fame was like a fever, to be caught:
But after seven years' dance, from place to place,
The Dane* is more familiar with his grace.

Who'd be a crutch to prop a rotten peer;
Or living pendant dangling at his ear,
For ever whispering secrets, which were blown
For months before, by trumpets through the town?

* A Danish dog of the Duke of Argyll.

Who 'd be a glass, with flattering grimace,
Still to reflect the temper of his face?
Or happy pin to stick upon his sleeve,
When my lord 's gracious, and vouchsafes it leave?
Or cushion, when his heaviness shall please
To loll, or thump it, for his better ease?
Or a vile butt, for noon, or night, bespoke,
When the peer rashly swears he 'll club his joke?
Who 'd shake with laughter, though he could not find

His lordship's jest; or, if his nose broke wind,
For blessings to the gods profoundly bow,
That can cry, "Chimney sweep," or drive a plough?
With terms like these, how mean the tribe that close!
Scarce meaner they, who terms like these impose.

But what 's the tribe most likely to comply?
The men of ink, or ancient authors lye;
The writing tribe, who shameless auctions hold
Of praise, by inch of candle to be sold:
All men they flatter, but themselves the most,
With deathless fame, their everlasting boast:
For Fame no cully makes so much her jest,
As her old constant spark, the bard profest.
"Boyle shines in council, Mordaunt in the fight,
Pelham's magnificent; but I can write,
And what to my great soul like glory dear?"
Till some god whispers in his tingling ear,
That fame 's unwholesome taken without meat,
And life is best sustain'd by what is eat:
Grown lean, and wise, he curses what he writ,
And wishes all his wants were in his wit.

Ah! what avails it, when his dinner 's lost,
That his triumphant name adorns a post?
Or that his shining page (provoking fate!)
Defends sirloins, which sons of dullness eat?

What foe to verse without compassion hears,
What cruel prose-man can refrain from tears,
When the poor Muse, for less than half-a-crown,
A prostitute on every hulk in town,
With other whores undone, though not in print,
Clubs credit for Geneva in the Mint?

Ye bards! why will you sing, though uninspir'd?
Ye bards! why will you starve, to be admir'd?
Defunct by Phœbus' laws, beyond redress,
Why will your spectres haunt the frightened press?
Bad metre, that excrescence of the head,
Like hair, will sprout, although the poet 's dead.

All other trades demand, verse-makers beg;
A dedication is a wooden-leg;
A barren Labeo, the true mumper's fashion,
Exposes borrow'd brats to move compassion.
Though such myself, vile bards I discommend;
Nay more, though gentle Damon is my friend.
"Is 't then a crime to write?"—If talent rare
Proclaim the god, the crime is to forbear:
For some, though few, there are, large-minded
men,

Who watch unseen the labours of the pen;
Who know the Muse's worth, and therefore court,
Their deeds her theme, their bounty her support;
Who serve, unask'd, the least pretence to wit;
My sole excuse, alas! for having writ.
Argyll true wit is studious to restore;
And Dorset smiles, if Phœbus smil'd before;
Pembroke in years the long-lov'd arts admires,
And Henrietta like a Muse inspires.

But ah! not inspiration can obtain
That fame, which poets languish for in vain.
How mad their aim, who thirst for glory, strive
To grasp, what no man can possess alive!

Fame 's a reversion, in which men take place
(O late reversion!) at their own decense.
This truth sagacious Lintot knows so well,
He starves his authors, that their works may sell.

That fame is wealth, fantastic poets cry;
That wealth is fame, another clan reply;
Who know no guilt, no scandal, but in rags;
And swell in just proportion to their bags.
Nor only the low-born, deform'd, and old,
Think glory nothing but the beams of gold;
The first young lord, which in the Mall you meet,
Shall match the veriest hunks in Lombard-street,
From rescued candles' ends who rais'd a sum,
And starves, to join a penny to a plum.

A beardless miser! 'T is a guilt unknown
To former times, a scandal all our own.

Of ardent lovers, the true modern band
Will mortgage Celia to redeem their land.
For love, young, noble, rich, Castalio dies;
Name but the fair, love swells into his eyes.
Divine Monimia, thy fond fears lay down;
No rival can prevail — but half a crown.

He glories to late times to be convey'd,
Not for the poor he has reliev'd, but made:
Not such ambition his great fathers fir'd,
When Harry conquer'd, and half France expir'd:
He 'd be a slave, a pimp, a dog, for gain:
Nay, a dull sheriff for his golden chain.

"Who 'd be a slave?" the gallant Colonel cries,
While love of glory sparkles from his eyes.
To deathless fame he loudly pleads his right —
Just is his title — for he will not fight:

All soldiers valour, all divines have grace,
As maids of honour beauty — by their place:
But, when indulging on the last campaign,
His lofty terms climb o'er the hills of slain;
He gives the foes he slew, at each vain word,
A sweet revenge, and half absolves his sword.

Of boasting more than of a bomb afraid,
A soldier should be modest as a maid:
Fame is a bubble the reserv'd enjoy;
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, destroy.
'T is the world's debt to deeds of high degree;
But if you pay yourself, the world is free.
Were there no tongue to speak them but his own,
Augustus' deeds in arms had ne'er been known.
Augustus' deeds! if that ambiguous name
Confounds my reader, and misguides his aim,
Such is the prince's worth, of whom I speak;
The Roman would not blush at the mistake.

SATIRE V.

ON WOMEN.

O fairest of creation! last and best!
Of all God's works! Creature in whom excell'd,
Whatever can to sight, or thought, be form'd
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet!
How art thou lost! —

MILTON.

Nox reigns ambition in bold man alone;
Soft female hearts the rude invader own;
But there, indeed, it deals in nicer things,
Than routing armies, and dethroning kings:
Attend, and you discern it in the fair

— er, or reclaim a hair;

— d orbit of an eye;

— laborate a sign.

The sex we honour, though their faults we
blame :

ay, thank their faults for such a fruitful theme :

theme, fair ——— ! doubly kind to me,
since satirizing those is praising thee ;

Who wouldst not bear, too modestly refin'd,
panegyric of a grosser kind.

Britannia's daughters, much more fair than nice,
too fond of admiration, lose their price ;

Corn in the public eye, give cheap delight
to throngs, and tarnish to the sated sight :

As unreserv'd, and beauteous, as the Sun,
through every sign of vanity they run ;

Assemblies, parks, coarse feasts in city-halls ;
Lectures, and trials, plays, committees, balls,

Cells, bedlams, executions, Smithfield scenes,
And fortune-tellers, caves, and lions' dens,

Asstalments, pillories, coronations, tombs,
Jumblers, and funerals, puppet-shows, reviews,

Games, races, rabbits, (and, still stranger !) pews.
Clarinda's bosom burns, but burns for Fame ;

And love lies vanquish'd in a nobler flame ;
Warm gleams of hope she, now, dispenses ; then,

Like April suns, dives into clouds again :
With all her lustre, now, her lover warms ;

Then, out of ostentation, hides her charms ;
And is, next, her pleasure sweetly to complain,

And to be taken with a sudden pain ;
Then, she starts up, all ecstasy and bliss,

And is, sweet soul ! just as sincere in this :
How she rolls her charming eyes in spite !

And looks delightfully with all her might !
But, like our heroes, much more brave than wise,

He conquers for the triumph, not the prize.
Zara resembles Ætna crown'd with snows ;

Without she freezes, and within she glows :
Twice ere the Sun descends, with zeal inspir'd,

From the vain converse of the world retir'd,
He reads the psalms and chapters for the day,

As — Cleopatra, or the last new play.
Thus gloomy Zara, with a solemn grace,

Receives mankind, and hides behind her face.
Nor far beneath her in renown, is she,

Who through good-breeding is ill company ;
Whose manners will not let her larum cease,

Who thinks you are unhappy, when at peace ;
To find you news, who racks her subtle head,

And vows — “ that her great-grandfather is dead.”
A dearth of words a woman need not fear ;

But 't is a task indeed to learn — to hear :
In that the skill of conversation lies ;

That shows, or makes, you both polite and wise.
Xantippe cries, “ Let nymphs who nought can say

be lost in silence, and resign the day ;

And let the guilty wife her guilt confess,
By tame behaviour, and a soft address !”

Through virtue, she refuses to comply
With all the dictates of humanity ;

Through wisdom, she refuses to submit
To wisdom's rules, and raves to prove her wit ;

Then, her unblemish'd honour to maintain,
Rejects her husband's kindness with disdain :

But if, by chance, an ill-adapted word
Drops from the lip of her unwary lord,

Her darling china, in a whirlwind sent,
Just intimates the lady's discontent.

Wine may indeed excite the meekest dame ;
But keen Xantippe, scorning borrow'd flame,

Can vent her thunders, and her lightnings play,
O'er cooling gruel, and composing tea :

Nor rests by night, but, more sincere than nice,
She shakes the curtains with her kind advice :

Doubly, like echo, sound is her delight,
And the last word is her eternal right.

Is 't not enough plagues, wars, and famines, rise
To lash our crimes, but must our wives be wise ?

Famine, plague, war, and an unnumber'd throng
Of guilt-avenging ills, to man belong :

What black, what ceaseless cares besiege our state !
What strokes we feel from fancy, and from fate !

If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow ;
We make misfortune ; suicides in woe.

Superfluous aid ! unnecessary skill !
Is Nature backward to torment, or kill ?

How oft the noon, how oft the midnight, bell,
(That iron tongue of Death !) with solemn knell,

On Folly's errands as we vainly roam, [home !
Knocks at our hearts, and finds our thoughts from

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid-stage we tread,
Few know so many friends, alive, as dead.

Yet, as immortal, in our up-hill chase
We press coy Fortune with unslacken'd pace ;

Our ardent labours for the toys we seek,
Join night to day, and Sunday to the week :

Our very joys are anxious, and expire
Between satiety and fierce desire.

Now what reward for all this grief and toil ?
But one, a female friend's endearing smile ;

A tender smile, our sorrows' only balm,
And, in life's tempest, the sad sailor's calm.

How have I seen a gentle nymph draw nigh,
Peace in her air, persuasion in her eye ;

Victorious tenderness ! it all o'ercame,
Husbands look'd mild, and savages grew tame.

The sylvan race our active nymphs pursue ;
Man is not all the game they have in view :

In woods and fields their glory they complete ;
There Master Betty leaps a five-barr'd gate ;

While fair Miss Charles to toilets is confin'd,
Nor rashly tempts the barbarous sun and wind.

Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,
And volt from hunters to the managed steed ;

Command his prancings with a martial air,
And Fobert has the forming of the fair.

More than one steed must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel ;

And as she guides it through th' admiring throng,
With what an air she smacks the silken thong !

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretic strains :

Sesostris-like, such charioteers as these
May drive six harness'd monarchs, if they please :

They drive, row, run, with love of glory smit,
Leap, swim, shoot flying, and pronounce on wit.

O'er the belles-lettres lovely Daphne reigns ;
Again the god Apollo wears her chains :

With legs toss'd high, on her sophee she sits,
Vouchsafing audience to contending wits :

Of each performance she 's the final test ;
One act read o'er, she prophesies the rest ;

And then, pronouncing with decisive air,
Fully convinces all the town — she 's fair.

Had lovely Daphne Hecatessa's face,
How would her elegance of taste decrease !

Some ladies' judgment in their features lies,
And all their genius sparkles from their eyes.

“ But hold,” she cries, “ lampooner ! have a care ;
Must I want common sense, because I'm fair ?”

O no : see Stella ; her eyes shine as bright,
As if her tongue was never in the right ;
And yet what real learning, judgment, fire !
She seems inspir'd, and can herself inspire :
How then (if malice rul'd not all the fair)
Could Daphne publish, and could she forbear ?
We grant that beauty is no bar to sense,
Nor is 't a sanction for impertinence.

Sempronia lik'd her man ; and well she might ;
The youth in person, and in parts, was bright ;
Possess'd of every virtue, grace, and art,
That claims just empire o'er the female heart :
He met her passion, all her sighs return'd,
And, in full rage of youthful ardour, burn'd :
Large his possessions, and beyond her own ;
Their bliss the theme and envy of the town :
The day was fix'd, when, with one acre more,
In stepp'd deform'd, debauch'd, diseas'd, threescore.
The fatal sequel I, through shame, forbear ;
Of pride and avarice who can cure the fair ?

Man 's rich with little, were his judgment true ;
Nature is frugal, and her wants are few ;
Those few wants answer'd, bring sincere delights ;
But fools create themselves new appetites :
Fancy and pride seek things at vast expense,
Which relish not to reason, nor to sense.
When surfeit, or unthankfulness, destroys,
In nature's narrow sphere, our solid joys,
In fancy's airy land of noise and show,
Where nought but dreams, no real pleasures grow ;
Like cats in air-pumps, to subsist we strive
On joys too thin to keep the soul alive.
Lemira 's sick ; make haste ; the doctor call :
He comes ; but where 's his patient ? At the ball
The doctor stares ; her woman curt'sies low,
And cries, " My lady, sir, is always so :
Diversions put her maladies to flight ;
True, she can't stand, but she can dance all night :
I 've known my lady (for she loves a tune)
For fevers take an opera in June :
And, though perhaps you 'll think the practice bold,
A midnight park is sovereign for a cold ;
With colics, breakfasts of green fruit agree ;
With indigestions, supper just at three."
A strange alternative, replies Sir Hans,
Must women have a doctor, or a dance ?
Though sick to death, abroad they safely roam,
But droop and die, in perfect health, at home :
For want — but not of health, are ladies ill ;
And tickets cure beyond the doctor's bill.

Alas, my heart ! how languishingly fair
Yon lady lolls ! With what a tender air !
Pale as a young dramatic author, when,
O'er darling lines, fell Cibber waves his pen.
Is her lord angry, or has Veny * chid ?
Dead is her father, or the mask forbid ?
" Late sitting-up has turn'd her roses white."
Why went she not to bed ? " Because 't was night."
Did she then dance or play ? " Nor this, nor that."
Well, night soon steals away in pleasing chat.
" No, all alone, her prayers she rather chose,
Than be that wretch to sleep till morning rose."
Then lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed :
This her pride covets, this her health denies ;
Her soul is silly, but her body 's wise.

Others, with curious arts, dim charms revive,
And triumph in the bloom of fifty-five.

* Lap-dog.

You, in the morning, a fair nymph invite ;
To keep her word, a brown one comes at night :
Next day she shines in glossy black ; and then
Revolves into her native red again :
Like a dove's neck, she shifts her transient charms,
And is her own dear rival in your arms.

But one admirer has the painted lass ;
Nor finds that one, but in her looking-glass :
Yet Laura 's beautiful to such excess,
That all her art scarce makes her please us less.
To deck the female cheek, HE only knows,
Who paints less fair the lily and the rose. [pours,

How gay they smile ! Such blessings Nature
O'erstock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores :
In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen,
She rears her flowers, and spreads her velvet green ;
Pure gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
And waste their music on the savage race.
Is Nature then a niggard of her bliss ?
Repine we guiltless in a world like this ?
But our lewd tastes her lawful charms refuse,
And painted art's deprav'd allurements choose.
Such Fulvia's passion for the town ; fresh air
(An odd effect ! ) gives vapours to the fair ;
Green fields, and shady groves, and crystal springs,
And larks, and nightingales, are odious things ;
But smoke, and dust, and noise, and crowds delight ;
And to be press'd to death, transports her quite :
Where silver rivulets play through flowery meads,
And woodbines give their sweets, and limbs their
shades,

Black kennels' absent odours she regrets,
And stops her nose at beds of violets.

Is stormy life prefer'd to the serene ?
Or is the public to the private scene ?
Retir'd, we tread a smooth and open way :
Through briers and brambles in the world we stray ;
Stiff opposition, and perplex'd debate,
And thorny care, and rank and stinging hate,
Which choke our passage, our career controul,
And wound the firmest temper of our soul.
O sacred solitude ! divine retreat !
Choice of the prudent ! envy of the great !
By thy pure stream, or in thy waving shade,
We court fair Wisdom, that celestial maid :
The genuine offspring of her lov'd embrace
(Strangers on Earth ! ) are innocence and peace :
There, from the ways of men laid safe ashore,
We smile to hear the distant tempest roar ;
There, bless'd with health, with business unperplex'd,
This life we relish, and ensure the next ;
There too the Muses sport ; these numbers free,
Pierian Eastbury ! I owe to thee.

There sport the Muses ; but not there alone :
Their sacred force Amelia feels in town.
Nought but a genius can a genius fit ;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit :
Both wits ! though miracles are said to cease,
Three days, three wondrous days ! they liv'd in peace ;

With the fourth sun a warm dispute arose,
On Durfey's poesy, and Bunyan's prose :
The learned war both wage with equal force,
And the fifth morn concluded the divorce.

Phoebe, though she possesses nothing less,
Is proud of being rich in happiness ;
Laboriously pursues delusive toys,
Content with pains, since they 're reputed joys.
With what well-acted transport will she say,
" ———— sure we were so happy yesterday !

And then that charming party for to-morrow !"
 Though, well she knows, 't will languish into sorrow :
 But she dares never boast the present hour ;
 So gross that cheat, it is beyond her power :
 For such is or our weakness, or our curse,
 Or rather such our crime, which still is worse,
 The present moment, like a wife, we shun,
 And ne'er enjoy, because it is our own.

Pleasures are few, and fewer we enjoy ;
 Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright, and coy ;
 We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill,
 Still it eludes us, and it glitters still :
 If seiz'd at last, compute your mighty gains ;
 What is it, but rank poison in your veins ?

As Flavia in her glass an angel spies,
 Pride whispers in her ear pernicious lies ;
 Tells her, while she surveys a face so fine,
 There's no satiety of charms divine :
 Hence, if her lover yawns, all chang'd appears
 Her temper, and she melts (sweet soul !) in tears :
 She, fond and young, last week, her wish enjoy'd,
 In soft amusement all the night employ'd ;
 The morning came, when Strephon, waking, found
 (Surprising sight !) his bride in sorrow drown'd.
 "What miracle," says Strephon, "makes thee weep ?"

"Ah, barbarous man," she cries, "how could you —
sleep ?"

Men love a mistress as they love a feast ;
 How grateful one to touch, and one to taste !
 Yet sure there is a certain time of day,
 We wish our mistress, and our meat, away :
 But soon the sated appetites return,
 Again our stomachs crave, our bosoms burn :
 Eternal love let man, then, never swear ;
 Let women never triumph, nor despair ;
 Nor praise, nor blame, too much, the warm, or chill ;
 Hunger and love are foreign to the will.

There is indeed a passion more refin'd,
 For those few nymphs whose charms are of the mind :
 But not of that unfashionable set
 Is Phyllis ; Phyllis and her Damon met.
 Eternal love exactly hits her taste ;
 Phyllis demands eternal love at least.
 Embracing Phyllis with soft-smiling eyes,
 Eternal love I vow, the swain replies :
 But say, my all, my mistress, and my friend !
 What day next week, th' eternity shall end ?

Some nymphs prefer astronomy to love ;
 Elope from mortal man, and range above.
 The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
 Where, in a box, the whole creation lies :
 She sees the planets in their turns advance,
 And scorns, Poitier, thy sublunary dance :
 Of Desaguliers she bespeaks fresh air ;
 And Whiston has engagements with the fair.
 What vain experiments Sophronia tries !
 'T is not in air-pumps the gay colonel dies.
 But though to-day this rage of science reigns,
 'O fickle sex !' soon end her learned pains.
 Lo ! Pug from Jupiter her heart has got,
 Turns out the stars, and Newton is a sot.
 To ——— turn ; she never took the height
 Of Saturn, yet is ever in the right.
 She strikes each point with native force of mind,
 While puzzled Learning blunders far behind.
 Graceful to sight, and elegant to thought,
 The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught.
 Her breeding finish'd, and her temper sweet,
 When serious, easy ; and when gay, discreet ;

In glittering scenes, o'er her own heart, severe ;
 In crowds, collected ; and in courts, sincere ;
 Sincere, and warm, with zeal well-understood,
 She takes a noble pride in doing good ;
 Yet, not superior to her sex's cares,
 The mode she fixes by the gown she wears ;
 Of silks and china she 's the last appeal ;
 In these great points she leads the commonweal ;
 And if disputes of empire rise between
 Mechlin the queen of lace, and Colberteen,
 'T is doubt ! 't is darkness ! till suspended fate
 Assumes her nod, to close the grand debate.
 When such her mind, why will the fair express
 Their emulation only in their dress ?

But oh ! the nymph that mounts above the skies,
 And, gratis, clears religious mysteries,
 Resolv'd the church's welfare to ensure,
 And make her family a sine-cure :
 The theme divine at cards she 'll not forget,
 But takes in texts of Scripture at picquet ;
 In those licentious meetings acts the prude,
 And thanks her Maker that her cards are good.
 What angels would those be, who thus excel
 In theologies, could they sew as well !
 Yet why should not the fair her text pursue ?
 Can she more decently the doctor woo ?
 'T is hard, too, she who makes no use but chat
 Of her religion, should be barr'd in that.

Isaac, a brother of the canting strain,
 When he has knock'd at his own skull in vain,
 To beauteous Marcia often will repair
 With a dark text, to light it at the fair.
 O how his pious soul exults to find
 Such love for holy men in woman-kind !
 Charm'd with her learning, with what rapture he
 Hangs on her bloom, like an industrious bee ;
 Hums round about her, and with all his power
 Extracts sweet wisdom from so fair a flower !

The young and gay declining, Appia flies
 At nobler game, the mighty and the wise :
 By nature more an eagle than a dove,
 She impiously prefers the world to love.

Can wealth give happiness ? look round and see
 What gay distress ! what splendid misery !
 Whatever fortune lavishly can pour,
 The mind annihilates, and calls for more.
 Wealth is a cheat ; believe not what it says ;
 Like any lord, it promises — and pays.
 How will the miser startle, to be told
 Of such a wonder, as insolvent gold !
 What nature wants has an intrinsic weight ;
 All more is but the fashion of the plate,
 Which, for one moment, charms the fickle view ;
 It charms us now ; anon we cast anew ;
 To some fresh birth of fancy more inclin'd :
 Then wed not acres, but a noble mind.

Mistaken lovers, who make worth their care,
 And think accomplishments will win the fair ;
 The fair, 't is true, by genius should be won,
 As flowers unfold their beauties to the Sun ;
 And yet in female scales a fop outweighs,
 And wit must wear the willow and the bays.
 Nought shines so bright in vain Liberia's eye
 As riot, impudence, and perfidy ;
 The youth of fire, that has drunk deep, and play'd,
 And kill'd his man, and triumph'd o'er his maid ;
 For him, as yet unhang'd, she spreads her charms,
 Snatches the dear destroyer to her arms ;
 And amply gives (though treated long amiss)
 The man of merit his revenge in this.

If you resent, and wish a woman ill,
But turn her o'er one moment to her will.

The languid lady next appears in state,
Who was not born to carry her own weight;
She lolls, reels, staggers, till some foreign aid
To her own stature lifts the feeble maid.
Then, if ordain'd to so severe a doom,
She, by just stages, journeys round the room:
But, knowing her own weakness, she despairs
To scale the Alps — that is, ascend the stairs.
My fan! let others say, who laugh at toil;
Fan! hood! glove! scarf! is her laconic style;
And that is spoke with such a dying fall,
That Betty rather sees than hears the call:
The motion of her lips, and meaning eye,
Piece out th' idea her faint words deny.
O listen with attention most profound!
Her voice is but the shadow of a sound.
And help! oh help! her spirits are so dead,
One hand scarce lifts the other to her head.
If, there, a stubborn pin it triumphs o'er,
She pants! she sinks away! and is no more.
Let the robust and the gigantic carve,
Life is not worth so much, she'd rather starve:
But chew she must herself; ah cruel fate!
That Rosalinda can't by proxy eat.

An antidote in female caprice lies
(Kind Heaven!) against the poison of their eyes.

Thalestris triumphs in a manly mien;
Loud is her accent, and her phrase obscene.
In fair and open dealing where 's the shame?
What Nature dares to give, she dares to name.
This honest fellow is sincere and plain,
And justly gives the jealous husband pain.
(Vain is the task to petticoats assign'd,
If wanton language shows a naked mind.)
And, now and then, to grace her eloquence,
An oath supplies the vacancies of sense.
Hark! the shrill notes transpierce the yielding air,
And teach the neighbouring Echoes how to swear.
By Jove, is faint, and for the simple swain;
She, on the Christian system, is profane.
But though the volley rattles in your ear,
Believe her dress, she's not a grenadier.
If thunder's awful, how much more our dread,
When Jove deposes a lady in his stead?
A lady? pardon my mistaken pen,
A shameless woman is the worst of men.

Few to good-breeding make a just pretence;
Good-breeding is the blossom of good-sense;
The last result of an accomplish'd mind,
With outward grace, the body's virtue, join'd.
A violated decency now reigns;
And nymphs for failings take peculiar pains.
With Chinese painters modern toasts agree,
The point they aim at is deformity:
They throw their persons with a hoyden air
Across the room, and toss into the chair.
So far their commerce with mankind is gone,
They, for our manners, have exchange'd their own.
The modest look, the castigated grace,
The gentle movement, and slow-measur'd pace,
For which her lovers died, her parents paid,
Are indecours with the modern maid.
Stiff forms are bad; but let not worse intrude,
Nor conquer art and nature, to be rude.
Modern good-breeding carry to its height,
And Lady D——'s self will be polite.

Ye rising fair! ye bloom of Britain's isle!
When high-born Anna, with a soften'd smile,

Leads on your train, and sparkles at your head,
What seems most hard, is, not to be well-bred.
Her bright example with success pursue,
And all, but adoration, is your due.

"But adoration! give me something more,"
Cries Lycé, on the borders of threescore:
Nought treads so silent as the foot of Time;
Hence we mistake our autumn for our prime;
'T is greatly wise to know, before we're told,
The melancholy news, that we grow old.
Autumnal Lycé carries in her face
Memento mori to each public place.
O how your beating breast a mistress warms,
Who looks through spectacles to see your charms!
While rival undertakers hover round,
And with his spade the sexton marks the ground.
Intent not on her own, but others' doom,
She plans new conquests, and defrauds the tomb.
In vain the cock has summon'd sprites away,
She walks at noon, and blasts the bloom of day.
Gay rainbow silks her mellow charms infold,
And nought of Lycé but herself is old.
Her grizzled locks assume a smirking grace,
And art has levell'd her deep furrow'd face.
Her strange demand no mortal can approve,
We'll ask her blessing, but can't ask her love.
She grants, indeed, a lady may decline
(All ladies but herself) at ninety-nine.

O how unlike her was the sacred age
Of prudent Portia! Her gray hairs engage,
Whose thoughts are suited to her life's decline:
Virtue 's the paint that can with wrinkles shine;
That, and that only, can old age sustain;
Which yet all wish, nor know they wish for pain.
Not numerous are our joys, when life is new;
And yearly some are falling of the few;
But when we conquer life's meridian stage,
And downward tend into the vale of age,
They drop apace; by nature some decay,
And some the blasts of fortune sweep away;
Till, naked quite of happiness, aloud
We call for death, and shelter in a shroud.
Where 's Portia now? — But Portia left behind
Two lovely copies of her form and mind.
What heart untouch'd their early grief can view,
Like blushing rose-buds dipp'd in morning dew?
Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
And forms their minds to flee from ills to come?
The mind, when turn'd adrift, no rules to guide,
Drives at the mercy of the wind and tide;
Fancy and passion toss it to and fro;
Awhile torment, and then quite sink in woe.
Ye beauteous orphans, since in silent dust
Your best example lies, my precepts trust.
Life swarms with ills; the boldest are afraid:
Where then is safety for a tender maid?
Unfit for conflict, round beset with woes,
And man, whom least she fears, her worst of foes!
When kind, most cruel; when oblig'd the most,
The least obliging; and by favours lost.
Cruel by nature, they for kindness hate;
And scorn you for those ills themselves create.
If on your fame our sex a blot has thrown,
'T will ever stick, through malice of your own.
Most hard! in pleasing your chief glory lies;
And yet from pleasing your chief dangers rise:
Then please the best; and know, for men of sense,
Your strongest charms are native innocence.
Arts on the mind, like paint upon the face, [brave
Fright him, that's worth your love, from your en-

In simple manners all the secret lies ;
 Be kind and virtuous, you 'll be blest and wise.
 Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
 Begin with giddiness, and end in pain.
 Affect not empty fame, and idle praise,
 Which, all those wretches I describe, betrays.
 Your sex's glory 't is, to shine unknown ;
 Of all applause, be fondest of your own.
 Beware the fever of the mind ! that thirst
 With which the age is eminently curst :
 To drink of pleasure, but inflames desire ;
 And abstinence alone can quench the fire ;
 Take pain from life, and *terrou*r from the tomb ;
 Give peace in hand ; and promise bliss to come.

SATIRE VI.

ON WOMEN.

INSCRIBED TO THE RIGHT HON. THE LADY ELIZABETH GERMAIN.

Interdum tamen et tollit comœdia vocem.

HOR.

I sought a patroness, but sought in vain.
 Apollo whisper'd in my ear — " Germain. " —
 I know her not. — " Your reason 's somewhat odd ;
 Who knows his patron, now ? " replied the god.
 " Men write, to me, and to the world, unknown ;
 Then steal great names, to shield them from the town :

Detected worth, like beauty disarray'd,
 To covert flies, of praise itself afraid ;
 Should she refuse to patronise your lays,
 In vengeance write a volume in her praise.
 Nor think it hard so great a length to run ;
 When such the theme, 't will easily be done."

Ye fair ! to draw your excellence at length,
 Exceeds the narrow bounds of human strength ;
 You, here, in miniature your picture see ;
 Nor hope from Zinck more justice than from me.
 My portraits grace your mind, as his your side ;
 His portraits will inflame, mine quench, your pride :
 He 's dear, you frugal ; choose my cheaper lay ;
 And be your reformation all my pay.

Lavinia is polite, but not profane ;
 To church as constant as to Drury-lane.
 She decently, in form, pays Heaven its due ;
 And makes a civil visit to her pew.
 Her lifted fan, to give a solemn air,
 Conceals her face, which passes for a prayer :
 Curt'sies to curt'sies, then, with grace, succeed ;
 Not one the fair omits, but at the Creed.
 Or, if she joins the service, 't is to speak ;
 Through dreadful silence the pent heart might break :
 Untaught to bear it, women talk away
 To God himself, and fondly think they pray.
 But sweet their accent, and their air refin'd ;
 For they 're before their Maker — and mankind :
 When ladies once are proud of praying well,
 Satan himself will toll the parish bell.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well-bred,
 Drusa receives her visitants in bed ;
 But, chaste as ice, this Vesta, to defy
 The very blackest tongue of calumny,
 When from the sheets her lovely form she lifts,
 She begs you just would turn you, while she shifts.

Those charms are greatest which decline the sight,
 That makes the banquet poignant and polite.

There is no woman, where there 's no reserve ;
 And 't is on plenty your poor lovers starve.
 But with a modern fair, meridian merit
 Is a fierce thing, they call a nymph of spirit.
 Mark well the rollings of her flaming eye ;
 And tread on tiptoe, if you dare draw nigh.
 " Or if you take a lion by the beard ",
 Or dare defy the fell Hyrcanian pard,
 Or arm'd rhinoceros, or rough Russian bear,"
 First make your will, and then converse with her.
 This lady glories in profuse expense ;
 And thinks distraction is magnificence.
 To beggar her gallant is some delight ;
 To be more fatal still, is exquisite ;
 Had ever nymph such reason to be glad ?
 In duel fell two lovers ; one run mad ;
 Her foes their honest execrations pour ;
 Her lovers only should detest her more.

Flavia is constant to her old gallant,
 And generously supports him in his want.
 But marriage is a fetter, is a snare,
 A hell, no lady so polite can bear.
 She 's faithful, she 's observant, and with pains
 Her angel-brood of bastards she maintains.
 Nor least advantage has the fair to plead,
 But that of guilt above the marriage-bed.

Amasia hates a prude, and scorns restraint ;
 Whate'er she is, she 'll not appear a saint :
 Her soul superior flies formality ;
 So gay her air, her conduct is so free,
 Some might suspect the nymph not over-good. —
 Nor would they be mistaken, if they should.

Unmarried Abra puts on formal airs ;
 Her cushion 's thread-bare with her constant prayers.
 Her only grief is, that she cannot be
 At once engag'd in prayer and charity.
 And this, to do her justice, must be said,
 " Who would not think that Abra was a maid ?"

Some ladies are too beautiful to be wed ;
 For where 's the man that 's worthy of their bed ?
 If no disease reduce her pride before,
 Lavinia will be ravish'd at threescore.
 Then she submits to venture in the dark ;
 And nothing now is wanting — but her spark.

Lucia thinks happiness consists in state ;
 She weds an idiot, but she eats in plate.

The goods of fortune, which her soul possess,
 Are but the ground of unmade happiness ;
 The rude material : wisdom add to this,
 Wisdom, the sole artificer of bliss ;
 She from herself, if so compell'd by need,
 Of thin content can draw the subtle thread ;
 But (no detraction to her sacred skill)
 If she can work in gold, 't is better still.

If Tullia had been blest with half her sense,
 None could too much admire her excellence :
 But since she can make error shine so bright,
 She thinks it vulgar to defend the right.
 With understanding she is quite o'er-run ;
 And by too great accomplishments undone :
 With skill she vibrates her eternal tongue,
 For ever most divinely in the wrong.

Naked in nothing should a woman be ;
 But veil her very wit with modesty :
 Let men discover, let not her display,
 But yield her charms of mind with sweet delay.

For pleasure form'd, perversely some believe,
 To make themselves important, men must grieve.

* Shakspeare.

Lesbia the fair, to fire her jealous lord,
Pretends, the fop she laughs at, is ador'd.
In vain she's proud of secret innocence;
The fact she feigns were scarce a worse offence.

Mira, endow'd with every charm to bless,
Has no design, but on her husband's peace:
He lov'd her much; and greatly was he mov'd
At small inquietudes in her he lov'd.
"How charming this!" — The pleasure lasted long;
Now every day the fits come thick and strong:
At last he found the charmer only feign'd;
And was diverted when he should be pain'd.
What greater vengeance have the gods in store?
How tedious life, now she can plague no more!
She tries a thousand arts; but none succeed:
She's forc'd a fever to procure indeed;
Thus strictly prov'd this virtuous, loving wife,
Her husband's pain was dearer than her life.

Anxious Melania rises to my view,
Who never thinks her lover pays his due:
Visit, present, treat, flatter, and adore;
Her majesty, to-morrow, calls for more.
His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As uncoil'd hinges, querulously shrill.
"You went last night with Celia to the ball."
You prove it false. "Not go! that's worst of all."
Nothing can please her, nothing not inflame;
And arrant contradictions are the same.
Her lover must be sad, to please her spleen;
His mirth is an inexpiable sin:
For of all rivals that can pain her breast,
There's one, that wounds far deeper than the rest;
To wreck her quiet, the most dreadful shelf
Is if her lover dares enjoy himself.

And this, because she's exquisitely fair:
Should I dispute her beauty, how she'd stare!
How would Melania be surpris'd to hear
She's quite deform'd! And yet the case is clear;
What's female beauty, but an air divine,
Through which the mind's all-gentle graces shine?
They, like the Sun, irradiate all between;
The body charms because the soul is seen.
Hence, men are often captives of a face,
They know not why, of no peculiar grace:
Some forms, though bright, no mortal man can bear;
Some, none resist, though not exceeding fair.

Aspasia's highly born, and nicely bred,
Of taste refin'd, in life and manners read;
Yet reaps no fruit from her superior sense,
But to be teas'd by her own excellence.
"Folks are so awkward! Things so unpolite!"
She's elegantly pain'd from morn till night.
Her delicacy's shock'd where'er she goes;
Each creature's imperfections are her woes.
Heaven by its favour has the fair distress,
And pour'd such blessings — that she can't be blest.

Ah! why so vain, though blooming in thy spring?
Thou shining, frail, ador'd, and wretched thing!
Old-age will come; disease may come before;
Fifteen is full as mortal as threescore.
Thy fortune, and thy charms, may soon decay:
But grant these fugitives prolong their stay,
Their basis totters, their foundation shakes;
Life, that supports them, in a moment breaks;
Then wrought into the soul let virtues shine;
The ground eternal, as the work divine.

Julia's a manager; she's born for rule;
And knows her wiser husband is a fool;
Assemblies holds, and spins the subtle thread
That guides the lover to his fair-one's bed:

For difficult amours can smooth the way,
And tender letters dictate, or convey.
But, if depriv'd of such important cares,
Her wisdom condescends to less affairs.
For her own breakfast she'll project a scheme,
Nor take her tea without a stratagem;
Presides o'er trifles with a serious face;
Important, by the virtue of grimace.
Ladies supreme among amusements reign;
By nature born to soothe, and entertain.
Their prudence in a share of folly lies:
Why will they be so weak, as to be wise?

Syrena is for ever in extremes,
And with a vengeance she commends, or blames.
Conscious of her discernment, which is good,
She strains too much to make it understood.
Her judgment just, her sentence is too strong;
Because she's right, she's ever in the wrong.

Brunetta's wise in actions, great, and rare:
But scorns on trifles to bestow her care.
Thus every hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because th' occasion is beneath her aim.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year,
And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
Or you may die, before you truly live.

Go breakfast with Alicia, there you'll see,
Simplex munditiis, to the last degree:
Unlac'd her stays, her night-gown is untied,
And what she has of head-dress, is aside.
She draws her words, and waddles in her pace;
Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face.
A nail uncut, and head uncomb'd, she loves;
And would draw on jack-boots, as soon as gloves.
Gloves by queen Bess's maidens might be mist;
Her blessed eyes ne'er saw a female fit.
Lovers, beware! to wound how can she fail
With scarlet finger, and long jetty nail?
For Harvey, the first wit she cannot be,
Nor, cruel Richmond, the first toast, for thee.
Since full each other station of renown,
Who would not be the greatest trapes in town?
Women were made to give our eyes delight;
A female sloven is an odious sight.

Fair Isabella is so fond of fame,
That her dear self is her eternal theme;
Through hopes of contradiction, oft she'll say,
"Methinks I look so wretchedly to-day!"
When most the world applauds you, most beware;
'T is often less a blessing than a snare.
Distrust mankind; with your own heart confer;
And dread even there to find a flatterer.
The breath of others raises our renown;
Our own as surely blows the pageant down.
Take up no more than you by worth can claim,
Lest soon you prove a bankrupt in your fame.

But own I must, in this perverted age,
Who most deserve, can't always most engage.
So far is worth from making glory sure,
It often hinders what it should procure. [wise?
Whom praise we most? The virtuous, brave, and
No; wretches, whom, in secret, we despise.
And who so blind, as not to see the cause?
No rivals rais'd by such discreet applause;
And yet, of credit it lays in a store,
By which our spleen may wound true worth the more.

Ladies there are who think one crime is all:
Can women, then, no way but backward fall?
So sweet is that one crime they don't pursue,
To pay its loss, they think all others few.

Who hold that crime so dear, must never claim
Of injur'd modesty the sacred name.

But Clio thus: "What! railing without end?
Mean task! how much more generous to commend!"

Yes, to commend as you are wont to do,
My kind instructor, and example too.
"Daphnis," says Clio, "has a charming eye:
What pity 't is her shoulder is awry!
Aspasia's shape indeed — But then her air —
The man has parts who finds destruction there.
Almeria's wit has something that 's divine;
And wit 's enough — how few in all things shine!
Selina serves her friends, relieves the poor —
Who was it said Selina 's near threescore?
At Lucia's match I from my soul rejoice;
The world congratulates so wise a choice;
His lordship's rent-roll is exceeding great —
But mortgages will sap the best estate.
In Shirley's form might cherubims appear;
But then — she has a freckle on her ear."

Without a but, Hortensia she commends,
The first of women, and the best of friends;
Owns her in person, wit, fame, virtue bright;
But how comes this to pass? — She died last night.

Thus nymphs commend, who yet at satire rail:
Indeed that 's needless, if such praise prevail.
And whence such praise? Our virulence is thrown
On others' fame, through fondness for our own.

Of rank and riches proud, Cleora frowns;
For are not coronets a-kin to crowns?
Her greedy eye, and her sublime address,
The height of avarice and pride confess.
You seek perfections worthy of her rank;
Go, seek for her perfections at the Bank.
By wealth unquench'd, by reason uncontroll'd,
For ever burns her sacred thirst of gold.
As fond of five-pence, as the veriest cit;
And quite as much detested as a wit.

Can gold calm passion, or make reason shine?
Can we dig peace, or wisdom, from the mine?
Wisdom to gold prefer; for 't is much less
To make our fortune, than our happiness.
That happiness which great ones often see,
With rage and wonder, in a low degree;
'Themselves unblest. The poor are only poor!
But what are they who droop amid their store!
Nothing is meaner than a wretch of state;
The happy only are the truly great.
Peasants enjoy like appetites with kings;
And those best satisfied with cheapest things.
Could both our Indies buy but one new sense,
Our envy would be due to large expense.
Since not, those pomps which to the great belong,
Are but poor arts to mark them from the throng.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish! oh support them with a lie!
A decent competence we fully taste;
It strikes our sense, and gives a constant feast:
More, we perceive by dint of thought alone;
The rich must labour to possess their own,
To feel their great abundance; and request
Their humble friends to help them to be blest;
To see their treasures, hear their glory told,
And aid the wretched impotence of gold.

But some, great souls! and touch'd with warmth
divine,
Give gold a price, and teach its beams to shine.
All hoarded treasures they repute a load;
Nor think their wealth their own, till well bestow'd.

Grand reservoirs of public happiness,
Through secret streams diffusively they bless;
And, while their bounties glide, conceal'd from view,
Relieve our wants, and spare our blushes too.
But Satire is my task; and these destroy
Her gloomy province, and malignant joy.
Help me, ye misers! help me to complain,
And blast our common enemy, Germain:
But our invectives must despair success;
For, next to praise, she values nothing less.

What picture 's yonder, loosen'd from its frame?
Or is 't Asturia, that affected dame?
The brightest forms, through affectation, fade
To strange new things, which Nature never made.
Frown not, ye fair! so much your sex we prize,
We hate those arts that take you from our eyes.
In Albucinda's native grace is seen
What you, who labour at perfection, mean.
Short is the rule, and to be learnt with ease,
Retain your gentle selves, and you must please.
Here might I sing of Memmia's mincing mien,
And all the movements of the soft machine:
How two red lips affected Zephyrs blow,
To cool the bohea, and inflame the beau:
While one white finger and a thumb conspire
To lift the cup, and make the world admire.

Tea! how I tremble at thy fatal stream!
As Lethe, dreadful to the Love of Fame.
What devastations on thy banks are seen!
What shades of mighty names which once have been!
A hecatomb of characters supplies
Thy painted altars' daily sacrifice.
H—, P—, B—, aspers'd by thee, decay,
As grains of finest sugars melt away,
And recommend thee more to mortal taste;
Scandal 's the sweetener of a female feast.

But this inhuman triumph shall decline,
And thy revolting Naiads call for wine;
Spirits no longer shall serve under thee;
But reign in thy own cup, exploded tea!
Citronia's nose declares thy ruin nigh,
And who dares give Citronia's nose the lie?
The ladies long at men of drink exclaim'd,
And what impair'd both health and virtue, blam'd;
At length, to rescue man, the generous lass
Stole from her consort the pernicious glass;
As glorious as the British queen renown'd,
Who suck'd the poison from her husband's wound.

Nor to the glass alone are nymphs inclin'd,
But every bolder vice of bold mankind.

O Juvenal! for thy severer rage!
To lash the ranker follies of our age.
Are there, among the females of our isle,
Such faults, at which it is a fault to smile?
There are. Vice, once by modest nature chain'd
And legal ties, expatiates unrestrain'd;
Without thin decency held up to view,
Naked she stalks o'er Law and Gospel too.
Our matrons lead such exemplary lives,
Men sigh in vain for none but for their wives;
Who marry to be free, to range the more,
And wed one man, to wanton with a score.
Abroad too kind, at home 't is steadfast hate,
And one eternal tempest of debate.

What foul eruptions, from a look most meek!
What thunders bursting, from a dimpled cheek!
Their passions bear it with a lofty hand!
But then, their reason is at due command.
Is there whom you detest, and seek his life?
Trust no soul with the secret — but his wife.

Wives wonder that their conduct I condemn,
And ask, what kindred is a spouse to them?

What swarms of amorous grandmothers I see!
And misses, ancient in iniquity!
What blasting whispers, and what loud declaiming!
What lying, drinking, bawding, swearing, gaming!
Friendship so cold, such warm incontinence;
Such griping avarice, such profuse expense;
Such dead devotion, such a zeal for crimes;
Such licens'd ill, such masquerading times;
Such venal faith, such misapplied applause;
Such flatter'd guilt, and such inverted laws!

Such dissolution through the whole I find,
'T is not a world, but chaos of mankind.
Since Sundays have no balls, the well-dress'd belle
Shines in the pew, but smiles to hear of Hell;
And casts an eye of sweet disdain on all
Who listen less to Collins than St. Paul.
Atheists have been but rare; since Nature's birth,
Till now, she-atheists ne'er appear'd on Earth.
Ye men of deep researches, say, whence springs
This daring character, in timorous things?
Who start at feathers, from an insect fly,
A match for nothing — but the Deity.
But, not to wrong the fair, the Muse must own
In this pursuit they court not fame alone;
But join to that a more substantial view,

"From thinking free, to be free agents too." [down,
They strive with their own hearts, and keep them
In complaisance to all the fools in town.

O how they tremble at the name of prude!
And die with shame at thought of being good!
For what will Artimis, the rich and gay,
What will the wits, that is, the coxcombs, say?
They Heaven defy, to Earth's vile dregs a slave;
Through cowardice, most execrably brave.
With our own judgments durst we to comply,
In virtue should we live, in glory die.
Rise then, my Muse, in honest fury rise;
They dread a satire, who defy the skies.

Atheists are few: most nymphs a Godhead own;
And nothing but his attributes dethrone.
From atheists far, they stedfastly believe
God is, and is Almighty — to forgive.
His other excellence they'll not dispute;
But mercy, sure, is his chief attribute.
Shall pleasures of a short duration chain
A lady's soul in everlasting pain?
Will the great Author us poor worms destroy,
For now and then a sip of transient joy?
No, he's for ever in a smiling mood;
He's like themselves; or how could he be good?
And they blaspheme, who blacker schemes suppose.
Devoutly, thus, Jehovah they depose,
The pure! the just! and set up, in his stead,
A deity, that's perfectly well-bred.

"Dear Tillotson! be sure the best of men;
Nor thought he more, than thought great Origen.
Though once upon a time he misbehav'd;
Poor Satan! doubtless, he'll at length be sav'd.
Let priests do something for their one in ten;
It is their trade; so far they're honest men.
Let them cant on, since they have got the knack,
And dress their notions, like themselves, in black;
Fright us with terrours of a world unknown,
From joys of this, to keep them all their own.
Of Earth's fair fruits, indeed, they claim a fee;
But then they leave our untill'd virtue free.

Virtue's a pretty thing to make a show:
Did ever mortal write like Rouchefoucault?"

Thus pleads the Devil's fair apologist,
And, pleading, safely enters on his list.

Let angel-forms angelic truths maintain;
Nature disjoins the beauteous and profane.
For what's true beauty, but fair virtue's face?
Virtue made visible in outward grace?
She, then, that's haunted with an impious mind,
The more she charms, the more she stocks mankind.

But charms decline: the fair long vigils keep:
They sleep no more! Quadrille has murder'd sleep.
"Poor K—p!" cries Livia; "I have not been there
These two nights; the poor creature will despair.
I hate a crowd — but to do good, you know —
And people of condition should bestow."
Convinc'd, o'ercome, to K—p's grave matrons run;
Now set a daughter, and now stake a son;
Let health, fame, temper, beauty, fortune, fly;
And beggar half their race — through clarity.

Immortal were we, or else mortal quite,
I less should blame this criminal delight:
But since the gay assembly's gayest room
Is but an upper story to some tomb,
Methinks, we need not our short being shun,
And, thought to fly, contend to be undone.
We need not buy our ruin with our crime,
And give eternity to murder time.

The love of gaming is the worst of ills;
With ceaseless storms the blacken'd soul it fills;
Inveighs at Heaven, neglects the ties of blood;
Destroys the power and will of doing good;
Kills health, pawns honour, plunges in disgrace,
And, what is still more dreadful — spoils your face.

See yonder set of thieves that live on spoil,
The scandal and the ruin of our isle!
And see (strange sight!) amid that ruffian band,
A form divine high wave her snowy hand;
That rattles loud a small enchanted box,
Which, loud as thunder, on the board she knocks.
And as fierce storms, which Earth's foundation
shook,

From Æolus's cave impetuous broke,
From this small cavern a mix'd tempest flies,
Fear, rage, convulsion, tears, oaths, blasphemies!
For men, I mean — the fair discharges none;
She (guiltless creature!) swears to Heaven alone.

See her eyes start! cheeks glow! and muscles swell!

Like the mad maid in the Cumean cell.
Thus that divine one her soft nights employs!
Thus tunes her soul to tender nuptial joys!
And when the cruel morning calls to bed,
And on her pillow lays her aching head,
With the dear images her dreams are crown'd,
The die spins lovely, or the cards go round;
Imaginary ruin charms her still;
Her happy lord is cuckol'd by spadille:
And if she's brought to bed, 't is ten to one,
He marks the forehead of her darling son.

O scene of horror, and of wild despair,
Why is the rich Atrides' splendid heir
Constrain'd to quit his ancient lordly seat,
And hide his glories in a mean retreat?

Why that drawn sword? and whence that dismal cry?
Why pale distraction through the family?
See my lord threaten, and my lady weep,
And trembling servants from the tempest creep.

Why that gay son to distant regions sent?
 What fiends that daughter's destin'd match prevent?
 Why the whole house in sudden ruin laid,
 O nothing, but last night — my lady play'd.

But wanders not my Satire from her theme?
 Is this too owing to the love of fame?
 Though now your hearts on lucre are bestow'd,
 'T was first a vain-devotion to the mode;
 Nor cease we here, since 't is a vice so strong;
 The torrent sweeps all woman-kind along.
 This may be said, in honour of our times,
 That none now stand distinguish'd by their crimes.

If sin you must, take Nature for your guide:
 Love has some soft excuse to soothe your pride:
 Ye fair apostates from love's ancient power!
 Can nothing ravish, but a golden shower?
 Can cards alone your glowing fancy seize;
 Must Cupid learn to punt, e'er he can please?
 When you 're enamour'd of a lift or cast,
 What can the preacher more, to make us chaste?
 Why must strong youths unmarried pine away?
 They find no woman disengag'd — from play.
 Why pine the married? — O severer fate!
 They find from play no disengag'd — estate.
 Flavia, at lovers false, untouch'd, and hard,
 Turns pale, and trembles at a cruel card.
 Nor Arria's Bible can secure her age;
 Her threescore years are shuffling with her page.
 While Death stands by, but till the game is done,
 To sweep that stake, in justice, long his own;
 Like old cards ting'd with sulphur, she takes fire;
 Or, like snuffs sunk in sockets, blazes higher.
 Ye gods! with new delights inspire the fair;
 Or give us sons, and save us from despair.

Sons, brothers, fathers, husbands, tradesmen, close

In my complaint, and brand your sins in prose:
 Yet I believe, as firmly as my Creed,
 In spite of all our wisdom, you 'll proceed:
 Our pride so great, our passion is so strong,
 Advice to right confirms us in the wrong.
 I hear you cry, "This fellow's very odd."
 When you chastise, who would not kiss the rod?
 But I 've a charm your anger shall control,
 And turn your eyes with coldness on the vole.

The charm begins! To yonder flood of light,
 That bursts o'er gloomy Britain, turn your sight.
 What guardian power o'erwhelms your souls with awe?

Her deeds are precepts, her example law;
 'Midst empire's charms, how Carolina's heart
 Glows with the love of virtue, and of art!
 Her favour is diffus'd to that degree,
 Excess of goodness! it has dawn'd on me:
 When in my page, to balance numerous faults,
 Or godlike deeds were shown, or generous thoughts,
 She smil'd, industrious to be pleas'd, nor knew
 From whom my pen the borrow'd lustre drew.

Thus the majestic mother of mankind*,
 To her own charms most amiably blind,
 On the green margin innocently stood,
 And gaz'd indulgent on the crystal flood;
 Survey'd the stranger in the painted wave,
 And, smiling, prais'd the beauties which she gave.

* Milton.

SATIRE VII.

TO THE RIGHT HON. SIR ROBERT WALPOLE.

Carmina tum melius, cum venerit Ipse, canemus.
 VIRG.

ON this last labour, this my closing strain,
 Smile, Walpole, or the Nine inspire in vain:
 To thee, 't is due; that verse how justly thine,
 Where Brunswick's glory crowns the whole design!
 That glory, which thy counsels make so bright;
 That glory, which on thee reflects a light.
 Illustrious commerce, and but rarely known,
 To give, and take, a lustre from the throne.

Nor think that thou art foreign to my theme;
 The fountain is not foreign to the stream.
 How all mankind will be surpris'd to see
 This flood of British folly charg'd on thee!
 Say, Britain! whence this caprice of thy sons,
 Which through their various ranks with fury runs?
 The cause is plain, a cause which we must bless;
 For caprice is the daughter of success.
 (A bad effect, but from a pleasing cause!)
 And gives our rulers undesign'd applause;
 Tells how their conduct bids our wealth increase,
 And lulls us in the downy lap of peace.
 While I survey the blessings of our isle,
 Her arts triumphant in the royal smile,
 Her public wounds bound up, her credit high,
 Her commerce spreading sails in every sky,
 The pleasing scene recalls my theme again,
 And shows the madness of ambitious men,
 Who, fond of bloodshed, draw the murdering sword,
 And burn to give mankind a single lord.

The follies past are of a private kind;
 Their sphere is small; their mischief is confin'd:
 But daring men there are (Awake, my Muse,
 And raise thy verse!) who bolder phrenzy choose:
 Who, stung by glory, rave, and bound away:
 The world their field, and human kind their prey.

The Grecian chief, th' enthusiast of his pride,
 With Rage and Terroure stalking by his side,
 Raves round the globe; he soars into a god!
 Stand fast, Olympus! and sustain his nod.
 The pest divine in horrid grandeur reigns,
 And thrives on mankind's miseries and pains.
 What slaughter'd hosts! what cities in a blaze!
 What wasted countries! and what crimson seas!
 With orphans' tears his impious bowl o'erflows,
 And cries of kingdoms lull him to repose.

And cannot thrice ten hundred years unpraise
 The boisterous boy, and blast his guilty bays?
 Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
 Or famine, or volcano? They perform
 Their mighty deeds; they, hero-like, can slay,
 And spread their ample deserts in a day.
 O great alliance! O divine renown!
 With dearth, and pestilence, to share the crown.
 When men extol a wild destroyer's name,
 Earth's Builder and Preserver they blaspheme.

One to destroy, is murder by the law;
 And gibbets keep the lifted hand in awe;
 To murder thousands, takes a specious name,
 War's glorious art, and gives immortal fame.

When, after battle, I the field have seen
 Spread o'er with ghastly shapes, which once were
 men;

A nation crush'd, a nation of the brave !
 A realm of death ! and on this side the grave !
 Are there, said I, who from this sad survey,
 This human chaos, carry smiles away ?
 How did my heart with indignation rise !
 How honest nature swell'd into my eyes !
 How was I shock'd to think the hero's trade
 Of such materials, fame and triumph, made !

How guilty these ! Yet not less guilty they,
 Who reach false glory by a smoother way ;
 Who wrap destruction up in gentle words,
 And bows, and smiles, more fatal than their swords ;
 Who stifle nature, and subsist on art ;
 Who coin the face, and petrify the heart ;
 All real kindness for the show discard,
 As marble polish'd, and as marble hard ;
 Who do for gold what Christians do through grace,
 " With open arms their enemies embrace ;"
 Who give a nod when broken hearts repine ;
 " The thinnest food on which a wretch can dine :"
 Or, if they serve you, serve you disinclin'd,
 And, in their height of kindness, are unkind.
 Such courtiers were, and such again may be,
 Walpole, when men forget to copy thee.

Here cease, my Muse ! the catalogue is writ ;
 Nor one more candidate for fame admit,
 Though disappointed thousands justly blame
 Thy partial pen, and boast an equal claim :
 Be this their comfort, fools, omitted here,
 May furnish laughter for another year.
 Then let Crispino, who was ne'er refus'd
 The justice yet of being well abus'd,
 With patience wait ; and be content to reign
 The pink of puppies in some future strain.

Some future strain, in which the Muse shall tell
 How science dwindles, and how volumes swell.

How commentators each dark passage shun,
 And hold their farthing candle to the Sun.

How tortur'd texts to speak our sense are made,
 And every vice is to the Scripture laid.

How misers squeeze a young voluptuous peer ;
 His sins to Lucifer not half so dear.

How Versus is less qualified to steal
 With sword and pistol, than with wax and seal.

How lawyers' fees to such excess are run,
 That clients are redress'd till they're undone.

How one man's anguish is another's sport ;
 And e'en denials cost us dear at court.

How man eternally false judgments makes,
 And all his joys and sorrows are mistakes.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
 Which I, like summer flies, shake off again,
 Let others sing ; to whom my weak essay
 But sounds a prelude, and points out their prey :
 That duty done, I hasten to complete
 My own design, for Tonson's at the gate.

The Love of Fame in its effect survey'd,
 The Muse has sung : be now the cause display'd :
 Since so diffusive, and so wide its sway,
 What is this power, whom all mankind obey ?

Shot from above, by Heaven's indulgence, came
 This generous ardour, this unconquer'd flame,
 To warm, to raise, to deify, mankind,
 Still burning brightest in the noblest mind.
 By large-soul'd men, for thirst of fame renown'd,
 Wise laws were fram'd, and sacred arts were found ;
 Desire of praise first broke the patriot's rest ;
 And made a bulwark of the warrior's breast ;
 It bids Argyll in fields and senate shine :
 " What more can prove its origin divine ?

But oh ! this passion planted in the soul,
 On eagle's wings to mount her to the Pole,
 The flaming minister of virtue meant,
 Set up false gods, and wrong'd her high descent.

Ambition, hence, exerts a doubtful force,
 Of blots, and beauties, an alternate source ;
 Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit,
 Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit ;
 And in art-loving Scarborough is seen
 How kind a patron Pollia might have been.
 Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,
 And into carcombs hurnishes our fools ;
 Pursuit of fame makes solid learning bright,
 And Newton lifts above a mortal height ;
 That key of Nature, by whose wit she clears
 Her long, long secrets of five thousand years.

Would you then fully comprehend the whole,
 Why, and in what degrees, pride sways the soul ?
 (For, though in all, not equally she reigns)
 Awake to knowledge, and attend my strains.

Ye doctors ! hear the doctrine I disclose,
 As true, as if 't were writ in dullest prose ;
 As if a letter'd dunce had said, " 'T is right,"
 And imprimatur usher'd it to light.

Ambition, in the truly noble mind,
 With sister Virtue is for ever join'd ;
 As in fam'd Lucrece, who, with equal dread,
 From guilt and shame, by her last conduct, fled :
 Her virtue long rebell'd in firm disdain,
 And the sword pointed at her heart in vain ;
 But, when the slave was threaten'd to be laid
 Dead by her side, her Lore of Fame obey'd.

In meaner minds Ambition works alone ;
 But with such art puts Virtue's aspect on,
 That not more like in feature and in mien,
 The God and mortal in the comic scene. *
 False Julius, ambush'd in this fair disguise,
 Soon made the Roman liberties his prize.

No mask in basest minds Ambition wears,
 But in full light pricks up her ass's ears :
 All I have sung are instances of this,
 And prove my theme unfolded not amiss.

Ye vain ! desist from your erroneous strife ;
 Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life.
 The true ambition there alone resides,
 Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides ;
 Where inward dignity joins outward state ;
 Our purpose good, as our achievement great ;
 Where public blessings public praise attend ;
 Where glory is our motive, not our end.
 Wouldst thou be fam'd ? Have those high deeds in view

Brave men would act, though scandal should ensue.
 Behold a prince ! whom no swoln thoughts inflame ;

No pride of thrones, no fever after fame :
 But when the welfare of mankind inspires,
 And death in view to dear-bought glory fires,
 Proud conquests then, then regal pomps delight ;
 Then crowns, then triumphs, sparkle in his sight ;
 Tumult and noise are dear, which with them bring
 His people's blessings to their ardent king :
 But, when those great heroic motives cease,
 His swelling soul subsides to native peace ;
 From tedious grandeur's faded charms withdraws,
 A sudden foe to splendour and applause ;
 Greatly deferring his arrears of fame,
 Till men and angels jointly shout his name.

* Amphitryon.

O pride celestial ! which can pride disdain ;
O blest ambition ! which can ne'er be vain.

From one fam'd Alpine hill, which props the sky,
In whose deep womb unfathom'd waters lie,
Here burst the Rhone and sounding Po ; there shine,
In infant rills, the Danube and the Rhine ;
From the rich store one fruitful urn supplies,
Whole kingdoms smile, a thousand harvests rise.

In Brunswick such a source the Muse adores,
Which public blessings through half Europe pours.
When his heart burns with such a god-like aim,
Angels and George are rivals for the fame ;
George, who in foes can soft affections raise,
And charm envenom'd satire into praise.

Nor human rage alone his power perceives,
But the mad winds, and the tumultuous waves.*
E'en storms (Death's fiercest ministers !) forbear,
And, in their own wild empire, learn to spare.
Thus Nature's self, supporting man's decree,
Styles Britain's sovereign, sovereign of the sea.

* The king in danger by sea.

While sea and air, great Brunswick ! shook our state,

And sported with a king's and kingdom's fate,
Depriv'd of what she lov'd, and press'd by fear
Of ever losing what she held most dear,
How did Britannia, like Achilles, weep,
And tell her sorrows to the kindred deep !
Hang o'er the floods, and, in devotion warm,
Strive, for thee, with the surge, and fight the storm !

What felt thy Walpole, pilot of the realm !
Our Palinurus slept not at the helm ;
His eye ne'er clos'd ; long since inur'd to wake,
And out-watch every star for Brunswick's sake :
By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress'd,
He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast :
But, now, what joys that gloom of heart dispel,
No powers of language — but his own, can tell ;
His own, which Nature and the Graces form,
At will, to raise, or hush the civil storm.

MARK AKENSIDE.

MARK AKENSIDE was born in 1721, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where his father was a substantial butcher. After receiving an education, first at a grammar-school, and then at a private academy at his native place, he was sent to the university of Edinburgh, for the purpose of being fitted for a Dissenting minister. He soon, however, exchanged his studies for those of medicine; and, after continuing three years at Edinburgh, he removed to Leyden, where he took the degree of M. D. in 1744. In the same year his poem "On the Pleasures of the Imagination" made its appearance, which was received with great applause, and raised the author at once into poetical fame. It was soon followed by a warm invective against the celebrated Pulteney, Earl of Bath, in an "Epistle to Curio." In 1745 he published ten Odes on different subjects, and in various styles and manners. All these works characterized him as a zealous votary of Grecian philosophy and classical literature, and an ardent lover of liberty. He continued, from time to time, to publish his poetical effusions, most of which first appeared in Dodsley's collection. Of these, the most considerable is, a "Hymn to the Naiads."

His professional career affords few incidents worth recording. He settled for a short time at Northampton; then removed to Hampstead; and finally fixed himself in London. While his practice was small, he was generously assisted by his friend, Mr. Jeremiah Dyson, who made him an allowance of 300*l.* per annum. He pursued the regular course to advancement, becoming Fellow of the Royal Society, Physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, Doctor of Physic by mandamus at Cambridge, and Fellow of the London College of Physicians. He also published several occasional pieces on medical subjects, among which was a Treatise on the Epidemic Dysentery of 1764, written in elegant Latin. By these efforts his practice and reputation increased; so that, on the settlement of the Queen's household, he was appointed one of her Majesty's physicians—an honour for which he is supposed to have been indebted to Mr. Dyson. It is affirmed that Dr. Akenside assumed a haughtiness and ostentation of manner which was not calculated to ingratiate him with his brethren of the faculty, or to render him generally acceptable. He died of a putrid fever, in June, 1770, in the forty-ninth year of his age.

Respecting his poem "On the Pleasures of the Imagination," of which Addison's papers in the Spectator are the ground-work, it would be an injury to deny him the claims of an original writer, which he merited by the expansion of the plan of this prose original, and by enriching its illustrations from the stores of philosophy and poetry. No poem of so elevated and abstracted a kind was ever so popular. It went through several editions soon after its appearance, and is still read with enthusiasm by those who have acquired a relish for the conceptions of pure poetry, and the strains of numerous blank verse. The author was known to have been employed many years in correcting, or rather new-modelling, this work; but the unfinished draught of this design seems to have rendered it probable that the piece would have lost as much in poetry as it would have gained in philosophy.

Of his other poems, the Hymn to the Naiads is the longest and best. With the purest spirit of classical literature, it contains much mythological ingenuity, and many poetical ideas, beautifully expressed. In his lyric productions, the copiousness and elevation of thought does not compensate for the total want of grace, ease, and appropriate harmony. The only sparks of animation which they exhibit occur when they touch on political topics; and it is in these instances alone we have ventured to select them.

THE PLEASURES OF IMAGINATION.
A POEM, IN THREE BOOKS.
Αἰτιολογία τῆς ἀπορίας τὰς ψυχὰς εἰς τὴν χάριν ἀπειράζουσα.
Epict. apud Arrian. II. 13.
Published in the Year 1744.

Book I.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Difficulty of treating it poetically. The ideas of the Divine mind, the origin of every quality pleasing to the imagination. The natural variety of constitution in the minds of men; with its final cause. The idea of a fine imagination, and the state of the mind in the enjoyment of those pleasures which it affords. All the primary pleasures of the imagination result from the perception of greatness, or wonderfulness, or beauty in objects. The pleasure from greatness, with its final cause. Pleasure from novelty or wonderfulness, with its final cause. Pleasure from beauty, with its final cause. The connection of beauty with truth and good, applied to the conduct of life. Invitation to the study of moral philosophy. The different degrees of beauty in different species of objects: colour; shape; natural concretes; vegetables; animals; the mind. The sublime, the fair, the wonderful of the mind. The connection of the imagination and the moral faculty. Conclusion.

With what attractive charms this goodly frame
Of Nature touches the consenting hearts
Of mortal men; and what the pleasing stores
Which beauteous imitation thence derives
To deck the poet's, or the painter's toil;
My verse unfolds. Attend, ye gentle powers
Of musical delight! and while I sing
Your gifts, your honours, dance around my strain.
Thou, smiling queen of every tuneful breast,
Indulgent Fancy! from the fruitful banks
Of Avon, whence thy rosy fingers cull
Fresh flowers and dews to sprinkle on the turf
Where Shakspeare lies, be present: and with thee
Let Fiction come, upon her vagrant wings
Wafting ten thousand colours through the air,
Which, by the glances of her magic eye, [forms,
She blends and shifts at will, through countless
Her wild creation. Goddess of the lyre,
Which rules the accents of the moving sphere,
Wilt thou, eternal Harmony! descend
And join this festive train? for with thee comes
The guide, the guardian of their lovely sports,
Majestic Truth; and where Truth deigns to come,
Her sister Liberty will not be far.
Be present all ye genii, who conduct
The wandering footsteps of the youthful bard,
New to your springs and shades: who touch his ear

With finer sounds: who heighten to his eye
The bloom of Nature, and before him turn
The gayest, happiest attitude of things.
Oft have the laws of each poetic strain
The critic-verse employ'd; yet still unsung
Lay this prime subject, though importing most
A poet's name: for fruitless is the attempt,
By dull obedience and by creeping toil
Obscure to conquer the severe ascent
Of high Parnassus. Nature's kindling breath
Must fire the chosen genius; Nature's hand
Must string his nerves, and imp his eagle-wings
Impatient of the painful steep, to soar
High as the summit; there to breathe at large
Ethereal air; with bards and sages old,
Immortal sons of praise. These flattering scenes,
To this neglected labour court my song;
Yet not unconscious what a doubtful task
To paint the finest features of the mind,
And to most subtle and mysterious things
Give colour, strength, and motion. But the love
Of Nature and the Muses bids explore,
Through secret paths erewhile untrod by man,
The fair poetic region, to detect
Untasted springs, to drink inspiring draughts,
And shade my temples with unfading flowers
Cull'd from the laureate vale's profound recess,
Where never poet gain'd a wreath before. [scends
From Heaven my strains begin; from Heaven de-
The flame of genius to the human breast,
And love and beauty, and poetic joy
And inspiration. Ere the radiant Sun
Sprang from the east, or 'mid the vault of night
The Moon suspended her serener lamp;
Ere mountains, woods, or streams, adorn'd the globe,
Or Wisdom taught the sons of men her lore;
Then liv'd th' almighty One: then, deep retir'd
In his unfathom'd essence, view'd the forms,
The forms eternal of created things;
The radiant Sun, the Moon's nocturnal lamp,
The mountains, woods and streams, the rolling globe,
And Wisdom's mien celestial. From the first
Of days, on them his love divine he fix'd,
His admiration: till in time complete,
What he admir'd and lov'd, his vital smile
Unfolded into being. Hence the breath
Of life informing each organic frame,
Hence the green earth, and wild resounding waves;
Hence light and shade alternate; warmth and cold;
And clear autumnal skies and vernal showers,
And all the fair variety of things.
But not alike to every mortal eye
Is this great scene unveil'd. For since the claims
Of social life, to different labours urge
The active powers of man! with wise intent
The hand of Nature on peculiar minds
Imprints a different bias, and to each
Decrees its province in the common toil.
To some she taught the fabric of the sphere,
The changeful Moon, the circuit of the stars,
The golden zones of Heaven; to some she gave
To weigh the moment of eternal things,
Of time, and space, and Fate's unbroken chain,
And will's quick impulse: others by the hand
She led o'er vales and mountains, to explore
What healing virtue swells the tender veins
Of herbs and flowers; or what the beams of morn
Draw forth, distilling from the clefted rind
In balmy tears. But some, to higher hopes
Were destin'd; some within a finer mould

She wrought, and temper'd with a purer flame.
 To these the Sire Omnipotent unfolds
 The world's harmonious volume, there to read
 The transcript of himself. On every part
 They trace the bright impressions of his hand :
 In earth or air, the meadow's purple stores,
 The Moon's mild radiance, or the virgin's form
 Blooming with rosy smiles, they see pourtray'd
 That uncreated beauty, which delights
 The mind supreme. They also feel her charms,
 Enamour'd ; they partake the eternal joy.

For as old Memmon's image, long renown'd
 By fabling Nilus, to the quivering touch
 Of Titan's ray, with each repulsive string
 Consenting, sounded through the warbling air
 Unbidden strains ; even so did Nature's hand
 To certain species of external things,
 Attune the finer organs of the mind :
 So the glad impulse of congenial powers,
 Or of sweet sounds, or fair proportion'd form,
 The grace of motion, or the bloom of light,
 Thrills through Imagination's tender frame,
 From nerve to nerve : all naked and alive
 They catch the spreading rays ; till now the soul
 At length discloses every tuneful spring,
 To that harmonious movement from without
 Responsive. Then the inexpressive strain
 Diffuses its enchantment : Fancy dreams
 Of sacred fountains and Elysian groves,
 And vales of bliss : the intellectual power
 Bends from his awful throne a wondering ear,
 And smiles : the passions, gently sooth'd away,
 Sink to divine repose, and love and joy
 Alone are waking ; love and joy serene
 As airs that fan the summer. O ! attend,
 Whoe'er thou art, whom these delights can touch,
 Whose candid bosom the refining love
 Of Nature warms, O listen to my song ;
 And I will guide thee to her favourite walks,
 And teach thy solitude her voice to hear,
 And point her loveliest features to thy view.

Know then, whate'er of Nature's pregnant stores,
 Whate'er of mimic Art's reflected forms
 With love and admiration thus inflame
 The powers of fancy, her delighted sons
 To three illustrious orders have referr'd ;
 Three sister-graces, whom the painter's hand,
 The poet's tongue, confesses ; the sublime,
 The wonderful, the fair. I see them dawn !
 I see the radiant visions, where they rise,
 More lovely than when Lucifer displays
 His beaming forehead through the gates of morn,
 To lead the train of Phœbus and the Spring.

Say, why was man so eminently rais'd
 Amid the vast creation ; why ordain'd
 Through life and death to dart his piercing eye,
 With thoughts beyond the limit of his frame ;
 But that the Omnipotent might send him forth
 In sight of mortal and immortal powers,
 As on a boundless theatre, to run
 The great career of justice ; to exalt
 His generous aim to all diviner deeds ;
 To chase each partial purpose from his breast :
 And through the mists of passion and of sense,
 And through the tossing tide of chance and pain,
 To hold his course unfaltering, while the voice
 Of Truth and Virtue, up the steep ascent
 Of Nature, calls him to his high reward, [burns
 The applauding smile of Heaven ? Else wherefore
 In mortal bosoms this unquenched hope,

That breathes from day to day sublimer things,
 And mocks possession ? wherefore darts the mind,
 With such resistless ardour to embrace
 Majestic forms ; impatient to be free,
 Spurning the gross controul of wilful might ;
 Proud of the strong contention of her toils ;
 Proud to be daring ? Who but rather turns
 To Heaven's broad fire his unconstrained view,
 Than to the glimmering of a waxen flame ?
 Who that, from Alpine heights, his labouring eye
 Shoots round the wide horizon, to survey
 Nilus or Ganges rolling his bright wave
 Through mountains, plains, through empires black with shade

And continents of sand ; will turn his gaze
 To mark the windings of a scanty rill
 That murmurs at his feet ? The high-born soul
 Disdains to rest her heaven-aspiring wing
 Beneath its native quarry. Tir'd of Earth
 And this diurnal scene, she springs aloft
 Through fields of air ; pursues the flying storm ;
 Rides on the vollied lightning through the heavens ;
 Or, yok'd with whirlwinds and the northern blast,
 Sweeps the long tract of day. Then high she soars
 The blue profound, and hovering round the Sun
 Beholds him pouring the redundant stream
 Of light ; beholds his unrelenting sway
 Bend the reluctant planets to absolve
 The fated rounds of Time. Thence far effus'd
 She darts her swiftness up the long career
 Of devious comets ; through its burning signs
 Exulting measures the perennial wheel
 Of Nature, and looks back on all the stars,
 Whose blended light, as with a milky zone,
 Invest the orient. Now amaz'd she views
 The empyreal waste, where happy spirits hold,
 Beyond this concave Heaven, their calm abode ;
 And fields of radiance, whose unfading light
 Has travell'd the profound six thousand years,
 Nor yet arrives in sight of mortal things.
 Even on the barriers of the world untir'd
 She meditates the eternal depth below ;
 Till half recoiling, down the headlong steep
 She plunges ; soon o'erwhelm'd and swallow'd up
 In that immense of being. There her hopes
 Rest at the fated goal. For from the birth
 Of mortal man, the sovereign Maker said,
 That not in humble nor in brief delight,
 Not in the fading echoes of Renown,
 Power's purple robes, nor Pleasure's flowery lap,
 The soul should find enjoyment : but from these
 Turning disdainful to an equal good,
 Through all the ascent of things enlarge her view,
 Till every bound at length should disappear,
 And infinite perfection close the scene.

Call now to mind what high capacious powers
 Lie folded up in man ; how far beyond
 The praise of mortals, may the eternal growth
 Of Nature to perfection half divine,
 Expand the blooming soul ? What pity then
 Should sloth's unkindly fogs depress to Earth
 Her tender blossom ; choke the streams of life,
 And blast her spring ! Far otherwise design'd
 Almighty Wisdom ; Nature's happy cares
 The obedient heart far otherwise incline.
 Witness the sprightly joy when aught unknown
 Strikes the quick sense, and wakes each active power
 To brisker measures : witness the neglect
 Of all familiar prospects, though beheld
 With transport once ; the fond attentive gaze

Of young astonishment ; the sober zeal
 Of age, commenting on prodigious things,
 For such the bounteous Providence of Heaven,
 In every breast implanting this desire
 Of objects new, and strange, to urge us on
 With unremitted labour to pursue
 Those sacred stores that wait the ripening soul,
 In Truth's exhaustless bosom. What need words
 To paint its power ? For this the daring youth
 Breaks from his weeping mother's anxious arms,
 In foreign climes to rove : the pensive sage,
 Heedless of sleep, or midnight's harmful damp,
 Hangs o'er the sickly taper ; and untir'd
 The virgin follows, with enchanted step,
 The mazes of some wild and wondrous tale,
 From morn to eve ; unmindful of her form,
 Unmindful of the happy dress that stole
 The wishes of the youth, when every maid
 With envy pin'd. Hence, finally, by night
 The village-matron, round the blazing hearth,
 Suspends the infant-audience with her tales,
 Breathing astonishment ! of witching rhymes,
 And evil spirits ; of the death-bed call
 Of him who robb'd the widow, and devour'd
 The orphan's portion ; of unquiet souls
 Risen from the grave to ease the heavy guilt
 Of deeds in life conceal'd ; of shapes that walk
 At dead of night, and clank their chains, and wave
 The torch of Hell around the murderer's bed.
 At every solemn pause the crowd recoil,
 Gazing each other speechless, and congeal'd
 With shivering sighs ; till eager for the event,
 Around the beldame all erect they hang,
 Each trembling heart with grateful terrors quell'd.

But lo ! disclos'd in all her smiling pomp,
 Where Beauty onward moving claims the verse
 Her charms inspire : the freely-flowing verse
 In thy immortal praise, O form divine,
 Smooths her mellifluent stream. Thee, Beauty, thee,
 The regal dome, and thy enlivening ray
 The mossy roofs adore : thou, better Sun !
 For ever beamest on the enchanted heart
 Love, and harmonious wonder, and delight
 Poetic. Brightest progeny of Heaven !
 How shall I trace thy features ? where select
 The roseate hues to emulate thy bloom ?
 Haste then, my song, through Nature's wide expanse,
 Haste then, and gather all her comeliest wealth,
 Whate'er bright spoils the florid earth contains,
 Whate'er the waters, or the liquid air,
 To deck thy lovely labour. Wilt thou fly
 With laughing Autumn to the Atlantic isles,
 And range with him the Hesperian field, and see
 Where'er his fingers touch the fruitful grove,
 The branches shoot with gold ; where'er his step
 Marks the glad soil, the tender clusters grow
 With purple ripeness, and invest each hill
 As with the blushes of an evening sky ?
 Or wilt thou rather stoop thy vagrant plume,
 Where gliding through his daughter's honour'd
 shades,

The smooth Peneus from his glassy flood
 Reflects purpureal Tempé's pleasant scene ?
 Fair Tempé ! haunt belov'd of sylvan powers,
 Of Nymphs and Fauns ; where in the golden age
 They play'd in secret on the shady brink
 With ancient Pan : while round their choral steps
 Young Hours and genial Gales with constant hand
 Shower'd blossoms, odours, shower'd ambrosial
 dews,

And Spring's Elysian bloom. Her flowery store
 To thee nor Tempé shall refuse ; nor watch
 Of winged Hydra guard Hesperian fruits
 From thy free spoil. O bear then, unprov'd,
 Thy smiling treasures to the green recess
 Where young Dione stays. With sweetest airs
 Entice her forth to lend her angel-form
 For Beauty's honour'd image. Hither turn
 Thy graceful footsteps ; hither, gentle maid,
 Incline thy polish'd forehead : let thy eyes
 Effuse the mildness of their azure dawn ;
 And may the fanning breezes waft aside
 Thy radiant locks : disclosing, as it bends
 With airy softness from the marble neck,
 The cheek fair-blooming, and the rosy lip,
 Where winning smiles and pleasures sweet as love,
 With sanctity and wisdom, tempering blend
 Their soft allurements. Then the pleasing force
 Of Nature, and her kind parental care
 Worthier I'd sing : then all the enamour'd youth,
 With each admiring virgin, to my lyre
 Should throng attentive, while I point on high
 Where Beauty's living image, like the morn
 That wakes in Zephyr's arms the blushing May,
 Moves onward ; or as Venus, when she stood
 Effulgent on the pearly car, and smil'd,
 Fresh from the deep, and conscious of her form,
 To see the Tritons tune their vocal shells,
 And each cerulean sister of the flood
 With loud acclaim attend her o'er the waves,
 To seek the Idalian bower. Ye smiling band
 Of youths and virgins, who through all the mase
 Of young desire with rival-steps pursue
 This charm of beauty ; if the pleasing toil
 Can yield a moment's respite, hither turn
 Your favourable ear, and trust my words.
 I do not mean to wake the gloomy form
 Of Superstition dress'd in Wisdom's garb,
 To damp your tender hopes ; I do not mean
 To bid the jealous thunderer fire the heavens,
 Or shapes infernal rend the groaning Earth
 To fright you from your joys : my cheerful song
 With better omens calls you to the field,
 Pleas'd with your generous ardour in the chase,
 And warm like you. Then tell me, for ye know,
 Does Beauty ever deign to dwell where health
 And active use are strangers ? Is her charm
 Confess'd in aught, whose most peculiar ends
 Are lame and fruitless ? Or did Nature mean
 This pleasing call the herald of a lie ;
 To hide the shame of discord and disease,
 And catch with fair hypocrisy the heart
 Of idle faith ? O no ! with better cares
 The indulgent mother, conscious how infirm
 Her offspring tread the paths of good and ill,
 By this illustrious image, in each kind
 Still most illustrious where the object holds
 Its native powers most perfect, she by this
 Illumes the headstrong impulse of desire,
 And sanctifies his choice. The generous glebe
 Whose bosom smiles with verdure, the clear tract
 Of streams delicious to the thirsty soul,
 The bloom of nectar'd fruitage ripe to sense,
 And every charm of animated things,
 Are only pledges of a state sincere,
 The integrity and order of their frame,
 When all is well within, and every end
 Accomplish'd. Thus was Beauty sent from Heaven,
 The lovely mistress of truth and good
 In this dark world : for truth and good are one,

And Beauty dwells in them, and they in her,
 With like participation. Wherefore then,
 O sons of Earth! would ye dissolve the tie?
 O wherefore, with a rash impetuous aim,
 Seek ye those flowery joys with which the hand
 Of lavish Fancy paints each flattering scene
 Where Beauty seems to dwell, nor once inquire
 Where is the sanction of eternal truth,
 Or where the seal of undeceitful good,
 To save your search from folly! Wanting these,
 Lo! Beauty withers in your void embrace,
 And with the glittering of an idiot's toy
 Did Fancy mock your vows. Nor let the gleam
 Of youthful hope, that shines upon your hearts,
 Be chill'd or clouded at this awful task,
 To learn the lore of undeceitful good,
 And truth eternal. Though the poisonous charms
 Of baleful Superstition guide the feet
 Of servile numbers, through a dreary way
 To their abode, through deserts, thorns, and mire;
 And leave the wretched pilgrim all forlorn
 To muse at last, amid the ghostly gloom
 Of graves, and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells;
 To walk with spectres through the midnight shade,
 And to the screaming owl's accursed song
 Attune the dreadful workings of his heart;
 Yet be not ye dismay'd. A gentler star
 Your lovely search illumines. From the grove
 Where Wisdom talk'd with her Athenian sons,
 Could my ambitious hand intertwine a wreath,
 Of Plato's olive with the Mantuan bay,
 Then should my powerful verse at once dispel
 Those monkish horrors: then in light divine
 Disclose the Elysian prospect, where the steps
 Of those whom Nature charms, through blooming walks,

Through fragrant mountains and poetic streams,
 Amid the train of sages, heroes, bards,
 Led by their winged Genius and the choir
 Of laurell'd Science, and harmonious Art,
 Proceed, exulting, to the eternal shrine,
 Where Truth conspicuous with her sister-twins,
 The undivided partners of her sway,
 With Good and Beauty reigns. O let not us,
 Lull'd by luxurious Pleasure's languid strain,
 Or crouching to the frowns of Bigot-rage,
 O let us not a moment pause to join
 That godlike band. And if the gracious power
 Who first awaken'd my untutor'd song,
 Will to my invocation breathe anew
 The tuneful spirit; then through all our paths,
 Ne'er shall the sound of this devoted lyre
 Be wanting; whether on the rosy mead,
 When Summer smiles, to warn the melting heart
 Of Luxury's allurements; whether firm
 Against the torrent and the stubborn hill
 To urge bold Virtue's unremitted nerve,
 And wake the strong divinity of soul
 That conquers Chance and Fate; or whether struck
 For sounds of triumph, to proclaim her toils
 Upon the lofty summit, round her brow
 To twine the wreath of incorruptive praise;
 To trace her hallow'd light through future worlds,
 And bless Heaven's image in the heart of man.

Thus with a faithful aim have we presum'd,
 Adventurous, to delineate Nature's form;
 Whether in vast, majestic pomp array'd,
 Or drest for pleasing wonder, or serene
 In Beauty's rosy smile. It now remains,
 Through various being's fair-proportioned scale,
 To trace the rising lustre of her charms,

From their first twilight, shining forth at length
 To full meridian splendour. Of degree
 The least and lowliest, in the effusive warmth
 Of colours mingling with a random blaze,
 Doth Beauty dwell. Then higher in the line
 And variation of determin'd shape,
 Where Truth's eternal measures mark the bound
 Of circle, cube, or sphere. The third ascent
 Unites this varied symmetry of parts
 With colour's bland allurements; as the pearl
 Shines in the concave of its azure bed,
 And painted shells indent their speckled wreath.
 Then more attractive rise the blooming forms
 Through which the breath of Nature has infus'd
 Her genial power to draw with pregnant veins
 Nutritious moisture from the bounteous Earth,
 In fruit and seed prolific: thus the flowers
 Their purple honours with the spring resume;
 And thus the stately tree with autumn bends
 With blushing treasures. But more lovely still
 Is Nature's charm, where to the full consent
 Of complicated members to the bloom
 Of colour, and the vital change of growth,
 Life's holy flame and piercing sense are given,
 And active motion speaks the temper'd soul:
 So moves the bird of Juno; so the steed
 With rival ardour beats the dusty plain,
 And faithful dogs with eager airs of joy
 Salute their fellows. Thus doth Beauty dwell
 There most conspicuous, even in outward shape,
 Where dawns the high expression of a mind:
 By steps conducting our enraptur'd search
 To that eternal origin, whose power,
 Through all the unbounded symmetry of things,
 Like rays effulging from the parent Sun,
 This endless mixture or her charms diffus'd.
 Mind, mind alone, (bear witness, Earth and Heaven!)
 The living fountains in itself contains
 Of beauteous and sublime: here, hand in hand,
 Sit paramount the Graces; here enthron'd,
 Celestial Venus, with divinest airs,
 Invites the soul to never-fading joy.
 Look then abroad through Nature, to the range
 Of planets, suns, and adamantine spheres,
 Wheeling unshaken through the void immense;
 And speak, O man! does this capacious scene
 With half that kindling majesty dilate
 Thy strong conception, as when Brutus rose
 Refulgent from the stroke of Caesar's fate,
 Amid the crowd of patriots; and his arm
 Aloft extending, like eternal Jove,
 When guilt brings down the thunder, call'd aloud
 On Tully's name, and shook his crimson steel,
 And bade the father of his country hail?
 For lo! the tyrant prostrate on the dust,
 And Rome again is free! Is aught so fair
 In all the dewy landscapes of the spring,
 In the bright eye of Hesper or the Morn,
 In Nature's fairest forms, is aught so fair
 As virtuous Friendship? as the candid blush
 Of him who strives with fortune to be just?
 The graceful tear that streams for others' woes?
 Or the mild majesty of private life,
 Where Peace with ever-blooming olive crowns
 The gate; where Honour's liberal hands effuse
 Unenvied treasures, and the snowy wings
 Of Innocence and Love protect the scene?
 Once more search, undismay'd, the dark profound
 Where Nature works in secret; view the beds
 Of mineral treasure, and the eternal vault
 That bounds the hoary Ocean; trace the forms

Of atoms moving with incessant change
 Their elemental round ; behold the seeds
 Of being, and the energy of life
 Kindling the mass with ever-active flame :
 Then to the secrets of the working mind
 Attentive turn ; from dim oblivion call
 Her fleet, ideal band ; and bid them, go !
 Break through Time's barrier, and o'ertake the hour
 That saw the heavens created : then declare
 If aught were found in those external scenes
 To move thy wonder now. For what are all
 The forms which brute, unconscious matter wears,
 Greatness of bulk, or symmetry of parts ?
 Not reaching to the heart, soon feeble grows
 The superficial impulse ; dull their charms,
 And satiate soon, and pall the languid eye.
 Not so the moral species, nor the powers
 Of genius and design ; the ambitious mind
 There sees herself : by these congenial forms
 Touch'd and awaken'd, with intenser act
 She bends each nerve, and meditates well-pleas'd
 Her features in the mirror. For of all
 The inhabitants of Earth, to man alone
 Creative Wisdom gave to lift his eye
 To Truth's eternal measures ; thence to frame
 The sacred laws of action and of will,
 Discerning justice from unequal deeds,
 And temperance from folly. But beyond
 This energy of Truth, whose dictates bind
 Assenting reason, the benignant sire,
 To deck the honour'd paths of just and good,
 Has added bright Imagination's rays :
 Where Virtue, rising from the awful depth
 Of Truth's mysterious bosom, doth forsake
 The unadorn'd condition of her birth ;
 And, dress'd by Fancy in ten thousand hues,
 Assumes a various feature, to attract,
 With charms responsive to each gazer's eye,
 The hearts of men. Amid his rural walk,
 The ingenuous youth, whom solitude inspires
 With purest wishes, from the pensive shade
 Beholds her moving, like a virgin-muse
 That wakes her lyre to some indulgent theme
 Of harmony and wonder : while among
 The herd of servile minds her strenuous form
 Indignant flashes on the patriot's eye,
 And through the rolls of memory appeals
 To ancient honour, or, in act serene,
 Yet watchful, raises the majestic sword
 Of public power, from dark ambition's reach
 To guard the sacred volume of the laws.

Genius of ancient Greece ! whose faithful steps
 Well-pleas'd I follow through the sacred paths
 Of Nature and of Science ; nurse divine
 Of all heroic deeds and fair desires !
 O ! let the breath of thy extended praise
 Inspire my kindling bosom to the height
 Of this untempted theme. Nor be my thoughts
 Presumptuous counted, if amid the calm
 That soothes this vernal evening into smiles,
 I steal impatient from the sordid haunts
 Of Strife and low Ambition, to attend
 Thy sacred presence in the sylvan shade,
 By their malignant footsteps ne'er profan'd.
 Descend, propitious ! to my favour'd eye ;
 Such in thy mien, thy warm, exalted air,
 As when the Persian tyrant, foil'd and stung
 With shame and desperation, gnash'd his teeth
 To see thee rend the pageants of his throne ;
 And at the lightning of thy lifted spear

Crouch'd like a slave. Bring all thy martial spoils,
 Thy palms, thy laurels, thy triumphal songs,
 Thy smiling band of arts, thy godlike sires
 Of civil wisdom, thy heroic youth
 Warm from the schools of glory. Guide my way
 Through fair Lycéum's walk, the green retreats
 Of Academus, and the thymy vale,
 Where, oft enchanted with Socratic sounds,
 Ilissus pure devolv'd his tuneful stream
 In gentler murmurs. From the blooming store
 Of these auspicious fields, may I unblam'd
 Transplant some living blossoms to adorn
 My native clime : while far above the flight
 Of Fancy's plume aspiring, I unlock
 The springs of ancient Wisdom ! while I join
 Thy name, thrice honour'd ! with the immortal
 praise
 Of Nature, while to my compatriot youth
 I point the high example of thy sons,
 And tune to Attic themes the British lyre.

BOOK II.

The Argument.

The separation of the works of imagination from philosophy, the cause of their abuse among the moderns. Prospect of their re-union under the influence of public liberty. Enumeration of accidental pleasures, which increase the effect of objects delightful to the imagination. The pleasures of sense. Particular circumstances of the mind. Discovery of truth. Perception of contrivance and design. Emotion of the passions. All the natural passions partake of a pleasing sensation ; with the final cause of this constitution illustrated by an allegorical vision, and exemplified in sorrow, pity, terrou, and indignation.

When shall the laurel and the vocal string
 Resume their honours ? When shall we behold
 The tuneful tongue, the Promethéan hand,
 Aspire to ancient praise ? Alas ! how faint,
 How slow, the dawn of Beauty and of Truth
 Breaks the reluctant shades of Gothic night
 Which yet involve the nations ! Long they groan'd
 Beneath the furies of rapacious Force ;
 Oft as the gloomy North, with iron-swarms
 Tempestuous pouring from her frozen caves,
 Blasted the Italian shore, and swept the works
 Of Liberty and Wisdom down the gulf
 Of all-devouring Night. As long immur'd
 In noon-tide darkness by the glimmering lamp,
 Each Muse and each fair Science pin'd away
 The sordid hours : while foul, barbarian hands
 Their mysteries profan'd, unstrung the lyre,
 And chain'd the soaring pinion down to Earth.
 At last the Muses rose, and spurn'd their bonds,
 And, wildly warbling, scatter'd, as they flew,
 Their blooming wreaths from fair Valclusa's bowers
 To Arno's myrtle border, and the shore
 Of soft Parthenope. But still the rage
 Of dire Ambition and gigantic Power,
 From public aims and from the busy walk
 Of civil Commerce, drove the bolder train
 Of penetrating Science to the cells,
 Where studious Ease consumes the silent hour
 In shadowy searches and unfruitful care.
 Thus from their guardians torn, the tender arts
 Of mimic Fancy and harmonious Joy,

To priestly domination and the lust
 Of lawless courts, their amiable toil
 For three inglorious ages have resign'd,
 In vain reluctant : and Torquato's tongue
 Was tun'd for slavish pæans at the throne
 Of tinsel pomp : and Raphael's magic hand
 Effus'd its fair creation to enchant
 The fond adoring herd in Latian fanes
 To blind belief ; while on their prostrate necks
 The sable tyrant plants his heel secure.
 But now, behold ! the radiant era dawns,
 When Freedom's ample fabric, fix'd at length
 For endless years on Albion's happy shore
 In full proportion, once more shall extend
 To all the kindred powers of social bliss
 A common mansion, a parental roof.
 There shall the Virtues, there shall Wisdom's train,
 Their long-lost friends rejoining, as of old,
 Embrace the smiling family of Arts,
 The Muses and the Graces. Then no more
 Shall Vice, distracting their delicious gifts
 To aims abhorr'd, with high distaste and scorn
 Turn from their charms the philosophic eye,
 The patriot-bosom ; then no more the paths
 Of public care or intellectual toil,
 Alone by footsteps haughty and severe
 In gloomy state be trod : the harmonious Muse,
 And her persuasive sisters, then shall plant
 Their sheltering laurels o'er the black ascent,
 And scatter flowers along the rugged way.
 Arm'd with the lyre, already have we dar'd
 To pierce divine Philosophy's retreats,
 And teach the Muse her lore ; already strove
 Their long-divided honours to unite,
 While tempering this deep argument we sang
 Of Truth and Beauty. Now the same glad task
 Impends ; now urging our ambitious toil,
 We hasten to recount the various springs
 Of adventitious pleasure, which adjoin
 Their grateful influence to the prime effect
 Of objects grand or beauteous, and enlarge
 The complicated joy. The sweets of sense,
 Do they not oft with kind accession flow,
 To raise harmonious Fancy's native charm ?
 So while we taste the fragrance of the rose,
 Glows not her blush the fairer ? While we view
 Amid the noontide walk a limpid rill
 Gush through the trickling herbage, to the thirst
 Of summer yielding the delicious draught
 Of cool refreshment ; o'er the mossy brink
 Shines not the surface clearer, and the waves
 With sweeter music murmur as they flow ?

Nor this alone ; the various lot of life
 Oft from external circumstance assumes
 A moment's disposition to rejoice
 In those delights which at a different hour
 Would pass unheeded. Fair the face of Spring,
 When rural songs and odours wake the Morn,
 To every eye ; but how much more to his
 Round whom the bed of sickness long diffus'd
 Its melancholy gloom ! how doubly fair,
 When first with fresh-born vigour he inhales
 The balmy breeze, and feels the blessed Sun
 Warm at his bosom, from the springs of life
 Chasing oppressive damps and languid pain !

Or shall I mention, where celestial Truth
 Her awful light discloses, to bestow
 A more majestic pomp on Beauty's frame ?
 For man loves knowledge, and the beams of Truth
 More welcome touch his understanding's eye.

Than all the blandishments of sound his ear,
 Than all of taste his tongue. Nor ever yet
 The melting rainbow's vernal-tinctur'd hues
 To me have shone so pleasing, as when first
 The hand of Science pointed out the path
 In which the sun-beams gleaming from the west
 Fall on the watery cloud, whose darksome veil
 Involves the orient ; and that trickling shower
 Piercing through every crystalline convex
 Of clustering dew-drops to their flight oppos'd,
 Recoil at length where concave all behind
 The internal surface on each glassy orb
 Repels their forward passage into air ;
 That thence direct they seek the radiant goal
 From which their course began ; and, as they strike
 In different lines the gazer's obvious eye,
 Assume a different lustre, through the brede
 Of colours changing from the splendid rose
 To the pale violet's dejected hue.

Or shall we touch that kind access of joy,
 That springs to each fair object, while we trace
 Through all its fabric, Wisdom's artful aim
 Disposing every part, and gaining still
 By means proportion'd her benignant end ?
 Speak, ye, the pure delight, whose favour'd steps
 The lamp of Science through the jealous maze
 Of Nature guides, when haply you reveal
 Her secret honours : whether in the sky,
 The beauteous laws of light, the central powers
 That wheel the pensile planets round the year ;
 Whether in wonders of the rolling deep,
 Or the rich fruits of all-sustaining earth,
 Or fine-adjusted springs of life and sense,
 Ye scan the counsels of their author's hand.

What, when to raise the meditated scene,
 The flame of passion through the struggling soul
 Deep-kindled, shows across that sudden blaze
 The object of its rapture, vast of size,
 With fiercer colours and a night of shade ?
 What ? like a storm from their capacious bed
 The sounding seas o'erwhelming, when the might
 Of these eruptions, working from the depth
 Of man's strong apprehension, shakes his frame
 Even to the base ; from every naked sense
 Of pain or pleasure dissipating all
 Opinion's feeble coverings, and the veil
 Spun from the cobweb fashion of the times
 To hide the feeling heart ? Then Nature speaks
 Her genuine language, and the words of men,
 Big with the very motion of their souls,
 Declare with what accumulated force
 The impetuous nerve of passion urges on
 The native weight and energy of things.

Yet more : her honours where nor beauty claims
 Nor shows of good the thirsty sense allure,
 From Passion's power alone our nature holds
 Essential pleasure. Passion's fierce illapse
 Rouses the mind's whole fabric ; with supplies
 Of daily impulse keeps the elastic powers
 Intensely pois'd, and polishes anew
 By that collision all the fine machine :
 Else rust would rise, and foulness, by degrees
 Encumbering, choke at last what Heaven design'd
 For ceaseless motion and a round of toil.
 —But say, does every passion thus to man
 Administer delight ? That name indeed
 Becomes the rosy breath of Love ; becomes
 The radiant smiles of Joy, the applauding hand
 Of Admiration : but the bitter shower
 That Sorrow sheds upon a brother's grave,

But the dumb palsy of nocturnal Fear,
Or those consuming fires that gnaw the heart
Of panting Indignation, find we there
To move delight?—Then listen while my tongue
The unalter'd will of Heaven with faithful awe
Reveals; what old Harmodius, wont to teach
My early age; Harmodius, who had weigh'd
Within his learned mind whate'er the schools
Of Wisdom, or thy lonely-whispering voice,
O faithful Nature! dictate of the laws
Which govern and support this mighty frame
Of universal being. Oft the hours
From morn to eve have stolen unmark'd away,
While mute attention hung upon his lips,
As thus the sage his awful tale began.

“ 'T was in the windings of an ancient wood,
When spotless youth with solitude resigns
To sweet philosophy the studious day,
What time pale Autumn shades the silent eve,
Musing I rov'd. Of good and evil much,
And much of mortal man, my thought revolv'd;
When starting full on Fancy's gushing eye
The mournful image of Parthenia's fate,
That hour, O long belov'd and long deplor'd!
When blooming youth, nor gentlest Wisdom's arts,
Nor Hymen's honours gather'd for thy brow,
Nor all thy lover's, all thy father's tears
Avail'd to snatch thee from the cruel grave;
Thy agonizing looks, thy last farewell,
Struck to the inmost feeling of my soul
As with the hand of Death. At once the shade
More horrid nodded o'er me, and the winds
With hoarser murmuring shook the branches. Dark
As midnight storms, the scene of human things
Appear'd before me; deserts, burning sands,
Where the parch'd adder dies; the frozen south,
And Desolation blasting all the west
With rapine and with murder: tyrant Power
Here sits enthron'd with blood; the baleful charms
Of Superstition there infect the skies,
And turn the Sun to horror. Gracious Heaven!
What is the life of man? Or cannot these,
Not these portents thy awful will suffice?
That, propagated thus beyond their scope,
They rise to act their cruelties anew
In my afflicted bosom, thus decreed
The universal sensitive of pain,
The wretched heir of evils not its own!

“ Thus I impatient; when, at once effus'd,
A flashing torrent of celestial day [scent
Burst through the shadowy void. With slow de-
A purple cloud came floating through the sky,
And pois'd at length within the circling trees,
Hung obvious to my view; till opening wide
Its lucid orb, a more than human form
Emerging lean'd majestic o'er my head,
And instant thunder shook the conscious grove.
Then melted into air the liquid cloud,
Then all the shining vision stood reveal'd.
A wreath of palm his ample forehead bound,
And o'er his shoulder, mantling to his knee,
Flow'd the transparent robe, around his waist
Collected with a radiant zone of gold
Ethereal: there in mystic signs engrav'd,
I read his office high, and sacred name,
Genius of human kind. Appall'd I gaz'd
The godlike presence; for athwart his brow
Displeasure, temper'd with a mild concern,
Look'd down reluctant on me, and his words
Like distant thunders broke the murmuring air.

“ ‘ Vain are thy thoughts, O child of mortal birth!

And impotent thy tongue. Is thy short span
Capacious of this universal frame?

Thy wisdom all-sufficient? Thou, alas!
Dost thou aspire to judge between the Lord
Of Nature and his works? to lift thy voice
Against the sovereign order he decreed,
All good and lovely? to blaspheme the bands
Of tenderness innate, and social love,
Holiest of things! by which the general orb
Of being, as by adamantine links,
Was drawn to perfect union, and sustain'd
From everlasting? Hast thou felt the pangs
Of softening sorrow, of indignant zeal
So grievous to the soul, as thence to wish
The ties of Nature broken from thy frame;
That so thy selfish, unrelenting heart
Might cease to mourn its lot, no longer then
The wretched heir of evils not its own?
O fair benevolence of generous minds!
O man by Nature form'd for all mankind!

“ He spoke; abash'd and silent I remain'd,
As conscious of my tongue's offence, and aw'd
Before his presence, though my secret soul
Disdain'd the imputation. On the ground
I fix'd my eyes; till from his airy couch
He stoop'd sublime, and touching with his hand
My dazzling forehead, ‘ Raise thy sight,’ he cry'd,
‘ And let thy sense convince thy erring tongue.’

“ I look'd, and lo! the former scene was chang'd;
For verdant alleys and surrounding trees,
A solitary prospect, wide and wild,
Rush'd on my senses. 'T was an horrid pile
Of hills, with many a shaggy forest mix'd,
With many a sable cliff and glittering stream.
Aloft, recumbent o'er the hanging ridge,
The brown woods wav'd; while ever-trickling
springs

Wash'd from the naked roots of oak and pine
The crumbling soil; and still at every fall
Down the steep windings of the channel'd rock,
Remurmuring rush'd the congregated floods
With hoarser inundation; till at last
They reach'd a grassy plain, which from the skirts
Of that high desert spread her verdant lap,
And drank the gushing moisture, where, confin'd
In one smooth current, o'er the lili'd vale
Clearer than glass it flow'd. Autumnal spoils,
Luxuriant spreading to the rays of morn,
Blush'd o'er the cliffs, whose half-encircling mound
As in a sylvan theatre enclos'd
That flowery level. On the river's brink
I spy'd a fair pavilion, which diffus'd
Its floating umbrage 'mid the silver shade
Of osiers. Now the western Sun reveal'd
Between two parting cliffs his golden orb,
And pour'd across the shadow of the hills,
On rocks and floods, a yellow stream of light
That cheer'd the solemn scene. My listening powers
Were aw'd, and every thought in silence hung,
And wondering expectation. Then the voice
Of that celestial power, the mystic show
Declaring, thus my deep attention call'd.

“ ‘ Inhabitants of Earth, to whom is given
The gracious ways of Providence to learn,
Receive my sayings with a stedfast ear—
Know then, the sovereign spirit of the world,
Though, self-collected from eternal time,
Within his own deep essence he beheld

The bounds of true felicity complete;
 Yet by immense benignity inclin'd
 To spread around him that primeval joy
 Which fill'd himself, he rais'd his plastic arm,
 And sounded through the hollow depth of space
 The strong, creative mandate. Straight arose
 These heavenly orbs, the glad abodes of life
 Effusive kindled by his breath divine
 Through endless forms of being. Each inhal'd
 From him its portion of the vital flame,
 In measure such, that, from the wide complex
 Of co-existent orders, one might rise,
 One order, all-involving and entire.
 He too beholding in the sacred light
 Of his essential reason, all the shapes
 Of swift contingency, all successive ties
 Of action propagated through the sum
 Of possible existence, he at once,
 Down the long series of eventful time,
 So fix'd the dates of being, so dispos'd,
 To every living soul of every kind
 The field of motion and the hour of rest,
 That all conspir'd to his supreme design,
 To universal good: with full accord
 Answering the mighty model he had chosen,
 The best and fairest of unnumber'd worlds,
 That lay from everlasting in the store
 Of his divine conceptions. Nor content,
 By one exertion of creative power
 His goodness to reveal; through every age,
 Through every moment up the tract of time,
 His parent-hand, with ever-new increase
 Of happiness and virtue, has adorn'd
 The vast harmonious frame: his parent hand,
 From the mute shell-fish gasping on the shore,
 To men, to angels, to celestial minds,
 For ever leads the generations on
 To higher scenes of being; while supply'd
 From day to day with his enlivening breath,
 Inferior orders in succession rise
 To fill the void below. As flame ascends,
 As bodies to their proper centre move,
 As the pois'd ocean to the attracting Moon
 Obedient swells, and every headlong stream
 Devolves its winding waters to the main;
 So all things which have life aspire to God,
 The Sun of being, boundless, unimpair'd,
 Centre of souls! Nor does the faithful voice
 Of Nature cease to prompt their eager steps
 Aright; nor is the care of Heaven withheld
 From granting to the task proportion'd aid;
 That in their stations all may persevere
 To climb the ascent of being, and approach
 For ever nearer to the life divine.

“ That rocky pile thou seest, that verdant lawn
 Fresh-water'd from the mountains. Let the scene
 Paint in thy fancy the primeval seat
 Of man, and where the will supreme ordain'd
 His mansion, that pavilion fair diffus'd
 Along the shady brink; in this recess
 To wear the appointed season of his youth,
 Till riper hours should open to his toil
 The high communion of superior minds,
 Of consecrated heroes and of gods.
 Nor did the Sire Omnipotent forget
 His tender bloom to cherish; nor withheld
 Celestial footsteps from his green abode.
 Oft from the radiant honours of his throne,
 He sent whom most he lov'd, the sovereign fair,
 The effluence of his glory, whom he plac'd

Before his eyes for ever to behold;
 The goddess from whose inspiration flows
 The toil of patriots, the delight of friends;
 Without whose work divine, in Heaven or Earth,
 Nought lovely, nought propitious, comes to pass,
 Nor hope, nor praise, nor honour. Her the Sire
 Gave it in charge to rear the blooming mind,
 The folded powers to open, to direct
 The growth luxuriant of his young desires,
 And from the laws of this majestic world
 To teach him what was good. As thus the nymph
 Her daily care attended, by her side
 With constant steps her gay companions stay'd,
 The fair Euphrosyné, the gentle queen
 Of smiles, and graceful gladness, and delights
 That cheer alike the hearts of mortal men
 And powers immortal. See the shining pair!
 Behold, where from his dwelling now disclos'd
 They quit their youthful charge and seek the skies.”

“ I look'd, and on the flowery turf there stood,
 Between two radiant forms, a smiling youth,
 Whose tender cheeks display'd the vernal flower
 Of beauty; sweetest innocence illum'd
 His bashful eyes, and on his polish'd brow
 Sate young Simplicity. With fond regard
 He view'd the associates, as their steps they mov'd;
 The younger chief his ardent eyes detain'd,
 With mild regret invoking her return.
 Bright as the star of evening she appear'd
 Amid the dusky scene. Eternal youth
 O'er all her form its glowing honours breath'd;
 And smiles eternal from her candid eyes
 Flow'd, like the dewy lustre of the morn
 Effusive trembling on the placid waves.
 The spring of Heaven had shed its blushing spoils
 To bind her sable tresses: full diffus'd
 Her yellow mantle floated in the breeze;
 And in her hand she wav'd a living branch
 Rich with immortal fruits, of power to calm
 The wrathful heart, and from the brightening eyes
 To chase the cloud of sadness. More sublime
 The heavenly partner mov'd. The prime of age
 Compos'd her steps. The presence of a god,
 High on the circle of her brow enthron'd,
 From each majestic motion darted awe,
 Devoted awe! till, cherish'd by her looks
 Benevolent and meet, confiding love
 To filial rapture soften'd all the soul.
 Free in her graceful hand she pois'd the sword
 Of chaste dominion. An heroic crown
 Display'd the old simplicity of pomp
 Around her honour'd head. A matron's robe,
 White as the sunshine streams through vernal
 clouds,

Her stately form invested. Hand in hand
 The immortal pair forsook the enamell'd green,
 Ascending slowly. Rays of limpid light
 Gleam'd round their path; celestial sounds were heard,

And through the fragrant air ethereal dews
 Distill'd around them; till at once the clouds,
 Disparting wide in midway sky, withdrew
 Their airy veil, and left a bright expanse
 Of empyréan flame, where spent and drown'd,
 Afflicted vision plung'd in vain to scan
 What object it involv'd. My feeble eyes
 Indur'd not. Bending down to Earth I stood,
 With dumb attention. Soon a female voice,
 As watery murmurs sweet, or warbling shades,
 With sacred invocation thus began.

“ ‘ Father of gods and mortals! whose right arm
With reins eternal guides the moving heavens,
Bend thy propitious ear. Behold well pleas'd
I seek to finish thy divine decree.
With frequent steps I visit yonder seat
Of man, thy offspring; from the tender seeds
Of justice and of wisdom, to evolve
The latent honours of his generous frame;
Till thy conducting hand shall raise his lot
From Earth's dim scene to these ethereal walks,
The temple of thy glory. But not me,
Not my directing voice, he oft requires,
Or hears delighted: this enchanting maid,
The associate thou hast given me, her alone
He loves, O Father! absent, her he craves;
And but for her glad presence ever join'd,
Rejoices not in mine: that all my hopes
This thy benignant purpose to fulfil,
I deem uncertain: and my daily cares
Unfruitful all and vain, unless by thee
Still further aided in the work divine.’

“ She ceas'd; a voice more awful thus reply'd.
‘ O thou! in whom for ever I delight,
Fairer than all the inhabitants of Heaven,
Best image of thy author! far from thee
Be disappointment, or distaste, or blame;
Who soon or late shall every work fulfil,
And no resistance find. If man refuse
To hearken to thy dictates; or, allur'd
By meaner joys, to any other power
Transfer the honours due to thee alone;
That joy which he pursues he ne'er shall taste,
That power in whom delighteth ne'er behold.
Go then, once more, and happy be thy toil:
Go then! but let not this thy smiling friend
Partake thy footsteps. In her stead, behold!
With thee the son of Nemesis I send;
The fiend abhorr'd! whose vengeance takes account
Of sacred Order's violated laws.
See where he calls thee, burning to be gone,
Fierce to exhaust the tempest of his wrath
On yon devoted head. But thou, my child,
Controul his cruel phrenzy, and protect
Thy tender charge; that when Despair shall grasp
His agonizing bosom, he may learn,
Then he may learn to love the gracious hand
Alone sufficient in the hour of ill
To save his feeble spirit; then confess
Thy genuine honours, O excelling fair!
When all the plagues that wait the deadly will
Of this avenging demon, all the storms
Of night infernal, serve but to display
The energy of thy superior charms
With mildest awe triumphant o'er his rage,
And shining clearer in the horrid gloom.’

“ Here ceas'd that awful voice, and soon I felt
The cloudy curtain of refreshing eve
Was clos'd once more, from that immortal fire
Sheltering my eye-lids. Looking up, I view'd
A vast gigantic spectre striding on
Through murmuring thunders and a waste of clouds,
With dreadful action. Black as night, his brow
Relentless frowns involv'd. His savage limbs
With sharp impatience violent he writh'd,
As through convulsive anguish; and his hand,
Arm'd with a scorpion-lash, full oft he rais'd
In madness to his bosom; while his eyes
Rain'd bitter tears, and bellowing loud he shook
The void with horror. Silent by his side
The virgin came. No discomposure stirr'd

Her features. From the glooms which hung around
No stain of darkness mingled with the beam
Of her divine effulgence. Now they stoop
Upon the river-bank; and now to hail,
His wonted guests, with eager steps advanc'd
The unsuspecting inmate of the shade.

“ As when a famish'd wolf, that all night long
Had rang'd the Alpine snows, by chance at morn
Sees from a cliff incumbent o'er the smoke
Of some lone village, a neglected kid
That strays along the wild for herb or spring;
Down from the winding ridge he sweeps amain,
And thinks he tears him: so with tenfold rage,
The monster sprung remorseless on his prey.
Amaz'd the stripling stood: with panting breast
Feebly he pour'd the lamentable wail
Of helpless consternation, struck at once,
And rooted to the ground. The queen beheld
His terror, and with looks of tenderest care
Advanc'd to save him. Soon the tyrant felt
Her awful power. His keen, tempestuous arm
Hung nerveless, nor descended where his rage
Had aim'd the deadly blow: then dumb retir'd
With sullen rancour. Lo! the sovran maid
Folds with a mother's arms the fainting boy,
Till life rekindles in his rosy cheek; [tongue.

“ ‘ O wake thee, rouse thy spirit! Shall the spite
Of yon tormentor thus appal thy heart,
While I, thy friend and guardian, am at hand
To rescue and to heal? O let thy soul
Remember, what the will of Heaven ordains
Is ever good for all; and if for all,
Then good for thee. Nor only by the warmth
And soothing sunshine of delightful things
Do minds grow up and flourish. Oft misled
By that bland light, the young unpractis'd views
Of reason wander through a fatal road,
Far from their native aim; as if to lie
Inglorious in the fragrant shade, and wait
The soft access of ever-circling joys,
Were all the end of being. Ask thyself,
This pleasing error did it never lull
Thy wishes? Has thy constant heart refus'd
The silken fetters of delicious ease?
Or when divine Euphrosyné appear'd
Within this dwelling, did not thy desires
Hang far below the measure of thy fate,
Which I reveal'd before thee? and thy eyes,
Impatient of my counsels, turn away
To drink the soft effusion of her smiles?
Know then, for this the everlasting Sire
Deprives thee of her presence, and instead,
O wise and still benevolent! ordains
This horrid visage hither to pursue
My steps; that so thy nature may discern
Its real good, and what alone can save
Thy feeble spirit in this hour of ill
From folly and despair. O yet below'd!
Let not this headlong terror quite o'erwhelm
Thy scatter'd powers; nor fatal deem the rage
Of this tormentor, nor his proud assault,
While I am here to vindicate thy toil,
Above the generous question of thy arm.
Brave by thy fears, and in thy weakness strong,
This hour he triumphs; but confront his might,
And dare him to the combat, then with ease
Disarm'd and quell'd, his fierceness he resigns
To bondage and to scorn: while thus inur'd
By watchful danger, by unceasing toil,

The immortal mind, superior to his fate,
 Amid the outrage of external things,
 Firm as the solid base of this great world,
 Rests on his own foundations. Blow, ye winds!
 Ye waves! ye thunders! roll your tempest on;
 Shake, ye old pillars of the marble sky!
 Till all its orbs and all its worlds of fire
 Be loosen'd from their seats; yet still serene,
 The unconquer'd mind looks down upon the wreck;
 And ever stronger as the storms advance,
 Firm through the closing ruin holds his way,
 Where Nature calls him to the destin'd goal.'

"So spake the goddess; while through all her frame

Celestial raptures flow'd, in every word,
 In every motion kindling warmth divine
 To seize who listen'd. Vehement and swift,
 As lightning fires the aromatic shade
 In Ethiopian fields, the stripling felt
 Her inspiration catch his fervid soul,
 And starting from his languor thus exclaim'd:

"Then let the trial come! and witness thou,
 If terror be upon me; if I shrink
 To meet the storm, or falter in my strength
 When hardest it besets me. Do not think
 That I am fearful and infirm of soul,
 As late thy eyes beheld; for thou hast chang'd
 My nature; thy commanding voice has wak'd
 My languid powers to bear me boldly on,
 Where'er the will divine my path ordains
 Through toil or peril: only do not thou
 Forsake me; O be thou for ever near,
 That I may listen to thy sacred voice,
 And guide by thy decrees my constant feet.
 But say, for ever are my eyes bereft?
 Say, shall the fair Euphrosyné not once
 - Appear again to charm me? Thou, in Heaven!
 O thou eternal arbiter of things!
 Be thy great bidding done: for who am I,
 To question thy appointment? Let the frowns
 Of this avenger every morn o'ercast
 The cheerful dawn, and every evening damp
 With double night my dwelling; I will learn
 To hail them both, and unrepining bear
 His hateful presence; but permit my tongue
 One glad request, and if my deeds may find
 Thy awful eye propitious, O restore
 The rosy-featur'd maid, again to cheer
 This lonely seat, and bless me with her smiles.'

"He spoke; when instant through the sable
 glooms

With which that furious presence had involv'd
 The ambient air, a flood of radiance came
 Swift as the lightning flash; the melting clouds
 Flew diverse, and amid the blue serene
 Euphrosyné appear'd. With sprightly step
 The nymph alighted on the irriguous lawn,
 And to her wondering audience thus began.

"Lo! I am here to answer to your vows,
 And be the meeting fortunate! I come
 With joyful tidings; we shall part no more. —
 Hark! how the gentle Echo from her cell (stream
 Talks through the cliffs, and murmuring o'er the Repeats the accents — we shall part no more.
 O my delightful friends! well pleas'd on high
 The Father has beheld you, while the might
 Of that stern foe with bitter trial prov'd
 Your equal doings; then for ever spake
 The high decree: That thou, celestial maid!
 Howe'er that grisly phantom on thy steps

May sometimes dare intrude, yet never more
 Shalt thou, descending to the abode of man,
 Alone endure the rancour of his arm,
 Or leave thy lov'd Euphrosyné behind.'

"She ended; and the whole romantic scene
 Immediate vanish'd; rocks, and woods, and rills,
 The mantling tent, and each mysterious form,
 Flew like the pictures of a morning dream,
 When sunshine fills the bed. Awhile I stood
 Perplex'd and giddy; till the radiant power
 Who bade the visionary landscape rise,
 As up to him I turn'd, with gentlest looks
 Preventing my inquiry, thus began.

"There let thy soul acknowledge its complaint
 How blind! how impious! There behold the ways
 Of Heaven's eternal destiny to man,
 For ever just, benevolent, and wise:
 That Virtue's awful steps, how'er pursued
 By vexing Fortune and intrusive Pain,
 Should never be divided from her chaste,
 Her fair attendant, Pleasure. Need I urge
 Thy tardy thought through all the various round
 Of this existence, that thy softening soul
 At length may learn what energy the hand
 Of Virtue mingles in the bitter tide
 Of passion, swelling with distress and pain
 To mitigate the sharp with gracious drops
 Of cordial pleasure? Ask the faithful youth
 Why the cold urn of her whom long he lov'd
 So often fills his arms; so often draws
 His lonely footsteps at the silent hour,
 To pay the mournful tribute of his tears?
 Oh! he will tell thee, that the wealth of worlds
 Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego
 That sacred hour, when, stealing from the noise
 Of care and envy, sweet remembrance soothes
 With Virtue's kindest looks his aching breast,
 And turns his tears to rapture. — Ask the crowd
 Which flies impatient from the village-walk
 To climb the neighbouring cliffs, when far below
 The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
 Some helpless bark; while sacred Pity melts
 The general eye, or Terror's icy hand
 Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair;
 While every mother closer to her breast
 Catches her child, and pointing where the waves
 Foam through the shatter'd vessel, shrieks aloud,
 As one poor wretch that spreads his piteous arms
 For succour, swallow'd by the roaring surge,
 As now another, dash'd against the rock,
 Drops lifeless down: O! deemest thou indeed
 No kind endearment here by Nature given
 To mutual terror and Compassion's tears?
 No sweetly-melting softness which attracts,
 O'er all that edge of pain, the social powers
 To this their proper action and their end?
 — Ask thy own heart; when at the midnight hour,
 Slow through that studious gloom thy pausing eye,
 Led by the glimmering taper, moves around
 The sacred volumes of the dead, the songs
 Of Grecian bards, and records writ by Fame
 For Grecian heroes, where the present power
 Of Heaven and Earth surveys the immortal page,
 Even as a father blessing, while he reads
 The praises of his son. If then thy soul,
 Spurning the yoke of these inglorious days,
 Mix in their deeds and kindle with their flame;
 Say, when the prospect blackens on thy view,
 When rooted from the base, heroic states
 Mourn in the dust, and tremble at the frown

Of curst Ambition : when the pious band
Of youths who fought for freedom and their sires,
Lie side by side in gore ; when ruffian Pride
Usurps the throne of Justice, turns the pomp
Of public power, the majesty of rule,
The sword, the laurel, and the purple robe,
To slavish, empty pageants, to adorn
A tyrant's walk, and glitter in the eyes
Of such as bow the knee ; when honour'd urns
Of patriots and of chiefs, the awful bust
And storied arch, to glut the coward-age
Of regal Envy, strew the public way
With hallow'd ruins ; when the Muse's haunt,
The marble porch where Wisdom went to talk
With Socrates or Tully, hears no more,
Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
Or female superstition's midnight prayer ;
When ruthless Rapine from the hand of Time
Tears the destroying scythe, with surer blow
To sweep the works of glory from their base ;
Till Desolation o'er the grass-grown street
Expands his raven-wings, and up the wall,
Where senates once the price of monarchs doom'd,
Hisses the gliding snake through hoary weeds
That clasp the mouldering column ; thus defac'd,
Thus widely mournful when the prospect thrills
Thy beating bosom, when the patriot's tear
Starts from thine eye, and thy extended arm
In fancy hurls the thunderbolt of Jove
To fire the impious wreath on Philip's brow,
Or dash Octavius from the trophied car ;
Say, does thy secret soul repine to taste
The big distress ? Or would'st thou then exchange
Those heart-ennobling sorrows for the lot
Of him who sits amid the gaudy herd
Of mute barbarians bending to his nod,
And bears aloft his gold-invested front,
And says within himself — I am a king.
And wherefore should the clamorous voice of woe
Intrude upon mine ear ? — the baleful dregs
Of these late ages, this inglorious draught
Of servitude and folly, have not yet,
Blest be the eternal Ruler of the world !
Defil'd to such a depth of sordid shame
The native honours of the human soul,
Nor so effac'd the image of its sire.' "

BOOK III.

Argument.

Pleasure in observing the tempers and manners of men, even where vicious or absurd. The origin of vice, from false representations of the fancy, producing false opinions concerning good and evil. Inquiry into ridicule. The general sources of ridicule in the minds and characters of men, enumerated. Final cause of the sense of ridicule. The resemblance of certain aspects of inanimate things to the sensations and properties of the mind. The operations of the mind in the production of the works of imagination, described. The secondary pleasure from imitation. The benevolent order of the world illustrated in the arbitrary connection of these pleasures with the objects which excite them. The nature and conduct of taste. Concluding with an account of the natural and moral advantages resulting from a sensible and well-formed imagination.

WHAT wonder therefore, since the endearing ties
Of passion link the universal kind
Of man so close, what wonder if to search
This common nature through the various change
Of sex, and age, and fortune, and the frame
Of each peculiar, draw the busy mind
With unresisted charms ? The spacious west,
And all the teeming regions of the south,
Hold not a quarry, to the curious flight
Of knowledge, half so tempting or so fair,
As man to man. Nor only where the smiles
Of Love invite ; nor only where the applause
Of cordial Honour turns the attentive eye
On Virtue's graceful deeds. For since the course
Of things external acts in different ways
On human apprehensions, as the hand
Of Nature temper'd to a different frame
Peculiar minds ; so haply where the powers
Of Fancy neither lessen nor enlarge
The images of things, but paint, in all
Their genuine hues, the features which they wore
In nature ; there Opinion will be true,
And Action right. For Action treads the path
In which Opinion says he follows good,
Or flies from evil ; and Opinion gives
Report of good or evil, as the scene
Was drawn by Fancy, lovely or deform'd :
Thus her report can never there be true
Where Fancy cheats the intellectual eye,
With glaring colours and distorted lines.
Is there a man, who at the sound of Death
Sees ghastly shapes of terour conjur'd up,
And black before him ; nought but death-bed groans
And fearful prayers, and plunging from the brink
Of light and being, down the gloomy air
An unknown depth ? Alas ! in such a mind,
If no bright forms of excellence attend
The image of his country ; nor the pomp
Of sacred senates, nor the guardian voice
Of Justice on her throne, nor aught that wakes
The conscious bosom with a patriot's flame ;
Will not Opinion tell him, that to die,
Or stand the hazard, is a greater ill
Than to betray his country ? And in act
Will he not choose to be a wretch and live ?
Here vice begins then. From the enchanting cup
Which Fancy holds to all, the unwary thirst
Of youth oft swallows a Circæan draught,
That sheds a baleful tincture o'er the eye
Of Reason, till no longer he discerns,
And only guides to err. Then revel forth
A furious band that spurns him from the throne !
And all is uproar. Thus Ambition grasps
The empire of the soul : thus pale Revenge
Unsheaths her murderous dagger ; and the hands
Of Lust and Rapine, with unholy arts,
Watch to o'erturn the barrier of the laws [plagues
That keeps them from their prey : thus all the
The wicked bear, or o'er the trembling scene
The tragic Muse discloses, under shapes
Of honour, safety, pleasure, ease, or pomp,
Stole first into the mind. Yet not by all
Those lying forms which Fancy in the brain
Engenders, are the kindling passions driven
To guilty deeds ; nor Reason bound in chains,
That Vice alone may lord it : oft adorn'd
With solemn pageants, Folly mounts the throne,
And plays her idiot-antics, like a queen.
A thousand garbs she wears ; a thousand ways

She wheels her giddy empire. — Lo! thus far
With bold adventure, to the Mantuan lyre
I sing of Nature's charms, and touch well pleas'd
A stricter note: now haply must my song
Unbend her serious measure, and reveal
In lighter strains, how Folly's awkward arts
Excite impetuous Laughter's gay rebuke;
The sportive province of the comic Muse.

See! in what crowds the uncouth forms advance:
Each would outstrip the other, each prevent
Our careful search, and offer to your gaze,
Unask'd, his motley features. Wait a while,
My curious friends! and let us first arrange,
In proper order, your promiscuous throng.

Behold the foremost band; of slender thought,
And easy faith; whom flattering Fancy soothes
With lying spectres, in themselves to view
Illustrious forms of excellence and good,
That scorn the mansion. With exulting hearts
They spread their spurious treasures to the Sun,
And bid the world admire! but chief the glance
Of wishful Envy draws their joy-bright eyes,
And lifts with self-applause each lordly brow.
In numbers boundless as the blooms of spring,
Behold their glaring idols, empty shades
By Fancy gilded o'er, and then set up
For adoration. Some in Learning's garb,
With formal band, and sable-cinctur'd gown,
And rags of mouldy volumes. Some elate
With martial splendour, steely pikes and swords
Of costly frame, and gay Phœnician robes
Inwrought with flowery gold, assume the port
Of stately Valour: listening by his side
There stands a female form; to her, with looks
Of earnest import, pregnant with amaze,
He talks of deadly deeds, of breaches, storms,
And sulphurous mines, and ambush: then at once
Breaks off, and smiles to see her look so pale,
And asks some wondering question of her fears.
Others of graver mien; behold, adorn'd
With holy ensigns, how sublime they move,
And bending oft their sanctimonious eyes
Take homage of the simple-minded throng;
Ambassadors of Heaven! Nor much unlike
Is he whose visage, in the lary mist
That mantles every feature, hides a brood
Of politic conceits; of whispers, nods,
And hints deep-omen'd with unwieldy schemes,
And dark portents of state. Ten thousand more,
Prodigious habits and tumultuous tongues,
Pour dauntless in, and swell the boastful band.

Then comes the second order, all who seek
The debt of praise, where watchful Unbelief
Darts through the thin pretence her squinting eye
On some retir'd appearance, which belies
The boasted virtue, or annuls the applause
That Justice else would pay. Here side by side
I see two leaders of the solemn train
Approaching: one a female old and grey,
With eyes demure, and wrinkle-furrow'd brow,
Pale as the cheeks of Death; yet still she stuns
The sickening audience with a nauseous tale;
How many youths her myrtle-chains have worn,
How many virgins at her triumphs pin'd!
Yet how resolv'd she guards her cautious heart;
Such is her terror at the risks of love,
And man's seducing tongue! The other seems
A bearded sage, ungentle in his mien,
And sordid all his habit; peevish Want
Grins at his heels, while down the gazing throng
He stalks, resounding in magnificent phrase

The vanity of riches, the contempt
Of pomp and power. Be prudent in your zeal,
Ye grave associates! let the silent grace
Of her who blushes at the fond regard
Her charms inspire, more eloquent unfold
The praise of spotless honour: let the man
Whose eye regards not his illustrious pomp
And ample store, but as indulgent streams
To cheer the barren soil and spread the fruits
Of joy, let him by juster measures fix
The price of riches and the end of power.

Another tribe succeeds; deluded long
By Fancy's dazzling optics, these behold
The images of some peculiar things
With brighter hues resplendent, and pourtray'd
With features nobler far than e'er adorn'd
Their genuine objects. Hence the fever'd heart
Pants with delirious hope for tinsel charms;
Hence oft obtrusive on the eye of Scorn,
Untimely Zeal her witless pride betrays!
And serious manhood from the towering aim
Of Wisdom, stoops to emulate the boast
Of childish toil. Behold yon mystic form,
Bedeck'd with feathers, insects, weeds, and shells!
Not with intenser view the Samian sage
Bent his fixt eye on Heaven's intenser fires,
When first the order of that radiant scene
Swell'd his exulting thought, than this surveys
A muckworm's entrails or a spider's fang.
Next him a youth, with flowers and myrtles crown'd,
Attends that virgin form, and blushing kneels,
With fondest gesture and a suppliant's tongue,
To win her coy regard: adieu, for him,
The dull engagements of the bustling world!
Adieu the sick impertinence of praise!
And hope, and action! for with her alone,
By streams and shades, to steal these sighing hours,
Is all he asks, and all that Fate can give!
Thee too, facetious Momion, wandering here,
Thee, dreaded censor, oft have I beheld
Bewilder'd unawares: alas! too long
Flush'd with thy comic triumphs and the spoils
Of sly Derision! till on every side
Hurling thy random bolts, offended Truth
Assign'd thee here thy station with the slaves
Of Folly. Thy once formidable name
Shall grace her humble records, and be heard
In scoffs and mockery, bandied from the lips
Of all the vengeful brotherhood around,
So oft the patient victims of thy scorn.

But now, ye gay! to whom indulgent Fate,
Of all the Muse's empire, hath assign'd
The fields of folly, hither each advance
Your sickles; here the teeming soil affords
Its richest growth. A favourite brood appears;
In whom the demon, with a mother's joy,
Views all her charms reflected, all her cares
At full repay'd. Ye most illustrious band!
Who, scorning Reason's tame, pedantic rules,
And Order's vulgar bondage, never meant
For souls sublime as yours, with generous zeal
Pay Vice the reverence Virtue long usurp'd,
And yield Deformity the fond applause
Which Beauty wont to claim; forgive my song,
That for the blushing diffidence of youth,
It shuns the unequal province of your praise.

Thus far triumphant in the pleasing guile
Of bland Imagination, Folly's train
Have dar'd our search: but now a dastard kind
Advance reluctant, and with faltering sex:
Shrink from the gazer's eye; enfeebled hearts

Whom Fancy chills with visionary fears,
 Or bends to servile tameness with conceits
 Of shame, of evil, or of base defect,
 Fantastic and delusive. Here the slave
 Who droops abash'd when sullen Pomp surveys
 His humbler habit; here the trembling wretch
 Unnerv'd and struck with Terror's icy bolts,
 Spent in weak wailings, drown'd in shameful tears,
 At every dream of danger: here subdued
 By frontless Laughter and the hardy scorn
 Of old, unfeeling Vice, the abject soul,
 Who blushing half resigns the candid praise
 Of Temperance and Honour; half disowns
 A freeman's hatred of tyrannic pride;
 And hears with sickly smiles the venal mouth
 With foulest licence mock the patriot's name.

Last of the motley bands on whom the power
 Of gay Derision bends her hostile aim,
 Is that where shameful Ignorance presides.
 Beneath her sordid banners, lo! they march,
 Like blind and lame. Whate'er their doubtful hands
 Attempt, Confusion straight appears behind,
 And troubles all the work. Through many a maze,
 Perplex'd they struggle, changing every path,
 O'erturning every purpose; then at last
 Sit down dismay'd, and leave the entangled scene
 For Scorn to sport with. Such then is the abode
 Of Folly in the mind; and such the shapes
 In which she governs her obsequious train.

Through every scene of ridicule in things
 To lead the tenour of my devious lay;
 Through every swift occasion, which the hand
 Of Laughter points at, when the mirthful sting
 Distends her sallying nerves and chokes her tongue;
 What were it but to count each crystal drop
 Which Morning's dewy fingers on the blooms
 Of May distil? Suffice it to have said,
 Where'er the power of Ridicule displays
 Her quaint-ey'd visage, some incongruous form,
 Some stubborn dissonance of things combin'd,
 Strikes on the quick observer: whether Pomp,
 Or Praise, or Beauty, mix their partial claim
 Where sordid fashions, where ignoble deeds,
 Where foul deformity, are wont to dwell;
 Or whether these with violation loath'd,
 Invade resplendent Pomp's imperious mien,
 The charms of Beauty, or the boast of Praise.

Ask we for what fair end, the Almighty Sire
 In mortal bosoms wakes this gay contempt,
 These grateful stings of laughter, from disgust
 Educating pleasure? Wherefore, but to aid
 The tardy steps of Reason, and at once
 By this prompt impulse urge us to depress
 The giddy aims of Folly? Though the light
 Of Truth slow dawning on the enquiring mind,
 At length unfolds, through many a subtle tie,
 How these uncouth disorders end at last
 In public evil! yet benignant Heaven,
 Conscious how dim the dawn of Truth appears
 To thousands; conscious what a scanty pause
 From labours and from care, the wider lot
 Of humble life affords for studious thought
 To scan the maze of Nature; therefore stamp'd
 The glaring scenes with characters of scorn,
 As broad, as obvious, to the passing clown,
 As to the letter'd sage's curious eye.

Such are the various aspects of the mind —
 Some heavenly genius, whose unclouded thoughts
 Attain that secret harmony which blends
 The ethereal spirit with its mold of clay;

O! teach me to reveal the graceful charm
 That searchless Nature o'er the sense of man
 Diffuses, to behold, in lifeless things,
 The inexpressive semblance of himself,
 Of thought and passion. Mark the sable woods
 That shade sublime yon mountain's nodding brow;
 With what religious awe the solemn scene
 Commands your steps! as if the reverend form
 Of Minos or of Numa should forsake
 The Elysian seats, and down the embowering glade
 Move to your pausing eye! Behold the expanse
 Of yon gay landscape, where the silver clouds
 Flit o'er the heavens before the sprightly breeze:
 Now their grey cincture skirts the doubtful Sun;
 Now streams of splendour, through their opening veil
 Effulgent, sweep from off the gilded lawn
 The aerial shadows; on the curling brook,
 And on the shady margin's quivering leaves
 With quickest lustre glancing; while you view
 The prospect, say, within your cheerful breast
 Plays not the lively sense of winning mirth
 With clouds and sunshine chequer'd, while the round
 Of social converse, to the inspiring tongue
 Of some gay nymph amid her subject train,
 Moves all obsequious? Whence is this effect,
 This kindred power of such discordant things?
 Or flows their semblance from that mystic tone
 To which the new-born mind's harmonious powers
 At first were strung? Or rather from the links
 Which artful custom twines around her frame?

For when the different images of things,
 By chance combin'd, have struck the attentive soul
 With deeper impulse, or, connected long,
 Have drawn her frequent eye; how'er distinct
 The external scenes, yet oft the ideas gain
 From that conjunction an eternal tie,
 And sympathy unbroken. Let the mind
 Recall one partner of the various league,
 Immediate, lo! the firm confederates rise,
 And each his former station straight resumes:
 One movement governs the consenting throng,
 And all at once with rosy pleasures shine,
 Or all are sadden'd with the glooms of care.
 'T was thus, if ancient Fame the truth unfold,
 Two faithful needles, from the informing touch
 Of the same parent-stone, together drew
 Its mystic virtue, and at first conspir'd
 With fatal impulse quivering to the Pole:
 Then, though disjoin'd by kingdoms, though the main
 Roll'd its broad surge betwixt, and different stars
 Beheld their wakeful motions, yet preserv'd
 The former friendship, and remember'd still
 The alliance of their birth: whate'er the line
 Which once possess'd, nor pause, nor quiet knew
 The sure associate, ere with trembling speed
 He found its path, and fix'd unerring there.
 Such is the secret union, when we feel
 A song, a flower, a name, at once restore
 Those long-connected scenes where first they mov'd
 The attention: backward through her mazy walks
 Guiding the wanton Fancy to her scope,
 To temples, courts, or fields; with all the band
 Of painted forms, of passions and designs
 Attendant: whence, if pleasing in itself,
 The prospect from that sweet accession gains
 Redoubled influence o'er the listening mind.

By these mysterious ties the busy power
 Of Memory her ideal train preserves
 Entire; or when they would elude her watch,
 Reclaims their fleeting footsteps from the waste

Of dark oblivion ; thus collecting all
 The various forms of being to present,
 Before the curious aim of mimic Art,
 Their largest choice : like spring's unfolded blooms
 Exhaling sweetness, that the skilful bee
 May taste at will, from their selected spoils
 To work her dulcet food. For not the expanse
 Of living lakes in summer's noontide calm,
 Reflects the bordering shade, and sun-bright heavens,
 With fairer semblance ; not the sculptur'd gold
 More faithful keeps the graver's lively trace,
 Than he, whose birth the sister powers of Art
 Propitious view'd, and from his genial star
 Shed influence to the seeds of fancy kind ;
 Than his attemper'd bosom must preserve
 The seal of Nature. There alone unchang'd,
 Her form remains. The balmy walks of May
 There breathe perennial sweets : the trembling chord
 Resounds for ever in the abstracted ear,
 Melodious : and the virgin's radiant eye,
 Superior to disease, to grief, and time,
 Shines with un'bating lustre. Thus at length
 Endow'd with all that Nature can bestow,
 The child of Fancy oft in silence bends
 O'er these mixt treasures of his pregnant breast,
 With conscious pride. From them he oft resolves
 To frame he knows not what excelling things ;
 And win he knows not what sublime reward
 Of praise and wonder. By degrees, the mind
 Feels her young nerves dilate : the plastic power
 Labour for action : blind emotions heave
 His bosom, and with loveliest frenzy caught,
 From Earth to Heaven he rolls his daring eye,
 From Heaven to Earth. Anon ten thousand shapes,
 Like spectres trooping to the wizard's call,
 Flit swift before him. From the womb of Earth,
 From Ocean's bed they come ; the eternal Heavens
 Disclose their splendours, and the dark Abyss
 Pours out her births unknown. With fixed gaze
 He marks the rising phantoms. Now compares
 Their different forms ; now blends them, now divides,

Enlarges, and extenuates by turns ;
 Opposes, ranges in fantastic bands,
 And infinitely varies. Hither now,
 Now thither fluctuates his inconstant aim,
 With endless choice perplex'd. At length his plan
 Begins to open. Lucid order dawns ;
 And as from Chaos old the jarring seeds
 Of Nature at the voice divine repair'd
 Each to its place, till rosy Earth unveil'd
 Her fragrant bosom, and the joyful Sun
 Sprung up the blue serene ; by swift degrees
 Thus disentangled, his entire design
 Emerges. Colours mingle, features join ;
 And lines converge : the fainter parts retire ;
 The fairer eminent in light advance ;
 And every image on its neighbour smiles.
 Awhile he stands, and with a father's joy
 Contemplates. Then with Promethéan art,
 Into its proper vehicle he breathes
 The fair conception ; which, embodied thus,
 And permanent, becomes to eyes or ears
 An object ascertain'd : while thus inform'd,
 The various organs of his mimic skill,
 The consonance of sounds, the featur'd rock,
 The shadowy picture and impassion'd verve,
 Beyond their proper powers attract the soul
 By that expressive semblance, while in sight
 Of Nature's great original we scan
 The lively child of Art ; while line by line

And feature after feature we refer
 To that sublime exemplar whence it stole
 Those animating charms. Thus beauty's palm
 Betwixt them wavering hangs : applauding love
 Doubts where to choose ; and mortal man aspires
 To tempt creative praise. As when a cloud
 Of gathering hail, with limpid crusts of ice
 Enclos'd and obvious to the beaming Sun,
 Collects his large effulgence ; straight the Heavens
 With equal flames present on either hand
 The radiant visage : Persia stands at gaze,
 Appall'd ; and on the brink of Ganges doubts
 The snowy-vested seer, in Mithra's name,
 To which the fragrance of the south shall burn,
 To which his warbled orisons ascend.

Such various bliss the well-tun'd heart enjoys,
 Favour'd of Heaven ! while, plung'd in sordid cares,
 The unfeeling vulgar mocks the boon divine :
 And harsh Austerity, from whose rebuke
 Young Love and smiling Wonder shrink away
 Abash'd, and chill of heart, with sager frowns
 Condemns the fair enchantment. On my strain,
 Perhaps even now, some cold fastidious judge
 Casts a disdainful eye ; and calls my toil,
 And calls the love and beauty which I sing,
 The dream of folly. Thou, grave censor ! say,
 Is Beauty then a dream, because the glooms
 Of dulness hang too heavy on thy sense,
 To let her shine upon thee ? So the man
 Whose eye ne'er open'd on the light of Heaven,
 Might smile with scorn while raptur'd vision tells
 Of the gay-colour'd radiance flushing bright
 O'er all creation. From the wise be far
 Such gross unhallow'd pride ; nor needs my song
 Descend so low ; but rather now unfold,
 If human thought could reach, or words unfold,
 By what mysterious fabric of the mind,
 The deep-felt joys and harmony of sound
 Result from airy motion ; and from shape
 The lovely phantoms of sublime and fair.
 By what fine ties hath God connected things
 When present in the mind, which in themselves
 Have no connection ? Sure the rising Sun
 O'er the cerulean convex of the sea,
 With equal brightness and with equal warmth
 Might roll his fiery orb ; nor yet the soul
 Thus feel her frame expanded, and her powers
 Exulting in the splendour she beholds ;
 Like a young conqueror moving through the pomp
 Of some triumphal day. When join'd at eve,
 Soft murmuring streams and gales of gentlest breath
 Melodious Philomela's wakeful strain
 Attemper, could not man's discerning ear
 Through all its tones the sympathy pursue ;
 Nor yet this breath divine of nameless joy
 Steal through his veins, and fan the awaken'd heart,
 Mild as the breeze, yet rapturous as the song.

But were not Nature still endow'd at large
 With all which life requires, though unadorn'd
 With such enchantment : wherefore then her form
 So exquisitely fair ? her breath perfum'd
 With such ethereal sweetness ? whence her voice
 Inform'd at will to raise or to depress
 The impassion'd soul ? and whence the robes of light
 Which thus invest her with more lovely pomp
 Than fancy can describe ? Whence but from thee,
 O source divine of ever-flowing love,
 And thy unmeasur'd goodness ? Not content
 With every food of life to nourish man,
 -- kind illusions of the wondering sense
 -- mak'st all nature beauty to his eye,

Or music to his ear: well pleas'd he scans
 The goodly prospect; and with inward smiles
 Treads the gay verdure of the painted plain;
 Beholds the azure canopy of Heaven,
 And living lamps that over-arch his head
 With more than regal splendour; bends his ears
 To the full choir of water, air, and earth;
 Nor heeds the pleasing error of his thought,
 Nor doubts the painted green or azure arch,
 Nor questions more the music's mingling sounds
 Than space, or motion, or eternal time;
 So sweet he feels their influence to attract
 The fixed soul; to brighten the dull glooms
 Of care, and make the destin'd road of life
 Delightful to his feet. So fables tell,
 The adventurous hero, bound on hard exploits,
 Beholds with glad surprise, by secret spells
 Of some kind sage, the patron of his toils,
 A visionary paradise disclos'd
 Amid the dubious wild: with streams, and shades,
 And airy songs, the enchanted landscape smiles,
 Cheers his long labours, and renews his frame.

What then is taste, but these internal powers
 Active, and strong, and feelingly alive
 To each fine impulse? a discerning sense
 Of decent and sublime, with quick disgust
 From things deform'd, or disarrang'd, or gross
 In species? This, nor gems, nor stores of gold,
 Nor purple state, nor culture can bestow;
 But God alone when first his active hand
 Imprints the secret bias of the soul.
 He, mighty parent! wise and just in all,
 Free as the vital breeze or light of Heaven,
 Reveals the charms of Nature. Ask the swain
 Who journeys homeward from a summer day's
 Long labour, why, forgetful of his toils
 And due repose, he loiters to behold
 The sunshine gleaming as through amber clouds,
 O'er all the western sky; full soon, I ween,
 His rude expression and untutor'd airs,
 Beyond the power of language, will unfold
 The form of beauty smiling at his heart, [Heaven
 How lovely! how commanding! But though
 In every breast hath sown these early seeds
 Of love and admiration, yet in vain,
 Without fair Culture's kind parental aid,
 Without enlivening suns, and genial showers,
 And shelter from the blast, in vain we hope
 The tender plant should rear its blooming head,
 Or yield the harvest promis'd in its spring.
 Nor yet will every soil with equal stores
 Repay the tiller's labour; or attend
 His will, obsequious, whether to produce
 The olive or the laurel. Different minds
 Incline to different objects: one pursues
 The vast alone, the wonderful, the wild;
 Another sighs for harmony, and grace,
 And gentlest beauty. Hence when lightning fires
 The arch of Heaven, and thunders rock the ground,
 When furious whirlwinds rend the howling air,
 And Ocean, groaning from its lowest bed,
 Heaves his tempestuous billows to the sky;
 Amid the mighty uproar, while below
 The nations tremble, Shakspeare looks abroad
 From some high cliff, superior, and enjoys
 The elemental war. But Waller longs,
 All on the margin of some flowery stream,
 To spread his careless limbs amid the cool
 Of plantane shades, and to the listening deer
 The tale of slighted vows and love's disdain
 Resound soft-warbling all the live-long day:

Consenting Zephyr sighs; the weeping rill
 Joins in his plaint, melodious; mute the groves;
 And hill and dale with all their echoes mourn.
 Such and so various are the tastes of men. [songs
 Oh! blest of Heaven, whom not the languid
 Of Luxury, the syren! not the bribes
 Of sordid Wealth, nor all the gaudy spoils
 Of pageant Honour, can seduce to leave
 Those ever-blooming sweets, which from the store
 Of Nature fair Imagination culls
 To charm the enliven'd soul! What though not all
 Of mortal offspring can attain the heights
 Of envied life; though only few possess
 Patrician treasures or imperial state;
 Yet Nature's care, to all her children just,
 With richer treasures and an ampler state,
 Endows at large whatever happy man
 Will deign to use them. His the city's pomp,
 The rural honours his. Whate'er adorns
 The princely dome, the column and the arch,
 The breathing marbles and the sculptur'd gold,
 Beyond the proud possessor's narrow claim,
 His tuneful breast enjoys. For him, the spring
 Distils her dews, and from the silken gem
 Its lucid leaves unfolds: for him, the hand
 Of Autumn tinges every fertile branch
 With blooming gold, and blushes like the morn.
 Each passing hour sheds tribute from her wings;
 And still new beauties meet his lonely walk,
 And loves unfelt attract him. Not a breeze
 Flies o'er the meadow, not a cloud imbibes
 The setting Sun's effulgence, not a strain
 From all the tenants of the warbling shade
 Ascends, but whence his bosom can partake
 Fresh pleasure, unprov'd. Nor thence partakes
 Fresh pleasure only: for the attentive mind,
 By this harmonious action on her powers,
 Becomes herself harmonious: wont so oft
 In outward things to meditate the charm
 Of sacred order, soon she seeks at home
 To find a kindred order, to exert
 Within herself this elegance of love,
 This fair inspir'd delight: her temper'd powers
 Refine at length, and every passion wears
 A chaster, milder, more attractive mien.
 But if to ampler prospects, if to gaze
 On Nature's form, where, negligent of all
 These lesser graces, she assumes the port
 Of that eternal majesty that weigh'd
 The world's foundations, if to these the mind
 Exalts her daring eye; then mightier far
 Will be the change, and nobler. Would the forms
 Of servile custom cramp her generous powers?
 Would sordid policies, the barbarous growth
 Of ignorance and rapine, bow her down
 To tame pursuits, to indolence and fear?
 Lo! she appeals to Nature, to the winds
 And rolling waves, the Sun's unwearied course,
 The elements and seasons: all declare
 For what the eternal Maker has ordain'd
 The powers of man: we feel within ourselves
 His energy divine: he tells the heart,
 He meant, he made us to behold and love
 What he beholds and loves, the general orb
 Of life and being; to be great like him,
 Beneficent and active. Thus the men
 Whom Nature's works can charm, with God himself
 Hold converse; grow familiar, day by day,
 With his conceptions, act upon his plan;
 And form to his, the relish of their souls.

ODE

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE FRANCIS EARL OF HUNTINGDON.

I.

THE wise and great of every clime,
Through all the spacious walks of Time,
Where'er the Muse her power display'd,
With joy have listen'd and obey'd.
For, taught of Heaven, the sacred Nine
Persuasive numbers, forms divine,
To mortal sense impart:
They best the soul with glory fire;
They noblest counsels, boldest deeds inspire;
And high o'er Fortune's rage enthrone the fixed
heart.

Nor less prevailing is their charm
The vengeful bosom to disarm;
To melt the proud with human woe,
And prompt unwilling tears to flow.
Can wealth a power like this afford?
Can Cromwell's arts, or Marlborough's sword,
An equal empire claim?
No, Hastings. Thou my words will own:
Thy breast the gifts of every Muse hath known;
Nor shall the giver's love disgrace thy noble name.

The Muse's awful art,
And the blest function of the poet's tongue,
Ne'er shalt thou blush to honour; to assert
From all that scorned Vice or slavish Fear hath sung.
Nor shall the blandishment of Tuscan strings
Warbling at will in Pleasure's myrtle bower;
Nor shall the servile notes to Celtic kings
By flattering minstrels paid in evil hour,
Move thee to spurn the heavenly Muse's reign.
A different strain,
And other themes,
From her prophetic shades and hallow'd streams,
(Thou well canst witness) meet the purged ear:
Such, as when Greece to her immortal shell
Rejoicing listen'd, godlike sounds to hear;
'To hear the sweet instructress tell
(While men and heroes throng'd around)
How life its noblest use may find,
How well for freedom be resign'd;
And how, by Glory, Virtue shall be crown'd.

II.

Such was the Chian father's strain
To many a kind domestic train,
Whose pious hearth and genial bowl
Had cheer'd the reverend pilgrim's soul:
When, every hospitable rite
With equal bounty to requite,
He struck his magic strings;
And pour'd spontaneous numbers forth,
And seiz'd their ears with tales of ancient worth,
And fill'd their musing hearts with vast heroic things.

Now oft, where happy spirits dwell,
Where yet he tunes his charming shell,
Oft near him, with applauding hands,
The Genius of his country stands.

To listening gods he makes him known,
That man divine, by whom were sown
The seeds of Grecian fame:
Who first the race with freedom fir'd;
From whom Lycurgus Sparta's sons inspir'd;
From whom Platæan palms and Cyprian trophies came.

O noblest, happiest age!
When Aristides rul'd, and Cimon fought;
When all the generous fruits of Homer's page
Exulting Pindar saw to full perfection brought.
O Pindar, oft shalt thou be hail'd of me:
Not that Apollo fed thee from his shrine;
Not that thy lips drank sweetness from the bee;
Nor yet that, studious of thy notes divine,
Pan danc'd their measure with the sylvan throng:
But that thy song
Was proud to unfold
What thy base rulers trembled to behold;
Amid corrupted Thebes was proud to tell
The deeds of Athens and the Persian shame:
Hence on thy head their impious vengeance fell.
But thou, O faithful to thy fame,
The Muse's law didst rightly know;
That who would animate his lays,
And other minds to virtue raise,
Must feel his own with all her spirit glow.

III.

Are there, approv'd of later times,
Whose verse adorn'd a tyrant's crimes?
Who saw majestic Rome betray'd,
And lent the imperial ruffian aid?
Alas! not one polluted bard,
No, not the strains that Mincius heard,
Or Tibur's hills reply'd,
Dare to the Muse's ear aspire;
Save that, instructed by the Grecian lyre,
With Freedom's ancient notes their shameful task
they hide.

Mark, how the dread Pantheon stands,
Amid the domes of modern hands:
Amid the toys of idle state,
How simply, how severely great!
Then turn, and, while each western clime
Presents her tuneful sons to Time,
So mark thou Milton's name;
And add, "Thus differs from the throng
The spirit which inform'd thy awful song,
Which bade thy potent voice protect thy country's fame."

Yet hence barbaric Zeal
His memory with unholy rage pursues;
While from these arduous cares of public weal
She bids each bard begone, and rest him with his Muse.
O fool! to think the man, whose ample mind
Must grasp at all that yonder stars survey;
Must join the noblest forms of every kind,
The world's most perfect image to display,
Can e'er his country's majesty behold,
Unmov'd or cold!
O fool! to deem
That he, whose thought must visit every theme,

* Octavianus Cæsar.

Whose heart must every strong emotion know
 Inspir'd by Nature, or by Fortune taught;
 That he, if haply some presumptuous foe,
 With false ignoble science fraught,
 Shall spurn at Freedom's faithful hand;
 That he their dear defence will shun,
 Or hide their glories from the Sun,
 Or deal their vengeance with a woman's hand!

IV.

I care not that in Arno's plain,
 Or on the sportive banks of Seine,
 From public themes the Muse's quire
 Content with polish'd ease retire.
 Where priests the studious head command,
 Where tyrants bow the warlike hand
 To vile Ambition's aim,
 Say, what can public themes afford,
 Save venal honours to an hateful lord, [Fame?
 Reserv'd for angry Heaven, and scorn'd of honest

But here, where Freedom's equal throne
 To all her valiant sons is known;
 Where all are conscious of her cares,
 And each the power, that rules him, shares;
 Here let the Bard, whose dastard tongue
 Leaves public arguments unsung,
 Bid public praise farewell:
 Let him to fitter climes remove,
 Far from the hero's and the patriot's love,
 And lull mysterious monks to slumber in their cell.

O Hastings, not to all
 Can ruling Heaven the same endowments lend:
 Yet still doth Nature to her offspring call,
 That to one general weal their different powers
 they bend,
 Unenvious. Thus alone, though strains divine
 Inform the bosom of the Muse's son;
 Though with new honours the patrician's line
 Advance from age to age; yet thus alone
 They win the suffrage of impartial Fame.
 The poet's name
 He best shall prove,
 Whose lays the soul with noblest passions move.
 But thee, O progeny of heroes old,
 Thee to severer toils thy fate requires:
 The fate which form'd thee in a chosen mould,
 The grateful country of thy sires,
 Thee to sublimer paths demand;
 Sublimer than thy sires could trace,
 Or thy own Edward teach his race,
 Though Gaul's proud genius sank beneath his hand.

V.

From rich domains and subject farms,
 They led the rustic youth to arms;
 And kings their stern achievements fear'd;
 While private Strife their banners rear'd.
 But loftier scenes to thee are shown,
 Where Empire's wide-establish'd throne
 No private master fills:
 Where, long foretold, the people reigns:
 Where each a vassal's humble heart disdains;
 And judgeth what he sees; and, as he judgeth, wills.
 Here be it thine to calm and guide
 The swelling democratic tide;

To watch the state's uncertain frame,
 And baffle Faction's partial aim:
 But chiefly, with determin'd zeal,
 To quell that servile band, who kneel
 To Freedom's banish'd foes;
 That monster, which is daily found
 Expert and bold thy country's peace to wound;
 Yet dreads to handle arms, nor manly counsel knows.

'T is highest Heaven's command,
 That guilty aims should sordid paths pursue;
 That what enervates the heart should maim the
 hand,
 And Virtue's worthless foes be false to Glory too.
 But look on Freedom. See, through every age,
 What labours, perils, griefs, hath she disdain'd!
 What arms, what regal pride, what priestly rage,
 Have her dread offspring conquer'd or sustain'd!
 For Albion well have conquer'd. Let the strains
 Of happy swains,
 Which now resound [bound,
 Where Scarsdale's cliffs the swelling pastures
 Bear witness. There, oft let the farmer hail
 The sacred orchard which imbowers his gate,
 And show to strangers passing down the vale,
 Where Ca'ndish, Booth, and Osborne sate;
 When, bursting from their country's chain,
 Even in the midst of deadly harms,
 Of papal snares and lawless arms,
 They plann'd for Freedom this her noblest reign.

VI.

This reign, these laws, this public care,
 Which Nassau gave us all to share,
 Had ne'er adorn'd the English name,
 Could Fear have silenc'd Freedom's claim.
 But Fear in vain attempts to bind
 Those lofty efforts of the mind
 Which social Good inspires;
 Where men, for this, assault a throne,
 Each adds the common welfare to his own;
 And each unconquer'd heart the strength of all acquires.

Say, was it thus, when late we view'd
 Our fields in civil blood imbrued?
 When Fortune crown'd the barbarous host,
 And half the astonish'd isle was lost?
 Did one of all that vaunting train,
 Who dare affront a peaceful reign,
 Durst one in arms appear?
 Durst one in counsels pledge his life?
 Stake his luxurious fortunes in the strife?
 Or lend his boasted name his vagrant friends to cheer?

Yet, Hastings, these are they
 Who challenge to themselves thy country's love;
 The true; the constant: who alone can weigh,
 What Glory should demand, or Liberty approve!
 But let their works declare them. Thy free powers,
 The generous powers of thy prevailing mind,
 Not for the tasks of their confederate hours,
 Lewd brawls and lurking slander, were design'd.
 Be thou thy own approver. Honest praise
 Oft nobly sways
 Ingenuous youth:
 But, sought from cowards and the lying mouth,
 T t 4

Praise is reproach. Eternal God alone
 For mortals fixeth that sublime award.
 He, from the faithful records of his throne,
 Bids the historian and the bard
 Dispose of honour and of scorn ;
 Discern the patriot from the slave ;
 And write the good, the wise, the brave
 For lessons to the multitude unborn.

HYMN TO THE NAIADS.

1746.

Argument.

The nymphs, who preside over springs and rivulets, are addressed at day-break, in honour of their several functions, and of the relations which they bear to the natural and to the moral world. Their origin is deduced from the first allegorical deities, or powers of Nature ; according to the doctrine of the old mythological poets, concerning the generation of the gods and the rise of things. They are then successively considered, as giving motion to the air and exciting summer-breezes ; as nourishing and beautifying the vegetable creation ; as contributing to the fullness of navigable rivers, and consequently to the maintenance of commerce ; and by that means, to the maritime part of military power. Next is represented their favourable influence upon health, when assisted by rural exercise : which introduces their connection with the art of physic, and the happy effects of mineral medicinal springs. Lastly, they are celebrated for the friendship which the Muses bear them, and for the true inspiration which temperance only can receive : in opposition to the enthusiasm of the more licentious poets.

O'er yonder eastern hill the twilight pale
 Walks forth from darkness ; and the god of day,
 With bright Astræa seated by his side,
 Waits yet to leave the ocean. Tarry, Nymphs,
 Ye Nymphs, ye blue-ey'd progeny of Thames,
 Who now the fumes of this rugged heath
 Trace with your fleeting steps ; who all night long
 Repeat, amid the cool and tranquil air,
 Your lonely murmurs, tarry : and receive
 My offer'd lay. To pay you homage due,
 I leave the gates of Sleep ; nor shall my lyre
 Too far into the splendid hours of morn
 Engage your audience : my observant hand
 Shall close the strain ere any sultry beam
 Approach you. To your subterranean haunts
 Ye then may timely steal ; to pace with care
 The humid sands ; to loosen from the soil
 The bubbling sources ; to direct the rills
 To meet in wider channels ; or beneath
 Some grotto's dripping arch, at height of noon
 To slumber, shelter'd from the burning heaven.

Where shall my song begin, ye Nymphs ? or end ?
 Wide is your praise and copious — First of things,
 First of the lonely powers, ere Time arose,
 Were Love and Chaos. Love the sire of Fate ;
 Elder than Chaos. Born of Fate was Time,
 Who many sons and many comely births
 Devour'd, relentless father : till the child
 Of Rhea drove him from the upper sky,
 And quell'd his deadly might. Then social reign'd

The kindred powers, Tethys, and reverend Ops,
 And spotless Vesta ; while supreme of sway
 Remain'd the cloud-compeller. From the couch
 Of Tethys sprang the sedgy-crowned race,
 Who from a thousand urns, o'er every clime,
 Send tribute to their parent : and from them
 Are ye, O Naiads : Arethusa fair,
 And tuneful Aganippe ; that sweet name,
 Bandusia ; that soft family which dwelt
 With Syrian Daphne ; and the honour'd tribes
 Belov'd of Pæon. Listen to my strain,
 Daughters of Tethys : listen to your praise.

You, Nymphs, the winged offspring, which of old
 Aurora to divine Astræus bore,
 Owns ; and your aid beseecheth. When the night
 Of Hyperion, from his noontide throne,
 Unbends their languid pinions, aid from you
 They ask : Favonius and the mild South-west
 From you relief implore. Your sallying streams
 Fresh vigour to their weary wings impart.
 Again they fly, disporting ; from the mead
 Half ripen'd and the tender blades of corn,
 To sweep the noxious mildew ; or dispel
 Contagious streams, which oft the parched Earth
 Breathes on her fainting sons. From noon to eve,
 Along the river and the paved brook,
 Ascend the cheerful breezes : hail'd of bards
 Who, fast by learned Cam, the Æolian lyre
 Solicit ; nor unwelcome to the youth
 Who on the heights of Tibur, all inclin'd
 O'er rushing Anio, with a pious hand
 The reverend scene delineates, broken fanes,
 Or tombs, or pillar'd aqueducts, the pomp
 Of ancient Time ; and haply, while he scans
 The ruins, with a silent tear revolves
 The fame and fortune of imperious Rome.

You too, O Nymphs, and your unenvious aid
 The rural powers confess ; and still prepare
 For you their choicest treasures. Pan commands,
 Oft as the Delian king with Sirius holds
 The central heavens, the father of the grove
 Commands his Dryads over your abodes
 To spread their deepest umbrage. Well the god
 Remembereth how indulgent ye supplied
 Your genial dew to nurse them in their prime.

Pales, the pasture's queen, where'er ye stray,
 Pursues your steps, delighted ; and the path
 With living verdure clothes. Around your haunts
 The laughing Chloris, with profusest hand,
 Throws wide her blooms, her odours. Still with you
 Pomona seeks to dwell : and o'er the lawns,
 And o'er the vale of Richmond, where with Thames
 Ye love to wander, Amalthea pours
 Well-pleas'd the wealth of that Ammonian horn,
 Her dower ; unmindful of the fragrant isles
 Nysean or Atlantic. Nor canst thou,
 (Albeit oft, ungrateful, thou dost mock
 The beverage of the sober Naiad's urn,
 O Bromius, O Lenæan) nor canst thou
 Disown the powers whose bounty, ill repaid,
 With nectar feeds thy tendrils. Yet from me,
 Yet, blameless Nymphs, from my delighted lyre,
 Accept the rites your bounty well may claim,
 Nor heed the scoffings of the Edonian band.
 For better praise awaits you. Thames, your sire,
 As down the verdant slope your duteous rills
 Descend, the tribute stately Thames receives,
 Delighted ; and your pious applauds ;
 And his capacious tide roll on secure,
 His daughters ; and with words

Inauspicious gratulates the bark which, now
 His banks forsaking, her adventurous wings
 Fields to the breeze, with Albion's happy gifts
 Extremest isles to bless. And oft at morn,
 When Hermes, from Olympus bent o'er Earth
 To bear the words of Jove, on yonder hill
 Scoops lightly-sailing; oft intent your springs
 He views: and waving o'er some new-born stream
 His blest pacific wand, "And yet," he cries,
 "Yet," cries the son of Maia, "though recluse
 And silent be your stores, from you, fair Nymphs,
 Flows wealth and kind society to men.
 By you, my function and my honour'd name
 Do I possess; while o'er the Boetic vale,
 Or through the towers of Memphis, or the palms
 By sacred Ganges water'd, I conduct
 The English merchant: with the buxom fleece
 Of fertile Ariconium while I clothe
 Armenian kings; or to the household gods
 Of Syria, from the bleak Cornubian shore,
 Dispense the mineral treasure which of old
 Sidonian pilots sought, when this fair land
 Was yet unconscious of those generous arts
 Which wise Phœnicia from their native clime
 Transplanted to a more indulgent Heaven."

Such are the words of Hermes: such the praise,
 O Naiads, which from tongues celestial waits
 Your bounteous deeds. From bounty issueth power:
 And those who, sedulous in prudent works,
 Believe the wants of nature, Jove repays
 With noble wealth, and his own seat on Earth,
 'Tis judgments to pronounce, and curb the might
 Of wicked men. Your kind unfailing urns
 Not vainly to the hospitable arts
 Of Hermes yield their store. For, O ye Nymphs,
 Hath he not won the unconquerable queen
 Of arms to court your friendship? You she owns
 The fair associates who extend her sway
 Wide o'er the mighty deep; and grateful things
 Of you she uttereth, oft as from the shore
 Of Thames, or Medway's vale, or the green banks
 Of Vecta, she her thundering navy leads
 To Calpe's foaming channel, or the rough
 Cantabrian surge; her auspices divine
 Imparting to the senate and the prince
 Of Albion, to dismay barbaric kings,
 The Iberian, or the Celt. The pride of kings
 Was ever scorn'd by Pallas: and of old
 Rejoic'd the virgin, from the brazen prow
 Of Athens o'er Ægina's gloomy surge,
 To drive her clouds and storms; o'erwhelming all
 The Persian's promis'd glory, when the realms
 Of Indus and the soft Ionian clime,
 When Libya's torrid champain and the rocks
 Of cold Imaüs join'd their servile bands,
 To sweep the sons of Liberty from Earth.
 In vain: Minerva on the bounding prow
 Of Athens stood, and with the thunder's voice
 Denounc'd her terrors on their impious heads,
 And shook her burning ægis. Xerxes saw:
 From Heracléum, on the mountain's height
 Thron'd in his golden car, he knew the sign
 Celestial; felt unrighteous hope forsake
 His faltering heart, and turn'd his face with shame.

Hail, ye who share the stern Minerva's power;
 Who arm the hand of Liberty for war:
 And give to the renown'd Britannic name
 To awe contending monarchs: yet benign,
 Yet mild of nature; to the works of peace
 More prone, and lenient of the many ills

Which wait on human life. Your gentle aid
 Hygeia well can witness; she who saves
 From poisonous cates and cups of pleasing bane,
 The wretch devoted to the entangling snares
 Of Bacchus and of Comus. Him she leads
 To Cynthia's lonely haunts. To spread the toils,
 To beat the coverts, with the jovial horn
 At dawn of day to summon the loud hounds,
 She calls the lingering sluggard from his dreams:
 And where his breast may drink the mountain breeze,
 And where the fervour of the sunny vale
 May beat upon his brow, through devious paths
 Beckons his rapid courser. Nor when ease,
 Cool ease and welcome slumbers have becalm'd
 His eager bosom, does the queen of health
 Her pleasing care withhold. His decent board
 She guards, presiding; and the frugal powers
 With joy sedate leads in: and while the brown
 Ennean dame with Pan presents her stores;
 While changing still, and comely in the change,
 Vertumnus and the Hours before him spread
 The garden's banquet; you to crown his feast,
 To crown his feast, O Naiads, you the fair
 Hygeia calls: and from your shelving seats,
 And groves of poplar, plenteous cups ye bring,
 To slake his veins: till soon a purer tide
 Flows down those loaded channels; washeth off
 The dregs of luxury, the lurking seeds
 Of crude disease; and through the abodes of life
 Sends vigour, sends repose. Hail, Naiads: hail,
 Who give, to labour, health; to stooping age,
 The joys which youth had squander'd. Oft your urns

Will I invoke; and, frequent in your praise,
 Abash the frantic Thyrsus with my song.

For not estrang'd from your benignant arts
 Is he, the god, to whose mysterious shrine
 My youth was sacred, and my votive cares
 Belong; the learned Pæon. Oft when all
 His cordial treasures he hath search'd in vain;
 When herbs, and potent trees, and drops of balm
 Rich with the genial influence of the Sun,
 (To rouse dark Fancy from her plaintive dreams,
 To brace the nerveless arm, with food to win
 Sick appetite, or hush the unquiet breast
 Which pines with silent passion,) he in vain
 Hath prov'd; to your deep mansions he descends,
 Your gates of humid rock, your dim arcades,
 He entereth; where empurpled veins of ore
 Gleam on the roof; where through the rigid mine
 Your trickling rills insinuate. There the god
 From your indulgent hands the streaming bowl
 Wafts to his pale-ey'd suppliants; wafts the seeds
 Metallic, and the elemental salts [soon
 Wash'd from the pregnant glebe. They drink: and Flies pain; flies inauspicious care: and soon
 The social haunt or unfrequented shade
 Hears Io, Io Pæan; as of old,
 When Python fell. And, O propitious Nymphs,
 Oft as for helpless mortals I implore
 Your salutary springs, through every urn
 Oh shed your healing treasures. With the first
 And finest breath, which from the genial strife
 Of mineral fermentation springs like light
 O'er the fresh morning's vapours, lustrate then
 The fountain, and inform the rising wave.
 My lyre shall pay your bounty. Scorn not ye
 That humble tribute. Though a mortal hand
 Excite the strings to utterance, yet for themes
 Not unregarded of celestial powers,

I frame their language ; and the Muses deign
To guide the pious tenour of my lay.
The Muses (sacred by their gifts divine)
In early days did to my wondering sense
Their secrets oft reveal : oft my rais'd ear
In slumber felt their music : oft at noon,
Or hour of sunset, by some lonely stream,
In field or shady grove, they taught me words
Of power, from death and envy to preserve
The good man's name. Whence yet with grateful mind,

And offerings unprofan'd by ruder eye,
My vows I send, my homage, to the seats
Of rocky Cirrha, where with you they dwell :
Where you their chaste companions they admit
Through all the hallow'd scene : where oft intent,
And leaning o'er Castalia's mossy verge,
They mark the cadence of your confluent urns,
How tuneful, yielding gratefulest repose
To their consorted measure : till again,
With emulation all the sounding choir,
And bright Apollo, leader of the song,
Their voices through the liquid air exalt,
And sweep their lofty strings : those powerful strings
That charm the mind of gods : that fill the courts
Of wide Olympus with oblivion sweet
Of evils, with immortal rest from cares :
Assuage the terrors of the throne of Jove ;
And quench the formidable thunderbolt
Of unrelenting fire. With slacken'd wings,
While now the solemn concert breathes around,
Incumbent o'er the sceptre of his lord
Sleeps the stern eagle ; by the number'd notes,
Possess'd ; and satiate with the melting tone :
Sovereign of birds. The furious god of war,
His darts forgetting, and the winged wheels
That bear him vengeful o'er the embattled plain,
Relents, and soothes his own fierce heart to ease,
Most welcome ease. The sire of gods and men,
In that great moment of divine delight,
Looks down on all that live ; and whatsoe'er
He loves not, o'er the peopled earth, and o'er
The interminated ocean, he beholds
Curs'd with abhorrence by his doom severe,
And troubled at the sound. Ye Naiads, ye
With ravish'd ears the melody attend
Worthy of sacred silence. But the slaves
Of Bacchus with tempestuous clamours strive
To drown the heavenly strains ; of highest Jove
Irreverent, and by mad presumption fir'd
Their own discordant raptures to advance
With hostile emulation. Down they rush
From Nysa's vine-empurpled cliff, the dames
Of Thrace, the Satyrs, and the unruly Fauns,
With old Silenus, reeling through the crowd
Which gambols round him, in convulsions wild
Tossing their limbs, and brandishing in air
The ivy-mantled thyrsus, or the torch
Through black smoke flaming, to the Phrygian pipe's
Shrill voice, and to the clashing cymbals, mix'd
With shrieks and frantic uproar. May the gods
From every unpolluted ear avert
Their orgies ! If within the seats of men,
Within the walls, the gates, where Pallas holds
The guardian key, if haply there be found
Who loves to mingle with the revel-band
And hearken to their accents ; who aspires
From such instructors to inform his breast
With verse ; let him, fit votarist, implore
Their inspiration. He perchance the gifts

Of young Lyæus, and the dread exploits,
May sing in aptest numbers : he the fate
Of sober Pentheus, he the Paphian rites,
And naked Mars with Cytherea chain'd,
And strong Alcides in the spinster's robes,
May celebrate, applauded. But with you,
O Naiads, far from that unhallo'd rout,
Must dwell the man whoe'er to praised themes
Invokes the immortal Muse. The immortal Muse
To your calm habitations, to the cave
Corycian, or the Delphic mount, will guide
His footsteps ; and with your unsullied streams
His lips will bathe : whether the eternal lore
Of Themis, or the majesty of Jove,
To mortals he reveal ; or teach his lyre
The unenvied guerdon of the patriot's toils,
In those unfading islands of the bless'd,
Where sacred bards abide. Hail, honour'd Nymphs ;
Thrice hail. For you the Cyrenaic shell
Behold, I touch, revering. To my songs
Be present ye with favourable feet,
And all profaner audience far remove.

ODE

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND BENJAMIN, LORD BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

I.

For toils which patriots have endur'd,
For treason quell'd and laws secur'd,
In every nation Time displays
The palm of honourable praise.
Envy may rail ; and Faction fierce
May strive ; but what, alas ! can those (Though bold, yet blind and sordid foes)
To gratitude and love oppose,
To faithful story and persuasive verse !

O nurse of Freedom, Albion, say,
Thou tamer of despotic sway,
What man, among thy sons around,
Thus heir to glory hast thou found ?
What page in all thy annals bright,
Hast thou with purer joy survey'd
Than that where Truth, by Hoadly's aid,
Shines through Imposture's solemn shade,
Through kingly and through sacerdotal night ?

To him the Teacher bless'd,
Who sent Religion, from the palmy field
By Jordan, like the morn to cheer the west,
And lifted up the veil which Heaven from Earth
conceal'd,

To Hoadly thus his mandate he address'd :
" Go thou, and rescue my dishonour'd law
From hands rapacious, and from tongues impure.
Let not my peaceful name be made a lure
Fell Persecution's mortal snares to aid :
Let not my words be impious chains to draw
The freeborn soul in more than brutal awe,
To faith without assent, allegiance unrepaid."

II.

No cold or unperforming hand
 Was arm'd by Heaven with this command.
 The world soon felt it : and, on high,
 To William's ear with welcome joy
 Did Locke among the blest unfold
 The rising hope of Hoadly's name,
 Godolphin then confirm'd the fame ;
 And Somers, when from Earth he came,
 And generous Stanhope the fair sequel told.

Then drew the lawgivers around,
 (Sires of the Grecian name renown'd,)
 And listening ask'd, and wondering knew,
 What private force could thus subdue
 The vulgar and the great combin'd ;
 Could war with sacred Folly wage ;
 Could a whole nation disengage
 From the dread bonds of many an age,
 And to new habits mould the public mind.

For not a conqueror's sword,
 Nor the strong powers to civil founders known,
 Were his : but truth by faithful search explor'd,
 And social sense, like seed, in genial plenty sown.
 Wherever it took root, the soul (restor'd
 To freedom) freedom too for others sought.
 Not monkish craft, the tyrant's claim divine,
 Not regal zeal, the bigot's cruel shrine,
 Could longer guard from reason's warfare sage ;
 Not the wild rabble to sedition wrought,
 Nor synods by the papal genius taught,
 Nor St. John's spirit loose, nor Atterbury's rage.

III.

But where shall recompense be found ?
 Or how such arduous merit crown'd ?
 For look on life's laborious scene ;
 What rugged spaces lie between
 Adventurous Virtue's early toils
 And her triumphal throne ! The shade
 Of Death, meantime, does oft invade
 Her progress ; nor, to us display'd,
 Wears the bright heroine her expected spoils.

Yet born to conquer is her power :
 — O Hoadly, if that favourite hour
 On Earth arrive, with thankful awe
 We own just Heaven's indulgent law.
 And proudly thy success behold ;
 We attend thy reverend length of days
 With benediction and with praise,
 And hail thee in our public ways
 Like some great spirit fam'd in ages old.

While thus our vows prolong
 Thy steps on Earth, and when by us resign'd
 Thou join'st thy seniors, that heroic throng
 Who rescued or preserv'd the rights of human kind,
 O ! not unworthy may thy Albion's tongue
 Thee still, her friend and benefactor, name :
 O ! never, Hoadly, in thy country's eyes,
 May impious gold, or pleasure's gaudy prize,
 Make public virtue, public freedom, vile ;
 Nor our own manners tempt us to disclaim
 That heritage, our noblest wealth and fame,
 Which thou hast kept entire from force and factious
 guile.

THOMAS GRAY.

THOMAS GRAY, a distinguished poet, was the son of a money-scrivener in London, where he was born in 1716. He received his education at Eton-school, whence he was sent to the university of Cambridge, and entered as a pensioner at St. Peter's College. He left Cambridge in 1738, and occupied a set of chambers in the Inner Temple, for the purpose of studying the law. From this intention he was diverted by an invitation to accompany Mr. Horace Walpole, son of the celebrated statesman, with whom he had made a connection at Eton, in a tour through Europe. Some disagreement, of which Mr. Walpole generously took the blame, caused them to separate in Italy; and Gray returned to England in September, 1741, two months before his father's death. Gray, who now depended chiefly upon his mother and aunt, left the law, and returned to his retirement at Cambridge. In the next year he had the misfortune to lose his dear friend West, also an Eton scholar, and son to the Chancellor of Ireland, which left a vacancy in his affections, that seems never to have been supplied. From this time his residence was chiefly at Cambridge, to which he was probably attached by an insatiable love of books, which he was unable to gratify from his own stores. Some years passed in this favourite indulgence, in which his exquisite learning and poetic talents were only known to a few friends; and it was not till 1747, that his "Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College" made its appearance before the public. It was in 1751 that his celebrated "Elegy written in a Country Church-yard," chiefly composed some years before, and even now sent into the world without the author's name, made its way to the press. Few poems were ever so popular: it soon ran through eleven editions; was translated into Latin verse, and has ever since borne the marks of being one of the most favourite productions of the British Muse.

In the manners of Gray there was a degree of effeminacy and fastidiousness which exposed him to the character of a fribble; and a few riotous young men of fortune in his college thought proper to make him a subject for their boisterous tricks. He made remonstrances to the heads of the society upon this usage, which being treated, as he thought, without due attention, he removed in 1756 to Pembroke-hall. In the next year, the office of poet-laureat, vacant by the death of Cibber, was offered to Gray, but declined by him. In the same year he published two odes, "On the Progress of Poesy," and "The Bard," which were not so popular as his Elegy had been, chiefly, perhaps, because they were less understood. The uniform life passed by this eminent person admits of few details, but the transaction respecting the professorship of modern history at Cambridge, a place worth four hundred pounds a year, is worthy of some notice. When the situation became vacant in Lord Bute's administration, it was modestly asked for by Gray, but had already been bespoken by another. On a second vacancy in 1768, the Duke of Grafton being now in power, it was, "unsolicited and unsuspected," conferred upon him; in return for which he wrote his "Ode for Music," for the installation of that nobleman as chancellor of the university. This professorship, though founded in 1724, had hitherto remained a perfect sinecure; but Gray prepared himself to execute the duties of his office. Such, however, were the baneful effects of habitual indolence, that, with a mind replete with ancient and modern knowledge, he found himself unable to proceed further than to draw a plan for his inauguration speech. But his health was now declining; an irregular hereditary gout made more frequent attacks than formerly; and at length, while he was dining in the College-hall, he was seized with a complaint in the stomach, which carried him off on July 30. 1771, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. His remains were deposited, with those of his mother and aunt, in the church-yard of Stoke-Pogis, Buckinghamshire.

It is exclusively as a poet that we record the name of Gray; and it will, perhaps, be thought that we borrow too large a share from a single small volume; yet this should be considered as indicative of the high rank which he has attained, compared with the number of his compositions. With respect to his character as a man of learning, since his acquisitions were entirely for his own use, and produced no fruits for the public, it has no claim to particular notice. For though he has been called by one of his admirers "perhaps the most learned man in Europe," never was learning more thrown away. A few pieces of Latin poetry are all that he has to produce.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY.

.....Ζῆνα
 Τὸν φρονὶν βροτῶν ἰδαι-
 σατα, τῷ πᾶσι παλῶν
 Θίστα σὺν ἰχθυῖν.
 Æschylus, in Agamemnone.

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless power,
 Thou tamer of the human breast,
 Whose iron scourge, and torturing hour,
 The bad affright, afflict the best !
 Bound in thy adamant chain
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied, and alone.

When first thy sire to send on Earth
 Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
 To thee he gave the heavenly birth,
 And bade to form her infant mind.
 Stern rugged nurse ; thy rigid lore
 With patience many a year she bore ;
 What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
 And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
 Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
 Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy, .
 And leave us leisure to be good.
 Light they disperse, and with them go
 The summer friend, the flattering foe ;
 By vain Prosperity receiv'd,
 To her they vow their truth, and are again believ'd.

Wisdom, in sable garb array'd,
 Immers'd in rapturous thought profound,
 And Melancholy, silent maid,
 With leaden eye, that loves the ground,
 Still on thy solemn steps attend :
 Warm Charity, the general friend,
 With Justice, to herself severe,
 And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh, gently on thy suppliant's head,
 Dread goddess, lay thy chastening hand !
 Not in thy gorgon terrors clad,
 Nor circled with the vengeful band,
 As by the impious thou art seen,)
 With thundering voice, and threatening mien,
 With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
 Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty.

Thy form benign, oh, goddess ! wear,
 Thy milder influence impart,
 Thy philosophic train be there,
 To soften, not to wound, my heart.
 The generous spark extinct revive,
 Teach me to love and to forgive,
 Exact my own defects to scan,
 What others are, to feel, and know myself a man.

ELEGY

WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
 The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea,
 The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
 And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
 And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
 Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
 And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds :

Save that, from yonder ivy-mantled tower,
 The moping owl does to the Moon complain
 Of such as, wandering near her secret bower,
 Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
 Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
 Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
 The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
 The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
 The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
 No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
 Or busy housewife ply her evening care :
 No children run to lisp their sire's return,
 Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
 Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke ;
 How jocund did they drive their team a-field !
 How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke !

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
 Their homely joys, and destiny obscure ;
 Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
 The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
 And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
 Await alike th' inevitable hour,
 The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
 If Memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
 Where through the long drawn aisle and fretted vault,
 The peeling anthem swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust
 Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath ?
 Can Honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
 Or Flattery soothe the dull cold ear of Death ?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire ;
 Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
 Or wak'd to ecstasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
 Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll ;
 Chill Penury repress'd their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear :
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden, that with dauntless breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood ;
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of listening senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their history in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbad : nor circumscrib'd alone
Their growing virtues, but their crimes confin'd ;
Forbad to wade through slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
'Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray ;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenour of their way.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect,
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture
deck'd,
Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd Muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply :
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb Forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing, lingering look behind ?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires ;
Ev'n from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,
Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who, mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate ;
If chance, by lonely Contemplation led,
Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
" Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away
To meet the Sun upon the upland lawn.

" There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that bubbles by.

" Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies he would rove,
Now drooping woeful wan, like one forlorn,
Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless love.

" One morn I miss'd him on the 'custom'd hill,
Along the heath and near his favourite tree ;
Another came ; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he :

" The next with dirges due in sad array [borne.
Slow through the church-way path we saw him
Approach and read (for thou canst read) the lay.
Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH.

HERE rests his head upon the lap of Earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown,
Fair Science frown'd not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heaven did a recompence as largely send :
He gave to Misery all he had, a tear ; [friend.
He gain'd from Heaven ('t was all he wish'd) a

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose,)
The bosom of his Father and his God.

THE PROGRESS OF POESY.

A PINDARIC ODE.

Φανῶντα συνίσις ἱς
Δι τὸ πᾶν ἱμνῶν χαμῶν
Pindar. Olym. ii.

I.

AWAKE, Æolian lyre, awake,
And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their many progress take ;
The laughing flowers that round them blow,
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along,
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Through verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign :
Now rolling down the steep amain,
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour :
The rocks, and nodding groves, rebellow to the roar.

Oh ! sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell ! the sullen cares,
And frantic passions, bear thy soft control :
On Thracia's hills the lord of war
Has curb'd the fury of his car,
And dropp'd his thirsty lance at thy command :
Perching on the scepter'd hand
Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
With ruffled plumes, and flagging wing :
Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightning of his eye.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey,
Temper'd to thy warbled lay,
O'er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crowned Loves are seen,
On Cytherea's day,

With antic sports and blue-ey'd pleasures,
 Frisking light in frolic measures ;
 Now pursuing, now retreating,
 Now in circling troops they meet :
 To brisk notes in cadence beating
 Plance their many-twinkling feet.
 Slow-melting strains their queen's approach declare :
 Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay,
 With arts sublime, that float upon the air,
 In gliding state she wins her easy way :
 O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move
 The bloom of young Desire, and purple light of Love.

II.

Man's feeble race what ills await,
 Labour and Penury, the racks of Pain,
 Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,

And Death, sad refuge from the storms of Fate !
 The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
 And justify the laws of Jove.

Day, has he given in vain the heavenly Muse ?
 Night, and all her sickly dews,
 Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry,
 He gives to range the dreary sky :
 Till down the eastern cliffs afar [war.
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glittering shafts of

In climes beyond the solar road,
 Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
 The Muse has broke the twilight gloom

To cheer the shivering native's dull abode.
 And oft, beneath the odorous shade
 Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
 She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat,
 In loose numbers wildly sweet,
 Their feather-cinctur'd chiefs, and dusky loves
 Her track, where'er the goddess roves,
 Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
 Th' unconquerable mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
 Isles, that crown th' Ægean deep,
 Fields, that cool Ilissus laves,
 Or where Mæander's amber waves
 In lingering labyrinths creep,
 How do your tuneful Echoes languish
 Mute, but to the voice of Anguish ?
 Where each old poetic mountain

Inspiration breath'd around :
 Every shade and hallow'd fountain

Murmur'd deep a solemn sound :
 Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour,
 Left their Parnassus, for the Latian plains.
 Like they scorn the pomp of tyrant-power,
 And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.
 When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
 They sought, oh Albion ! next thy sea-encircled coast.

III.

Far from the Sun and summer-gale,
 In thy green lap was Nature's darling * laid,
 What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
 To him the mighty mother did unveil
 Her awful face : the dauntless child
 Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smil'd.
 " This pencil take," she said, " whose colours clear
 Richly paint the vernal year :

* Shakspeare.

Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy !
 This can unlock the gates of Joy ;
 Of Horror that, and thrilling fears,
 Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

Nor second he †, that rode sublime
 Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy,
 The secrets of th' abyss to spy.
 He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and time :
 The living throne, the sapphire-blaze,
 Where angels tremble, while they gaze,
 He saw ; but, blasted with excess of light,
 Clos'd his eyes in endless night.
 Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car,
 Wide o'er the fields of Glory bear
 Two coursers of ethereal race ‡, [ing pace.
 With necks in thunder cloth'd, and long-resound-

Hark, his hands the lyre explore !
 Bright-ey'd Fancy, hovering o'er,
 Scatters from her pictur'd urn
 Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
 But ah ! 't is heard no more —
 Oh ! lyre divine, what daring spirit
 Wakes thee now ? though he inherit
 Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
 That the Theban eagle bear,
 Sailing with supreme dominion
 Through the azure deep of air :
 Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
 Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray
 With orient hues, unborrow'd of the Sun :
 Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way
 Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate,
 Beneath the good how far — but far above the great.

ODE ON THE SPRING.

Lo ! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
 Fair Venus' train appear,
 Disclose the long-expecting flowers,
 And wake the purple year !
 The attic warbler pours her throat,
 Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
 The untaught harmony of Spring :
 While, whispering pleasure as they fly,
 Cool Zephyrs through the clear blue sky
 Their gather'd fragrance fling.

Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
 A broader, browner shade ;
 Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
 O'er-canopies the glade,
 Beside some water's rushy brink
 With me the Muse shall sit, and think
 (At ease reclin'd in rustic state)
 How vain the ardour of the crowd,
 How low, how little are the proud,
 How indigent the great !

Still is the toiling hand of Care :
 The panting herds repose :
 Yet hark, how through the peopled air
 The busy murmur glows !

† Milton.

‡ Meant to express the stately march and sounding energy of Dryden's rhymes.

The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the bonied spring,
And float amid the liquid noon :
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some show their gayly-gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the Sun.

To Contemplation's sober eye
Such is the race of man :
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.
Alike the busy and the gay
But flutter through life's little day,
In Fortune's varying colours drest :
Brush'd by the hand of rough Mischance ;
Or chill'd by Age, their airy dance
They leave in dust to rest.

Methinks I hear in accents low
The sportive kind reply ;
" Poor moralist ! and what art thou ?
A solitary fly !
Thy joys no glittering female meets,
No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
No painted plumage to display :
On hasty wings thy youth is flown :
'Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone —
We frolic while 't is May."

ODE FOR MUSIC.

PERFORMED IN THE SENATE-HOUSE AT CAMBRIDGE,
JULY 1. 1769, AT THE INSTALLATION OF HIS GRACE AUGUSTUS-HENRY-FITZROY, DUKE OF GRAFTON, CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY.

" HENCE, avaunt, ('t is holy ground,)
Comus and his midnight-crew,
And Ignorance with looks profound,
And dreaming Sloth of pallid hue,
Mad Sedition's cry profane,
Servitude that hugs her chain,
Nor in these consecrated bowers
Let painted Flattery hide her serpent-train in flowers.
Nor Envy base, nor creeping Gain,
Dare the Muse's walk to stain,
While bright-ey'd Science watches round :
Hence, away, 't is holy ground !"

From yonder realms of empyrean day
Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay :
There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine,
The few, whom genius gave to shine
Through every unborn age and undiscover'd clime.
Rapt in celestial transport they,
Yet hither oft a glance from high
They send of tender sympathy
To bless the place, where on their opening soul
First the genuine ardour stole.
'T was Milton struck the deep-ton'd shell,
And, as the choral warblings round him swell,
Meek Newton's self bends from his state sublime,
And nods his hoary head, and listens to the rhyme.

" Ye brown o'er-arching groves,
That Contemplation loves,

Where willowy Camus lingers with delight !
Oft at the blush of dawn
I trod your level lawn,
Oft woo'd the gleam of Cynthia silver-bright
In cloisters dim, far from the haunts of Folly,
With Freedom by my side, and soft-ey'd Melancholy."

But hark ! the portals sound, and pacing forth
With solemn steps and slow,
High potentates and dames of royal birth,
And mitred fathers in long order go :
Great Edward *, with the lilies on his brow,
From haughty Gallia torn,
And sad Chatillon †, on her bridal morn
That wept her bleeding love, and princely Clare ‡,
And Anjou's § heroine, and the paler rose ¶.
The rival of her crown and of her woes,
And either Henry ¶ there,
The murder'd saint, and the majestic lord,
That broke the bonds of Rome.
(Their tears, their little triumphs o'er,
Their human passions now no more,
Save Charity, that glows beyond the tomb),
All that on Granta's fruitful plain
Rich streams of regal bounty pour'd,
And bade these awful fanes and turrets rise,
To hail their Fitzroy's festal morning come ;
And thus they speak in soft accord
The liquid language of the skies.

" What is grandeur, what is power ?
Heavier toil, superior pain.
What the bright reward we gain ?
The grateful memory of the good.
Sweet is the breath of vernal shower,
The bee's collected treasure's sweet,
Sweet music's melting fall, but sweeter yet
The still small voice of Gratitude."

* Edward the Third ; who added the fleur-de-lis of France to the arms of England. He founded Trinity College.

† Mary de Valentia, Countess of Pembroke, daughter of Guy de Chatillon, Comte de St. Paul in France : of whom tradition says, that her husband, Audemar de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, was slain at a tournament on the day of his nuptials. She was the foundress of Pembroke College or Hall, under the name of Aula Mariæ de Valentia.

‡ Elizabeth de Burg, Countess of Clare, was wife of John de Burg, son and heir of the Earl of Ulster, and daughter of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, by Joan of Acres, daughter of Edward the First. Hence the poet gives her the epithet of princely. She founded Clare-Hall.

§ Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry the Sixth, foundress of Queen's College. The poet had celebrated her conjugal fidelity in a former ode.

¶ Elizabeth Widville, wife of Edward the Fourth (hence called the paler rose, as being of the house of York). She added to the foundation of Margaret of Anjou.

¶ Henry the Sixth and Eighth. The former the founder of King's, the latter the greatest benefactor to Trinity College.

Foremost and leaning from her golden cloud
 The venerable Marg'ret * see !
 " Welcome, my noble son," she cries aloud,
 " To this, thy kindred train, and me :
 Pleas'd in thy lineaments we trace
 A Tudor's † fire, a Beaufort's grace.
 Thy liberal heart, thy judging eye,
 The flower unheeded shall descry,
 And bid it round Heaven's altars shed
 The fragrance of its blushing head :
 Shall raise from Earth the latent gem,
 To glitter on the diadem.

" Lo, Granta waits to lead her blooming band.
 Not obvious, not obtrusive, she
 No vulgar praise, no venal incense flings ;
 Nor dares with courtly tongue refin'd
 Profane thy inborn royalty of mind :
 She reveres herself and thee.
 With modest pride to grace thy youthful brow
 The laureat wreath, that Cecil ‡ wore, she brings,
 And to thy just, thy gentle hand
 Submits the fasces of her sway,
 While spirits blest above and men below
 Join with glad voice the loud symphonious lay.
 Through the wild waves as they roar
 With watchful eye and dauntless mien
 Thy steady course of honour keep,
 Nor fear the rocks, nor seek the shore :
 The star of Brunswick smiles serene,
 And gilds the horrors of the deep."

ODE

ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CAT, DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLD FISHES.

'T WAS on a lofty vase's side,
 Where China's gayest art had dy'd
 The azure flowers that blow ;
 Demurest of the tabby kind,
 The pensive Selima reclin'd,
 Gaz'd on the lake below.

Her conscious tall her joy declar'd ;
 The fair round face, the snowy beard,
 The velvet of her paws,
 Her coat, that with the tortoise vies,
 Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes,
 She saw ; and purr'd applause.

Still had she gaz'd ; but 'midst the tide
 Two angel forms were seen to glide,
 The Genii of the stream :
 Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue
 Through richest purple to the view
 Betray'd a golden gleam.

* Countess of Richmond and Derby ; the mother of Henry the Seventh, foundress of St. John's and Christ's Colleges.

† The Countess was a Beaufort, and married to a Tudor ; hence the application of this line to the Duke of Grafton, who claims descent from both these families.

‡ Lord-treasurer Burleigh was chancellor of the University in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

The hapless nymph with wonder saw :
 A whisker first, and then a claw,
 With many an ardent wish,
 She stretch'd in vain to reach the prize ;
 What female heart can gold despise ?
 What cat 's averse to fish ?

Presumptuous maid ! with looks intent
 Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
 Nor knew the gulf between.
 (Malignant Fate sate by, and smil'd,)
 The slippery verge her feet beguil'd,
 She tumbled headlong in.

Eight times emerging from the flood
 She mew'd to every wat'ry god,
 Some speedy aid to send.
 No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd ;
 Nor cruel Tom, nor Susan heard,
 A favourite has no friend !

From hence, ye beauties, undeceiv'd,
 Know, one false step is ne'er retriev'd,
 And be with caution bold.
 Not all, that tempts your wandering eyes,
 And heedless hearts, is lawful prize ;
 Not all that glisters, gold.

ODE

ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE.

"Αἰσώπῳ· ἱερὴν πρόφασιν εἰς τὸ δούχεϊν.
 Menander.

YE distant spires, ye antique towers,
 That crown the wat'ry glade,
 Where grateful Science still adores
 Her Henry's § holy shade ;
 And ye, that from the stately brow
 Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
 Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
 Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
 His silver-winding way.

Ah, happy hills, ah, pleasing shade,
 Ah, fields belov'd in vain,
 Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
 A stranger yet to pain !
 I feel the gales, that from ye blow,
 A momentary bliss bestow,
 As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
 My weary soul they seem to soothe,
 And, redolent of joy and youth,
 To breathe a second spring.

Say, father Thames, for thou hast seen
 Full many a sprightly race
 Disporting on thy margent green
 The paths of pleasure trace,
 Who foremost now delight to cleave
 With pliant arm thy glassy wave ?
 The captive linnet which enthrall ?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball ?

§ King Henry the Sixth, founder of the college.
 U u

While some on earnest business bent
 Their murmuring labours ply
 'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty ;
 Some bold adventurers disdain
 The limits of their little reign,
 And unknown regions dare descry :
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay Hope is theirs, by Fancy fed,
 Less pleasing, when possess'd ;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast :
 Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue ;
 Wild wit, invention ever new,
 And lively cheer of vigour born ;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,
 The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
 That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas, regardless of their doom,
 The little victims play !
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 Nor care beyond to-day.
 Yet see how all around them wait
 The ministers of human fate,
 And black Misfortune's baleful train,
 Ah, show them where in ambush stand
 To seize their prey, the murderous band !
 Ah, tell them, they are men !

These shall the fury passions tear,
 The vultures of the mind,
 Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
 And Shame that skulks behind ;
 Or pining Love, shall waste their youth,
 Or Jealousy, with rankling tooth,
 That inly gnaws the secret heart,
 And Envy wan, and faded Care,
 Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair,
 And Sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
 Then whirl the wretch from high,
 To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
 And grinning Infamy.
 The stings of Falsehood those shall try,
 And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,
 That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow ;
 And keen Remorse, with blood defil'd,
 And moody Madness laughing wild
 Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
 A grisly troop are seen,
 The painful family of Death,
 More hideous than their queen :
 This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
 That every labouring sinew strains,
 Those in the deeper vitals rage :
 Lo, Poverty, to fill the band,
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming Age.

To each his sufferings : all are men,
 Condemn'd alike to groan ;
 The tender for another's pain,
 The unfeeling for his own.

Yet ah ! why should they know their fate ?
 Since sorrow never comes too late,
 And happiness too swiftly flies.
 Thought would destroy their Paradise.
 No more ; where ignorance is bliss,
 'T is folly to be wise.

THE BARD.

A PINDARIC ODE.

I.

" RUIN seize thee, ruthless king !
 Confusion on thy banners wait !
 Though fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing,
 They mock the air with idle state.
 Helm, nor hauberk's * twisted mail,
 Nor e'en thy virtues, tyrant, shall avail
 To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
 From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears !"
 Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested pride
 Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay,
 As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side
 He wound with toilsome march his long array.
 Stout Glo'ster † stood aghast in speechless trance.
 To arms ! cried Mortimer ‡, and couch'd his quvering lance.

On a rock, whose haughty brow
 Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
 Rob'd in the sable garb of woe,
 With haggard eyes the poet stood ;
 (Loose his beard, and hoary hair
 Stream'd, like a meteor, to the troubled air,)
 And with a master's hand, and prophet's fire,
 Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.
 " Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert cave,
 Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath !
 O'er thee, oh king ! their hundred arms they wave,
 Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe ;
 Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
 To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.

" Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
 That hush'd the stormy main ;
 Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed :
 Mountains, ye mourn in vain
 Modred, whose magic song
 Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-top'd head
 On dreary Arvon's shore § they lie,
 Smear'd with gore, and ghastly pale :
 Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail :
 The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
 Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
 Dear, as the light that visits these sad eyes,
 Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
 Ye died amidst your dying country's cries —

* The hauberk was a texture of steel rings, & rings interwoven, forming a coat of mail, that sat close to the body, and adapted itself to every motion.

No more I weep. They do not sleep.
On yonder cliff, a grisely band,
I see them sit, they linger yet,
Avengers of their native land:
With me in dreadful harmony they join,
And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

II.

• Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
The winding-sheet of Edward's race:
Give ample room, and verge enough
The characters of Hell to trace.

THE FATAL SISTERS. §

AN ODE.

[From the Norse-Tongue.]

IN THE ORCADES OF THORMODUS TORFÆUS; HAFNIAE, 1697, FOLIO; AND ALSO IN BARTHOLINUS.

Vitt er oprit fyrir valfalli, &c.

Now the storm begins to lour,
 (Haste, the loom of Hell prepare,)
 Iron-sleet of arrowy shower
 Hurtles in the darken'd air.

Glittering lances' are the loom,
 Where the dusky warp we strain,
 Weaving many a soldier's doom,
 Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane.

See the griesly texture grow,
 ('T is of human entrails made,)
 And the weights that play below,
 Each a gasping warrior's head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
 Shoot the trembling cords along;
 Sword, that once a monarch bore,
 Keep the tissue close and strong.

† Milton.

‡ The succession of poets after Milton's time.

§ The Valkyriur were female divinities, servants of Odin (or Woden) in the Gothic mythology. Their name signifies choosers of the slain. They were mounted on swift horses, with drawn swords in their hands; and in the throng of battle selected such as were destined to slaughter, and conducted them to Valkalla, the hall of Odin, or paradise of the brave; where they attended the banquet, and served the departed heroes with horns of mead and ale.

Mista, black terrific maid,
 Sangrida, and Hilda, see,
 Join the wayward work to aid:
 'T is the woof of victory.

Ere the ruddy Sun be set,
 Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
 Blade with clattering buckler meet,
 Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war,)
 Let us go, and let us fly,
 Where our friends the conflict share,
 Where they triumph, where they die.

As the paths of Fate we tread,
 Wading through th' ensanguin'd field;
 Gondula, and Geira, spread
 O'er the youthful king your shield.

We the reins to Slaughter give,
 Ours to kill, and ours to spare:
 Spite of danger he shall live:
 (Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert-beach
 Pent within its bleak domain,
 Soon their ample sway shall stretch
 O'er the plenty of the plain.

Low the dauntless Earl is laid,
 Gor'd with many a gaping wound:
 Fate demands a nobler head;
 Soon a king shall bite the ground.

Long his loss shall Eirin weep,
 Ne'er again his likeness see;
 Long her strains in sorrow steep,
 Strains of immortality!

Horror covers all the heath,
 Clouds of carnage blot the Sun.
 Sisters, weave the web of death;
 Sisters, cease, the work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the bands!
 Songs of joy and triumph sing!
 Joy to the victorious bands;
 Triumph to the younger king.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
 Learn the tenour of our song.
 Scotland, through each winding vale
 Far and wide the notes prolong.

Sisters, hence, with spurs of speed;
 Each her thundering falchion wield;
 Each bestride her sable steed:
 Hurry, hurry to the field.

THE DESCENT OF ODIN.

AN ODE.

*[From the same.]*IN BARTHOLINUS, DE CAUSIS CONTEMNENDÆ MORTIS; HAFNIÆ, 1689, QUARTO.

Upreis Odinn allda gauir, &amp;c.

Uprose the King of Men with speed,
And saddled straight his coal-black steed;
Down the yawning steep he rode,
That leads to Hela's * drear abode.
Him the Dog of Darkness spied,
His shaggy throat he open'd wide,
While from his jaws, with carnage fill'd,
Foam and human gore distill'd;
Hoarse he bays with hideous din,
Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin;
And long pursues, with fruitless yell,
The father of the powerful spell.
Onward still his way he takes,
(The groaning Earth beneath him shakes,)
Till full before his fearless eyes
The portals nine of Hell arise.

Right against the eastern gate,
By the moss-grown pile he sate;
Where long of yore to sleep was laid
The dust of the prophetic maid.
Facing to the northern clime,
Thrice he trac'd the Runic rhyme;
Thrice pronounc'd, in accents dread,
The thrilling verse that wakes the dead;
Till from out the hollow ground
Slowly breath'd a sullen sound. [sume,

Pr. What call unknown, what charms pre-
To break the quiet of the tomb?
Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
And drags me from the realms of night?
Long on these mouldering bones have beat
The winter's snow, the summer's heat,
The drenching dews, and driving rain!
Let me, let me sleep again.
Who is he, with voice unblest,
That calls me from the bed of rest?

O. A traveller, to thee unknown,
Is he that calls, a warrior's son.
Thou the deeds of light shalt know;
Tell me what is done below,
For whom yon glittering board is spread,
Drest for whom yon golden bed?

Pr. Mantling in the goblet see
The pure beverage of the bee,
O'er it hangs the shield of gold;
'T is the drink of Balder bold:
Balder's head to death is given,
Pain can reach the sons of Heaven!
Unwilling I my lips uncloze:
Leave me, leave me, to repose.

O. Once again my call obey,
Prophetess, arise, and say,

* Niflheimr, the Hell of the Gothic nations, consisted of nine worlds, to which were devoted all such as died of sickness, old age, or by any other means than in battle: over it presided Hela, the goddess of death.

What dangers Odin's child await,
Who the author of his fate?

Pr. In Hoder's hand the hero's doom:
His brother sends him to the tomb.
Now my weary lips I close:
Leave me, leave me, to repose.

O. Prophetess, my spell obey:
Once again arise, and say,
Who th' avenger of his guilt,
By whom shall Hoder's blood be spilt?

Pr. In the caverns of the west,
By Odin's fierce embrace compest,
A wondrous boy shall Rinda bear,
Who ne'er shall comb his raven-hair,
Nor wash his visage in the stream,
Nor see the Sun's departing beam:
Till he on Hoder's corse shall smile
Flaming on the funeral pile.
Now my weary lips I close:
Leave me, leave me, to repose.

O. Yet awhile my call obey,
Prophetess, awake, and say,
What virgins these, in speechless woe,
That bend to earth their solemn brow,
That their flaxen tresses tear,
And snowy veils, that float in air.
Tell me whence their sorrows rose:
Then I leave thee to repose.

Pr. Ha! no traveller art thou,
King of Men, I know thee now,
Mightiest of a mighty line. —

O. No boding maid of skill divine
Art thou, nor prophetess of good;
But mother of the giant-brood!

Pr. Hie thee hence, and boast at home,
That never shall inquirer come
To break my iron-sleep again;
Till Lok † has burst his ten-fold chain.
Never, till substantial Night
Has re-assum'd her ancient right;
Till wrapp'd in flames, in ruin hurl'd,
Sinks the fabric of the world.

THE TRIUMPHS OF OWEN. ‡

A FRAGMENT.

FROM MR. EVANS'S SPECIMENS OF THE WELSH POETRY;
LONDON, 1764, QUARTO.

OWEN's praise demands my song,
Owen swift, and Owen strong;
Fairest flower of Roderic's stem,
Gwyneth's § shield, and Britain's gem.

† Lok is the evil being, who continues in chain: till the twilight of the gods approaches, when he shall break his bonds; the human race, the stars, and Sun, shall disappear; the earth sink in the seas, and fire consume the skies: even Odin himself and his kindred deities shall perish. For a further explanation of this mythology, see Mallet's Introduction to the History of Denmark, :755, quarto.

‡ Owen succeeded his father Griffin in the principality of North Wales, A. D. 112. This battle was fought near forty years afterwards.

Squadrons three against him came ;
This the force of Eirin hiding,
Side by side as proudly riding,
On her shadow long and gay
Lochlin * plows the watery way :
There the Norman sails afar
Catch the winds, and join the war ;
Black and huge along they sweep,
Burthens of the angry deep.

† The red dragon is the device of Cadwallader,
which all his descendants bore on their banners.

In glittering arms and glory drest,
High he rears his ruby crest.
There the thundering strokes begin,
There the press, and there the din ;
Talymalfra's rocky shore
Echoing to the battle's roar,
Where his glowing eye-balls turn,
Thousand banners round him burn.
Where he points his purple spear,
Hasty, hasty rout is there,
Marking with indignant eye
Fear to stop, and shame to fly.
There Confusion, Terror's child,
Conflict fierce, and Ruin wild,
Agony, that pants for breath,
Despair and honourable Death.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT.

TOMAS SMOLLETT, well known in his time for the variety and multiplicity of his publications, was born in 1720, at Dalquhurn, in the county of Dumbarton. He was educated under a surgeon in Glasgow, where he also attended the medical lectures of the University; and at this early period he gave some specimens of a talent for writing verses. As it is on this ground that he has obtained a place in the present collection, we shall pass over his various characters of surgeon's mate, physician, historiographer, politician, miscellaneous writer, and especially novelist, and consider his claims as a minor poet of no mean rank. He will be found, in this collection, as the author of "The Tears of Scotland," the "Ode to Leven-Water," and some other short pieces, which are polished, tender, and picturesque; and, especially, of an "Ode to Independence," which aims at a loftier flight, and perhaps has few superiors in the lyric style.

Smollett married a lady of Jamaica: he was, unfortunately, of an irritable disposition, which involved him in frequent quarrels, and finally shortened his life. He died in the neighbourhood of Leghorn, in October, 1771, in the fifty-first year of his age.

THE TEARS OF SCOTLAND.

MOURN, hapless Caledonia, mourn
Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn!
Thy sons, for valour long renown'd,
Lie slaughter'd on their native ground;
Thy hospitable roofs no more,
Invite the stranger to the door;
In smoky ruins sunk they lie,
The monuments of cruelty.

The wretched owner sees afar
His all become the prey of war;
Bethinks him of his babes and wife,
Then smites his breast, and curses life.
Thy swains are famish'd on the rocks,
Where once they fed their wanton flocks:
Thy ravish'd virgins shriek in vain;
Thy infants perish on the plain.

What boots it then, in every clime,
Through the wide-spreading waste of time,
Thy martial glory, crown'd with praise,
Still shone with undiminish'd blaze?
Thy tow'ring spirit now is broke,
Thy neck is bended to the yoke.
What foreign arms could never quell,
By civil rage and rancour fell.

The rural pipe and merry lay
No more shall cheer the happy day:
No social scenes of gay delight
Beguile the dreary winter night:
No strains but those of sorrow flow,
And nought be heard but sounds of woe,
While the pale phantoms of the slain
Glide nightly o'er the silent plain.

O baneful cause, oh, fatal morn,
Accurs'd to ages yet unborn!
The sons against their fathers stood,
The parent shed his children's blood.
Yet, when the rage of battle ceas'd,
The victor's soul was not appeas'd:
The naked and forlorn must feel
Devouring flames, and murd'ring steel!

The pious mother doom'd to death,
Forsaken wanders o'er the heath,
The bleak wind whistles round her head,
Her helpless orphans cry for bread;
Bereft of shelter, food, and friend,
She views the shades of night descend,
And, stretch'd beneath th' inclement skies,
Weeps o'er her tender babes, and dies.

While the warm blood bedews my veins,
And unimpair'd remembrance reigns,
Resentment of my country's fate
Within my filial breast shall beat;
And, spite of her insulting foe,
My sympathizing verse shall flow:
"Mourn, hapless Caledonia, mourn
Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn!"

ODE TO LEVEN-WATER.

ON Leven's banks, while free to rove,
And tune the rural pipe to love;
I envied not the happiest swain
That ever trod the Arcadian plain.

Pure stream! in whose transparent wave
My youthful limbs I wont to lave;

No torrents stain thy limpid source ;
 No rocks impede thy dimpling course,
 That sweetly warbles o'er its bed,
 With white, round, polish'd pebbles spread ;
 While, lightly pois'd, the scaly brood
 In myriads cleave thy crystal flood ;
 The springing trout in speckled pride ;
 The salmon, monarch of the tide ;
 The ruthless pike, intent on war ;
 The silver eel, and mottled par. *
 Devolving from thy parent lake,
 A charming maze thy waters make,
 By bowers of birch, and groves of pine,
 And hedges flower'd with eglantine.

Still on thy banks so gaily green,
 May num'rous herds and flocks be seen,
 And lasses chanting o'er the pail,
 And shepherds piping in the dale,
 And ancient Faith that knows no guile,
 And Industry imbrown'd with toil,
 And hearts resolv'd, and hands prepar'd,
 The blessings they enjoy to guard.

ODE TO INDEPENDENCE.

STROPHE.

Thy spirit, Independence, let me share !
 Lord of the lion-heart and eagle-eye,
 Thy steps I follow with my bosom bare,
 Nor heed the storm that howls along the sky.
 Deep in the frozen regions of the north,
 A goddess violated brought thee forth,
 Immortal Liberty, whose look sublime
 Hath bleach'd the tyrant's cheek in every varying clime.

What time the iron-hearted Gaul
 With frantic Superstition for his guide,
 Arm'd with the dagger and the pail,
 The sons of Woden to the field defy'd :
 The ruthless hag, by Weser's flood,
 In Heaven's name urg'd th' infernal blow ;
 And red the stream began to flow :
 The vanquish'd were baptiz'd with blood.

ANTISTROPHE.

The Saxon prince in horror fled
 From altars stain'd with human gore ;
 And Liberty his routed legions led
 In safety to the bleak Norwegian shore.
 There in a cave asleep she lay,
 Lull'd by the hoarse-resounding main ;
 When a bold savage past that way,
 Impell'd by Destiny, his name Disdain.
 Of ample front the portly chief appear'd :
 The hunted bear supply'd a shaggy vest ;
 The drifted snow hung on his yellow beard ;
 And his broad shoulders brav'd the furious blast.
 He stopt : he gaz'd ; his bosom glow'd,
 And deeply felt the impression of her charms :
 He seiz'd the advantage Fate allow'd ;
 And straight compress'd her in his vig'rous arms.

* The par is a small fish, not unlike the smelt, which it rivals in delicacy and flavour.

STROPHE.

The curlew scream'd, the Tritons blew
 Their shells to celebrate the ravish'd rite ;
 Old Time exulted as he flew ;
 And Independence saw the light.
 The light he saw in Albion's happy plains,
 Where under cover of a flowering thorn,
 While Philomel renew'd her warbled strains,
 The auspicious fruit of stol'n embrace was born—
 The mountain Dryads seiz'd with joy,
 The smiling infant to their charge consign'd ;
 The Doric Muse caress'd the favourite boy ;
 The hermit Wisdom stor'd his opening mind
 As rolling years matur'd his age,
 He flourish'd bold and sinewy as his sire ;
 While the mild passions in his breast assuage
 The fiercer flames of his maternal sire.

ANTISTROPHE.

Accomplished thus, he wing'd his way,
 And zealous roved from pole to pole,
 The rolls of right eternal to display,
 And warm with patriot thoughts the aspiring soul.
 On desert isles it was he that rais'd
 Those spires that gild the Adriatic wave,
 Where Tyranny beheld amaz'd
 Fair Freedom's temple, where he mark'd her grave.
 He steel'd the blunt Batavian's arms
 To burst the Iberian's double chain ;
 And cities rear'd, and planted farms,
 Won from the skirts of Neptune's wide domain.
 He, with the generous rustics, sat
 On Uri's rocks in close divan † ;
 And wing'd that arrow sure as fate,
 Which ascertain'd the sacred rights of man.

STROPHE.

Arabia's scorching sands he cross'd,
 Where blasted nature pants supine,
 Conductor of her tribes adust,
 To Freedom's adamant shrine ;
 And many a Tartar hord forlorn, aghast !
 He snatch'd from under fell Oppression's wing ;
 And taught amidst the dreary waste
 The all-cheering hymns of Liberty to sing.
 He virtue finds, like precious ore,
 Diffus'd thro' every baser mould,
 Even now he stands on Calvi's rocky shore,
 And turns the dross of Corsica to gold.
 He, guardian genius, taught my youth
 Pomp's tinsel livery to despise :
 My lips by him chastis'd to truth,
 Ne'er pay'd that homage which the heart denies.

ANTISTROPHE.

Those sculptur'd halls my feet shall never tread,
 Where varnish'd Vice and Vanity combin'd,
 To dazzle and seduce, their banners spread ;
 And forge vile shackles for the free-born mind.
 Where Insolence his wrinkl'd front uprears,
 And all the flowers of spurious fancy blow ;
 And Title his ill-woven chaplet wears,
 Full often wreath'd around the miscreant's brow :

† Alluding to the known story of William Tell and his associates, the fathers and founders of the confederacy of the Swiss Cantons.

Where over-dimpling Falsehood, pert and vain,
Presents her cup of stale profession's froth !
And pale Disease, with all his bloated train,
Torments the sons of Gluttony and Sloth.

STROPHE.

In Fortune's car behold that minion ride,
With either India's glittering spoils opprest :
So moves the sumpter-mule, in harness'd pride,
That bears the treasure which he cannot taste.
For him let venal bards disgrace the bay,
And hireling minstrels wake the tinkling string ;
Her sensual snares let faithless Pleasure lay ;
And all her jingling bells fantastic Folly ring ;
Disquiet, Doubt, and Dread shall intervene ;
And Nature still to all her feelings just,
In vengeance hang a damp on every scene,
Shook from the baleful pinions of Disgust.

ANTISTROPHE.

Nature I'll court in her sequester'd haunts
By mountain, meadow, streamlet, grove, or cell,
Where the poised lark his evening ditty chaunts,
And Health, and Peace, and Contemplation dwell.
There Study shall with Solitude recline ;
And Friendship pledge me to his fellow-swains ;
And Toil and Temperance sedately twine
The slender chord that fluttering life sustains :
And fearless Poverty shall guard the door ;
And Taste unspoil'd the frugal table spread ;
And Industry supply the humble store ;
And sleep unbribed his dews refreshing shed :
White-mantled Innocence, ethereal sprite,
Shall chase far off the goblins of the night ;
And Independence o'er the day preside,
Propitious power ! my patron and my pride.

GEORGE LORD LYTTELTON.

GEORGE LORD LYTTELTON, born at Hagley, in Jan. 1708-9, was the eldest son of Sir Thomas Lyttelton, Bart. of the same place. He received his early education at Eton, whence he was sent to Christ-church College, in Oxford. In both of these places he was distinguished for classical literature, and some of his poems which we have borrowed were the fruits of his juvenile studies. In his nineteenth year, he set out on a tour to the Continent; and some of the letters which he wrote during this absence to his father are pleasing proofs of his sound principles, and his unreserved confidence in a venerated parent. He also wrote a poetical epistle to Dr. Ayscough, his Oxford tutor, which is one of the best of his works. On his return from abroad he was chosen representative in parliament for the borough of Oakhampton; and being warmed with that patriotic ardour which rarely fails to inspire the bosom of an ingenuous youth, he became a distinguished partisan of opposition-politics, whilst his father was a supporter of the ministry, then ranged under the banners of Walpole. When Frederic Prince of Wales, having quarrelled with the court, formed a separate court of his own, in 1737, Lyttelton was appointed secretary to the Prince, with an advanced salary. At this time Pope bestowed his praise upon our patriot in an animated couplet:

Free as young Lyttelton her cause pursue,
Still true to virtue, and as warm as true.

In 1741, he married Lucy, the daughter of Hugh Fortescue, Esq. a lady for whom he entertained the purest affection, and with whom he lived in unabated conjugal harmony. Her death in child-bed, in 1747, was lamented by him in a "Monody," which stands prominent among his poetical works, and displays much natural feeling, amidst the more elaborate strains of a poet's imagination. So much may suffice respecting his productions of this class, which are distinguished by the correctness of their versification, the elegance of their diction, and the delicacy of their sentiments. His miscellaneous pieces, and his history of Henry II., the last, the work of his age, have each their appropriate merits, but may here be omitted.

The death of his father, in 1751, produced his succession to the title and a large estate; and his taste for rural ornament rendered Hagley one of the most delightful residences in the kingdom. At the dissolution of the ministry, of which he composed a part, in 1759, he was rewarded with elevation to the peerage, by the style of Baron Lyttelton of Frankley, in the county of Worcester. He died of a lingering disorder, which he bore with pious resignation, in August 1773, in the 64th year of his age.

UNCERTAINTY.

ECLOGUE I.

TO MR. POPE.

POPE, to whose reed beneath the beachen shade,
The nymphs of Thames a pleas'd attention paid;
While yet thy Muse, content with humbler praise,
Warbled in Windsor's grove her sylvan lays;

Though now, sublimely borne on Homer's wing,
Of glorious wars and godlike chiefs she sing:
Wilt thou with me revisit once again

The crystal fountain, and the flowery plain?

Wilt thou, indulgent, hear my verse relate

The various changes of a lover's state;

And, while each turn of passion I pursue,

Ask thy own heart if what I tell be true?

To the green margin of a lonely wood,
Whose pendant shades o'erlook'd a silver flood,
Young Damon came, unknowing where he stray'd,
Full of the image of his beauteous maid:

His flock, far off, unfed, untended, lay,

To every savage a defenceless prey;

No sense of interest could their master move,

And every care seem'd trifling now but love.

Awhile in pensive silence he remain'd,

But, though his voice was mute, his looks complain'd;

At length the thoughts, within his bosom pent,
Forc'd his unwilling tongue to give them vent.

"Ye nymphs," he cried, "ye Dryads, who so long
Have favour'd Damon, and inspir'd his song;
For whom, retir'd, I shun the gay resorts
Of sportful cities, and of pompous courts;
In vain I bid the restless world adieu,
To seek tranquillity and peace with you.
Though wild Ambition and destructive Rage
No factions here can form, no wars can wage:
Though Envy frowns not on your humble shades,
Nor Calumny your innocence invades:
Yet cruel Love, that troubler of the breast,
Too often violates your boasted rest;
With inbred storms disturbs your calm retreat,
And taints with bitterness each rural sweet.

"Ah, luckless day! when first with fond surprise
In Delia's face I fix'd my eager eyes!
Then in wild tumults all my soul was tost,
Then reason, liberty, at once were lost:
And every wish, and thought, and care, was gone,
But what my heart employ'd on her alone.
Then too she smil'd: can smiles our peace destroy,
Those lovely children of Content and Joy?
How can soft pleasure and tormenting woe
From the same spring at the same moment flow?
Unhappy boy! these vain inquiries cease,
Thought could not guard, nor will restore, thy peace:
Indulge the frenzy that thou must endure,
And soothe the pain thou know'st not how to cure.
Come, flattering Memory! and tell my heart
How kind she was, and with what pleasing art
He strove its fondest wishes to obtain,
To confirm her power, and faster bind my chain.
If on the green we danc'd, a mirthful band;
To me alone she gave her willing hand:
Her partial taste, if e'er I touch'd the lyre,
Till in my song found something to admire.
By none but her my crook with flowers was crown'd,
By none but her my brows with ivy bound:
The world, that Damon was her choice, believ'd,
The world, alas! like Damon, was deceiv'd.
When last I saw her, and declar'd my fire
In words as soft as passion could inspire,
Coldly she heard, and full of scorn withdrew,
Without one pitying glance, one sweet adieu.
The frighted hind, who sees his ripen'd corn
Up from the roots by sudden tempests torn,
Whose fairest hopes destroy'd and blasted lie,
Feels not so keen a pang of grief as I.
Oh, how have I deserv'd, inhuman maid,
To have my faithful service thus repaid?
Were all the marks of kindness I receiv'd,
But dreams of joy, that charm'd me and deceiv'd?
Or did you only nurse my growing love,
That with more pain I might your hatred prove?
Sure guilty treachery no place could find
In such a gentle, such a generous mind:
A maid brought up the woods and wilds among
Could ne'er have learnt the art of courts so young:
No; let me rather think her anger feign'd,
Till let me hope my Delia may be gain'd;
T'was only modesty that seem'd disdain,
And her heart suffer'd when she gave me pain."

Pleas'd with this flattering thought, the love-sick boy
Felt the faint dawning of a doubtful joy;
Back to his flock more cheerful he return'd,
When now the setting Sun more fiercely burn'd,
Blue vapours rose along the mazy rills,
And light's last blushes ting'd the distant hills.

HOPE.

ECLOGUE II.

TO MR. DODDINGTON, AFTERWARDS LORD MELCOMBE
REGIS.

HEAR, Doddington, the notes that shepherds sing,
Like those that warbling hail the genial Spring.
Nor Pan, nor Phoebus, tunes our artless reeds:
From Love alone their melody proceeds.
From Love, Theocritus, on Enna's plains,
Learnt the wild sweetness of his Doric strains.
Young Maro, touch'd by his inspiring dart,
Could charm each ear, and soften every heart:
Me too his power has reach'd, and bids with thine
My rustic pipe in pleasing concert join.

Damon no longer sought the silent shade,
No more in unfrequented paths he stray'd,
But call'd the swains to hear his jocund song,
And told his joy to all the rural throng.

"Blest be the hour," he said, "that happy hour,
When first I own'd my Delia's gentle power;
Then gloomy discontent and pining care
Forsook my breast, and left soft wishes there;
Soft wishes there they left, and gay desires,
Delightful languors, and transporting fires.
Where yonder limes combine to form a shade,
These eyes first gaz'd upon the charming maid:
There she appear'd, on that auspicious day,
When swains their sportive rites to Bacchus pay:
She led the dance — Heavens! with what grace she mov'd!

Who could have seen her then, and not have lov'd?
I strove not to resist so sweet a flame,
But gloried in a happy captive's name;
Nor would I now, could Love permit, be free,
But leave to brutes their savage liberty.

"And art thou then, fond youth, secure of joy?
Can no reverse thy flattering bliss destroy?
Has treacherous Love no torment yet in store?
Or hast thou never prov'd his fatal power?
Whence flow'd those tears that late bedew'd thy cheek?

Why sigh'd thy heart as if it strove to break?
Why were the desert rocks invoc'd to hear
The plaintive accent of thy sad despair?
From Delia's rigour all those pains arose,
Delia, who now compassionates my woes,
Who bids me hope; and in that charming word
Has peace and transport to my soul restor'd.

"Begin, my pipe, begin the gladsome lay;
A kiss from Delia shall thy music pay;
A kiss obtain'd 'twixt struggling and consent,
Given with forc'd anger, and disguis'd content.
No laureat wreaths I ask, to bind my brows,
Such as the Muse on lofty bards bestows:
Let other swains to praise or fame aspire;
I from her lips my recompense require.

"Why stays my Delia in her secret bower?
Light gales have chas'd the late impending shower;
Th' emerging Sun more bright his beams extends;
Oppos'd, its beauteous arch the rainbow bends!
Glad youths and maidens turn the new-made hay:
The birds renew their songs on every spray!
Come forth, my love, thy shepherd's joys to crown:
All nature smiles. — Will only Delia frown?

"Hark how the bees with murmurs fill the plain,
While every flower of every sweet they drain:

See, how beneath yon hillock's shady steep,
The shelter'd herds on flowery couches sleep :
Nor bees, nor herds, are half so blest as I,
If with my fond desires my love comply ;
From Delia's lips a sweeter honey flows,
And on her bosom dwells more soft repose.

" Ah ! how, my dear, shall I deserve thy charms ?
What gift can bribe thee to my longing arms ?
A bird for thee in silken bands I hold,
Whose yellow plumage shines like polish'd gold ;
From distant isles the lovely stranger came,
And bears the fortunate Canaries' name ;
In all our woods none boasts so sweet a note,
Not ev'n the nightingale's melodious throat.
Accept of this ; and could I add beside
What wealth the rich Peruvian mountains hide :
If all the gems in eastern rocks were mine,
On thee alone their glittering pride should shine.
But, if thy mind no gifts have power to move,
Phoebus himself shall leave th' Aonian grove :
The tuneful Nine, who never sue in vain,
Shall come sweet suppliants for their favourite swain.

For him each blue-ey'd Naiad of the flood,
For him each green-hair'd sister of the wood,
Whom oft beneath fair Cynthia's gentle ray
His music calls to dance the night away.
And you, fair nymphs, companions of my love,
With whom she joys the cowslip meads to rove,
I beg you recommend my faithful flame,
And let her often hear her shepherd's name :
Shade all my faults from her inquiring sight,
And show my merits in the fairest light ;
My pipe your kind assistance shall repay,
And every friend shall claim a different lay.

" But see ! in yonder glade the heavenly fair
Enjoys the fragrance of the breezy air —
Ah, thither let me fly with eager feet ;
Adieu, my pipe ; I go my love to meet —
O, may I find her as we parted last,
And may each future hour be like the past !
So shall the whitest lamb these pastures feed,
Propitious Venus, on thy altars bleed."

JEALOUSY.

ECLOGUE III.

TO MR. EDWARD WALPOLE.

Tax gods, O Walpole, give no bliss sincere ;
Wealth is disturb'd by care, and power by fear :
Of all the passions that employ the mind,
In gentle love the sweetest joys we find :
Yet ev'n those joys dire Jealousy molests,
And blackens each fair image in our breasts.
O may the warmth of thy too tender heart
Ne'er feel the sharpness of his venom'd dart !
For thy own quiet, think thy mistress just,
And wisely take thy happiness on trust.

Begin, my Muse, and Damon's woes rehearse,
In wildest numbers and disorder'd verse.

On a romantic mountain's airy head
(While browsing goats at ease around him fed)
Anxious he lay, with jealous cares oppress'd ;
Distrust and anger labouring in his breast —
The vale beneath a pleasing prospect yields
Of verdant meads and cultivated fields ;
Through these a river rolls its winding flood,
A dorn'd with various tufts of rising wood ;

Here, half-conceal'd in trees, a cottage stands,
A castle there the opening plain commands ;
Beyond, a town with glittering spires is crown'd,
And distant hills the wide horizon bound :
So charming was the scene, awhile the swain
Beheld delighted, and forgot his pain :
But soon the stings infix'd within his heart
With cruel force renew'd their raging smart :
His flowery wreath, which long with pride he wore,
The gift of Delia, from his brows he tore,
Then cried, " May all thy charms, ungrateful maid,
Like these neglected roses, droop and fade !
May angry Heaven deform each guilty grace,
That triumphs now in that deluding face !
Those alter'd looks may every shepherd fly,
And ev'n thy Daphnis hate thee worse than I !

" Say, thou inconstant, what has Damon done,
To lose the heart his tedious pains had won ?
Tell me what charms you in my rival find,
Against whose power no ties have strength to bind ?
Has he, like me, with long obedience strove
To conquer your disdain, and merit love ?
Has he with transport every smile ador'd,
And died with grief at each ungentle word ?
Ah, no ! the conquest was obtain'd with ease ;
He pleased you, by not studying to please :
His careless indolence your pride alarm'd ;
And, had he lov'd you more, he less had charm'd.

" O pain to think ! another shall possess
Those balmy lips which I was wont to press :
Another on her panting breast shall lie,
And catch sweet madness from her swimming eye ! —
I saw their friendly flocks together feed,
I saw them hand in hand walk o'er the mead :
Would my clos'd eye had sunk in endless night,
Ere I was doom'd to bear that hateful sight !
Where'er they pass'd, be blasted every flower,
And hungry wolves their helpless flocks devour ! —
Ah, wretched swain, could no examples move
Thy heedless heart to shun the rage of love ?
Hast thou not heard how poor Menalcas died
A victim to Parthenia's fatal pride ?
Dear was the youth to all the tuneful plain,
Lov'd by the nymphs, by Phoebus lov'd in vain :
Around his tomb their tears the Muses paid ;
And all things mourn'd, but the relentless maid.
Would I could die like him, and be at peace !
These torments in the quiet grave would cease ;
There my vex'd thoughts a calm repose would find,
And rest, as if my Delia still were kind.

No, let me live, her falsehood to upbraid :
Some god perhaps my just revenge will aid. —
Alas ! what aid, fond swain, wouldst thou receive ?
Could thy heart bear to see its Delia grieve ?
Protect her, Heaven ! and let her never know
The slightest part of hapless Damon's woe :
I ask no vengeance from the powers above ;
All I implore is never more to love. —
Let me this fondness from my bosom tear,
Let me forget that e'er I thought her fair.
Come, cool Indifference, and heal my breast ;
Wearied, at length, I seek thy downy rest :
No turbulence of passion shall destroy
My future ease with flattering hopes of joy.
Hear, mighty Pan, and, all ye sylvans, hear
What by your guardian deities I swear ;
No more my eyes shall view her fatal charms,
No more I'll court the traitress to my arms ;
Not all her arts my steady soul shall move,
And she shall find that reason conquers love !" —

scarce had he spoke, when through the lawn below
Alone he saw the beauteous Delia go ;
At once transported, he forgot his vow,
Such perjuries the laughing gods allow !
Down the steep hills with ardent haste he flew ;
He found her kind, and soon believ'd her true.

POSSESSION.

ECLOGUE IV.

TO LORD CORHAM.

CORHAM, to thee this rural lay I bring,
Whose guiding judgment gives me skill to sing :
Though far unequal to those polish'd strains,
With which thy Congreve charm'd the listening
    plains :

Yet shall its music please thy partial ear, [dear ;
And soothe thy breast with thoughts that once were
Recall those years which Time has thrown behind,
When smiling Love with Honour shar'd thy mind :
When all thy glorious days of prosperous fight
Delighted less than one successful night.
The sweet remembrance shall thy youth restore,
Fancy again shall run past pleasures o'er ;
And, while in Stowe's enchanting walks you stray,
This theme may help to cheat the summer's day.

Beneath the covert of a myrtle wood,
To Venus rais'd, a rustic altar stood.
To Venus and to Hymen, there combin'd,
In friendly league to favour human kind.
With wanton Cupids, in that happy shade,
The gentle Virtues and mild Wisdom play'd.
Nor there in sprightly Pleasure's genial train,
Lurk'd sick Disgust, or late-repenting Pain,
Nor Force, nor Interest, join'd unwilling hands,
But Love consenting tied the blissful bands.

Thither, with glad devotion, Damon came,
To thank the powers who bless'd his faithful flame :
Two milk-white doves he on their altar laid,
And thus to both his grateful homage paid :
" Hail, bounteous god ! before whose hallow'd shrine
My Delia vow'd to be for ever mine,
While, glowing in her cheeks, with tender love,
Sweet virgin-modesty reluctant strove !
And hail to thee, fair queen of young desires !
Long shall my heart preserve thy pleasing fires,
Since Delia now can all its warmth return,
As fondly languish, and as fiercely burn.

" O the dear bloom of last propitious night !
) shade more charming than the fairest light !
Then in my arms I clasp'd the melting maid,
Then all my pains one moment overpaid ;
Then first the sweet excess of bliss I prov'd,
Which none can taste but who like me have lov'd.
Thou too, bright goddess, once, in Ida's grove,
Didst not disdain to meet a shepherd's love ;
With him, while frisking lambs around you play'd,
Conceal'd you sported in the secret shade :
scarce could Anchises' raptures equal mine,
And Delia's beauties only yield to thine.

" What are ye now, my once most valued joys ?
Inspired trifles all, and childish toys —
Friendship itself ne'er knew a charm like this,
Nor Colin's talk could please like Delia's kiss.

" Ye Muses, skill'd in every winning art,
Teach me more deeply to engage her heart ;
Ye nymphs, to her your freshest roses bring,
And crown her with the pride of all the Spring :

On all her days let health and peace attend ;
May she ne'er want, nor ever lose, a friend !
May some new pleasure every hour employ :
But let her Damon be her highest joy !
" With thee, my love, for ever will I stay,
All night caress thee, and admire all day ;
In the same field our mingled flocks we 'll feed,
To the same spring our thirsty heifers lead,
Together will we share the harvest toils,
Together press the vine's autumnal spoils.
Delightful state, where Peace and Love combine,
To bid our tranquil days unclouded shine !
Here limpid fountains roll through flowery meads ;
Here rising forests lift their verdant heads ;
Here let me wear my careless life away,
And in thy arms insensibly decay.

" When late old age our heads shall silver o'er,
And our slow pulses dance with joy no more ;
When Time no longer will thy beauties spare,
And only Damon's eye shall think thee fair ;
Then may the gentle hand of welcome Death,
At one soft stroke, deprive us both of breath !
May we beneath one common stone be laid,
And the same cypress both our ashes shade !
Perhaps some friendly Muse, in tender verse,
Shall deign our faithful passion to rehearse ;
And future ages, with just envy mov'd,
Be told how Damon and his Delia lov'd."

TO THE REVEREND DR. AYSCOUGH,

AT OXFORD.

SAY, dearest friend, how roll thy hours away ?
What pleasing study cheats the tedious day ?
Dost thou the sacred volumes oft explore
Of wise Antiquity's immortal lore,
Where virtue, by the charms of wit refin'd,
At once exalts and polishes the mind ?
How different from our modern guilty art,
Which pleases only to corrupt the heart ;
Whose curst refinements odious vice adorn,
And teach to honour what we ought to scorn !
Dost thou in sage historians joy to see
How Roman greatness rose with liberty :
How the same hands that tyrants durst control
Their empire stretched from Atlas to the Pole ;
Till wealth and conquest into slaves refin'd
The proud luxurious masters of mankind ?
Dost thou in letter'd Greece each charm admire,
Each grace, each virtue, Freedom could inspire ;
Yet in her troubled state see all the woes,
And all the crimes, that giddy Faction knows ;
Till, rent by parties, by corruption sold,
Or weakly careless, or too rashly bold,
She sunk beneath a mitigated doom,
The slave and tutress of protecting Rome ?
Does calm Philosophy her aid impart,
To guide the passions, and to mend the heart ?
Taught by her precepts, hast thou learnt the end
To which alone the wise their studies bend ;
For which alone by Nature were design'd
The powers of thought — to benefit mankind ?
Not, like a cloister'd drone, to read and doze,
In undeserving, undeserv'd, repose ;
But reason's influence to diffuse ; to clear
Th' enlighten'd world of every gloomy fear ;

Dispel the mists of error, and unbind
Those pedant chains that clog the free-born mind.
Happy who thus his leisure can employ !
He knows the purest hours of tranquil joy ;
Nor vex with pangs that busier bosoms tear,
Nor lost to social virtue's pleasing care ;
Safe in the port, yet labouring to sustain
Those who still float on the tempestuous main.

So Locke the days of studious quiet spent ;
So Boyle in wisdom found divine content ;
So Cambray, worthy of a happier doom,
The virtuous slave of Louis and of Rome.

Good Wor'ster * thus supports his drooping age,
Far from court-flattery, far from party-rage ;
He, who in youth a tyrant's frown defy'd,
Firm and intrepid on his country's side, [guide !
Her boldest champion then, and now her mildest
O generous warmth ! O sanctity divine !

To emulate his worth, my friend, be thine :
Learn from his life the duties of the gown ;
Learn, not to flatter, nor insult the crown ;
Nor, basely servile, court the guilty great,
Nor raise the church a rival to the state :
To error mild, to vice alone severe,
Seek not to spread the law of love by fear.

The priest who plagues the world can never mend :
No foe to man was e'er to God a friend.
Let reason and let virtue faith maintain ;
All force but theirs is impious, weak, and vain.

Me other cares in other climes engage,
Cares that become my birth, and suit my age ;
In various knowledge to improve my youth,
And conquer prejudice, worst foe to truth ;
By foreign arts domestic faults to mend,
Enlarge my notions, and my views extend ;
The useful science of the world to know,
Which books can never teach, or pedants show.

A nation here I pity and admire,
Whom noblest sentiments of glory fire,
Yet taught, by custom's force and bigot fear,
To serve with pride, and boast the yoke they bear :
Whose nobles, born to cringe and to command,
(In courts a mean, in camps a generous band,)
From each low tool of power, content receive
Those laws, their dreaded arms to Europe give.
Whose people (vain in want, in bondage blest ;
Though plunder'd, gay ; industrious, though opprest)

With happy follies rise above their fate,
The jest and envy of each wiser state.

Yet here the Muses deign'd awhile to sport
In the short sunshine of a favouring court :
Here Boileau, strong in sense and sharp in wit,
Who, from the ancients, like the ancients writ,
Permission gain'd inferior vice to blame,
By flattering incense to his master's fame.
Here Moliere, first of comic wits, excell'd
Whate'er Athenian theatres beheld ;
By keen, yet decent, satire skill'd to please,
With morals mirth uniting, strength with ease.
Now, charm'd, I hear the bold Corneille inspire
Heroic thoughts, with Shakspeare's force and fire !
Now sweet Racine, with milder influence, move
The soften'd heart to pity and to love.

With mingled pain and pleasure, I survey
The pompous works of arbitrary sway ;
Proud palaces, that drain'd the subjects' store,
Rais'd on the ruins of th' oppress'd and poor ;

* Bishop Hough.

Where ev'n mute walls are taught to flatter state,
And painted triumphs style Ambition great *
With more delight those pleasing shades I view,
Where Condé from an envious court withdrew † ;
Where, sick of glory, faction, power, and pride,
(Sure judge how empty all, who all had tried !)
Beneath his palms the weary chief repos'd,
And life's great scene in quiet virtue clos'd.

With shame that other fam'd retreat I see,
Adorn'd by art, disgrac'd by luxury ‡ :
Where Orleans wasted every vacant hour,
In the wild riot of unbounded power ;
Where feverish debauch and impious love
Stain'd the mad table and the guilty grove.

With these amusements is thy friend detain'd,
Pleas'd and instructed in a foreign land ;
Yet oft a tender wish recalls my mind
From present joys to dearer left behind.
O native isle, fair Freedom's happiest seat !
At thought of thee, my bounding pulses beat ;
At thought of thee, my heart impatient burns,
And all my country on my soul returns.
When shall I see thy fields, whose plenteous grain
No power can ravish from th' industrious swain ?
When kiss, with pious love, the sacred earth
That gave a Burleigh or a Russell birth ?
When, in the shade of laws, that long have stood,
Propt by their care, or strengthen'd by their blood,
Of fearless independence wisely vain,
The proudest slave of Bourbon's race disdain ?

Yet, oh ! what doubt, what sad presaging voice,
Whispers within, and bids me not rejoice ;
Bids me contemplate every state around,
From sultry Spain to Norway's icy bound ;
Bids their lost rights, their ruin'd glory see :
And tells me, " These, like England, once were free ! "

SONG.

When Delia on the plain appears,
Aw'd by a thousand tender fears,
I would approach, but dare not move :
Tell me, my heart, if this be love ?

Whene'er she speaks, my ravish'd ear
No other voice but hers can hear,
No other wit but hers approve :
Tell me, my heart, if this be love ?

If she some other youth commend,
Though I was once his fondest friend,
His instant enemy I prove :
Tell me, my heart, if this be love ?

When she is absent, I do more
Delight in all that pleas'd before,
The clearest spring, or shadiest grove :
Tell me, my heart, if this be love ?

When, fond of power, of beauty vain,
Her nets she spread for every swain,
I strove to hate, but vainly strove :
Tell me, my heart, if this be love ?

SONG.

THE heavy hours are almost past
That part my love and me :
My longing eyes may hope at last
Their only wish to see.

But how, my Delia, will you meet
The man you 've lost so long ?
Will love in all your pulses beat,
And tremble on your tongue ?

Will you in every look declare
Your heart is still the same ;
And heal each idly-anxious care
Our fears in absence frame ?

Thus, Delia, thus I paint the scene,
When shortly we shall meet ;
And try what yet remains between
Of loitering time to cheat.

But, if the dream that soothes my mind
Shall false and groundless prove ;
If I am doom'd at length to find
You have forgot to love :

All I of Venus ask, is this ;
No more to let us join :
But grant me here the flattering bliss,
To die, and think you mine.

SONG.

SAY, Myra, why is gentle love
A stranger to that mind,
Which pity and esteem can move,
Which can be just and kind ?

Is it, because you fear to share
The ills that love molest ;
The jealous doubt, the tender care,
That rack the amorous breast ?

Alas ! by some degree of woe
We every bliss must gain :
The heart can ne'er a transport know,
That never feels a pain.

TO THE MEMORY OF
THE FIRST LADY LYTTTELTON.

A MONODY.

*Ipsæ cavâ solans agrum testudine amorem,
Te dulcis conjux, te solo in littore secum,
Te veniente die, te decedente canebat.*

At length escap'd from every human eye,
From every duty, every care,
That in my mournful thoughts might claim a share,
Or force my tears their flowing stream to dry ;
Beneath the gloom of this embowering shade,
This lone retreat, for tender sorrow made,

I now may give my burden'd heart relief,
And pour forth all my stores of grief ;
Of grief surpassing every other woe,
Far as the purest bliss, the happiest love
Can on th' ennobled mind bestow,
Exceeds the vulgar joys that move
Our gross desires, inelegant and low.

Ye tufted groves, ye gently-falling rills,
Ye high o'ershadowing hills,
Ye lawns gay-smiling with eternal green,
Oft have you my Lucy seen !
But never shall you now behold her more :
Nor will she now with fond delight
And taste refin'd your rural charms explore.
Clos'd are those beauteous eyes in endless night,
Those beauteous eyes where beaming us'd to shine
Reason's pure light and Virtue's spark divine.

Oft would the Dryads of these woods rejoice
To hear her heavenly voice ;
For her despising, when she deign'd to sing,
The sweetest songsters of the spring :
The woodlark and the linnet pleas'd no more ;
The nightingale was mute,
And every shepherd's flute
Was cast in silent scorn away,
While all attended to her sweeter lay.
Ye larks and linnets, now resume your song,
And thou, melodious Philomel,
Again thy plaintive story tell ;
For Death has stopt that tuneful tongue,
Whose music could alone your warbling notes excel.

In vain I look around
O'er all the well-known ground,
My Lucy's wonted footsteps to descry ;
Where oft we us'd to walk,
Where oft in tender talk
We saw the summer Sun go down the sky ;
Nor by yon fountain's side,
Nor where its waters glide
Along the valley, can she now be found :
In all the wide-stretch'd prospect's ample bound
No more my mournful eye
Can aught of her espy,
But the sad sacred earth where her dear relics lie.

O shades of Hagley, where is now your boast ?
Your bright inhabitant is lost.
You she preferr'd to all the gay resorts
Where female vanity might wish to shine,
The pomp of cities, and the pride of courts.
Her modest beauties shunn'd the public eye :
To your sequester'd dales
And flower-embroider'd vales
From an admiring world she chose to fly :
With Nature there retir'd, and Nature's God,
The silent paths of wisdom trod,
And banish'd every passion from her breast,
But those, the gentlest and the best,
Whose holy flames with energy divine
The virtuous heart enliven and improve,
The conjugal and the maternal love.

Sweet babes, who, like the little playful fawns,
Were wont to trip along these verdant lawns
By your delighted mother's side,
Who now your infant steps shall guide ?

Ah! where is now the hand whose tender care
To every virtue would have form'd your youth,
And strew'd with flowers the thorny ways of truth?

O loss beyond repair!

O wretched father! left alone,

To weep their dire misfortune, and thy own!
How shall thy weaken'd mind, oppress'd with woe,
And drooping o'er thy Lucy's grave,
Perform the duties that you doubly owe!

Now she, alas! is gone,
From folly and from vice their helpless age to save?

Where were ye, Muses, when relentless Fate
From these fond arms your fair disciple tore;
From these fond arms, that vainly strove
With hapless ineffectual love

To guard her bosom from the mortal blow?

Could not your favouring power, Aonian
maids,

Could not, alas! your power prolong her date,

For whom so oft in these inspiring shades,

Or under Camden's moss-clad mountains hoar,

You open'd all your sacred store,

Whate'er your ancient sages taught,

Your ancient bards sublimely thought,

And bade her raptur'd breast with all your spirit
glow?

Nor then did Pindus or Castalia's plain,

Or Aganippe's fount your steps detain,

Nor in the Thespian valleys did you play;

Nor then on Mincio's bank *

Beset with osiers dank,

Nor where Clitumnus † rolls his gentle stream,

Nor where through hanging woods,

Steep Anio ‡ pours his floods,

Nor yet where Meles § or Ilissus || stray.

Ill does it now beseem,

That, of your guardian care bereft,

To dire disease and death your darling should be left.

Now what avails it that in early bloom,

When light fantastic toys

Are all her sex's joys, [Rome;

With you she search'd the wit of Greece and

And all that in her latter days

To emulate her ancient praise

Italia's happy genius could produce;

Or what the Gallic fire

Bright sparkling could inspire,

By all the Graces temper'd and refin'd;

Or what in Britain's isle,

Most favour'd with your smile,

The powers of Reason and of Fancy join'd

To full perfection have conspir'd to raise?

Ah! what is now the use

Of all these treasures that enrich'd her mind,

To black Oblivion's gloom for ever now consign'd.

|| The Ilissus is a river at Athens.

At least, ye Nine, her spotless name

'T is yours from death to save,

And in the temple of immortal Fame

With golden characters her worth engrave.

Come then, ye virgin-sisters, come,

And strew with choicest flowers her hallow'd tomb:

But foremost thou, in sable vestment clad,

With accents sweet and sad,

Thou, plaintive Muse, whom o'er his Laura's urn

Unhappy Petrarch call'd to mourn;

O come, and to this fairer Laura pay

A more impassion'd tear, a more pathetic lay.

Tell how each beauty of her mind and face

Was brighten'd by some sweet peculiar grace!

How eloquent in every look

Through her expressive eyes her soul distinctly spok'

Tell how her manners, by the world refin'd,

Left all the taint of modish vice behind,

And made each charm of polish'd courts agree

With candid Truth's simplicity,

And uncorrupted Innocence!

Tell how to more than manly sense

She join'd the softening influence

Of more than female tenderness:

How, in the thoughtless days of wealth and joy,

Which oft the care of others' good destroy,

Her kindly-melting heart,

To every want and every woe,

To guilt itself when in distress,

The balm of pity would impart,

And all relief that bounty could bestow!

Ev'n for the kid or lamb that pour'd its life

Beneath the bloody knife,

Her gentle tears would fall,

Tears from sweet Virtue's source, benevolent to all.

Not only good and kind,

But strong and elevated was her mind:

A spirit that with noble pride

Could look superior down

On Fortune's smile or frown;

That could without regret or pain

To Virtue's lowest duty sacrifice

Or Interest or Ambition's highest prize;

That, injur'd or offended, never tried

Its dignity by vengeance to maintain,

But by magnanimous disdain.

A wit that, temperately bright,

With inoffensive light

All pleasing shone; nor ever past

The decent bounds that Wisdom's sober hand

And sweet Benevolence's mild command,

And bashful Modesty, before it cast.

A prudence undeceiving, undeceiv'd,

That nor too little nor too much believ'd,

That scorn'd unjust Suspicion's coward fear,

And without weakness knew to be sincere.

Such Lucy was, when, in her fairest days,

Amidst th' acclaim of universal praise,

In life's and glory's freshest bloom, [tomb.

Death came remorseless on, and sunk her to the

So, where the silent streams of Liris glide,

In the soft bosom of Campania's vale,

When now the wintry tempests all are fled,

And genial Summer breathes her gentle gale.

The verdant orange lifts its beauteous head:

From every branch the balmy flowerets rise,

On every bough the golden fruits are seen;

With odours sweet it fills the smiling skies,
The wood-nymphs tend, and th' Idalian queen.
But, in the midst of all its blooming pride,
A sudden blast from Apenninus blows,

Cold with perpetual snows: [dies.

The tender blighted plant shrinks up its leaves, and

Arise, O Petrarch, from th' Elysian bowers,
With never-fading myrtles twin'd,
And fragrant with ambrosial flowers,
Where to thy Laura thou again art join'd;
Arise, and hither bring the silver lyre,
Tun'd by thy skilful hand,
To the soft notes of elegant desire,
With which o'er many a land
Was spread the fame of thy disastrous love;
To me resign the vocal shell,
And teach my sorrows to relate
Their melancholy tale so well,
As may ev'n things inanimate,
Rough mountain oaks, and desert rocks, to pity move.

What were, alas! thy woes compar'd to mine?
To thee thy mistress in the blissful band

Of Hymen never gave her hand;

The joys of wedded love were never thine:

In thy domestic care

She never bore a share,

Nor with endearing art

Would heal thy wounded heart

Of every secret grief that fester'd there:

Nor did her fond affection on the bed

Of sickness watch thee, and thy languid head

Whole nights on her unwearied arm sustain,

And charm away the sense of pain:

Nor did she crown your mutual flame

With pledges dear, and with a father's tender name.

O best of wives! O dearer far to me

Than when thy virgin charms

Were yielded to my arms,

How can my soul endure the loss of thee?

How in the world, to me a desert grown,

Abandon'd and alone,

Without my sweet companion can I live?

Without thy lovely smile,

The dear reward of every virtuous toil,

What pleasures now can pall'd Ambition give?

Ev'n the delightful sense of well-earn'd praise,

Unshar'd by thee, no more my lifeless thoughts could raise.

For my distracted mind

What succour can I find?

On whom for consolation shall I call?

Support me, every friend;

Your kind assistance lend,

To bear the weight of this oppressive woe.

Alas! each friend of mine,

My dear departed love, so much was thine,
That none has any comfort to bestow.

My books, the best relief

In every other grief,

Are now with your idea sadden'd all:

Each favourite author we together read

My tortur'd memory wounds, and speaks of Lucy dead.

We were the happiest pair of human kind:

The rolling year its varying course perform'd,

And back return'd again;

Another and another smiling came,

And saw our happiness unchang'd remain:

Still in her golden chain

Harmonious Concord did our wishes bind:

Our studies, pleasures, taste, the same.

O fatal, fatal stroke,

That all this pleasing fabric Love had rais'd

Of rare felicity,

On which ev'n wanton Vice with envy gaz'd,

And every scheme of bliss our hearts had form'd,

With soothing hope, for many a future day,

In one sad moment broke! —

Yet, O my soul, thy rising murmurs stay;

Nor dare the all-wise Disposer to arraign,

Or against his supreme decree

With impious grief complain.

That all thy full-blown joys at once should fade,

Was his most righteous will — and be that will obey'd.

Would thy fond love his grace to her control,
And in these low abodes of sin and pain

Her pure exalted soul

Unjustly for thy partial good detain?

No — rather strive thy grovelling mind to raise

Up to that unclouded blaze,

That heavenly radiance of eternal light,

In which enthron'd she now with pity sees

How frail, how insecure, how alight,

Is every mortal bliss;

Ev'n love itself, if rising by degrees

Beyond the bounds of this imperfect state,

Whose fleeting joys so soon must end,

It does not to its sovereign good ascend.

Rise then, my soul, with hope elate,

And seek those regions of serene delight,

Whose peaceful path and ever-open gate

No feet but those of harden'd Guilt shall miss.

There death himself thy Lucy shall restore,

There yield up all his power ne'er to divide you more.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, an eminent poet, and a miscellaneous writer, was born in 1729, according to one account, at Elphin; according to another, at Pallas, in the county of Longford, Ireland. From his father, who was a clergyman, he received a literary education, and was sent at an early period to Dublin College. Thence he was removed as a medical student to the University of Edinburgh, where he continued from 1751 to the beginning of 1754. From the slight tincture of science which he seems to have acquired, it is probable that he paid little attention to the studies of the place; and his necessity for quitting Edinburgh to avoid paying a debt, said to have been contracted by a fellow-student, augurs but little for his moral character. With these unfavourable beginnings, in the midst of penury, he resolved to indulge his curiosity in a visit to the continent of Europe; and after a long ramble, and various fortune, he found means to get back to England in 1758. For a considerable time he supported himself by his pen, in an obscure situation, when, in 1765, he suddenly blazed out as a poet, in his "Traveller; or, A Prospect of Society." It was at the instigation of Dr. Johnson that he enlarged this piece, and finished it for publication; and that eminent critic liberally and justly said of it, that "there had not been so fine a poem since Pope's time." It was equally well received by the public; and conferred upon Goldsmith a celebrity which introduced him to some of the most distinguished literary characters of the time.

The poet continued to pursue his career, and in 1766 was published his novel of the "Vicar of Wakefield," which was received with deserved applause, and has ever since borne a distinguished rank among similar compositions. Some of his most pleasing and successful works in prose were given to the world about this time; and he paid his respects to the Theatre, by a comedy entitled "The Good-Natured Man," acted at Covent-Garden in 1768, which, however, defects of plot, and ignorance of dramatic effect, rendered not very successful. His poetical fame reached its summit in 1770, by the publication of "The Deserted Village," a delightful piece, which obtained general admiration. The price offered by the bookseller, amounting to nearly five shillings a couplet, appeared to Goldsmith so enormous, that he at first refused to take it, but the sale of the poem convinced him that he might fairly appropriate to himself that sum out of the profits. In 1772 he produced another comedy, entitled "She Stoops to Conquer; or, The Mistakes of a Night;" and though in character and plot it made a near approach to farce, yet such were its comic powers that the audience received it with uncommon favour. Although this was a gainful year to him, yet thoughtless profusion, and a habit of gaming, left him at its close considerably in debt. In the two succeeding years he supplied the booksellers with a "Grecian History," and "A History of the Earth and Animated Nature," the last chiefly taken from Buffon. He had planned some other works, but these were cut off by his untimely death. In March 1774 he was attacked with the symptoms of a low fever; and having taken, upon his own judgment, an over-dose of powerful medicine, he sunk under the disease, or remedy, and died on the tenth day, April 4th. He was buried, with little attendance, in the Temple Church; but a monument has since been raised to his memory, with a Latin inscription by Dr. Johnson.

Goldsmith was a man of little correctness either in his conduct or his opinions, and is rather admired for his genius, and beloved for his benevolence, than solidly esteemed. The best part of his character was a warmth of sensibility, which made him ready to share his purse with the indigent, and in his writings rendered him the constant advocate of the poor and oppressed. The worst feature was a malignant envy and jealousy of successful rivals, which he often displayed in a manner not less ridiculous than offensive. He was one of those who are happier in the use of the pen than the tongue; his conversation being generally confused, and not seldom absurd; so that the wits with whom he kept company seem rather to have made him their butt, than to have listened to him as an equal. Yet, perhaps, no writer of his time was possessed of more true humour, or was capable of more pungency in marking the foibles of individuals. This talent he has displayed in a very amusing manner in his unfinished poem of "Retaliation," written as a kind of retort to the jocular attacks made upon him in the Literary Club. Under the mask of Epitaphs, he has given masterly sketches of some of the principal members, with a mixture of serious praise and good-humoured raillery. It may indeed be said that the latter sometimes verges into tartness, which is particularly the case with his delineation of Garrick.

On the whole, his literary fame must be considered as rising the highest in the character of a poet, for it would be difficult, in the compass of English verse, to find pieces which are read with more gratification than his Traveller and his Deserted Village. There are, besides, his elegant ballad of The Hermit, his stanzas on Woman, and some short humorous and miscellaneous pieces, which are never without interest.

THE TRAVELLER :

OR, A PROSPECT OF SOCIETY.

Remote, unfriended, melancholy, slow,
 Far by the lazy Scheld, or wandering Po ;
 Far onward, where the rude Carinthian boor
 Against the houseless stranger shuts the door ;
 Far where Campania's plain forsaken lies,
 A weary waste expanding to the skies ;
 Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
 My heart, untravell'd, fondly turns to thee :
 Still to my brother turns with ceaseless pain,
 And drags at each remove a length'ning chain.

Eternal blessings crown my earliest friend,
 And round his dwelling guardian saints attend ;
 Lest be that spot, where cheerful guests retire
 To pause from toil, and trim their ev'ning fire ;
 Lest that abode, where want and pain repair,
 And ev'ry stranger finds a ready chair ;
 Lest be those feasts with simple plenty crown'd,
 Where all the ruddy family around
 Laugh at the jests or pranks that never fail,
 Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale ;
 Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
 And learn the luxury of doing good.

But me, not destin'd such delights to share,
 My prime of life in wand'ring spent and care ;
 Compell'd with steps unceasing to pursue
 Some fleeting good, that mocks me with the view ;
 That, like the circle bounding earth and skies,
 Allures from far, yet, as I follow, flies ;
 My fortune leads to traverse realms alone,
 And find no spot of all the world my own.

Ev'n now, where Alpine solitudes ascend,
 I sit me down a pensive hour to spend ;
 And plac'd on high above the storm's career,
 Look downward where an hundred realms appear ;
 Lakes, forests, cities, plains extending wide,
 The pomp of kings, the shepherd's humbler pride.

When thus creation's charms around combine,
 Amidst the store, should thankless pride repine ?
 Nay, should the philosophic mind disdain
 That good which makes each humbler bosom vain ?
 Yet school-taught pride dissemble all it can,
 These little things are great to little man ;
 And wiser he, whose sympathetic mind
 Exults in all the good of all mankind. [crown'd,
 The glitt'ring towns, with wealth and splendour
 The fields, where summer spreads profusion round,
 The lakes, whose vessels catch the busy gale,
 The bending swains, that dress the flow'ry vale,
 For me your tributary stores combine ;
 Creation's heir, the world, the world is mine.

As some lone miser, visiting his store,
 Bends at his treasure, counts, recounts it o'er,
 Hoards after hoards his rising raptures fill,
 Yet still he sighs, for hoards are wanting still ;
 Thus to my breast alternate passions rise, [plies ;
 Pleas'd with each good that Heav'n to man sup-
 Yet oft a sigh prevails, and sorrows fall,
 To see the hoard of human bliss so small ;
 And oft I wish, amidst the scene to find
 Some spot to real happiness consign'd,
 Where my worn soul, each wand'ring hope at rest,
 May gather bliss, to see my fellows blest.

But where to find that happiest spot below,
 Who can direct, when all pretend to know ?
 The shudd'ring tenant of the frigid zone
 Boldly proclaims that happiest spot his own ;

Extols the treasures of his stormy seas,
 And his long nights of revelry and ease :
 The naked Negro, panting at the Line,
 Boasts of his golden sands, and palmy wine,
 Basks in the glare or stems the tepid wave,
 And thanks his gods for all the good they gave.
 Such is the patriot's boast, where'er we roam,
 His first, best country, ever is at home.
 And yet, perhaps, if countries we compare,
 And estimate the blessings which they share,
 Though patriots flatter, still shall wisdom find
 An equal portion dealt to all mankind :
 As diff'rent good, by Art or Nature giv'n
 To diff'rent nations, makes their blessings ev'n.

Nature, a mother kind alike to all,
 Still grants her bliss at labour's earnest call ;
 With food as well the peasant is supply'd
 On Idra's cliff as Arno's shelvy side ;
 And though the rocky-crested summits frown,
 These rocks, by custom, turn to beds of down.
 From art more various are the blessings sent ;
 Wealth, commerce, honour, liberty, content :
 Yet these each other's pow'r so strong contest,
 That either seems destructive of the rest.
 Where wealth and freedom reign, contentment fails ;
 And honour sinks where commerce long prevails.
 Hence every state, to one lov'd blessing prone,
 Conforms and models life to that alone.
 Each to the favourite happiness attends,
 And spurns the plan that aims at other ends ;
 Till, carried to excess in each domain,
 This fav'rite good begets peculiar pain.

But let us try these truths with closer eyes,
 And trace them through the prospect as it lies :
 Here for awhile, my proper cares resign'd,
 Here let me sit in sorrow for mankind ;
 Like yon neglected shrub, at random cast,
 That shades the steep, and sighs at ev'ry blast.

Far to the right, where Appenine ascends,
 Bright as the summer, Italy extends :
 Its uplands sloping deck the mountain's side,
 Woods over woods in gay theatric pride ;
 While oft some temple's mould'ring tops between
 With memorable grandeur mark the scene.

Could Nature's bounty satisfy the breast,
 The sons of Italy were surely blest.
 Whatever fruits in diff'rent climes are found,
 That proudly rise or humbly court the ground ;
 Whatever blooms in torrid tracts appear,
 Whose bright succession decks the varied year ;
 Whatever sweets salute the northern sky
 With vernal lives, that blossom but to die ;
 These here disporting own the kindred soil,
 Nor ask luxuriance from the planter's toil ;
 While sea-born gales their gelid wings expand
 To winnow fragrance round the smiling land.

But small the bliss that sense alone bestows,
 And sensual bliss is all the nation knows.
 In florid beauty groves and fields appear,
 Man seems the only growth that dwindles here.
 Contrasted faults through all his manners reign ;
 Though poor, luxurious ; though submissive, vain ;
 Though grave, yet trifling ; zealous, yet untrue ;
 And ev'n in penance planning sins anew.
 All evils here contaminate the mind,
 That opulence departed leaves behind ;
 For wealth was theirs ; not far remov'd the date,
 When commerce proudly flourish'd thro' the state ;
 At her command the palace learnt to rise,
 Again the long-fall'n column sought the skies ;

The canvass glow'd, beyond e'en Nature warm,
The pregnant quarry teem'd with human form :
Till, more unsteady than the southern gale,
Commerce on other shores display'd her sail ;
While nought remain'd of all that riches gave,
But towns unmann'd, and lords without a slave :
And late the nation found, with fruitless skill,
Its former strength was but plethoric ill.

Yet still the loss of wealth is here supply'd
By arts, the splendid wrecks of former pride ;
From these the feeble heart and long-fall'n mind
An easy compensation seem to find.
Here may be seen, in bloodless pomp array'd,
The pasteboard triumph and the cavalcade :
Processions form'd for piety and love,
A mistress or a saint in ev'ry grove.
By sports like these are all their cares beguil'd,
The sports of children satisfy the child :
Each nobler aim, repress'd by long control,
Now sinks at last, or feebly mans the soul ;
While low delights, succeeding fast behind,
In happier meanness occupy the mind :
As in those domes, where Cæsars once bore sway,
Defac'd by time, and tott'ring in decay,
There in the ruin, heedless of the dead,
The shelter-seeking peasant builds his shed ;
And, wond'ring man could want the larger pile,
Exults, and owns his cottage with a smile.

My soul, turn from them, turn we to survey
Where rougher climes a nobler race display,
Where the bleak Swiss their stormy mansions tread,
And force a churlish soil for scanty bread :
No product here the barren hills afford
But man and steel, the soldier and his sword :
No vernal blooms their torpid rocks array,
But winter ling'ring chills the lap of May :
No zephyr fondly sues the mountain's breast,
But meteors glare, and stormy glooms invest.

Yet still, e'en here, content can spread a charm,
Redress the clime, and all its rage disarm.
Though poor the peasant's hut, his feasts tho' small,
He sees his little lot the lot of all ;
Sees no contiguous palace rear its head,
To shame the meanness of his humble shed ;
No costly lord the sumptuous banquet deal,
To make him loathe his vegetable meal ;
But calm, and bred in ignorance and toil,
Each wish contracting, fits him to the soil.
Cheerful at morn, he wakes from short repose,
Breathes the keen air, and carols as he goes ;
With patient angle trolls the finny deep,
Or drives his vent'rous ploughshare to the steep ;
Or seeks the den where snow-tracks mark the way,
And drags the struggling savage into day.
At night returning, ev'ry labour sped,
He sits him down the monarch of a shed ;
Smiles by his cheerful fire, and round surveys
His children's looks, that brighten at the blaze ;
While his lov'd partner, boastful of her hoard,
Displays her cleanly platter on the board :
And haply too some pilgrim, thither led,
With many a tale repays the nightly bed.

Thus ev'ry good his native wilds impart
Imprints the patriot passion on his heart ;
And e'en those hills, that round his mansion rise,
Enhance the bliss his scanty fund supplies :
Dear is that shed to which his soul conforms,
And dear that hill which lifts him to the storms ;
And as a child, when scaring sounds molest,
Clings close and closer to the mother's breast,

So the loud torrent, and the whirlwind's roar,
But bind him to his native mountains more.

Such are the charms to barren states assign'd :
Their wants but few, their wishes all confin'd :
Yet let them only share the praises due,
If few their wants, their pleasures are but few ;
For ev'ry want that stimulates the breast
Becomes a source of pleasure when redrest :
Whence from such lands each pleasing science flies,
That first excites desire, and then supplies ;
Unknown to them, when sensual pleasures cloy,
To fill the languid pause with finer joy ;
Unknown those pow'rs that raise the soul to flame,
Catch ev'ry nerve, and vibrate through the frame.
Their level life is but a mould'ring fire,
Unquench'd by want, unquench'd by strong desire ;
Unfit for raptures, or, if raptures cheer
On some high festival of once a year,
In wild excess the vulgar breast takes fire,
Till, buried in debauch, the bliss expire.

But not their joys alone thus coarsely flow ;
Their morals, like their pleasures, are but low ;
For, as refinement stops, from sire to son
Unalter'd, unimprov'd, the manners run ;
And love's and friendship's finely pointed dart
Falls blunted from each indurated heart.
Some sterner virtues o'er the mountain's breast
May sit, like falcons cowering on the nest :
But all the gentler morals, such as play
Thro' life's more cultur'd walks, and charm the way.
These, far dispers'd, on tim'rous pinions fly,
To sport and flutter in a kinder sky.

To kinder skies, where gentler manners reign,
I turn ; and France displays her bright domain :
Gay sprightly land of mirth and social ease,
Pleas'd with thyself, whom all the world can please.
How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, beside the murmur'ing Loire !
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave the zephyr flew :
And haply, though my harsh touch, falt'ring still,
But mock'd all tune, and marr'd the dancer's skill ;
Yet would the village praise my wond'rous pow'r,
And dance, forgetful of the noontide hour.
Alike all ages. Dames of ancient days
Have led their children thro' the mirthful maze ;
And the gay grandsire, skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burthen of threescore.
So blest a life these thoughtless realms display,
Thus idly busy rolls their world away :
Theirs are those arts that mind to mind endear,
For honour forms the social temper here :
Honour, that praise which real merit gains,
Or e'en imaginary worth obtains,
Here passes current ; paid from hand to hand,
It shifts, in splendid traffic, round the land :
From courts, to camps, to cottages it strays,
And all are taught an avarice of praise ;
They please, are pleased, they give to get esteem,
Till, seeming blest, they grow to what they seem.

But while this softer art their bliss supplies,
It gives their follies also room to rise ;
For praise too dearly lov'd, or warmly sought,
Enfeebles all internal strength of thought ;
And the weak soul, within itself unblest,
Leans for all pleasure on another's breast.
Hence ostentation here, with tawdry art,
Pants for the vulgar praise which fools impart ;
Here vanity assumes her pert grimace,
And trims her robes of frieze with copper lace ;

Here beggar pride defrauds her dally cheer,
To boast one splendid banquet once a year :
The mind still turns where shifting fashion draws,
For weighs the solid worth of self-applause.

To men of other minds my fancy flies,
Embosom'd in the deep where Holland lies.
Iethinks her patient sons before me stand,
Where the broad ocean leans against the land,
And, sedulous to stop the coming tide,
Lift the tall rampire's artificial pride.
Onward, methinks, and diligently slow,
The firm connected bulwark seems to grow ;
Spreads its long arms amidst the wat'ry roar,
Coops out an empire, and usurps the shore :
While the pent ocean, rising o'er the pile,
Sees an amphibious world beneath him smile :
The slow canal, the yellow-blossom'd vale,
The willow-tufted bank, the gliding sail,
The crowded mart, the cultivated plain,
A new creation rescu'd from his reign.

Thus, while around the wave-subjected soil
Impels the native to repeated toil,
Industrious habits in each bosom reign,
And industry begets a love of gain.
Hence all the good from opulence that springs,
With all those ills superfluous treasure brings,
Are here display'd. Their much-lov'd wealth
Imparts

Convenience, plenty, elegance, and arts ;
But view them closer, craft and fraud appear,
E'en liberty itself is barter'd here.
At gold's superior charms all freedom flies,
The needy sell it, and the rich man buys ;
A land of tyrants, and a den of slaves,
Here wretches seek dishonourable graves,
And, calmly bent, to servitude conform,
Dull as their lakes that slumber in the storm.

Heav'n's ! how unlike their Belgic sires of old !
Rough, poor, content, ungovernably bold ;
War in each breast, and freedom on each brow ;
How much unlike the sons of Britain now !

Fir'd at the sound, my genius spreads her wing,
And flies where Britain courts the western spring ;
Where lawns extend that scorn Arcadian pride,
And brighter streams than fam'd Hydaspiis glide ;
There all around the gentlest breezes stray,
There gentle music melts on every spray ;
Creation's mildest charms are there combin'd,
Extremes are only in the master's mind ;
Stern o'er each bosom reason holds her state,
With daring aims irregularly great ;
Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
I see the lords of human kind pass by ;
Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
By forms unfashion'd, fresh from Nature's hand,
Fierce in their native hardness of soul,
True to imagin'd right, above control ;
While e'en the peasant boasts these rights to scan,
And learns to venerate himself as man.

Thine, Freedom, thine the blessings pictur'd
here,

Thine are those charms that dazzle and endear ;
Too blest indeed were such without alloy ;
But foster'd e'en by freedom, ills annoy ;
That independence Britons prize too high,
Keeps man from man, and breaks the social tie ;
The self-dependent lordlings stand alone,
All claims that bind and sweeten life unknown ;
Here, by the bonds of nature feebly held,
Minds combat minds, repelling and repell'd ;

Ferments arise, imprison'd factions roar,
Repress ambition struggles round her shore ;
Till over-wrought, the general system feels
Its motions stop, or phrenzy fire the wheels.

Nor this the worst. As nature's ties decay,
As duty, love, and honour, fail to sway,
Fictitious bonds, the bonds of wealth and law,
Still gather strength, and force unwilling awe.
Hence all obedience bows to these alone,
And talent sinks, and merit weeps unknown ;
Till time may come, when, stript of all her charms,
The land of scholars, and the nurse of arms,
Where noble stems transmit the patriot flame,
Where kings have toil'd, and poets wrote for fame,
One sink of level avarice shall lie,
And scholars, soldiers, kings, unhonour'd die.

Yet think not, thus when freedom's ills I state,
I mean to flatter kings, or court the great :
Ye pow'rs of truth, that bid my soul aspire,
Far from my bosom drive the low desire !
And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrant's angry steel ;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud contempt, or favour's fost'ring sun ;
Still may thy blooms the changeful clime endure !
I only would repress them to secure ;
For just experience tells, in ev'ry soil,
That those who think must govern those that toil ;
And all that freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.
Hence, should one order disproportion'd grow,
Its double weight must ruin all below.

Oh then how blind to all that truth requires,
Who think it freedom when a part aspires !
Calm is my soul, nor apt to rise in arms,
Except when fast approaching danger warms :
But when contending chiefs blockade the throne,
Contracting regal pow'r to stretch their own ;
When I behold a factious band agree
To call it freedom when themselves are free ;
Each wanton judge new penal statutes draw,
Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the law ;
The wealth of climes, where savage nations roam,
Pillag'd from slaves to purchase slaves at home ;
Fear, pity, justice, indignation, start,
Tear off reserve, and bare my swelling heart ;
Till half a patriot, half a coward grown,
I fly from petty tyrants to the throne.

Yes, brother, curse with me that baleful hour,
When first ambition struck at regal pow'r ;
And thus, polluting honour in its source,
Gave wealth to sway the mind with double force.
Have we not seen, round Britain's peopled shore,
Her useful sons exchange'd for useless ore ?
Seen all her triumphs but destruction haste,
Like flaring tapers bright'ning as they waste ?
Seen Opulence, her grandeur to maintain,
Lead stern Depopulation in her train,
And over fields where scatter'd hamlets rose,
In barren solitary pomp repose ?
Have we not seen, at Pleasure's lordly call,
The smiling long-frequented village fall ?
Beheld the duteous son, the sire decay'd,
The modest matron, and the blushing maid,
Forc'd from their homes, a melancholy train,
To traverse climes beyond the western main
Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around,
And Niagara stuns with thund'ring sound ?

E'en now, perhaps, as there some pilgrim strays
Thro' tangled forests, and thro' dangerous ways :

While beasts with man divided empire claim,
And the brown Indian marks with murd'rous aim ;
There, while above the giddy tempest flies,
And all around distressful yells arise,
The pensive exile, bending with his woe,
To stop too fearful, and too faint to go,
Casts a long look where England's glories shine,
And bids his bosom sympathize with mine.

Vain, very vain, my weary search to find
That bliss which only centres in the mind.
Why have I stray'd from pleasure and repose,
To seek a good each government bestows ?
In ev'ry government, though terrors reign,
Though tyrant kings or tyrant laws restrain,
How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure !
Still to ourselves in every place consign'd,
Our own felicity we make or find :
With secret course, which no loud storms annoy,
Glides the smooth current of domestic joy.
The lifted axe, the agonizing wheel,
Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel,
To men remote from pow'r but rarely known,
Leave reason, faith, and conscience, all our own.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE.

SWEET Auburn ! loveliest village of the plain,
Where health and plenty cheer'd the lab'ring swain,
Where smiling Spring its earliest visit paid,
And parting Summer's ling'ring blooms delay'd :
Dear lovely bow'rs of innocence and ease,
Seats of my youth, when ev'ry sport could please :
How often have I loiter'd o'er thy green,
Where humble happiness endear'd each scene !
How often have I paus'd on ev'ry charm,
The shelter'd cot, the cultivated farm,
The never-failing brook, the busy mill,
The decent church that topt the neighb'ring hill,
The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade,
For talking age and whispering lovers made !
How often have I bless'd the coming day,
When toil remitting lent its turn to play,
And all the village train, from labour free,
Led up their sports beneath the spreading tree :
While many a pastime circled in the shade,
The young contending as the old survey'd ;
And many a gambol frolick'd o'er the ground,
And slights of art and feats of strength went round ;
And still, as each repeated pleasure tir'd,
Succeeding sports the mirthful band inspir'd
The dancing pair that simply sought renown,
By holding out to tire each other down ;
The swain mistrustless of his smutted face,
While secret laughter titter'd round the place ;
The bashful virgin's side-long looks of love,
The matron's glance that would those looks reprove :
These were thy charms, sweet village ! sports like these

With sweet succession, taught e'en toil to please ;
These round thy bow'rs their cheerful influence shed,
These were thy charms — but all these charms are fled.

Sweet smiling village, loveliest of the lawn,
Thy sports are fled, and all thy charms withdrawn ;
Amidst thy bow'rs the tyrant's hand is seen,
And desolation saddens all thy green :
One only master grasps the whole domain,
And half a tillage stints thy smiling plain :

No more thy glassy brook reflects the day,
But chok'd with sedges works its weary way ;
Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
The hollow-sounding bittern guards its nest ;
Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies,
And tires their echoes with unvary'd cries.
Sunk are thy bow'rs in shapeless ruin all,
And the long grass o'ertops the mould'ring wall ;
And, trembling, shrinking from the spoiler's hand,
Far, far away thy children leave the land.

Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay ;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade :
A breath can make them, as a breath has made :
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed, can never be supply'd.

A time there was, ere England's griefs began,
When ev'ry rood of ground maintain'd its man ;
For him light labour spread her wholesome store,
Just gave what life requir'd, but gave no more :
His best companions, innocence and health ;
And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.

But times are alter'd ; trade's unfeeling train
Usurp the land, and dispossess the swain ;
Along the lawn, where scatter'd hamlets rose,
Unwieldy wealth and cumb'rous pomp repose ;
And ev'ry want to luxury ally'd,
And ev'ry pang that folly pays to pride.
Those gentle hours that plenty bade to bloom,
Those calm desires that ask'd but little room,
Those healthful sports that grac'd the peaceful scene,
Liv'd in each look, and brighten'd all the green ;
These, far departing, seek a kinder shore,
And rural mirth and manners are no more.

Sweet Auburn ! parent of the blissful hour,
Thy glades forlorn confess the tyrant's pow'r.
Here, as I take my solitary rounds,
Amidst thy tangling walks and ruin'd grounds,
And, many a year elaps'd, return to view
Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn grew.
Remembrance wakes with all her busy train,
Swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain.

In all my wand'rings round this world of care,
In all my griefs — and God has giv'n my share —
I still had hopes my latest hours to crown,
Amidst these humble bow'rs to lay me down ;
To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting, by repose :
I still had hopes, for pride attends us still,
Amidst the swains to show my book-learn'd skill,
Around my fire an ev'ning group to draw,
And tell of all I felt, and all I saw ;
And, as a hare, whom hounds and horns pursue,
Pants to the place from whence at first she flew.
I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
Here to return — and die at home at last.

O blest retirement, friend to life's decline,
Retreats from care, that never must be mine,
How blest is he who crowns, in shades like these,
A youth of labour with an age of ease ;
Who quits a world where strong temptations try,
And, since 't is hard to combat, learns to fly !
For him no wretches, born to work and weep,
Explore the mine, or tempt the dang'rous deep ;
No surly porter stands, in guilty state,
To spurn imploring famine from the gate ;
But on he moves to meet his latter end,
Angels around befriending virtue's friend ;
Sinks to the grave with unperceiv'd decay,
While resignation gently slopes the way ;

And, all his prospects bright'ning to the last,
His heav'n commences ere the world be past.

Sweet was the sound, when oft at ev'ning's close,
Up yonder hill the village murmur rose ;
Here, as I pass'd with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came soften'd from below ;
The swain responsive as the milk-maid sung,
The sober herd that low'd to meet their young ;
The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children just let loose from school :
The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whisp'ring
wind,

And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind ;
These all in sweet confusion sought the shade,
And fill'd each pause the nightingale had made.

But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
But all the blooming flush of life is fled :

All but yon widow'd, solitary thing,
That feebly bends beside the plashy spring ;
She, wretched matron, forc'd in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread,
To pick her wintry faggot from the thorn,
To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn :
The only left of all the harmless train,
The sad historian of the pensive plain.

Near yonder copse, where once the garden smil'd,
And still where many a garden flow'r grows wild,
There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,
The village preacher's modest mansion rose.

A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a year ;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had chang'd, nor wish'd to change his place ;
Unskilful he to fawn, or seek for pow'r,
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour ;
Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.

His house was known to all the vagrant train,
He chid their wand'rings, but reliev'd their pain ;
The long-remember'd beggar was his guest,
Whose beard descending swept his aged breast ;
The ruin'd spendthrift, now no longer proud,
Claim'd kindred there, and had his claims allow'd ;
The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay,
Sat by his fire, and talk'd the night away ;
Wept o'er his wounds, or, tales of sorrow done,
Shoulder'd his crutch, and show'd how fields were won.

Pleas'd with his guests, the good man learn'd to
And quite forgot their vices in their woe ;
Careless their merits or their faults to scan,
His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And ev'n his failings lean'd to virtue's side ;
But in his duty prompt, at ev'ry call,
He watch'd and wept, he pray'd and felt, for all :
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt its new-fledg'd offspring to the skies,
He try'd each art, reprov'd each dull delay,
Allur'd to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt, and pain, by turns dismay'd,
The rev'rend champion stood. At his control,
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul ;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,
And his last fault'ring accents whisper'd praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorn'd the venerable place ;

Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.
The service past, around the pious man,
With steady zeal, each honest rustic ran :
Ev'n children follow'd, with endearing wile,
And pluck'd his gown, to share the good man's
smile ;

His ready smile a parent's warmth express'd,
Their welfare pleas'd him, and their cares distress :
To them his heart, his love, his griefs, were giv'n,
But all his serious thoughts had rest in Heav'n.
As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Tho' round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Beside yon straggling fence that skirts the way
With blossom'd furze, unprofitably gay,
There, in his noisy mansion, skill'd to rule,
The village master taught his little school :
A man severe he was, and stern to view,
I knew him well, and every truant knew ;
Well had the boding tremblers learn'd to trace
The day's disasters in his morning face ;
Full well they laugh'd with counterfeited glee
At all his jokes, for many a joke had he ;
Full well the busy whisper, circling round,
Convey'd the dismal tidings when he frown'd ;
Yet he was kind, or if severe in aught,
The love he bore to learning was in fault ;
The village all declar'd how much he knew ;
'T was certain he could write and cypher too ;
Lands he could measure, terms and tides presage,
And ev'n the story ran that he could gauge.
In arguing, too, the parson own'd his skill,
For ev'n though vanquish'd he could argue still ;
While words of learned length, and thund'ring
sound,

Amaz'd the gazing rustics rang'd around ;
And still they gaz'd, and still the wonder grew
That one small head should carry all he knew.
But past is all his fame. The very spot,
Where many a time he triumph'd, is forgot.

Near yonder thorn, that lifts its head on high,
Where once the sign-post caught the passing eye,
Low lies that house where nut-brown draughts
inspir'd,

Where grey-beard mirth and smiling toil retir'd,
Where village statesmen talk'd with looks profound,
And news much older than their ale went round ;
Imagination fondly stoops to trace
The parlour splendours of that festive place ;
The white-wash'd wall, the nicely sanded floor,
The varnish'd clock that click'd behind the door ;
The chest contriv'd a double debt to pay,
A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day ;
The pictures plac'd for ornament and use,
The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose ;
The hearth, except when winter chill'd the day,
With aspen boughs, and flowers, and fennel,
gay ;

While broken tea-cups, wisely kept for show,
Rang'd o'er the chimney, glisten'd in a row.

Vain transitory splendours ! could not all
Reprieve the tott'ring mansion from its fall !
Obscure it sinks, nor shall it more impart
An hour's importance to the poor man's heart ;
Thither no more the peasant shall repair
To sweet oblivion of his daily care ;
No more the farmer's news, the barber's tale,
No more the woodman's ballad shall prevail ;

No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear,
Relax his pond'rous strength, and lean to hear ;
The host himself no longer shall be found
Careful to see the mantling bliss go round ;
Nor the coy maid, half willing to be prest,
Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest.

Yes ! let the rich deride, the proud disdain,
These simple blessings of the lowly train ;
To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of art ;
Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway ;
Lightly they frolic o'er the vacant mind,
Unenvy'd, unmolested, unconfin'd.

But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
With all the freaks of wanton wealth array'd,
In these, ere triflers half their wish obtain,
The toiling pleasure sickens into pain ;
And, e'en while fashion's brightest arts decoy,
The heart distrusting asks, if this be joy ?

Ye friends to truth, ye statesmen, who survey.
The rich man's joys increase, the poor's decay,
'T is yours to judge how wide the limits stand
Between a splendid and a happy land.
Proud swells the tide with loads of freighted ore,
And shouting Folly hails them from her shore ;
Hoards e'en beyond the miser's wish abound,
And rich men flock from all the world around.
Yet count our gains. This wealth is but a name
That leaves our useful product still the same.
Not so the loss. The man of wealth and pride
Takes up a space that many poor supply'd ;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds,
Space for his horses, equipage, and bounds ;
The robe that wraps his limbs in silken sloth
Has robb'd the neighb'ring fields of half their growth ;

His seat, where solitary sports are seen,
Indignant spurns the cottage from the green ;
Around the world each needful product flies :
For all the luxuries the world supplies :
While thus the land, adorn'd for pleasure all,
In barren splendour feebly waits the fall.

As some fair female, unadorn'd and plain,
Secure to please while youth confirms her reign,
Slight's ev'ry borrow'd charm that dress supplies,
Nor shares with art the triumph of her eyes ;
But when those charms are past, for charms are frail,

When time advances, and when lovers fail,
She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the glaring impotence of dress :
Thus fares the land, by luxury betray'd,
In nature's simplest charms at first array'd ;
But verging to decline, its splendours rise,
Its vistas strike, its palaces surprise ;
While, scourg'd by famine, from the smiling land
The mournful peasant leads his humble band ;
And while he sinks, without one arm to save,
The country blooms — a garden and a grave !

Where, then, ah ! where shall poverty reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride ?
If to some common's fenceless limits stray'd,
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And e'en the bare-worn common is deny'd.

If to the city sped — What waits him there ?
To see profusion that he must not share ;
To see ten thousand baneful arts combin'd
To pamper luxury, and thin mankind ;

To see each joy the sons of pleasure know,
Extorted from his fellow-creature's woe.
Here, while the courtier glitters in brocade,
There the pale artist plies the sickly trade ;
Here, while the proud their long-drawn pomp display,

There the black gibbet glooms beside the way ;
The dome where pleasure holds her midnight reign,
Here, richly deck'd, admits the gorgeous train ;
Tumultuous grandeur crowds the blazing square,
The rattling chariots clash, the torches glare.
Sure scenes like these no troubles e'er annoy !

Sure these denote one universal joy ! [eyes

Are these thy serious thoughts ? — Ah, turn thine
Where the poor houseless shiv'ring female lies :

She, once perhaps, in village plenty blest,
Has wept at tales of innocence distress ;

Her modest looks the cottage might adorn,
Sweet as the primrose peeps beneath the thorn ;

Now lost to all ; her friends, her virtue, fled,

Near her betrayer's door she lays her head,

And, pinch'd with cold, and shrinking from the show'r,

With heavy heart deplores that luckless hour,

When idly first, ambitious of the town,

She left her wheel and robes of country brown.

Do thine, sweet Auburn, thine, the loveliest town,

Do thy fair tribes participate her pain ?

E'en now, perhaps, by cold and hunger led,

At proud men's doors they ask a little bread !

Ah, no. To distant climes, a dreary scene,

Where half the convex world intrudes between,

Through torrid tracts with fainting steps they go,

Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe.

Far diff'rent there from all that charm'd before,

The various terrors of that horrid shore ;

Those blazing suns that dart a downward ray,

And fiercely shed intolerable day ;

Those matted woods where birds forget to sing,

But silent bats in drowsy clusters cling ;

Those pois'nous fields with rank luxuriance crown'd,

Where the dark scorpion gathers death around :

Where at each step the stranger fears to wake

The rattling terrors of the vengeful snake ;

Where crouching tigers wait their hapless prey,

And savage men more murd'rous still than they ;

While oft in whirls the mad tornado flies,

Mingling the ravag'd landscape with the skies.

Far diff'rent these from ev'ry former scene,

The cooling brook, the grassy-vested green,

The breezy covert of the warbling grove,

That only shelter'd thefts of harmless love.

Good Heav'n ! what sorrows gloom'd that parting day,

That call'd them from their native walks away ;

When the poor exiles, ev'ry pleasure past,

Hung round the bow'rs, and fondly look'd their last,

And took a long farewell, and wish'd in vain

For seats like these beyond the western main ;

And shudd'ring still to face the distant deep,

Return'd and wept, and still return'd to weep.

The good old sire the first prepar'd to go

To new-found worlds, and wept for others' woe ;

But for himself, in conscious virtue brave,

He only wish'd for worlds beyond the grave.

His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,

The fond companion of his helpless years,

Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,

And left a lover's for her father's arms.

With louder plaints the mother spoke her woes,
 And bless'd the cot where ev'ry pleasure rose ;
 And kiss'd her thoughtless babes with many a tear,
 And clasp'd them close, in sorrow doubly dear ;
 Whilst her fond husband strove to lend relief
 In all the silent manliness of grief.

O Luxury ! thou curs'd by heav'n's decree,
 How ill exchang'd are things like these for thee !
 How do thy potions, with insidious joy,
 Diffuse their pleasures only to destroy !
 Kingdoms by thee, to sickly greatness grown,
 Loast of a florid vigour not their own :
 At ev'ry draught more large and large they grow,
 A bloated mass of rank unwieldy woe ;
 Till sapp'd their strength, and ev'ry part unsound,
 Down, down they sink, and spread a ruin round.

E'en now the devastation is begun,
 And half the bus'ness of destruction done ;
 E'en now, methinks, as pond'ring here I stand,
 I see the rural virtues leave the land.
 Down where yon anch'ring vessel spreads the sail,
 That idly waiting flaps with ev'ry gale,
 Downward they move, a melancholy band,
 Pass from the shore, and darken all the strand.
 Contented toil, and hospitable care,
 And kind connubial tenderness, are there ;
 And piety with wishes placed above,
 And steady loyalty, and faithful love.

And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest maid,
 Till first to fly where sensual joys invade !
 Unfit, in these degen'rate times of shame,
 To catch the heart, or strike for honest fame,
 Dear charming nymph, neglected and decry'd,
 Thy shame in crowds, my solitary pride ;
 Thou source of all my bliss, and all my woe,
 That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st me so ;
 Thou guide, by which the nobler arts excel,
 Thou nurse of ev'ry virtue, fare thee well ;
 Farewell ! and O ! where'er thy voice be try'd,
 In Torno's cliffs, or Pambamarca's side,
 Whether where equinoctial fervours glow,
 Or winter wraps the polar world in snow,
 Till let thy voice, prevailing over time,
 Redress the rigours of th' inclement clime ;
 And slighted truth with thy persuasive strain,
 Teach erring man to spurn the rage of gain ;
 Teach him that states, of native strength possess,
 Though very poor, may still be very blest ;
 That trade's proud empire hastes to swift decay,
 As ocean sweeps the labour'd mole away ;
 While self-dependent pow'r can time defy,
 As rocks resist the billows and the sky.

THE HERMIT.

A BALLAD.

" TURN, gentle hermit of the dale,
 And guide my lonely way,
 To where yon taper cheers the vale
 With hospitable ray.

" For here forlorn and lost I tread,
 With fainting steps and slow ;
 Where wilds, immeasurably spread,
 Seem length'ning as I go."

" Forbear, my son," the hermit cries,
 " To tempt the dang'rous gloom ;
 For yonder faithless phantom flies
 To lure thee to thy doom.

" Here to the houseless child of want
 My door is open still ;
 And though my portion is but scant,
 I give it with good will.

" Then turn to-night, and freely share
 Whate'er my cell bestows ;
 My rushy couch and frugal fare,
 My blessing and repose.

" No flocks that range the valley free
 To slaughter I condemn :
 Taught by that Pow'r that pities me,
 I learn to pity them :

" But from the mountain's grassy side
 A guiltless feast I bring ;
 A scrip with herbs and fruits supply'd,
 And water from the spring.

" Then, pilgrim, turn, thy cares forego ;
 All earth-born cares are wrong :
 Man wants but little here below,
 Nor wants that little long."

Soft as the dew from Heav'n descends,
 His gentle accents fell ;
 The modest stranger lowly bends,
 And follows to the cell.

Far in a wilderness obscure
 The lonely mansion lay ;
 A refuge to the neighbouring poor,
 And strangers led astray.

No stores beneath its humble thatch
 Requir'd a master's care ;
 The wicket, op'ning with a latch,
 Receiv'd the harmless pair.

And now when busy crowds retire
 To take their ev'ning rest,
 The hermit trimm'd his little fire,
 And cheer'd his pensive guest :

And spread his vegetable store,
 And gaily prest, and smil'd ;
 And, skill'd in legendary lore,
 The ling'ring hours beguill'd.

Around in sympathetic mirth
 Its tricks the kitten tries ;
 The cricket chirrups in the hearth,
 The crackling faggot flies.

But nothing could a charm impart
 To soothe the stranger's woe ;
 For grief was heavy at his heart,
 And tears began to flow.

His rising cares the hermit spy'd,
 With ans'ring care oppress'd :
 " And whence, unhappy youth," he cry'd,
 " The sorrows of thy breast ?

GOLDSMITH.

" From better habitations spurn'd,
Reluctant dost thou rove ;
Or grieve for friendship unreturn'd,
Or unregarded love ?

" Alas ! the joys that fortune brings
Are trifling, and decay ;
And those who prize the paltry things,
More trifling things than they.

" And what is friendship but a name,
A charm that lulls to sleep ;
A shade that follows wealth or fame,
And leaves the wretch to weep ?

" And love is still an emptier sound,
The modern fair-one's jest :
On Earth unseen, or only found
To warm the turtle's nest.

" For shame, fond youth, thy sorrows hush,
And spurn the sex," he said :
But while he spoke, a rising blush
His love-lorn guest betray'd.

Surpris'd he sees new beauties rise,
Swift mantling to the view ;
Like colours o'er the morning skies,
As bright, as transient too,

The bashful look, the rising breast,
Alternate spread alarms :
The lovely stranger stands confest,
A maid in all her charms.

" And, ah ! forgive a stranger rude,
A wretch forlorn," she cry'd ;
" Whose feet unhallow'd thus intrude
Where Heav'n and you reside.

" But let a maid thy pity share,
Whom love has taught to stray ;
Who seeks for rest, but finds despair
Companion of her way,

" My father liv'd beside the Tyne,
A wealthy lord was he ;
And all his wealth was mark'd as mine,
He had but only me.

" To win me from his tender arms
Unnumber'd suitors came,
Who prais'd me for imputed charms,
And felt, or feign'd a flame.

" Each hour a mercenary crowd
With richest proffers strove ;
Among the rest young Edwin bow'd,
But never talk'd of love.

" In humble, simplest habit clad,
No wealth or pow'r had he ;
Wisdom and worth were all he had,
But these were all to me.

" And when, beside me in the dale,
He carol'd lays of love,
His breath lent fragrance to the gale,
And music to the grove.

" The blossom op'ning to the day,
The dews of Heav'n refin'd,
Could nought of purity display
To emulate his mind.

" The dew, the blossoms of the tree,
With charms inconstant shine ;
Their charms were his ; but, woe to me,
Th' inconstancy was mine !

" For still I try'd each fickle art,
Importunate and vain ;
And while his passion touch'd my heart,
I triumph'd in his pain.

" Till, quite dejected with my scorn,
He left me to my pride ;
And sought a solitude forlorn
In secret, where he dy'd.

" But mine the sorrow, mine the fault,
And well my life shall pay ;
I'll seek the solitude he sought,
And stretch me where he lay.

" And there forlorn, despairing, hid,
I'll lay me down and die ;
'T was so for me that Edwin did,
And so for him will I."

" Forbid it, Heav'n !" the hermit cry'd,
And clasp'd her to his breast :
The wond'ring fair-one turn'd to chide, —
'T was Edwin's self that prest.

" Turn, Angelina, ever dear,
My charmer, turn to see
Thy own, thy long-lost Edwin here,
Restor'd to love and thee.

" Thus let me hold thee to my heart,
And ev'ry care resign :
And shall we never, never part,
My life — my all that's mine ?

" No, never, from this hour to part,
We'll live and love so true,
The sigh that rends thy constant heart
Shall break thy Edwin's too."

RETALIATION.

A POEM.

Of old, when Scarron his companions invited,
Each guest brought his dish, and the feast was united.

If our landlord * supplies us with beef and with

History of the Popes.

Alas ! that such frolic should now be so quiet :

What spirits were his ! what wit and what whim,

Now breaking a jest, and now breaking a limb !

Now wrangling and grumbling to keep up the ball !

Now teasing and vexing, yet laughing at all !

In short, so provoking a devil was Dick,

That we wish'd him full ten times a day at old Nick ;

But, missing his mirth and agreeable vein,

As often we wish'd to have Dick back again.

Here Cumberland lies, having acted his parts,

The Terence of England, the mender of hearts ;

A flatt'ring painter, who made it his care

To draw men as they ought to be, not as they are.

His gallants are all faultless, his women divine,

And Comedy wonders at being so fine :

Like a tragedy queen he has dizen'd her out,

Or rather like Tragedy giving a rout.

His fools have their follies so lost in a crowd

Of virtues and feelings, that folly grows proud ;

And coxcombs, alike in their failings, alone,

Adopting his portraits, are pleas'd with their own.

Say, where has our poet this malady caught ?

Or wherefore his characters thus without fault ?

Say, was it that vainly directing his view

To find out men's virtues, and finding them few,

Quite sick of pursuing each troublesome elf,

He grew lazy at last, and drew from himself ?

Here Douglas retires from his toils to relax,

The scourge of impostors, the terror of quacks :

Come, all ye quack bards, and ye quacking divines,

Come, and dance on the spot where your tyrant re-
clines :

When satire and censure encircled his throne ;

I fear'd for your safety, I fear'd for my own :

But now he is gone, and we want a detector,

Our Dodds † shall be pious, our Kenricks ‡ shall lecture ;

Macpherson § write bombast, and call it a style ;

Our Townshend make speeches, and I shall compile ;

New Lauders and Bowers the Tweed shall cross over,

No countryman living their tricks to discover ;

Detection her taper shall quench to a spark,

And Scotchman meet Scotchman, and cheat in the dark.

Here lies David Garrick, describe him who can,
An abridgement of all that was pleasant in man .

As an actor, confest without rival to shine ;

As a wit, if not first, in the very first line !

Yet, with talents like these, and an excellent heart,

The man had his failings — a dupe to his art.

* Mr. Richard Burke. This gentleman having slightly fractured one of his arms and legs, at different times, the Doctor has rallied him on those accidents, as a kind of retributive justice for breaking his jests upon other people.

On the stage he was natural, simple, affecting ;
'T was only that when he was off he was acting.
With no reason on earth to go out of his way,
He turn'd and he varied full ten times a day :
Though secure of our hearts, yet confoundedly sick
If they were not his own by finessing and trick :
He cast off his friends, as a huntsman his pack,
For he knew when he pleas'd he could whistle them
back.

Of praise a mere glutton, he swallow'd what came,
And the puff of a dunce he mistook it for fame ;
Till his relish grown callous, almost to disease,
Who pepper'd the highest was surest to please.
But let us be candid, and speak out our mind,
If dunces applauded, he paid them in kind.

Ye Kenricks, ye Kellys *, and Woodfalls † so

And slander itself must allow him good-nature :
He cherish'd his friend, and he relish'd a bumper :
Yet one fault he had, and that one was a thumper.
Perhaps you may ask if the man was a miser ?
I answer, no, no, for he always was wiser :
Too courteous, perhaps, or obligingly flat ?
His very worst foe can't accuse him of that :
Perhaps he confided in men as they go,
And so was too foolishly honest ? Ah, no !

Here Reynolds is laid, and, to tell you my mind,
He has not left a wiser or better behind :

His pencil was striking, resistless, and grand,
His manners were gentle, complying, and bland ;
Still born to improve us in every part,

His pencil our faces, his manners our heart :
To coxcombs averse, yet most civilly steering,

When they judg'd without skill he was still hard hearing ; [and so

When they talk'd of their Raphaels, Correggios,
He shifted his trumpet ‡, and only took snuff.

STANZAS ON WOMAN.

FROM THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray,
What charm can soothe her melancholy,
What art can wash her guilt away ?

The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from ev'ry eye,
To give repentance to her lover,
And wring his bosom — is, to die.

SONG.

O MEMORY ! thou fond deceiver,
Still importunate and vain,
To former joys recurring ever,
And turning all the past to pain ;

Thou, like the world, th' oppress'd oppressing.
Thy smiles increase the wretch's woe !
And he who wants each other blessing,
In thee must ever find a foe.

‡ Sir Joshua Reynolds was so remarkably as to be under the necessity of using an ear-trumpet in company.

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, a writer of great eminence, was born in 1709 at Litchfield, in which city his father was a petty bookseller. After a desultory course of school-education, it was proposed to him, by Mr. Corbet, a neighbouring gentleman, that he should accompany his own son to Oxford as his companion; accordingly, in his nineteenth year, he was elected a commoner of Pembroke college. From young Corbet's departure, he was left to struggle with penury till he had completed a residence of three years, when he quitted Oxford without taking a degree. His father died, in very narrow circumstances, soon after his return from the university; and for some time he attempted to gain maintenance by some literary projects. At length, in 1735, he thought proper to marry a widow twice his own age, and far from attractive, either in her person or manners. By the aid of her fortune he was enabled to set up a school for instruction in Latin and Greek, but the plan did not succeed; and after a year's experiment, he resolved to try his fortune in the great metropolis. Garrick, afterwards the celebrated actor, had been one of his pupils, accompanied by whom he arrived in London; Johnson having in his pocket his unfinished tragedy of Irene.

The first notice which he drew from the judges of literary merit, was by the publication of "London, a Poem," in imitation of Juvenal's third satire. The manly vigour, and strong painting of this performance, placed it high among works of its kind, though it must be allowed, that its censure is coarse and exaggerated, and that it ranks rather as a party, than as a moral poem. It was published in 1738. For some years Johnson is chiefly to be traced in the pages of the Gentleman's Magazine, then conducted by Cave; and it was for this work that he gratified the public with some extraordinary pieces of eloquence which he composed under the disguise of debates in the senate of Liliput, meaning the British parliament. He likewise wrote various biographical articles for the same miscellany, of which the principal and most admired was "The Life of Savage."

The plan of his English Dictionary was laid before the public in a letter addressed to Lord Chesterfield in 1747. In the same year he furnished Garrick with a prologue on the opening of Drury-lane theatre, which in sense and poetry has not a competitor among compositions of this class, excepting Pope's prologue to Cato. Another imitation of Juvenal, entitled "The Vanity of Human Wishes," was printed in 1749, and may be said to reach the sublime of ethical poetry, and to stand at the head of classical imitations. The same year, under the auspices of Garrick, brought on the stage of Drury-lane his tragedy of "Irene." It ran thirteen nights, but has never since appeared on the theatre: Johnson, in fact, found that he was not formed to excel on the stage, and made no further trials.

His periodical paper, entitled "The Rambler," appeared in March 1750, and was continued till March 1752. The solemnity of this paper prevented it at first from attaining an extensive circulation; but after it was collected into volumes, it continually rose in the public esteem, and the author had the satisfaction of seeing a tenth edition. The "Adventurer," conducted by Dr. Hawkesworth, succeeded the Rambler, and Johnson contributed several papers of his own writing. In 1755, the first edition of his "Dictionary" made its appearance. It was received by the public with general applause, and its author was ranked among the greatest benefactors of his native tongue. Modern accuracy, however, has given an insight into its defects; and though it still stands as the capital work of the kind in the language, its authority as a standard is somewhat depreciated. Upon the last illness of his aged mother, in 1759, for the purpose of paying her a visit, and defraying the expense of her funeral, he wrote his romance of "Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia," one of his most splendid performances, elegant in language, rich in imagery, and weighty in sentiment. Its views of human life are, indeed, deeply tinged with the gloom that overshadowed the author's mind; nor can it be praised for moral effect.

Soon after the accession of the late king, a grant of a pension of 300*l.* per annum was made him by His Majesty during the ministry of Lord Bute. A short struggle of repugnance to accept a favour from the House of Hanover was overcome by a sense of the honour and substantial benefit conferred by it, and he became that character, a pensioner, on which he had bestowed a sarcastic definition in his Dictionary. Much obloquy attended this circumstance of his life, which was enhanced when he published in several of his productions, arguments which seemed directly to oppose the rising spirit of liberty.

A long-promised edition of Shakspeare appeared in 1765; but though ushered in by a preface written with all the powers of his masterly pen, the edition itself disappointed those who expected much from his ability to elucidate the obscurities of the great dramatist. A tour to the Western Islands of Scotland in 1773, in which he was attended by his enthusiastic admirer and obsequious friend, James Boswell, Esq. was a remarkable incident of his life, considering that a strong antipathy to the natives of that country had long been conspicuous in his conversation. But when, two years afterwards, he published the account of his tour, under the title of "A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland," more candour and impartiality were found in it, than had been expected. In 1775, he was gratified, through the interest of Lord North, with the degree of Doctor of Laws, from the University of Oxford. He had some years before received the same honour from Dublin, but did not then choose to assume the title. His last literary undertaking was the consequence of a request from the London booksellers, who had engaged in an edition of the principal English poets, and wished to prefix to each a biographical and critical preface from his hand. This he undertook; and though he will generally be thought to have laboured under strong prejudices in composing the work, its style will be found, in great measure, free from the stiffness and turgidity which marked his earlier compositions.

The concluding portion of Dr. Johnson's life was saddened by a progressive decline of health, and by the prospect of approaching death, which neither his religion nor his philosophy had taught him to bear with even decent composure. A paralytic stroke first gave the alarm; asthma, and dropsical symptoms, followed; and such was the tenacity with which he clung to life, that he expressed a great desire to seek for amendment in the climate of Italy. Still unable to reconcile himself to the thought of dying, he said to the surgeon who was making slight scarifications in his swollen legs, "Deeper! deeper! I want length of life, and you are afraid of giving me pain, which I do not value." The closing scene took place on December 13. 1785, in the 76th year of his age. His remains, attended by a respectable concourse of friends, were interred in Westminster Abbey; and a monumental statue has since been placed to his memory in St. Paul's cathedral. His works were published collectively in eleven volumes, 8vo., with a copious life of the author, by Sir John Hawkins. A new edition, in twelve volumes, with a life, was given by Arthur Murphy. Of the conversations and oral dictates of Johnson, a most copious collection has been published in the very entertaining volumes of Mr. Boswell. Upon the whole, it may be said, that at the time of his death, he was undoubtedly the most conspicuous literary character of his country.

LONDON:

A POEM.

IN IMITATION OF THE THIRD SATIRE OF JUVENAL.

— Quis ineptæ

Tam patiens urbis, tam ferreus ut teneat se? Juv.

THO' grief and fondness in my breast rebel,
When injur'd Thales bids the town farewell,
Yet still my calmer thoughts his choice commend,
I praise the hermit, but regret the friend,
Resolv'd at length from vice and London far
To breathe in distant fields a purer air,
And fix'd on Cambria's solitary shore,
Give to St. David one true Briton more.

For who would leave, unbrib'd, Hibernia's land,
Or change the rocks of Scotland for the Strand?
There none are swept by sudden fate away,
But all, whom hunger spares, with age decay:
Here malice, rapine, accident, conspire,
And now a rabble rages, now a fire;
Their ambush here relentless ruffians lay,
And here the fell attorney prowls for prey;
Here falling houses thunder on your head,
And here a female atheist talks you dead.

While Thales waits the wherry that contains
Of dissipated wealth the small remains,
On Thames's banks, in silent thought, we stood
Where Greenwich smiles upon the silver flood;
Struck with the seat that gave Eliza* birth,
We kneel, and kiss the consecrated earth;
In pleasing dreams the blissful age renew,
And call Britannia's glories back to view;

* Queen Elizabeth, born at Greenwich.

Behold her cross triumphant on the main,
The guard of commerce, and the dread of Spain,
Ere masquerades debauch'd, excise oppress'd,
Or English honour grew a standing jest.

A transient calm the happy scenes bestow,
And for a moment lull the sense of woe.
At length awaking, with contemptuous frown,
Indignant Thales eyes the neighb'ring town.
Since worth, he cries, in these degenerate days
Wants even the cheap reward of empty praise;
In those curs'd walls, devote to vice and gain,
Since unrewarded science toils in vain;
Since hope but soothes to double my distress,
And every moment leaves my little less;
While yet my steady steps no staff sustains,
And life still vig'rous revels in my veins;
Grant me, kind Heaven, to find some happier place
Where honesty and sense are no disgrace;
Some pleasing bank where verdant osiers play,
Some peaceful vale with Nature's paintings gay:
Where once the harass'd Briton found repose,
And safe in poverty defy'd his foes;
Some secret cell, ye pow'rs, indulgent give,
Let — live here, for — has learn'd to live.
Here let those reign, whom pensions can incite
To vote a patriot black, a courtier white,
Explain their country's dear-bought rights away,
And plead for pirates in the face of day;
With slavish tenets taint our poison'd youth,
And lend a lie the confidence of truth.

Let such raise palaces, and manors buy,
Collect a tax, or farm a lottery;
With warbling eunuchs fill our silenc'd stage,
And lull to servitude a thoughtless age. [hold:
Heroes, proceed! what bounds your pride shall
What check restrain your thirst of pow'r and gold?
' rebellious virtue quite o'erthrown,
Or fame, our wealth, our lives your own

To such, the plunder of a land is giv'n,
When public crimes inflame the wrath of Heaven :
But what, my friend, what hope remains for me,
Who start at theft, and blush at perjury ?
Who scarce forbear, tho' Britain's court he sing,
To pluck a titled poet's borrow'd wing ;
A statesman's logic unconvinc'd can hear,
And dare to slumber o'er the Gazetteer ;
Despise a fool in half his pension dress'd,
And strive in vain to laugh at Clodio's jest.

Others with softer smiles, and subtle art,
Can sap the principles, or taint the heart ;
With more address a lover's note convey,
Or bribe a virgin's innocence away :
Well may they rise, while I, whose rustic tongue
Ne'er knew to puzzle right, or varnish wrong,
Spurn'd as a beggar, dreaded as a spy,
Live unregarded, unlamented die.

For what but social guilt the friend endears ?
Who shares Orgilio's crimes, his fortune shares.
But thou, should tempting villany present
All Marlborough hoarded, or all Villiers spent,
Turn from the glittering bribe thy scornful eye,
Nor sell for gold, what gold could never buy,
The peaceful slumber, self-approving day,
Unsullied fame, and conscience ever gay.

The cheated nation's happy fav'rites, see !
Mark whom the great caress, who frown on me !
London ! the needy villain's gen'ral home,
The common-sewer of Paris and of Rome ;
With eager thirst, by folly or by fate,
Sucks in the dregs of each corrupted state.
Forgive my transports on a theme like this,
I cannot bear a French metropolis.

Illustrious Edward ! from the realms of day,
The land of heroes and of saints survey ;
Nor hope the British lineaments to trace,
The rustic grandeur, or the surly grace ;
But, lost in thoughtless ease and empty show,
Behold the warrior dwindled to a beau ;
Sense, freedom, piety, refin'd away,
Of France the mimic, and of Spain the prey.

All that at home no more can beg or steal,
Or like a gibbet better than a wheel :
His'd from the stage, or hooted from the court,
Their air, their dress, their politics, import ;
Obscquious, artful, voluble, and gay,
On Britain's fond credulity they prey.
No gainful trade their industry can 'scape,
They sing, they dance, clean shoes, or cure a
clap :

All sciences a fasting Monsieur knows,
And, bid him go to Hell, to Hell he goes.

Ah ! what avails it, that, from slav'ry far,
I drew the breath of life in English air ;
Was early taught a Briton's right to prize,
And lisp the tale of Henry's victories ;
If the gull'd conqueror receives the chain,
And flattery prevails when arms are vain ?

Studious to please, and ready to submit ;
The supple Gaul was born a parasite :
Still to his int'rest true, where'er he goes,
Wit, brav'ry, worth, his lavish tongue bestows :
In ev'ry face a thousand graces shine,
From ev'ry tongue flows harmony divine.
These arts in vain our rugged natives try,
Strain out with fault'ring diffidence a lie,
And get a kick for awkward flattery.

Besides, with justice, this discerning age
Admires their wond'rous talents for the stage :

Well may they venture on the mimic's art,
Who play from morn to night a borrow'd part ;
Practis'd their master's notions to embrace,
Repeat his maxims, and reflect his face ;
With ev'ry wild absurdity comply,
And view each object with another's eye ;
To shake with laughter ere the jest they hear,
To pour at will the counterfeited tear ;
And, as their patron hints the cold or heat,
To shake in dog-days, in December sweat.

How, when competitors like these contend,
Can surly virtue hope to fix a friend ;
Slaves that with serious impudence beguile,
And lie without a blush, without a smile :
Exalt each trifle, ev'ry vice adore,
Your taste in snuff, your judgment in a whore ;
Can Balbo's eloquence applaud, and swear
He gropes his breeches with a monarch's air.

For arts like these preferr'd, admir'd, caress'd,
They first invade your table, then your breast ;
Explore your secrets with insidious art,
Watch the weak hour, and ransack all the heart ;
Then soon your ill-plac'd confidence repay,
Commence your lords, and govern or betray.

By numbers here from shame or censure free,
All crimes are safe but hated poverty.
This, only this, the rigid law pursues,
This, only this, provokes the snarling Muse.
The sober trader at a tatter'd cloak
Wakes from his dream, and labours for a joke ;
With brisker air the silken courtiers gaze,
And turn the varied taunt a thousand ways.
Of all the griefs that harass the distress'd,
Sure the most bitter is a scornful jest ;
Fate never wounds more deep the gen'rous heart,
Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart.

Has Heaven reserv'd, in pity to the poor,
No pathless waste, or undiscovered shore ?
No secret island in the boundless main ?
No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain ?
Quick let us rise, the happy seats explore,
And bear oppression's insolence no more.
This mournful truth is every where confess'd,
Slow rises worth by poverty depress'd :

But here more slow, where all are slaves to gold,
Where looks are merchandise, and smiles are sold :
Where won by bribes, by flatteries implor'd,
The groom retails the favours of his lord. [cries

But hark ! th' affrighted crowd's tumultuous
Roll through the streets, and thunder to the skies :
Rais'd from some pleasing dream of wealth and pow'r,

Some pompous palace or some blissful bower,
Aghast you start, and scarce with aching sight
Sustain th' approaching fire's tremendous light ;
Swift from pursuing horrors take your way,
And leave your little all to flames a prey ;
Then thro' the world a wretched vagrant roam,
For where can starving merit find a home ?
In vain your mournful narrative disclose,
While all neglect, and most insult your woe.
Should Heaven's just bolts Orgilio's wealth
confound,

And spread his flaming palace on the ground,
Swift o'er the land the dismal rumour flies,
And public mournings pacify the skies ;
The laureat tribe in venal verse relate,
How virtue wars with persecuting fate ;
With well-feign'd gratitude the pension'd band
Refund the plunder of the beggar'd land.

See! while he builds, the gaudy vassals come,
And crowd with sudden wealth the rising dome;
The price of boroughs and of souls restore;
And raise his treasures higher than before:
Now bless'd with all the baubles of the great,
The polish'd marble and the shining plate,
Orgilio sees the golden pile aspire,
And hopes from angry Heav'n another fire.

Could'st thou resign the park and play content,
For the fair banks of Severn or of Trent;
There might'st thou find some elegant retreat,
Some hireling senator's deserted seat;
And stretch thy prospects o'er the smiling land,
For less than rent the dungeons of the Strand;
There prune thy walk, support thy drooping
flowers,

Direct thy rivulets, and twine thy bowers;
And, while thy grounds a cheap repast afford,
Despise the dainties of a venal lord:
There ev'ry bush with Nature's music rings,
There ev'ry breeze bears health upon its wings;
On all thy hours security shall smile,
And bless thine evening walk and morning toil.
Prepare for death if here at night you roam,
And sign your will before you sup from home.
Some fiery fop, with new commission vain,
Who sleeps on brambles till he kills his man;
Some frolic drunkard, reeling from a feast,
Provokes a broil, and stabs you for a jest.
Yet ev'n these heroes, mischievously gay;
Lords of the street and terrours of the way;
Flush'd as they are with folly, youth, and wine,
Their prudent insults to the poor confine;
Afar they mark the flambeau's bright approach,
And shun the shining train, and golden coach.

In vain, these dangers past, your doors you close,
And hope the balmy blessings of repose;
Cruel with guilt, and daring with despair,
The midnight murd'rer bursts the faithless bar;
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest,
And leaves, unseen, a dagger in your breast.

Scarce can our fields, such crowds at Tyburn die,
With hemp the gallows and the fleet supply.
Propose your schemes, ye senatorian band,
Whose ways and means support the sinking land,
Lest ropes be wanting in the tempting spring,
To rig another convoy for the king.

A single jail, in ALFRED's golden reign,
Could half the nation's criminals contain;
Fair Justice, then, without constraint ador'd,
Held high the steady scale, but sheath'd the sword;
No spies were paid, no special juries known,
Blest age! but ah! how diff'rent from our own!

Much could I add,—but see the boat at hand,
The tide retiring calls me from the land: [spent,
Farewell!—When youth, and health, and fortune
Thou fly'st for refuge to the wilds of Kent;
And, tir'd like me with follies and with crimes,
In angry numbers warns't succeeding times;
Then shall thy friend, nor thou refuse his aid,
Still foe to vice, forsake his Cambrian shade; ●
In virtue's cause once more exert his rage,
Thy satire point, and animate thy page.

THE VANITY OF HUMAN WISHES.

IN IMITATION OF THE TENTH SATIRE OF JUVENAL

Let observation with extensive view,
Survey mankind from China to Peru;
Remark each anxious toil, each eager strife,
And watch the busy scenes of crowded life;
Then say how hope and fear, desire and hate,
O'erspread with snares the clouded maze of fate,
Where wav'ring man, betray'd by vent'rous pride
To chase the dreary paths without a guide,
As treach'rous phantoms in the mist delude,
Shuns fancied ills, or chases airy good;
How rarely reason guides the stubborn choice,
Rules the bold hand, or prompts the suppliant
voice;

How nations sink by darling schemes oppress'd,
When vengeance listens to the fool's request.
Fate wings with ev'ry wish th' afflictive dart,
Each gift of nature and each grace of art;
With fatal heat impetuous courage glows,
With fatal sweetness elocution flows,
Impeachment stops the speaker's pow'ful breath,
And restless fire precipitates on death.

But, scarce observ'd, the knowing and the bold
Fall in the gen'ral massacre of gold;
Wide wasting pest! that rages unconfin'd,
And crowds with crimes the records of mankind:
For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws,
For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws;
Wealth heap'd on wealth, nor truth nor safety buys,
The dangers gather as the treasures rise.

Let hist'ry tell where rival kings command,
And dubious title shakes the madd'd land,
When statutes glean the refuse of the sword,
How much more safe the vassal than the lord;
Low sculks the hind beneath the rage of power,
And leaves the wealthy traitor in the Tower,
Untouch'd his cottage, and his slumbers sound,
Tho' confiscation's vultures hover round.

The needy traveller, serene and gay,
Walks the wild heath and sings his toil away.
Does envy seize thee? crush th' upbraiding joy,
Increase his riches, and his peace destroy;
Now fears in dire vicissitude invade,
The rustling brake alarms, and quiv'ring shade,
Nor light nor darkness bring his pain relief,
One shows the plunder, and one hides the thief.

Yet still one gen'ral cry the skies assails,
And gain and grandeur load the tainted gales;
Few know the toiling statesman's fear or care,
Th' insidious rival and the gaping heir.
Once more, Democritus, arise on Earth,
With cheerful wisdom and instructive mirth,
See motley life in modern trappings dress'd,
And feed with varied fools th' eternal jest:
Thou who could'st laugh, where want enchain'd
caprice,

Toil crush'd conceit, and man was of a piece;
Where wealth unlov'd without a mourner dy'd;
And scarce a sycophant was fed by pride;
Where ne'er was known the form of mock debate,
Or seen a new-made mayor's unwieldy state;
Where change of fav'rites made no change of laws,
And senates heard before they judg'd a cause;
How would'st thou shake at Britain's modish tribe,
Dart the quick taunt, and edge the piercing gibe?

Attentive truth and nature to descry,
And pierce each scene with philosophic eye,
To thee were solemn toys, or empty show,
The robes of pleasure, and the veils of woe :
All aid the farce, and all thy mirth maintain,
Whose joys are causeless, or whose griefs are vain.

Such was the scorn that fill'd the sage's mind,
Renew'd at ev'ry glance on human kind ;
How just that scorn ere yet thy voice declare,
Search ev'ry state, and canvass ev'ry pray'r.

Unnumber'd suppliants crowd Preferment's gate,
Thirst for wealth, and burning to be great ;
Delusive Fortune hears th' incessant call,
They mount, they shine, evaporate and fall.
On ev'ry stage the foes of peace attend,
Late dogs their flight, and insult mocks their end.
Love ends with hope, the sinking statesman's door
Closes in the morning worshipper no more ;
For growing names the weekly scribbler lies,
To growing wealth the dedicator flies ;
From ev'ry room descends the painted face,
That hung the bright palladium of the place ;
And, smok'd in kitchens, or in auctions sold,
To better features yields the frame of gold ;
For now no more we trace in ev'ry line
Heroic worth, benevolence divine :
The form distorted justifies the fall,
And detestation rids th' indignant wall.

But will not Britain hear the last appeal,
Sign her foes' doom, or guard her fav'rites' zeal ?
Through Freedom's sons no more remonstrance
Rings,

Degrading nobles and controlling kings ;
Our supple tribes repress their patriot throats,
And ask no questions but the price of votes ;
With weekly libels and septennial ale,
Their wish is full to riot and to rail.

In full-blown dignity, see Wolsey stand,
Law in his voice, and fortune in his hand :
To him the church, the realm, their pow'rs con-
sign,

Through him the rays of regal bounty shine ;
Turn'd by his nod the stream of honour flows,
His smile alone security bestows :
Till to new heights his restless wishes tow'r,
Claim leads to claim, and pow'r advances pow'r ;
Till conquest unresisted ceas'd to please,
And rights submitted left him none to seize :
At length his sov'reign frowns — the train of state
Mark the keen glance, and watch the sign to hate.
Where'er he turns, he meets a stranger's eye,
His suppliants scorn him, and his followers fly ;
How drops at once the pride of awful state,
The golden canopy, the glitt'ring plate,
The regal palace, the luxurious board,
The liv'ried army, and the menial lord.
With age, with cares, with maladies oppress'd,
He seeks the refuge of monastic rest.
Grief aids disease, remember'd folly stings,
And his last sighs reproach the faith of kings.

Speak thou whose thoughts at humble peace repine,
Shall Wolsey's wealth with Wolsey's end be thine ?
Or liv'st thou now, with safer pride content,
The wisest justice on the banks of Trent ?
For, why did Wolsey, near the steeps of fate,
On weak foundations raise th' enormous weight ?
Why but to sink beneath misfortune's blow,
With louder ruin to the gulphs below.

What gave great Villiers to th' assassin's knife,
And fix'd disease on Harley's closing life ?

What murder'd Wentworth, and what exil'd Hyde,
By kings protected, and to kings ally'd ?
What but their wish indulg'd in courts to shine,
And pow'r too great to keep, or to resign.

When first the college rolls receive his name,
The young enthusiast quits his ease for fame ;
Resistless burns the fever of renown,
Caught from the strong contagion of the gown :
O'er Bodley's dome his future labours spread,
And Bacon's mansion * trembles o'er his head.
Are these thy views ? Proceed, illustrious youth,
And Virtue guard thee to the throne of Truth !
Yet should thy soul indulge the gen'rous heat
Till captive Science yields her last retreat ;
Should reason guide thee with her brightest ray,
And pour on misty doubt resistless day ;
Should no false kindness lure to loose delight,
Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright ;
Should tempting Novelty thy cell refrain,
And Sloth effuse her opiate fumes in vain ;
Should Beauty blunt on fops her fatal dart,
Nor claim the triumph of a letter'd heart ;
Should no disease thy torpid veins invade,
Nor Melancholy's phantoms haunt thy shade ;
Yet hope not life from grief or danger free,
Nor think the doom of man revers'd for thee :
Deign on the passing world to turn thine eyes,
And pause awhile from letters to be wise ;
There mark what ills the scholar's life assail,
Toil, envy, want, the patron, and the jail.
See nations, slowly wise and meanly just,
To buried merit raise the tardy bust.
If dreams yet flatter, once again attend,
Hear Lydiat's life, and Galileo's end.

Nor deem, when Learning her last prize bestows,
The glittering eminence exempt from foes ;
See, when the vulgar 'scapes, despis'd or aw'd,
Rebellion's vengeful talons seize on Laud.
From meaner minds, though smaller fines content
The plunder'd palace, or sequester'd rent :
Mark'd out by dang'rous parts, he meets the shock,
And fatal Learning leads him to the block :
Around his tomb let Art and Genius weep,
But hear his death, ye blockheads, hear and sleep.

The festal blazes, the triumphal show,
The ravish'd standard, and the captive foe,
The senate's thanks, the gazette's pompous tale,
With force resistless o'er the brave prevail.
Such bribes the rapid Greek o'er Asia whirl'd,
For such the steady Roman shook the world ;
For such in distant lands the Britons shine,
And stain with blood the Danube or the Rhine ;
This pow'r has praise, that virtue scarce can warm
Till fame supplies the universal charm.
Yet Reason frowns on War's unequal game,
Where wasted nations raise a single name ; [gret,
And mortgag'd states their grandsires' wreaths re-
From age to age in everlasting debt ;
Wreaths which at last the dear-bought right convey
To rust on medals, or on stones decay.

On what foundation stands the warrior's pride,
How just his hopes, let Swedish Charles decide ;
A frame of adamant, a soul of fire,
No dangers fright him, and no labours tire ,

* There is a tradition, that the study of Friar
Bacon, built on an arch over the bridge, will fall
when a man greater than Bacon shall pass under it.
To prevent so shocking an accident, it was pulled down many years since.

O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,
 Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain ;
 No joys to him pacific sceptres yield,
 War sounds the trump, he rushes to the field ;
 Behold surrounding kings their pow'rs combine,
 And one capitulate, and one resign ; [vain ;
 Peace courts his hand, but spreads her charms in
 " Think nothing gain'd," he cries, " till nought remain,

On Moscow's walls till Gothic standards fly,
 And all be mine beneath the polar sky."
 The march begins in military state,
 And nations on his eye suspended wait ;
 Stern Famine guards the solitary coast,
 And Winter barricades the realms of Frost ;
 He comes, nor want nor cold his course delay ; —
 Hide, blushing Glory, hide Pultowa's day :
 The vanquish'd hero leaves his broken bands,
 And shows his miseries in distant lands ;
 Condemn'd a needy supplicant to wait,
 While ladies interpose, and slaves debate.
 But did not Chance at length her error mend ?
 Did no subverted empire mark his end ?
 Did rival monarchs give the fatal wound ?
 Or hostile millions press him to the ground ?
 His fall was destined to a barren strand,
 A petty fortress, and a dubious hand ;
 He left the name, at which the world grew pale,
 To point a moral, or adorn a tale.

All times their scenes of pompous woes afford,
 From Persia's tyrant to Bavaria's lord.
 In gay hostility and barb'rous pride,
 With half mankind embattled at his side,
 Great Xerxes comes to seize the certain prey,
 And starves exhausted regions in his way ;
 Attendant Flatt'ry counts his myriads o'er,
 Till counted myriads soothe his pride no more ;
 Fresh praise is try'd till madness fires his mind,
 The waves he lashes, and enchains the wind ;
 New pow'rs are claim'd, new pow'rs are still bestow'd,

Till rude resistance lops the spreading god ;
 The daring Greeks deride the martial show,
 And heap their valleys with the gaudy foe ;
 Th' insulted sea with humbler thought he gains,
 A single skiff to speed his flight remains ;
 Th' encumber'd oar scarce leaves the dreaded coast
 Through purple billows and a floating host.

The bold Bavarian, in a luckless hour,
 Tries the dread summits of Cæsarean pow'r,
 With unexpected legions bursts away,
 And sees defenceless realms receive his sway :
 Short sway ! fair Austria spreads her mournful
 charms,

The queen, the beauty, sets the world in arms ;
 From hill to hill the beacon's rousing blaze
 Spreads wide the hope of plunder and of praise ;
 The fierce Croatian, and the wild Hussar,
 With all the sons of ravage crowd the war ;
 The baffled prince, in honour's flatt'ring bloom
 Of hasty greatness, finds the fatal doom ;
 His foes' derision, and his subjects' blame,
 And steals to death from anguish and from shame.

" Enlarge my life with multitude of days !"
 In health, in sickness, thus the suppliant prays :
 Hides from himself its state, and shuns to know,
 That life protracted is protracted woe.
 Time hovers o'er, impatient to destroy,
 And shuts up all the passages of joy :

In vain their gifts the bounteous seasons pour,
 The fruit autumnal, and the vernal flow'r ;
 With listless eyes the dotard views the store,
 He views, and wonders that they please no more ;
 Now pall the tasteless meats, and joyless wines,
 And Luxury with sighs her slave resigns.
 Approach, ye minstrels, try the soothing strain,
 Diffuse the tuneful lenitives of pain :
 No sounds, alas ! would touch th' impervious ear,
 Though dancing mountains witness'd Orpheus
 near ;

Nor lute nor lyre his feeble pow'rs attend,
 Nor sweeter music of a virtuous friend ;
 But everlasting dictates crowd his tongue,
 Perversely grave, or positively wrong.
 'The still returning tale, and ling'ring jest,
 Perplex the fawning niece, and pamper'd guest,
 While growing hopes scarce awe the gath'ring ~~men~~,
 And scarce a legacy can bribe to hear :
 The watchful guests still hint the last offence ;
 The daughter's petulance, the son's expense,
 Improve his heady rage with treach'rous skill,
 And mould his passions till they make his will.

Unnumber'd maladies his joints invade,
 Lay siege to life, and press the dire blockade ;
 But unextinguish'd av'rice still remains,
 And dreaded losses aggravate his pains ;
 He turns, with anxious heart and crippled hands,
 His bonds of debt, and mortgages of lands ;
 Or views his coffers with suspicious eyes,
 Unlocks his gold, and counts it till he dies.

But grant, the virtues of a temp'rate prime
 Bless with an age exempt from scorn or crime ;
 An age that melts with unperceiv'd decay,
 And glides in modest innocence away ;
 Whose peaceful day benevolence endears,
 Whose night congratulating conscience cheers ;
 The gen'ral fav'rite as the gen'ral friend :
 Such age there is, and who shall wish its end ?

Yet ev'n on this her load Misfortune flings,
 To press the weary minutes' flagging wings ;
 New sorrow rises as the day returns,
 A sister sickens, or a daughter mourns.
 Now kindred Merit fills the sable bier,
 Now lacerated Friendship claims a tear ;
 Year chases year, decay pursues decay,
 Still drops some joy from with'ring life away ;
 New forms arise, and diff'rent views engage,
 Superfluous lags the vet'ran on the stage,
 Till pitying Nature signs the last release,
 And bids afflicted worth retire to peace.

But few there are whom hours like these await,
 Who set unclouded in the gulphs of Fate.
 From Lydia's monarch should the search descend,
 By Solon caution'd to regard his end,
 In life's last scene what prodigies surprise,
 Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise !
 From Marlborough's eyes the streams of dotage flow,
 And Swift expires a driv'ler and a show.

The teeming mother, anxious for her race,
 Begs for each birth the fortune of a face ;
 Yet Vane could tell what ills from beauty spring ;
 And Sedley curs'd the form that pleas'd a king.
 Ye nymphs of rosy lips and radiant eyes,
 Whom pleasure keeps too busy to be wise ;
 Whom joys with soft varieties invite,
 By day the frolic, and the dance by night ;
 Who frown with vanity, who smile with art,
 And ask the latest fashion of the heart ;

What care, what rules, your heedless charms shall save,
 Each nymph your rival, and each youth your slave?
 Against your fame with fondness hate combines,
 The rival batters, and the lover mines.
 With distant voice neglected Virtue calls,
 Less heard and less, the faint remonstrance falls;
 Tir'd with contempt, she quits the slipp'ry rein,
 And Pride and Prudence take her seat in vain.
 In crowd at once, where none the pass defend,
 The harmless freedom, and the private friend.
 The guardians yield, by force superior ply'd:
 To Int'rest, Prudence; and to Flatt'ry, Pride.
 Here Beauty falls betray'd, despis'd, distress'd,
 And hissing Infamy proclaims the rest.

Where then shall Hope and Fear their objects find?
 Must dull Suspense corrupt the stagnant mind?
 Must helpless man, in ignorance sedate,
 Toll darkling down the torrent of his fate?
 Must no dislike alarm, no wishes rise,
 No cries invoke the mercies of the skies?
 Inquirer, cease; petitions yet remain
 Which Heav'n may hear, nor deem religion vain.
 Still raise for good the supplicating voice,
 But leave to Heav'n the measure and the choice:
 Safe in his pow'r, whose eyes discern afar
 The secret ambush of a specious pray'r;
 Implore his aid, in his decisions rest,
 Secure, whate'er he gives, he gives the best.
 Yet, when the sense of sacred presence fires,
 And strong devotion to the skies aspires,
 Pour forth thy fervours for a healthful mind,
 Obedient passions, and a will resign'd;
 For love, which scarce collective man can fill;
 For patience, sov'reign o'er transmuted ill;
 For faith, that, panting for a happier seat,
 Counts death kind Nature's signal of retreat:
 These goods for man the laws of Heav'n ordain,
 These goods he grants, who grants the pow'r to gain;
 With these celestial Wisdom calms the mind,
 And makes the happiness she does not find.

PROLOGUE,

POKEN BY MR. GARRICK, AT THE OPENING OF THE THEATRE-ROYAL, DRURY-LANE, 1747.

When Learning's triumph o'er her barb'rous foes
 First rear'd the stage, immortal Shakspeare rose;
 Each change of many-colour'd life he drew,
 Exhausted worlds, and then imagin'd new:
 Existence saw him spurn her bounded reign,
 And panting Time toil'd after him in vain.
 His pow'rful strokes presiding Truth impress'd,
 And unresisted Passion storm'd the breast.

Then Jonson came, instructed from the school,
 To please in method, and invent by rule;
 His studious patience and laborious art,
 By regular approach assail'd the heart:
 Cold Approbation gave the ling'ring bays,
 For those who durst not censure, scarce could praise.

A mortal born, he met the gen'ral doom,
 But left, like Egypt's kings, a lasting tomb.

The wits of Charles found easier ways to fame,
 Nor wish'd for Jonson's art, or Shakspeare's flame.
 Themselves they studied, as they felt they writ;
 Intrigue was plot, obscenity was wit.

Vice always found a sympathetic friend;
 They pleas'd their age, and did not aim to mend.
 Yet bards like these aspir'd to lasting praise,
 And proudly hop'd to pimp in future days.
 Their cause was gen'ral, their supports were strong,
 Their slaves were willing, and their reign was long:
 Till Shame regain'd the post that Sense betray'd,
 And Virtue call'd Oblivion to her aid.

Then, crush'd by rules, and weaken'd as refin'd,
 For years the pow'r of Tragedy declin'd;
 From bard to bard the frigid caution crept,
 Till Declamation roar'd whilst Passion slept;
 Yet still did Virtue deign the stage to tread,
 Philosophy remain'd, though Nature fled.
 But forc'd, at length, her ancient reign to quit,
 She saw great Faustus lay the ghost of Wit;
 Exulting Folly hail'd the joyful day,
 And Pantomime and Song confirm'd her sway.

But who the coming changes can presage,
 And mark the future periods of the stage?
 Perhaps, if skill could distant times explore,
 New Behns, new Durseys, yet remain in store;
 Perhaps where Lear has rav'd, and Hamlet dy'd,
 On flying cars new sorcerers may ride:
 Perhaps (for who can guess th' effects of chance?)
 Here Hunt may box, or Mahomet * may dance.

Hard is his lot that, here by Fortune plac'd,
 Must watch the wild vicissitudes of taste;
 With every meteor of caprice must play,
 And chase the new-blown bubbles of the day.
 Ah! let not Censure term our fate our choice,
 The stage but echoes back the public voice;
 The drama's laws, the drama's patrons give,
 For we that live to please, must please to live.

Then prompt no more the follies you decry,
 As tyrants doom their tools of guilt to die;
 'T is yours, this night, to bid the reign commence
 Of rescued Nature and reviving Sense;
 To chase the charms of sound, the pomp of show,
 For useful mirth and salutary woe;
 Bid scenic Virtue form the rising age,
 And Truth diffuse her radiance from the stage.

ON THE

DEATH OF MR. ROBERT LEVET,

A PRACTISER IN PHYSIC.

CONDEMN'D to Hope's delusive mine,
 As on we toil from day to day,
 By sudden blasts, or slow decline,
 Our social comforts drop away.

Well try'd through many a varying year,
 See Levett to the grave descend,
 Officious, innocent, sincere,
 Of ev'ry friendless name the friend.

Yet still he fills affection's eye,
 Obscurely wise, and coarsely kind;
 Nor, letter'd Arrogance, deny
 Thy praise to merit unrefin'd.

* Hunt, a famous boxer on the stage; Mahomet, a rope-dancer, who had exhibited at Covent-Garden theatre the winter before, said to be a Turk.

When fainting nature call'd for aid,
And hov'ring death prepar'd the blow,
His vig'rous remedy display'd
The pow'r of art without the show.

In Misery's darkest cavern known,
His useful care was ever nigh,
Where hopeless Anguish pour'd his groan,
And lonely Want retir'd to die.

No summons mock'd by chill delay,
No petty gain disdain'd by pride,
The modest wants of ev'ry day
The toil of ev'ry day supply'd.

His virtues walk'd their narrow round,
Nor made a pause, nor left a void ;
And sure th' Eternal Master found
The single talent well employ'd.

The busy day — the peaceful night,
Unfelt, uncounted, glided by ;
His frame was firm — his powers were bright,
Though now his eightieth year was nigh.

Then with no fiery throbbing pain,
No cold gradations of decay,
Death broke at once the vital chain,
And freed his soul the nearest way.

JOHN ARMSTRONG.

JOHN ARMSTRONG, a physician and poet, was born about 1709 at Castleton in Roxburghshire, where his father was the parish minister. He was brought up to the medical profession, which he studied at the university of Edinburgh, where he took his degree. He settled in London in the double capacity of physician and man of letters, and he rendered himself known by writings in each. In 1744 his capital work, the didactic poem, entitled "The Art of preserving Health," made its appearance, and raised his literary reputation to a height which his subsequent publications scarcely sustained. It has therefore been selected for this work; and it may be affirmed, that of the class to which it belongs, scarcely any English performance can claim superior merit. Its topics are judiciously chosen from all those which can add grace or beauty to a difficult subject; and as he was naturally gifted with a musical ear, his lines are scarcely ever harsh.

In 1760 Dr. Armstrong had interest enough to obtain the appointment of physician to the army in Germany, which he retained till its return. He then resumed his practice in London; but his habits and manners opposed an insurmountable bar against popular success. He possessed undoubted abilities, but a morbid sensibility preyed on his temper, and his intellectual efforts were damped by a languid listlessness. He died in September, 1779, leaving considerable savings from a very moderate income.

THE ART OF PRESERVING HEALTH.

Book I.

AIR.

DAUGHTER of Pæon, queen of every joy,
Hygeia*; whose indulgent smile sustains
The various race luxuriant Nature pours,
And on th' immortal essences bestows
Immortal youth; auspicious, O descend!
Thou cheerful guardian of the rolling year,
Whether thou wanton'st on the western gale,
Or shak'st the rigid pinions of the North,
Diffusest life and vigour through the tracts
Of air, through earth, and ocean's deep domain.
When through the blue serenity of Heaven
Thy power approaches, all the wasteful host
Of Pain and Sickness, squalid and deform'd,
Confounded sink into the loathsome gloom,
Where in deep Erebus involv'd the Fiends
Grow more profane. Whatever shapes of death,
Shook from the hideous chambers of the globe,
Swarm through the shuddering air: whatever plagues
Or meagre famine breeds, or with slow wings
Rise from the putrid wat'ry element,
The damp waste forest, motionless and rank,
That smothers earth, and all the breathless winds,
Or the vile carnage of th' inhuman field;
Whatever baneful breathes the rotten South;
Whatever ills th' extremes or sudden change
Of cold and hot, or moist and dry produce;

* Hygeia, the goddess of health, was, according to the genealogy of the heathen deities, the daughter of Æsculapius; who, as well as Apollo, was distinguished by the name of Pæon.

They fly thy pure effulgence: they and all
The secret poisons of avenging Heaven,
And all the pale tribes halting in the train
Of Vice and heedless Pleasure: or if aught
The comet's glare amid the burning sky,
Mournful eclipse, or planets ill combin'd,
Portend disastrous to the vital world;
Thy salutary power averts their rage,
Averts the general bane: and but for thee
Nature would sicken, nature soon would die.

Without thy cheerful active energy
No rapture swells the breast, no poet sings,
No more the maids of Helicon delight.
Come then with me, O goddess, heav'nly gay!
Begin the song; and let it sweetly flow,
And let it wisely teach thy wholesome laws:
"How best the fickle fabric to support
Of mortal man; in healthful body how
A healthful mind the longest to maintain."
'T is hard, in such a strife of rules, to choose
The best, and those of most extensive use;
Harder in clear and animated song
Dry philosophic precepts to convey.
Yet with thy aid the secret wilds I trace
Of Nature, and with daring steps proceed
Through paths the Muses never trod before.

Nor should I wander doubtful of my way,
Had I the lights of that sagacious mind
Which taught to check the pestilential fire,
And quell the deadly Python of the Nile.
O thou belov'd by all the graceful arts,
Thou long the fav'rite of the healing powers,
Indulge, O Mead! a well-design'd essay,
Howe'er imperfect: and permit that I
My little knowledge with my country share,
Till you the rich Asclepian stores unlock,
And with new graces dignify the theme.

Ye who amid this feverish world would wear
 A body free of pain, of cares a mind ;
 Fly the rank city, shun its turbid air ;
 Breathe not the chaos of eternal smoke
 And volatile corruption, from the dead,
 The dying, sick'ning, and the living world
 Exhal'd, to sully Heaven's transparent dome
 With dim mortality. It is not air
 That from a thousand lungs reeks back to thine,
 Sated with exhalations rank and fell,
 The spoil of dunghills, and the putrid thaw
 Of nature ; when from shape and texture she
 Relapses into fighting elements :
 It is not air, but floats a nauseous mass
 Of all obscene, corrupt, offensive things.
 Much moisture hurts ; but here a sordid bath,
 With oily rancour fraught, relaxes more
 The solid frame than simple moisture can.
 Besides, immur'd in many a sullen bay
 That never felt the freshness of the breeze,
 This slumb'ring deep remains, and ranker grows
 With sickly rest : and (though the lungs abhor
 To drink the dun fuliginous abyss)
 Did not the acid vigour of the mine,
 Roll'd from so many thundering chimnies, tame
 The putrid steams that overswarm the sky ;
 This caustic venom would perhaps corrode
 Those tender cells that draw the vital air,
 In vain with all the unctuous rills bedew'd ;
 Or by the drunken venous tubes, that yawn
 In countless pores o'er all the pervious skin
 Imbib'd, would poison the balsamic blood,
 And rouse the heart to every fever's rage.
 While yet you breathe, away ; the rural wilds
 Invite ; the mountains call you, and the vales ;
 The woods, the streams, and each ambrosial breeze
 That fans the ever-undulating sky ;
 A kindly sky ! whose fost'ring power regales
 Man, beast, and all the vegetable reign.
 Find then some woodland scene where Nature smiles
 Benign, where all her honest children thrive.
 To us there wants not many a happy seat !
 Look round the smiling land, such numbers rise
 We hardly fix, bewilder'd in our choice.
 See where enthron'd in adamant state,
 Proud of her bards, imperial Windsor sits ;
 Where choose thy seat in some aspiring grove
 Fast by the slowly-winding Thames ; or where Broader she laves fair Richmond's green retreats,
 (Richmond that sees an hundred villas rise
 Rural or gay.) O ! from the summer's rage,
 O ! wrap me in the friendly gloom that hides
 Umbrageous Ham ! — But if the busy town
 Attract thee still to toil for power of gold,
 Sweetly thou may'st thy vacant hours possess
 In Hampstead, courted by the western wind ;
 Or Greenwich, waving o'er the winding flood ;
 Or lose the world amid the sylvan wilds
 Of Dulwich, yet by barbarous arts unspoil'd.
 Green rise the Kentish hills in cheerful air ;
 But on the marshy plains that Lincoln spreads
 Build not, nor rest too long thy wandering feet.
 For on a rustic throne of dewy turf,
 With baneful fogs her aching temples bound,
 Quartana there presides ; a meagre fiend
 Begot by Eurus, when his brutal force
 Compress'd the slothful Naiad of the fens.
 From such a mixture sprung, this fitful pest
 With fev'rish blasts subdues the sick'ning land :
 Cold tremours come, with mighty love of rest,

Convulsive yawnings, lassitude, and pains
 That sting the burden'd brows, fatigue the loins,
 And rack the joints, and every torpid limb ;
 Then parching heat succeeds, till copious sweat
 O'erflow : a short relief from former ills
 Beneath repeated shocks the wretches pine,
 The vigour sinks, the habit melts away :
 The cheerful, pure, and animated bloom
 Dies from the face, with squalid atrophy
 Devour'd, in sallow melancholy clad.
 And oft the sorceress, in her sated wrath,
 Resigns them to the furies of her train :
 The bloated Hydrops, and the yellow Fiend
 Ting'd with her own accumulated gall.

In quest of sites, avoid the mournful plain
 Where osiers thrive, and trees that love the lake ;
 Where many lazy muddy rivers flow :
 Nor for the wealth that all the Indies roll
 Fix near the marshy margin of the main.
 For from the humid soil and wat'ry reign
 Eternal vapours rise ; the spongy air
 For ever weeps : or, turgid with the weight
 Of waters, pours a sounding deluge down.
 Skies such as these let every mortal shun
 Who dreads the dropsy, palsy, or the gout,
 Tertian, corrosive scurvy, or moist catarrh ;
 Or any other injury that grows
 From raw-spun fibres idle and unstrung,
 Skin ill-perspiring, and the purple flood
 In languid eddies loitering into phlegm.

Yet not alone from humid skies we pine ;
 For air may be too dry. The subtle Heaven,
 That winnows into dust the blasted downs,
 Bare and extended wide without a stream,
 Too fast imbibes th' attenuated lymph
 Which, by the surface, from the blood exhales
 The lungs grow rigid, and with toil essay
 Their flexible vibrations ! or inflam'd,
 Their tender ever-moving structure thaws.
 Spoil'd of its limpid vehicle, the blood
 A mass of lees remains, a drossy tide
 That slow as Lethe wanders through the veins ;
 Unactive in the services of life,
 Unfit to lead its pitchy current through
 The secret mazy channels of the brain.
 The melancholic fiend (that worst despair
 Of physic) hence the rust-complexion'd man
 Pursues, whose blood is dry, whose fibres gain
 Too stretch'd a tone ; and hence in climes adust
 So sudden tumults seize the trembling nerves,
 And burning fevers glow with double rage.

Fly, if you can, these violent extremes
 Of air ; the wholesome is nor moist nor dry.
 But as the power of choosing is deny'd
 To half mankind, a further task ensues ;
 How best to mitigate these fell extremes,
 How breathe unhurt the withering element,
 Or hazy atmosphere ; though custom moulds
 To every clime the soft Promethean clay ;
 And he who first the fogs of Essex breath'd
 (So kind is native air) may in the fens
 Of Essex from inveterate ills revive
 At pure Montpelier or Bermuda caught.
 But if the raw and oozy Heaven offend ;
 Correct the soil, and dry the sources up
 Of wat'ry exhalation : wide and deep
 Conduct your trenches through the quaking bog ;
 Solicitous, with all your winding arts,
 Betray the unwilling lake into the stream ;
 And weed the forest, and invoke the winds

To break the toils where strangled vapours lie;
 Or through the thickets send the crackling flames.
 Meantime at home with cheerful fires dispel
 The humid air: and let your table smoke
 With solid roast or bak'd; or what the herds
 Of tamer breed supply; or what the wilds
 Field to the toilsome pleasures of the chase.
 Generous your wine, the boast of ripening years;
 But frugal be your cups: the languid frame,
 Rapid and sunk from yesterday's debauch,
 Shrink from the cold embrace of wat'ry Heavens.
 But neither these nor all Apollo's arts,
 Disarm the dangers of the dropping sky,
 Unless with exercise and manly toil [blood.
 You brace your nerves, and spur the lagging
 The fatt'ning clime let all the sons of ease
 Avoid; if indolence would wish to live,
 To yawn and loiter out the long slow year
 In fairer skies. If droughty regions parch [blood;
 The skin and lungs, and bake the thickening
 Deep in the waving forest choose your seat,
 Where fuming trees refresh the thirsty air;
 And wake the fountains from their secret beds,
 And into lakes dilate their rapid stream.
 Here spread your gardens wide; and let the cool,
 The moist relaxing vegetable store
 Prevail in each repast: your food supply'd
 By bleeding life, be gently wasted down,
 By soft decoction and a mellowing heat,
 To liquid balm; or, if the solid mass
 You choose, tormented in the boiling wave:
 That through the thirsty channels of the blood
 A smooth diluted chyle may ever flow.
 The fragrant dairy from its cool recess
 Its nectar acid or benign will pour
 To drown your thirst; or let the mantling bowl
 Of keen sherbet the fickle taste relieve.
 Or with the viscous blood the simple stream
 Will hardly mingle; and fermented cups
 Will dissipate more moisture than they give.
 Yet when pale seasons rise, or Winter rolls
 His horrors o'er the world, thou may'st indulge
 In feasts more genial, and impatient broach
 The mellow cask. Then too the scourging air
 Provokes to keener toils than sultry droughts
 Allow. But rarely we such skies blaspheme.
 Kept'd in continual rains, or with raw fogs
 Bedew'd, our seasons droop: incumbent still
 A ponderous Heaven o'erwhelms the sinking soul.
 Lab'ring with storms in heapy mountains rise
 The imbattled clouds, as if the Stygian shades
 Had left the dungeon of eternal night,
 Till black with thunder all the South descends.
 Scarce in a showerless day the Heavens indulge
 Our melting clime; except the baleful East
 Withers the tender spring, and sourly checks
 The fancy of the year. Our fathers talk
 Of summers, balmy air, and skies serene.
 Good Heaven! for what unexpiated crimes
 This dismal change! the brooding elements,
 Do they, your powerful ministers of wrath,
 Prepare some fierce exterminating plague?
 Or is it fix'd in the decrees above
 That lofty Albion melt into the main?
 Indulgent Nature! O dissolve this gloom!
 Bind in eternal adamant the winds
 That drown or wither; give the genial West
 To breathe, and in its turn the sprightly North:
 And may once more the circling seasons rule
 The year; not mix in every monstrous day.

Meantime, the moist malignity to shun [paign
 Of burthen'd skies; mark where the dry cham-
 Swells into cheerful hills: where marjoram
 And thyme, the love of bees, perfume the air;
 And where the cynorrhodon * with the rose
 For fragrance vies; for in the thirsty soil
 Most fragrant breathe the aromatic tribes.
 There bid thy roofs high on the basking steep
 Ascend, there light thy hospitable fires,
 And let them see the winter morn arise,
 The summer evening blushing in the West:
 While with umbrageous oaks the ridge behind
 O'erhung, defends you from the blust'ring North,
 And bleak affliction of the peevish East.
 Oh! when the growling winds contend, and all
 The sounding forest fluctuates in the storm;
 To sink in warm repose, and hear the din
 Howl o'er the steady battlements, delights
 Above the luxury of vulgar sleep.
 The murmuring rivulet, and the hoarser strain
 Of waters rushing o'er the slippery rocks,
 Will nightly lull you to ambrosial rest.
 To please the fancy is no trifling good,
 Where health is studied; for whatever moves
 The mind with calm delight, promotes the just
 And natural movements of th' harmonious frame.
 Besides, the sportive brook for ever shakes
 The trembling air, that floats from hill to hill,
 From vale to mountain, with incessant change
 Of purest element, refreshing still
 Your airy seat, and uninfected gods.
 Chiefly for this I praise the man who builds
 High on the breezy ridge, whose lofty sides
 Th' ethereal deep with endless billows chafes.
 His pure mansion nor contagious years
 Shall reach, nor deadly putrid airs annoy.

But may no fogs, from lake or fenny plain,
 Involve my hill! and wheresoe'er you build,
 Whether on sun-burnt Epsom, or the plains
 Wash'd by the silent Lee; in Chelsea low,
 Or high Blackheath with wintry winds assail'd;
 Dry be your house: but airy more than warm.
 Else every breath of ruder wind will strike
 Your tender body through with rapid pains;
 Fierce coughs will tease you, hoarseness bind your
 voice,

Or moist gravedo load your aching brows.
 These to defy, and all the fates that dwell
 In cloister'd air tainted with steaming life,
 Let lofty ceilings grace your ample rooms;
 And still at azure noontide may your dome
 At every window drink the liquid sky.

Need we the sunny situation here,
 And theatres open to the South, commend?
 Here, where the morning's misty breath infects
 More than the torrid noon? How sickly grow,
 How pale, the plants in those ill-fated vales,
 That, circled round with the gigantic heap
 Of mountains, never felt, nor ever hope
 To feel, the genial vigour of the Sun!
 While on the neighbouring hill the rose inflames
 The verdant spring; in virgin beauty blows
 The tender lily, languishingly sweet:
 O'er every hedge the wanton woodbine roves,
 And autumn ripens in the summer's ray.
 Nor less the warmer living tribes demand
 The foot'ring Sun, whose energy divine

* The wild rose, or that which grows on the common brier.

Dwells not in mortal fire; whose gen'rous heat
Glow through the mass of grosser elements,
And kindles into life the ponderous spheres.
Cheer'd by thy kind invigorating warmth,
We court thy beams, great majesty of day!
If not the soul, the regent of this world,
First-born of Heaven, and only less than God!

Book II.

DIET.

ENOUGH of air. A desert subject now,
Rougher and wilder, rises to my sight.
A barren waste, where not a garland grows
To bind the Muse's brow; not ev'n a proud
Stupendous solitude frowns o'er the heath,
To rouse a noble horror in the soul:
But rugged paths fatigue, and error leads
Through endless labyrinths the devious feet.
Farewell, ethereal fields! the humbler arts
Of life; the table and the homely gods
Demand my song. Elysian gales, adieu!

The blood, the fountain whence the spirits flow,
The generous stream that waters every part,
And motion, vigour, and warm life conveys
To every particle that moves or lives;
This vital fluid, through unnumber'd tubes
Pour'd by the heart, and to the heart again
Refund'd; scourg'd for ever round and round;
Enrag'd with heat and toil, at last forgets
Its balmy nature; virulent and thin
It grows; and now, but that a thousand gates
Are open to its flight, it would destroy
The parts it cherish'd and repair'd before.
Besides, the flexible and tender tubes
Melt in the mildest most nectareous tide
That ripening Nature rolls; as in the stream
Its crumbling banks; but what the force
Of plastic fluids hourly batters down,
That very force, those plastic particles
Rebuild: so mutable the state of man.
For this the watchful appetite was given,
Daily with fresh materials to repair
This unavoidable expense of life,
This necessary waste of flesh and blood.
Hence, the concoctive powers, with various art,
Subdue the cruder aliments to chyle;
The chyle to blood; the foamy purple tide
To liquors, which through finer arteries
To different parts their winding course pursue;
To try new changes, and new forms put on,
Or for the public, or some private use.

Nothing so foreign but th' athletic hind
Can labour into blood. The hungry meal
Alone he fears, or aliments too thin;
By violent powers too easily subdu'd,
Too soon expell'd. His daily labour thaws,
To friendly chyle, the most rebellious mass
That salt can harden, or the smoke of years;
Nor does his gorge the luscious bacon rue,
Nor that which Cestria sends, tenacious paste
Of solid milk. But ye of softer clay,
Infirm and delicate! and ye who waste
With pale and bloated sloth the tedious day!
Avoid the stubborn aliment, avoid
The full repast; and let sagacious age
Grow wiser, lesson'd by the dropping teeth.
Half subtiliz'd to chyle, the liquid food

Readiest obeys th' assimilating powers;
And soon the tender vegetable mass
Relents; and soon the young of those that tread
The steadfast earth, or cleave the green abyss,
Or pathless sky. And if the steer must fall,
In youth and sanguine vigour let him die;
Nor stay till rigid age, or heavy ails,
Absolve him ill-requited from the yoke.
Some with high forage, and luxuriant ease,
Indulge the veteran ox; but wiser thou,
From the bald mountain or the barren downs,
Expect the flocks by frugal Nature fed;
A race of purer blood, with exercise
Refin'd and scanty fare: for, old or young,
The stall'd are never healthy; nor the cramm'd
Not all the culinary arts can tame
To wholesome food, the abominable growth
Of rest and gluttony; the prudent taste
Rejects like bane such loathsome lusciousness.
The languid stomach curses even the pure
Delicious fat, and all the race of oil:
For more the oily aliments relax
Its feeble tone; and with the eager lymph
(Fond to incorporate with all it meets)
Coily they mix, and shun with slippery wile
The woo'd embrace. Th' irresoluble oil,
So gentle late and blandishing, in floods
Of rancid bile o'erflows: what tumults hence,
What horrors rise, were nauseous to relate.
Choose leaner viands, ye whose jovial make
Too fast the gummy nutriment imbibes:
Choose sober meals; and rouse to active life
Your cumbrous clay; nor on the enfeebling down,
Irresolute, protract the morning hours.
But let the man whose bones are thinly clad,
With cheerful ease and succulent repast
Improve his habit if he can; for each
Extreme departs from perfect sanity.

I could relate what table this demands,
Or that complexion: what the various powers
Of various foods: but fifty years would roll,
And fifty more before the tale were done.
Besides, there often lurks some nameless, strange,
Peculiar thing; nor on the skin display'd,
Felt in the pulse, nor in the habit seen;
Which finds a poison in the food that most
The temperature affects. There are, whose blood
Impetuous rages through the turgid veins,
Who better bear the fiery fruits of India
Than the moist melon, or pale cucumber.
Of chilly nature others fly the board
Supply'd with slaughter, and the vernal powers
For cooler, kinder sustenance implore.
Some even the generous nutriment detest
Which, in the shell, the sleeping embryo rears.
Some, more unhappy still, repent the gifts
Of Pales; soft, delicious and benign:
The balmy quintessence of every flower,
And every grateful herb that decks the spring;
The fost'ring dew of tender sprouting life;
The best refection of declining age;
The kind restorative of those who lie
Half dead and panting, from the doubtful strife
Of nature struggling in the grasp of death.
Try all the bounties of this fertile globe,
There is not such a salutary food
As suits with every stomach. But (except,
Amid the mingled mass of fish and fowl,
And boil'd and bak'd, you hesitate by which
You sunk oppress'd, or whether not by all)

taught by experience soon you may discern
 What pleases, what offends. Avoid the cates
 That lull the sicken'd appetite too long ;
 Or heave with feverish flushings all the face,
 Turn in the palms, and parch the rough'ning
 tongue ;

Or much diminish or too much increase
 Th' expense, which Nature's wise economy,
 Without or waste or avarice, maintains.
 Much cates abjur'd, let prowling hunger loose,
 And bid the curious palate roam at will ;
 They scarce can err amid the various stores
 That burst the teeming entrails of the world.

Led by sagacious taste, the ruthless king
 Of beasts on blood and slaughter only lives ;
 The tiger, form'd alike to cruel meals,
 Would at the manger starve ; of milder seeds
 The generous horse to herbage and to grain
 Confines his wish ; though fabling Greece resound
 The Thracian steeds with human carnage wild.

Prompted by instinct's never-erring power,
 Each creature knows its proper aliment ;
 But man, th' inhabitant of every clime,
 With all the commoners of Nature feeds.

Directed, bounded, by this power within,
 Their cravings are well aim'd : voluptuous man
 By superior faculties misled ;

Disled from pleasure even in quest of joy,
 Sated with Nature's boons, what thousands seek,
 With dishes tortur'd from their native taste,
 And mad variety, to spur beyond
 Its wiser will the jaded appetite !

Is this for pleasure ? Learn a juster taste !
 And know that temperance is true luxury.
 Or is it pride ? Pursue some nobler aim,
 Dismiss your parasites who praise for hire ;
 And earn the fair esteem of honest men, [yours,
 Whose praise is fame. Form'd of such clay as
 The sick, the needy, shiver at your gates.

Even modest want may bless your hand unseen,
 Though hush'd in patient wretchedness at home.

Is there no virgin, grac'd with ev'ry charm
 But that which binds the mercenary vow ?
 No youth of genius, whose neglected bloom
 Infoster'd sickens in the barren shade ?
 No worthy man by fortune's random blows,
 Or by a heart too generous and humane,
 Constrain'd to leave his happy natal seat,
 And sigh for wants more bitter than his own ?
 There are, while human miseries abound,
 A thousand ways to waste superfluous wealth,
 Without one fool or flatterer at your board,
 Without one hour of sickness or disgust.

But other ills th' ambiguous feast pursue,
 Besides provoking the lascivious taste.
 Such various foods, though harmless each alone,
 Each other violate ; and oft we see
 What strife is brew'd, and what pernicious bane,
 From combinations of obnoxious things.
 Th' unbounded taste I mean not to confine
 To hermit's diet needlessly severe.

But would you long the sweets of health enjoy,
 Or husband pleasure ; at one impious meal
 Exhaust not half the bounties of the year,
 Of every realm. It matters not meanwhile
 How much to-morrow differ from to-day ;
 So far indulge ; 't is fit, besides, that man,
 To change obnoxious, be to change mur'd.
 But stay the curious appetite, and taste
 With caution fruits you never tried before.

For want of use the kindest aliment
 Sometimes offends ; while custom tames the rage
 Of poison to mild amity with life.

So Heaven has form'd us to the general taste
 Of all its gifts : so custom has improv'd
 This bent of nature ; that few simple foods,
 Of all that earth, or air, or ocean yield,
 But by excess offend. Beyond the sense
 Of light refection, at the genial board
 Indulge not often ; nor protract the feast
 To dull satiety ; till soft and slow

A drowsy death creeps on, th' expansive soul
 Oppress'd, and smother'd the celestial fire.
 The stomach, urg'd beyond its active tone,
 Hardly to nutrimental chyle subdues
 The softest food : unfinish'd and deprav'd,
 The chyle, in all its future wanderings, owns
 Its turbid fountain ; not by purer streams
 So to be clear'd, but foulness will remain.
 To sparkling wine what ferment can exalt
 Th' unripen'd grape ? or what mechanic skill
 From the crude ore can spin the ductile gold ?

Gross riot treasures up a wealthy fund
 Of plagues : but more immedicable ills
 Attend the lean extreme. For physic knows
 How to disburthen the too tumid veins,
 Even how to ripen the half-labour'd blood :
 But to unlock the elemental tubes,
 Collaps'd and shrunk with long inanity,
 And with balsamic nutriment repair
 The dried and worn-out habit, were to bid
 Old age grow green, and wear a second spring ;
 Or the tall ash, long ravish'd from the soil,
 Through wither'd veins imbibe the vernal dew.
 When hunger calls, obey ; not often wait
 Till hunger sharpen to corrosive pain :
 For the keen appetite will feast beyond
 What nature well can bear : and one extreme
 Ne'er without danger meets its own reverse.
 Too greedily th' exhausted veins absorb
 The recent chyle, and load enfeebled powers
 Oft to th' extinction of the vital flame.
 To the pale cities, by the firm-set siege
 And famine humbled, may this verse be borne ;
 And hear, ye hardiest sons that Albion breeds,
 Long toss'd and famish'd on the wintry main ;
 The war shook off, or hospitable shore
 Attain'd, with temperance bear the shock of joy ;
 Nor crown with festive rites th' auspicious day :
 Such feasts might prove more fatal than the waves,
 Than war or famine. While the vital fire
 Burns feebly, heap not the green fuel on ;
 But prudently foment the wandering spark
 With what the soonest feeds its kindest touch :
 Be frugal ev'n of that : a little give
 At first ; that kindled, add a little more ;
 Till, by deliberate nourishing, the flame
 Reviv'd, with all its wonted vigour glows.

But though the two (the full and the jejune)
 Extremes have each their vice ; it much avails
 Ever with gentle tide to ebb and flow
 From this to that ; so nature learns to bear
 Whatever chance or headlong appetite
 May bring. Besides, a meagre day subdues
 The cruder clods by sloth or luxury
 Collected, and unloads the wheels of life.
 Sometimes a coy aversion to the feast
 Comes on, while yet no blacker omen lours ;
 Then is the time to shun the tempting board,
 Were it your natal or your nuptial day

Perhaps a fast so seasonable starves
 The latent seeds of woe, which rooted once
 Might cost you labour. But the day return'd
 Of festal luxury, the wise indulge
 Most in the tender vegetable breed :
 Then chiefly when the summer beams inflame
 The brazen Heavens ; or angry Sirius sheds
 A feverish taint through the still gulph of air.
 The moist cool viands then, and flowing cup
 From the fresh dairy-virgin's liberal hand, [world
 Will save your head from harm, though round the
 The dreaded caulos * roll his wasteful fires.
 Pale humid Winter loves the generous board,
 The meal more copious, and the warmer fare ;
 And longs with old wood and old wine to cheer
 His quaking heart. The seasons which divide
 Th' empires of heat and cold ; by neither claim'd,
 Influenc'd by both ; a middle regimen
 Impose. Through Autumn's languishing domain
 Descending, Nature by degrees invites
 To glowing luxury. But from the depth
 Of Winter, when th' invigorated year
 Emerges ; when Favonius, flush'd with love,
 Toyful and young, in every breeze descends
 More warm and wanton on his kindling bride ;
 Then, shepherds, then begin to spare your flocks ;
 And learn with wise humanity, to check
 The lust of blood. Now pregnant earth commits
 A various offspring to the indulgent sky :
 Now bounteous Nature feeds with lavish hand
 The prone creation ; yields what once suffic'd
 Their dainty sovereign, when the world was young ;
 Ere yet the barbarous thirst of blood had seiz'd
 The human breast. — Each rolling month matures
 The food that suits it most ; so does each clime.

Far in the horrid realms of Winter, where
 Th' establish'd ocean heaps a monstrous waste
 Of shining rocks and mountains to the Pole,
 There lives a hardy race, whose plainest wants
 Relentless Earth, their cruel step-mother,
 Regards not. On the waste of iron fields,
 Untam'd, intractable, no harvests wave ;
 Pomona hates them, and the clownish god
 Who tends the garden. In this frozen world
 Such cooling gifts were vain : a fitter meal
 Is earn'd with ease ; for here the fruitful spawn
 Of ocean swarms, and heaps their genial board
 With generous fare and luxury profuse.
 These are their bread, the only bread they know ;
 These, and their willing slave the deer that crops
 The shrubby herbage on their meagre hills.
 Girt by the burning zone, not thus the South
 Her swarthy sons in either Ind maintains :
 Or thirsty Libya ; from whose fervid loins
 The lion bursts, and every fiend that roams
 Th' affrighted wilderness. The mountain-herd,
 Ajust and dry, no sweet repast affords ;
 Nor does the tepid main such kinds produce,
 So perfect, so delicious, as the shoals
 Of icy Zembla. Rashly where the blood [tain
 Brews feverish frays ; where scarce the tubes sus-
 Its tumid fervour, and tempestuous course ;
 Kind Nature tempts not to such gifts as these.
 But here in livid ripeness melts the grape :
 Here, finish'd by invigorating suns,
 Through the green shade the golden orange glows :
 Spontaneous here the turgid melon yields

* The burning fever.

A generous pulp : the cocoa swells on high
 With milky riches ; and in horrid mail
 The crisp ananas wraps its poignant sweets.
 Earth's vaunted progeny ; in ruder air
 Too coy to flourish, even too proud to live ;
 Or hardly rais'd by artificial fire
 To vapid life. Here with a mother's smile
 Glad Amalthea pours her copious horn.
 Here buxom Ceres reigns : the autumnal sea
 In boundless billows fluctuates o'er their plains.
 What suits the climate best, what suits the men,
 Nature profuses most and most the taste
 Demands. The fountain, edg'd with racy wine
 Or acid fruit, bedews their thirsty souls.
 The breeze eternal breathing round their limbs
 Supports in else intolerable air :
 While the cool palm, the plantain, and the grove
 That waves on gloomy Lebanon, assuage
 The torrid Hell that beams upon their heads.

Now come, ye Naiads, to the fountains lead ;
 Now let me wander through your gelid reign.
 I burn to view th' enthusiastic wilds
 By mortal else untrod. I hear the din
 Of waters thund'ring o'er the ruin'd cliffs
 With holy reverence I approach the rocks
 Whence glide the streams renown'd in ancient song.
 Here from the desert down the rumbling steep
 First springs the Nile ; here bursts the sounding Nile
 In angry waves ; Euphrates hence devolves
 A mighty flood to water half the East :
 And there, in Gothic solitude reclin'd,
 The cheerless Tanais pours his hoary urn.
 What solemn twilight ! what stupendous shades
 Enwrap these infant floods ! through every nerve
 A sacred horror thrills, a pleasing fear
 Glides o'er my frame. The forest deepens round ;
 And more gigantic still th' impending trees
 Stretch their extravagant arms athwart the gloom.
 Are these the confines of some fairy world ?
 A land of genii ? Say, beyond these wilds
 What unknown nations ? if, indeed, beyond
 Aught habitable lies. And whither leads,
 To what strange regions, or of bliss or pain,
 That subterraneous way ? Propitious maids,
 Conduct me, while with fearful steps I tread
 This trembling ground. The task remains to sing
 Your gifts (so Pæon, so the powers of health
 Command) to praise your crystal element :
 The chief ingredient in Heaven's various works :
 Whose flexile genius sparkles in the gem,
 Grows firm in oak, and fugitive in wine ;
 The vehicle, the source, of nutriment
 And life, to all that vegetate or live.

O comfortable streams ! with eager lips
 And trembling hand the languid thirsty quaff
 New life in you ; fresh vigour fills their veins.
 No warmer cups the rural ages knew ;
 None warmer sought the sires of human kind.
 Happy in temperate peace ! their equal days
 Felt not th' alternate fits of feverish mirth,
 And sick dejection. Still serene and pleas'd
 They knew no pains but what the tender soul
 With pleasure yields to, and would ne'er forget.
 Blest with divine immunity from ails,
 Long centuries they liv'd ; their only fate
 Was ripe old age, and rather sleep than death.
 Oh ! could those worthies from the world of gods
 Return to visit their degenerate sons,
 How would they scorn the joys of modern time,

Vith all our art and toil improv'd to pain!
 Too happy they! but wealth brought luxury,
 And luxury on sloth begot disease. [dain
 Learn temperance, friends; and hear without dis-
 The choice of water. Thus the Coan sage *
 Opin'd, and thus the learn'd of ev'ry school.
 What least of foreign principles partakes
 s best: the lightest then; what bears the touch
 Of fire the least, and soonest mounts in air;
 The most insipid; the most void of smell.
 Such the rude mountain from his horrid sides
 Pours down; such waters in the sandy vale
 For ever boil, alike of winter frosts
 And summer's heat secure. The crystal stream,
 Through rocks resounding, or for many a mile [pure,
 O'er the chaf'd pebbles hurl'd, yields wholesome,
 And mellow draughts; except when winter thaws,
 And half the mountains melt into the tide.
 Though thirst were e'er so resolute, avoid
 The sordid lake, and all such drowsy floods
 As fill from Lethe Belgia's slow canals;
 With rest corrupt, with vegetation green;
 Equivocal with generation, and the birth
 Of little monsters;) till the power of fire
 Has from profane embraces disengag'd
 The violated lymph. The virgin stream
 In boiling wastes its finer soul in air.

Nothing like simple element dilutes
 The food, or gives the chyle so soon to flow.
 But where the stomach, indolent and cold,
 Joys with its duty, animate with wine
 Th' insipid stream: though golden Ceres yields
 A more voluptuous, a more sprightly draught;
 Perhaps more active. Wine unmix'd, and all
 The gluey floods that from the vex'd abyss
 Of fermentation spring; with spirit fraught,
 And furious with intoxicating fire;
 Retard concoction, and preserve unthaw'd
 Th' embodied mass. You see what countless years,
 Embalm'd in fiery quintessence of wine,
 The puny wonders of the reptile world,
 The tender rudiments of life, the slim
 Inravellings of minute anatomy,
 Maintain their texture, and unchang'd remain.

We curse not wine: the vile excess we blame;
 More fruitful than th' accumulated board,
 Of pain and misery. For the subtle draught
 Faster and surer swells the vital tide;
 And with more active poison than the floods
 Of grosser crudity convey, pervades
 The far remote meanders of our frame.
 Ah! sly deceiver! branded o'er and o'er,
 Yet still believ'd! exulting o'er the wreck
 Of sober vows! — But the Parnassian maids
 Another time, perhaps, shall sing the joys †,
 The fatal charms, the many woes of wine;
 Perhaps its various tribes and various powers.

Meantime, I would not always dread the bowl,
 Nor every trespass shun. The feverish strife,
 Rous'd by the rare debauch, subdues, expels
 The loitering crudities that burden life;
 And, like a torrent full and rapid, clears
 Th' obstructed tubes. Besides, this restless world
 Is full of chances, which, by habit's power,
 To learn to bear is easier than to shun.
 Ah! when ambition, meagre love of gold,
 Or sacred country calls, with mellowing wine
 To moisten well the thirsty suffrages;

Say how, unseason'd to the midnight frays
 Of Comus and his rout, wilt thou contend,
 With Centaurs long to hardy deeds inur'd?
 Then learn to revel; but by slow degrees:
 By slow degrees the liberal arts are won;
 And Hercules grew strong. But when you smooth
 The brows of care, indulge your festive vein
 In cups by well-inform'd experience found
 The least your bane; and only with your friends,
 There are sweet follies; frailties to be seen
 By friends alone, and men of generous minds.

Oh! seldom may the fated hours return
 Of drinking deep! I would not daily taste,
 Except when life declines, even sober cups.
 Weak withering age no rigid law forbids,
 With frugal nectar, smooth and slow with balm,
 The sapless habit daily to bedew,
 And give the hesitating wheels of life
 Gliblier to play. But youth has better joys:
 And is it wise when youth with pleasure flows,
 To squander the reliefs of age and pain?

What dextrous thousands just within the goal
 Of wild debauch direct their nightly course!
 Perhaps no sickly qualms bedim their days,
 No morning admonitions shock the head.
 But, ah! what woes remain! life rolls apace,
 And that incurable disease, old age,
 In youthful bodies more severely felt,
 More sternly active, shakes their blasted prime;
 Except kind Nature by some hasty blow
 Prevent the lingering fates. For know, whate'er
 Beyond its natural fervour hurries on
 The sanguine tide; whether the frequent bowl,
 High-season'd fare, or exercise to toil
 Protracted; spurs to its last stage tired life,
 And sows the temples with untimely snow.
 When life is new the ductile fibres feel
 The heart's increasing force; and, day by day,
 The growth advances: 'till the larger tubes
 Acquiring (from their elemental veins *
 Condens'd to solid chords) a firmer tone,
 Sustain, and just sustain, th' impetuous blood.
 Here stops the growth. With overbearing pulse
 And pressure, still the great destroy the small;
 Still with the ruins of the small grow strong.
 Life glows meantime, amid the grinding force
 Of viscous fluids and elastic tubes;
 Its various functions vigorously are plied
 By strong machinery; and in solid health
 The man confirm'd long triumphs o'er disease.
 But the full ocean ebbs: there is a point,
 By Nature fix'd, when life must downward tend.
 For still the beating tide consolidates
 The stubborn vessels, more reluctant still
 To the weak throbs of th' ill supported heart.
 This languishing, these strength'ning by degrees

* In the human body, as well as in those of other animals, the larger blood-vessels are composed of smaller ones; which, by the violent motion and pressure of the fluids in the large vessels, lose their cavities by degrees, and degenerate into impervious chords or fibres. In proportion as these small vessels become solid, the larger must of course become less extensile, more rigid, and make a stronger resistance to the action of the heart, and force of the blood. From this gradual condensation of the smaller vessels, and consequent rigidity of the larger ones, the progress of the human body from infancy to old age is accounted for.

To hard unyielding unelastic bone,
Through tedious channels the congealing flood
Crawls lazily, and hardly wanders on ;
It loiters still ; and now it stirs no more.
This is the period few attain ; the death
Of Nature ; thus (so Heav'n ordain'd it) life
Destroys itself ; and could these laws have chang'd,
Nestor might now the fates of Troy relate ;
And Homer live immortal as his song.

What does not fade ? the tower that long had stood
The crush of thunder and the warring winds,
Shook by the slow, but sure destroyer, Time,
Now hangs in doubtful ruins o'er its base.
And flinty pyramids, and walls of brass,
Descend : the Babylonian spires are sunk ;
Achaia, Rome, and Egypt moulder down.
Time shakes the stable tyranny of thrones,
And tottering empires crush by their own weight.
This huge rotundity we tread grows old ;
And all those worlds that roll around the Sun,
The Sun himself, shall die ; and ancient Night
Again involve the desolate abyss :
'Till the great FATHER through the lifeless gloom
Extend his arm to light another world,
And bid new planets roll by other laws.
For through the regions of unbounded space,
Where unconfin'd Omnipotence has room,
Being, in various systems, fluctuates still
Between creation and abhorr'd decay :
It ever did, perhaps, and ever will.
New worlds are still emerging from the deep ;
The old descending, in their turns to rise.

Book III.

EXERCISE.

THROUGH various toils th' adventurous Muse has past ;

But half the toil, and more than half, remains.
Rude is her theme, and hardly fit for song ;
Plain, and of little ornament ; and I
But little practis'd in th' Aonian arts.
Yet not in vain such labours have we tried,
If aught these lays the fickle health confirm.
To you, ye delicate, I write ; for you
I tame my youth to philosophic cares,
And grow still paler by the midnight lamps.
Not to debilitate with timorous rules
A hardy frame ; nor needlessly to brave
Inglorious dangers, proud of mortal strength,
Is all the lesson that in wholesome years
Concerns the strong. His care were ill bestow'd
Who would with warm effeminacy nurse
The thriving oak which on the mountain's brow
Bears all the blasts that sweep the wint'ry Heaven.

Behold the labourer of the glebe, who toils
In dust, in rain, in cold and sultry skies !
Save but the grain from mildews and the flood,
Nought anxious he what sickly stars ascend.
He knows no laws by Esculapius given ;
He studies none. Yet him nor midnight fogs
Infest, nor those envenom'd shafts that fly
When rabid Sirius fires th' autumnal noon.
His habit pure with plain and temperate meals,
Robust with labour, and by custom steel'd
To every casualty of varied life ;
Serene he bears the peevish eastern blast,
And uninfected breathes the mortal south.

Such the reward of rude and sober life ;
Of labour such. By health the peasant's toil
Is well repaid ; if exercise were pain
Indeed, and temperance pain. By arts like these Laconia nurs'd of old her hardy sons ;
And Rome's unconquer'd legions urg'd their way
Unhurt, through every toil in every clime.

Toil, and be strong. By toil the flaccid nerves
Grow firm, and gain a more compacted tone ;
The greener juices are by toil subdu'd,
Mellow'd and subtiliz'd ; the vapid old
Expell'd, and all the rancour of the blood
Come, my companions, ye who feel the charms
Of Nature and the year ; come, let us stray
Where chance or fancy leads our roving walk :
Come, while the soft voluptuous breezes fan
The fleecy Heavens, enwrap the limbs in balm,
And shed a charming languor o'er the soul.
Nor when bright Winter sows with prickly frost
The vigorous ether, in unmanly warmth
Indulge at home ; nor even when Eurus' blast
This way and that convolve the lab'ring woods
My liberal walks, save when the skies in rain
Or fogs relent, no season should confine
Or to the cloister'd gallery or arcade.

Go, climb the mountain ; from th' ethereal source
Imbibe the recent gale. The cheerful morn
Beams o'er the hills ; go, mount th' exulting steed
Already, see, the deep-mouth'd beagles catch
The tainted mazes ; and, on eager sport
Intent, with emulous impatience try
Each doubtful trace. Or, if a nobler prey
Delight you more, go chase the desperate deer ;
And through its deepest solitudes awake
The vocal forest with the jovial horn.

But if the breathless chase o'er hill and dale
Exceed your strength, a sport of less fatigue,
Not less delightful, the prolific stream
Affords. The crystal rivulet, that o'er
A stony channel rolls its rapid maze, [bound
Swarms with the silver fry. Such, through the
Of pastoral Stafford, runs the brawling Trent ;
Such Eden, sprung from Cumbrian mountains ; and
The Esk, o'erhung with woods ; and such the stream

On whose Arcadian banks I first drew air,
Liddel ; till now, except in Doric lays
'Tun'd to her murmurs by her love-sick swains,
Unknown in song ; though not a purer stream.
Through meads more flowery, more romantic groves
Rolls toward the western main. Hail, sacred flood !
May still thy hospitable swains be blest
In rural innocence ; thy mountains still
Teem with the fleecy race ; thy tuneful woods
For ever flourish ; and thy vales look gay
With painted meadows, and the golden grain !
Oft, with thy blooming sons, when life was new,
Sportive and petulant, and charm'd with toys,
In thy transparent eddies have I lav'd :
Oft trac'd with patient steps thy fairy banks,
With the well-imitated fly to hook
The eager trout, and with the slender line
And yielding rod solicit to the shore
The struggling panting prey : while vernal clouds
And tepid gales obscur'd the ruffled pool,
And from the deeps call'd forth the wanton swarms

Form'd on the Samian school, or those of Ind,
There are who think these pastimes scarce humane
Yet in my mind (and not relentless I)
His life is pure that wears no fouler stains

but if through genuine tenderness of heart,
 Or secret want of relish for the game,
 You shun the glories of the chase, nor care
 To haunt the peopled stream; the garden yields
 A soft amusement, an humane delight.
 To raise th' insipid nature of the ground;
 Or tame its savage genius to the grace
 Of careless sweet rusticity, that seems
 The amiable result of happy chance,
 As to create; and gives a god-like joy,
 Which every year improves. Nor thou disdain
 To check the lawless riot of the trees,
 To plant the grove, or turn the barren mould.
 O happy he! whom, when his years decline,
 His fortune and his fame by worthy means
 Attain'd, and equal to his moderate mind;
 His life approv'd by all the wise and good,
 (Even envied by the vain,) the peaceful groves
 Of Epicurus, from this stormy world,
 Receive to rest; of all ungrateful cares
 Absolv'd, and sacred from the selfish crowd.
 Happiest of men! if the same soil invites
 A chosen few, companions of his youth,
 Once fellow-rakes perhaps, now rural friends;
 With whom in easy commerce to pursue
 Nature's free charms, and vie for sylvan fame:
 A fair ambition; void of strife or guile,
 Or jealousy, or pain to be outdone.
 Who plans th' enchanted garden, who directs
 The vista best, and best conducts the stream:
 Whose groves the fastest thicken and ascend;
 Whom first the welcome Spring salutes; who shows
 The earliest bloom, the sweetest proudest charms
 Of Flora; who best gives Pomona's juice
 To match the sprightly genius of champagne.
 Thrice happy days! in rural business past:
 Blest winter nights! when, as the genial fire
 Cheers the wide hall, his cordial family
 With soft domestic arts the hours beguile,
 And pleasing talk that starts no timorous fame,
 With witless wantonness to hunt it down:
 Or through the fairy-land of tale or song
 Delighted wander, in fictitious fates
 Engag'd, and all that strikes humanity:
 Till lost in fable, they the stealing hour
 Of timely rest forget. Sometimes, at eve
 His neighbours lift the latch, and bless unbid
 His festal roof; while, o'er the light repast,
 And sprightly cups, they mix in social joy;
 And, through the maze of conversation, trace
 Whate'er amuses or improves the mind.
 Sometimes at eve (for I delight to taste
 The native zest and flavour of the fruit,
 Where sense grows wild and tastes of no manure)
 The decent, honest, cheerful husbandman
 Should drown his labour in my friendly bowl;
 And at my table find himself at home.

Whate'er you study, in whate'er you sweat,
 Indulge your taste. Some love the manly foils;
 The tennis some; and some the graceful dance.
 Others, more hardy, range the purple heath,
 Or naked stubble; where, from field to field,
 The sounding coveys urge their labouring flight;
 Eager amid the rising cloud to pour
 The gun's unerring thunder: and there are
 Whom still the meed* of the green archer charms.
 He chooses best, whose labour entertains

* This word is much used by some of the old English poets, and signifies reward or prize.

His vacant fancy most: the toil you hate
 Fatigues you soon, and scarce improves your limbs.

As beauty still has blemish, and the mind
 The most accomplish'd its imperfect side,
 Few bodies are there of that happy mould
 But some one part is weaker than the rest:
 The legs, perhaps, or arms refuse their load,
 Or the chest labours. These assiduously,
 But gently, in their proper arts employ'd,
 Acquire a vigour and springy activity,
 To which they were not born. But weaker parts
 Abhor fatigue and violent discipline.

Begin with gentle toils; and as your nerves
 Grow firm, to hardier by just steps aspire;
 The prudent, even in every moderate walk,
 At first but saunter, and by slow degrees
 Increase their pace. This doctrine of the wise
 Well knows the master of the flying steed.
 First from the goal the manag'd coursers play
 On bended reins; as yet the skilful youth
 Repress their foamy pride; but every breath
 The race grows warmer, and the tempest swells,
 Till all the fiery mettle has its way,
 And the thick thunder hurries o'er the plain.
 When all at once from indolence to toil
 You spring, the fibres by the hasty shock
 Are tir'd and crack'd, before their unctuous coats,
 Compress'd, can pour the lubricating balm.
 Besides, collected in the passive veins,
 The purple mass a sudden torrent rolls,
 O'erpowers the heart, and deluges the lungs
 With dangerous inundation; oft the source
 Of fatal woes; a cough that foams with blood,
 Asthma, and feller peripneumony †,
 Or the slow minings of the hectic fire.

Th' athletic fool, to whom what Heaven deny'd
 Of soul is well compensated in limbs,
 Oft from his rage, or brainless frolic, feels
 His vegetation and brute force decay.
 The men of better clay and finer mould
 Know nature, feel the human dignity,
 And scorn to vie with oxen or with apes.
 Pursu'd proluxly, even the gentlest toil
 Is waste of health: repose by small fatigue
 Is earn'd, and (where your habit is not prone
 To thaw) by the first moisture of the brow.
 The fine and subtle spirits cost too much
 To be profus'd, too much the roscid balm.
 But when the hard varieties of life
 You toil to learn, or try the dusty chase,
 Or the warm deeds of some important day:
 Hot from the field, indulge not yet your limbs
 In wish'd repose; nor court the fanning gale,
 Nor taste the spring. O! by the sacred tears
 Of widows, orphans, mothers, sisters, sires,
 Forbear! no other pestilence has driven
 Such myriads o'er th' irretrievable deep.
 Why this so fatal, the sagacious Muse
 Through nature's cunning labyrinths could trace:
 But there are secrets which who knows not now,
 Must, ere he reach them, climb the heapy Alps
 Of science; and devote seven years to toil.
 Besides, I would not stun your patient ears
 With what it little boots you to attain.
 He knows enough, the mariner, who knows
 Where lurk the shelves, and where the whirlpools
 boil,

What signs portend the storm: to subtler minds

† The inflammation of the lungs.

He leaves to scan, from what mysterious cause
Charybdis rages in th' Ionian wave ;
Whence those impetuous currents in the main
Which neither oar nor sail can stem ; and why
The roughening deep expects the storm, as sure
As red Orion mounts the shrouded Heaven.

In ancient times, when Rome with Athens vied
For polish'd luxury and useful arts ;
All hot and reeking from th' Olympic strife,
And warm Palestra, in the tepid bath
Th' athletic youth relax'd their weary limbs.
Soft oils bedew'd them, with the grateful pow'rs
Of nard and cassia fraught, to soothe and heal
The cherish'd nerves. Our less voluptuous clime
Not much invites us to such arts as these.

'T is not for those, whom gelid skies embrace,
And chilling fogs ; whose perspiration feels
Such frequent bars from Eurys and the North ;
'T is not for those to cultivate a skin
Too soft : or teach the recremental fume
Too fast to crowd through such precarious ways.
For through the small arterial mouths, that pierce
In endless millions the close-woven skin,
The baser fluids in a constant stream
Escape, and viewless melt into the winds.
While this eternal, this most copious waste
Of blood, degenerates into vapid brine,
Maintains its wonted measure, all the powers
Of health befriend you, all the wheels of life
With ease and pleasure move : but this restrain'd
Or more or less, so more or less you feel
The functions labour : from this fatal source
What woes descend is never to be sung.
To take their numbers, were to count the sands
That ride in whirlwind the parch'd Libyan air ;
Or waves that, when the blustering North embroils
The Baltic, thunder on the German shore.
Subject not then, by soft emollient arts,
This grand expense, on which your fates depend,
To every caprice of the sky ; nor thwart
The genius of your clime : for from the blood
Least fickle rise the recremental steams,
And least obnoxious to the styptic air,
Which breathe through straiter and more callous
pores.

The temper'd Scythian hence, half-naked treads
His boundless snows, nor rues th' inclement Heaven ;
And hence our painted ancestors defied
The east ; nor curs'd, like us, their fickle sky.

The body, moulded by the clime, endures
The equator heats or hyperborean frost :
Except by habits foreign to its turn,
Unwise you counteract its forming pow'r.
Rude at the first, the winter shocks you less
By long acquaintance : study then your sky,
Form to its manners your obsequious frame,
And learn to suffer what you cannot shun.
Against the rigors of a damp cold heav'n
To fortify their bodies, some frequent
The gelid cistern ; and, where nought forbids,
I praise their dauntless heart : a frame so steel'd
Dreads not the cough, nor those ungenial blasts
That breathe the tertian or fell rheumatism ;
The nerves so temper'd never quit their tone,
No chronic languors haunt such hardy breasts,
But all things have their bounds ; and he who makes

By daily use the kindest regimen
Essential to his health, should never mix
With human kind, nor art nor trade pursue.

He not the safe vicissitudes of life
Without some shock endures ; ill-fitted he
To want the known, or bear unusual things.
Besides, the powerful remedies of pain
(Since pain in spite of all our care will come)
Should never with your prosperous days of health
Grow too familiar : for by frequent use
The strongest medicines lose their healing power,
And even the surest poisons theirs to kill.

Let those who from the frozen Arctos reach
Parch'd Mauritania, or the sultry west,
Or the wide flood that laves rich Indostan,
Plunge thrice a day, and in the tepid wave
Untwist their stubborn pores ; that full and free
Th' evaporation through the soften'd skin
May bear proportion to the swelling blood.
So may they 'scape the fever's rapid flames ;
So feel untainted the hot breath of Hell.
With us, the man of no complaint demands
The warm ablution just enough to clear
The sluices of the skin, enough to keep
The body sacred from indecent soil.
Still to be pure, ev'n did it not conduce
(As much it does) to health, were greatly worth
Your daily pains. 'T is this adorns the rich ;
The want of this is poverty's worst woe ;
With this external virtue, age maintains
A decent grace ; without it, youth and charms
Are loathsome. This the venal graces know ;
So doubtless do your wives : for married sires,
As well as lovers, still pretend to taste ;
Nor is it less (all prudent wives can tell)
To lose a husband's than a lover's heart.

But now the hours and seasons when to toil
From foreign themes recall my wandering song.
Some labour fasting, or but slightly fed
To lull the grinding stomach's hungry rage.
Where nature feeds too corpulent a frame
'T is wisely done : for while the thirsty veins,
Impatient of lean penury, devour
The treasur'd oil, then is the happiest time
To shake the lazy balsam from its cells.
Now while the stomach from the full repast
Subsides, but ere returning hunger gnaws,
Ye leaner habits, give an hour to toil ;
And ye whom no luxuriance of growth
Oppresses yet, or threatens to oppress.
But from the recent meal no labours please,
Of limbs or mind. For now the cordial powers
Claim all the wandering spirits to a work
Of strong and subtle toil, and great event :
A work of time ; and you may rue the day
You hurried, with untimely exercise,
A half-concocted chyle into the blood.
The body overcharged with unctuous phlegm
Much toil demands : the lean elastic less.
While winter chills the blood and binds the veins,
No labours are too hard : by those you 'scape
The slow diseases of the torpid year ;
Endless to name ; to one of which alone,
To that which tears the nerves, the toil of slaves
Is pleasure : Oh ! from such inhuman pains
May all be free who merit not the wheel !
But from the burning Lion when the Sun
Pours down his sultry wrath ; now while the blood
Too much already maddens in the veins,
And all the finer fluids through the skin
Explore their flight ; me, near the cool cascade
Reclin'd, or saunt'ring in the lofty grove,
No needless slight occasion should engage

To pant and sweat beneath the fiery noon.
Now the fresh morn alone and mellow eve
To shady walks and active rural sports
Invite. But, while the chilling dews descend,
May nothing tempt you to the cold embrace
Of humid skies; though 't is no vulgar joy
To trace the horrors of the solemn wood
While the soft evening saddens into night:
Though the sweet poet of the vernal groves
Melts all the night in strains of am'rous woe.

The shades descend, and midnight o'er the world
Expands her sable wings. Great nature droops
Through all her works. Now happy he whose toil
Has o'er his languid powerless limbs diffus'd
A pleasing lassitude: he not in vain
Invokes the gentle deity of dreams.

His powers the most voluptuously dissolve
In soft repose: on him the balmy dews
Of sleep with double nutriment descend.
But would you sweetly waste the blank of night
In deep oblivion; or on Fancy's wings
Visit the paradise of happy dreams,
And waken cheerful as the lively morn;
Oppress not nature sinking down to rest
With feasts too late, too solid, or too full:
But be the first concoction half-matur'd
Ere you to mighty indolence resign
Your passive faculties. He from the toils
And troubles of the day to heavier toil
Retires, whom trembling from the tower that rocks
Amid the clouds, or Calpe's hideous height,
The busy demons hurl; or in the main
Overwhelm; or bury struggling under ground.
Not all a monarch's luxury the woes
Can counterpoise of that most wretched man,
Whose nights are shaken with the frantic fits
Of wild Orestes; whose delirious brain,
Stung by the furies, works with poison'd thought;
While pale and monstrous painting shocks the soul;
And mangled consciousness bemoans itself
For ever torn; and chaos floating round.
What dreams presage, what dangers these or those
Portend to sanity, though prudent seers
Reveal'd of old, and men of deathless fame,
We would not to the superstitious mind
Suggest new throbs, new vanities of fear.
It is ours to teach you from the peaceful night
To banish omens and all restless woes.

In study some protract the silent hours,
Which others consecrate to mirth and wine;
And sleep till noon, and hardly live till night.
But surely this redeems not from the shades
One hour of life. Nor does it nought avail
What season you to drowsy Morpheus give
Of th' ever-varying circle of the day;
Or whether, through the tedious winter gloom,
You tempt the midnight or the morning damps.
The body, fresh and vigorous from repose,
Defies the early fogs: but, by the toils
Of wakeful day exhausted and unstrung,
Weakly resists the night's unwholesome breath.
The grand discharge, th' effusion of the skin,
Slowly impair'd, the languid maladies
Creep on, and through the sick'ning functions steal.
As, when the chilling east invades the Spring,
The delicate narcissus pines away
In hectic languor, and a slow disease
Taints all the family of flowers, condemn'd
To cruel heav'ns. But why, already prone
To fade, should beauty cherish its own bane?

O shame! O pity! nipt with pale quadrille,
And midnight cares, the bloom of Albion dies!

By toil subdu'd, the warrior and the hind
Sleep fast and deep: their active functions soon
With generous streams the subtle tubes supply;
And soon the tonic irritable nerves
Feel the fresh impulse and awake the soul.
The sons of indolence with long repose
Grow torpid; and, with slowest Lethe drunk,
Feebly and ling'ringly return to life,
Blunt every sense and powerless every limb.
Ye, prone to sleep (whom sleeping most annoys)
On the hard mattress or elastic couch
Extend your limbs, and wean yourselves from sloth;
Nor grudge the lean projector, of dry brain
And springy nerves, the blandishments of down:
Nor envy while the buried Bacchanal
Exhales his surfeit in prolixer dreams.

He without riot, in the balmy feast
Of life, the wants of nature has supply'd,
Who rises, cool, serene, and full of soul.
But pliant nature more or less demands,
As custom forms her; and all sudden change
She hates of habit, even from bad to good.
If faults in life, or new emergencies,
From habits urge you by long time confirm'd,
Slow may the change arrive, and stage by stage;
Slow as the shadow o'er the dial moves,
Slow as the stealing progress of the year.

Observe the circling year. How unperceiv'd
Her seasons change! Behold! by slow degrees,
Stern Winter tam'd into a ruder Spring;
The ripen'd Spring a milder Summer's glows;
The parting Summer sheds Pomona's store,
And aged Autumn brews the winter storm.
Slow as they come, these changes come not void
Of mortal shocks: the cold and torrid reigns,
The two great periods of the important year,
Are in their first approaches seldom safe;
Funeral Autumn all the sickly dread;
And the black fates deform the lovely Spring.
He well advis'd who taught our wiser sires
Early to borrow Muscovy's warm spoils,
Ere the first frost has touch'd the tender blade;
And late resign them, though the wanton Spring
Should deck her charms with all her sister's rays.
For while the effluence of the skin maintains
Its native measure, the pleuritic Spring
Glides harmless by; and Autumn, sick to death
With sallow quartans, no contagion breathes.

I in prophetic numbers could unfold
The omens of the year: what seasons teem
With what diseases; what the humid South
Prepares, and what the demon of the East:
But you perhaps refuse the tedious song.
Besides, whatever plagues in heat, or cold,
Or drought, or moisture dwell, they hurt not you,
Skill'd to correct the vices of the sky,
And taught already how to each extreme
To bend your life. But should the public bane
Infect you; or some trespass of your own,
Or flaw of nature, hint mortality;
Soon as a not displeasing horror glides
Along the spine, through all your torpid limbs;
When first the head throbs, or the stomach feels
A sickly load, a weary pain the loins;
Be Celsus call'd: the fates come rushing on;
The rapid fates admit of no delay.
While wilful you, and fatally secure,
Expect to-morrow's more suspicious sun,

The growing pest, whose infancy was weak
And easy vanquish'd, with triumphant sway
O'erpow'rs your life. For want of timely care,
Millions have died of medicable wounds.

Ah! in what perils is vain life engag'd!
What slight neglects, what trivial faults destroy
The hardest frame! of indolence, of toil,
We die; of want, of superfluity:
The all-surrounding Heaven, the vital air,
Is big with death. And, though the putrid South
Be shut; though no convulsive agony
Shake, from the deep foundations of the world,
Th' imprison'd plagues; a secret venom oft
Corrupts the air, the water, and the land.
What livid deaths has sad Byzantium seen!
How oft has Cairo, with a mother's woe,
Wept o'er her slaughter'd sons and lonely streets!
Even Albion, girt with less malignant skies,
Albion the poison of the gods has drank,
And felt the sting of monsters all her own.

Ere yet the fell Plantagenets had spent
Their ancient rage, at Bosworth's purple field;
While, for which tyrant England should receive,
Her legions in incestuous murders mix'd,
And daily horrors; till the fates were drunk
With kindred blood by kindred hands profus'd:
Another plague of more gigantic arm
Arose, a monster, never known before,
Rear'd from Cocytus its portentous head.
This rapid fury not, like other pests,
Pursu'd a gradual course, but in a day
Rush'd as a storm o'er half the astonish'd isle,
And strew'd with sudden carcasses the land.

First, through the shoulders, or whatever part
Was seiz'd the first, a fervid vapour sprung.
With rash combustion thence, the quivering spark
Shot to the heart, and kindled all within;
And soon the surface caught the spreading fires.
Through all the yielded pores, the melted blood
Gush'd out in smoky sweats; but nought assuag'd
The torrid heat within, nor aught reliev'd
The stomach's anguish. With incessant toil,
Desperate of ease, impatient of their pain,
They toss'd from side to side. In vain the stream
Ran full and clear, they burnt and thirsted still.
The restless arteries with rapid blood
Beat strong and frequent. Thick and pantingly
The breath was fetch'd, and with huge lab'rings
heav'd.

At last a heavy pain oppress'd the head,
A wild delirium came; their weeping friends
Were strangers now, and this no home of theirs.
Harass'd with toil on toil, the sinking powers
Lay prostrate and o'erthrown; a ponderous sleep
Wrapt all the senses up: they slept and died.

In some a gentle horror crept at first
O'er all the limbs; the sluices of the skin
Withheld their moisture, till by art provok'd
The sweats o'erflow'd; but in a clammy tide:
Now free and copious, now restrain'd and slow;
Of tinctures various, as the temperature
Had mix'd the blood; and rank with fetid steams:
As if the pent-up humours by delay
Were grown more fell, more putrid, and malign.
Here lay their hopes (though little hope remain'd)
With full effusion of perpetual sweats
To drive the venom out. And here the fates
Were kind, that long they linger'd not in pain;
For who surviv'd the Sun's diurnal race
Rose from the dreary gates of Hell redeem'd:
Some the sixth hour oppress'd, and some the third.

Of many thousands, few untainted 'scap'd;
Of those infected, fewer 'scap'd alive:
Of those who liv'd, some felt a second blow:
And whom the second spar'd, a third destroy'd.
Frantic with fear, they sought by flight to shun
The fierce contagion. O'er the mournful land
Th' infected city pour'd her hurrying swarms:
Rous'd by the flames that fir'd her seats around,
Th' infected country rush'd into the town.
Some, sad at home, and in the desert some,
Abjur'd the fatal commerce of mankind:
In vain: where'er they fled, the fates pursu'd.
Others, with hopes more specious, cross'd the sea,
To seek protection in far distant skies;
But none they found. It seem'd the general air,
From pole to pole, from Atlas to the east,
Was then at enmity with English blood.
For, but the race of England, all were safe
In foreign climes; nor did this fury taste
The foreign blood which England then contain'd.
Where should they fly? The circumambient Heav'n
Involv'd them still; and every breeze was bad.
Where find relief? The salutary art
Was mute; and, startled at the new disease,
In fearful whispers hopeless omens gave.
To Heaven with suppliant rites they sent their pray'rs;

Heav'n heard them not. Of every hope depriv'd;
Fatigued with vain resources; and subdued
With woes resistless and enfeebling fear;
Passive they sunk beneath the weighty blow.
Nothing but lamentable sounds was heard,
Nor aught was seen but ghastly views of death.
Infectious horror ran from face to face,
And pale despair. 'T was all the business then
To tend the sick, and in their turns to die.
In heaps they fell: and oft one bed, they say,
The sick'ning, dying, and the dead contain'd.

Ye guardian gods, on whom the fates depend
Of tottering Albion! ye eternal fires [poets]
That lead through Heav'n the wandering year!
That o'er th' encircling elements preside!
May nothing worse than what this age has seen
Arrive! Enough abroad, enough at home
Has Albion bled. Here a distemper'd heaven
Has thinn'd her cities, from those lofty cliffs
That awe proud Gaul, to Thulé's wintry reign;
While in the west, beyond the Atlantic foam,
Her bravest sons, keen for the fight, have dy'd
The death of cowards and of common men:
Sunk void of wounds, and fall'n without renown.

But from these views the weeping Muses turn,
And other themes invite my wandering song.

Book IV.

THE PASSIONS.

THE choice of aliment, the choice of air,
The use of toil, and all external things,
Already sung; it now remains to trace
What good, what evil, from ourselves proceeds:
And how the subtle principle within
Inspires with health, or mines with strange decay
The passive body. Ye poetic shades
Who know the secrets of the world unseen,
Assist my song! for, in a doubtful theme
Engag'd, I wander through mysterious ways.
There is, they say, (and I believe there is,)
A spark within us of th' immortal fire,

That animates and moulds the grosser frame ;
 And when the body sinks, escapes to Heaven,
 Its native seat, and mixes with the gods.
 Meanwhile this heavenly particle pervades
 The mortal elements ; in every nerve
 It rills with pleasure, or grows mad with pain.
 And, in its secret conclave, as it feels
 The body's woes and joys, this ruling power
 Wields as its will the dull material world,
 And is the body's health or malady.

By its own toil the gross corporeal frame
 Fatigues, extends, or destroys itself.
 Nor less the labours of the mind corrode
 The solid fabric : for by subtle parts
 And viewless atoms, secret Nature moves
 The mighty wheels of this stupendous world.
 By subtle fluids pour'd through subtle tubes
 The natural vital functions are perform'd.
 By these the stubborn aliments are tam'd ;
 The toiling heart distributes life and strength ;
 These the still-crumbling frame rebuild ; and these
 Are lost in thinking, and dissolve in air.

But 't is not thought, (for still the soul's employ'd,)

'T is painful thinking that corrodes our clay.
 All day the vacant eye without fatigue
 Strays o'er the Heaven and Earth ; but long intent
 On microscopic arts, its vigour fails.
 Just so the mind, with various thought amus'd,
 Nor aches itself, nor gives the body pain.
 But anxious study, discontent, and care,
 Love without hope, and hate without revenge,
 And fear, and jealousy, fatigue the soul,
 Engross the subtle ministers of life,
 And spoil the lab'ring functions of their share.
 Hence the lean gloom that melancholy wears ;
 The lover's paleness ; and the sallow hue
 Of envy, jealousy ; the meagre stare
 Of sore revenge : the canker'd body hence
 Betrays each fretful motion of the mind.

The strong-built pedant, who both night and day
 Feeds on the coarsest fare the schools bestow,
 And crudely fattens at gross Burman's stall ;
 O'erwhelm'd with phlegm lies in a dropsy drown'd,
 Or sinks in lethargy before his time.

With useful studies you, and arts that please
 Employ your mind ; amuse, but not fatigue.
 Peace to each drowsy metaphysic sage !
 And ever may all heavy systems rest !
 Yet some there are, even of elastic parts,
 Whom strong and obstinate ambition leads
 Through all the rugged roads of barren lore,
 And gives to relish what their generous taste
 Would else refuse. But may not thirst of fame,
 Nor love of knowledge, urge you to fatigue
 With constant drudgery the liberal soul.
 Toy with your books ; and, as the various fits
 Of humour seize you, from philosophy
 To fable shift : from serious Antonine
 To Rabelais' ravings, and from prose to song.

While reading pleases, but no longer, read ;
 And read aloud resounding Homer's strain,
 And wield the thunder of Demosthenes.
 The chest so exercis'd improves its strength ;
 And quick vibrations through the bowels drive
 The restless blood, which in unactive days
 Would loiter else through unelastic tubes.
 Deem it not trifling while I recommend
 What posture suits : to stand and sit by turns,
 As nature prompts, is best. But o'er your leaves

To lean for ever, cramps the vital parts,
 And robs the fine machinery of its play.

'T is the great art of life to manage well
 The restless mind. For ever on pursuit
 Of knowledge bent, it starves the grosser powers :
 Quite unemployed, against its own repose
 It turns its fatal edge, and sharper pangs
 Than what the body knows embitter life.
 Chiefly where solitude, sad nurse of care,
 To sickly musing gives the pensive mind,
 There madness enters ; and the dim-ey'd fiend,
 Sour Melancholy, night and day provokes
 Her own eternal wound. The Sun grows pale ;
 A mournful visionary light o'erspreads
 The cheerful face of Nature : Earth becomes
 A dreary desert, and Heaven frowns above.
 Then various shapes of curs'd illusion rise :
 Whate'er the wretched fears, creating fear
 Forms out of nothing, and with monsters teems
 Unknown in Hell. The prostrate soul beneath
 A load of huge imagination heaves ;
 And all the horrors that the murderer feels
 With anxious flutterings wake the guiltless breast.

Such phantoms pride in solitary scenes,
 Or fear, or delicate self-love creates.
 From other cares absolv'd, the busy mind
 Finds in yourself a theme to pore upon ;
 It finds you miserable, or makes you so.
 For while yourself you anxiously explore,
 Timorous self-love, with sick'ning fancy's aid,
 Presents the danger that you dread the most,
 And ever galls you in your tender part.
 Hence some for love, and some for jealousy,
 For grim religion some, and some for pride,
 Have lost their reason : some for fear of want,
 Want all their lives ; and others every day
 For fear of dying suffer worse than death.
 Ah ! from your bosoms banish if you can
 Those fatal guests ; and first the demon Fear,
 That trembles at impossible events ;
 Lest aged Atlas should resign his load,
 And Heaven's eternal battlements rush down.
 Is there an evil worse than fear itself ?
 And what avails it that indulgent Heaven
 From mortal eyes has wrapt the woes to come,
 If we, ingenious to torment ourselves,
 Grow pale at hideous fictions of our own ?
 Enjoy the present : nor with needless cares, [womb,
 Of what may spring from blind misfortune's
 Appal the surest hour that life bestows.
 Serene, and master of yourself, prepare
 For what may come ; and leave the rest to Heaven.

Oft from the body, by long ails mis-tun'd,
 These evils sprung, the most important health,
 That of the mind, destroy : and when the mind
 They first invade, the conscious body soon
 In sympathetic languishment declines.
 These chronic passions, while from real woes
 They rise, and yet without the body's fault
 Infest the soul, admit one only cure ;
 Diversion, hurry, and a restless life.
 Vain are the consolations of the wise ;
 In vain your friends would reason down your pain.
 O ye, whose souls relentless love has tam'd
 To soft distress, or friends untimely fall'n !
 Court not the luxury of tender thought ;
 Nor deem it impious to forget those pains
 That hurt the living, nought avail the dead.
 Go, soft enthusiast ! quit the cypress groves,
 Nor to the rivulet's lonely moanings tune

Your sad complaint. Go, seek the cheerful haunts
Of men, and mingle with the bustling crowd ;
Lay schemes for wealth, or power, or fame, the wish

Of nobler minds, and push them night and day.
Or join the caravan in quest of scenes
New to your eyes, and shifting every hour,
Beyond the Alps, beyond the Appenines.
Or more advent'rous, rush into the field
Where war grows hot ; and, raging through the sky,
The lofty trumpet swells the madd'ning soul :
And in the hardy camp and toilsome march
Forget all softer and less manly cares.

But most, too passive when the blood runs low,
Too weakly indolent to strive with pain,
And bravely by resisting conquer fate,
Try Circe's arts ; and in the tempting bowl
Of poison'd nectar sweet oblivion swill.
Struck by the powerful charm, the gloom dissolves
In empty air, Elysium opens round ;
A pleasing phrenzy buoys the lighten'd soul,
And sanguine hopes dispel your fleeting care ;
And what was difficult, and what was dire,
Yields to your prowess and superior stars :
The happiest you of all that e'er were mad,
Or are, or shall be, could this folly last.
But soon your Heaven is gone ; a heavier gloom
Shuts o'er your head : and as the thund'ring
stream,

Swoln o'er its banks with sudden mountain rain,
Sinks from its tumult to a silent brook ;
So, when the frantic raptures in your breast
Subside, you languish into mortal man ;
You sleep, and waking find yourself undone.
For, prodigal of life, in one rash night
You lavish'd more than might support three days.
A heavy morning comes ; your cares return
With tenfold rage. An anxious stomach well
May be endur'd ; so may the throbbing head ;
But such a dim delirium, such a dream,
Involves you ; such a dastardly despair
Unmans your soul, as madd'ning Pentheus felt,
When, baited round Cythæron's cruel sides
He saw two suns, and double Thebes ascend.
You curse the sluggish port ; you curse the wretch,
The felon, with unnatural mixture first
Who dar'd to violate the virgin wine.
Or on the fugitive champaign you pour
A thousand curses ; for to Heav'n it wrapt
Your soul, to plunge you deeper in despair.
Perhaps you rue even that diviner gift,
The gay, serene, good-natur'd Burgundy,
Or the fresh fragrant vintage of the Rhine :
And wish that Heaven from mortals had withheld
The grape, and all intoxicating bowls.

Besides, it wounds you sore to recollect
What follies in your loose unguarded hour
Escap'd. For one irrevocable word,
Perhaps that meant no harm, you lose a friend.
Or in the rage of wine your hasty hand
Performs a deed to haunt you to the grave. [decay ;
Add that your means, your health, your parts,
Your friends avoid you ; brutishly transform'd,
They hardly know you ; or if one remains
To wish you well, he wishes you in Heaven.
Despis'd, unwept you fall ; who might have left
A sacred-cherish'd, sadly-pleasing name ;
A name still to be utter'd with a sigh.
Your last ungraceful scene has quite effac'd
All sense and memory of your former worth.

How to live happiest ; how avoid the pains,
The disappointments, and disgusts of those
Who would in pleasure all their hours employ ;
The precepts here of a divine old man
I could recite. Though old, he still retain'd
His manly sense, and energy of mind.
Virtuous and wise he was, but not severe ;
He still remember'd that he once was young :
His easy presence check'd no decent joy.
Him even the dissolute admir'd ; for he
A graceful looseness when he pleas'd put on,
And laughing could instruct. Much had he read,
Much more had seen : he studied from the life,
And in th' original perus'd mankind.

Vers'd in the woes and vanities of life,
He pitied man : and much he pitied those Whom falsely-smiling fate has curs'd with means
To dissipate their days in quest of joy.

" Our aim is happiness ; 't is yours, 't is mine,"
He said ; " 't is the pursuit of all that live :
Yet few attain it, if 't was e'er attain'd.

But they the widest wander from the mark,
Who through the flowery paths of sauntering joy
Seek this coy goddess ; that from stage to stage
Invites us still, but shifts as we pursue.

For, not to name the pains that pleasure brings
To counterpoise itself, relentless fate
Forbids that we through gay voluptuous wilds
Should ever roam : and were the fates more kind,
Our narrow luxuries would soon grow stale :
Were these exhaustless, nature would grow sick,
And, cloy'd with pleasure, squeamishly complain
That all is vanity, and life a dream.

Let nature rest : be busy for yourself,
And for your friend ; be busy even in vain,
Rather than tease her sated appetites.
Who never fasts, no banquet e'er enjoys ;
Who never toils or watches, never sleeps.
Let nature rest : and when the taste of joy
Grows keen, indulge ; but shun satiety.

" 'T is not for mortals always to be blest.
But him the least the dull or painful hours
Of life oppress, whom sober sense conducts,
And virtue, through this labyrinth we tread.
Virtue and sense I mean not to disjoin ;
Virtue and sense are one ; and, trust me, still
A faithless heart betrays the head unsound.
Virtue (for mere good-nature is a fool)

Is sense and spirit with humanity :
'T is sometimes angry, and its frown confounds ;
'T is even vindictive, but in vengeance just. [dare ;
Knaves sain would laugh at it ; some great ones
But at his heart the most undaunted son
Of fortune dreads its name and awful charms.
To noblest uses this determines wealth ;
This is the solid pomp of prosperous days ;
The peace and shelter of adversity.
And if you pant for glory, build your fame
On this foundation, which the secret shock
Defies of envy and all-sapping time.
The gaudy gloss of fortune only strikes
The vulgar eye ; the suffrage of the wise,
The praise that 's worth ambition, is attain'd
By sense alone, and dignity of mind.

" Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
Is the best gift of Heaven : a happiness
That even above the smiles and frowns of fate
Exalts great Nature's favourites ; a wealth
That ne'er encumbers, nor can be transferr'd.
Riches are oft by guilt and baseness earn'd ;

Or dealt by chance to shield a lucky knave,
Or throw a cruel sunshine on a fool.
But for one end, one much-neglected use,
Are riches worth your care; (for Nature's wants
Are few, and without opulence supply'd;)
This noble end is, to produce the soul;
To show the virtues in their fairest light;
To make humanity the minister
Of bounteous Providence; and teach the breast
That generous luxury the gods enjoy."

Thus, in his graver vein, the friendly sage Sometimes declaim'd. Of right and wrong he taught

Truths as refin'd as ever Athens heard; [preach'd.
And (strange to tell!) he practis'd what he
Skill'd in the passions, how to check their sway,
He knew, as far as reason can control
The lawless powers. But other cares are mine:
Form'd in the school of Pæon, I relate
What passions hurt the body, what improve:
Avoid them, or invite them as you may.

Know then, whatever cheerful and serene
Supports the mind, supports the body too.
Hence, the most vital movement mortals feel
Is hope: the balm and life-blood of the soul.
It pleases, and it lasts. Indulgent Heaven
Sent down the kind delusion, through the paths
Of rugged life to lead us patient on;
And make our happiest state no tedious thing.
Our greatest good, and what we least can spare,
Is hope: the last of all our evils, fear.

But there are passions grateful to the breast,
And yet no friends to life: perhaps they please
Or to excess, and dissipate the soul; [clown,
Or while they please, torment. The stubborn
The ill-tam'd ruffian, and pale usurer,
(If Love's omnipotence such hearts can mould,)
May safely mellow into love; and grow
Refin'd, humane, and generous, if they can.
Love in such bosoms never to a fault
Or pains or pleasures. But ye finer souls,
Form'd to soft luxury, and prompt to thrill
With all the tumults, all the joys and pains,
That beauty gives; with caution and reserve
Indulge the sweet destroyer of repose,
Nor court too much the queen of charming cares.
For, while the cherish'd poison in your breast
Ferments and maddens; sick with jealousy,
Absence, distrust, or even with anxious joy,
The wholesome appetites and powers of life
Dissolve in languor. The coy stomach loathes
The genial board: your cheerful days are gone;
The generous bloom that flush'd your cheeks is fled.
To sighs devoted and to tender pains,
Pensive you sit, or solitary stray,
And waste your youth in musing. Musing first
Toy'd into care your unsuspecting heart:
It found a liking there, a sportful fire,
And that fomented into serious love;
Which musing daily strengthens and improves
Through all the heights of fondness and romance.
And you 're undone, the fatal shaft has sped,
If once you doubt whether you love or no.
The body wastes away; th' infected mind,
Dissolv'd in female tenderness, forgets
Each manly virtue, and grows dead to fame.
Sweet Heaven, from such intoxicating charms
Defend all worthy breasts! not that I deem
Love always dangerous, always to be shunn'd.
Love well repaid, and not too weakly sunk

In wanton and unmanly tenderness,
Adds bloom to health; o'er ev'ry virtue sheds
A gay, humane, a sweet, and generous grace,
And brightens all the ornaments of man.
But fruitless, hopeless, disappointed, rack'd
With jealousy, fatigu'd with hope and fear,
Too serious, or too languishingly fond,
Unnerves the body and unmans the soul.
And some have died for love; and some run mad;
And some with desperate hands themselves have slain.

Some to extinguish, others to prevent,
A mad devotion to one dangerous fair,
Court all they meet; in hopes to dissipate
The cares of love amongst an hundred brides.
Th' event is doubtful; for there are who find
A cure in this; there are who find it not.
'T is no relief, alas! it rather galls
The wound, to those who are sincerely sick.
For while from feverish and tumultuous joys
The nerves grow languid, and the soul subsides,
The tender fancy smarts with every sting,
And what was love before is madness now.
Is health your care, or luxury your aim,
Be temperate still: when Nature bids, obey;
Her wild impatient sallies bear no curb:
But when the prurient habit of delight,
Or loose imagination, spurs you on
To deeds above your strength, impute it not
To Nature: Nature all compulsion hates.
Ah! let not luxury nor vain renown
Urge you to feats you well might sleep without;
To make what should be rapture a fatigue,
A tedious task; nor in the wanton arms
Of twining Lais melt your manhood down.
For from the colliquation of soft joys
How chang'd you rise! the ghost of what you was!
Languid, and melancholy, and gaunt, and wan;
Your veins exhausted, and your nerves unstrung.
Spoil'd of its balm and sprightly zest, the blood
Grows vapid phlegm; along the tender nerves
(To each slight impulse tremblingly awake)
A subtle fiend that mimics all the plagues,
Rapid and restless springs from part to part.
The blooming honours of your youth are fallen;
Your vigour pines; your vital powers decay;
Diseases haunt you; and untimely age
Creeps on; unsocial, impotent, and lewd.
Infatuate, impious epicure! to waste
The stores of pleasure, cheerfulness, and health!
Infatuate all who make delight their trade,
And coy perdition every hour pursue.

Who pines with love, or in lascivious flames
Consumes, is with his own consent undone;
He chooses to be wretched, to be mad;
And warn'd, proceeds, and wilful to his fate.
But there 's a passion, whose tempestuous sway
Tears up each virtue planted in his breast,
And shakes to ruins proud philosophy.
For pale and trembling anger rushes in,
With fault'ring speech, and eyes that wildly stare;
Fierce as the tiger, madder than the seas, [strength.
Desperate, and arm'd with more than human
How soon the calm, humane, and polish'd man
Forgets compunction, and starts up a fiend!
Who pines in love, or wastes with silent cares,
Envy, or ignominy, or tender grief,
Slowly descends, and ling'ring, to the shades:
But he whom anger stings, drops, if he dies,
At once, and rushes apoplectic down;

Or a fierce fever hurries him to Hell,
 For, as the body through unnumber'd strings
 Reverberates each vibration of the soul;
 As is the passion, such is still the pain
 The body feels: or chronic, or acute.
 And oft a sudden storm at once o'erpowers
 The life, or gives your reason to the winds.
 Such fates attend the rash alarm of fear,
 And sudden grief, and rage, and sudden joy.

There are, meantime, to whom the boist'rous fit
 Is health, and only fills the sails of life.
 For where the mind a torpid winter leads,
 Wrapt in a body corpulent and cold,
 And each clogg'd function lazily moves on;
 A generous sally spurns th' incumbent load,
 Unlocks the breast, and gives a cordial glow.
 But if your wrathful blood is apt to boil,
 Or are your nerves too irritably strung,
 Wave all dispute; be cautious, if you joke;
 Keep Lent for ever, and forswear the bowl.
 For one rash moment sends you to the shades,
 Or shatters ev'ry hopeful scheme of life,
 And gives to horror all your days to come.
 Fate, arm'd with thunder, fire, and ev'ry plague,
 That ruins, tortures, or distracts mankind,
 And makes the happy wretched in an hour,
 O'erwhelms you not with woes so horrible
 As your own wrath, nor gives more sudden blows.

While choler works, good friend, you may be wrong.

Distrust yourself, and sleep before you fight.
 'T is not too late to-morrow to be brave;
 If honour bids, to-morrow kill or die.
 But calm advice against a raging fit
 Avails too little; and it braves the power
 Of all that ever taught in prose or song,
 To tame the fiend, that sleeps a gentle lamb,
 And wakes a lion. Unprovok'd and calm,
 You reason well; see as you ought to see,
 And wonder at the madness of mankind:
 Seiz'd with the common rage, you soon forget
 The speculations of your wiser hours.
 Beset with furies of all deadly shapes,
 Fierce and insidious, violent and slow;
 With all that urge or lure us on to fate:
 What refuge shall we seek? what arms prepare?

Where reason proves too weak, or void of wiles
 To cope with subtle or impetuous powers,
 I would invoke new passions to your aid:
 With indignation would extinguish fear;
 With fear, or generous pity, vanquish rage;
 And love with pride; and force to force oppose.

There is a charm, a power, that sways the breast;
 Bids every passion revel or be still;
 Inspires with rage, or all your cares dissolves;
 Can soothe distraction, and almost despair.
 That power is music: far beyond the stretch
 Of those unmeaning warblers on our stage;
 Those clumsy heroes, those fat-headed gods,
 Who move no passion justly but contempt:
 Who, like our dancers (light indeed and strong!)
 Do wond'rous feats, but never heard of grace.
 The fault is ours; we bear those monstrous arts;
 Good Heaven! we praise them: we, with loudest peals

Applaud the fool that highest lifts his heels;
 And with insipid show of rapture, die
 Of idiot notes impertinently long.
 But he the Muse's laurel justly shares,
 A poet he, and touch'd with Heaven's own fire,
 Who, with bold rage or solemn pomp of sound,
 Inflames, exalts, and ravishes the soul;
 Now tender, plaintive, sweet almost to pain,
 In love dissolves you; now in sprightly strains
 Breathes a gay rapture through your thrilling breasts;

Or melts the hearts with airs divinely sad;
 Or wakes to horror the tremendous strings.
 Such was the bard, whose heavenly strains of old
 Appeas'd the fiend of melancholy Saul.
 Such was, if old and heathen fame say true,
 The man who bade the Theban domes ascend,
 And tam'd the savage nations with his song;
 And such the Thracian, whose melodious lyre,
 Tun'd to soft woe, made all the mountains weep;
 Sooth'd even th' inexorable powers of Hell,
 And half redeem'd his lost Eurydice.
 Music exalts each joy, allays each grief,
 Expels diseases, softens every pain,
 Subdues the rage of poison and of plague;
 And hence the wise of ancient days ador'd
 One power of physic, melody, and song.

JOSEPH WARTON.

---

JOSEPH WARTON, D. D., born in 1722, was the eldest son of the Rev. Thomas Warton, poetry-professor at Oxford, and Vicar of Basingstoke. He received his early education under his father, and at the age of fourteen was admitted on the foundation at Winchester school. He was afterwards entered of Oriel college, Oxford, where he assiduously cultivated his literary taste, and composed some pieces of poetry, which were afterwards printed. Having taken the degree of B. D. he became curate to his father at Basingstoke; and in 1746 removed to a similar employment at Chelsea. In 1748 he was presented by the Duke of Bolton to the rectory of Winalade, soon after which he married. He accompanied his patron in 1751 on a tour to the south of France; and after his return he completed an edition of Virgil, in Latin and English; of which the Eclogues and Georgics were his own composition, the Eneid was the version of Pitt. Warton also contributed notes on the whole, and added three preliminary essays, on pastoral, didactic, and epic poetry. When the Adventurer was undertaken by Dr. Hawksworth, Warton, through the medium of Dr. Johnson, was invited to become a contributor, and his compliance with this request produced twenty-four papers, of which the greater part were essays on critical topics.

In 1755 he was elected second master of Winchester school, with the accompanying advantage of a boarding-house. In the following year there appeared, but without his name, the first volume, 8vo., of his "Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope." Scarcely any work of the kind has afforded more entertainment, from the vivacity of its remarks, the taste displayed in its criticisms, and the various anecdotes of which it became the vehicle; though some of the last were of a freer cast than perfectly became his character. This reason, perhaps, caused the second volume to be kept back till twenty-six years after. In 1766 he was advanced to the post of head-master of Winchester school, on which occasion he visited Oxford, and took the degrees of bachelor and doctor of divinity.

The remainder of his life was chiefly occupied by schemes of publications, and by new preferments, of the last of which he obtained a good share, though of moderate rank. In 1793 he closed his long labours at Winchester by a resignation of the mastership, upon which he retired to his rectory of Wickham. Still fond of literary employment, he accepted a proposal of the booksellers to superintend an edition of Pope's works, which was completed, in 1797, in nine vols. 8vo. Other engagements still pursued him, till his death, in his 78th year, February, 1800. The Wiccamists attested their regard to his memory, by erecting an elegant monument over his tomb in Winchester cathedral.

The poems of Dr. Warton consist of miscellaneous and occasional pieces, displaying a cultivated taste, and an exercised imagination, but without any claim to originality. His "Ode to Fancy," first published in Dodsley's collection, is perhaps that which has been the most admired.

ODE TO FANCY.

O PARENT of each lovely Muse,
 Thy spirit o'er my soul diffuse,
 O'er all my artless songs preside,
 My footsteps to thy temple guide,
 To offer at thy turf-built shrine,
 In golden cups no costly wine,
 No murder'd fatling of the flock,
 But flowers and honey from the rock.
 O nymph with loosely-flowing hair,
 With buskin'd leg, and bosom bare,
 Thy waist with myrtle-girdle bound,
 Thy brows with Indian feathers crown'd,
 Waving in thy snowy hand
 An all-commanding magic wand,
 Of pow'r to bid fresh gardens blow,
 'Mid cheerless Lapland's barren snow,
 Whose rapid wings thy flight convey
 Thro' air, and over earth and sea,
 While the vast various landscape lies
 Conspicuous to thy piercing eyes.
 O lover of the desert, hail !
 Say, in what deep and pathless vale,
 Or on what hoary mountain's side,
 'Mid fall of waters, you reside,
 'Mid broken rocks, a rugged scene,
 With green and grassy dales between,
 'Mid forests dark of aged oak,
 Ne'er echoing with the woodman's stroke,
 Where never human art appear'd,
 Nor ev'n one straw-roof'd cot was rear'd,
 Where Nature seems to sit alone,
 Majestic on a craggy throne ;
 Tell me the path, sweet wand'rer, tell,
 To thy unknown sequester'd cell,
 Where woodbines cluster round the door,
 Where shells and moss o'erlay the floor,
 And on whose top an hawthorn blows,
 Amid whose thickly-woven boughs
 Some nightingale still builds her nest,
 Each evening warbling thee to rest :
 Then lay me by the haunted stream,
 Rapt in some wild, poetic dream,
 In converse while methinks I rove
 With Spenser through a fairy grove ;
 Till, suddenly awak'd, I hear
 Strange whisper'd music in my ear,
 And my glad soul in bliss is drown'd
 By the sweetly-soothing sound !
 Me, goddess, by the right hand lead
 Sometimes through the yellow mead,
 Where Joy and white-rob'd Peace resort,
 And Venus keeps her festive court,
 Where Mirth and Youth each evening meet,
 And lightly trip with nimble feet,
 Nodding their lily-crowned heads,
 Where Laughter rose-lipp'd Hebe leads,
 Where Echo walks steep hills among,
 List'ning to the shepherd's song :
 Yet not these flowery fields of joy
 Can long my pensive mind employ.
 Haste, Fancy, from the scenes of folly,
 To meet the matron Melancholy,
 Goddess of the tearful eye,
 That loves to fold her arms, and sigh ;
 Let us with silent footsteps go
 To charnels and the house of woe,

To Gothic churches, vaults, and tombs,
 Where each sad night some virgin comes,
 With throbbing breast, and faded cheek,
 Her promis'd bridegroom's urn to seek ;
 Or to some abbey's mould'ring tow'rs,
 Where, to avoid cold wintry show'rs,
 The naked beggar shivering lies,
 While whistling tempests round her rise,
 And trembles lest the tottering wall
 Should on her sleeping infants fall.
 Now let us louder strike the lyre,
 For my heart glows with martial fire,
 I feel, I feel, with sudden heat,
 My big tumultuous bosom beat ;
 The trumpet's clangours pierce my ear,
 A thousand widows' shrieks I hear ;
 Give me another horse, I cry,
 Lo ! the base Gallic squadrons fly ;
 Whence is this rage ? — what spirit, say,
 To battle hurries me away ?
 'T is Fancy, in her fiery car,
 Transports me to the thickest war,
 There whirls me o'er the hills of slain,
 Where Tumult and Destruction reign ;
 Where mad with pain, the wounded steed
 Tramples the dying and the dead ;
 Where giant Terroure stalks around,
 With sullen joy surveys the ground,
 And, pointing to th' ensanguin'd field,
 Shakes his dreadful gorgon shield !
 O guide me from this horrid scene,
 To high-arch'd walks and alleys green,
 Which lovely Laura seeks, to shun
 The fervours of the mid-day sun ;
 The pangs of absence, O remove !
 For thou canst place me near my love,
 Canst fold in visionary bliss,
 And let me think I steal a kiss,
 While her ruby lips dispense
 Luscious nectar's quintessence !
 When young-eyed Spring profusely throws
 From her green lap the pink and rose,
 When the soft turtle of the dale
 To Summer tells her tender tale,
 When Autumn cooling caverns seeks,
 And stains with wine his jolly cheeks ;
 When Winter, like poor pilgrim old,
 Shakes his silver beard with cold ;
 At every season let my ear
 Thy solemn whispers, Fancy, hear.
 O warm, enthusiastic maid,
 Without thy powerful, vital aid,
 That breathes an energy divine,
 That gives a soul to every line,
 Ne'er may I strive with lips profane
 To utter an unhallow'd strain,
 Nor dare to touch the sacred string,
 Save when with smiles thou bidd'st me sing.
 O hear our prayer, O hither come
 From thy lamented Shakspeare's tomb,
 On which thou lov'st to sit at eve,
 Musing o'er thy darling's grave ;
 O queen of numbers, once again
 Animate some chosen swain,
 Who, filled with unexhausted fire,
 May boldly smite the sounding lyre,
 Who with some new unequall'd song,
 May rise above the rhyming throng,
 O'er all our list'ning passions reign,
 O'erwhelm our souls with joy and pain,

With terror shake, and pity move,
Rouse with revenge, or melt with love ;
O deign t' attend his evening walk,
With him in groves and grottoes talk ;
Teach him to scorn with frigid art
Feebly to touch th' unraptur'd heart ;
Like lightning, let his mighty verse
The bosom's inmost foldings pierce ;
With native beauties win applause
Beyond cold critics' studied laws ;
O let each Muse's fame increase,
O bid Britannia rival Greece !

VERSES:

WRITTEN AT MONTAURAN IN FRANCE, 1750.

TARN, how delightful wind thy willow'd waves,
But ah ! they fructify a land of slaves !
In vain thy bare-foot, sun-burnt peasants hide
With luscious grapes yon hill's romantic side ;
No cups nectareous shall their toil repay,
The priest's, the soldier's, and the fermier's prey :
Vain glows this Sun, in cloudless glory drest,
That strikes fresh vigour through the pining breast ;

Give me, beneath a colder, changeful sky,
My soul's best, only pleasure, Liberty !
What millions perish'd near thy mournful flood *,
When the red papal tyrant cry'd out — " Blood !"
Less fierce the Saracen, and quiver'd Moor,
That dash'd thy infants 'gainst the stones of yore.
Be warn'd, ye nations round ; and trembling see
Dire superstition quench humanity !
By all the chiefs in freedom's battles lost,
By wise and virtuous Alfred's awful ghost ;
By old Galgacus' scythed, iron car,
That, swiftly whirling through the walks of war,
Dash'd Roman blood, and crush'd the foreign throngs ;
By holy Druids' courage-breathing songs ;
By fierce Bonduca's shield and foaming steeds ;
By the bold Peers that met on Thames's meads ;
By the fifth Henry's helm and lightning spear ;
O Liberty, my warm petition hear ;
Be Albion still thy joy ! with her remain,
Long as the surge shall lash her oak-crown'd plain !

* Alluding to the persecutions of the Protestants, and the wars of the Saracens, carried on in the southern provinces of France.

THOMAS WARTON.

THOMAS WARTON, younger brother of the preceding, a distinguished poet, and a historian of poetry, was born at Basingstoke in 1728. He was educated under his father till 1743, when he was admitted a commoner of Trinity college, Oxford. Here he exercised his poetical talent to so much advantage, that, on the appearance of Mason's Elegy of Isis, which severely reflected on the disloyalty of Oxford at that period, he was encouraged by Dr. Huddesford, president of his college, to vindicate the cause of his university. This task he performed with great applause, by writing, in his twenty-first year, "The Triumph of Isis," a piece of much spirit and fancy, in which he retaliated upon the bard of Cam, by satirising the courtly venality then supposed to distinguish the rival university. His "Progress of Discontent," published in 1750, exhibited to great advantage his powers in the familiar style, and his talent for humour, with a knowledge of human life, extraordinary at his early age, especially if composed, as it is said, for a college exercise in 1746. In 1750 he took the degree of M. A., and in the following year became a fellow of his college.

His spirited satire, entitled "Newmarket," and pointed against the ruinous passion for the turf; his "Ode for Music;" and his "Verses on the Death of the Prince of Wales," were written about this time; and, in 1753, he was the editor of a small collection of poems, under the title of "The Union," which was printed at Edinburgh, and contained several of his own performances. In 1754 he made himself known by Observations on Spenser's Faery Queen, in one volume, afterwards enlarged to two; a work well received by the public, and which made a considerable addition to his literary reputation. So high was his character in the University, that in 1757 he was elected to the office of its poetry professor, which he held for the usual period of ten years, and rendered respectable by the erudition and taste displayed in his lectures.

It does not appear necessary in this place to particularize all the prose compositions which, whether grave or humorous, fell at this time from his pen; but it may be mentioned that verse continued occasionally to occupy his thoughts, and that having lamented the death of George II., in some lines addressed to Mr. Pitt, he continued the courtly strain in poems on the marriage of George III., and on the birth of the Prince of Wales, both printed in the university collection. In 1770 he gave an edition, in two volumes 4to., of the Greek poet Theocritus, which gave him celebrity in other countries besides his own. At what time he first employed himself with the history of English poetry, we are not informed, but in 1774 he had so far proceeded in the work as to publish the first volume in 4to. He afterwards printed a second in 1778, and a third in 1781; but his labour now became tiresome to himself, and the great compass which he had allotted to his plan was so irksome, that an unfinished fourth volume was all that he added to it.

The place of Camden professor of history, vacant by the resignation of Sir William Scott, was the close of his professional exertions; but soon after another engagement required his attention. By His Majesty's express desire, the post of poet laureat was offered to him, and accepted, and he determined to use his best endeavours for rendering it respectable. Varying the monotony of anniversary court compliment by topics better adapted to poetical description, he improved the style of the laureate odes, though his lyric strains underwent some ridicule on that account.

His concluding publication was an edition of the juvenile poems of Milton, of which the first volume made its appearance in 1785, and the second in 1790, a short time before his death. His constitution now began to give way. In his sixty-second year an attack of the gout shattered his frame, and was succeeded in May, 1790, by a paralytic seizure, which carried him off, at his lodgings in Oxford. His remains were interred, with every academical honour, in the chapel of Trinity college.

The pieces of Thomas Warton are very various in subject, and none of them long, whence he must only rank among the minor poets; but scarcely one of that tribe has noted with finer observation the minute circumstances in rural nature that afford pleasure in description, or has derived from the regions of fiction more animated and picturesque scenery.

ODE TO THE FIRST OF APRIL.

WITH dalliance rude young Zephyr wooes
Coy May. Full oft with kind excuse
The boisterous boy the fair denies,
Or with a scornful smile complies.

Mindful of disaster past,
And shrinking at the northern blast,
The sleety storm returning still,
The morning hoar, and evening chill;
Reluctant comes the timid Spring.
Scarce a bee, with airy ring,
Murmurs the blossom'd boughs around,
That clothe the garden's southern bound:
Scarce a sickly straggling flower,
Decks the rough castle's rifted tower:
Scarce the hardy primrose peeps
From the dark dell's entangled steeps;
O'er the fields of waving broom
Slowly shoots the golden bloom:
And, but by fits, the furze-clad dale
Tinctures the transitory gale.
While from the shrubbery's naked maze,
Where the vegetable blaze
Of Flora's brightest 'broidery shone,
Every chequer'd charm is flown;
Save that the lilac hangs to view
Its bursting gems in clusters blue.

Scant along the ridgy land
The beans their new-born ranks expand:
The fresh-turn'd soil with tender blades
Thinly the sprouting barley shades:
Fringing the forest's devious edge,
Half rob'd appears the hawthorn hedge;
Or to the distant eye displays
Weakly green its budding sprays.

The swallow, for a moment seen,
Skims in haste the village green;
From the gray moor, on feeble wing,
The screaming plovers idly spring:
The butterfly, gay-painted soon,
Explores awhile the tepid noon:
And fondly trusts its tender dyes
To fickle suns, and flattering skies.

Fraught with a transient, frozen shower,
If a cloud should haply lower,
Sailing o'er the landscape dark,
Mute on a sudden is the lark;
But when gleams the Sun again
O'er the pearl-besprinkled plain,
And from behind his watery veil
Looks through the thin descending hail;
She mounts, and, lessening to the sight,
Salutes the blithe return of light,
And high her tuneful track pursues
Mid the dim rainbow's scatter'd hues.

Where in venerable rows
Widely waving oaks enclose
The mote of yonder antique hall,
Swarm the rooks with clamorous call;
And to the toils of nature true,
Wreath their capacious nests anew.

Musing through the lawny park,
The lonely poet loves to mark
How various greens in faint degrees
Tinge the tall groupings of various trees;
While, careless of the changing year,
The pine cerulean, never sere,

Towers distinguish'd from the rest,
And proudly vaunts her winter vest.

Within some whispering osier isle,
Where Glym's * low banks neglected smile;
And each trim meadow still retains
The wintry torrent's oozy stains:
Beneath a willow, long forsook,
The fisher seeks his custom'd nook;
And bursting through the crackling sedge,
That crowns the current's cavern'd edge,
He startles from the bordering wood
The bashful wild-duck's early brood.

O'er the broad downs, a novel race,
Frisk the lambs with faltering pace,
And with eager bleatings fill
The fens that skirts the beacon'd hill.

His free-born vigour yet unbroke
To lordly man's usurping yoke,
The bounding colt forgets to play,
Basking beneath the noon-tide ray,
And stretch'd among the daisies pied
Of a green dingle's sloping side:
While far beneath, where Nature spreads
Her boundless length of level meads,
In loose luxuriance taught to stray
A thousand tumbling rills inlay
With silver veins the vale, or pass
Redundant through the sparkling grass.

Yet, in these presages rude,
Midst her pensive solitude,
Fancy, with prophetic glance,
Sees the teeming months advance;
The field, the forest, green and gay,
The dappled slope, the tedded hay;
Sees the reddening orchard blow,
The harvest wave, the vintage flow;
Sees June unfold his glossy robe
Of thousand hues o'er all the globe;
Sees Ceres grasp her crown of corn,
And plenty load her ample horn.

ODE.

THE CRUSADE.

Bound for holy Palestine,
Nimble we brush'd the level brine,
All in azure steel array'd;
O'er the wave our weapons play'd,
And made the dancing billows glow;
High upon the trophied prow,
Many a warrior-minstrel swung
His sounding harp, and boldly sung:

"Syrian virgins, wail and weep,
English Richard plows the deep!
Tremble, watchmen, as ye spy
From distant towers, with anxious eye,

* The Glym is a small river in Oxfordshire, flowing through Warton's parish of Kiddington, or Cuddington, and dividing it into upper and lower town. It is described by himself in his account of Cuddington, as a deep but narrow stream, winding through willowed meadows, and abounding in trout, pikes, and wild-fowl. It gives name to the village of Glymton, which adjoins to Kiddington.

The radiant range of shield and lance
Down Damascus' hills advance :
From Sion's turrets as afar
Ye ken the march of Europe's war !
Saladin, thou paynim king,
From Albion's isle revenge we bring !
On Acon's spiry citadel,
Though to the gale thy banners swell,
Pictur'd with the silver Moon ;
England shall end thy glory soon !
In vain, to break our firm array,
Thy brazen drums hoarse discord bray :
Those sounds our rising fury fan :
English Richard in the van,
On to victory we go,
A vaunting infidel the foe."

Blondel led the tuneful band,
And swept the wire with glowing hand.
Cyprus, from her rocky mound,
And Crete, with piny verdure crown'd,
Far along the smiling main
Echoed the prophetic strain.

Soon we kiss'd the sacred earth
That gave a murder'd Saviour birth ;
Then with ardour fresh endu'd,
Thus the solemn song renew'd.

" Lo, the toilsome voyage past,
Heaven's favour'd hills appear at last !
Object of our holy vow,
We tread the Tyrian valleys now.
From Carmel's almond-shaded steep
We feel the cheering fragrance creep :
O'er Engaddi's shrubs of balm
Waves the date-empurpl'd palm :
See Lebanon's aspiring head
Wide his immortal umbrage spread !
Hail Calvary, thou mountain hoar,
Wet with our Redeemer's gore !
Ye trampled tombs, ye fanes forlorn,
Ye stones, by tears of pilgrims worn ;
Your ravish'd honours to restore,
Fearless we climb this hostile shore !
And thou, the sepulchre of God ;
By mocking pagans rudely trod,
Bereft of every awful rite,
And quench'd thy lamps that beam'd so bright ;
For thee, from Britain's distant coast,
Lo, Richard leads his faithful host !
Aloft in his heroic hand,
Blazing like the beacon's brand,
O'er the far-affrighted fields,
Resistless Kaliburn * he wields.
Proud Saracen, pollute no more
The shrines by martyrs built of yore !
From each wild mountain's trackless crown
In vain thy gloomy castles frown :
Thy battering engines, huge and high,
In vain our steel-clad steeds defy ;
And, rolling in terrific state
On giant-wheels harsh thunders grate.
When eve has hush'd the buzzing camp,
Amid the moon-light vapours damp,
Thy necromantic forms, in vain,
Haunt us on the tented plain :

* Kaliburn is the sword of king Arthur; which, as the monkish historians say, came into the possession of Richard I., and was given by that monarch, in the Crusades, to Tancred king of Sicily, as a royal present of inestimable value, about the year 1190.

We bid the spectre-shapes avoant,
Ashtaroth, and Termagaunt ! †
With many a demon, pale of hue,
Doom'd to drink the bitter dew,
That drops from Macon's sooty tree,
Mid the dread grove of ebony.
Nor magic charms, nor fiends of Hell,
The Christian's holy courage quell.
Salem, in ancient majesty
Arise, and lift thee to the sky !
Soon on thy battlements divine
Shall wave the badge of Constantina
Ye barons, to the Sun unfold
Our cross with crimson wove and gold !"

THE

PROGRESS OF DISCONTENT.

WHEN now mature in classic knowledge,
The joyful youth is sent to college,
His father comes, a vicar plain,
At Oxford bred — in Anna's reign,
And thus, in form of humble suitor,
Bowing accosts a reverend tutor :
" Sir, I'm a Glo'stershire divine,
And this my eldest son of nine ;
My wife's ambition and my own
Was that this child should wear a gown :
I'll warrant that his good behaviour
Will justify your future favour ;
And, for his parts, to tell the truth,
My son 's a very forward youth ;
Has Horace all by heart — you 'd wonder —
And mouths out Homer's Greek like thunder.
If you 'd examine — and admit him,
A scholarship would nicely fit him ;
That he succeeds 't is ten to one ;
Your vote and interest, sir !" — 'T is done.

Our pupil's hopes, though twice defeated,
Are with a scholarship completed :
A scholarship but half maintains,
And college-rules are heavy chains :
In garret dark he smokes and puns,
A prey to discipline and duns ;
And now, intent on new designs,
Sighs for a fellowship — and fines.

When nine full tedious winters past ‡,
That utmost wish is crown'd at last :
But the rich prize no sooner got,
Again he quarrels with his lot :
" These fellowships are pretty things,
We live indeed like petty kings :
But who can bear to waste his whole age
Amid the dullness of a college,
Debarr'd the common joys of life,
And that prime bliss — a loving wife !
O ! what 's a table richly spread,
Without a woman at its head ?

† Ashtaroth is mentioned by Milton as a general name of the Syrian deities : Par. Lost, l. 422. And Termagaunt is the name given in the old romances to the god of the Saracens. See Percy's Reliques, vol. i. p. 74.

‡ The scholars of Trinity are superannuated, if they do not succeed to fellowships in nine years after their election to scholarships.

Would some snug benefice but fall,
 Ye feasts, ye dinners ! farewell all !
 To offices I'd bid adieu,
 Of dean, vice præ. — of burnar too ;
 Come joys, that rural quiet yields,
 Come, tythes, and house, and fruitful fields !"

Too fond of freedom and of ease
 A patron's vanity to please,
 Long time he watches, and by stealth,
 Each frail incumbent's doubtful health ;
 At length, and in his fortieth year,
 A living drops — two hundred clear !
 With breast elate beyond expression,
 He hurries down to take possession,
 With rapture views the sweet retreat —
 'What a convenient house ! how neat !
 For fuel here 's sufficient wood :
 Pray God the cellars may be good !
 The garden — that must be new-plann'd —
 Shall these old-fashion'd yew-trees stand ?
 Y'er yonder vacant plot shall rise
 The flow'ry shrub of thousand dyes : —
 Yon wall, that feels the southern ray,
 Shall blush with ruddy fruitage gay :
 While thick beneath its aspect warm
 Y'er well-rang'd hives the bees shall swarm,
 From which, ere long, of golden gleam
 Metbeglin's luscious juice shall stream :
 This awkward hut, o'ergrown with ivy,
 We 'll alter to a modern privy :
 Up yon green slope, of hazels trim,
 An avenue so cool and dim
 Shall to an arbour at the end,
 In spite of gout, entice a friend.
 My predecessor lov'd devotion —
 But of a garden had no notion."

Continuing this fantastic farce on,
 He now commences country parson.
 To make his character entire,
 He weds — a cousin of the 'squire ;
 Not over-weighty in the purse,
 But many doctors have done worse :
 And though she boasts no charms divine,
 Yet she can carve and make birch wine.
 Thus fixt, content he taps his barrel,
 Exhorts his neighbours not to quarrel ;
 Finds his church-wardens have discerning
 Both in good liquor and good learning ;
 With tythes his barns replete he sees,
 And chuckles o'er his surplice fees ;
 Studies to find out latent dues,
 And regulates the state of pews ;
 Lides a sleek mare with purple housing,
 To share the monthly club's carousing ;
 Of Oxford pranks facetious tells,
 And — but on Sundays — hears no bells ;
 Sends presents of his choicest fruit,
 And prunes himself each sapless shoot ;
 Plants cauliflowers, and boasts to rear
 The earliest melons of the year ;
 Thinks alteration charming work is,
 Keeps Bantam cocks, and feeds his turkies ;
 Builds in his copse a fav'rite bench,
 And stores the pond with carp and tench. —

But ah ! too soon his thoughtless breast
 By cares domestic is oppress'd ;
 And a third butcher's bill, and brewing,
 Threaten inevitable ruin :
 For children fresh expenses yet,
 And Dicky now for school is fit.

" Why did I sell my college life,"
 He cries, " for benefice and wife ?
 Return, ye days, when endless pleasure
 I found in reading, or in leisure !
 When calm around the common room
 I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume !
 Rode for a stomach, and inspected,
 At annual bottlings, corks selected :
 And din'd untax'd, untroubled, under
 The portrait of our pious founder !
 When impositions were supply'd
 To light my pipe — or soothe my pride —
 No cares were then for forward peas,
 A yearly-longing wife to please ;
 My thoughts no christ'ning dinners crost,
 No children cry'd for butter'd toast ;
 And ev'ry night I went to bed,
 Without a modus in my head !"

Oh ! trifling head, and fickle heart !
 Chagrin'd at whatsoe'er thou art ;
 A dupe to follies yet untry'd,
 And sick of pleasures, scarce enjoy'd !
 Each prize possess'd, thy transport ceases,
 And in pursuit alone it pleases.

INSCRIPTION IN A HERMITAGE.

AT ANSLEY HALL IN WARWICKSHIRE.

BENEATH this stony roof reclin'd ;
 I soothe to peace my pensive mind ;
 And while, to shade my lowly cave,
 Embowering elms their umbrage wave ;
 And while the maple dish is mine,
 The beechen cup, unstain'd with wine ;
 I scorn the gay licentious crowd,
 Nor heed the toys that deck the proud.

Within my limits lone and still
 The blackbird pipes in artless trill ;
 Fast by my couch, congenial guest,
 The wren has wove her mossy nest ;
 From busy scenes, and brighter skies,
 To lurk with innocence, she flies :
 Here hopes in safe repose to dwell,
 Nor aught suspects the sylvan cell.

At morn I take my custom'd round,
 To mark how buds yon shrubby mound,
 And every opening primrose count,
 That trimly paints my blooming mount :
 Or o'er the sculptures, quaint and rude,
 That grace my gloomy solitude,
 I teach in winding wreaths to stray
 Fantastic ivy's gadding spray.

At eve, within yon studious nook,
 I ope my brass-embossed book,
 Pourtray'd with many a holy deed
 Of martyrs, crown'd with heavenly meed :
 Then as my taper waxes dim,
 Chant, ere I sleep, my measur'd hymn ;
 And at the close, the gleams behold
 Of parting wings bedropt with gold.

While such pure joys my bliss create,
 Who but would smile at guilty state ?

Who but would wish his holy lot
In calm Oblivion's humble grot?
Who but would cast his pomp away,
To take my staff, and amice gray* ;
And to the world's tumultuous stage
Prefer the blameless hermitage?

ODE.

THE HAMLET.

WRITTEN IN WHICHWOOD FOREST.

THE hinds how blest, who ne'er beguil'd
To quit their hamlet's hawthorn wild ;
Nor haunt the crowd, nor tempt the main,
For splendid care, and guilty gain!

When morning's twilight-tinctur'd beam
Strikes their low thatch with slanting gleam,
They rove abroad in ether blue,
To dip the scythe in fragrant dew ;
The sheaf to bind, the beech to fell,
That nodding shades a craggy dell.

Midst gloomy glades, in warbles clear,
Wild nature's sweetest notes they hear :
On green untrodden banks they view
The hyacinth's neglected hue :
In their lone haunts, and woodland rounds,
They spy the squirrel's airy bounds,
And startle from her ashen spray,
Across the glen, the screaming jay :
Each native charm their steps explore
Of Solitude's sequestered store.

For them the Moon with cloudless ray
Mounts, to illume their homeward way :
Their weary spirits to relieve,
The meadows' incense breathe at eve.
No riot mars the simple fare,
That o'er a glimmering hearth they share :
But when the curfew's measur'd roar
Duly, the darkening valleys o'er,
Has echoed from the distant town,
They wish no beds of cygnet-down,
No trophied canopies, to close
Their drooping eyes in quick repose.

Their little sons, who spread the bloom
Of health around the clay-built room,
Or through the primros'd coppice stray,
Or gambol in the new-mown hay ;
Or quaintly braid the cowslip twine,
Or drive afield the tardy kine ;
Or hasten from the sultry hill,
To loiter at the shady rill ;
Or climb the tall pine's gloomy crest,
To rob the raven's ancient nest.

Their humble porch with honied flow'rs
The curling woodbine's shade imbow'rs :
From the small garden's thymy mound
Their bees in busy swarms resound :
Nor fell Disease, before his time,
Hastes to consume life's golden prime :
But when their temples long have wore
The silver crown of tresses hoar ;
As studious still calm peace to keep,
Beneath a flowery turf they sleep.

* Gray clothing, from the Latin verb amicie, to clothe.

ODE SENT TO A FRIEND,

ON HIS LEAVING A FAVOURITE VILLAGE IN HARTFORDSHIRE

AH mourn, thou lov'd retreat ! No more
Shall classic steps thy scenes explore !
When morn's pale rays but faintly peep
O'er yonder oak-crown'd airy steep,
Who now shall climb its brows to view
The length of landscape, ever new,
Where Summer flings, in careless pride,
Her varied vesture far and wide ?
Who mark, beneath, each village-charm,
Or grange, or elm-encircled farm :
The flinty dove-cote's crowded roof,
Watch'd by the kite that sails aloof :
The tufted pines, whose umbrage tall
Darkens the long-deserted hall :
The veteran beech, that on the plain
Collects at eve the playful train :
The cot that smokes with early fire,
The low-roof'd fane's embosom'd spire ?

Who now shall indolently stray
Through the deep forest's tangled way ;
Pleas'd at his custom'd task to find
The well-known hoary-tressed hind,
That toils with feeble hands to glean
Of wither'd boughs his pittance men ?
Who mid thy nooks of hazel sit,
Lost in some melancholy fit ;
And listening to the raven's croak,
The distant flail, the falling oak ?
Who, through the sunshine and the shower,
Descry the rainbow-painted tower ?
Who, wandering at return of May,
Catch the first cuckow's vernal lay ?
Who musing waste the summer hour,
Where high o'er-arching trees embower
The grassy lane, so rarely pac'd,
With azure flow'rets idly grac'd ?
Unnotic'd now, at twilight's dawn
Returning reapers cross the lawn ;
Nor fond attention loves to note
The wether's bell from folds remote :
While, own'd by no poetic eye,
Thy pensive evenings shade the sky !

For lo ! the Bard who rapture found
In every rural sight or sound ;
Whose genius warm, and judgment clear,
No charm of genuine nature pass'd ;
Who felt the Muse's purest fires,
Far from thy favour'd haunt retires ;
Who peopled all thy vocal bowers
With shadowy shapes, and airy powers.

Behold, a dread repose resumes,
As erst, thy sad sequester'd glooms !
From the deep dell, where shaggy roots
Fringe the rough brink with wreathed shoots,
Th' unwilling genius flies forlorn,
His primrose chaplet rudely torn.
With hollow shriek the nymphs forsake
The pathless copse and hedge-row brake :
Where the delv'd mountains headlong slide
Its chalky entrails opens wide,
On the green summit, ambush'd high,
No longer Echo loves to lie.
No pearl-crown'd maids with wily look,
Rise beckoning from the reedy brook.

Around the glow-worm's glimmering bank,
 No Fairies run in fiery rank ;
 Nor brush, half-seen, in airy tread
 The violet's unprinted head.
 But Fancy, from the thickets brown,
 The glades that wear a conscious frown,
 The forest oaks, that, pale and lone,
 Nod to the blast with hoarser tone,
 Rough glens, and sullen waterfalls,
 Her bright ideal offspring calls.

So by some sage enchanter's spell,
 As old Arabian fablers tell,
 Amid the solitary wild,
 Luxuriant gardens gaily smil'd :
 From sapphire rocks the fountains stream'd,
 With golden fruit the branches beam'd ;
 Fair forms, in every wondrous wood,
 Or lightly tripp'd, or solemn stood ;
 And oft, retreating from the view,
 Betray'd, at distance, beauties new :
 While gleaming o'er the crisped bowers
 Rich spires arose, and sparkling towers.
 I bound on service new to go,
 The master of the magic show,
 His transitory charm withdrew,
 Away th' illusive landscape flew :
 Sun clouds obcur'd the groves of gold,
 Blue lightning smote the blooming mould :
 In visionary glory rear'd,
 The gorgeous castle disappear'd ;
 And a bare heath's unfruitful plain
 Surp'd the wizard's proud domain.

THE

PLEASURES OF MELANCHOLY.

Præcipe lugubres

Cantus, Melpomene ! —

Scenes of musings, Contemplation sage,
 The grotto stands upon the topmost rock
 Teneriff ; 'mid the tempestuous night,
 Which, in calmest meditation held,
 Thou hear'st with howling winds the beating rain
 Drifting hail descend ; or if the skies
 Clouded shine, and through the blue serene
 Cynthia rolls her silver-axled car,
 Once gazing stedfast on the spangled vault
 Turn'd thou sitt'st, while murmurs indistinct
 Distant billows soothe thy pensive ear
 In hoarse and hollow sounds ; secure, self-blest,
 Thou oft thou listen'st to the wild uproar
 Meets encount'ring, that in whispers low
 Winds the rocky summit, where thou dwell'st
 Note from man conversing with the spheres !
 And me, queen sublime, to solemn glooms
 Genial with my soul ; to cheerless shades,
 Wind'd seats, to twilight cells and bow'rs,
 Where thoughtful Melancholy loves to muse,
 Her fav'rite midnight haunts. The laughing scenes
 Purple Spring, where all the wanton train
 Smiles and Graces seem to lead the dance
 Sportive round, while from their hand they show'r
 Arcial blooms and flow'rs, no longer charm ;
 Adieu, no more I court thy balmy breeze,
 In green vales ! ye broider'd meads, adieu !

Beneath yon ruin'd abbey's moss-grown piles
 Oft let me sit, at twilight hour of eve,
 Where through some western window the pale Moon
 Pours her long-levell'd rule of streaming light ;
 While sullen sacred silence reigns around,
 Save the lone screech-owl's note, who builds his bow'r
 Amid the mould'ring caverns dark and damp,
 Or the calm breeze, that rustles in the leaves
 Of flaunting ivy, that with mantle green
 Invests some wasted tow'r. Or let me tread
 Its neighb'ring walk of pines, where mus'd of old
 The cloister'd brothers : through the gloomy void
 That far extends beneath their ample arch
 As on I pace, religious horror wraps
 My soul in dread repose. But when the world
 Is clad in Midnight's raven-colour'd robe,
 'Mid hollow charnel let me watch the flame
 Of taper dim, shedding a livid glare
 O'er the wan heaps ; while airy voices talk
 Along the glimm'ring walls ; or ghostly shape
 At distance seen, invites with beck'ning hand
 My lonesome steps, through the far-winding vaults.
 Nor undelightful is the solemn noon
 Of night, when haply wakeful from my couch
 I start : lo ! all is motionless around !
 Roars not the rushing wind ; the sons of men
 And every beast in mute oblivion lie ;
 All nature's hush'd in silence and in sleep.
 O then how fearful is it to reflect,
 That through the still globe's awful solitude,
 No being wakes but me ! till stealing sleep
 My drooping temples bathes in opiate dew.
 Nor then let dreams, of wanton folly born,
 My senses lead through flow'ry paths of joy ;
 But let the sacred genius of the night
 Such mystic visions send, as Spenser saw,
 When through bewild'ring Fancy's magic maze,
 To the fell house of Busyrane, he led
 Th' unshaken Britomart ; or Milton knew,
 When in abstracted thought he first conceiv'd
 All Heav'n in tumult, and the seraphim
 Come tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold.

Let others love soft Summer's evening smiles,
 As list'ning to the distant water-fall,
 They mark the blushes of the streaky west ;
 I choose the pale December's foggy glooms.
 Then, when the sullen shades of ev'ning close,
 Where through the room a blindly glimm'ring gleam
 The dying embers scatter, far remote [roof
 From Mirth's mad shouts, that through th' illumin'd
 Resound with festive echo, let me sit,
 Blest with the lowly cricket's drowsy dirge.
 Then let my thought contemplative explore
 This fleeting state of things, the vain delights,
 The fruitless toils, that still our search elude,
 As through the wilderness of life we rove.
 This sober hour of silence will unmask
 False Folly's smile, that like the dazzling spells
 Of wily Comus cheat the unweeding eye
 With blear illusion, and persuade to drink
 That charmed cup, which Reason's mintage fair
 Unmoulds, and stamps the monster on the man.
 Eager we taste, but in the luscious draught
 Forget the poisonous dregs that lurk beneath.

Few know that elegance of soul refin'd,
 Whose soft sensation feels a quicker joy
 From Melancholy's scenes, than the dull pride
 Of tasteless splendour and magnificence
 Can e'er afford. Thus Eloise, whose mind
 Had languish'd to the pangs of melting love,

More genuine transports found, as on some tomb
 Reclin'd, she watch'd the tapers of the dead ;
 Or through the pillar'd ilea, amid pale shrines
 Of imag'd saints, and intermingled graves,
 Mus'd a veil'd votaree ; than Flavia feels,
 As through the mazes of the festive ball,
 Proud of her conquering charms, and beauty's blaze,
 She floats amid the silken sons of dress,
 And shines the fairest of th' assembled fair.

When azure noontide cheers the dædal globe,
 And the blest regent of the golden day
 Rejoices in his bright meridian tower,
 How oft my wishes ask the night's return,
 That best befriends the melancholy mind !
 Hail, sacred Night ! thou too shalt share my song !
 Sister of ebon-scepter'd Hecat, hail !
 Whether in congregated clouds thou wrapp'st
 Thy viewless chariot, or with silver crown
 Thy beaming head encirclest, ever hail !
 What though beneath thy gloom the sorceress-strain,
 Far in obscured haunt of Lapland moors,
 With rhymes uncouth the bloody cauldron bless ;
 Though Murder wan beneath thy shrouding shade
 Summons her slow-ey'd vot'ries to devise
 Of secret slaughter, while by one blue lamp
 In hideous conf'rence sits the list'ning band,
 And start at each low wind, or wakeful sound :
 What though thy stay the pilgrim curseth oft,
 As all benighted in Arabian wastes
 He hears the wilderness around him howl
 With roaming monsters, while on his hoar head
 The black-descending tempest ceaseless beats ;
 Yet more delightful to my pensive mind
 Is thy return, than blooming Morn's approach,
 Ev'n than, in youthful pride of opening May,
 When from the portals of the saffron east
 She sheds fresh roses, and ambrosial dews.
 Yet not ungrateful is the Morn's approach,
 When dropping wet she comes, and clad in clouds,
 While through the damp air scowls the louring
 South,

Blackening the landscape's face, that grove and hill
 In formless vapours undistinguish'd swim :
 Th' afflicted songsters of the sadden'd groves
 Hail not the sullen gloom : the waving elms
 That, hoar through time and rang'd in thick array,
 Enclose with stately row some rural hall,
 Are mute, nor echo with the clamours hoarse
 Of rooks rejoicing on their airy boughs ;
 While to the shed the dripping poultry crowd,
 A mournful train : secure the village-hind
 Hangs o'er the crackling blaze, nor tempts the storm ;
 Fix'd in th' unfinish'd furrow rests the plough :
 Rings not the high wood with enliven'd shouts
 Of early hunter : all is silence drear ;
 And deepest sadness wraps the face of things.

Through Pope's soft song though all the Graces
 breathe,
 And happiest art adorn his Attic page ;
 Yet does my mind with sweeter transport glow,
 As at the root of mossy trunk reclin'd,
 In magic Spenser's wildly-warbled song
 I see deserted Una wander wide
 Through wasteful solitudes, and lurid heaths,
 Weary, forlorn ; than when the fated fair
 Upon the bosom bright of silver Thames
 Lanches in all the lustre of brocade,
 Amid the splendours of the laughing Sun.
 The gay description palls upon the sense,
 And coldly strikes the mind with feeble bliss.

Ye youths of Albion's beauty-blossoming isle,
 Whose brows have worn the wreath of luckless love,
 Is there a pleasure like the pensive mood,
 Whose magic wont to soothe your soften'd soul ?
 O tell how rapturous the joy, to melt
 To Melody's assuasive voice ; to bend
 Th' uncertain step along the midnight mood,
 And pour your sorrows to the pitying Moon,
 By many a slow trill from the bird of woe
 Oft interrupted ; in embow'ring woods
 By darksome brook to muse, and there forget
 The solemn dulness of the tedious world,
 While Fancy grasps the visionary fair :
 And now no more th' abstracted ear attends
 The water's murm'ring lapse, th' entranced eye
 Pierces no longer through th' extended rows
 Of thick-rang'd trees ; till haply from the depth
 The woodman's stroke, or distant tinkling team,
 Or heifers rustling through the brake, alarms
 Th' illuded sense, and mars the golden dream.
 These are delights that absence drear has made
 Familiar to my soul, e'er since the form
 Of young Sapphira, beauteous as the Spring,
 When from her vi'let-woven couch awak'd
 By frolic Zephyr's hand, her tender cheek
 Graceful she lifts, and blushing from her bow'r
 Issues to clothe in gladsome-glistering green
 The genial globe, first met my dazzled sight :
 These are delights unknown to minds profane,
 And which alone the pensive soul can taste.

The taper'd choir, at the late hour of pray'r,
 Oft let me tread, while to th' according voice
 The many-sounding organ peals on high,
 The clear slow-dittied chant, or varied hymn,
 Till all my soul is bathed in ecstasies,
 And lapp'd in paradise. Or let me sit
 Far in sequester'd ilea of the deep dome,
 There lonesome listen to the sacred sounds,
 Which, as they lengthen through the Gothic vaults,
 In hollow murmurs reach my ravish'd ear.
 Nor when the lamps expiring yield to night,
 And solitude returns, would I forsake
 The solemn mansion, but attentive mark,
 The due clock swinging slow with sweepy sway,
 Measuring time's flight with momentary sound.

Nor let me fail to cultivate my mind
 With the soft thrillings of the tragic Muse,
 Divine Melpomene, sweet Pity's nurse,
 Queen of the stately step, and flowing pall.
 Now let Monimia mourn with streaming eyes
 Her joys incestuous, and polluted love ;
 Now let soft Juliet in the gaping tomb
 Print the last kiss on her true Romeo's lips,
 His lips yet reeking from the deadly draught :
 Or Jaffier kneel for one forgiving look.
 Nor seldom let the Moor on Desdemona
 Pour the misguided threats of jealous rage.
 By soft degrees the manly torrent steals
 From my swoln eyes ; and at a brother's woe
 My big heart melts in sympathizing tears.

What are the splendours of the gaudy court,
 Its tinsel trappings, and its pageant pamps ?
 To me far happier seems the banish'd lord,
 Amid Siberia's unrejoicing wilds,
 Who pines all lonesome, in the chambers low
 Of some high castle shut, whose windows dim
 In distant ken discover trackless plains,
 Where Winter ever whirls his icy car !
 While still repeated objects of his view,
 The gloomy battlements, and ivied spires,

That crown the solitary dome, arise ;
 While from the topmost turret the slow clock,
 Far heard along th' inhospitable wastes,
 With sad-returning chime awakes new grief ;
 Ev'n he far happier seems than is the proud,
 The potent satrap, whom he left behind
 Mid Moscow's golden palaces, to drown
 In ease and luxury the langhing hours.

Illustrious objects strike the gazer's mind
 With feeble bliss, and but allure the sight,
 Nor rouse with impulse quick th' unfeeling heart.
 Thus seen by shepherds from Hymettus' brow,
 What dædal landscapes smile ! here palmy groves,
 Resounding once with Plato's voice, arise,
 Amid whose umbrage green her silver head
 Th' unfading olive lifts : here vine-clad hills
 Lay forth their purple store, and sunny vales
 In prospect vast their level laps expand,
 Amid whose beauties glistening Athens tow'ra.
 Though through the blissful scenes Ilissus roll
 His sage-inspiring flood, whose winding marge
 The thick-wove laurel shades ; though roseate Morn
 Pour all her splendours on th' empurpled scene ;
 Yet feels the hoary hermit truer joys,
 As from the cliff, that o'er his cavern hangs,
 He views the piles of fall'n Persepolis
 In deep arrangement hide the darksome plain.
 Inbounded waste ! the mould'ring obelisk
 Here, like a blasted oak, ascends the clouds ;
 Here Parian domes their vaulted halls disclose
 Horrid with thorn, where lurks th' unpitying thief,
 Whence flits the twilight-loving bat at eve,
 And the deaf adder wreathes her spotted train,
 The dwellings once of elegance and art.
 Here temples rise, amid whose hallow'd bounds
 Spires the black pine, while through the naked street,
 Once haunt of tradeful merchants, springs the grass :
 Here columns heap'd on prostrate columns, torn
 From their firm base, increase the mould'ring mass.
 Far as the sight can pierce, appear the spoils

Of sunk magnificence ! a blended scene
 Of moles, fanes, arches, domes, and palaces,
 Where, with his brother Horror, Ruin sits.
 O come then, Melancholy, queen of thought !
 O come with saintly look, and stedfast step,
 From forth thy cave embower'd with mournful yew,
 Where ever to the curfew's solemn sound
 List'ning thou sitt'st, and with thy cypress bind
 Thy votary's hair, and seal him for thy son.
 But never let Euphrosyne beguile
 With toys of wanton mirth my fixed mind,
 Nor in my path her primrose-garland cast.
 Though 'mid her train the dimpled Hebe bare
 Her rosy bosom to th' enamour'd view ;
 Though Venus, mother of the Smiles and Loves,
 And Bacchus, ivy-crown'd, in citron bow'r
 With her on nectar-streaming fruitage feast :
 What though 't is hers to calm the low'ring skies,
 And at her presence mild th' embattled clouds
 Disperse in air, and o'er the face of Heav'n
 New day diffusive gleam at her approach ?
 Yet are these joys that Melancholy gives,
 Than all her witless revels happier far ;
 These deep-felt joys, by Contemplation taught.

Then ever, beauteous Contemplation, hail !
 From thee began, auspicious maid, my song,
 With thee shall end ; for thou art fairer far
 Than are the nymphs of Cirrha's mossy grot ;
 To loftier rapture thou canst wake the thought,
 Than all the fabling poet's boasted pow'ra.
 Hail, queen divine ! whom, as tradition tells,
 Once in his evening walk a Druid found,
 Far in a hollow glade of Mona's woods ;
 And piteous bore with hospitable hand
 To the close shelter of his oaken bow'r.
 There soon the sage admiring mark'd the dawn
 Of solemn musing in your pensive thought ;
 For when a smiling babe, you lov'd to lie
 Oft deeply list'ning to the rapid roar
 Of wood-hung Meinai, stream of Druids old.

WILLIAM MASON.

WILLIAM MASON, a poet of some distinction, born in 1725, was the son of a clergyman, who held the living of Hull. He was admitted first of St. John's College, and afterwards of Pembroke College, Cambridge, of the latter of which he was elected Fellow in 1747. He entered into holy orders in 1754, and, by the favour of the Earl of Holderness, was presented to the valuable rectory of Aston, Yorkshire, and became Chaplain to His Majesty. Some poems which he printed gave him reputation, which received a great accession from his dramatic poem of "Elfrida." By this piece, and his "Caractacus," which followed, it was his aim to attempt the restoration of the ancient Greek chorus in tragedy; but this is so evidently an appendage of the infant and imperfect state of the drama, that a pedantic attachment to the ancients could alone suggest its revival. In 1756, he published a small collection of "Odes," which were generally considered as displaying more of the artificial mechanism of poetry, than of its genuine spirit. This was not the case with his "Elegies," published in 1763, which, abating some superfluity of ornament, are in general marked with the simplicity of language proper to this species of composition, and breathe noble sentiments of freedom and virtue. A collection of all his poems which he thought worthy of preserving, was published in 1764, and afterwards went through several editions. He had married an amiable lady, who died of a consumption in 1767, and was buried in the cathedral of Bristol, under a monument, on which are inscribed some very tender and beautiful lines, by her husband.

In 1772, the first book of Mason's "English Garden," a didactic and descriptive poem, in blank verse, made its appearance, of which the fourth and concluding book was printed in 1781. Its purpose was to recommend the modern system of natural or landscape gardening, to which the author adheres with the rigour of exclusive taste. The versification is formed upon the best models, and the description, in many parts, is rich and vivid; but a general air of stiffness prevented it from attaining any considerable share of popularity. Some of his following poetic pieces express his liberal sentiments on political subjects; and when the late Mr. Pitt came into power, being then the friend of a free constitution, Mason addressed him in an "Ode," containing many patriotic and manly ideas. But being struck with alarm at the unhappy events of the French revolution, one of his latest pieces was a "Palinody to Liberty." He likewise revived, in an improved form, and published, Du Fresnoy's Latin poem on the Art of Painting, enriching it with additions furnished by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and with a metrical version. Few have been better executed than this, which unites to great beauties of language a correct representation of the original. His tribute to the memory of Gray, being an edition of his poems, with some additions, and Memoirs of his Life and Writings, was favourably received by the public.

Mason died in April, 1797, at the age of seventy-two, in consequence of a mortification produced by a hurt in his leg. A tablet has been placed to his memory in Poets' Corner, in Westminster Abbey. His character in private life was exemplary for worth and active benevolence, though not without a degree of stateliness and assumed superiority of manner.

ODE TO MEMORY.

MOTHER of Wisdom! thou, whose sway
The throng'd ideal hosts obey;
Who bidd'st their ranks, now vanish, now appear,
Flame in the van, or darken in the rear;
Accept this votive verse. Thy reign
Nor place can fix, nor power restrain.
All, all is thine. For thee the ear, and eye,
Rove through the realms of grace, and harmony:
The senses thee spontaneous serve,
That wake, and thrill through ev'ry nerve.
Else vainly soft, lov'd Philomel! would flow
The soothing sadness of thy warbled woe:
Else vainly sweet yon woodbine shade
With clouds of fragrance fill the glade;

Vainly, the cygnet spread her downy plume,
The vine gush nectar, and the virgin bloom.
But swift to thee, alive and warm,
Devolves each tributary charm:
See modest Nature bring her simple stores,
Luxuriant Art exhaust her plastic powers;
While every flower in Fancy's clime,
Each gem of old heroic time,
Cull'd by the hand of the industrious Muse,
Around thy shrine their blended beams diffuse.

Hail, Mem'ry! hail. Behold, I lead
To that high shrine the sacred maid:
Thy daughter she, the empress of the lyre,
The first, the fairest, of Aonia's quire.
She comes, and lo, thy realms expand!
She takes her delegated stand

Full in the midst, and o'er thy num'rous train
 Displays the awful wonders of her reign.
 There thron'd supreme in native state,
 If Sirius flame with fainting heat,
 She calls; ideal groves their shade extend,
 The cool gale breathes, the silent show'rs descend.
 Or, if bleak Winter, frowning round,
 Disrobe the trees, and chill the ground,
 She, mild magician, waves her potent wand,
 And ready summers wake at her command.
 See, visionary suns arise
 Through silver clouds and azure skies;
 See, sportive zephyrs fan the crisped streams;
 Through shadowy brakes light glance the sparkling beams:
 While, near the secret moss-grown cave,
 That stands beside the crystal wave,
 Sweet Echo, rising from her rocky bed,
 Mimics the feather'd chorus o'er her head.

Rise, hallow'd Milton! rise, and say,
 How, at thy gloomy close of day,
 How, when "deprest by age, beset with wrongs:"
 When "fall'n on evil days and evil tongues;"
 When darkness, brooding on thy sight,
 Exil'd the sov'reign lamp of light;
 Say, what could then one cheering hope diffuse?
 What friends were thine, save Mem'ry and the Muse?
 Hence the rich spoils, thy studious youth
 Caught from the stores of ancient truth:
 Hence all thy classic wand'rings could explore,
 When rapture led thee to the Latian shore;
 Each scene, that Tyber's banks supply'd;
 Each grace, that play'd on Arno's side;
 The tepid gales, through Tuscan glades that fly:
 The blue serene, that spreads Hesperia's sky;
 Were still thine own; thy ample mind
 Each charm receiv'd, retain'd, combin'd.
 And thence "the nightly visitant," that came
 To touch thy bosom with her sacred flame,
 Recall'd the long-lost beams of grace,
 That whilom shot from Nature's face,
 When God, in Eden, o'er her youthful breast
 Spread with his own right hand Perfection's gorgeous vest.

ODE TO INDEPENDENCY.

Here, on my native shore reclin'd,
 While silence rules this midnight hour,
 I woo thee, Goddess! On my musing mind
 Descend, propitious power!
 And bid these ruffling gales of grief subside:
 Bid my calm'd soul with all thy influence shine;
 As yon chaste orb along this ample tide
 Draws the long lustre of her silver line,
 While the hush'd breeze its last weak whisper blows,
 And lulls old Humber to his deep repose.

Come to thy vot'ry's ardent prayer,
 In all thy graceful plainness drest:
 No knot confines thy waving hair,
 No zone, thy floating vest;
 Unsullied honour decks thine open brow,
 And candour brightens in thy modest eye:
 Thy blush is warm content's ethereal glow;
 Thy smile is peace; thy step is liberty:
 Thou scatter'st blessings round with lavish hand,
 As Spring with careless fragrance fills the land.

As now o'er this lone beach I stray,
 Thy fav'rite swain * oft stole along,
 And artless wove his Dorian lay,
 Far from the busy throng.
 Thou heard'st him, goddess, strike the tender string,
 And bad'st his soul with bolder passions move:
 Soon these responsive shores forgot to ring,
 With beauty's praise, or plaint of slighted love;
 To loftier flights his daring genius rose,
 And led the war 'gainst thine, and Freedom's foe.

Pointed with satire's keenest steel,
 The shafts of wit he darts around;
 Ev'n † mitred dulness learns to feel,
 And shrinks beneath the wound.
 In awful poverty his honest Muse
 Walks forth vindictive through a venal land:
 In vain corruption sheds her golden dew,
 In vain oppression lifts her iron hand;
 He scorns them both, and, arm'd with truth alone,
 Bids lust and folly tremble on the throne.

Behold, like him, immortal maid,
 The Muses' vestal fires I bring:
 Here, at thy feet, the sparks I spread:
 Propitious wave thy wing,
 And fan them to that dazzling blaze of song,
 Which glares tremendous on the sons of pride.
 But, hark, methinks I hear her hallow'd tongue!
 In distant trills it echoes o'er the tide;
 Now meets mine ear with warbles wildly free,
 As swells the lark's meridian ecstasy.

"Fond youth! to Marvell's patriot fame,
 Thy humble breast must ne'er aspire.
 Yet nourish still the lambent flame;
 Still strike thy blameless lyre:
 Led by the moral Muse, securely rove;
 And all the vernal sweets thy vacant youth
 Can cull from busy Fancy's fairy grove,
 Oh hang their foliage round the fane of Truth:
 To arts like these devote thy tuneful toil,
 And meet its fair reward in D'Arcy's smile.

"'Tis he, my son, alone shall cheer
 Thy sick'ning soul; at that sad hour,
 When o'er a much-lov'd parent's bier,
 Thy duteous sorrows shower:
 At that sad hour, when all thy hopes decline
 When pining Care leads on her pallid train,
 And sees thee, like the weak, and widow'd vine,
 Winding thy blasted tendrils o'er the plain.
 At that sad hour shall D'Arcy lend his aid,
 And raise with friendship's arm thy drooping head.

"This fragrant wreath, the Muses' meed,
 That bloom'd those vocal shades among,
 Where never flatt'ry dar'd to tread,
 Or interest's servile throng;
 Receive, thou favour'd son, at my command,
 And keep with sacred care, for D'Arcy's brow:
 Tell him, 't was wove by my immortal hand,
 I breath'd on every flower a purer glow;
 Say, for thy sake, I send the gift divine
 To him, who calls thee his, yet makes thee mine."

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF A LADY.

THE midnight clock has toll'd ; and hark, the bell
 Of death beats slow ! heard ye the note profound ?
 It pauses now ; and now, with rising knell,
 Flings to the hollow gale its sullen sound.
 Yes * * * is dead. Attend the strain,
 Daughters of Albion ! Ye that, light as air,
 So oft have tript in her fantastic train,
 With hearts as gay, and faces half as fair :
 For she was fair beyond your brightest bloom ;
 (This envy owns, since now her bloom is fled ;)
 Fair as the forms, that, wove in fancy's loom,
 Float in light vision round the poet's head.
 Whene'er with soft serenity she smil'd,
 Or caught the orient blush of quick surprise,
 How sweetly mutable, how brightly wild,
 The liquid lustre darted from her eyes !
 Each look, each motion, wak'd a new-born grace,
 That o'er her form its transient glory cast :
 Some lovelier wonder soon usurp'd the place,
 Chas'd by a charm still lovelier than the last.
 That bell again ! it tells us what she is :
 On what she was no more the strain prolong :
 Luxuriant fancy, pause : an hour like this
 Demands the tribute of a serious song,
 Maria claims it from that sable bier,
 Where cold and wan the slumberer rests her head ;
 In still small whispers to reflection's ear,
 She breathes the solemn dictates of the dead.
 Oh catch the awful notes, and lift them loud ;
 Proclaim the theme, by sage, by fool rever'd :
 Hear it, ye young, ye vain, ye great, ye proud !
 'T is Nature speaks, and Nature will be heard.
 Yes, ye shall hear, and tremble as ye hear,
 While, high with health, your hearts exulting leap ;
 Ev'n in the midst of Pleasure's mad career,
 The mental monitor shall wake and weep.
 For say, than * * * 's propitious star,
 What brighter planet on your births arose :
 Or gave of Fortune's gifts an ampler share,
 In life to lavish, or by death to lose !
 Early to lose ; while, borne on busy wing,
 Ye sip the nectar of each varying bloom :
 Nor fear, while basking in the beams of spring,
 The wintry storm that sweeps you to the tomb.
 Think of her fate ! revere the heav'nly hand
 That led her hence, though soon, by steps so slow :
 Long at her couch Death took his patient stand,
 And menac'd oft, and oft withheld the blow :
 To give reflection time, with lenient art,
 Each fond delusion from her soul to steal ;
 Teach her from folly peaceably to part,
 And wean her from a world she lov'd so well.
 Say, are ye sure his mercy shall extend
 To you so long a span ? Alas, ye sigh :
 Make then, while yet ye may, your God, your friend,
 And learn with equal ease to sleep or die !
 Nor think the Muse, whose sober voice ye hear,
 Contracts with bigot frown her sullen brow ;
 Casts round Religion's orb the mists of fear, [glow.
 Or shades with horrors, what with smiles should
 No ; she would warn you with seraphic fire,
 Heirs as ye are of Heav'n's eternal day ;
 Would bid you boldly to that Heav'n aspire,
 Not sink and slumber in your cells of clay.

Know, ye were form'd to range yon azure field,
 In yon ethereal founts of bliss to lave :
 Force then, secure in Faith's protecting shield,
 The sting from Death, the vict'ry from the Grave.
 Is this the bigot's rant ? Away, ye vain,
 Your hopes, your fears, in doubt, in dulness steep :
 Go soothe your souls in sickness, grief, or pain,
 With the sad solace of eternal sleep.
 Yet will I praise you, triflers as ye are,
 More than those preachers of your fav'rite creed,
 Who proudly swell the brazen throat of war,
 Who form the phalanx, bid the battle bleed ;
 Nor wish for more : who conquer, but to die.
 Hear, Folly, hear, and triumph in the tale :
 Like you, they reason ; not, like you, enjoy
 The breeze of bliss, that fills your silken sail :
 On Pleasure's glitt'ring stream ye gaily steer
 Your little course to cold oblivion's shore :
 They dare the storm, and, through th' inclement year,
 Stem the rough surge, and brave the torrent's roar.
 Is it for glory ? that just Fate denies.
 Long must the warrior moulder in his shroud,
 Ere from her trump the heav'n-breath'd accents rise,
 That lift the hero from the fighting crowd.
 Is it his grasp of empire to extend ?
 To curb the fury of insulting foes ?
 Ambition, cease : the idle contest end :
 'T is but a kingdom thou canst win or lose.
 And why must murder'd myriads lose their all,
 (If life be all,) why desolation lowr,
 With famish'd frown, on this affrighted ball,
 That thou may'st flame the meteor of an hour ?
 Go wiser ye, that flutter life away,
 Crown with the mantling juice the goblet high ;
 Weave the light dance, with festive freedom gay,
 And live your moment, since the next ye die.
 Yet know, vain sceptics, know, th' Almighty mind,
 Who breath'd on man a portion of his fire,
 Bade his free soul, by earth nor time confin'd
 To Heav'n, to immortality aspire.
 Nor shall the pile of hope, his mercy rear'd,
 By vain philosophy be e'er destroy'd :
 Eternity, by all or wish'd or fear'd,
 Shall be by all or suffer'd or enjoy'd.

EPITAPH ON MRS. MASON.

IN THE CATHEDRAL OF BRISTOL.

TAKE, holy earth ! all that my soul holds dear :
 Take that best gift which Heav'n so lately gave :
 To Bristol's fount I bore with trembling care
 Her faded form ; she bow'd to taste the wave,
 And died. Does youth, does beauty, rend the line ?
 Does sympathetic fear their breasts alarm ?
 Speak, dead Maria ! breathe a strain divine :
 Ev'n from the grave thou shalt have power to charm.
 Bid them be chaste, be innocent, like thee ;
 Bid them in duty's sphere as meekly move ;
 And if so fair, from vanity as free ;
 As firm in friendship, and as fond in love.
 Tell them, though 't is an awful thing to die,
 ('T was ev'n to thee) yet the dread path once trod,
 Heav'n lifts its everlasting portals high,
 And bids " the pure in heart behold their God."

WILLIAM COWPER.

WILLIAM COWPER, a poet of distinguished and original genius, was born in 1731, at Great Berkhamstead in Hertfordshire. His father, the rector of the parish, was John Cowper, D.D., nephew of Lord-Chancellor Cowper. The subject of this memorial was educated at Westminster school, where he acquired the classical knowledge and correctness of taste for which it is celebrated, but without any portion of the confident and undaunted spirit which is supposed to be one of the most valuable acquisitions derived from the great schools, so those who are to push their way in the world. On the contrary, it appears from his poem entitled "Tirocinium," that the impressions made upon his mind from what he witnessed in this place, were such as gave him a permanent dislike to the system of public education. Soon after his leaving Westminster, he was articled to a solicitor in London for three years; but so far from studying the law, he spent the greatest part of his time with a relation, where he and the future Lord Chancellor (Lord Thurlow) spent their time, according to his own expression, "in giggling, and making giggle." At the expiration of his time with the solicitor, he took chambers in the Temple, but his time was still little employed on the law, and was rather engaged in classical pursuits, in which Coleman, Bonnel Thornton, and Lloyd, seem to have been his principal associates.

Cowper's spirits were naturally weak; and when his friends had procured him a nomination to the offices of reading-clerk and clerk of the Private Committees in the House of Lords, he shrunk with much terror from the idea of making his appearance before the most august assembly in the nation, that after a violent struggle with himself, he resigned his intended employment, and with it all his prospects in life. In fact, he became completely deranged; and in this situation was placed, in December, 1763, about the 32d year of his age, with Dr. Cotton, an amiable and worthy physician at St. Alban's. This agitation of his mind is placed by some who have mentioned it to the account of a deep consideration of his state in a religious view, in which the terrors of eternal judgment so much overpowered his faculties, that he remained seven months in momentary expectation of being plunged into final misery. Dr. Johnson, however, a near relation, has taken pains to prove to demonstration, that these views of his condition were so far from producing such an effect, that they ought to be regarded as his sole consolation. It appears, however, that his mind had acquired such an indelible tinge of melancholy, that his whole successive life was passed with little more than intervals of comfort between long paroxysms of settled despondency.

After a residence of a year and a half with Dr. Cotton, he spent part of his time at the house of his relation, Earl Cowper, and part at Huntingdon, with his intimate friend, the Rev. Mr. Unwin. The death of the latter caused his widow to remove to Olney in Buckinghamshire, which was thenceforth the principal place of Cowper's residence. At Olney he contracted a close friendship with the Rev. Mr. Newton, then minister there, and since rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, whose religious opinions were in unison with his own. To a collection of hymns published by him, Cowper contributed a considerable number of his own composition. He first became known to the public as a poet by a volume printed in 1782, the contents of which, if they did not at once place him high in the scale of poetic excellence, sufficiently established his claim to originality. Its topics are "Table Talk," "Error," "Truth," "Expostulation," "Hope," "Charity," "Conversation," and "Retirement," all treated upon religious principles, and not without a considerable tinge of that rigour and austerity which belonged to his system. These pieces are written in rhymed heroics, which he commonly manages with little grace, or attention to melody. The style, though often prosaic, is never flat or insipid; and sometimes the true poet breaks through, in a vein of lively description or bold figure.

If this volume excited but little of the public attention, his next volume, published in 1785, introduced his name to all the lovers of poetry, and gave him at least an equality of reputation with any of his contemporaries. It consists of a poem in six books, entitled "The Task," alluding to the injunction of a lady, to write a piece in blank verse, for the subject of which she gave him The Sofa. It sets out, indeed, with some sportive discussion of this topic; but soon falls into a serious strain of rural description, intermixed with moral sentiments and portraiture, which is preserved through the six books, freely ranging from thought to thought with no perceptible method. But as the whole poem will here be found, it is unnecessary to enter into particulars. Another piece, entitled "Tirocinium, or a Review of Schools," a work replete with striking observation, is added to the preceding; and several other pieces gleaned from his various writings will be found in the collection.

For the purpose of losing in employment the distressing ideas which were ever apt to recur, he next undertook the real task of translating into blank verse the whole of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey. This work has much merit of execution, and is certainly a far more exact representation of the ancient poet than Pope's ornamental version; but where simplicity of matter in the original is not relieved by the force of sonorous diction, the poverty of English blank-verse has scarcely been able to prevent it from sinking into mere prose. Various other translations denoted his necessity of seeking employment; but nothing was capable of durably relieving his mind from the horrible impressions it had undergone. He passed some of his latter years under the affectionate care of a relation at East Dereham in Norfolk, where he died on April 25th, 1800.

BOADICEA :

AN ODE.

WHEN the British warrior queen,
Bleeding from the Roman rods,
Sought, with an indignant mien,
Counsel of her country's gods,

Sage beneath the spreading oak
Sat the Druid, hoary chief ;
Ev'ry burning word he spoke
Full of rage, and full of grief.

" Princess ! if our aged eyes
Weep upon thy matchless wrongs,
'T is because resentment ties
All the terrors of our tongues.

" Rome shall perish — write that word
In the blood that she has spilt ;
Perish, hopeless and abhor'd,
Deep in ruin as in guilt.

" Rome, for empire far renown'd,
Tramples on a thousand states ;
Soon her pride shall kiss the ground —
Hark ! the Gaul is at her gates !

" Other Romans shall arise,
Heedless of a soldier's name ;
Sounds, not arms, shall win the prize,
Harmony the path to fame.

" Then the progeny that springs
From the forests of our land,
Arm'd with thunder, clad with wings,
Shall a wider world command.

" Regions Cæsar never knew
Thy posterity shall sway ;
Where his eagles never flew,
None invincible as they."

Such the bard's prophetic words,
Pregnant with celestial fire,
Bending as he swept the chords
Of his sweet but awful lyre.

She, with all a monarch's pride,
Felt them in her bosom glow ;
Rush'd to battle, fought, and died ;
Dying hurl'd them at the foe.

" Ruffians, pitiless as proud,
Heav'n awards the vengeance due ;
Empire is on us bestow'd,
Shame and ruin wait for you."

HEROISM.

THERE was a time when Ætna's silent fire
Slept unperceiv'd, the mountain yet entire ;
When, conscious of no danger from below,
She tower'd a cloud-capt pyramid of snow.
No thunders shook with deep intestine sound
The blooming groves, that girdled her around.

Her unctuous olives, and her purple vines,
(Unfelt the fury of those bursting mines,)
The peasant's hopes, and not in vain, assur'd,
In peace upon her sloping sides matur'd.
When on a day, like that of the last doom,
A conflagration lab'ring in her womb,
She teem'd and heav'd with an infernal birth,
That shook the circling seas and solid earth.
Dark and voluminous the vapours rise,
And hang their horrors in the neighb'ring skies,
While through the Stygian veil, that blots the day,
In dazzling streaks the vivid lightnings play.
But oh ! what muse, and in what pow'rs of song,
Can trace the torrent as it burns along ?
Havoc and devastation in the van.

It marches o'er the prostrate works of man,
Vines, olives, herbage, forests disappear,
And all the charms of a Sicilian year.

Revolving seasons, fruitless as they pass,
See it an uninform'd and idle mass ;
Without a soil t' invite the tiller's care,
Or blade, that might redeem it from despair.
Yet time at length (what will not time achieve ?)
Clothes it with earth, and bids the produce live.
Once more the spiry myrtle crowns the glade,
And ruminating flocks enjoy the shade.
O bliss precarious, and unsafe retreats,
O charming Paradise of short-liv'd sweets !
The self-same gale, that wafts the fragrance round,
Brings to the distant ear a sullen sound :
Again the mountain feels th' imprison'd foe,
Again pours ruin on the vale below.
Ten thousand swains the wasted scene deplore,
That only future ages can restore.

Ye monarchs, whom the lure of honour draws,
Who write in blood the merits of your cause,
Who strike the blow, then plead your own defence,
Glory your aim, but justice your pretence ;
Behold in Ætna's emblematic fires
The mischiefs your ambitious pride inspires !

Fast by the stream, that bounds your just domain,
And tells you where ye have a right to reign,
A nation dwells, not envious of your throne,
Studious of peace, their neighbours', and their own.
Ill-fated race ! how deeply must they rue
Their only crime, vicinity to you !

The trumpet sounds, your legions swarm abroad,
Through the ripe harvest lies their destin'd road ;
At every step beneath their feet they tread
The life of multitudes, a nation's bread !
Earth seems a garden in it's loveliest dress
Before them, and behind a wilderness.
Famine, and Pestilence, her first-born son,
Attend to finish what the sword begun ;
And echoing praises, such as fiends might earn,
And Folly pays, resound at your return.
A calm succeeds — but Plenty, with her train
Of heart-felt joys, succeeds not soon again,
And years of pining indigence must show
What scourges are the gods that rule below.

Yet man, laborious man, by slow degrees,
(Such is his thirst of opulence and ease,)
Plies all the sinews of industrious toil,
Gleans up the refuse of the gen'ral spoil,
Rebuilds the tow'rs, that smok'd upon the plain,
And the Sun gilds the shining spires again.

Increasing commerce and reviving art
Renew the quarrel on the conqu'rors part ;
And the sad lesson must be learn'd once more,
That wealth within is ruin at the door.

What are ye, monarchs, laurell'd heroes, say,
But Ætnas of the suff'ring world ye sway?
Sweet Nature, stripp'd of her embroider'd robe,
Deplores the wasted regions of her globe;
And stands a witness at Truth's awful bar,
To prove you there destroyers as ye are.

O place me in some Heav'n-protected isle,
Where Peace, and Equity, and Freedom smile;
Where no volcano pours his fiery flood,
No crested warrior dips his plume in blood;
Where Pow'r secures what Industry has won;
Where to succeed is not to be undone;
A land, that distant tyrants hate in vain,
In Britain's isle, beneath a George's reign!

ON THE RECEIPT OF MY MOTHER'S PICTURE OUT OF NORFOLK, THE GIFT OF MY COUSIN ANN BODHAM.

O THAT those lips had language! Life has pass'd
With me but roughly since I heard thee last.
Those lips are thine — thy own sweet smile I see,
The same, that oft in childhood solac'd me;
Voice only fails, else how distinct they say,
"Grieve not, my child, chase all thy fears away!"
The meek intelligence of those dear eyes
(Blest be the art that can immortalize,
The art that baffles Time's tyrannic claim
To quench it,) here shines on me still the same.

Faithful remembrancer of one so dear,
O welcome guest, though unexpected here!
Who bidd'st me honour with an artless song,
Affectionate, a mother lost so long.
I will obey, not willingly alone,
But gladly, as the precept were her own:
And, while that face renews my filial grief,
Fancy shall weave a charm for my relief,
Shall steep me in Elysian reverie,
A momentary dream that thou art she.

My mother! when I learn'd that thou wast dead,
Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?
Hover'd thy spirit o'er thy sorr'wing son,
Wretch even then, life's journey just begun?
Perhaps thou gav'st me, though unfelt, a kiss;
Perhaps a tear, if souls can weep in bliss —
Ah that maternal smile! it answers — Yes!
I heard the bell toll'd on thy burial day,
I saw the hearse, that bore thee slow away,
And, turning from my nurs'ry window, drew
A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu!
But was it such? — It was. — Where thou art gone,
Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown.
May I but meet thee on that peaceful shore,
The parting word shall pass my lips no more!
Thy maidens, griev'd themselves at my concern,
Oft gave me promise of thy quick return.
What ardently I wish'd, I long believ'd,
And, disappointed still, was still deceiv'd.
By expectation ev'ry day beguil'd,
Dupe of to-morrow even from a child.
Thus many a sad to-morrow came and went,
Till, all my stock of infant-sorrow spent,
I learn'd at last submission to my lot,
But, though I less deplor'd thee, ne'er forgot.

Where once we dwelt our name is heard no more,
Children not thine have trod my nurs'ry floor;
And where the gard'ner Robin, day by day,
Drew me to school along the public way,

Delighted with my bauble coach, and wrapp'd
In scarlet-mantle warm, and velvet cap,
'T is now become a hist'ry little known,
That once we call'd the past'ral house our own.
Short-liv'd possession! but the record fair,
That mem'ry keeps of all thy kindness there,
Still outlives many a storm, that has effac'd
A thousand other themes less deeply trac'd.
Thy nightly visits to my chamber made,
That thou might'st know me safe and warmly laid;
Thy morning bounties ere I left my home,
The biscuit, or confectionary plum;
The fragrant waters on my cheeks bestow'd
By thy own hand, till fresh they shone and glow'd!
All this, and more endearing still than all,
Thy constant flow of love, that knew no fall,
Ne'er roughen'd by those cataracts and breaks,
That humour interpos'd too often makes;
All this still legible in mem'ry's page,
And still to be so to my latest age,
Adds joy to duty, makes me glad to pay
Such honours to thee as my numbers may;
Perhaps a frail memorial, but sincere,
Not scorn'd in Heav'n, though little notic'd here.

Could Time, his flight revers'd, restore the hours,
When, playing with thy vesture's tissu'd flow'rs,
The violet, the pink, and jessamine,
I prick'd them into paper with a pin,
(And thou wast happier than myself the while,
Wouldst softly speak, and stroke my head, and smile,)
Could those few pleasant days again appear, [here?
Might one wish bring them, would I wish them
I would not trust my heart — the dear delight
Seems so to be desir'd, perhaps I might. —
But no — what here we call our life is such,
So little to be lov'd, and thou so much,
That I should ill requite thee to constrain
Thy unbound spirit into bonds again.

Thou, as a gallant bark from Albion's coast
(The storms all weather'd and the ocean cross'd)
Shoots into port at some well-haven'd isle,
Where spices breathe, and brighter seasons smile,
There sits quiescent on the floods, that show
Her beauteous form reflected clear below,
While airs impregnated with incense play
Around her, fanning light her streamers gay;
So thou, with sails how swift! hast reach'd the shore,
"Where tempests never beat nor billows roar,"
And thy lov'd consort on the dang'rous tide
Of life long since has anchor'd by thy side.
But me, scarce hoping to attain that rest,
Always from port withheld, always distress'd —
Me howling blasts drive devious, tempest-toss'd,
Sails ripp'd, seams op'ning wide, and compass lost,
And day by day some current's thwarting force
Sets me more distant from a prosp'rous course.
Yet O the thought, that thou art safe, and he!
That thought is joy, arrive what may to me.
My boast is not, that I deduce my birth
From loins enthron'd, and rulers of the Earth;
But higher far my proud pretensions rise —
The son of parents pass'd into the skies.
And now, farewell — Time unrevok'd has run
His wonted course, yet what I wish'd is done.
By contemplation's help, not sought in vain,
I seem t' have liv'd my childhood o'er again;
To have renew'd the joys that once were mine,
Without the sin of violating thine;

And, while the wings of Fancy still are free,
And I can view this mimic show of thee,
Time has but half succeeded in his theft —
Thyself remov'd, thy pow'r to soothe me left.

FRIENDSHIP.

WHAT virtue, or what mental grace
But men unqualified and base
Will boast it their possession?
Profusion apes the noble part
Of liberality of heart,
And dulness of discretion.

If every polish'd gem we find
Illuminating heart or mind,
Provoke to imitation;
No wonder friendship does the same
That jewel of the purest flame,
Or rather constellation.

No knave but boldly will pretend
The requisites that form a friend,
A real and a sound one;
Nor any fool, he would deceive,
But prove as ready to believe,
And dream that he had found one.

Candid, and generous, and just,
Boys care but little whom they trust,
An error soon corrected —
For who but learns in riper years,
That man, when smoothest he appears,
Is most to be suspected?

But here again a danger lies,
Lest, having misapplied our eyes,
And taken trash for treasure,
We should unwarily conclude
Friendship a false ideal good,
A mere Utopian pleasure.

An acquisition rather rare
Is yet no subject of despair;
Nor is it wise complaining,
If either on forbidden ground,
Or where it was not to be found
We sought without attaining.

No friendship will abide the test,
That stands on sordid interest,
Or mean self-love erected;
Nor such as may awhile subsist,
Between the sot and sensualist,
For vicious ends connected.

Who seek a friend should come dispos'd,
To exhibit in full bloom disclos'd
The graces and the beauties,
That form the character he seeks,
For 't is a union, that bespeaks
Reciprocated duties.

Mutual attention is implied,
And equal truth on either side,
And constantly supported:
'T is senseless arrogance to accuse
Another of sinister views,
Our own as much distorted.

But will sincerity suffice?
It is indeed above all price,
And must be made the basis;
But ev'ry virtue of the soul
Must constitute the charming whole,
All shining in their places.

A fretful temper will divide
The closest knot that may be tied,
By ceaseless sharp corrosion;
A temper passionate and fierce
May suddenly your joys disperse
At one immense explosion.

In vain the talkative unite
In hopes of permanent delight —
The secret just committed,
Forgetting it's important weight,
They drop through mere desire to prate,
And by themselves outwitted.

How bright soe'er the prospect seems,
All thoughts of friendship are but dreams,
If envy chance to creep in;
An envious man, if you succeed,
May prove a dang'rous foe indeed,
But not a friend worth keeping.

As envy pines at good possess'd,
So jealousy looks forth distress'd
On good, that seems approaching;
And, if success his steps attend,
Discerns a rival in a friend,
And hates him for encroaching.

Hence authors of illustrious name,
Unless belied by common fame,
Are sadly prone to quarrel,
To deem the wit a friend displays
A tax upon their own just praise,
And pluck each other's laurel.

A man renown'd for repartee
Will seldom scruple to make free
With friendship's finest feeling;
Will thrust a dagger at your breast,
And say he wounded you in jest,
By way of balm for healing.

Whoever keeps an open ear
For tattlers will be sure to hear
The trumpet of contention;
Aspersions is the babblers' trade,
To listen is to lend him aid,
And rush into dissension.

A friendship, that in frequent fits
Of controversial rage emits
The sparks of disputation,
Like Hand in Hand insurance plates,
Most unavoidably creates
The thought of conflagration.

Some fickle creatures boast a soul
True as a needle to the Pole,
Their humour yet so various —
They manifest their whole life through
The needle's deviations too,
Their love is so precarious.

The great and small but rarely meet
On terms of amity complete ;
Plebeians must surrender,
And yield so much to noble folk,
It is combining fire with smoke,
Obscurity with splendour.

Some are so placid and serene,
(As Irish bogs are always green,)
They sleep secure from waking ;
And are indeed a bog, that bears
Your unparticipated cares,
Unmov'd and without quaking.

Courtier and patriot cannot mix
Their het'rogenous politics
Without an effervescence,
Like that of salts with lemon juice,
Which does not yet like that produce
A friendly coalescence.

Religion should extinguish strife,
And make a calm of human life ;
But friends that chance to differ
On points, which God has left at large,
How freely will they meet and charge !
No combatants are stiffer.

To prove at last my main intent
Needs no expense of argument,
No cutting and contriving —
Seeking a real friend we seem
To adopt the chymists' golden dream,
With still less hope of thriving.

Sometimes the fault is all our own,
Some blemish in due time made known,
By trespass or omission ;
Sometimes occasion brings to light
Our friend's defect long hid from sight,
And even from suspicion.

Then judge yourself and prove your man
As circumspectly as you can,
And, having made election,
Beware no negligence of yours,
Such as a friend but ill endures,
Enfeeble his affection.

That secrets are a sacred trust,
That friends should be sincere and just,
That constancy befits them,
Are observations on the case,
That savour much of common-place,
And all the world admits them.

But 't is not timber, lead, and stone,
An architect requires alone,
To finish a fine building —
The palace were but half complete,
If he could possibly forget
The carving and the gilding.

The man that hails you Tom or Jack,
And proves by thumps upon your back,
How he esteems your merit,
Is such a friend, that one had need
Be very much his friend indeed,
To pardon or to bear it.

As similarity of mind,
Or something not to be defin'd,
First fixes our attention ;
So manners decent and polite,
The same we practis'd at first sight,
Must save it from declension.

Some act upon this prudent plan,
" Say little, and hear all you can."
Safe policy, but hateful —
So barren sands imbibe the show'r,
But render neither fruit nor flow'r,
Unpleasant and ungrateful.

The man I trust, if shy to me,
Shall find me as reserv'd as he ;
No subterfuge or pleading
Shall win my confidence again,
I will by no means entertain
A spy on my proceeding.

These samples — for alas ! at last
These are but samples, and a taste
Of evils yet unmentioned —
May prove the task a task indeed,
In which 't is much if we succeed,
However well-intention'd.

Pursue the search, and you will find
Good sense and knowledge of mankind
To be at least expedient,
And, after summing all the rest,
Religion ruling in the breast
A principal ingredient.

The noblest friendship ever shown
The Saviour's history makes known,
Though some have turn'd and turn'd it ;
And, whether being craz'd or blind,
Or seeking with a bias'd mind,
Have not, it seems, discern'd it.

O Friendship ! if my soul forego
Thy dear delights while here below ;
To mortify and grieve me,
May I myself at last appear
Unworthy, base, and insincere,
Or may my friend deceive me.

RETIREMENT.

.....studiis florens ignobilis oti.
VIRG. Georg. lib. iv.

HACKNEY'D in business, wearied at that oar,
Which thousands, once fast chain'd to, quit no more,
But which, when life at ebb runs weak and low,
All wish, or seem to wish, they could forego ;
The statesman, lawyer, merchant, man of trade,
Pants for the refuge of some rural shade,
Where, all his long anxieties forgot
Amid the charms of a sequester'd spot,
Or recollected only to gild o'er,
And add a smile to what was sweet before,
He may possess the joys he thinks he sees,
Lay his old age upon the lap of Ease,
Improve the remnant of his wasted span,
And, having liv'd a trifler, die a man.

Thus Conscience pleads her cause within the breast,
 Though long rebell'd against, not yet suppress'd,
 And calls a creature form'd for God alone,
 For Heav'n's high purposes, and not his own,
 Calls him away from selfish ends and aims,
 From what debilitates, and what inflames,
 From cities humming with a restless crowd,
 Sordid as active, ignorant as loud,
 Whose highest praise is that they live in vain,
 The dupes of pleasure, or the slaves of gain,
 Where works of man are cluster'd close around,
 And works of God are hardly to be found,
 To regions where, in spite of sin and woe,
 Traces of Eden are still seen below,
 Where mountain, river, forest, field, and grove,
 Remind him of his Maker's pow'r and love.
 'T is well if, look'd for at so late a day,
 In the last scene of such a senseless play,
 True wisdom will attend his feeble call,
 And grace his action ere the curtain fall.
 Souls, that have long despis'd their heav'nly birth,
 Their wishes all impregnated with Earth,
 For threescore years employ'd with ceaseless care
 In catching smoke and feeding upon air,
 Conversant only with the ways of man,
 Rarely redeem the short remaining ten.
 Invet'rate habits choke th' unfruitful heart,
 Their fibres penetrate it's tend'rest part,
 And, draining it's nutritious pow'rs to feed
 Their noxious growth, starve ev'ry better seed.

Happy, if full of days — but happier far,
 If, ere we yet discern life's ev'ning star,
 Sick of the service of a world, that feeds
 It's patient drudges with dry chaff and weeds,
 We can escape from Custom's idiot sway,
 To serve the Sov'reign we were born t' obey.
 Then sweet to muse upon his skill display'd
 (Infinite skill) in all that he has made !
 To trace in Nature's most minute design
 The signature and stamp of power divine,
 Contrivance intricate, express'd with ease,
 Where unassisted sight no beauty sees,
 The shapely limb and lubricated joint,
 Within the small dimensions of a point,
 Muscle and nerve miraculously spun,
 His mighty work, who speaks and it is done,
 Th' invisible in things scarce seen reveal'd,
 To whom an atom is an ample field ;
 To wonder at a thousand insect forms,
 These hatch'd and those resuscitated worms,
 New life ordain'd and brighter scenes to share,
 Once prone on earth, now buoyant upon air, [size,
 Whose shape would make them, had they bulk and
 More hideous fœs than fancy can devise ;
 With helmet-heads, and dragon-scales adorn'd,
 The mighty myriads, now securely scorn'd,
 Would mock the majesty of man's high birth,
 Despise his bulwarks, and unpeople earth :
 Then with a glance of fancy to survey,
 Far as the faculty can stretch a way,
 Ten thousand rivers pour'd at his command
 From urns, that never fail, through ev'ry land ;
 These like a deluge with impetuous force,
 Those winding modestly a silent course ;
 The cloud-surmounting Alps, the fruitful vales ;
 Seas, on which ev'ry nation spreads her sails ;
 The Sun, a world whence other worlds drink light,
 The crescent Moon, the diadem of night ;
 Stars countless, each in his appointed place,
 Fast anchor'd in the deep abyss of space —

At such a sight to catch the poet's flame,
 And with a rapture like his own exclaim,
 " These are thy glorious works, thou source of good,
 How dimly seen, how faintly understood !
 Thine, and upheld by thy paternal care,
 This universal frame, thus wondrous fair ;
 Thy pow'r divine, and bounty beyond thought,
 Ador'd and prais'd in all that thou hast wrought.
 Absorb'd in that immensity I see,
 I shrink abas'd, and yet aspire to thee ;
 Instruct me, guide me to that heav'nly day,
 Thy words, more clearly than thy works, display,
 That, while thy truths my grosser thoughts refine,
 I may resemble thee, and call thee mine. "

O blest proficiency ! surpassing all,
 That men erroneously their glory call,
 The recompense that arts or arms can yield,
 The bar, the senate, or the tented field.
 Compar'd with this sublimest life below,
 Ye kings and rulers, what have courts to show ?
 Thus studied, us'd and consecrated thus,
 On Earth what is, seems form'd indeed for us :
 Not as the plaything of a froward child,
 Fretful unless diverted and beguil'd,
 Much less to feed and fan the fatal fires
 Of pride, ambition, or impure desires,
 But as a scale, by which the soul ascends
 From mighty means to more important ends,
 Securely, though by steps but rarely trod,
 Mounts from inferior beings up to God,
 And sees by no fallacious light or dim,
 Earth made for man, and man himself for him

Not that I mean t' approve, or would enforce
 A superstitious and monastic course :
 Truth is not local, God alike pervades
 And fills the world of traffic and the shades,
 And may be fear'd amidst the busiest scenes,
 Or scorn'd where business never intervenes
 But 't is not easy with a mind like ours,
 Conscious of weakness in it's noblest pow'rs,
 And in a world, where, other ills apart,
 The roving eye misleads the careless heart,
 To limit thought, by nature prone to stray
 Wherever freakish Fancy points the way ;
 To bid the pleadings of Self-love be still,
 Resign our own, and seek our Maker's will ;
 To spread the page of Scripture, and compare
 Our conduct with the laws engraven there ;
 To measure all that passes in the breast,
 Faithfully, fairly, by that sacred test ;
 To dive into the secret deeps within,
 To spare no passion and no fav'rite sin,
 And search the themes, important above all,
 Ourselves, and our recovery from our fall.
 But leisure, silence, and a mind releas'd
 From anxious thoughts how wealth may be increas'd,
 How to secure in some propitious hour,
 The point of int'rest, or the post of pow'r,
 A soul serene, and equally retir'd
 From objects too much dreaded or desir'd,
 Safe from the clamours of perverse dispute,
 At least are friendly to the great pursuit.

Up'ning the map of God's extensive plan,
 We find a little isle this life of man ;
 Eternity's unknown expanse appears
 Circling around and limiting his years.
 The busy race examine and explore
 Each creek and cavern of the dang'rous shore,
 With care collect what in their eyes excels,
 Some shining pebbles, and some weeds and shell :

Thus laden, dream that they are rich and great,
 And happiest he that groans beneath his weight;
 The waves o'ertake them in their serious play,
 And ev'ry hour sweeps multitudes away;
 They shriek and sink, survivors start and weep,
 Pursue their sport, and follow to the deep.
 A few forsake the throng; with lifted eyes
 Ask wealth of Heav'n, and gain a real prize,
 Truth, wisdom, grace, and peace, like that above,
 Seal'd with his signet, whom they serve and love;
 Scorn'd by the rest, with patient hope they wait
 A kind release from their imperfect state,
 And, unregretted, are soon snatch'd away
 From scenes of sorrow into glorious day.

Nor these alone prefer a life recluse,
 Who seek retirement for its proper use;
 The love of change, that lives in ev'ry breast,
 Genius and temper, and desire of rest,
 Discordant motives in one centre meet,
 And each inclines it's vot'ry to retreat.
 Some minds by nature are averse to noise,
 And hate the tumult half the world enjoys,
 The lure of av'rice, or the pompous prize,
 That courts display before ambitious eyes;
 The fruits that hang on pleasure's flow'ry stem,
 Whate'er enchants them, are no snares to them.
 To them the deep recess of dusky groves,
 Or forest, where the deer securely roves,
 The fall of waters, and the song of birds,
 And hills that echo to the distant herds,
 Are luxuries excelling all the glare
 The world can boast, and her chief fav'rites share.
 With eager step, and carelessly array'd,
 For such a cause the poet seeks the shade,
 From all he sees he catches new delight,
 Pleas'd Fancy claps her pinions at the sight,
 The rising or the setting orb of day,
 The clouds that flit, or slowly float away,
 Nature in all the various shapes she wears,
 Frowning in storms, or breathing gentle airs,
 The snowy robe her wintry state assumes,
 Her summer heats, her fruits, and her perfumes,
 All, all alike transport the glowing bard,
 Success in rhyme his glory and reward.
 O Nature! whose Elysian scenes disclose
 His bright perfections, at whose word they rose,
 Next to that pow'r, who form'd thee and sustains,
 Be thou the great inspirer of my strains.
 Still, as I touch the lyre, do thou expand
 Thy genuine charms, and guide an artless hand,
 That I may catch a fire but rarely known,
 Give useful light, though I should miss renown,
 And, poring on thy page, whose ev'ry line
 Bears proof of an intelligence divine,
 May feel a heart enrich'd by what it pays,
 That builds it's glory on it's Maker's praise.
 Woe to the man, whose wit disclaims it's use,
 Glitt'ring in vain, or only to seduce,
 Who studies nature with a wanton eye,
 Admires the work, but slips the lesson by;
 His hours of leisure and recess employs
 In drawing pictures of forbidden joys,
 Retires to blazon his own worthless name,
 Or shoot the careless with a surer aim.

The lover, too, shuns business and alarms,
 Tender idolater of absent charms.
 Saints offer nothing in their warmest pray'rs,
 That he devotes not with a zeal like theirs;
 'T is consecration of his heart, soul, time,
 And ev'ry thought that wanders is a crime.

In sighs he worships his supremely fair,
 And weeps a sad libation in despair;
 Adores a creature, and, devout in vain,
 Wins in return an answer of disdain.
 As woodbine weds the plant within her reach,
 Rough elm, or smooth-grain'd ash, or glossy beech,
 In spiral rings ascends the trunk, and lays
 Her golden tassels on the leafy sprays,
 But does a mischief while she lends a grace,
 Strait'ning it's growth by such a strict embrace;
 So love, that clings around the noblest minds,
 Forbids th' advancement of the soul he binds;
 The suitor's air, indeed, he soon improves,
 And forms it to the taste of her he loves,
 Teaches his eyes a language, and no less
 Refines his speech, and fashions his address;
 But farewell promises of happier fruits,
 Manly designs, and learning's grave pursuits;
 Girt with a chain he cannot wish to break.
 His only bliss is sorrow for her sake;
 Who will may pant for glory and excel,
 Her smile his aim, all higher aims farewell!
 Thyrus, Alexis, or whatever name
 May least offend against so pure a flame,
 Though sage advice of friends the most sincere
 Sounds harshly in so delicate an ear,
 And lovers, of all creatures, tame or wild,
 Can least brook management, however mild,
 Yet let a poet (poetry disarms
 The fiercest animals with magic charms)
 Risk an intrusion on thy pensive mood,
 And woo and win thee to thy proper good.
 Pastoral images and still retreats,
 Umbrageous walks and solitary seats,
 Sweet birds in concert with harmonious streams,
 Soft airs, nocturnal vigils, and day dreams,
 Are all enchantments in a case like thine,
 Conspire against thy peace with one design,
 Soothe thee to make thee but a surer prey,
 And feed the fire, that wastes thy pow'rs away.
 Up — God has form'd thee with a wiser view,
 Not to be led in chains, but to subdue;
 Calls thee to cope with enemies, and first
 Points out a conflict with thyself, the worst.
 Woman indeed, a gift he would bestow
 When he design'd a Paradise below,
 The richest earthly boon his hands afford,
 Deserves to be belov'd, but not ador'd.
 Post away swiftly to more active scenes,
 Collect the scatter'd truths that study gleans,
 Mix with the world, but with its wiser part,
 No longer give an image all thine heart;
 It's empire is not hers, nor is it thine,
 'T is God's just claim, prerogative divine.

Virtuous and faithful Heberden, whose skill
 Attempts no task it cannot well fulfil,
 Gives melancholy up to Nature's care,
 And sends the patient into purer air.
 Look where he comes — in this embower'd alcove
 Stand close conceal'd, and see a statue move:
 Lips busy, and eyes fix'd, foot falling slow,
 Arms hanging idly down, hands clasp'd below,
 Interpret to the marking eye distress,
 Such as it's symptoms can alone express.
 That tongue is silent now; that silent tongue
 Could argue once, could jest or join the song,
 Could give advice, could censure or commend,
 Or charm the sorrows of a drooping friend.
 Renounc'd alike it's office and it's sport,
 It's brisker and it's graver strains fall short;

Both fail beneath a fever's secret sway,
 And like a summer-brook are past away.
 This is a sight for Pity to peruse,
 Till she resemble faintly what she views,
 Till Sympathy contract a kindred pain,
 Pierc'd with the woe that she laments in vain.
 This, of all maladies that man infest,
 Claims most compassion and receives the least :
 Job felt it, when he groan'd beneath the rod
 And the barb'd arrows of a frowning God ;
 And such emollients as his friends could spare,
 Friends such as his for modern Jobs prepare.
 Blest, rather curst, with hearts that never feel,
 Kept snug in caskets of close-hammer'd steel,
 With mouths made only to grin wide and eat,
 And minds, that deem derided pain a treat,
 With limbs of British oak, and nerves of wire,
 And wit that puppet-prompters might inspire,
 Their sov'reign nostrum is a clumsy joke,
 Or pangs enforc'd with God's severest stroke.
 But with a soul, that ever felt the sting
 Of sorrow, sorrow is a sacred thing :
 Not to molest, or irritate, or raise
 A laugh at his expense, is slender praise ;
 He, that has not usurp'd the name of man,
 Does all, and deems too little all, he can,
 T' assuage the throbbings of a fester'd part,
 And stanch the bleedings of a broken heart.
 'T is not, as heads that never ache suppose,
 Forg'ry of fancy, and a dream of woes ;
 Man is a harp, whose chords elude the sight,
 Each yielding harmony dispos'd aright ;
 The screws revers'd, (a task which, if he please,
 God in a moment executes with ease,)
 Ten thousand thousand strings at once go loose,
 Lost, till he tune them, all their power and use.
 Then neither heathy wilds, nor scenes as fair
 As ever recompens'd the peasant's care,
 Nor soft declivities with tufted hills,
 Nor view of waters turning busy mills,
 Parks in which Art preceptress Nature weds,
 Nor gardens interspers'd with flow'ry beds,
 Nor gales, that catch the scent of blooming groves,
 And waft it to the mourner as he roves,
 Can call up life into his faded eye,
 That passes all he sees unheeded by ;
 No wounds like those a wounded spirit feels,
 No cure for such, till God who makes them heals.
 And thou, sad sufferer under nameless ill,
 That yields not to the touch of human skill,
 Improve the kind occasion, understand
 A Father's frown, and kiss his chast'ning hand.
 To thee the dayspring, and the blaze of noon,
 The purple ev'ning, and resplendent Moon,
 The stars, that, sprinkled o'er the vault of night,
 Seem drops descending in a show'r of light,
 Shine not, or undesir'd and hated shine,
 Seen through the medium of a cloud like thine :
 Yet seek him, in his favour life is found,
 All bliss beside a shadow or a sound :
 Then Heav'n, eclips'd so long, and this dull Earth,
 Shall seem to start into a second birth ;
 Nature, assuming a more lovely face,
 Borr'wing a beauty from the works of grace,
 Shall be despis'd and overlook'd no more,
 Shall fill thee with delights unfelt before,
 Impart to things inanimate a voice,
 And bid her mountains and her hills rejoice ;
 The sound shall run along the winding vales,
 And thou enjoy an Eden ere it fails.

Ye groves, (the statesman at his desk exclaims,
 Sick of a thousand disappointed aims,)
 My patrimonial treasure and my pride,
 Beneath your shades your gray possessor hide,
 Receive me languishing for that repose,
 The servant of the public never knows.
 Ye saw me once (ah those regretted days,
 When boyish innocence was all my praise!)
 Hour after hour delightfully allot
 To studies then familiar, since forgot,
 And cultivate a taste for ancient song,
 Catching it's ardour as I mus'd along ;
 Nor seldom, as propitious Heav'n might send,
 What once I valu'd and could boast, a friend,
 Were witnesses how cordially I press'd
 His undissembling virtue to my breast ;
 Receive me now, not uncorrupt as then,
 Nor guiltless of corrupting other men,
 But vers'd in arts, that, while they seem to stay
 A falling empire, hasten it's decay.
 To the fair haven of my native home,
 The wreck of what I was, fatigued I come ;
 For once I can approve the patriot's voice,
 And make the course he recommends my choice :
 We meet at last in one sincere desire,
 His wish and mine both prompt me to retire.
 'T is done — he steps into the welcome chair,
 Lolls at his ease behind four handsome boys,
 That whirl away from business and debate
 The disencumber'd Atlas of the state.
 Ask not the boy, who, when the breeze of morn
 First shakes the glitt'ring drops from ev'ry thorn,
 Unfolds his flock, then under bank or bush
 Sits linking cherry stones, or plaiting rush,
 How fair is freedom? — he was always free :
 To carve his rustic name upon a tree,
 To snare the mole, or with ill-fashion'd hook
 To draw th' incautious minnow from the brook,
 Are life's prime pleasures in his simple view,
 His flock the chief concern he ever knew ;
 She shines but little in his heedless eyes,
 The good we never miss we rarely prize :
 But ask the noble drudge in state affairs,
 Escap'd from office and it's constant cares,
 What charms he sees in Freedom's smile express'd,
 In Freedom lost so long, now repossess'd ;
 The tongue, whose strains were cogent as commands,
 Rever'd at home, and felt in foreign lands,
 Shall own itself a stammerer in that cause,
 Or plead it's silence as it's best applause.
 He knows indeed that whether dress'd or rude,
 Wild without art, or artfully subdued,
 Nature in ev'ry form inspires delight,
 But never mark'd her with so just a sight.
 Her hedge-row shrubs, a variegated store,
 With woodbine and wild roses mantled o'er,
 Green balks and furrow'd lands, the stream that spreads
 It's cooling vapour o'er the dewy meads,
 Downs, that almost escape th' inquiring eye,
 That melt and fade into the distant sky,
 Beauties he lately slighted as he pass'd,
 Seem all created since he travell'd last.
 Master of all th' enjoyments he design'd,
 No rough annoyance rankling in his mind,
 What early philosophic hours he keeps,
 How regular his meals, how sound he sleeps!
 Not sounder he, that on the mainmast-board,
 While morning kindles with a windy red,

begins a long look-out for distant land,
 or quits till ev'ning watch his giddy stand,
 then swift descending with a seaman's haste,
 slips to his hammock, and forgets the blast.
 He chooses company, but not the squire's,
 whose wit is rudeness, whose good-breeding tires ;
 or yet the parson's, who would gladly come,
 obsequious when abroad, though proud at home ;
 or can be much affect the neighb'ring peer,
 whose toe of emulation treads too near ;
 but wisely seeks a more convenient friend,
 with whom, dismissing forms, he may unbend ;
 a man, whom marks of condescending grace
 reach, while they flatter him, his proper place ;
 who comes when call'd, and at a word withdraws,
 speaks with reserve, and listens with applause ;
 some plain mechanic, who, without pretence
 to birth or wit, nor gives nor takes offence ;
 in whom he rests well-pleas'd his weary pow'rs,
 and talks and laughs away his vacant hours.
 The tide of life, swift always in its course,
 may run in cities with a brisker force,
 but no where with a current so serene,
 or half so clear, as in the rural scene.
 Yet how fallacious is all earthly bliss,
 what obvious truths the wisest heads may miss ;
 some pleasures live a month, and some a year,
 but short the date of all we gather here ;
 no happiness is felt except the true,
 that does not charm the more for being new.
 This observation, as it chanc'd, not made,
 Or, if the thought occur'd, not duly weigh'd,
 He sighs — for after all by slow degrees
 the spot he lov'd has lost the pow'r to please ;
 to cross his ambling pony day by day
 seems at the best but dreaming life away ;
 the prospect, such as might enchant despair,
 He views it not, or sees no beauty there ;
 with aching heart, and discontented looks,
 Returns at noon to billiards or to books,
 But feels, while grasping at his faded joys,
 A secret thirst of his renounc'd employa.
 He chides the tardiness of ev'ry post,
 Pants to be told of battles won or lost,
 Blames his own indolence, observes, though late,
 'T is criminal to leave a sinking state,
 Flies to the levee, and receiv'd with grace,
 Kneels, kisses hands, and shines again in place.

Suburban villas, highway-side retreats,
 That dread the encroachment of our growing streets,
 Tight boxes, neatly sash'd, and in a blaze
 With all a July sun's collected rays,
 Delight the citizen, who, gasping there,
 Breathes clouds of dust, and calls it country air.
 O sweet retirement, who would balk the thought,
 That could afford retirement, or could not ?
 'T is such an easy walk, so smooth and straight,
 The second milestone fronts the garden gate ;
 A step if fair, and, if a show'r approach,
 You find safe shelter in the next stage-coach.
 There, prison'd in a parlour snug and small,
 Like bottled wasps upon a southern wall,
 The man of business and his friends compress'd
 Forget their labours, and yet find no rest ;
 But still 't is rural — trees are to be seen
 From ev'ry window, and the fields are green ;
 Ducks paddle in the pond before the door,
 And what could a remoter scene show more ?
 A sense of elegance we rarely find
 The portion of a mean or vulgar mind,

And ignorance of better things makes man,
 Who cannot much, rejoice in what he can ;
 And he, that deems his leisure well bestow'd
 In contemplation of a turnpike road,
 Is occupied as well, employs his hours
 As wisely, and as much improves his pow'rs,
 As he, that slumbers in pavilions grac'd
 With all the charms of an accomplish'd taste.
 Yet hence, alas ! insolvencies ; and hence
 Th' unpitied victim of ill-judg'd expense,
 From all his wearisome engagements freed,
 Shakes hands with business, and retires indeed.

Your prudent grand-mammas, ye modern belles,
 Content with Bristol, Bath, and Tunbridge Wells,
 When health required it would consent to roam,
 Else more attach'd to pleasures found at home.
 But now, alike, gay widow, virgin, wife,
 Ingenious to diversify dull life,
 In coaches, chaises, caravans, and boys,
 Fly to the coast for daily, nightly joys,
 And all, impatient of dry land, agree
 With one consent to rush into the sea. —
 Ocean exhibits, fathomless and broad,
 Much of the pow'r and majesty of God.
 He swathes about the swelling of the deep,
 That shines and rests, as infants smile and sleep ;
 Vast as it is, it answers as it flows
 The breathings of the lightest air that blows ;
 Curling and whit'ning over all the waste,
 The rising waves obey th' increasing blast,
 Abrupt and horrid as the tempest roars,
 Thunder and flash upon the stedfast shores,
 Till he, that rides the whirlwind, checks the rein,
 Then all the world of waters sleeps again. —
 Nereids or Dryads, as the fashion leads,
 Now in the floods, now panting in the meads,
 Vot'ries of Pleasure still, where'er she dwells,
 Near barren rocks, in palaces, or cells,
 O grant a poet leave to recommend
 (A poet fond of Nature, and your friend)
 Her slighted works to your admiring view ;
 Her works must needs excel, who fashion'd you.
 Would ye, when rambling in your morning ride,
 With some unmeaning coxcomb at your side,
 Condemn the prattler for his idle pains,
 To waste unheard the music of his strains,
 And, deaf to all th' impertinence of tongue,
 That, while it courts, affronts and does you wrong
 Mark well the finish'd plan without a fault,
 The seas globose and huge, th' o'er-arching vault,
 Earth's millions daily fed, a world employ'd
 In gath'ring plenty yet to be enjoy'd,
 Till gratitude grew vocal in the praise
 Of God, beneficent in all his ways ;
 Grac'd with such wisdom, how would beauty shine !
 Ye want but that to seem indeed divine.

Anticipated rents, and bills unpaid,
 Force many a shining youth into the shade,
 Not to redeem his time, but his estate,
 And play the fool, but at a cheaper rate.
 There, hid in loath'd obscurity, remov'd
 From pleasures left, but never more belov'd,
 He just endures, and with a sickly spleen
 Sighs o'er the beauties of the charming scene.
 Nature indeed looks prettily in rhyme ;
 Streams tinkle sweetly in poetic chime :
 The warblings of the blackbird, clear and strong,
 Are musical enough in Thomson's song ;
 And Cobham's groves, and Windsor's green retreats,
 When Pope describes them, have a thousand sweets ;

He likes the country, but in truth must own,
Most likes it, when he studies it in town.

Poor Jack — no matter who — for when I blame,
I pity, and must therefore sink the name,
Liv'd in his saddle, lov'd the chase, the course,
And always, ere he mounted, kiss'd his horse.
The estate, his sires had own'd in ancient years,
Was quickly distanc'd, match'd against a peer's.
Jack vanish'd, was regretted and forgot;
'T is wild good-nature's never-failing lot.
At length, when all had long suppos'd him dead,
By cold submersion, razor, rope, or lead,
My lord, alighting at his usual place,
The Crown, took notice of an ostler's face.
Jack knew his friend, but hop'd in that disguise
He might escape the most observing eyes,
And whistling, as if unconcern'd and gay,
'Curried his nag, and look'd another way.
Convinc'd at last, upon a nearer view,
'T was he, the same, the very Jack he knew,
O'erwhelm'd at once with wonder, grief, and joy,
He press'd him much to quit his base employ;
His countenance, his purse, his heart, his hand,
Influence and pow'r, were all at his command:
Peers are not always gen'rous as well bred,
But Granby was, meant truly what he said.
Jack bow'd, and was oblig'd — confess'd 't was strange,

That so retir'd he should not wish a change,
But knew no medium between guzzling beer,
And his old stint — three thousand pounds a year.

Thus some retire to nourish hopeless wee;
Some seeking happiness not found below;
Some to comply with humour, and a mind
To social scenes by nature disinclin'd;
Some sway'd by fashion, some by deep disgust;
Some self-impov'rish'd, and because they must;
But few, that court Retirement, are aware
Of half the toils they must encounter there.

Lucrative offices are seldom lost
For want of pow'rs proportion'd to the post:
Give ev'n a dunce th' employment he desires,
And he soon finds the talents it requires;
A business with an income at it's heels
Furnishes always oil for it's own wheels.
But in his arduous enterprise to close
His active years with indolent repose,
He finds the labours of that state exceed
His utmost faculties, severe indeed.
'T is easy to resign a toilsome place,
But not to manage leisure with a grace;
Absence of occupation is not rest,
A mind quite vacant is a mind distress'd.
The vet'ran steed, excus'd his task at length,
In kind compassion of his failing strength,
And turn'd into the park or mead to graze,
Exempt from future service all his days,
There feels a pleasure perfect in it's kind,
Ranges at liberty, and snuffs the wind:
But when his lord would quit the busy road,
To taste a joy like that he had bestow'd,
He proves, less happy than his favour'd brute,
A life of ease a difficult pursuit.
Thought, to the man that never thinks, may seem
As natural as when asleep to dream;
But reveries (for human minds will act)
Specious in show, impossible in fact,
Those flimsy webs, that break as soon as wrought,
Attain not to the dignity of thought:

Nor yet the swarms, that occupy the brain,
Where dreams of dress, intrigue, and pleasure reign;

Nor such as useless conversation breeds,
Or lust engenders, and indulgence feeds.
Whence, and what are we? to what end ordain'd?
What means the drama by the world sustain'd?
Business or vain amusement, care or mirth,
Divide the frail inhabitants of Earth.
Is duty a mere sport, or an employ?
Life an intrusted talent, or a toy?
Is there, as reason, conscience, Scripture, say,
Cause to provide for a great future day,
When, Earth's assign'd duration at an end,
Man shall be summon'd and the dead attend?
The trumpet — will it sound? the curtain rise?
And show th' august tribunal of the skies,
Where no prevarication shall avail,
Where eloquence and artifice shall fail,
The pride of arrogant distinctions fall,
And conscience and our conduct judge us all?
Pardon me, ye that give the midnight oil
To learned cares or philosophic toil,
Though I revere your honourable names,
Your useful labours and important aims,
And hold the world indebted to your aid,
Enrich'd with the discov'ries ye have made;
Yet let me stand excus'd, if I esteem
A mind employ'd on so sublime a theme,
Pushing her bold inquiry to the date
And outline of the present transient state,
And, after poising her advent'rous wings,
Settling at last upon eternal things,
Far more intelligent and better taught
The strenuous use of profitable thought,
Than ye, when happiest and enlighten'd most,
And highest in renown, can justly boast.

A mind unnerv'd, or indispos'd to bear
The weight of subjects worthiest of her care,
Whatever hopes a change of scene inspires,
Must change her nature, or in vain retire.
An idler is a watch, that wants both hands;
As useless if it goes, as when it stands.
Books therefore, not the scandal of the shelves,
In which lewd sensualists print out themselves;
Nor those, in which the stage gives vice a blow,
With what success let modern manners show;
Nor his, who, for the bane of thousands born,
Built God a church, and laugh'd his word to scorn,
Skilful alike to seem devout and just,
And stab religion with a sly side-thrust;
Nor those of learn'd philologists, who chase
A panting syllable through time and space,
Start it at home, and hunt it in the dark
To Gaul, to Greece, and into Noah's ark;
But such as learning without false pretence,
The friend of truth, th' associate of sound sense,
And such as in the zeal of good design,
Strong judgment lab'ring in the Scripture mine,
All such as manly and great souls produce,
Worthy to live, and of eternal use:
Behold in these what leisure hours demand,
Amusement and true knowledge hand in hand.
Luxury gives the mind a childish cast,
And, while she polishes, perverts the taste;
Habits of close attention, thinking heads,
Become more rare as dissipation spreads,
'Till authors hear at length one gen'ral cry,
Tickle and entertain us, or we die.

The loud demand, from year to year the same,
 Leggers Invention, and makes Fancy lame ;
 Till farce itself, most mournfully jejune,
 Calls for the kind assistance of a tune ;
 And novels (witness every month's review)
 Belie their name, and offer nothing new.
 The mind, relaxing into needful sport,
 Should turn to writers of an abler sort,
 Whose wit well manag'd, and whose classic style,
 Give truth a lustre, and make wisdom smile.
 Friends, (for I cannot stint, as some have done,
 Too rigid in my view, that name to one ;
 Though one, I grant it, in the gen'rous breast
 Will stand advanc'd a step above the rest :
 Flow'rs by that name promiscuously we call,
 But one, the rose, the regent of them all,)—
 Friends, not adopted with a schoolboy's haste,
 But chosen with a nice discerning taste,
 Well-born, well-disciplin'd, who, plac'd apart
 From vulgar minds, have honour much at heart,
 And, though the world may think th' ingredients odd,
 The love of virtue, and the fear of God !
 Such friends prevent what else would soon succeed,
 A temper rustic as the life we lead,
 And keep the polish of the manners clean,
 As theirs who bustle in the busiest scene ;
 For solitude, however some may rave,
 Seeming a sanctuary, proves a grave,
 A sepulchre, in which the living lie,
 Where all good qualities grow sick and die.
 I praise the Frenchman*, his remark was shrewd —
 How sweet, how passing sweet, is solitude !
 But grant me still a friend in my retreat,
 Whom I may whisper — solitude is sweet.
 Yet neither these delights, nor aught beside,
 That appetite can ask, or wealth provide,
 Can save us always from a tedious day,
 Or shine the dulness of still life away ;
 Divine communion, carefully enjoy'd,
 Or sought with energy, must fill the void.
 O sacred art, to which alone life owes
 It's happiest seasons, and a peaceful close,
 Scorn'd in a world, indebted to that scorn
 For evils daily felt and hardly borne,
 Not knowing thee, we reap with bleeding hands
 Flow'rs of rank odour upon thorny lands,
 And, while experience cautions us in vain,
 Grasp seeming happiness, and find it pain.
 Despondence, self-deserted in her grief,
 Lost by abandoning her own relief,
 Murmuring and ungrateful Discontent,
 That scorns afflictions mercifully meant,
 Those humours tart as wines upon the fret,
 Which idleness and weariness beget ;
 These, and a thousand plagues, that haunt the breast,
 Fond of the phantom of an earthly rest,
 Divine communion chases, as the day
 Drives to their dens th' obedient beasts of prey.
 See Judah's promis'd king bereft of all,
 Driv'n out an exile from the face of Saul,
 To distant caves the lonely wand'rer flies,
 To seek that peace a tyrant's frown denies.
 Hear the sweet accents of his tuneful voice,
 Hear him, o'erwhelm'd with sorrow, yet rejoice ;
 No womanish or wailing grief has part,
 No, not a moment, in his royal heart ;
 'T is manly music, such as martyrs make,
 Suff'ring with gladness for a Saviour's sake ;

* Bruyere.

His soul exults, hope animates his lays,
 The sense of mercy kindles into praise,
 And wilds, familiar with a lion's roar,
 Ring with ecstatic sounds unheard before :
 'T is love like his, that can alone defeat
 The foes of man, or make a desert sweet.

Religion does not censure or exclude
 Unnumber'd pleasures harmlessly pursued ;
 To study culture, and with artful toil
 To meliorate and tame the stubborn soil ;
 To give dissimilar yet fruitful lands
 The grain, or herb, or plant, that each demands ;
 To cherish virtue in an humble state,
 And share the joys your bounty may create ;
 To mark the matchless workings of the pow'r,
 That shuts within it's seed the future flow'r,
 Bids these in elegance of form excel,
 In colour these, and those delight the smell,
 Sends Nature forth the daughter of the skies,
 To dance on Earth, and charm all human eyes ;
 To teach the canvass innocent deceit,
 Or lay the landscape on the snowy sheet —
 These, these are arts pursu'd without a crime,
 That leave no stain upon the wing of Time.

Me poetry (or rather notes that aim
 Feebly and vainly at poetic fame)
 Employs, shut out from more important views,
 Fast by the banks of the slow-winding Ouse ;
 Content if thus sequester'd I may raise
 A monitor's, though not a poet's praise,
 And while I teach an art too little known,
 To close life wisely, may not waste my own.

THE TASK.

Advertisement.

The history of the following production is briefly this : A lady, fond of blank verse, demanded a poem of that kind from the author, and gave him the SOFA for a subject. He obeyed ; and, having much leisure, connected another subject with it : and, pursuing the train of thought to which his situation and turn of mind led him, brought forth at length, instead of the trifle which he at first intended, a serious affair — a volume.

In the poem on the subject of Education, he would be very sorry to stand suspected of having aimed his censure at any particular school. His objections are such as naturally apply themselves to schools in general. If there were not, as for the most part there is, wilful neglect in those who manage them, and an omission even of such discipline as they are susceptible of, the objects are yet too numerous for minute attention ; and the aching hearts of ten thousand parents, mourning under the bitterest of all disappointments, attest the truth of the allegation. His quarrel, therefore, is with the mischief at large, and not with any particular instance of it.

Book I.

THE SOFA.

Argument.

Historical deduction of seats, from the stool to the Sofa. A school-boy's ramble. A walk in the country. The scene described. Rural sounds as well as sights delightful. Another walk. Mistake concerning the charms of solitude corrected. Colonnades commended. Alcove, and the view from it. The wilderness. The grove. The thresher. The necessity and the benefits of exercise. The works of nature superior to, and, in some instances, inimitable by, art. The wearisomeness of what is commonly called a life of pleasure. Change of scene sometimes expedient. A common described, and the character of Crazy Kate introduced. Gipsies. The blessings of civilized life. That state most favourable to virtue. The South-Sea islanders compassionate, but chiefly Omai. His present state of mind supposed. Civilized life friendly to virtue, but not great cities. Great cities, and London in particular, allowed their due praises, but censured. Fête-champêtre. The book concludes with a reflection on the fatal effects of dissipation and effeminacy upon our public measures.

I SING the Sofa. I, who lately sang
Truth, Hope, and Charity, and touch'd with awe
The solemn chords, and with a trembling hand,
Escap'd with pain from that advent'rous flight,
Now seek repose upon an humbler theme ;
The theme though humble, yet august and proud
'Th' occasion — for the Fair commands the song.

Time was, when clothing sumptuous or for use,
Save their own painted skins, our sires had none.
As yet black breeches were not ; satin smooth,
Or velvet soft, or plush with shaggy pile :
'The hardy chief upon the rugged rock
Wash'd by the sea, or on the grav'ly bank
Thrown up by wintry torrents roaring loud,
Fearless of wrong, repos'd his weary strength.
Those barb'rous ages past, succeeded next
The birth-day of Invention ; weak at first,
Dull in design, and clumsy to perform.
Joint stools were then created ; on three legs
Upborne they stood. Three legs upholding firm
A massy slab, in fashion square or round.
On such a stool immortal Alfred sat,
And sway'd the sceptre of his infant realms :
And such in ancient halls and mansions drear,
May still be seen ; but perforated sore,
And drill'd in holes, the solid oak is found,
By worms voracious eating through and through.

At length a generation more refin'd
Improv'd the simple plan ; made three legs four,
Gave them a twisted form vermicular,
And o'er the seat, with plenteous wadding stuff'd,
Induc'd a splendid cover, green and blue,
Yellow and red, of tap'stry richly wrought
And woven close, or needle-work sublime.
There might ye see the piony spread wide,
The full-blown rose, the shepherd and his lass,
Lapdog and lambkin with black staring eyes,
And parrots with twin cherries in their beak.

Now came the cane from India smooth and bright
With Nature's varnish ; sever'd into stripes,
That interlac'd each other, these supplied
Of texture firm a lattice-work, that brac'd
The new machine, and it became a chair.
But restless was the chair ; the back erect
Distress'd the weary loins, that felt no ease ;
The slipp'ry seat betray'd the sliding part,
That press'd it, and the feet hung dangling down,
Anxious in vain to find the distant floor.

These for the rich ; the rest whom Fate had plac'd
In modest mediocrity, content
With base materials, sat on well-tan'd hides,
Obdurate and unyielding, glassy smooth,
With here and there a tuft of crimson yarn,
Or scarlet crewel, in the cushion fix'd,
If cushion might be call'd, what harder seem'd
Than the firm oak, of which the frame was form'd
No want of timber then was felt or fear'd
In Albion's happy isle. The lumber stood
Pond'rous and fix'd by its own massy weight.
But elbows still were wanting ; these, some say,
An alderman of Cripplegate contriv'd ;
And some ascribe th' invention to a priest,
Burly, and big, and studious of his ease.
But rude at first, and not with easy slope
Receding wide, they press'd against the ribs,
And bruise'd the side ; and, elevated high,
Taught the rais'd shoulders to invade the ears.
Long time elaps'd or e'er our rugged sires
Complain'd, though incommodiously pent in,
And ill at ease behind. The ladies first
'Gan murmur, as became the softer sex.
Ingenious Fancy, never better pleas'd,
Than when employ'd t' accommodate the fair,
Heard the sweet moan with pity, and devis'd
The soft settee ; one elbow at each end,
And in the midst an elbow it received,
United yet divided, twain at once.
So sit two kings of Brentford on one throne ;
And so two citizens, who take the air,
Close pack'd, and smiling, in a chaise and one.
But relaxation of the languid frame,
By soft recumbency of outstretch'd limbs,
Was bliss reserv'd for happier days. So slow
The growth of what is excellent ; so hard
T' attain perfection in this nether world.
Thus first Necessity invented stools,
Convenience next suggested elbow-chairs,
And Luxury th' accomplish'd Sofa last.

The nurse sleeps sweetly, hir'd to watch the sick,
Whom snoring she disturbs. As sweetly he,
Who quits the coach-box at the midnight hour,
To sleep within the carriage more secure ;
His legs depending at the open door.
Sweet sleep enjoys the curate in his desk,
The tedious rector drawling o'er his head ;
And sweet the clerk below. But neither sleep
Of lazy nurse, who snores the sick man dead ;
Nor his, who quits the box at midnight hour,
To slumber in the carriage more secure ;
Nor sleep enjoy'd by curate in his desk ;
Nor yet the doings of the clerk, as sweet,
Compar'd with the repose the Sofa yields.

O may I live exempted (while I live
Guiltless of pamper'd appetite obscene)
From pangs arthritic, that infest the toe
Of libertine Excess. The Sofa suits
The gouty limb, 't is true ; but gouty limb,
Though on a Sofa, may I never feel :
For I have lov'd the rural walk through lanes,
Of grassy swarth, close-cropp'd by nibbling sheep,
And skirted thick with intertexture firm
Of thorny boughs ; have lov'd the rural walk
O'er hills, through valleys, and by rivers' brink,
E'er since a truant boy I pass'd my bounds,
T' enjoy a ramble on the banks of Thames ;
And still remember, nor without regret,
Of hours, that sorrow since has much endear'd,
How oft, my slice of pocket-store consum'd,

All hung'ring, penniless, and far from home,
 Fed on scarlet hips and stony haws,
 Or blushing crabs, or berries, that emboss
 The bramble, black as jet, or sloes austere.
 Lard fare! but such as boyish appetite
 Disdains not; nor the palate, undeprav'd
 By culinary arts, unsav'ry deems.
 To Sofa then awaited my return!
 For Sofa then I needed. Youth repairs
 His wasted spirits quickly, by long toil
 Recurring short fatigue; and, though our years,
 As life declines, speed rapidly away,
 And not a year but pilfers as he goes
 Some youthful grace, that age would gladly keep;
 A tooth, or auburn lock, and by degrees
 Their length and colour from the locks they spare;
 The elastic spring of an unwearied foot,
 That mounts the stile with ease, or leaps the fence,
 That play of lungs, inhaling and again
 Respiring freely the fresh air, that makes
 Swift pace or steep ascent no toil to me,
 Mine have not pilfer'd yet; nor yet impair'd
 My relish of fair prospect; scenes that sooth'd
 Or charm'd me young, no longer young, I find
 Still soothing, and of pow'r to charm me still.
 And witness, dear companion of my walks,
 Whose arm this twentieth winter I perceive
 Fast lock'd in mine, with pleasure such as love,
 Confirm'd by long experience of thy worth
 And well-try'd virtues, could alone inspire —
 Witness a joy that thou hast doubted long.
 Thou know'st my praise of nature most sincere,
 And that my raptures are not conjur'd up
 To serve occasions of poetic pomp,
 But genuine, and art partner of them all.
 How oft upon you eminence our pace
 Has slacken'd to a pause, and we have borne
 The ruffling wind, scarce conscious that it blew,
 While Admiration, feeding at the eye,
 And still unsated, dwelt upon the scene.
 Thence with what pleasure have we just discern'd
 The distant plough slow moving, and beside
 His lab'ring team, that swerv'd not from the track,
 The sturdy swain diminish'd to a boy!
 Here Ouse, slow winding through a level plain
 Of spacious meads with cattle sprinkled o'er,
 Conducts the eye along his sinuous course
 Delighted. There, fast rooted in their bank,
 Stand, never overlook'd, our fav'rite elms,
 That screen the herdsman's solitary hut;
 While far beyond, and overthwart the stream,
 That, as with molten glass, inlays the vale,
 The sloping land recedes into the clouds;
 Displaying on it's varied side the grace
 Of hedge-row beauties numberless, square tow'r,
 Tall spire, from which the sound of cheerful bells
 Just undulates upon the list'ning ear,
 Groves, heaths, and smoking villages, remote.
 Scenes must be beautiful, which daily view'd
 Please daily, and whose novelty survives
 Long knowledge and the scrutiny of years.
 Praise justly due to those that I describe.

Nor rural sights alone, but rural sounds,
 Exhilarate the spirit, and restore
 The tone of languid Nature. Mighty winds,
 That sweep the skirt of some far-spreading wood
 Of ancient growth, make music not unlike
 The dash of Ocean on his winding shore,
 And lull the spirit while they fill the mind;
 Unnumber'd branches waving in the blast,

And all their leaves fast flutt'ring, all at once.
 Nor less composure waits upon the roar
 Of distant floods, or on the softer voice
 Of neighb'ring fountain, or of rills that slip
 Through the cleft rock, and, chiming as they fall
 Upon loose pebbles, lose themselves at length
 In matted grass, that with a livelier green
 Betrays the secret of their silent course.
 Nature inanimate employs sweet sounds,
 But animated nature sweeter still,
 To soothe and satisfy the human ear.
 Ten thousand warblers cheer the day, and one
 The live-long night: nor these alone, whose notes
 Nice-finger'd Art must emulate in vain,
 But cawing rooks, and kites that swim sublime
 In still repeated circles, screaming loud,
 The jay, the pie, and ev'n the boding owl,
 That hails the rising moon, have charms for me.
 Sounds inharmonious in themselves and harsh,
 Yet heard in scenes where peace for ever reigns,
 And only there, please highly for their sake.

Peace to the artist, whose ingenious thought
 Devis'd the weather-house, that useful toy!
 Fearless of humid air and gath'ring rains,
 Forth steps the man — an emblem of myself!
 More delicate his tim'rous mate retires.
 When Winter soaks the fields, and female feet,
 Too weak to struggle with tenacious clay,
 Or ford the rivulets, are best at home,
 The task of new discov'ries falls on me.
 At such a season, and with such a charge,
 Once went I forth; and found, till then unknown,
 A cottage, whither oft we since repair:
 'T is perch'd upon the green hill top, but close
 Environ'd with a ring of branching elms,
 That overhang the thatch, itself unseen
 Peeps at the vale below; so thick beset
 With foliage of such dark redundant growth,
 I call'd the low-roof'd lodge the Peasant's Nest.
 And, hidden as it is, and far remote
 From such unpleasing sounds, as haunt the ear
 In village or in town, the bay of curs
 Incessant, clinking hammers, grinding wheels,
 And infants clam'rous whether pleas'd or pain'd,
 Oft have I wish'd the peaceful covert mine.
 "Here," I have said, "at least I should possess
 The poet's treasure, silence, and indulge
 The dreams of fancy, tranquil and secure."
 Vain thought! the dweller in that still retreat
 Dearly obtains the refuge it affords.
 Its elevated site forbids the wretch
 To drink sweet waters of the crystal well:
 He dips his bowl into the weedy ditch,
 And, heavy laden, brings his bev'rage home,
 Far fetch'd and little worth; nor seldom waits,
 Dependant on the baker's punctual call,
 To hear his creaking panniers at the door,
 Angry, and sad, and his last crust consum'd.
 So farewell envy of the Peasant's Nest!
 If solitude make scant the means of life,
 Society for me! — thou seeming sweet,
 Be still a pleasing object in my view;
 My visit still, but never mine abode.

Not distant far a length of colonnade
 Invites us. Monument of ancient taste,
 Now scorn'd, but worthy of a better fate.
 Our fathers knew the value of a screen
 From sultry suns; and in their shaded walks
 And long protracted bow'rs, enjoy'd at noon
 The gloom and coolness of declining day.

We bear our shades about us : self-depriv'd
Of other screen, the third umbrella spread,
And range an Indian waste without a tree.
Thanks to Benevolus* — he spares me yet
These chesnuts rang'd in corresponding lines ;
And, though himself so polish'd, still reprieves
The obsolete prolixity of shade.

Descending now (but cautious, lest too fast)
A sudden steep upon a rustic bridge,
We pass a gulf, in which the willows dip
Their pendent boughs, stooping as if to drink.
Hence, ankle-deep in moss and flow'ry thyme
We mount again, and feel at ev'ry step
Our foot half sunk in hillocks green and soft,
Rais'd by the mole, the miner of the soil.
He, not unlike the great ones of mankind,
Disfigures Earth ; and, plotting in the dark,
Toils much to earn a monumental pile,
That may record the mischiefs he has done.

The summit gain'd, behold the proud alcove
That crowns it ! yet not all its pride secures
The grand retreat from injuries impress'd
By rural carvers, who with knives deface
The pannels, leaving an obscure, rude name,
In characters uncouth, and spelt amiss.
So strong the zeal t' immortalize himself
Beats in the breast of man, that ev'n a few,
Few transient years, won from th' abyss abhorr'd
Of blank oblivion, seem a glorious prize,
And even to a clown. Now roves the eye ;
And, posted on this speculative height,
Exults in it's command. The sheep-fold here
Pours out it's fleecy tenants o'er the glebe.
At first progressive as a stream, they seek
The middle field ; but, scatter'd by degrees,
Each to his choice, soon whiten all the land.
There from the sun-burnt hay-field homeward creeps
The loaded wain ; while, lighten'd of its charge,
The wain that meets it passes swiftly by ;
The boorish driver leaning o'er his team
Vociferous, and impatient of delay.
Nor less attractive is the woodland scene,
Diversified with trees of ev'ry growth,
Alike, yet various. Here the gray smooth trunks
Of ash, or lime, or beech, distinctly shine,
Within the twilight of their distant shades ;
There, lost behind a rising ground, the wood
Seems sunk, and shorten'd to its topmost boughs.
No tree in all the grove but has it's charms,
Though each it's hue peculiar ; paler some,
And of a wannish gray ; the willow such,
And poplar, that with silver lines his leaf,
And ash, far-stretching his umbrageous arm ;
Of deeper green the elm ; and deeper still,
Lord of the woods, the long-surviving oak.
Some glossy-leav'd, and shining in the sun,
The maple, and the beech of oily nuts
Prolific, and the lime at dewy eve
Diffusing odours : nor unnoted pass
The sycamore, capricious in attire,
Now green, now tawny, and, ere autumn yet
Have chang'd the woods, in scarlet honours bright.
O'er these, but far beyond (a spacious map
Of hill and valley interpos'd between),
The Ouse, dividing the well-water'd land,
Now glitters in the sun, and now retires,
As bashful, yet impatient to be seen.

* John Courtney Throckmorton, Esq. of Weston Underwood.

Hence the declivity is sharp and short,
And such the re-ascent ; between them wicks
A little naiad her improv'rish'd urn
All summer long, which winter fills again.
The folded gates would bar my progress now,
But that the lord † of this enclos'd demesne,
Communicative of the good he owns,
Admits me to a share ; the guiltless eye
Commits no wrong, nor wastes what it enjoys.
Refreshing change ! where now the blazing sun
By short transition we have lost his glare,
And stepp'd at once into a cooler clime.
Ye fallen avenues ! once more I mourn
Your fate unmerited, once more rejoice,
That yet a remnant of your race survives.
How airy and how light the graceful arch,
Yet awful as the consecrated roof
Re-echoing pious anthems ! while beneath
The checker'd earth seems restless as a flood
Brush'd by the wind. So sportive is the light
Shot through the boughs, it dances as they dance.
Shadow and sunshine intermingling quick,
And dark'ning and enlight'ning, as the leaves
Play wanton, ev'ry moment, ev'ry spot.

And now, with nerves new-brac'd and gay
We tread the wilderness, whose well-roll'd waves
With curvature of slow and easy sweep —
Deception innocent — give ample space
To narrow bounds. The grove receives us next ;
Between the upright shafts of whose tall elms
We may discern the thresher at his task.
Thump after thump resounds the constant fall,
That seems to swing uncertain, and yet falls
Full on the destin'd ear. Wide flies the chaff,
The rustling straw sends up a frequent mist
Of atoms, sparkling in the noon-day beam.
Come hither, ye that press your beds of down,
And sleep not ; see him sweating o'er his bread
Before he eats it. — 'T is the primal curse,
But soften'd into mercy ; made the pledge
Of cheerful days, and nights without a groan.

By ceaseless action all that is subsists.
Constant rotation of th' unwearied wheel,
That Nature rides upon, maintains her health,
Her beauty, her fertility. She dreads
An instant's pause, and lives but while she moves.
Its own revolvency upholds the World.
Winds from all quarters agitate the air,
And fit the limpid element for use,
Else noxious ; oceans, rivers, lakes, and streams,
All feel the fresh'ning impulse, and are cleans'd
By restless undulation : ev'n the oak
Thrives by the rude concussion of the storm :
He seems indeed indignant, and to feel
Th' impression of the blast with proud disdain.
Frowning, as if in his unconscious arm
He held the thunder : but the monarch owes
His firm stability to what he scorns,
More fix'd below, the more disturb'd above.
The law, by which all creatures else are bound,
Binds man, the lord of all. Himself derives
No mean advantage from a kindred cause,
From strenuous toil his hours of sweetest ease.
The sedentary stretch their lazy length
When Custom bids, but no refreshment find,
For none they need : the languid eye, the cheek
Deserted of its bloom, the flaccid, shrunk,
And wither'd muscle, and the vapid soul,

† See the foregoing note.

Leproach their owner with that love of rest,
 To which he forfeits ev'n the rest he loves.
 Not such the alert and active. Measure life
 By it's true worth, the comforts it affords,
 And theirs alone seems worthy of the name.
 Good health, and, it's associate in the most,
 Good temper; spirits prompt to undertake,
 And not soon spent, though in an arduous task;
 The pow'rs of fancy and strong thought are theirs;
 Ev'n age itself seems privileg'd in them
 With clear exemption from it's own defects.
 A sparkling eye beneath a wrinkled front
 The vet'ran shows, and, gracing a gray beard
 With youthful smiles, descends toward the grave
 Prightly, and old almost without decay.

Like a coy maiden, Ease, when courted most,
 Farthest retires — an idol, at whose shrine
 Who oft'nest sacrifice are favour'd least.
 The love of Nature, and the scenes she draws,
 As Nature's dictate. Strange! there should be found,
 Who, self-imprison'd in their proud salons,
 Renounce the odours of the open field
 For the unscented fictions of the loom;
 Who, satisfied with only pencill'd scenes,
 Prefer to the performance of a God
 Th' inferior wonders of an artist's hand!
 Lovely indeed the mimic works of Art;
 But Nature's works far lovelier. I admire,
 None more admires, the painter's magic skill,
 Who shows me that which I shall never see,
 Conveys a distant country into mine,
 And throws Italian light on English walls:
 But imitative strokes can do no more
 Than please the eye — sweet Nature's, ev'ry sense.
 The air salubrious of her lofty hills,
 The cheering fragrance of her dewy vales,
 And music of her woods — no works of man
 May rival these, these all bespeak a pow'r
 Peculiar, and exclusively her own.
 Beneath the open sky she spreads the feast;
 'Tis free to all — 't is ev'ry day renew'd;
 Who scorns it starves deservedly at home.
 He does not scorn it, who, imprison'd long
 In some unwholesome dungeon, and a prey
 To sallow sickness, which the vapours, dank
 And clammy, of his dark abode have bred,
 Escapes at last to liberty and light:
 His cheek recovers soon it's healthful hue;
 His eye relumines it's extinguish'd fires;
 He walks, he leaps, he runs — is wing'd with joy,
 And riots in the sweets of ev'ry breeze.
 He does not scorn it, who has long endur'd
 A fever's agonies, and fed on drugs.
 Nor yet the mariner, his blood inflam'd
 With acrid salts; his very heart athirst,
 To gaze at Nature in her green array,
 Upon the ship's tall side he stands, possess'd
 With visions prompted by intense desire:
 Fair fields appear below, such as he left
 Far distant, such as he would die to find —
 He seeks them headlong, and is seen no more.

The spleen is seldom felt where Flora reigns;
 The low'ring eye, the petulance, the frown,
 And sullen sadness, that o'er shades, distort,
 And mar, the face of Beauty, when no cause
 For such immeasurable woe appears,
 These Flora banishes, and gives the fair
 Sweet smiles, and bloom less transient than her own.
 It is the constant revolution, stale
 And tasteless, of the same repeated joys,

That palls and satiates, and makes languid life,
 A pedlar's pack, that bows the bearer down.
 Health suffers, and the spirits ebb, the heart
 Recoils from it's own choice — at the full feast
 Is famish'd — finds no music in the song,
 No smartness in the jest; and wonders why.
 Yet thousands still desire to journey on,
 Though halt, and weary of the path they tread.
 The paralytic, who can hold her cards,
 But cannot play them, borrows a friend's hand,
 To deal and shuffle, to divide and sort
 Her mingled suits and sequences; and sits,
 Spectatress both and spectacle, a sad
 And silent cipher, while her proxy plays.
 Others are dragg'd into the crowded room
 Between supporters; and, once seated, sit,
 Through downright inability to rise,
 Till the stout bearers lift the corpse again.
 These speak a loud memento. Yet ev'n these Themselves love life, and cling to it, as he,
 That overhangs a torrent, to a twig.
 They love it, and yet loath it; fear to die,
 Yet scorn the purposes for which they live.
 Then wherefore not renounce them? No — the dread,
 The slavish dread of solitude, that breeds
 Reflection and remorse, the fear of shame,
 And their invet'rate habits, all forbid.

Whom call we gay? That honour has been long
 The boast of mere pretenders to the name.
 The innocent are gay — the lark is gay,
 That dries his feathers, saturate with dew,
 Beneath the rosy cloud, while yet the beams
 Of day-spring over-shoot his humble nest.
 The peasant too, a witness of his song,
 Himself a songster, is as gay as he.
 But save me from the gaiety of those,
 Whose headaches nail them to a noonday bed;
 And save me too from theirs, whose haggard eyes
 Flash desperation, and betray their pangs
 For property stripp'd off by cruel chance;
 From gaiety, that fills the bones with pain,
 The mouth with blasphemy, the heart with woe.

The Earth was made so various, that the mind
 Of desultory man, studious of change,
 And pleas'd with novelty, might be indulg'd.
 Prospects, however lovely, may be seen
 Till half their beauties fade; the weary sight,
 Too well acquainted with their smile, slides off
 Fastidious, seeking less familiar scenes.
 Then snug enclosures in the shelter'd vale,
 Where frequent hedges intercept the eye,
 Delight us; happy to renounce awhile,
 Not senseless of its charms, what still we love,
 That such short absence may endear it more.
 Then forests, or the savage rock may please,
 That hides the seamew in his hollow clefts
 Above the reach of man. His hoary head,
 Conspicuous many a league, the mariner,
 Bound homeward, and in hope already there,
 Greets with three cheers exulting. At his waist
 A girdle of half-wither'd shrubs he shows,
 And at his feet the baffled billows die.
 The common, overgrown with fern, and rough
 With prickly gorse, that, shapeless and deform'd,
 And dang'rous to the touch, has yet it's bloom,
 And decks itself with ornaments of gold,
 Yields no unpleasing ramble; there the turf
 Smells fresh, and, rich in odorif'rous herbs
 And fungous fruits of earth, regales the sense
 With luxury of unexpected sweets.

There often wanders one, whom better days
Saw better clad, in cloak of satin trimm'd
With lace, and hat with splendid riband bound.
A serving maid was she, and fell in love
With one who left her, went to sea, and died.
Her fancy follow'd him through foaming waves
To distant shores; and she would sit and weep
At what a sailor suffers; fancy too,
Delusive most where warmest wishes are,
Would oft anticipate his glad return,
And dream of transports she was not to know.
She heard the doleful tidings of his death —
And never smil'd again! and now she roams
The dreary waste; there spends the livelong day,
And there, unless when charity forbids,
The livelong night. A tatter'd apron hides,
Worn as a cloak, and hardly hides, a gown
More tatter'd still; and both but ill conceal
A bosom heav'd with never-ceasing sighs.
She begs an idle pin of all she meets,
And hoards them in her sleeve; but needful food,
Though press'd with hunger oft, or comelier clothes,
Though pinch'd with cold, asks never. — Kate is craz'd.

I see a column of slow-rising smoke
O'er top the lofty wood, that skirts the wild.
A vagabond and useless tribe there eat
Their miserable meal. A kettle, slung
Between two poles upon a stick transverse,
Receives the morsel — flesh obscene of dog,
Or vermin, or at best of cock purloin'd
From his accusom'd perch. Hard-faring race!
They pick their fuel out of ev'ry hedge,
Which, kindled with dry leaves, just saves un-
quench'd

The spark of life. The sportive wind blows wide
Their flutt'ring rags, and shows a tawny skin,
The vellum of the pedigree they claim.
Great skill have they in palmistry, and more
To conjure clean away the gold they touch,
Conveying worthless dross into its place;
Loud when they beg, dumb only when they steal.
Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
In human mould, should brutalize by choice
His nature; and, though capable of arts,
By which the world might profit, and himself,
Self-banish'd from society, prefer
Such squalid sloth to honourable toil!
Yet even these, though feigning sickness oft
They swathe the forehead, drag the limping limb,
And vex their flesh with artificial sores,
Can change their whine into a mirthful note,
When safe occasion offers; and with dance,
And music of the bladder and the bag,
Beguile their woes, and make the woods resound.
Such health and gaiety of heart enjoy
The houseless rovers of the sylvan world;
And, breathing wholesome air, and wand'ring much,
Need other physic none to heal th' effects
Of loathsome diet, penury, and cold.

Blest he, though undistinguish'd from the crowd
By wealth or dignity, who dwells secure,
Where man, by nature fierce, has laid aside
His fierceness, having learnt, though slow to learn,
The manners and the arts of civil life.
His wants indeed are many; but supply
Is obvious, plac'd within the easy reach
Of temp'rate wishes and industrious hands.
Here virtue thrives as in her proper soil;
Not rude and surly, and beset with thorns,

And terrible to sight, as when she springs
(If e'er she spring spontaneous) in remote
And barb'rous climes, where violence prevails,
And strength is lord of all; but gentle, kind,
By culture tam'd, by liberty refresh'd,
And all her fruits by radiant truth matur'd.
War and the chase engross the savage whole;
War follow'd for revenge, or to supplant
The envied tenants of some happier spot:
The chase for sustenance, precarious trust!
His hard condition with severe constraint
Binds all his faculties, forbids all growth
Of wisdom, proves a school, in which he learns
Sly circumvention, unrelenting hate,
Mean self-attachment, and scarce aught beside.
Thus fare the shiv'ring natives of the north,
And thus the rangers of the western world,
Where it advances far into the deep,
Tow'rd's the antarctic. Ev'n the favour'd isles
So lately found, although the constant Sun
Cheer all their seasons with a grateful smile,
Can boast but little virtue; and, inert
Through plenty, lose in morals what they gain
In manners — victims of luxurious ease.
These therefore I can pity, plac'd remote
From all that science traces, art invents,
Or inspiration teaches; and enclos'd
In boundless oceans never to be pass'd
By navigators uninform'd as they,
Or plow'd perhaps by British bark again:
But far beyond the rest, and with most cause,
Thee, gentle savage! † whom no love of thee
Or thine, but curiosity perhaps,
Or else vain-glory, prompted us to draw
Forth from thy native bow'rs, to show thee here
With what superior skill we can abuse
The gifts of Providence, and squander life.
The dream is past; and thou hast found again
Thy cocoas and bananas, palms and yams,
And homestead thatch'd with leaves. But hast thou
found

Their former charms? And, having seen our state,
Our palaces, our ladies, and our pomp
Of equipage, our gardens, and our sports,
And heard our music; are thy simple friends,
Thy simple fare, and all thy plain delights,
As dear to thee as once? And have thy joys
Lost nothing by comparison with ours?
Rude as thou art, (for we return'd thee rude
And ignorant, except of outward show,)
I cannot think thee yet so dull of heart
And spiritless, as never to regret
Sweets tasted here, and left as soon as known.
Methinks I see thee straying on the beach,
And asking of the surge, that bathes thy foot,
If ever it has wash'd our distant shore.
I see thee weep, and thine are honest tears,
A patriot's for his country: thou art sad
At thought of her forlorn and abject state,
From which no pow'r of thine can raise her up.
Thus Fancy paints thee, and, though apt to err,
Perhaps errs little, when she paints thee thus.
She tells me too, that duly ev'ry morn
Thou climb'st the mountain-top, with eager eye
Exploring far and wide the wat'ry waste
For sight of ship from England. Ev'ry speck
Seen in the dim horizon turns thee pale
With conflict of contending hopes and fears.

But comes at last the dull and dusky eve,
And sends thee to thy cabin, well-prepar'd
To dream all night of what the day denied.
Alas ! expect it not. We found no bait
To tempt us in thy country. Doing good,
Disinterested good, is not our trade.

We travel far, 't is true, but not for nought ;
And must be brib'd to compass Earth again
By other hopes and richer fruits than yours.

But though true worth and virtue in the mild
And genial soil of cultivated life

Thrive most, and may perhaps thrive only there,
Yet not in cities oft : in proud, and gay,
And gain-devoted cities. Thither flow,

As to a common and most noisome sewer,
The dregs and feculence of ev'ry land.

In cities foul example on most minds
Begets it's likeness. Rank abundance breeds,

In gross and pamper'd cities, sloth, and lust,
And wantonness, and gluttonous excess.

In cities vice is hidden with most ease,

Or seen with least reproach ; and virtue, taught
By frequent lapse, can hope no triumph there
Beyond th' achievement of successful flight.

do confess them nurs'ries of the arts,
In which they flourish most ; where in the beams

Of warm encouragement, and in the eye
Of public note, they reach their perfect size.

Such London is, by taste and wealth proclaim'd
The fairest capital of all the world,

By riot and incontinence the worst.

There, touch'd by Reynolds, a dull blank becomes
A lucid mirror, in which Nature sees

All her reflected features. Bacon there
Gives more than female beauty to a stone,

And Chatham's eloquence to marble lips.

For does the chisel occupy alone

The pow'rs of sculpture, but the style as much ;
Each province of her art her equal care.

With nice incision of her guided steel

She plows a brazen field, and clothes a soil

So sterile with what charms so'er she will,

The richest scen'ry and the loveliest forms.

Where finds Philosophy her eagle eye,

With which she gazes at yon burning disk

Indazzled, and detects and counts his spots ?

In London. Where her implements exact,

With which she calculates, computes, and scans,

All distance, motion, magnitude, and now

Measures an atom, and now girds a world ?

In London. Where has commerce such a mart,

So rich, so throng'd, so drain'd, and so supplied,

As London — opulent, enlarg'd, and still

Increasing, London ? Babylon of old

Not more the glory of the Earth than she,

A more accomplish'd world's chief glory now.

She has her praise. Now mark a spot or two,

That so much beauty would do well to purge ;

And show this queen of cities, that so fair

May yet be foul ; so witty, yet not wise.

It is not seemly, nor of good report,

That she is slack in discipline ; more prompt

To avenge than to prevent the breach of law :

That she is rigid in denouncing death

On petty robbers, and indulges life

And liberty, and oft-times honour too,

To speculators of the public gold ;

That thieves at home must hang ; but he, that puts

Into his overgorg'd and bloated purse

The wealth of Indian provinces, escapes.

Nor is it well, nor can it come to good,
That, through profane and infidel contempt
Of Holy Writ, she has presum'd t' annul
And abrogate, as roundly as she may,
The total ordinance and will of God ;
Advancing Fashion to the post of Truth,
And cent'ring all authority in modes
And customs of her own, till sabbath-rites
Have dwindled into unrespected forms,
And knees and hassocks are well nigh divorc'd.

God made the country, and man made the town.

What wonder then that health and virtue, gifts,
That can alone make sweet the bitter draught,
That life holds out to all, should most abound
And least be threaten'd in the fields and groves ?

Possess ye therefore, ye who, borne about

In chariots and sedans, know no fatigue

But that of idleness, and taste no scenes

But such as art contrives, possess ye still

Your element ; there only can ye shine ;

There only minds like yours can do no harm.

Our groves were planted to console at noon

The pensive wand'rer in their shades. At eve

The moon-beam, sliding softly in between

The sleeping leaves, is all the light they wish,

Birds warbling all the music. We can spare

The splendour of your lamps ; they but eclipse

Our softer satellite. Your songs confound

Our more harmonious notes ; the thrush departs

Scar'd, and th' offended nightingale is mute.

There is a public mischief in your mirth ;

It plagues your country. Folly such as yours,

Grac'd with a sword, and worthier of a fan,

Has made what enemies could ne'er have done,

Our arch of empire, steadfast but for you,

A mutilated structure, soon to fall.

BOOK II.

THE TIME-PIECE.

Argument.

Reflections suggested by the conclusion of the former book. Peace among the nations recommended on the ground of their common fellowship in sorrow. Prodigies enumerated. Sicilian earthquakes. Man rendered obnoxious to these calamities by sin. God the agent in them. The philosophy that stops at secondary causes reprov'd. Our own late miscarriages accounted for. Satirical notice taken of our trips to Fontaine-Bleau. But the pulpit, not satire, the proper engine of reformation. The reverend advertiser of engraved sermons. Petit-maitre parson. The good preacher. Picture of a theatrical clerical coxcomb. Story-tellers and jesters in the pulpit reprov'd. Apostrophe to popular applause. Retailers of ancient philosophy expostulated with. Sum of the whole matter. Effects of sacerdotal mismanagement on the laity. Their folly and extravagance. The mischiefs of profusion. Profusion itself, with all it's consequent evils, ascribed, as to it's principal cause, to the want of discipline in the universities.

O for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade,
Where rumour of oppression and deceit,

Of unsuccessful or successful war,
Might never reach me more. My ear is pain'd,
My soul is sick, with ev'ry day's report
Of wrong and outrage, with which Earth is fill'd.
There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart,
It does not feel for man; the nat'ral bond
Of brotherhood is sever'd as the flax,
That falls asunder at the touch of fire.
He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
Not colour'd like his own; and having pow'r
To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
Dooms and devotes him as his lawful prey.
Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Mountains interpos'd
Make enemies of nations, who had else
Like kindred drops been mingled into one.
Thus man devotes his brother, and destroys;
And, worse than all, and most to be deplor'd
As human nature's broadest, foulest blot,
Chains him, and tasks him, and exacts his sweat
With stripes, that Mercy with a bleeding heart
Weeps, when she sees inflicted on a beast.
Then what is man? And what man, seeing this,
And having human feelings, does not blush,
And hang his head, to think himself a man?
I would not have a slave to till my ground,
To carry me, to fan me while I sleep,
And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth,
That sinews bought and sold have ever earn'd.
No: dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
Just estimation priz'd above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
We have no slaves at home — Then why abroad?
And they themselves, once ferried o'er the wave
That parts us, are emancipate and loos'd.
Slaves cannot breathe in England; if their lungs
Receive our air, that moment they are free;
They touch our country, and their shackles fall.
That's noble, and bespeaks a nation proud
And jealous of the blessing. Spread it then,
And let it circulate through ev'ry vein
Of all your empire; that, where Britain's pow'r
Is felt, mankind may feel her mercy too.

Sure there is need of social intercourse,
Benevolence, and peace, and mutual aid,
Between the nations in a world, that seems
To toll the death-bell of it's own decease,
And by the voice of all it's elements
To preach the gen'ral doom.* When were the winds
Let slip with such a warrant to destroy?
When did the waves so haughtily o'erleap
Their ancient barriers, deluging the dry?
Fires from beneath, and meteors† from above,
Portentous, unexampled, unexplain'd,
Have kindled beacons in the skies; and th' old
And crazy Earth has had her shaking fits
More frequent, and foregone her usual rest.
Is it a time to wrangle, when the props
And pillars of our planet seem to fail,
And Nature ‡ with a dim and sickly eye
To wait the close of all? But grant her end
More distant, and that prophecy demands
A longer respite, unaccomplish'd yet;

* Alluding to the calamities in Jamaica.

† August 18. 1783.

‡ Alluding to the fog, that covered both Europe
and Asia during the whole summer of 1783.

Still they are frowning signals, and bespeak
Displeasure in His breast, who smites the Earth
Or heals it, makes it languish or rejoice.
And 't is but seemly, that, where all deserve
And stand expos'd by common peccancy
To what no few have felt, there should be peace,
And brethren in calamity should love.

Alas for Sicily! rude fragments now
Lie scatter'd, where the shapely column stood.
Her palaces are dust. In all her streets
The voice of singing and the sprightly chord
Are silent. Revelry, and dance, and show
Suffer a syncope and solemn pause;
While God performs upon the trembling stage
Of his own works his dreadful part alone.
How does the Earth receive him? — with what signs
Of gratulation and delight her king?
Pours she not all her choicest fruits abroad,
Her sweetest flowers, her aromatic gums,
Disclosing Paradise where'er he treads?
She quakes at his approach. Her hollow womb
Conceiving thunders through a thousand deeps
And fiery caverns, roars beneath his foot.
The hills move lightly, and the mountains smoke.
For he has touch'd them. From th' extremes part:
Of elevation down into the abyss
His wrath is busy, and his frown is felt.
The rocks fall headlong, and the valleys rise,
The rivers die into offensive pools,
And charg'd with putrid verdure, breathe a gross
And mortal nuisance into all the air.
What solid was, by transformation strange,
Grows fluid; and the fix'd and rooted earth,
Tormented into billows, heaves and swells,
Or with vortiginous and hideous whirl
Sucks down it's prey insatiable. Immense
The tumult and the overthrow, the pangs
And agonies of human and of brute
Multitudes, fugitive on ev'ry side,
And fugitive in vain. The sylvan scene
Migrates uplifted; and with all its soil
Alighting in far distant fields, finds out
A new possessor, and survives the change.
Ocean has caught the phrenzy, and, upwrought
To an enormous and o'erbearing height,
Not by a mighty wind, but by that voice,
Which winds and waves obey, invades the shore
Resistless. Never such a sudden flood,
Upridg'd so high, and sent on such a charge.
Possess'd an inland scene. Where now the throng
That press'd the beach, and, hasty to depart,
Look'd to the sea for safety? They are gone,
Gone with the reflux wave into the deep
A prince with half his people! Ancient tow'ns,
And roofs embattled high, the gloomy scenes,
Where beauty oft and letter'd worth consume
Life in the unproductive shades of death,
Fall prone: the pale inhabitants come forth,
And, happy in their unforeseen release
From all the rigours of restraint, enjoy
The terrors of the day, that sets them free.
Who then, that has thee, would not hold thee
Freedom! whom they that lose thee so regret,
That ev'n a judgment, making way for thee,
Seems in their eyes a mercy for thy sake?

Such evil Sin hath wrought; and such a flame
Kindled in Heav'n, that it burns down to Earth,
And in the furious inquest, that it makes
On God's behalf, lays waste his fairest works.

the very elements, though each be meant
 the minister of man, to serve his wants, conspire against him. With his breath he draws plague into his blood; and cannot use life's necessary means, but he must die.
 Storms rise t' o'erwhelm him: or if stormy winds rise not, the waters of the deep shall rise,
 and, needing none assistance of the storm,
 shall roll themselves ashore, and reach him there.
 The earth shall shake him out of all his holds,
 or make his house his grave: nor so content,
 shall counterfeit the motions of the flood,
 and drown him in her dry and dusty gulfs.
 What then! were they the wicked above all,
 and we the righteous, whose fast-anchor'd isle
 lov'd not, while theirs was rock'd, like a light
 the sport of ev'ry wave? No: none are clear, and none than we more guilty. But, where all stand chargeable with guilt, and to the shafts
 of wrath obnoxious, God may choose his mark:
 I may punish, if he please, the less, to warn
 the more malignant. If he spar'd not them, tremble and be amaz'd at thine escape,
 far guiltier England, lest he spare not thee!
 Happy the man, who sees a God employ'd
 in all the good and ill, that chequer life!
 Resolving all events with their effects and manifold results, into the will and arbitration wise of the Supreme.
 Did not his eye rule all things, and intend the least of our concerns (since from the least the greatest oft originate); could chance find place in his dominion, or dispose one lawless particle to thwart his plan;
 then God might be surpris'd, and unforeseen contingency might alarm him, and disturb the smooth and equal course of his affairs.
 This truth Philosophy, though eagle-ey'd
 in nature's tendencies, oft overlooks;
 And, having found his instrument, forgets,
 or disregards, or, more presumptuous still,
 denies the pow'r that wields it. God proclaims his hot displeasure against foolish men,
 That live an atheist life: involves the Heav'n's in tempests; quits his grasp upon the winds,
 And gives them all their fury; bids a plague
 kindle a fiery boil upon the skin,
 And putrefy the breath of blooming Health.
 He calls for Famine, and the meagre fiend
 blows mildew from between his shrivell'd lips,
 And taints the golden ear. He springs his mines,
 And desolates a nation at a blast.
 Forth steps the spruce philosopher, and tells
 Of homogeneal and discordant springs
 And principles: of causes, how they work
 By necessary laws their sure effects;
 Of action and re-action: he has found
 The source of the disease, that nature feels,
 And bids the world take heart and banish fear.
 Thou fool! will thy discov'ry of the cause
 Suspend th' effect, or heal it? Has not God
 Still wrought by means since first he made the world?
 And did he not of old employ his means,
 To drown it? What is his creation less
 Than a capacious reservoir of means
 Form'd for his use, and ready at his will?
 Go, dress thine eyes with eye-salve; ask of him,
 Or ask of whomsoever he has taught;
 And learn, though late, the genuine cause of all.

England, with all thy faults, I love thee still —
 My country! and, while yet a nook is left,
 Where English minds and manners may be found,
 Shall be constrain'd to love thee. Though thy clime
 Be fickle, and thy year most part deform'd
 With dripping rains, or wither'd by a frost,
 I would not yet exchange thy sullen skies,
 And fields without a flow'r, for warmer France
 With all her vines: nor for Ausonia's groves
 Of golden fruitage, and her myrtle bow'rs.
 To shake thy senate, and from heights sublime
 Of patriot eloquence to flash down fire
 Upon thy foes, was never meant my task:
 But I can feel thy fortunes, and partake
 Thy joys and sorrows, with as true a heart
 As any thund'rer there. And I can feel
 Thy follies too, and with a just disdain
 Frown at effeminates, whose very looks
 Reflect dishonour on the land I love.
 How, in the name of soldiership and sense, [smooth
 Should England prosper, when such things, as
 And tender as a girl, all essenc'd o'er
 With odours, and as profligate as sweet;
 Who sell their laurel for a myrtle wreath,
 And love when they should fight; when such as these Presume to lay their hand upon the ark
 Of her magnificent and awful cause?
 Time was when it was praise and boast enough
 In ev'ry clime, and travel where we might,
 That we were born her children. Praise enough
 To fill th' ambition of a private man,
 That Chatham's language was his mother's tongue,
 And Wolfe's great name compatriot with his own.
 Farewell those honours, and farewell with them
 The hope of such hereafter; they have fall'n
 Each in his field of glory; one in arms,
 And one in council — Wolfe upon the lap
 Of smiling Victory that moment won,
 And Chatham heart-sick of his country's shame!
 They made us many soldiers. Chatham, still Consulting England's happiness at home,
 Secur'd it by an unforgiving frown,
 If any wrong'd her. Wolfe, where'er he fought,
 Put so much of his heart into his act,
 That his example had a magnet's force,
 And all were swift to follow whom all lov'd.
 Those suns are set. O rise some other such!
 Or all that we have left is empty talk
 Of old achievements, and despair of new.

Now hoist the sail, and let the streamers float
 Upon the wanton breezes. Strew the deck
 With lavender, and sprinkle liquid sweets,
 That no rude savour maritime invade
 The nose of nice nobility! Breathe soft,
 Ye clarionets; and softer still, ye flutes;
 That winds and waters, lull'd by magic sounds,
 May bear us smoothly to the Gallic shore!
 True, we have lost an empire — let it pass.
 True; we may thank the perfidy of France,
 That pick'd the jewel out of England's crown,
 With all the cunning of an envious shrew.
 And let that pass — 't was but a trick of state!
 A brave man knows no malice, but at once
 Forgets in peace the injuries of war,
 And gives his direst foe a friend's embrace.
 And, sham'd as we have been, to th' very beard
 Brav'd and defied, and in our own sea prov'd
 Too weak for those decisive blows, that once
 Ensur'd us mast'ry there, we yet retain

Some small pre-eminence ; we justly boast
At least superior jockeyship, and claim
The honours of the turf as all our own !
Go then, well worthy of the praise ye seek,
And show the shame, ye might conceal at home,
In foreign eyes ! — be grooms and win the plate,
Where once your nobler fathers won a crown ! —
'T is gen'rous to communicate your skill
To those that need it. Folly is soon learn'd :
And under such preceptors who can fail !

There is a pleasure in poetic pains,
Which only poets know. The shifts and turns,
Th' expedients and inventions multiform,
To which the mind resorts, in chase of terms
Though apt, yet coy, and difficult to win —
'T arrest the fleeting images, that fill
The mirror of the mind, and hold them fast,
And force them sit, till he has pencill'd off
A faithful likeness of the forms he views ;
Then to dispose his copies with such art,
That each may find it's most propitious light,
And shine by situation, hardly less
Than by the labour and the skill it cost ;
Are occupations of the poet's mind
So pleasing, and that steal away the thought
With such address from themes of sad import,
'That, lost in his own musings, happy man !
He feels th' anxieties of life, denied
Their wonted entertainment, all retire.
Such joys has he that sings. But ah ! not such,
Or seldom such, the hearers of his song.
Fastidious, or else listless, or perhaps
Aware of nothing arduous in a task
They never undertook, they little note
His dangers or escapes, and haply find
Their least amusement where he found the most.
But is amusement all ? Studious of song,
And yet ambitious not to sing in vain,
I would not trifle merely, though the world
Be loudest in their praise, who do no more.
Yet what can satire, whether grave or gay ?
It may correct a foible, may chastise
The freaks of fashion, regulate the dress,
Retrench a sword-blade, or displace a patch ;
But where are it's sublimer trophies found ?
What vice has it subdued ? whose heart reclaim'd
By rigour, or whom laugh'd into reform ?
Alas ! Leviathan is not so tam'd :
Laugh'd at, he laughs again ; and stricken hard
Turns to the stroke his adamantine scales,
That fear no discipline of human hands.

The pulpit, therefore, (and I name it fill'd
With solemn awe, that bids me well beware
With what intent I touch that holy thing,) —
The pulpit, (when the sat'rist has at last,
Strutting and vap'ring in an empty school,
Spent all his force, and made no proselyte,) —
I say the pulpit (in the sober use
Of it's legitimate, peculiar pow'rs,) [stand,
Must stand acknowledg'd, while the world shall
The most important and effectual guard,
Support, and ornament, of virtue's cause.
There stands the messenger of truth : there stands
The legate of the skies ! — His theme divine,
His office sacred, his credentials clear.
By him the violated law speaks out
It's thunders, and by him, in strains as sweet
As angels use, the Gospel whispers peace.
He 'stablishes the strong, restores the weak,
Reclaims the wand'rer, binds the broken heart,

And, arm'd himself in panoply complete
Of heav'nly temper, furnishes with arms
Bright as his own, and trains, by ev'ry rule
Of holy discipline, to glorious war
The sacramental host of God's elect !
Are all such teachers ? — Would to Heaven all were !
But hark — the doctor's voice ! fast wedg'd between
Two empirics he stands, and with swollen cheeks
Inspires the news, his trumpet. Keener far
Than all invective is his bold harangue,
While through that public organ of report
He hails the clergy ; and, defying shame,
Announces to the world his own and theirs !
He teaches those to read, whom schools dismiss'd,
And colleges, untaught ; sells accent, tone,
And emphasis in score, and gives to pray'r
Th' adagio and andante it demands.

He grinds divinity of other days
Down into modern use ; transforms old print
To zig-zag manuscript, and cheats the eyes
Of gall'ry critics by a thousand arts.
Are there who purchase of the doctor's ware ?
O name it not in Gath ! — it cannot be,
That grave and learned clerks should need such aid.
He doubtless is in sport, and does but droll,
Assuming thus a rank unknown before —
Grand caterer and dry-nurse of the church !

I venerate the man, whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof,
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
To such I render more than mere respect,
Whose actions say, that they respect themselves.
But loose in morals, and in manners vain,
In conversation frivolous, in dress
Extreme, at once rapacious and profuse ;
Frequent in park with lady at his side,
Ambling and prattling scandal as he goes ;
But rare at home, and never at his books,
Or with his pen, save when he scrawls a card ;
Constant at routs, familiar with a round
Of ladyships, a stranger to the poor ;
Ambitious of preferment for its gold,
And well prepar'd, by ignorance and sloth,
By infidelity and love of world,
To make God's work a sinecure ; a slave
To his own pleasures and his patron's pride.
From such apostles, O ye mitred heads,
Preserve the church ! and lay not careless hands
On sculls, that cannot teach, and will not learn.

Would I describe a preacher, such as Paul,
Were he on Earth, would hear, approve, and own,
Paul should himself direct me. I would trace
His master-strokes, and draw from his design.
I would express him simple, grave, sincere ;
In doctrine uncorrupt ; in language plain,
And plain in manner ; decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture ; much impress'd
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
May feel it too ; affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men.
Behold the picture ! — Is it like ? — Like whom ?
The things that mount the rostrum with a skip,
And then skip down again ; pronounce a text ;
Cry — Hem ; and reading what they never wrote
Just fifteen minutes, huddle up their work,
And with a well-bred whisper close the scene !

In man or woman, but far most in man,

and most of all in man that ministers and serves the altar, in my soul I loathe
 all affectation. 'Tis my perfect scorn!
 Object of my implacable disgust.
 What! — will a man play tricks, will he indulge his silly fond conceit of his fair form,
 and just proportion, fashionable mien,
 and pretty face, in presence of his God?
 or will he seek to dazzle me with tropes,
 and with the diamond on his lily hand,
 and play his brilliant parts before my eyes,
 When I am hungry for the bread of life?
 He mocks his Maker, prostitutes and shames
 his noble office, and, instead of truth,
 displaying his own beauty, starves his flock.
 Therefore avaunt all attitude, and stare,
 and start theatric, practis'd at the glass!
 seek divine simplicity in him,
 Who handles things divine; and all besides, [mir'd
 though learn'd with labour, and though much admired by curious eyes and judgments ill-inform'd,
 to me is odious as the nasal twang
 heard at conventicle, where worthy men, misled by custom, strain celestial themes
 through the press'd nostril, spectacle-bestrid.
 Some decent in demeanour while they preach,
 that task perform'd, relapse into themselves;
 and having spoken wisely, at the close grow wanton, and give proof to ev'ry eye,
 Whoe'er was edified, themselves were not!
 Forth comes the pocket mirror. — First we stroke
 an eyebrow; next compose a straggling lock;
 then with an air most gracefully perform'd
 fall back into our seat, extend an arm,
 and lay it at its ease with gentle care,
 with handkerchief in hand depending low:
 The better hand more busy gives the nose its bergamot, or aids th' indebted eye
 with op'ra glass, to watch the moving scene,
 and recognize the slow retiring fair. —
 Now this is fulsome; and offends me more than in a churchman slovenly neglect and rustic coarseness would. A heav'nly mind may be indiff'rent to her house of clay,
 and slight the hovel as beneath her care;
 but how a body so fantastic, trim,
 and quaint, in its deportment and attire,
 can lodge a heav'nly mind — demands a doubt.
 He, that negotiates between God and man,
 as God's ambassador, the grand concerns of judgment and of mercy, should beware of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful to court a grin, when you should woo a soul;
 to break a jest, when pity would inspire
 pathetic exhortation; and t' address
 the skittish fancy with facetious tales,
 when sent with God's commission to the heart!
 So did not Paul. Direct me to a quip or merry turn in all he ever wrote,
 and I consent you take it for your text,
 your only one, till sides and benches fail.
 No: he was serious in a serious cause,
 and understood too well the weighty terms,
 that he had tak'n in charge. He would not stoop to conquer those by jocular exploits,
 whom truth and soberness assail'd in vain.
 O Popular Applause! what heart of man
 is proof against thy sweet seducing charms?
 The wisest and the best feel urgent need
 of all their censure in thy gentlest gales;

But swell'd into a gust — who then, alas!
 With all his canvass set, and inexpert,
 And therefore heedless, can withstand thy pow'r?
 Praise from the rivell'd lips of toothless bald
 Decrepitude, and in the looks of lean
 And craving Poverty, and in the bow
 Respectful of the smutch'd artificer,
 Is oft too welcome, and may much disturb
 The bias of the purpose. How much more,
 Pour'd forth by beauty splendid and polite,
 In language soft as Adoration breathes?
 Ah spare your idol! think him human still.
 Charms he may have, but he has frailties too!
 Dote not too much, nor spoil what ye admire.
 All truth is from the sempiternal source
 Of light divine. But Egypt, Greece, and Rome,
 Drew from the stream below. More favour'd we Drink, when we choose it, at the fountain head.
 To them it flow'd much mingled and defil'd
 With hurtful error, prejudice, and dreams
 Illusive of philosophy, so call'd,
 But falsely. Sages after sages strove
 In vain to filter off a crystal draught
 Pure from the lees, which often more enhanc'd
 The thirst than slak'd it, and not seldom bred
 Intoxication and delirium wild.
 In vain they push'd inquiry to the birth [man?
 And spring-time of the world; ask'd, Whence is
 Why form'd at all? and wherefore as he is?
 Where must he find his Maker? with what rites
 Adore him? Will he hear, accept, and bless?
 Or does he sit regardless of his works?
 Has man within him an immortal seed?
 Or does the tomb take all? If he survive
 His ashes, where? and in what weal or woe?
 Knots worthy of solution, which alone
 A Deity could solve. Their answers, vague
 And all at random, fabulous and dark,
 Left them as dark themselves. Their rules of life,
 Defective and unsanction'd, prov'd too weak,
 To bind the roving appetite, and lead
 Blind nature to a God not yet reveal'd.
 'Tis Revelation satisfies all doubts,
 Explains all mysteries, except her own,
 And so illuminates the path of life,
 That fools discover it, and stray no more.
 Now tell me, dignified and sapient sir,
 My man of morals, nurtur'd in the shades
 Of Academus — is this false or true?
 Is Christ the abler teacher, or the schools?
 If Christ, then why resort at ev'ry turn
 To Athens or to Rome, for wisdom short
 Of man's occasions, when in him reside
 Grace, knowledge, comfort — an unfathom'd store?
 How oft, when Paul has serv'd us with a text,
 Has Epictetus, Plato, Tully, preach'd!
 Men that, if now alive, would sit content
 And humble learners of a Saviour's worth,
 Preach it who might. Such was their love of truth.
 Their thirst of knowledge, and their candour too!
 And thus it is — The pastor, either vain
 By nature, or by flatt'ry made so, taught
 To gaze at his own splendour, and t' exalt
 Absurdly, not his office, but himself;
 Or unenlighten'd, and too proud to learn;
 Or vicious, and not therefore apt to teach;
 Perverting often by the stress of lewd
 And loose example, whom he should instruct;
 Exposes, and holds up to broad disgrace,
 The noblest function, and discredits much

The brightest truths, that man has ever seen.
 For ghostly counsel; if it either fall
 Below the exigence, or be not back'd
 With show of love, at least with hopeful proof
 Of some sincerity on the giver's part;
 Or be dishonour'd in th' exterior form
 And mode of it's conveyance by such tricks,
 As move derision, or by foppish airs
 And histrionic mumm'ry, that let down
 The pulpit to the level of the stage;
 Drops from the lips a disregarded thing.
 The weak perhaps are mov'd, but are not taught,
 While prejudice in men of stronger minds
 Takes deeper root, confirm'd by what they see.
 A relaxation of religion's hold
 Upon the roving and untutor'd heart
 Soon follows, and, the curb of conscience snapp'd,
 The laity run wild. — But do they now?
 Note their extravagance, and be convinc'd.

As nations, ignorant of God, contrive
 A wooden one; so we, no longer taught
 By monitors, that mother-church supplies,
 Now make our own. Posterity will ask
 (If e'er posterity see verse of mine)
 Some fifty or a hundred lustrums hence,
 What was a monitor in George's days?
 My very gentle reader, yet unborn,
 Of whom I needs must augur better things,
 Since Heav'n would sure grow weary of a world
 Productive only of a race like ours,
 A monitor is wood — plank shaven thin.
 We wear it at our backs. There, closely brac'd
 And neatly fitted, it compresses hard
 The prominent and most unsightly bones,
 And binds the shoulders flat. We prove it's use
 Sov'reign and most effectual to secure
 A form, not now gymnastic as of yore,
 From rickets and distortion, else our lot.
 But thus admonish'd, we can walk erect —
 One proof at least of manhood! while the friend
 Sticks close, a Mentor worthy of his charge.
 Our habits, costlier than Lucullus wore,
 And by caprice as multiplied as his,
 Just please us while the fashion is at full,
 But change with ev'ry moon. The sycophant,
 Who waits to dress us, arbitrates their date;
 Surveys his fair reversion with keen eye;
 Finds one ill made, another obsolete;
 This fits not nicely, that is ill-conceiv'd;
 And, making prize of all that he condemns,
 With our expenditure defrays his own.
 Variety 's the very spice of life,
 That gives it all it's flavour. We have run
 Through ev'ry change, that Fancy, at the loom
 Exhausted, has had genius to supply;
 And, studious of mutation still, discard
 A real elegance, a little us'd,
 For monstrous novelty and strange disguise.
 We sacrifice to dress, till household joys
 And comforts cease. Dress drains our cellar dry,
 And keeps our larder lean; puts out our fires;
 And introduces hunger, frost, and woe,
 Where peace and hospitality might reign.
 What man that lives, and that knows how to live,
 Would fail t' exhibit at the public shows
 A form as splendid as the proudest there,
 Though appetite raise outcries at the cost?
 A man o' the town dines late, but soon enough,
 With reasonable forecast and dispatch,
 T' ensure a side-box station at half-price.

You think, perhaps, so delicate his dress,
 His daily fare as delicate. Alas!
 He picks clean teeth, and, busy as he seems
 With an old tavern quill, is hungry yet!
 The rout is Folly's circle, which she draws
 With magic wand. So potent is the spell,
 That none, decoy'd into that fatal ring,
 Unless by Heav'n's peculiar grace, escape.
 There we grow early gray, but never wise;
 There form connections, but acquire no friend;
 Solicit pleasure, hopeless of success;
 Waste youth in occupations only fit
 For second childhood, and devote old age
 To sports, which only childhood could excuse.
 There they are happiest, who dissemble best
 Their weariness; and they the most polite,
 Who squander time and treasure with a smile,
 Though at their own destruction. She that ask
 Her dear five hundred friends, contemns them all,
 And hates their coming. They (what can they less?)
 Make just reprisals; and with cringe and shrug,
 And bow obsequious, hide their hate of her.
 All catch the phrenzy, downward from her grace,
 Whose flambeaux flash against the morning skies,
 And gild our chamber ceilings as they pass,
 To her, who, frugal only that her thrift
 May feed excesses she can ill afford,
 Is hackney'd home unlackey'd; who, in haste
 Alighting, turns the key in her own door,
 And, at the watchman's lantern borrow'ing light,
 Finds a cold bed her only comfort left.
 Wives beggar husbands, husbands starve their wives,
 On Fortune's velvet altar off'ring up
 Their last poor pittance — Fortune, most severe
 Of goddesses yet known, and costlier far
 Than all, that held their routs in Juno's Hall —
 So fare we in this prison-house the World;
 And 't is a fearful spectacle to see
 So many maniacs dancing in their chains.
 They gaze upon the links, that hold them fast,
 With eyes of anguish, execrate their lot,
 Then shake them in despair, and dance again!

Now basket up the family of plagues,
 That waste our vitals; peculation, sale
 Of honour, perjury, corruption, frauds
 By forgery, by subterfuge of law,
 By tricks and lies as num'rous and as keen
 As the necessities their authors feel;
 Then cast them, closely bundled, ev'ry brat
 At the right door. Profusion is the sire.
 Profusion, unrestrain'd with all that 's base
 In character, has litter'd all the land,
 And bred, within the mem'ry of no few,
 A priesthood, such as Baal's was of old,
 A people, such as never was till now.
 It is a hungry vice: it eats up all,
 That gives society it's beauty, strength,
 Convenience, and security, and use:
 Makes men mere vermin, worthy to be trapp'd
 And gibbeted, as fast as catchpole claws
 Can seize the slipp'ry prey: unties the knot
 Of union, and converts the sacred band,
 That holds mankind together, to a scourge.
 Profusion, deluging a state with lusts
 Of grossest nature and of worst effects,
 Prepares it for its ruin: hardens, blinds,
 And warps, the consciences of public men,
 Till they can laugh at Virtue; mock the fools,
 That trust them; and in th' end disclose a face,
 That would have shock'd Credulity herself,

Unmask'd, vouchsafing this their sole excuse —
 Since all alike are selfish, why not they?
 This does Profusion, and th' accursed cause
 Of such deep mischief has itself a cause.

In colleges and halls in ancient days,
 When learning, virtue, piety, and truth,
 Were precious, and inculcated with care,
 There dwelt a sage call'd Discipline. His head,
 Not yet by time completely silver'd o'er,
 Bespoke him past the bounds of freakish youth,
 But strong for service still, and unimpair'd.
 His eye was meek and gentle, and a smile
 Play'd on his lips; and in his speech was heard
 Paternal sweetness, dignity, and love.
 The occupation dearest to his heart
 Was to encourage goodness. He would stroke
 The head of modest and ingenuous worth,
 That blush'd at it's own praise; and press the youth
 Close to his side, that pleas'd him. Learning grew
 Beneath his care a thriving vig'rous plant;
 The mind was well inform'd, the passions held
 Subordinate, and diligence was choice.
 If e'er it chanc'd, as sometimes chance it must,
 That one among so many overleap'd
 The limits of controul, his gentle eye
 Grew stern, and darted a severe rebuke:
 His frown was full of terrour, and his voice
 Shock the delinquent with such fits of awe,
 As left him not, till penitence had won
 Lost favour back again, and clos'd the breach.
 But Discipline, a faithful servant long,
 Declin'd at length into the vale of years:
 A palsy struck his arm; his sparkling eye
 Was quench'd in rheums of age; his voice, unstrung,
 Grew tremulous, and mov'd derision more
 Than rev'rence in perverse rebellious youth.
 To colleges and halls neglected much
 Their good old friend; and Discipline at length,
 O'erlook'd and unemploy'd, fell sick and died.
 Then Study languish'd, Emulation slept,
 And Virtue fled. The schools became a scene
 Of solemn farce, where Ignorance in stilts,
 His cap well lin'd with logic not his own,
 With parrot tongue perform'd the scholar's part,
 Proceeding soon a graduated dunce.
 Then Compromise had place, and Scrutiny
 Became stone blind; Precedence went in truck,
 And he was competent whose purse was so.
 A dissolution of all bonds ensued;
 The curbs invented for the mulish mouth
 Of headstrong youth were broken; bars and bolts
 Grew rusty by disuse; and massy gates
 Forgot their office, op'ning with a touch;
 Till gowns at length are found mere masquerade;
 The tassel'd cap and the spruce band a jest,
 A mock'ry of the world! What need of these
 For gamesters, jockeys, brothellers impure,
 Spendthrifts, and booted sportsmen, oft'ner seen
 With belted waist and pointers at their heels,
 Than in the bounds of duty? What was learn'd,
 If aught was learn'd in childhood, is forgot;
 And such expense, as pinches parents blue,
 And mortifies the lib'ral hand of love,
 Is squander'd in pursuit of idle sports
 And vicious pleasures; buys the boy a name,
 That sits a stigma on his father's house,
 And cleaves through life inseparably close
 To him that wears it. What can after-games
 Of riper joys, and commerce with the world,
 The lewd vain world, that must receive him soon,

Add to such erudition, thus acquir'd,
 Where science and where virtue are profess'd?
 They may confirm his habits, rivet fast
 His folly; but to spoil him is a task,
 That bids defiance to th' united pow'rs
 Of fashion, dissipation, taverns, stews.
 Now blame we most the nurslings or the nurse?
 The children crook'd, and twisted, and deform'd,
 Through want of care; or her, whose winking eye
 And slumb'ring oscitancy mars the brood?
 The nurse, no doubt. Regardless of her charge,
 She needs herself correction; needs to learn,
 That it is dang'rous sporting with the world,
 With things so sacred as a nation's trust,
 The nurture of her youth, her dearest pledge.

All are not such. I had a brother once —
 Peace to the mem'ry of a man of worth,
 A man of letters, and of manners too!
 Of manners sweet as Virtue always wears,
 When gay Good-nature dresses her in smiles.
 He grac'd a college*, in which order yet
 Was sacred; and was honour'd, lov'd, and wept,
 By more than one, themselves conspicuous there.
 Some minds are temper'd happily, and mix'd
 With such ingredients of good sense, and taste
 Of what is excellent in man, they thirst
 With such a zeal to be what they approve,
 That no restraints can circumscribe them more
 Than they themselves by choice, for wisdom's sake.
 Nor can example hurt them: what they see
 Of vice in others but enhancing more
 The charms of virtue in their just esteem.
 If such escape contagion, and emerge
 Pure from so foul a pool to shine abroad,
 And give the world their talents and themselves,
 Small thanks to those, whose negligence or sloth
 Expos'd their inexperience to the snare,
 And left them to an undirected choice.

See then the quiver broken and decay'd,
 In which are kept our arrows! Rusting there
 In wild disorder, and unfit for use,
 What wonder, if, discharg'd into the world,
 They shame their shooters with a random flight,
 Their points obtuse, and feathers drunk with wine?
 Well may the church wage unsuccessful war
 With such artill'ry arm'd. Vice parries wide
 Th' undreaded volley with a sword of straw,
 And stands an impudent and fearless mark.

Have we not track'd the felon home, and found
 His birth-place and his dam? The country mourns,
 Mourns because ev'ry plague, that can infest
 Society, and that saps and worms the base
 Of th' edifice, that policy has rais'd,
 Swarms in all quarters: meets the eye, the ear,
 And suffocates the breath at ev'ry turn.
 Profusion breeds them; and the cause itself
 Of that calamitous mischief has been found:
 Found too where most offensive, in the skirts
 Of the rob'd pedagogue! Else let th' arraign'd
 Stand up unconscious, and refute the charge.
 So when the Jewish leader stretch'd his arm,
 And wav'd his rod divine, a race obscene,
 Spawn'd in the muddy beds of Nile, came forth,
 Polluting Egypt: gardens, fields, and plains,
 Were cover'd with the pest; the streets were fill'd;
 The croaking nuisance lurk'd in every nook;
 Nor palaces, nor even chambers, 'scap'd;
 And the land stank — so num'rous was the fry.

Book III.

THE GARDEN.

Argument.

Self-recollection and reproof. Address to domestic happiness. Some account of myself. The vanity of many of their pursuits, who are reputed wise. Justification of my censures. Divine illumination necessary to the most expert philosopher. The question, What is truth? answered by other questions. Domestic happiness addressed again. Few lovers of the country. My tame hare. Occupations of a retired gentleman in his garden. Pruning. Framing. Green-house. Sowing of flower-seeds. The country preferable to the town even in the winter. Reasons why it is deserted at that season. Ruinous effects of gaming, and of expensive improvement. Book concludes with an apostrophe to the metropolis.

As one, who long in thickets and in brakes
Entangled winds now this way and now that
His devious course uncertain, seeking home;
Or, having long in miry ways been foil'd
And sore discomfited, from slough to slough
Plunging and half-despairing of escape;
If chance at length he find a green sward smooth
And faithful to the foot, his spirits rise,
He cherups brisk his ear-erecting steed,
And winds his way with pleasure and with ease;
So I, designing other themes, and call'd
T' adorn the Sofa with eulogium due,
To tell it's slumbers, and to paint it's dreams,
Have rambled wide. In country, city, seat
Of academic fame (howe'er deserv'd),
Long held, and scarcely disengag'd at last.
But now with pleasant pace a cleaner road
I mean to tread. I feel myself at large,
Courageous, and refresh'd for future toil,
If toil await me, or if dangers new.

Since pulpits fail, and sounding boards reflect
Most part an empty ineffectual sound,
What chance that I, to fame so little known,
Nor conversant with men or manners much,
Should speak to purpose, or with better hope
Crack the satiric thong? 'T were wiser far
For me, enamour'd of sequester'd scenes,
And charm'd with rural beauty, to repose,
Where chance may throw me, beneath elm or vine,
My languid limbs, when summer sears the plains;
Or, when rough winter rages, on the soft
And shelter'd Sofa, while the nitrous air
Feeds a blue flame, and makes a cheerful hearth;
There, undisturb'd by folly, and appris'd
How great the danger of disturbing her,
To muse in silence, or at least confine
Remarks, that gall so many, to the few
My partners in retreat. Disgust conceal'd
Is oft-times proof of wisdom, when the fault
Is obstinate, and cure beyond our reach.

Domestic Happiness, thou only bliss
Of Paradise, that hast surviv'd the fall!
Though few now taste thee unimpair'd and pure,
Or tasting long enjoy thee! too infirm,
Or too incautious, to preserve thy sweets
Unmix'd with drops of bitter, which neglect

Or temper sheds into thy crystal cup;
Thou art the nurse of Virtue, in thine arms
She smiles, appearing, as in truth she is,
Heav'n-born, and destin'd to the skies again.
Thou art not known where Pleasure is ador'd,
That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist
And wand'ring eyes, still leaning on the arm
Of Novelty, her fickle, frail support;
For thou art meek and constant, hating change,
And finding in the calm of truth-tried love
Joys, that her stormy raptures never yield.
Forsoaking thee, what shipwreck have we made
Of honour, dignity, and fair renown!
Till prostitution elbows us aside
In all our crowded streets; and senates seem
Conven'd for purposes of empire less,
Than to release th' adul'tress from her bond.
Th' adul'tress! what a theme for angry verse!
What provocation to th' indignant heart,
That feels for injur'd love! but I disdain
The nauseous task, to paint her as she is,
Cruel, abandon'd, glorying in her shame!
No: — let her pass, and, chariotted along
In guilty splendour, shake the public ways;
The frequency of crimes has wash'd them white,
And verse of mine shall never brand the wretch,
Whom matrons now of character unmarc'd,
And chaste themselves, are not ashamed to own.
Virtue and vice had bound'ries in old time,
Not to be pass'd: and she, that had renounc'd
Her sex's honour, was renounc'd herself
By all that priz'd it; not for prud'ry's sake,
But dignity's, resentful of the wrong.
'T was hard perhaps on here and there a wail,
Desirous to return, and not receiv'd:
But was a wholesome rigour in the main,
And taught th' unblemish'd to preserve with care
That purity, whose loss was loss of all.
Men too were nice in honour in those days,
And judg'd offenders well. Then he that stoop'd
And pocketted a prize by fraud obtain'd,
Was mark'd and shunn'd as odious. He that sold
His country, or was slack when she requir'd
His ev'ry nerve in action and at stretch,
Paid with the blood, that he had basely spar'd,
The price of his default. But now — yes, now
We are become so candid and so fair,
So lib'ral in construction, and so rich
In Christian charity, (good-natur'd age!)
That they are safe, sinners of either sex, [brod,
Transgress what laws they may. Well-dress'd, well-
Well-equipag'd, is ticket good enough,
To pass us readily through ev'ry door.
Hypocrisy, detest her as we may,
(And no man's hatred ever wrong'd her yet)
May claim this merit still — that she admits
The worth of what she mimics with such care,
And thus gives virtue indirect applause;
But she has burnt her mask not needed here,
Where vice has such allowance, that her shifts
And specious semblances have lost their use.
I was a stricken deer, that left the herd
Long since. With many an arrow deep infix'd
My panting side was charg'd, when I withdrew,
To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
There was I found by one, who had himself
Been hurt by th' archers. In his side he bore,
And in his hands and feet, the cruel scars.
With gentle force soliciting the darts,
He drew them forth, and heal'd, and bade me live.

Since then, with few associates, in remote
And silent woods I wander, far from those
My former partners of the peopled scene ;
With few associates, and not wishing more.
Here much I ruminate, as much I may,
With other views of men and manners now
Than once, and others of a life to come.

See that all are wand'ers, gone astray
Each in his own delusions ; they are lost
In chase of fancied happiness, still woo'd
And never won. Dream after dream ensues ;
And still they dream, that they shall still succeed,
And still are disappointed. Rings the world
With the vain stir. I sum up half mankind,
And add two-thirds of the remaining half,
And find the total of their hopes and fears
Dreams, empty dreams. The million flit as gay,
As if created only like the fly,
That spreads his motley wings in th' eye of noon,
To sport their season, and be seen no more.
The rest are sober dreamers, grave and wise,
And pregnant with discoveries new and rare.
Some write a narrative of wars, and feats
Of heroes little known ; and call the rant
A history : describe the man, of whom
His own coëvals took but little note,
And paint his person, character, and views,
As they had known him from his mother's womb.
They disentangle from the puzzled skein,
In which obscurity has wrapp'd them up,
The threads of politic and shrewd design,
That ran through all his purposes, and charge
His mind with meanings that he never had,
Or, having, kept conceal'd. Some drill and bore
The solid earth, and from the strata there
Extract a register, by which we learn,
That he who made it, and reveal'd it's date
To Moses, was mistaken in it's age.
Some, more acute, and more industrious still,
Contrive creation ; travel nature up
To the sharp peak of her sublimest height,
And tell us whence the stars ; why some are fix'd,
And planetary some ; what gave them first
Rotation, from what fountain flow'd their light.
Great contest follows, and much learned dust
Involves the combatants ; each claiming truth,
And truth disclaiming both. And thus they spend
The little wick of life's poor shallow lamp
In playing tricks with nature, giving laws
To distant worlds, and trifling in their own.
Is 't not a pity now, that tickling rheums
Should ever tease the lungs, and blear the sight
Of oracles like these ? Great pity too,
That having wielded th' elements, and built
A thousand systems, each in his own way,
They should go out in fume, and be forgot !
Ah ! what is life thus spent ? and what are they
But frantic, who thus spend it ? all for smoke —
Eternity for bubbles proves at last
A senseless bargain. When I see such games
Play'd by the creatures of a pow'r, who swears
That he will judge the Earth, and call the fool
To a sharp reck'ning, that has liv'd in vain ;
And when I weigh this seeming wisdom well,
And prove it in the infallible result
So hollow and so false — I feel my heart
Dissolve in pity, and account the learn'd,
If this be learning, most of all deceiv'd.
Great crimes alarm the conscience, but it sleeps,
While thoughtful man is plausibly amus'd.

Defend me therefore, common sense, say I,
From reveries so airy, from the toil
Of dropping buckets into empty wells,
And growing old in drawing nothing up !

" 'T were well," says one sage erudite, profound,
Terribly arch'd, and aquiline his nose,
And overbuilt with most impending brows,
" 'T were well, could you permit the World to live
As the World pleases : what's the World to you ?"
Much. I was born of woman, and drew milk
As sweet as charity from human breasts.
I think, articulate, I laugh and weep,
And exercise all functions of a man.
How then should I and any man that live
Be strangers to each other ? Pierce my vein,
Take of the crimson stream meand'ring there,
And catechise it well : apply thy glass,
Search it, and prove now if it be not blood
Congenial with thine own ; and, if it be,
What edge of subtlety canst thou suppose
Keen enough, wise and skilful as thou art,
To cut the link of brotherhood, by which
One common Maker bound me to the kind ?
True, I am no proficient, I confess,
In arts like yours. I cannot call the swift
And perilous lightnings from the angry clouds,
And bid them hide themselves in earth beneath ;
I cannot analyse the air, nor catch
The parallax of yonder lum'ous point,
That seems half quench'd in the immense abyss :
Such pow'rs I boast not — neither can I rest
A silent witness of the headlong rage,
Or heedless folly, by which thousands die,
Bone of my bone, and kindred souls to mine.

God never meant, that man should scale the Heav'ns

By strides of human wisdom, in his works,
Though wondrous : he commands us in his word
To seek him rather, where his mercy shines.
The mind, indeed, enlighten'd from above,
Views him in all ; ascribes to the grand cause
The grand effect ; acknowledges with joy
His manner, and with rapture tastes his style.
But never yet did philosophic tube,
That brings the planets home into the eye
Of Observation, and discovers, else
Not visible, his family of worlds,
Discover him, that rules them ; such a veil
Hangs over mortal eyes, blind from the birth,
And dark in things divine. Full often too
Our wayward intellect, the more we learn
Of nature, overlooks her author more ;
From instrumental causes proud to draw
Conclusions retrograde, and mad mistake.
But if his word once teach us, shoot a ray
Through all the heart's dark chambers, and reveal
Truths undiscern'd but by that holy light,
Then all is plain. Philosophy, baptis'd
In the pure fountain of eternal love,
Has eyes indeed ; and viewing all she sees
As meant to indicate a God to man,
Gives him his praise, and forfeits not her own.
Learning has borne such fruit in other days
On all her branches : piety has found
Friends in the friends of science, and true pray'r
Has flow'd from lips wet with Castalian dew.
Such was thy wisdom, Newton, childlike sage !
Sagacious reader of the works of God,
And in his word sagacious. Such too thine,
Milton, whose genius had angelic wings,

And fed on manna ! And such thine, in whom
Our British Themis gloried with just cause,
Immortal Hale ! for deep discernment prais'd,
And sound integrity, not more than fam'd
For sanctity of manners undefil'd.

All flesh is grass, and all it's glory fades
Like the fair flow'r dishevell'd in the wind ;
Riches have wings, and grandeur is a dream.
The man we celebrate must find a tomb,
And we that worship him ignoble graves.
Nothing is proof against the gen'ral curse
Of vanity, that seizes all below.
The only amaranthine flow'r on Earth
Is virtue ; th' only lasting treasure, truth.
But what is truth ? 'T was Pilate's question put
To Truth itself, that deign'd him no reply.
And wherefore ? will not God impart his light
To them that ask it ? — Freely — 't is his joy,
His glory, and his nature to impart.
But to the proud, uncandid, insincere,
Or negligent inquirer, not a spark.
What 's that, which brings contempt upon a book,
And him who writes it, though the style be neat,
The method clear, and argument exact ?
That makes a minister in holy things
The joy of many, and the dread of more ;
His name a theme for praise and for reproach ? —
That, while it gives us worth in God's account,
Depreciates and undoes us in our own ?
What pearl is it, that rich men cannot buy,
That learning is too proud to gather up ;
But which the poor, and the despis'd of all,
Seek and obtain, and often find unsought ?
Tell me — and I will tell thee what is truth.

O friendly to the best pursuits of man,
Friendly to thought, to virtue, and to peace,
Domestic life in rural pleasure past !
Few know thy value, and few taste thy sweets ;
Though many boast thy favours, and affect
To understand and choose thee for their own.
But foolish man foregoes his proper bliss,
Ev'n as his first progenitor, and quits,
Though plac'd in Paradise, (for Earth has still Some traces of her youthful beauty left,)
Substantial happiness for transient joy.
Scenes form'd for contemplation, and to nurse
The growing seeds of wisdom ; that suggest,
By ev'ry pleasing image they present,
Reflections such as meliorate the heart,
Compose the passions, and exalt the mind ;
Scenes such as these, 't is his supreme delight
To fill with riot, and defile with blood.
Should some contagion, kind to the poor brutes
We persecute, annihilate the tribes,
That draw the sportsman over hill and dale
Fearless and rapt away from all his cares ;
Should never game-fowl hatch her eggs again,
Nor baited hook deceive the fish's eye ;
Could pageantry and dance, and feast and song,
Be quell'd in all our summer-months' retreats ;
How many self-deluded nymphs and swains,
Who dream they have a taste for fields and groves,
Would find them hideous nurs'ries of the spleen,
And crowd the roads, impatient for the town !
They love the country, and none else, who seek
For their own sake it's silence, and it's shade,
Delights which who would leave, that has a heart
Susceptible of pity, or a mind
Cultur'd and capable of sober thought,
For all the savage din of the swift pack,

And clamours of the field ? — Detested sport,
That owes it's pleasures to another's pain ;
That feeds upon the sobs and dying shrieks
Of harmless nature, dumb but yet endued
With eloquence, that agonies inspire,
Of silent tears and heart-distending sighs ?
Vain tears, alas ! and sighs that never find
A corresponding tone in jovial souls !
Well — one at least is safe. One shelter'd here
Has never heard the sanguinary yell
Of cruel man, exulting in her woes.
Innocent partner of my peaceful home,
Whom ten long years' experience of my care
Has made at last familiar ; she has lost
Much of her vigilant instinctive dread,
Not needful here, beneath a roof like mine.
Yes — thou may'st eat thy bread, and lick the hand
That feeds thee ; thou may'st frolic on the floor
At ev'ning, and at night retire secure
To thy straw couch, and slumber unalarm'd ;
For I have gain'd thy confidence, have pledg'd
All that is human in me, to protect
Thine unsuspecting gratitude and love.
If I survive thee, I will dig thy grave ;
And, when I place thee in it, sighing say,
I knew at least one here that had a friend.

How various his employments, whom the world
Calls idle ; and who justly in return
Esteems that busy world an idler too !
Friends, books, a garden, and perhaps his pen,
Delightful industry enjoy'd at home,
And Nature in her cultivated trim
Dress'd to his taste, inviting him abroad —
Can he want occupation, who has these ?
Will he be idle, who has much to enjoy ?
Me therefore studious of laborious ease,
Not slothful, happy to deceive the time,
Not waste it, and aware that human life
Is but a loan to be repaid with use,
When He shall call his debtors to account,
From whom are all our blessings, business find
Ev'n here ! while sedulous I seek to improve,
At least neglect not, or leave unemploy'd,
The mind he gave me ; driving it, though slack
Too oft, and much impeded in its work
By causes not to be divulg'd in vain,
To it's just point — the service of mankind.
He, that attends to his interior self,
That has a heart, and keeps it ; has a mind
That hungers, and supplies it ; and who seeks
A social, not a dissipated life,
Has business ; feels himself engag'd to achieve
No unimportant, though a silent, task.
A life all turbulence and noise may seem,
To him that leads it, wise, and to be prais'd ;
But wisdom is a pearl with most success
Sought in still water, and beneath clear skies :
He that is ever occupied in storms,
Or dives not for it, or brings up instead,
Vainly industrious, a disgraceful prize.

The morning finds the self-sequester'd man
Fresh for his task, intend what task he may.
Whether inclement seasons recommend
His warm but simple home, where he enjoys
With her, who shares his pleasures and his heart,
Sweet converse, sipping calm the fragrant lymph
Which neatly she prepares ; then to his book
Well chosen, and not sullenly perus'd
In selfish silence, but imparted oft,
As aught occurs, that she may smile to hear,

turn to nourishment, digested well.
 if the garden with it's many cares,
 I well repaid, demand him, he attends the welcome call, conscious how much the hand of lubbard Labour needs his watchful eye,
 he loit'ring lazily, if not o'erseen,
 is misapplying his unskilful strength.
 or does he govern only or direct,
 but much performs himself. No works, indeed,
 that ask robust, tough sinews, bred to toil,
 or vile employ; but such as may amuse,
 not tire, demanding rather skill than force.
 Proud of his well-spread walls, he views his trees,
 that meet, no barren interval between,
 with pleasure more than ev'n their fruits afford;
 which, save himself who trains them, none can feel.
 these therefore are his own peculiar charge;
 no meaner hand may discipline the shoots,
 none but his steel approach them. What is weak,
 distemper'd, or has lost prolific pow'rs,
 impair'd by age, his unrelenting hand dooms to the knife: nor does he spare the soft and succulent, that feeds it's giant growth, but barren, at th' expense of neighb'ring twigs less ostentatious, and yet studded thick with hopeful gems. The rest, no portion left that may disgrace his art, or disappoint large expectation, he disposes neat
 at measur'd distances, that air and sun,
 admitted freely, may afford their aid,
 and ventilate and warm the swelling buds.
 Hence Summer has her riches, Autumn hence,
 and hence ev'n Winter fills his wither'd hand
 with blushing fruits, and plenty not his own.
 Fair recompense of labour well bestow'd,
 and wise precaution; which a clime so rude makes needful still, whose Spring is but the child of churlish Winter, in her froward moods
 discov'ring much the temper of her sire.
 For oft, as if in her the stream of mild
 maternal nature had revers'd it's course,
 she brings her infants forth with many smiles;
 but once deliver'd kills them with a frown.
 He therefore, timely warn'd himself, supplies
 her want of care, screening and keeping warm
 the plenteous bloom, that no rough blast may sweep his garlands from the boughs. Again, as oft as the Sun peeps and vernal airs breathe mild,
 the fence withdrawn, he gives them ev'ry beam,
 and spreads his hopes before the blaze of day.
 To raise the prickly and green-coated gourd,
 so grateful to the palate, and when rare
 so coveted, else base and disesteem'd —
 food for the vulgar merely — is an art
 that toiling ages have but just matur'd,
 and at this moment unassay'd in song.
 Yet goats have had, and frogs and mice, long since,
 their eulogy; those sang the Mantuan bard,
 and these the Grecian, in ennobling strains;
 and in thy numbers, Phillips, shines for aye
 the solitary shilling. Pardon then,
 ye sage dispensers of poetic fame,
 th' ambition of one meaner far, whose pow'rs
 presuming an attempt not less sublime,
 pant for the praise of dressing to the taste
 of critic appetite, no sordid fare,
 a cucumber, while costly yet and scarce.
 The stable yields a stercoraceous heap,
 impregnated with quick fermenting salts,
 and potent to resist the freezing blast;

For, ere the beech and elm have cast their leaf
 Deciduous, when now November dark
 Checks vegetation in the torpid plant
 Expos'd to his cold breath, the task begins.
 Warily therefore, and with prudent heed,
 He seeks a favour'd spot; that where he builds
 Th' agglomerated pile his frame may front
 The Sun's meridian disk, and at the back
 Enjoy close shelter, wall, or reeds, or hedge
 Impervious to the wind. First he bids spread
 Dry fern or litter'd hay, that may imbibe
 Th' ascending damps; then leisurely impose,
 And lightly, shaking it with agile hand
 From the full fork, the saturated straw.
 What longest binds the closest forms secure
 The shapely side, that as it rises takes,
 By just degrees, an overhanging breadth,
 Shelt'ring the base with its projected eaves;
 Th' uplifted frame compact at ev'ry joint,
 And overlaid with clear translucent glass,
 He settles next upon the sloping mount,
 Whose sharp declivity shoots off secure
 From the dash'd pane the deluge as it falls.
 He shuts it close, and the first labour ends.
 Thrice must the voluble and restless Earth
 Spin round upon her axle, ere the warmth,
 Slow gath'ring in the midst, through the square mass
 Diffus'd, attain the surface: when, behold!
 A pestilent and most corrosive steam,
 Like a gross fog Boeotian, rising fast,
 And fast condens'd upon the dewy sash,
 Asks egress; which obtain'd, the overcharg'd
 And drench'd conservatory breathes abroad,
 In volumes wheeling slow, the vapour dank;
 And, purified, rejoices to have lost
 Its foul inhabitant. But to assuage
 Th' impatient fervour, which it first conceives
 Within its reeking bosom, threat'ning death
 To his young hopes, requires discreet delay.
 Experience, slow preceptress, teaching oft
 The way to glory by miscarriage foul,
 Must prompt him, and admonish how to catch
 Th' auspicious moment, when the temper'd heat,
 Friendly to vital motion, may afford
 Soft fomentation, and invite the seed.
 The seed, selected wisely, plump, and smooth,
 And glossy, he commits to pots of size
 Diminutive, well fill'd with well prepar'd
 And fruitful soil, that has been treasur'd long,
 And drank no moisture from the dripping clouds.
 These on the warm and genial earth, that hides
 The smoking manure, and o'erspreads it all,
 He places lightly, and, as time subdues
 The rage of fermentation, plunges deep
 In the soft medium, till they stand immers'd.
 Then rise the tender germs, upstarting quick,
 And spreading wide their spongy lobes; at first
 Pale, wan, and livid; but assuming soon,
 If fann'd by balmy and nutritious air,
 Strain'd through the friendly mats, a vivid green.
 Two leaves produc'd, two rough indented leaves,
 Cautious he pinches from the second stalk
 A pimple, that portends a future sprout,
 And interdicts it's growth. Thence straight succeed
 The branches, sturdy to his utmost wish;
 Prolific all, and harbingers of more.
 The crowded roots demand enlargement now,
 And transplantation in an ampler space.
 Indulg'd in what they wish, they soon supply
 Large foliage, overshadowing golden flow'rs,

Blown on the summit of th' apparent fruit.
 These have their sexes! and, when Summer shines,
 The bee transports the fertilizing meal
 From flow'r to flow'r, and ev'n the breathing air
 Wafts the rich prize to it's appointed use.
 Not so when Winter scowls. Assistant Art
 Then acts in Nature's office, brings to pass
 The glad espousals, and ensures the crop.

Grudge not, ye rich, (since Luxury must have
 His dainties, and the world's more num'rous half Lives by contriving delicacies for you,)
 Grudge not the cost. Ye little know the cares,
 The vigilance, the labour, and the skill
 That day and night are exercis'd, and hang
 Upon the ticklish balance of suspense,
 That ye may garnish your profuse regales
 With summer fruits brought forth by wint'ry suns.
 Ten thousand dangers lie in wait to thwart
 The process. Heat and cold, and wind, and steam,
 Moisture and drought, mice, worms, and swarming
 flies,

Minute as dust, and numberless, oft work
 Dire disappointment, that admits no cure,
 And which no care can obviate. It were long,
 Too long, to tell th' expedients and the shifts,
 Which he that fights a season so severe
 Devises, while he guards his tender trust;
 And oft at last in vain. The learn'd and wise
 Sarcastic would exclaim, and judge the song
 Cold as it's theme, and like it's theme the fruit
 Of too much labour, worthless when produc'd.

Who loves a garden, loves a greenhouse too.
 Unconscious of a less propitious clime,
 There blooms exotic beauty, warm and snug,
 While the winds whistle, and the snows descend.
 The spiry myrtle with unwith'ring leaf
 Shines there, and flourishes. The golden boast
 Of Portugal and western India there,
 The ruddier orange, and the paler lime,
 Peep through their polish'd foliage at the storm,
 And seem to smile at what they need not fear.
 Th' amomum there with intermingling flow'rs
 And cherries hangs her twigs. Geranium boasts
 Her crimson honours; and the spangled bean,
 Ficoides, glitters bright the winter long.
 All plants, of ev'ry leaf, that can endure
 The winter's frown, if screen'd from his shrewd bite,
 Live there, and prosper. Those Ausonia claims,
 Levantine regions these; th' Azores send
 Their jessamine: her jessamine remote
 Caffraia: foreigners from many lands,
 They form one social shade, as if conven'd.
 By magic summons of th' Orphean lyre. †
 Yet just arrangement, rarely brought to pass
 But by a master's hand disposing well
 The gay diversities of leaf and flow'r,
 Must lend it's aid t' illustrate all their charms,
 And dress the regular yet various scene.
 Plant behind plant aspiring, in the van
 The dwarfish, in the rear retir'd, but still
 Sublime above the rest, the statelier stand.
 So once were rang'd the sons of ancient Rome,
 A noble show! while Roscius trod the stage;
 And so, while Garrick, as renown'd as he,
 The sons of Albion; fearing each to lose
 Some note of Nature's music from his lips,
 And covetous of Shakspeare's beauty, seen
 In ev'ry flash of his far-beaming eye.
 Nor taste alone and well-contriv'd display
 Suffice to give the marshall'd ranks the grac:

Of their complete effect. Much yet remains
 Unsung, and many cares are yet behind,
 And more laborious; cares on which depends
 Their vigour, injur'd soon, not soon restor'd.
 The soil must be renew'd, which often wash'd
 Loses its treasure of salubrious salts,
 And disappoints the roots; the slender roots
 Close interwoven, where they meet the vase
 Must smooth be shorn away; the supple branch
 Must fly before the knife; the wither'd leaf
 Must be detach'd, and where it strews the floor
 Swept with a woman's neatness, breeding else
 Contagion, and disseminating death.

Discharge but these kind offices, (and who Would spare, that loves them, offices like these?)
 Well they reward the toil. The sight is pleas'd,
 The scent regal'd, each odorif'rous leaf,
 Each op'ning blossom, freely breathes abroad
 It's gratitude, and thanks him with it's sweets.

So manifold, all pleasing in their kind,
 All healthful, are th' employs of rural life,
 Reiterated as the wheel of time
 Runs round; still ending, and beginning still.
 Nor are these all. To deck the shapely knoll,
 That softly swell'd and gaily dress'd appears
 A flow'ry island, from the dark green lawn
 Emerging, must be deem'd a labour due
 To no mean hand, and asks the touch of taste.
 Here also grateful mixture of well-match'd
 And sorted hues (each giving each relief,
 And by contrasted beauty shining more)
 Is needful. Strength may wield the ponderous spade,

May turn the clod, and wheel the compost heap;
 But elegance, chief grace the garden shows
 And most attractive, is the fair result
 Of thought, the creature of a polish'd mind.
 Without it, all is Gothic as the scene
 To which th' insipid citizen resorts
 Near yonder heath; where Industry mis-spent,
 But proud of his uncouth ill-chosen task,
 Has made a Heav'n on Earth; with suns and moons
 Of close-ramm'd stones has charged th' encumber'd soil,

And fairly laid the zodiac in the dust.
 He, therefore, who would see his flow'rs dispos'd
 Sightly and in just order, ere he gives
 The beds the trusted treasure of their seeds,
 Forecasts the future whole; that when the season
 Shall break into it's preconceiv'd display,
 Each for itself, and all as with one voice
 Conspiring, may attest his bright design.
 Nor even then, dismissing as perform'd
 His pleasant work, may he suppose it done.
 Few self-supported flow'rs endure the wind
 Uninjur'd, but expect th' upholding aid
 Of the smooth-shaven prop, and, neatly tied,
 Are wedded thus, like beauty to old age,
 For int'rest sake, the living to the dead.
 Some clothe the soil that feeds them, far diffus'd
 And lowly creeping, modest and yet fair,
 Like Virtue, thriving most where little seen:
 Some more aspiring catch the neighbour shrub
 With clasping tendrils, and invest his branch,
 Else unadorn'd, with many a gay festoon
 And fragrant chaplet, recompensing well
 The strength they borrow with the grace they lend.
 All hate the rank society of weeds,
 Noisome, and ever greedy to exhaust
 Th' improv'ish'd earth; an overbearing race,

That, like the multitude made faction-mad,
Disturb good order, and degrade true worth.

O blest seclusion from a jarring world,
Which he, thus occupied, enjoys! Retreat
Canst not indeed to guilty man restore
Lost innocence, or cancel follies past;
But it has peace, and much secures the mind
From all assaults of evil; proving still
A faithful barrier, not o'erleap'd with ease
By vicious Custom, raging uncontroll'd
Abroad, and desolating public life.
When fierce Temptation, seconded within
By traitor Appetite, and arm'd with darts
Temper'd in Hell, invades the throbbing breast,
To combat may be glorious, and success
Perhaps may crown us; but to fly is safe.
Had I the choice of sublunary good,
What could I wish, that I possess not here? [peace,
Health, leisure, means t' improve it, friendship,
No loose or wanton, though a wand'ring, Muse,
And constant occupation without care.
Thus blest, I draw a picture of that bliss;
Hopeless indeed, that dissipated minds,
And profligate abusers of a world
Created fair so much in vain for them,
Should seek the guiltless joys, that I describe,
Allur'd by my report: but sure no less,
That self-condemn'd they must neglect the prize,
And what they will not taste must yet approve.
What we admire, we praise; and, when we praise,
Advance it into notice, that, it's worth
Acknowledg'd, others may admire it too.
I therefore recommend, though at the risk
Of popular disgust, yet boldly still,
The cause of piety, and sacred truth,
And virtue, and those scenes, which God ordain'd
Should best secure them, and promote them most;
Scenes that I love, and with regret perceive
Forsoaken, or through folly not enjoy'd.
Pure is the nymph, though lib'ral of her smiles,
And chaste, though unconfin'd, whom I extol
Not as the prince in Shushan, when he call'd,
Fain-glorious of her charms, his Vashti forth,
To grace the full pavilion. His design
Was but to boast his own peculiar good,
Which all might view with envy, none partake.
My charmer is not mine alone; my sweets,
And she, that sweetens all my bitters too,
Nature, enchanting Nature, in whose form
And lineaments divine I trace a hand,
That errs not, and find raptures still renew'd,
As free to all men — universal prize.
Strange that so fair a creature should yet want
Admirers, and be destin'd to divide
With meaner objects ev'n the few she finds!
Stripp'd of her ornaments, her leaves and flowers,
She loses all her influence. Cities then
Attract us, and neglected Nature pines
Abandon'd, as unworthy of our love.
But are not wholesome airs, though unperfum'd
By roses; and clear suns, though scarcely felt;
And groves, if unharmonious, yet secure
From clamour, and whose very silence charms;
To be preferr'd to smoke, to the eclipse,
That metropolitan volcanoes make, [long;
Whose Stygian throats breathe darkness all day
And to the stir of Commerce, driving slow,
And thund'ring loud, with his ten thousand wheels?
They would be, were not madness in the head,
And folly in the heart; were England now,

What England was, plain, hospitable, kind,
And undebauch'd. But we have bid farewell
To all the virtues of those better days,
And all their honest pleasures. Mansions once
Knew their own masters; and laborious hinds,
Who had surviv'd the father, serv'd the son.
Now the legitimate and rightful lord
Is but a transient guest, newly arriv'd,
As soon to be supplanted. He, that saw
His patrimonial timber cast it's leaf,
Sells the last scantling, and transfers the price
To some shrewd sharper, ere it buds again.
Estates are landscapes, gaz'd upon awhile,
Then advertis'd and auctioneer'd away. [charg'd
The country starves, and they, that feed th' o'er-
And surfeited lewd town with her fair dues,
By a just judgment strip and starve themselves.
The wings, that waft our riches out of sight,
Grow on the gamester's elbows, and th' alert
And nimble motion of those restless joints,
That never tire, soon fans them all away.
Improvement, too, the idol of the age,
Is fed with many a victim. Lo, he comes!
Th' omnipotent magician, Brown, appears!
Down falls the venerable pile, th' abode
Of our forefathers — a grave whisker'd race,
But tasteless. Springs a palace in it's stead,
But in a distant spot; where more expos'd
It may enjoy th' advantage of the north,
And aguish east, till time shall have transform'd
Those naked acres to a shelt'ring grove.
He speaks. The lake in front becomes a lawn;
Woods vanish, hills subside, and valleys rise;
And streams, as if created for his use,
Pursue the track of his directing wand,
Sinuous or straight, now rapid and now slow,
Now murmur'ing soft, now roaring in cascades —
Ev'n as he bids! Th' enraptur'd owner smiles.
'T is finish'd, and yet, finish'd as it seems,
Still wants a grace, the loveliest it could show,
A mine to satisfy th' enormous cost.
Drain'd to the last poor item of his wealth,
He sighs, departs, and leaves th' accomplish'd plan,
That he has touch'd, retouch'd, many a long day
Labour'd, and many a night pursu'd in dreams,
Just when it meets his hopes, and proves the Heav'n
He wanted, for a wealthier to enjoy;
And now perhaps the glorious hour is come,
When, having no stake left, no pledge t' endear
Her int'rests, or that gives her sacred cause
A moment's operation on his love,
He burns with most intense and flagrant zeal,
To serve his country. Ministerial grace
Deals him out money from the public chest;
Or if that mine be shut, some private purse
Supplies his need with a usurious loan,
To be refunded duly, when his vote
Well manag'd shall have earn'd it's worthy price.
O innocent, compar'd with arts like these,
Crape, and cock'd pistol, and the whistling ball
Sent through the traveller's temples! He that finds
One drop of Heav'n's sweet mercy in his cup,
Can dig, beg, rot, and perish, well content;
So he may wrap himself in honest rags
At his last gasp; but could not for a world
Fish up his dirty and dependent bread
From pools and ditches of the commonwealth,
Sordid and sick'ning at his own success.
Ambition, av'rice, penury incurr'd
By endless riot, vanity, the lust

Of pleasure and variety, dispatch,
 As duly as the swallows disappear,
 The world of wand'ring knights and squires to town.
 London ingulfs them all ! The shark is there,
 And the shark's prey ; the spendthrift, and the leech
 That sucks him : there the sycophant, and he
 Who, with bareheaded and obsequious bows,
 Begs a warm office, doom'd to a cold gaol
 And groat per diem, if his patron frown.
 The levee swarms as if in golden pomp
 Were character'd on ev'ry statesman's door,
 " BATTER'D AND BANKRUPT FORTUNES MENDED
 HERE."

These are the charms, that sully and eclipse
 The charms of nature. 'T is the cruel gripe,
 That lean, hard-handed Poverty inflicts,
 The hope of better things, the chance to win,
 The wish to shine, the thirst to be amus'd,
 That at the sound of Winter's hoary wing
 Unpeople all our counties of such herds
 Of flutt'ring, loit'ring, cringing, begging, loose,
 And wanton vagrants, as make London, vast
 And boundless as it is, a crowded coop.

O thou, resort and mart of all the Earth,
 Chequer'd with all complexions of mankind,
 And spotted with all crimes ; in whom I see
 Much that I love, and more that I admire,
 And all that I abhor ; thou freckled fair,
 That pleasest and yet shock'st me, I can laugh,
 And I can weep, can hope, and can despond,
 Feel wrath and pity, when I think on thee !
 Ten righteous would have sav'd a city once,
 And thou hast many righteous. — Well for thee —
 That salt preserves thee ; more corrupted else,
 And therefore more obnoxious, at this hour,
 Than Sodom in her day had pow'r to be,
 For whom God heard his Abr'ham plead in vain.

Book IV.

THE WINTER EVENING.

Argument.

The post comes in. The newspaper is read.
 The World contemplated at a distance. Address to Winter. The rural amusements of a winter evening compared with the fashionable ones.
 Address to evening. A brown study. Fall of snow in the evening. The waggoner. A poor family-piece. The rural thief. Public houses. The multitude of them censured.
 The farmer's daughter : what she was — what she is. The simplicity of country manners almost lost. Causes of the change. Desertion of the country by the rich. Neglect of magistrates. The militia principally in fault. The new recruit and his transformation. Reflection on bodies corporate. The love of rural objects natural to all and never to be totally extinguished.

HARK ! 't is the twanging horn o'er yonder bridge,
 That with it's wearisome but needful length
 Bestrides the wintry flood, in which the Moon
 Sees her unwrinkled face reflected bright ; —
 He comes, the herald of a noisy world,
 With spatter'd boots, strapp'd waist, and frozen locks ;
 News from all nations lumb'ring at his back.
 True to his charge, the close-pack'd load behind,
 Yet careless what he brings, his one concern

Is to conduct it to the destin'd inn ;
 And, having dropp'd th' expect'd bag, pass on.
 He whistles as he goes, light-hearted wretch,
 Cold and yet cheerful : messenger of grief
 Perhaps to thousands, and of joy to some ;
 To him indiff'rent whether grief or joy.
 Houses in ashes, and the fall of stocks,
 Births, deaths, and marriages, epistles wet
 With tears, that trickled down the writer's cheeks
 Fast as the periods from his fluent quill,
 Or charg'd with am'rous sighs of absent swains,
 Or nymphs responsive, equally affect
 His horse and him, unconscious of them all.
 But O th' important budget ! usher'd in
 With such heart-shaking music, who can say
 What are its tidings ? have our troops awak'd ?
 Or do they still, as if with opium drugg'd,
 Snore to the murmurs of the Atlantic wave ?
 Is India free ? and does she wear her plum'd
 And jewell'd turban with a smile of peace,
 Or do we grind her still ? The grand debate,
 The popular harangue, the tart reply,
 The logic, and the wisdom, and the wit,
 And the loud laugh — I long to know them all ;
 I burn to set th' imprison'd wranglers free,
 And give them voice and utt'rance once again.

Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast,
 Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,
 And while the bubbling and loud hissing urn
 Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
 That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each,
 So let us welcome peaceful ev'ning in.
 Not such his ev'ning, who with shining face
 Sweats in the crowded theatre, and, squeez'd
 And bor'd with elbow-points through both his sides,
 Outcolds the ranting actor on the stage :
 Nor his, who patient stands till his feet throb,
 And his head thumps, to feed upon the breath
 Of patriots, bursting with heroic rage,
 Or placemen, all tranquillity and smiles.
 This folio of four pages, happy work !
 Which not ev'n critics criticise ; that holds
 Inquisitive Attention, while I read,
 Fast bound in chains of silence, which the fair,
 Though eloquent themselves, yet fear to break ;
 What is it, but a map of busy life,
 It's fluctuations, and it's vast concerns ?
 Here runs the mountainous and craggy ridge,
 That tempts Ambition. On the summit see
 The seals of office glitter in his eyes ;
 He climbs, he pants, he grasps them ! At his heels,
 Close at his heels, a demagogue ascends,
 And with a dext'rous jerk soon twists him down,
 And wins them, but to lose them in his turn.
 Here rills of oily eloquence in soft
 Meanders lubricate the course they take ;
 The modest speaker is asham'd and griev'd
 T' engross a moment's notice ; and yet begs,
 Begs a propitious ear for his poor thoughts,
 However trivial all that he conceives.
 Sweet bashfulness ! it claims at least this praise ;
 The dearth of information and good sense,
 That it foretells us, always comes to pass.
 Cat'racts of declamation thunder here :
 There forests of no meaning spread the page,
 In which all comprehension wanders lost ;
 While fields of pleasantry amuse us there
 With merry descants on a nation's woes.
 The rest appears a wilderness of strange
 But gay confusion ; roses for the cheeks,

and lilies for the brows of faded age,
Teeth for the toothless, ringlets for the bald,
Leav'n, earth, and ocean, plunder'd of their sweets,
Ectareous essences, Olympian dew,
Sermons, and city feasts, and fav'rite airs,
Ethereal journies, submarine exploits,
And Katerfelto, with his hair on end
At his own wonders, wond'ring for his bread.

'Tis pleasant through the loop-holes of retreat,
To peep at such a world ; to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd ;
To hear the roar she sends through all her gates
At a safe distance, where the dying sound
Tells a soft murmur on th' uninjur'd ear.

Thus sitting, and surveying thus at ease
The globe and it's concerns, I seem advanc'd
To some secure and more than mortal height,
That lib'rates and exempts me from them all.
It turns submitted to my view, turns round
With all it's generations ; I behold
The tumult, and am still. The sound of war
Has lost it's terrors ere it reaches me ;
Grieves, but alarms me not. I mourn the pride
And av'rice, that make man a wolf to man ;
Fear the faint echo of those brazen throats,
By which he speaks the language of his heart,
And sigh, but never tremble at the sound.

He travels and expatiates, as the bee
From flow'r to flow'r, so he from land to land ;
The manners, customs, policy, of all
Pay contribution to the store he gleans ;
He sucks intelligence in ev'ry clime,
And spreads the honey of his deep research
At his return — a rich repast for me.

He travels, and I too. I tread his deck,
Ascend his topmast, through his peering eyes
Discover countries, with a kindred heart
Suffer his woes, and share in his escapes ;
While fancy, like the finger of a clock,
Runs the great circuit, and is still at home.

O Winter, ruler of th' inverted year,
Thy scatter'd hair with sleet like ashes fill'd,
Thy breath congeal'd upon thy lips, thy cheeks
Bring'd with a beard made white with other snows
Than those of age, thy forehead wrapp'd in clouds,
A leafless branch thy sceptre, and thy throne
A sliding car, indebted to no wheels,
But urg'd by storms along it's slipp'ry way,
Love thee, all unlovely as thou seem'st,
And dreaded as thou art ! Thou hold'st the Sun
A pris'ner in the yet undawning east,
Short'ning his journey between morn and noon,
And hurrying him, impatient of his stay,
Down to the rosy west ; but kindly still
Compensating his loss with added hours
Of social converse and instructive ease,
And gath'ring, at short notice, in one group,
The family dispers'd, and fixing thought,
Not less dispers'd by daylight and it's cares.
I crown thee king of intimate delights,
Fire-side enjoyments, home-born happiness,
And all the comforts that the lowly roof
Of undisturb'd Retirement, and the hours
Of long uninterrupted ev'ning, know.
No rattling wheels stop short before these gates ;
No powder'd pert, proficient in the art
Of sounding an alarm, assaults these doors
Till the street rings ; no stationary steeds
Cough their own knell, while, heedless of the sound,
The silent circle fan themselves, and quake :

But here the needle plies it's busy task,
The pattern grows, the well-depicted flow'r,
Wrought patiently into the snowy lawn,
Unfolds it's bosom ; buds, and leaves, and sprigs,
And curling tendrils, gracefully dispos'd,
Follow the nimble finger of the fair ;
A wreath, that cannot fade, of flow'rs, that blow
With most success when all besides decay.
The poet's or historian's page by one
Made vocal for th' amusement of the rest ;
The sprightly lyre, whose treasure of sweet sounds
The touch from many a trembling chord shakes out ;
And the clear voice symphonious, yet distinct,
And in the charming strife triumphant still ;
Beguile the night, and set a keener edge
On female industry : the threaded steel
Flies swiftly, and unfelt the task proceeds.
The volume clos'd, the customary rites
Of the last meal commence. A Roman meal ;
Such as the mistress of the world once found
Delicious, when her patriots of high note,
Perhaps by moonlight, at their humble doors,
And under an old oak's domestic shade,
Enjoy'd, spare feast ! a radish and an egg.
Discourse ensues, not trivial, yet not dull,
Nor such as with a frown forbids the play
Of fancy, or proscribes the sound of mirth :
Nor do we madly, like an impious world,
Who deem religion phrenzy, and the God,
That made them, an intruder on their joys,
Start at his awful name, or deem his praise
A jarring note. Themes of a graver tone.
Exciting oft our gratitude and love,
While we retrace with Mem'ry's pointing wand,
That calls the past to our exact review,
The dangers we have 'scaped, the broken snare,
The disappointed foe, deliv'rance found
Unlook'd for, life preserv'd, and peace restor'd,
Fruits of omnipotent eternal love.

" O ev'nings worthy of the gods !" exclaim'd
The Sabine bard. O ev'nings, I reply,
More to be priz'd and coveted than yours,
As more illumin'd, and with nobler truths,
That I, and mine, and those we love, enjoy.

Is Winter hideous in a garb like this ?
Needs he the tragic fur, the smoke of lamps,
The pent-up breath of an unsav'ry throng,
To thaw him into feeling ; or the smart
And snappish dialogue, that flippant wits
Call comedy, to prompt him with a smile ?
The self-complacent actor, when he views
(Stealing a sidelong glance at a full house)
The slope of faces, from the floor to th' roof
(As if one master-spring controll'd them all)
Relax'd into a universal grin,
Sees not a count'nance there, that speaks of joy
Half so refin'd or so sincere as ours.

Cards were superfluous here, with all the tricks,
That idleness has ever yet contriv'd
To fill the void of an unfurnish'd brain,
To palliate Dulness and give Time a shove.
Time, as he passes us, has a dove's wing
Unsoil'd, and swift, and of a silken sound ;
But the World's Time is Time in masquerade !
Theirs, should I paint him, has his pinions fledg'd
With motley plumes ; and, where the peacock shows
His azure eyes, is tinctur'd black and red
With spots quadrangular of diamond form,
Ensanguin'd hearts, clubs typical of strife,
And spades, the emblem of untimely graves.

What should be, and what was an hour-glass once,
 Becomes a dice-box, and a billiard mace
 Well does the work of his destructive sithe.
 Thus deck'd, he charms a world whom fashion blinds
 To his true worth, most pleas'd when idle most ;
 Whose only happy are their wasted hours.
 Ev'n misses, at whose age their mothers wore
 The backstring and the bib, assume the dress
 Of womanhood, fit pupils in the school
 Of card-devoted Time, and night by night
 Plac'd at some vacant corner of the board,
 Learn ev'ry trick, and soon play all the game.
 But truce with censure. Roving as I rove,
 Where shall I find an end, or how proceed ?
 As he that travels far oft turns aside,
 To view some rugged rock or mould'ring tow'r,
 Which seen delights him not ; then coming home
 Describes and prints it, that the world may know
 How far he went for what was nothing worth ;
 So I, with brush in hand and pallet spread,
 With colours mix'd for a far diff'rent use,
 Paint cards and dolls, and ev'ry idle thing,
 That Fancy finds in her excursive flights.

Come, Ev'ning, once again, season of peace ;
 Return, sweet Ev'ning, and continue long !
 Methinks I see thee in the streaky west,
 With matron step slow moving, while the Night
 Treads on thy sweeping train ; one hand employ'd
 In letting fall the curtain of repose
 On bird and beast, the other charg'd for man
 With sweet oblivion of the cares of day :
 Not sumptuously adorn'd, not needing aid,
 Like homely-featur'd Night, of clust'ring gems ;
 A star or two, just twinkling on thy brow,
 Suffices thee ; save that the Moon is thine
 No less than hers, not worn indeed on high
 With ostentatious pageantry, but set
 With modest grandeur in thy purple zone,
 Resplendent less, but of an ampler round.
 Come then, and thou shalt find thy vot'ry calm,
 Or make me so. Composure is thy gift :
 And, whether I devote thy gentle hours
 To books, to music, or the poet's toil ;
 To weaving nets for bird-alluring fruit ;
 Or twining silken threads round iv'ry reels,
 When they command whom man was born to
 please ;

I slight thee not, but make thee welcome still.

Just when our drawing-rooms begin to blaze
 With lights, by clear reflection multiplied
 From many a mirror, in which he of Gath,
 Goliath, might have seen his giant bulk
 Whole without stooping, tow'ring crest and all,
 My pleasures, too, begin. But me perhaps
 The glowing hearth may satisfy awhile
 With faint illumination, that uplifts
 The shadows to the ceiling, there by fits
 Dancing uncouthly to the quiv'ring flame.
 Not undelightful is an hour to me
 So spent in parlour twilight : such a gloom
 Suits well the thoughtful or unthinking mind,
 The mind contemplative, with some new theme
 Pregnant, or indispos'd alike to all.
 Laugh, ye who boast your more mercurial pow'rs,
 That never felt a stupor, know no pause,
 Nor need one ; I am conscious, and confess
 Fearless a soul, that does not always think.
 Me oft has Fancy ludicrous and wild
 Sooth'd with a waking dream of houses, tow'rs,
 Trees, churches, and strange visages, express'd

In the red cinders, while with poring eye
 I gaz'd, myself creating what I saw.
 Nor less amus'd have I quiescent watch'd
 The sooty films, that play upon the bars
 Pendulous, and foreboding in the view
 Of superstition, prophesying still,
 Though still deceiv'd, some stranger's near approach.
 'T is thus the understanding takes repose
 In indolent vacuity of thought,
 And sleeps and is refresh'd. Meanwhile the face
 Conceals the mood lethargic with a mask
 Of deep deliberation, as the man
 Were task'd to his full strength, absorb'd and lost.
 Thus oft reclin'd at ease, I lose an hour
 At ev'ning, till at length the freezing blast,
 That sweeps the bolted shutter, summons home
 The recollected pow'rs, and snapping short
 The glassy threads, with which the Fancy weaves
 Her brittle toils, restores me to myself.
 How calm is my recess ; and how the frost,
 Raging abroad, and the rough wind endear
 The silence and the warmth enjoy'd within !
 I saw the woods and fields at close of day
 A variegated show ; the meadows green,
 Though faded ; and the lands, where lately warr'd
 The golden harvest, of a mellow brown,
 Upturn'd so lately by the forceful share.
 I saw far off the weedy fallows smile
 With verdure not unprofitable, graz'd
 By flocks, fast feeding, and selecting each
 His fav'rite herb ; while all the leafless groves,
 That skirt th' horizon, wore a sable blue,
 Scarce notic'd in the kindred dusk of eve.
 To-morrow brings a change, a total change !
 Which even now, though silently perform'd,
 And slowly, and by most unfelt, the face
 Of universal nature undergoes.
 Fast falls a fleecy show'r : the downy flakes
 Descending, and with never-ceasing lapse,
 Softly alighting upon all below,
 Assimilate all objects. Earth receives
 Gladly the thick'ning mantle : and the green
 And tender blade, that fear'd the chilling blast,
 Escapes unhurt beneath so warm a veil.
 In such a world, so thorny, and where none
 Finds happiness unblighted, or, if found,
 Without some thistly sorrow at it's side ;
 It seems the part of wisdom, and no sin
 Against the law of love, to measure lots
 With less distinguish'd than ourselves ; that thus
 We may with patience bear our mod'rate ills,
 And sympathise with others suff'ring more.
 Ill fares the trav'ller now, and he that stalks
 In pond'rous boots beside his reeking team.
 The wain goes heavily, impeded sore
 By congregated loads adhering close
 To the clogg'd wheels ; and in it's sluggish pace
 Noiseless appears a moving hill of snow.
 The toiling steeds expand the nostril wide,
 While ev'ry breath, by respiration strong
 Forc'd downward, is consolidated soon
 Upon their jutting chests. He, form'd to bear
 The pelting brunt of the tempestuous night,
 With half-shut eyes, and pucker'd cheeks, and teeth
 Presented bare against the storm, plods on.
 One hand secures his hat, save when with both
 He brandishes his pliant length of whip,
 Resounding oft, and never heard in vain.
 O happy ; and in my account denied
 That sensibility of pain, with which

Refinement is endu'd, thrice happy thou !
 Thy frame, robust and hardy, feels indeed
 The piercing cold, but feels it unimpair'd.
 The learned finger never need explore
 Thy vig'rous pulse ; and the unhealthful east,
 That breathes the spleen, and searches ev'ry bone
 Of the infirm, is wholesome air to thee.
 Thy days roll on exempt from household care ;
 Thy waggon is thy wife ; and the poor beasts,
 That drag the dull companion to and fro,
 Thine helpless charge, dependent on thy care.
 Ah treat them kindly ! rude as thou appear'st,
 Yet show that thou hast mercy ! which the great,
 With needless hurry whirl'd from place to place,
 Humane as they would seem, not always show.

Poor, yet industrious, modest, quiet, neat,
 Such claim compassion in a night like this,
 And have a friend in ev'ry feeling heart.
 Warm'd, while it lasts, by labour, all day long
 They brave the season, and yet find at eve,
 Ill clad, and fed but sparely, time to cool.
 The frugal housewife trembles when she lights
 Her scanty stock of brushwood, blazing clear,
 But dying soon, like all terrestrial joys.
 The few small embers left she nurses well ;
 And, while her infant race, with outspread hands,
 And crowded knees, sit cowering o'er the sparks,
 Retires, content to quake, so they be warm'd.
 The man feels least, as more inur'd than she
 To winter, and the current in his veins
 More briskly mov'd by his severer toil ;
 Yet he too finds his own distress in theirs.
 The taper soon extinguish'd, which I saw
 Dangled along at the cold finger's end
 Just when the day declin'd ; and the brown loaf
 Lodg'd on the shelf, half eaten without sauce
 Of sav'ry cheese, or butter, costlier still ;
 Sleep seems their only refuge : for, alas !
 Where penury is felt the thought is chain'd,
 And sweet colloquial pleasures are but few !
 With all this thrift they thrive not. All the care,
 Ingenious Parsimony takes, but just
 Saves the small inventory, bed, and stool,
 Skillet, and old carv'd chest, from public sale.
 They live, and live without extorted alms
 From grudging hands ; but other boast have none,
 To soothe their honest pride, that scorns to beg,
 Nor comfort else, but in their mutual love.
 I praise you much, ye meek and patient pair,
 For ye are worthy ; choosing rather far
 A dry but independent crust, hard earn'd,
 And eaten with a sigh, than to endure
 The rugged frowns and insolent rebuffs
 Of knaves in office, partial in the work
 Of distribution ; lib'ral of their aid
 To clam'rous Importunity in rags,
 But oft-times deaf to suppliants, who would blush
 To wear a tatter'd garb however coarse,
 Whom famine cannot reconcile to filth :
 These ask with painful shyness, and, refus'd
 Because deserving, silently retire !
 But be ye of good courage ! Time itself
 Shall much befriend you. Time shall give increase ;
 And all your num'rous progeny, well-train'd
 But helpless, in few years shall find their hands,
 And labour too. Meanwhile ye shall not want
 What, conscious of your virtues, we can spare,
 Nor what a wealthier than ourselves may send
 I mean the man, who, when the distant poor
 Need help, denies them nothing but his name.

But poverty with most, who whimper forth
 Their long complaints, is self-inflicted woe ;
 The effect of laziness or sottish waste.
 Now goes the nightly thief prowling abroad
 For plunder ; much solicitous how best
 He may compensate for a day of sloth,
 By works of darkness and nocturnal wrong.
 Woe to the gard'ner's pale, the farmer's hedge,
 Plash'd neatly, and secur'd with driven stakes
 Deep in the loamy bank. Uptorn by strength,
 Resistless in so bad a cause, but lame
 To better deeds, he bundles up the spoil,
 An ass's burden, and, when laden most
 And heaviest, light of foot steals fast away.
 Nor does the boarded hovel better guard
 The well-stack'd pile of riven logs and roots
 From his pernicious force. Nor will he leave
 Unwrench'd the door, however well secur'd,
 Where Chanticleer amidst his haram sleeps
 In unsuspecting pomp. 'Twitch'd from the perch,
 He gives the princely bird, with all his wives,
 To his voracious bag, struggling in vain,
 And loudly wond'ring at the sudden change.
 Nor this to feed his own. 'T were some excuse,
 Did pity of their suff'rings warp aside
 His principle, and tempt him into sin
 For their support, so destitute. But they Neglected pine at home ; themselves, as more
 Expos'd than others, with less scruple made
 His victims, robb'd of their defenceless all.
 Cruel is all he does. 'T is quenchless thirst
 Of ruinous ebriety, that prompts
 His ev'ry action, and imbrutes the man.
 O for a law to noose the villain's neck,
 Who starves his own ; who persecutes the blood
 He gave them in his children's veins, and hates
 And wrongs the woman, he has sworn to love !
 Pass where we may, through city or through town,
 Village, or hamlet, of this merry land,
 Though lean and beggar'd, ev'ry twentieth pace
 Conducts th' unguarded nose to such a whiff
 Of stale debauch, forth-issuing from the styes,
 That law has licens'd, as makes Temp'rance reel.
 There sit, involv'd and lost in curling clouds
 Of Indian fume, and guzzling deep, the boor,
 The lackey, and the groom : the craftsman there
 Takes a Lethean leave of all his toil ;
 Smith, cobbler, joiner, he that plies the shears,
 And he that kneads the dough ; all loud alike,
 All learned, and all drunk ! The fiddle screams
 Plaintive and piteous, as it wept and wail'd
 It's wasted tones and harmony unheard :
 Fierce the dispute whate'er the theme ; while she,
 Fell Discord, arbitress of such debate,
 Perch'd on the sign-post, holds with even hand
 Her undecisive scales. In this she lays
 A weight of ignorance ; in that, of pride ;
 And smiles delighted with the eternal poise.
 Dire is the frequent curse, and it's twin sound,
 The cheek-distending oath, not to be prais'd
 As ornamental, musical, polite,
 Like those which modern senators employ,
 Whose oath is rhet'ric, and who swear for fame !
 Behold the schools, in which plebeian minds
 Once simple are initiated in arts,
 Which some may practise with politer grace,
 But none with readier skill ! — 'T is here they learn
 The road, that leads from competence and peace
 To indigence and rapine ; till at last
 Society, grown weary of the load,

Shakes her incumber'd lap, and casts them out.
 But censure profits little : vain th' attempt
 To advertise in verse a public pest,
 That, like the filth with which the peasant feeds
 His hungry acres, stinks, and is of use.
 Th' Excise is fatten'd with the rich result
 Of all this riot ; and ten thousand casks,
 For ever dribbling out their base contents,
 Touch'd by the Midas finger of the state,
 Bleed gold for ministers to sport away.
 Drink, and be mad then ; 't is your country bids !
 Gloriously drunk, obey th' important call !
 Her cause demands th' assistance of your throats ;—
 Ye all can swallow, and she asks no more.

Would I had fall'n upon those happier days,
 That poets celebrate ; those golden times,
 And those Arcadian scenes, that Maro sings,
 And Sidney, warbler of poetic prose.
 Nymphs were Dianas then, and swains had hearts,
 That felt their virtues : Innocence, it seems,
 From courts dismiss'd, found shelter in the groves ;
 The footsteps of Simplicity, impress'd
 Upon the yielding herbage, (so they sing,)
 Then were not all effac'd : then speech profane,
 And manners profligate, were rarely found,
 Observ'd as prodigies, and soon reclaim'd.
 Vain wish ! those days were never : airy dreams
 Sat for the picture : and the poet's hand,
 Imparting substance to an empty shade,
 Impos'd a gay delirium for a truth.
 Grant it : I still must envy them an age,
 That favour'd such a dream ; in days like these Impossible, when Virtue is so scarce,
 That to suppose a scene where she presides,
 Is tranmontane, and stumbles all belief.
 No : we are polish'd now. The rural lass,
 Whom once her virgin modesty and grace,
 Her artless manners, and her neat attire,
 So dignified, that she was hardly less
 Than the fair shepherdess of old romance,
 Is seen no more. The character is lost !
 Her head, adorn'd with lappets pinn'd aloft,
 And ribands streaming gay, superbly rais'd,
 And magnified beyond all human size,
 Indebted to some smart wig-weaver's hand
 For more than half the tresses it sustains ;
 Her elbows ruffled, and her tott'ring form
 Ill-propp'd upon French heels ; she might be deem'd
 (But that the basket dangling on her arm
 Interprets her more truly) of a rank
 Too proud for dairy work, or sale of eggs.
 Expect her soon with footboy at her heels,
 No longer blushing for her awkward load,
 Her train and her umbrella all her care !

The town has ting'd the country ; and the stain
 Appears a spot upon a vestal's robe,
 The worse for what it soils. The fashion run
 Down into scenes still rural ; but, alas !
 Scenes rarely grac'd with rural manners now !
 Time was when in the pastoral retreat
 Th' unguarded door was safe ; men did not watch
 T' invade another's right, or guard their own.
 Then sleep was undisturb'd by fear, unscar'd
 By drunken howlings ; and the chilling tale
 Of midnight murder was a wonder heard
 With doubtful credit, told to frighten babes.
 But farewell now to unsuspecting nights,
 And slumbers unalarm'd ! Now, ere you sleep,
 See that your polish'd arms be prim'd with care,
 And drop the nightbolt ;—ruffians are abroad ;

And the first larum of the cock's shrill throat
 May prove a trumpet, summoning your ear
 To horrid sounds of hostile feet within.
 Ev'n daylight has its dangers ; and the walk [one
 Through pathless wastes and woods, unconscious
 Of other tenants than melodious birds,
 Or harmless flocks, is hazardous and bold.
 Lamented change ! to which full many a cause
 Invet'rate, hopeless of a cure, conspires.
 The course of human things from good to ill,
 From ill to worse, is fatal, never fails.
 Increase of pow'r begets increase of wealth ;
 Wealth, luxury ; and luxury, excess ;
 Excess, the scrofulous and itchy plague,
 That seizes first the opulent, descends
 To the next rank contagious, and in time
 Taints downwards all the graduated scale
 Of order, from the chariot to the plough.
 The rich, and they, that have an arm to check
 The licence of the lowest in degree,
 Desert their office ; and themselves, intent
 On pleasure, haunt the capital, and thus
 To all the violence of lawless hands
 Resign the scenes their presence might protect.
 Authority herself not seldom sleeps,
 Though resident, and witness of the wrong.
 The plump convivial parson often bears
 The magisterial sword in vain, and lays
 His rev'ence and his worship both to rest
 On the same cushion of habitual sloth.
 Perhaps timidity restrains his arm ;
 When he should strike he trembles, and sets free,
 Himself enslav'd by terror of the band,
 Th' audacious convict, whom he dares not bind.
 Perhaps, though by profession ghostly pure,
 He, too, may have his vice, and sometimes prove
 Less dainty than becomes his grave outside
 In lucrative concerns. Examine well
 His milk-white hand ; the palm is hardly clear—
 But here and there an ugly smutch appears.
 Foh ! 't was a bribe that left it : he has touch'd
 Corruption. Whoso seeks an audit here
 Propitious, pays his tribute, game or fish,
 Wild-fowl or ven'son ; and his errand speeds.

But faster far, and more than all the rest,
 A noble cause, which none, who bears a spark
 Of public virtue, ever wish'd remov'd,
 Works the deplor'd and mischievous effect.
 'T is universal soldiership has stabb'd
 The heart of merit in the meaner class.
 Arms, through the vanity and brainless rage
 Of those that bear them, in whatever cause,
 Seem most at variance with all moral good,
 And incompatible with serious thought.
 The clown, the child of Nature, without guile,
 Blest with an infant's ignorance of all
 But his own simple pleasures ; now and then
 A wrestling match, a foot-race, or a fair ;
 Is ballotted, and trembles at the news :
 Sheepish he doffs his hat, and mumbling swears
 A Bible-oath to be whate'er they please,
 To do he knows not what. The task perform'd,
 That instant he becomes the sergeant's care,
 His pupil, and his torment, and his jest.
 His awkward gait, his introverted toes,
 Bent knees, round shoulders, and dejected looks,
 Procure him many a curse. By slow degrees,
 Unapt to learn, and form'd of stubborn stuff,
 He yet by slow degrees puts off himself,
 Grows conscious of a change, and likes it well :

He stands erect ; his slouch becomes a walk ;
 He steps right onward, martial in his air,
 His form, and movement ; is as smart above
 As meal and larded locks can make him ; wears
 His hat, or his plum'd helmet, with a grace ;
 And, his three years of heroship expir'd,
 Returns indignant to the slighted plough.
 He hates the field, in which no fife or drum
 Attends him ; drives his cattle to a march ;
 And sighs for the smart comrades he has left.
 'T were well if his exterior change were all —
 But with his clumsy port the wretch has lost
 His ignorance and harmless manners too.
 To swear, to game, to drink ; to show at home
 By lewdness, idleness, and Sabbath-breach,
 The great proficiency he made abroad ;
 To astonish and to grieve his gazing friends ;
 To break some maiden's and his mother's heart ;
 To be a pest where he was useful once ;
 Are his sole aim, and all his glory, now.

Man in society is like a flow'r
 Blown in it's native bed : 't is there alone
 His faculties, expanded in full bloom,
 Shine out ; there only reach their proper use.
 But man, associated and leagu'd with man
 By regal warrant, or self-join'd by bond
 For int'rest-sake, or swarming into clans
 Beneath one head for purposes of war,
 Like flow'rs selected from the rest, and bound
 And bundled close to fill some crowded vase,
 Fades rapidly, and, by compression marr'd,
 Contracts defilement not to be endur'd.
 Hence charter'd boroughs are such public plagues ;
 And burghers, men immaculate perhaps
 In all their private functions, once combin'd,
 Become a loathsome body, only fit
 For dissolution, hurtful to the main.
 Hence merchants, unimpeachable of sin
 Against the charities of domestic life,
 Incorporated seem at once to lose
 Their nature ; and, disclaiming all regard
 For mercy and the common rights of man,
 Build factories with blood, conducting trade
 At the sword's point, and dyeing the white robe
 Of innocent commercial Justice red.
 Hence too the field of glory, as the world
 Misdeems it, dazzled by it's bright array,
 With all it's majesty of thund'ring pomp,
 Enchanting music and immortal wreaths,
 Is but a school, where thoughtlessness is taught
 On principle, where foppery atones
 For folly, gallantry for ev'ry vice.

But slighted as it is, and by the great
 Abandon'd, and, which still I more regret,
 Infected with the manners and the modes,
 It knew not once, the country wins me still.
 I never fram'd a wish, or form'd a plan,
 That flatter'd me with hopes of earthly bliss,
 But there I laid the scene. There early stray'd
 My fancy, ere yet liberty of choice
 Had found me, or the hope of being free.
 My very dreams were rural ; rural too
 The first-born efforts of my youthful Muse,
 Sportive and jingling her poetic bells,
 Ere yet her ear was mistress of their pow'rs.
 No bard could please me but whose lyre was tun'd
 To Nature's praises. Heroes and their feats
 Fatigu'd me, never weary of the pipe
 Of Tityrus, assembling, as he sang,
 The rustic throng beneath his fav'rite beech.

Then Milton had indeed a poet's charms :
 New to my taste his Paradise surpass'd
 The struggling efforts of my boyish tongue
 To speak it's excellence. I danc'd for joy.
 I marvell'd much that at so ripe an age
 As twice seven years, his beauties had then first Engag'd my wonder ; and admiring still,
 And still admiring, with regret suppos'd
 The joy half lost, because not sooner found.
 There, too, enamour'd of the life I lov'd,
 Pathetic in it's praise, in it's pursuit
 Determin'd, and possessing it at last
 With transports, such as favour'd lovers feel,
 I studied, priz'd, and wish'd that I had known,
 Ingenious Cowley ! and, though now reclaim'd
 By modern lights from an erroneous taste,
 I cannot but lament thy splendid wit
 Entangled in the cobwebs of the schools.
 I still revere thee, courtly though retir'd ;
 Though stretch'd at ease in Chertsey's silent bow'rs,
 Not unemploy'd ; and finding rich amends
 For a lost world in solitude and verse.
 'T is born with all : the love of Nature's works
 Is an ingredient in the compound man,
 Infus'd at the creation of the kind.
 And, though th' Almighty Maker has throughout
 Discriminated each from each, by strokes
 And touches of his hand, with so much art
 Diversified, that two were never found
 Twins at all points — yet this obtains in all,
 That all discern a beauty in his works, [form'd
 And all can taste them : minds, that have been
 And tutor'd, with a relish more exact,
 But none without some relish, none unmov'd.
 It is a flame, that dies not even there,
 Where nothing feeds it : neither business, crowds,
 Nor habits of luxurious city life,
 Whatever else they smother of true worth
 In human bosoms, quench it or abate.
 The villas, with which London stands begirt,
 Like a swarth Indian with his belt of beads,
 Prove it. A breath of unadulterate air,
 The glimpse of a green pasture, how they cheer
 The citizen, and brace his languid frame !
 Ev'n in the stifling bosom of the town
 A garden, in which nothing thrives, has charms,
 That soothe the rich possessor ; much consol'd,
 That here and there some sprigs of mournful mint,
 Of nightshade, or valerian, grace the well
 He cultivates. These serve him with a hint,
 That Nature lives ; that sight-refreshing green
 Is still the liv'ry she delights to wear,
 Though sickly samples of th' exub'rant whole.
 What are the casements lin'd with creeping herbs,
 The prouder sashes fronted with a range
 Of orange, myrtle, or the fragrant weed,
 The Frenchman's darling ? * are they not all proofs,
 That man, immur'd in cities, still retains
 His inborn inextinguishable thirst
 Of rural scenes, compensating his loss
 By supplemental shifts, the best he may ?
 The most unfurnish'd with the means of life,
 And they, that never pass their brick-wall bounds,
 To range the fields, and treat their lungs with air,
 Yet feel the burning instinct : over head
 Suspend their crazy boxes, planted thick,
 And water'd duly. There the pitcher stands
 A fragment, and the spoutless tea-pot there ;

* Mignonnette.

Sad witnesses how close-pent man regret
The country, with what ardour he contrives
A peep at Nature, when he can no more.

Hail, therefore, patroness of health and ease,
And contemplation, heart-consoling joys,
And harmless pleasures, in the throng'd abode
Of multitudes unknown ; hail, rural life !
Address himself who will to the pursuit
Of honours or emolument, or fame ;
I shall not add myself to such a chase,
Thwart his attempts, or envy his success.
Some must be great. Great offices will have Great talents. And God gives to ev'ry man
The virtue, temper, understanding, taste,
That lifts him into life, and lets him fall
Just in the niche he was ordain'd to fill.
To the deliv'rer of an injur'd land
He gives a tongue t' enlarge upon, a heart
To feel, and courage to redress her wrongs ;
To monarchs dignity ; to judges sense ;
To artists ingenuity and skill ;
To me an unambitious mind, content
In the low vale of life, that early felt
A wish for ease and leisure, and ere long
Found here that leisure and that ease I wish'd.

Book V.

THE WINTER-MORNING WALK.

Argument.

A frosty morning. The foddering of cattle. The woodman and his dog. The poultry. Whimsical effects of frost at a waterfall. The Empress of Russia's palace of ice. Amusements of monarchs. War, one of them. Wars, whence ; and whence monarchy. The evils of it. English and French loyalty contrasted. The Bastille, and a prisoner there. Liberty the chief recommendation of this country. Modern patriotism questionable, and why. The perishable nature of the best human institutions. Spiritual liberty not perishable. The slavish state of man by nature. Deliver him, Deist, if you can. Grace must do it. The respective merits of patriots and martyrs stated. Their different treatment. Happy freedom of the man whom grace makes free. His relish of the works of God. Address to the Creator.

'T is morning ; and the Sun, with ruddy orb
Ascending, fires th' horizon ; while the clouds,
That crowd away before the driving wind,
More ardent as the disk emerges more,
Resemble most some city in a blaze,
Seen through the leafless wood. His slanting ray
Slides ineffectual down the snowy vale,
And, tinging all with his own rosy hue,
From ev'ry herb and ev'ry spiry blade
Stretches a length of shadow o'er the field.
Mine, spindling into longitude immense,
In spite of gravity, and sage remark
That I myself am but a fleeting shade,
Provokes me to a smile. With eye askance
I view the muscular proportion'd limb
Transform'd to a lean shank. The shapeless pair,
As they design'd to mock me, at my side
Take step for step ; and, as I near approach
The cottage, walk along the plaster'd wall,

Prepost'rous sight ! the legs without the man.
The verdure of the plain lies buried deep
Beneath the dazzling deluge ; and the best,
And coarser grass, upspringing o'er the rest,
Of late unsightly and unseen, now shine
Conspicuous, and in bright apparel clad,
And, fledg'd with icy feathers, nod superb.
The cattle mourn in corners, where the fence
Screens them, and seem half petrified to sleep
In unrecumbent sadness. There they wait
Their wonted fodder ; not like hung'ring man,
Fretful if unsupplied ; but silent, meek,
And patient of the slow-pac'd swain's delay.
He from the stack carves out th' accustomed load,
Deep plunging, and again deep plunging off,
His broad keen knife into the solid mass :
Smooth as a wall the upright remnant stands,
With such undeviating and even force
He severs it away : no heedless care,
Lest storms should overset the leaning pile
Deciduous, or it's own unbalanc'd weight.
Forth goes the woodman, leaving unconcern'd
The cheerful haunts of man ; to wield the axe,
And drive the wedge, in yonder forest drear,
From morn to eve his solitary task.
Shaggy, and lean, and shrewd, with pointed ears,
And tail cropp'd short, half lurcher and half cur,
His dog attends him. Close behind his heel
Now creeps he slow ; and now, with many a frisk
Wide-scamp'ring, snatches up the drifted snow
With iv'ry teeth, or plows it with his snout ;
Then shakes his powder'd coat, and barks for joy.
Heedless of all his pranks, the sturdy churl
Moves right toward the mark ; nor stops for sight
But now and then with pressure of his thumb
T' adjust the fragrant charge of a short tube,
That fumes beneath his nose ; the trailing cloud
Streams far behind him, scenting all the air.
Now from the roost, or from the neighb'ring pale,
Where, diligent to catch the first faint gleam
Of smiling day, they gossip'd side by side,
Come trooping at the housewife's well-known call
The feather'd tribes domestic. Half on wing,
And half on foot, they brush the fleecy flood,
Conscious and fearful of too deep a plunge.
The sparrows peep, and quit the shelt'ring eaves,
To seize the fair occasion ; well they eye
The scatter'd grain, and thievishly resolv'd
T' escape th' impending famine, often scar'd
As oft return, a pert voracious kind.
Clean riddance quickly made, one only care
Remains to each, the search of sunny nook,
Or shed impervious to the blast. Resign'd
To sad necessity, the cock foregoes
His wonted strut ; and, wading at their head
With well-consider'd steps, seems to resent
His alter'd gait and stateliness retrench'd.
How find the myriads, that in summer cheer
The hills and valleys with their ceaseless songs,
Due sustenance, or where subsist they now ? [safe
Earth yields them nought ; th' imprison'd worm is
Beneath the frozen clod ; all seeds of herbs
Lie cover'd close ; and berry-bearing thorns,
That feed the thrush, (whatever some suppose,)
Afford the smaller minstrels no supply.
The long protracted rigour of the year,
Thins all their num'rous flocks. In chinks and holes
Ten thousand seek an unmolested end,
As instinct prompts ; self-buried ere they die.
The very rooks and daws forsake the fields,

Where neither grub, nor root, nor earth-nut, now
 repays their labour more ; and perch'd aloft
 by the wayside, or stalking in the path,
 lean pensioners upon the trav'ler's track,
 pick up their nauseous dole, though sweet to them,
 Of voided pulse or half-digested grain.
 The streams are lost amid the splendid blank,
 Overwhelming all distinction. On the flood,
 Endurated and fix'd, the snowy weight
 Lies undissolv'd ; while silently beneath,
 And unperceiv'd, the current steals away.
 Not so where, scornful of a check, it leaps
 The mill-dam, dashes on the restless wheel,
 And wantons in the pebbly gulf below :
 No frost can bind it there ; it's utmost force
 Can but arrest the light and smoky mist,
 That in it's fall the liquid sheet throws wide.
 And see where it has hung th' embroider'd banks
 With forms so various, that no pow'rs of art,
 The pencil or the pen, may trace the scene !
 Here glitt'ring turrets rise, upbearing high
 Fantastic mis-arrangement ! on the roof
 Large growth of what may seem the sparkling trees
 And shrubs of fairy land. The crystal drops,
 That trickle down the branches, fast congeal'd,
 Shoot into pillars of pellucid length,
 And prop the pile, they but adorn'd before.
 Here grotto within grotto safe defies
 The sun-beam ; there, emboss'd and fretted wild,
 The growing wonder takes a thousand shapes
 Capricious, in which fancy seeks in vain
 The likeness of some object seen before.
 Thus Nature works as if to mock at Art,
 And in defiance of her rival pow'rs ;
 By these fortuitous and random strokes
 Performing such inimitable feats,
 As she with all her rules can never reach.
 Less worthy of applause, though more admir'd,
 Because a novelty, the work of man,
 Imperial mistress of the fur-clad Russ,
 Thy most magnificent and mighty freak,
 The wonder of the North. No forest fell,
 When thou would'st build ; no quarry sent it's stores
 To enrich thy walls : but thou didst hew the floods,
 And make thy marble of the glassy wave.
 In such a palace Aristæus found
 Cyrene, when he bore the plaintive tale
 Of his lost bees to her maternal ear :
 In such a palace Poetry might place
 The armory of Winter ; where his troops,
 The gloomy clouds, find weapons, arrowy sleet,
 Skin-piercing volley, blossom-bruising hail,
 And snow, that often blinds the trav'ler's course,
 And wraps him in an unexpected tomb.
 Silently as a dream the fabric rose ;
 No sound of hammer or of saw was there :
 Ice upon ice, the well-adjusted parts
 Were soon conjoin'd, nor other cement ask'd
 Than water interfus'd to make them one.
 Camps gracefully dispos'd, and of all hues,
 Illumin'd ev'ry side : a wat'ry light
 Gleam'd through the clear transparency, that seem'd
 Another moon new ris'n, or meteor fall'n
 From Heav'n to Earth, of lambent flame serene.
 So stood the brittle prodigy ; though smooth
 And slipp'ry the materials, yet frost-bound
 Firm as a rock. Nor wanted aught within,
 That royal residence might well befit,
 For grandeur or for use. Long wavy wreaths
 Of flow'rs, that fear'd no enemy but warmth,

Blush'd on the pannels. Mirror needed none
 Where all was vitreous ; but in order due
 Convivial table and commodious seat
 (What seem'd at least commodious seat) were there ;
 Sofa, and couch, and high-built throne august.
 The same lubricity was found in all,
 And all was moist to the warm touch ; a scene
 Of evanescent glory, once a stream,
 And soon to slide into a stream again.
 Alas ! 't was but a mortifying stroke
 Of undesign'd severity, that glanc'd
 (Made by a monarch) on her own estate,
 Of human grandeur and the courts of kings.
 'T was transient in it's nature, as in show
 'T was durable ; as worthless, as it seem'd
 Intrinsically precious ; to the foot
 Treach'rous and false ; it smil'd, and it was cold.

Great princes have great playthings. Some have
 play'd

At hewing mountains into men, and some
 At building human wonders mountain-high.
 Some have amus'd the dull, sad years of life,
 (Life spent in indolence, and therefore sad,)
 With schemes of monumental fame ; and sought
 By pyramids and mausolean pomp,
 Short-liv'd themselves, t' immortalize their bones.
 Some seek diversion in the tented field,
 And make the sorrows of mankind their sport.
 But war's a game, which, were their subjects wise,
 Kings would not play at. Nations would do well,
 T' extort their truncheons from the puny hands
 Of heroes, whose infirm and baby minds
 Are gratified with mischief ; and who spoil,
 Because men suffer it, their toy the World.

When Babel was confounded, and the great
 Confed'racy of projectors wild and vain
 Was split into diversity of tongues,
 Then, as a shepherd separates his flock,
 These to the upland, to the valley those,
 God drove asunder, and assign'd their lot
 To all the nations. Ample was the boon
 He gave them, in it's distribution fair
 And equal ; and he bade them dwell in peace.
 Peace was awhile their care : they plow'd and sow'd,

And reap'd their plenty without grudge or strife.
 But violence can never longer sleep
 Than human passions please. In ev'ry heart
 Are sown the sparks that kindle fiery war ;
 Occasion needs but fan them, and they blaze.
 Cain had already shed a brother's blood :
 The deluge wash'd it out ; but left unquench'd
 The seeds of murder in the breast of man.
 Soon by a righteous judgment in the line
 Of his descending progeny was found
 The first artificer of death ; the shrewd
 Contriver, who first sweated at the forge,
 And forc'd the blunt and yet unbloodied steel
 To a keen edge, and made it bright for war.
 Him, Tubal nam'd, the Vulcan of old times,
 The sword and falchion their inventor claim ;
 And the first smith was the first murd'rer's son.
 His art surviv'd the waters ; and ere long,
 When man was multiplied and spread abroad
 In tribes and clans, and had begun to call
 These meadows and that range of hills his own,
 The tasted sweets of property begat
 Desire of more ; and industry in some,
 T' improve and cultivate their just demesne,
 Made others covet what they saw so fair.

Thus war began on Earth : these fought for spoil,
 And those in self-defence. Savage at first
 The onset, and irregular. At length
 One eminent above the rest for strength,
 For stratagem, or courage, or for all,
 Was chosen leader ; him they serv'd in war,
 And him in peace, for sake of warlike deeds
 Rev'renc'd no less. Who could with him compare?
 Or who so worthy to control themselves,
 As he, whose prowess had subdu'd their foes?
 Thus war, affording field for the display
 Of virtue, made one chief, whom times of peace,
 Which have their exigencies too, and call
 For skill in government, at length made king.
 King was a name too proud for man to wear
 With modesty and meekness ; and the crown
 So dazzling in their eyes, who set it on,
 Was sure t' intoxicate the brows it bound.
 It is the abject property of most,
 That, being parcel of the common mass,
 And destitute of means to raise themselves,
 They sink, and settle lower than they need.
 They know not what it is to feel within
 A comprehensive faculty, that grasps
 Great purposes with ease, that turns and wields,
 Almost without an effort, plans too vast
 For their conception, which they cannot move.
 Conscious of impotence they soon grow drunk
 With gazing, when they see an able man
 Step forth to notice ; and, besotted thus,
 Build him a pedestal, and say, " Stand there,
 And be our admiration and our praise."
 They roll themselves before him in the dust,
 Then most deserving in their own account,
 When most extravagant in his applause,
 As if exalting him they rais'd themselves.
 Thus by degrees, self-cheated of their sound
 And sober judgment, that he is but man,
 They demi-deify and fume him so,
 That in due season he forgets it too.
 Inflated and astrut with self-conceit,
 He gulps the windy diet ; and ere long,
 Adopting their mistake, profoundly thinks
 The World was made in vain, if not for him.
 Thenceforth they are his cattle ; drudges, born
 To bear his burdens, drawing in his gears,
 And sweating in his service, his caprice
 Becomes the soul, that animates them all.
 He deems a thousand, or ten thousand lives,
 Spent in the purchase of renown for him,
 An easy reckoning ; and they think the same.
 Thus kings were first invented, thus kings
 Were burnish'd into heroes, and became
 The arbiters of this terraqueous swamp ;
 Storks among frogs, that have but croak'd and died.
 Strange, that such folly, as lifts bloated man
 To eminence fit only for a god,
 Should ever drivel out of human lips,
 Ev'n in the cradled weakness of the World !
 Still stranger much, that when at length mankind
 Had reach'd the sinewy firmness of their youth,
 And could discriminate and argue well
 On subjects more mysterious, they were yet
 Babes in the cause of freedom, and should fear
 And quake before the gods themselves had made ;
 But above measure strange, that neither proof
 Of sad experience, nor example set
 By some, whose patriot virtue has prevail'd,
 Can even now, when they are grown mature
 In wisdom, and with philosophic deeds

Familiar, serve t' emancipate the rest !
 Such dupes are men to custom, and so prone
 To rev'rence what is ancient, and can plead
 A course of long observance for its use,
 That even servitude, the worst of ills,
 Because deliver'd down from sire to son,
 Is kept and guarded as a sacred thing.
 But is it fit, or can it bear the shock
 Of rational discussion, that a man,
 Compounded and made up like other men
 Of elements tumultuous, in whom lust
 And folly in as ample measure meet,
 As in the bosoms of the slaves he rules,
 Should be a despot absolute, and boast
 Himself the only freeman of his land ?
 Should, when he pleases, and on whom he will,
 Wage war, with any or with no pretence
 Of provocation giv'n, or wrong sustain'd,
 And force the beggarly last doit, by means
 That his own humour dictates, from the church
 Of Poverty, that thus he may procure
 His thousands, weary of penurious life,
 A splendid opportunity to die ?
 Say ye, who (with less prudence than of old
 Jotham ascrib'd to his assembled trees
 In politic convention) put your trust
 I' th' shadow of a bramble, and reclin'd
 In fancied peace beneath his dang'rous branch,
 Rejoice in him, and celebrate his sway,
 Where find ye passive fortitude ? Whence springs
 Your self-denying zeal, that holds it good,
 To stroke the prickly grievance, and to hang
 His thorns with streamers of continual praise ?
 We, too, are friends to loyalty. We love
 The king who loves the law, respects his bounds,
 And reigns content within them : him we serve
 Freely and with delight, who leaves us free ;
 But recollecting still, that he is man,
 We trust him not too far. King though he be,
 And king in England too, he may be weak,
 And vain enough to be ambitious still ;
 May exercise amiss his proper pow'rs,
 Or covet more than freemen choose to grant :
 Beyond that mark is treason. He is ours,
 T' administer, to guard, t' adorn the state,
 But not to warp or change it. We are his,
 To serve him nobly in the common cause,
 True to the death, but not to be his slaves.
 Mark now the difference, ye that boast your love
 Of kings, between your loyalty and ours.
 We love the man, the paltry pageant you :
 We the chief patron of the commonwealth,
 You the regardless author of it's woes :
 We for the sake of liberty a king,
 You chains and bondage for a tyrant's sake.
 Our love is principle, and has it's root
 In reason, is judicious, manly, free ;
 Yours, a blind instinct, crouches to the rod,
 And licks the foot that treads it in the dust.
 Were kingship as true treasure as it seems,
 Sterling, and worthy of a wise man's wish,
 I would not be a king to be belov'd
 Causeless, and daub'd with undiscerning praise,
 Where love is mere attachment to the throne,
 Not to the man who fills it as he ought.
 Whose freedom is by suff'rance, and at will
 Of a superior, he is never free.
 Who lives, and is not weary of a life
 Expos'd to manacles, deserves them well.
 The state that strives for liberty, though foil'd,

and forc'd to abandon what she bravely sought,
 Deserves at least applause for her attempt,
 And pity for her loss. But that's a cause
 Not often unsuccessful: pow'r usurp'd,
 Weakness when oppos'd; conscious of wrong,
 'Tis pusillanimous and prone to flight.
 But slaves, that once conceive the glowing thought
 Of freedom, in that hope itself possess
 All that the contest calls for; spirit, strength,
 The scorn of danger, and united hearts;
 The surest presage of the good they seek.

Then shame to manhood, and opprobrious more
 To France than all her losses and defeats,
 Old or of later date, by sea or land,
 Her house of bondage, worse than that of old
 Which God aveng'd on Pharaoh—the Bastille,
 The horrid tow'rs, th' abode of broken hearts;
 The dungeons and ye cages of despair,
 That monarchs have supplied from age to age
 With music, such as suits their sov'reign ears,
 The sighs and groans of miserable men!
 There's not an English heart, that would not leap,
 To hear that ye were fall'n at last; to know
 That ev'n our enemies, so oft employ'd
 In forging chains for us, themselves were free.
 For he, who values Liberty, confines
 His zeal for her predominance within
 No narrow bounds; her cause engages him
 Wherever pleaded. 'Tis the cause of man.
 There dwell the most forlorn of human-kind,
 Immur'd, though unaccus'd, condemn'd untried,
 Cruelly spar'd, and hopeless of escape.
 There, like the visionary emblem seen
 By him of Babylon, life stands a stump,
 And, filletted about with hoops of brass,
 Still lives, though all his pleasant boughs are gone.
 To count the hour-bell and expect no change;
 And ever, as the sullen sound is heard,
 Still to reflect, that, though a joyless note
 To him, whose moments all have one dull pace,
 Ten thousand rovers in the World at large
 Account it music; that it summons some
 To theatre, or jocund feast, or ball:
 The wearied hireling finds it a release
 From labour; and the lover, who has chid
 It's long delay, feels ev'ry welcome stroke
 Upon his heart-strings, trembling with delight—
 To fly for refuge from distracting thought
 To such amusements, as ingenious woe
 Contrives, hard-shifting, and without her tools—
 To read engraven on the mouldy walls,
 In stagg'ring types, his predecessor's tale,
 A sad memorial, and subjoin his own—
 To turn purveyor to an overgorg'd
 And bloated spider, till the pamper'd pest
 Is made familiar, watches his approach,
 Comes at his call, and serves him for a friend—
 To wear out time in numb'ring to and fro
 The studs, that thick emboss his iron door;
 Then downward and then upward, then aslant,
 And then alternate; with a sickly hope
 By dint of change to give his tasteless task
 Some relish: till the sum, exactly found
 In all directions, he begins again.—
 Oh comfortless existence! hemm'd around
 With woes, which who that suffers would not kneel
 And beg for exile, or the pangs of death?
 That man should thus encroach on fellow-man,
 Abridge him of his just and native rights,

Eradicate him, tear him from his hold
 Upon th' endearments of domestic life
 And social, nip his fruitfulness and use,
 And doom him for perhaps a heedless word
 To barrenness, and solitude, and tears,
 Moves indignation, makes the name of king
 (Of king whom such prerogative can please)
 As dreadful as the Manichean god,
 Ador'd through fear, strong only to destroy.

'Tis liberty alone, that gives the flow'r
 Of fleeting life it's lustre and perfume;
 And we are weeds without it. All constraint,
 Except what wisdom lays on evil men,
 Is evil: hurts the faculties, impedes
 Their progress in the road of science; blinds
 The eyesight of Discov'ry; and begets,
 In those that suffer it, a sordid mind,
 Bestial, a meagre intellect, unfit
 To be the tenant of man's noble form.
 Thee therefore still, blameworthy as thou art,
 With all thy loss of empire, and though squeez'd
 By public exigence, till annual food
 Fails for the craving hunger of the state,
 Thee I account still happy, and the chief
 Among the nations, seeing thou art free,
 My native nook of earth! Thy clime is rude,
 Replete with vapours, and disposes much
 All hearts to sadness, and none more than mine:
 Thine unadult'rate manners are less soft
 And plausible than social life requires,
 And thou hast need of discipline and art,
 To give thee what politer France receives
 From nature's bounty—that humane address
 And sweetness, without which no pleasure is
 In converse, either starv'd by cold reserve,
 Or flush'd with fierce dispute, a senseless brawl.
 Yet being free I love thee: for the sake
 Of that one feature can be well content,
 Disgrac'd as thou hast been, poor as thou art,
 To seek no sublunary rest beside.
 But once enslav'd, farewell! I could endure
 Chains no-where patiently; and chains at home,
 Where I am free by birthright, not at all.
 Then what were left of roughness in the grain
 Of British natures, wanting it's excuse
 That it belongs to freemen, would disgust
 And shock me. I should then with double pain
 Feel all the rigour of thy fickle clime;
 And, if I must bewail the blessing lost,
 For which our Hampdens and our Sidneys bled,
 I would at least bewail it under skies
 Milder, among a people less austere;
 In scenes, which having never known me free,
 Would not reproach me with the loss I felt.
 Do I forbode impossible events,
 And tremble at vain dreams? Heav'n grant I may!
 But th' age of virtuous politics is past,
 And we are deep in that of cold pretence.
 Patriots are grown too shrewd to be sincere,
 And we too wise to trust them. He that takes
 Deep in his soft credulity the stamp
 Design'd by loud declaimers on the part
 Of liberty, themselves the slaves of lust,
 Incurs derision for his easy faith,
 And lack of knowledge, and with cause enough:
 For when was public virtue to be found,
 Where private was not? Can he love the whole,
 Who loves no part? He be a nation's friend,
 Who is in truth the friend of no man there?

Can he be strenuous in his country's cause,
Who slights the charities, for whose dear sake
That country, if at all, must be belov'd?

'T is therefore sober and good men are sad
For England's glory, seeing it wax pale
And sickly, while her champions wear their hearts
So loose to private duty, that no brain,
Healthful and undisturb'd by factious fumes,
Can dream them trusty to the gen'ral weal.
Such were they not of old, whose temper'd blades
Dispers'd the shackles of usurp'd control,
And hew'd them link from link; then Albion's sons
Were sous indeed; they felt a filial heart
Beat high within them at a mother's wrongs;
And, shining each in his domestic sphere,
Shone brighter still, once call'd to public view.
'T is therefore many, whose sequester'd lot
Forbids their interference, looking on,
Anticipate perforce some dire event;
And, seeing the old castle of the state,
That promis'd once more firmness, so assail'd,
That all it's tempest-beaten turrets shake,
Stand motionless expectants of it's fall.
All has it's date below; the fatal hour
Was register'd in Heav'n ere time began
We turn to dust, and all our mightiest works
Die too: the deep foundations that we lay,
Time plows them up, and not a trace remains.
We build with what we deem eternal rock:
A distant age asks where the fabric stood;
And in the dust, sifted and search'd in vain,
The undiscoverable secret sleeps.

But there is yet a liberty unsung
By poets, and by senators unprais'd,
Which monarchs cannot grant, nor all the pow'rs
Of Earth and Hell confed'rate take away:
A liberty, which persecution, fraud,
Oppression, prisons, have no pow'r to bind;
Which whoso tastes can be enslav'd no more.
'T is liberty of heart deriv'd from Heav'n,
Bought with his blood, who gave it to mankind,
And seal'd with the same token. It is held
By charter, and that charter sanction'd sure
By th' unimpeachable and awful oath
And promise of a God. His other gifts
All bear the royal stamp, that speaks them his,
And are august; but this transcends them all.
His other works, the visible display
Of all-creating energy and might,
Are grand no doubt, and worthy of the word,
That, finding an interminable space
Unoccupied, has fill'd the void so well,
And made so sparkling what was dark before.
But these are not his glory. Man, 't is true,
Smit with the beauty of so fair a scene,
Might well suppose th' artificer divine
Meant it eternal, had he not himself
Pronounc'd it transient, glorious as it is,
And, still designing a more glorious far,
Doom'd it as insufficient for his praise.
These, therefore, are occasional, and pass;
Form'd for the confutation of the fool,
Whose lying heart disputes against a God;
That office serv'd, they must be swept away.
Not so the labours of his love: they shine
In other heav'ns than these that we behold,
And fade not. There is Paradise that fears
No forfeiture, and of it's fruits he sends
Large prelibation oft to saints below.
Of these the first in order, and the pledge,

And confident assurance of the rest,
Is liberty; a flight into his arms,
Ere yet mortality's fine threads give way,
A clear escape from tyrannizing lust,
And full immunity from penal woe.

Chains are the portion of revolted man,
Stripes, and a dungeon; and his body serves
The triple purpose. In that sickly, foul,
Opprobrious residence he finds them all.
Propense his heart to idols, he is held
In silly dotage on created things,
Careless of their Creator. And that low
And sordid gravitation of his pow'rs
To a vile clod so draws him, with such force
Resistless from the centre he should seek,
That he at last forgets it. All his hopes
Tend downward; his ambition is to sink,
To reach a depth profounder still, and still
Profounder, in the fathomless abyss
Of folly, plunging in pursuit of death.
But ere he gain the comfortless repose
He seeks, and acquiescence of his soul
In Heav'n-renouncing exile, he endures—
What does he not, from lusts oppos'd in vain,
And self-reproaching conscience? He foresees
The fatal issue to his health, fame, peace,
Fortune, and dignity; the loss of all,
That can ennoble man, and make frail life,
Short as it is, supportable. Still worse,
Far worse than all the plagues, with which his sins
Infect his happiest moments, he forebodes
Ages of hopeless mis'ry. Future death,
And death still future. Not a hasty stroke,
Like that which sends him to the dusty grave;
But unrepealable enduring death.

Scripture is still a trumpet to his fears:
What none can prove a forg'ry may be true;
What none but bad men wish exploded must.
That scruple checks him. Riot is not loud
Nor drunk enough to drown it. In the midst
Of laughter his compunctions are sincere;
And he abhors the jest, by which he shines.
Remorse begets reform. His master-just
Falls first before his resolute rebuke,
And seems dethron'd and vanquish'd. Peace even
But spurious and short-liv'd; the puny child
Of self-congratulating Pride, begot
On fancied Innocence. Again he falls,
And fights again; but finds his best essay
A presage ominous, portending still
It's own dishonour by a worse relapse.
Till Nature, unavailing Nature, foil'd
So oft, and wearied in the vain attempt,
Scoffs at her own performance. Reason now
Takes part with appetite, and pleads the cause
Perversely, which of late she so condemn'd;
With shallow shifts and old devices, worn
And tatter'd in the service of debauch,
Cov'ring his shame from his offended sight.

"Hath God, indeed, giv'n appetites to man,
And stor'd the Earth so plenteously with means,
To gratify the hunger of his wish;
And doth he reprobate, and will he damn
The use of his own bounty? making first
So frail a kind, and then enacting laws
So strict, that less than perfect must despair?
Falsehood! which whoso but suspects of truth
Dishonours God, and makes a slave of man.
Do they themselves, who undertake for hire
The teacher's office, and dispense at large

their weekly dole of edifying strains, attend to their own music? have they faith
 in what with such solemnity of tone
 and gesture they propound to our belief?
 Nay — conduct hath the loudest tongue. The voice is but an instrument, on which the priest
 may play what tune he pleases. In the deed,
 he unequivocal, authentic deed,
 we find sound argument, we read the heart."

Such reasonings (if that name must needs belong to excuses in which reason has no part) serve to compose a spirit well-inclin'd,
 to live on terms of amity with vice,
 and sin without disturbance. Often urg'd,
 as often as libidinous discourse exhausted, he resorts to solemn themes of theological and grave import,) —
 they gain at last his unreserv'd assent;
 ill, harden'd his heart's temper in the forge
 of lust, and on the anvil of despair,
 he slights the strokes of conscience. Nothing moves,
 or nothing much, his constancy in ill;
 vain tamp'ring has but foster'd his disease;
 he is desp'rate, and he sleeps the sleep of death.
 Waste now, philosopher, and set him free.
 Harm the deaf serpent wisely. Make him hear of rectitude and fitness, moral truth
 how lovely, and the moral sense how sure, consulted and obey'd, to guide his steps
 directly to the FIRST AND ONLY FAIR.

Prepare not in such a cause. Spend all the pow'rs of rant and rhapsody in virtue's praise:
 the most sublimely good, verbosely grand,
 and with poetic trappings grace thy prose,
 till it outmantle all the pride of verse. —
 Ah, tinkling cymbal, and high-sounding brass, mitten in vain! such music cannot charm
 the eclipse, that intercepts truth's heav'nly beam,
 and chills and darkens a wide-wand'ring soul.
 The STILL SMALL VOICE is wanted. He must speak, whose word leaps forth at once to its effect;
 who calls for things that are not, and they come.

Grace makes the slave a freeman. 'Tis a change,
 that turns to ridicule the turgid speech
 and stately tone of moralists, who boast,
 as if, like him of fabulous renown,
 they had, indeed, ability to smooth
 the shag of savage nature, and were each an Orpheus, and omnipotent in song:
 but transformation of apostate man
 from fool to wise, from earthly to divine,
 to work for Him that made him. He alone,
 and he by means in philosophic eyes
 rival and worthy of disdain, achieves
 the wonder; humanizing what is brute
 in the lost kind, extracting from the lips
 of asps their venom, overpow'ring strength
 by weakness, and hostility by love.

Patriots have toil'd, and in their country's cause
 led nobly; and their deeds, as they deserve, receive proud recompense. We give in charge
 their names to the sweet lyre. Th' historic Muse, proud of the treasure, marches with it down
 to latest times; and Sculpture, in her turn,
 gives bond in stone and ever-during brass
 to guard them, and to immortalize her trust:
 but fairer wreaths are due, though never paid,
 to those, who, posted at the shrine of Truth,
 have fall'n in her defence. A patriot's blood,
 well spent in such a strife, may earn indeed,

And for a time ensure, to his lov'd land
 The sweets of liberty and equal laws;
 But martyrs struggle for a brighter prize,
 And win it with more pain. Their blood is shed
 In confirmation of the noblest claim,
 Our claim to feed upon immortal truth,
 To walk with God, to be divinely free,
 To soar, and to anticipate the skies.
 Yet few remember them. They liv'd unknown,
 Till Persecution dragg'd them into fame,
 And chas'd them up to Heav'n. Their ashes flew
 — No marble tells us whither. With their names
 No bard embalms and sanctifies his song:
 And History, so warm on meaner themes,
 Is cold on this. She execrates, indeed,
 The tyranny, that doom'd them to the fire,
 But gives the glorious suff'ers little praise.

He is the freeman, whom the truth makes free.
 And all are slaves beside. There's not a chain,
 That hellish foes, confed'rate for his harm,
 Can wind around him, but he casts it off,
 With as much ease as Samson his green withes.
 He looks abroad into the varied field
 Of nature, and though poor, perhaps, compar'd
 With those whose mansions glitter in his sight,
 Calls the delightful scen'ry all his own.
 His are the mountains, and the valleys his,
 And the resplendent rivers. His to enjoy
 With a propriety that none can feel,
 But who, with filial confidence inspir'd,
 Can lift to Heaven an unpresumptuous eye,
 And smiling say — "My father made them all!"
 Are they not his by a peculiar right,
 And by an emphasis of int'rest his,
 Whose eye they fill with tears of holy joy,
 Whose heart with praise, and whose exalted mind
 With worthy thoughts of that unwearied love
 That plann'd, and built, and still upholds, a world
 So cloth'd with beauty for rebellious man?
 Yes — ye may fill your garments, ye that reap
 The loaded soil, and ye may waste much good
 In senseless riot; but ye will not find
 In feast, or in the chase, in song or dance,
 A liberty like his, who, unimpeach'd
 Of usurpation, and to no man's wrong,
 Appropriates nature as his Father's work,
 And has a richer use of yours than you.
 He is indeed a freeman. Free by birth
 Of no mean city; plann'd or ere the hills
 Were built, the fountains open'd, or the sea
 With all his roaring multitude of waves.
 His freedom is the same in ev'ry state;
 And no condition of this changeful life,
 So manifold in cares, whose ev'ry day
 Brings it's own evil with it, makes it less:
 For he has wings, that neither sickness, pain,
 Nor penury, can cripple or confine.
 No nook so narrow but he spreads them there
 With ease, and is at large. Th' oppressor holds
 His body bound; but knows not what a range
 His spirit takes unconscious of a chain;
 And that to bind him is a vain attempt,
 Whom God delights in, and in whom he dwells.

Acquaint thyself with God, if thou would'st taste
 His works. Admitted once to his embrace,
 Thou shalt perceive that thou wast blind before:
 Thine eye shall be instructed, and thine heart
 Made pure shall relish with divine delight
 'Till then unfelt, what hands divine have wrought.
 Brutes graze the mountain-top, with faces prone,

And eyes intent upon the scanty herb
It yields them ; or, recumbent on it's brow,
Ruminate heedless of the scene outspread
Beneath, beyond, and stretching far away
From inland regions to the distant main.
Man views it, and admires ; but rests content
With what he views. The landscape has his praise,
But not it's author. Unconcern'd who form'd
The Paradise he sees, he finds it such,
And, such well pleas'd to find it, asks no more.
Not so the mind, that has been touch'd from Heav'n,
And in the school of sacred wisdom taught,
To read his wonders, in whose thought the World,
Fair as it is, existed ere it was.
Not for it's own sake merely, but for his
Much more, who fashion'd it, he gives it praise ;
Praise that from Earth resulting, as it ought,
To Earth's acknowledg'd sovereign finds at once
It's only just proprietor in Him.
The soul that sees him or receives sublim'd
New faculties, or learns at least t' employ
More worthily the pow'rs she own'd before,
Discerns in all things what, with stupid gaze
Of ignorance, till then she overlook'd,
A ray of heavenly light, gilding all forms
Terrestrial in the vast and the minute ;
The unambiguous footsteps of the God,
Who gives it's lustre to an insect's wing,
And wheels his throne upon the rolling worlds.
Much conversant with Heav'n, she often holds
With those fair ministers of light to man,
That fill the skies nightly with silent pomp,
Sweet conference. Inquires what strains were they
With which Heav'n rang, when ev'ry star in haste
To gratulate the new-created Earth,
Sent forth a voice, and all the sons of God
Shouted for joy. — " Tell me, ye shining hosts,
That navigate a sea that knows no storms,
Beneath a vault unsullied with a cloud,
If from your elevation, whence ye view
Distinctly scenes invisible to man,
And systems, of whose birth no tidings yet
Have reach'd this nether world, ye spy a race
Favour'd as ours ; transgressors from the womb,
And hasting to a grave, yet doom'd to rise,
And to possess a brighter Heav'n than yours ?
As one, who, long detain'd on foreign shores,
Pants to return, and when he sees afar
His country's weather-bleach'd and batter'd rocks,
From the green wave emerging, darts an eye
Radiant with joy towards the happy land ;
So I with animated hopes behold,
And many an aching wish, your beamy fires,
That show like beacons in the blue abyss,
Ordain'd to guide th' embodied spirit home
From toilsome life to never-ending rest.
Love kindles as I gaze. I feel desires,
That give assurance of their own success,
And that, infus'd from Heav'n, must thither tend."

So reads he nature, whom the lamp of truth
Illuminates. Thy lamp, mysterious Word!
Which whoso sees no longer wanders lost,
With intellects bema'z'd in endless doubt,
But runs the road of wisdom. Thou hast built
With means, that were not till by thee employ'd,
Worlds, that had never been hadst thou in strength
Been less, or less benevolent than strong.
They are thy witnesses, who speak thy pow'r
And goodness infinite, but speak in ears,
That hear not, or receive not their report.

In vain thy creatures testify of thee,
Till thou proclaim thyself. Theirs is indeed
A teaching voice ; but 't is the praise of thine,
That whom it teaches it makes prompt to learn,
And with the boon gives talents for it's use.
Till thou art heard, imaginations vain
Possess the heart, and fables false as Hell ;
Yet deem'd oracular, lure down to death
The uninform'd and heedless souls of men.
We give to chance, blind chance, ourselves a hint
The glory of thy work ; which yet appears
Perfect and unimpeachable of blame,
Challenging human scrutiny, and prov'd
Then skilful most when most severely judg'd.
But chance is not ; or is not where thou reign'st
Thy providence forbids that fickle pow'r
(If pow'r she be, that works but to confound)
To mix her wild vagaries with thy laws.
Yet thus we dote, refusing while we can
Instruction, and inventing to ourselves
Gods such as guilt makes welcome ; gods that sin
Or disregard our follies, or that sit
Amus'd spectators of this bustling stage.
Thee we reject, unable to abide
Thy purity, till pure as thou art pure,
Made such by thee, we love thee for that cause,
For which we shunn'd and hated thee before.
Then we are free. Then liberty, like day,
Breaks on the soul, and by a flash from Heav'n's
Fires all the faculties with glorious joy.
A voice is heard, that mortal ears hear not,
Till thou hast touch'd them ; 't is the voice of song,
A loud Hosanna sent from all thy works ;
Which he that hears it with a shout repeats,
And adds his rapture to the gen'ral praise.
In that blest moment Nature, throwing wide
Her veil opaque, discloses with a smile
The author of her beauties, who, retir'd
Behind his own creation, works unseen
By the impure, and hears his pow'r denied.
Thou art the source and centre of all minds,
Their only point of rest, eternal Word !
From thee departing they are lost, and rove
At random without honour, hope, or peace.
From thee is all, that soothes the life of man,
His high endeavour, and his glad success,
His strength to suffer, and his will to serve.
But O thou bounteous giver of all good,
Thou art of all thy gifts thyself the crown !
Give what thou canst, without thee we are poor ;
And with thee rich, take what thou wilt away.

Book VI.

THE WINTER WALK AT NOON.

Argument.

Bells at a distance. Their effect. A fine noon in winter. A sheltered walk. Meditation better than books. Our familiarity with the course of nature makes it appear less wonderful than it is. The transformation that Spring effects in a desert very described. A mistake concerning the course of nature corrected. God maintains it by an unremitted act. The amusements fashionable at this hour of the day reproved. Animals happy a delightful sight. Origin of cruelty to animals. That it is a great crime proved from Scripture. That proof illustrated by a tale. A line drawn between the lawful and unlawful destruction of them. Their good and useful properties insisted on. Apology for the encomiums bestowed by the author on animals. Instances of man's extravagant praise of man. The groans of the creation shall have an end. A view taken of the restoration of all things. An invocation and an invitation of Him, who shall bring it to pass. The retired man vindicated from the charge of uselessness. Conclusion.

There is in souls a sympathy with sounds,
And as the mind is pitch'd the ear is pleas'd
With melting airs or martial, brisk or grave;
Some chord in unison with what we hear
Is touch'd within us, and the heart replies.
How soft the music of those village bells,
Falling at intervals upon the ear
In cadence sweet, now dying all away,
Now pealing loud again, and louder still,
Clear and sonorous, as the gale comes on!
With easy force it opens all the cells
Where Mem'ry slept. Wherever I have heard
A kindred melody, the scene recurs,
And with it all its pleasures and its pains.
Such comprehensive views the spirit takes,
That in a few short moments I retrace
As in a map the voyager his course)
The windings of my way through many years.
Short as in retrospect the journey seems,
It seem'd not always short; the rugged path,
And prospect oft so dreary and forlorn,
Lov'd many a sigh at its disheart'ning length.
Yet feeling present evils, while the past
Faintly impress the mind, or not at all,
How readily we wish time spent revok'd,
That we might try the ground again, where once
Through inexperience, as we now perceive)
We miss'd that happiness we might have found!
Some friend is gone, perhaps his son's best friend,
A father, whose authority, in show
When most severe, and must'ring all its force,
Was but the graver countenance of love;
Whose favour, like the clouds of Spring, might low'r,
And utter now and then an awful voice,
But had a blessing in its darkest frown,
Threat'ning at once and nourishing the plant.
We lov'd, but not enough, the gentle hand,
That rear'd us. At a thoughtless age, allur'd
By ev'ry gilded folly, we renounc'd
His sheltering side, and wilfully forewent
That converse, which we now in vain regret.
How gladly would the man recall to life
The boy's neglected sire! a mother too,
That softer friend, perhaps more gladly still,
Might he demand them at the gates of death.
Morrow has, since they went, subdu'd and tam'd
The playful humour; he could now endure,
Himself grown sober in the vale of tears,)
And feel a parent's presence no restraint.
But not to understand a treasure's worth,
Till time has stolen away the slighted good,
Is cause of half the poverty we feel,
And makes the world the wilderness it is.
The few that pray at all pray oft amiss,
And, seeking grace to improve the prize they hold,
Would urge a wiser suit than asking more.

The night was Winter in his roughest mood;
The morning sharp and clear. But now at noon
Upon the southern side of the slant hills,

And where the woods fence off the northern blast,
The season smiles, resigning all its rage,
And has the warmth of May. The vault is blue
Without a cloud, and white without a speck
The dazzling splendour of the scene below.
Again the harmony comes o'er the vale;
And through the trees I view th' embattled tow'r,
Whence all the music. I again perceive
The soothing influence of the wafted strains,
And settle in soft musings as I tread
The walk, still verdant, under oaks and elms,
Whose outspread branches over-arch the glade.
The roof, though moveable through all its length
As the wind sways it, has yet well suffic'd,
And, intercepting in their silent fall
The frequent flakes, has kept a path for me.
No noise is here, or none that hinders thought.
The red-breast warbles still, but is content
With slender notes, and more than half suppress'd:
Pleas'd with his solitude, and fitting light
From spray to spray, where'er he rests he shakes
From many a twig the pendant drops of ice,
That tinkle in the wither'd leaves below.
Stillness, accompanied with sounds so soft,
Charms more than silence. Meditation here
May think down hours to moments. Here the heart
May give a useful lesson to the head,
And Learning wiser grow without his books.
Knowledge and Wisdom, far from being one,
Have oft-times no connection. Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men;
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge, a rude unprofitable mass,
The mere materials with which Wisdom builds,
Till smooth'd, and squar'd, and fitted to its place,
Does but encumber whom it seems to enrich.
Knowledge is proud that he has learn'd so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.
Books are not seldom talismans and spells,
By which the magic art of shrewder wits
Holds an unthinking multitude enthral'd.
Some to the fascination of a name
Surrender judgment hood-wink'd. Some the style
Infatuates, and through labyrinths and wilds
Of error leads them, by a tune entranc'd.
While sloth seduces more, too weak to bear
The insupportable fatigue of thought;
And swallowing therefore without pause or choice
The total grist unsifted, husks and all.
But trees and rivulets, whose rapid course
Defies the check of Winter, haunts of deer,
And sheep-walks populous with bleating lambs,
And lanes, in which the primrose ere her time [root,
Peeps through the moss, that clothes the hawthorn
Deceive no student. Wisdom there, and truth,
Not shy, as in the world, and to be won
By slow solicitation, seize at once
The roving thought, and fix it on themselves.

What prodigies can pow'r divine perform
More grand than it produces year by year,
And all in sight of inattentive man?
Familiar with the effect we slight the cause,
And in the constancy of nature's course,
And regular return of genial months,
And renovation of a faded world,
See nought to wonder at. Should God again,
As once in Gibeon, interrupt the race
Of the undeviating and punctual sun,
How would the world admire! but speaks it less
An agency divine, to make him know

His moment when to sink and when to rise,
 Age after age, than to arrest his course?
 All we behold is miracle; but, seen
 So duly, all is miracle in vain.
 Where now the vital energy, that mov'd,
 While Summer was, the pure and subtle lymph
 Through th' imperceptible meand'ring veins
 Of leaf and flow'r? It sleeps; and th' icy touch
 Of unprolific Winter has impress'd
 A cold stagnation on th' intestine tide.
 But let the months go round, a few short months,
 And all shall be restor'd. These naked shoots,
 Barren as lances, among which the wind
 Makes wintry music, sighing as it goes,
 Shall put their graceful foliage on again,
 And more aspiring, and with ampler spread, [lost.
 Shall boast new charms, and more than they have
 Then each, in it's peculiar honours clad,
 Shall publish even to the distant eye
 It's family and tribe. Laburnum, rich
 In streaming gold; syringa, iv'ry pure;
 The scentless and the scented rose; this red,
 And of an humbler growth, the other * tall,
 And throwing up into the darkest gloom
 Of neighb'ring cypress, or more sable yew,
 Her silver globes, light as the foamy surf,
 That the wind severs from the broken wave;
 The lilac, various in array, now white,
 Now sanguine, and her beauteous head now set
 With purple spikes pyramidal, as if
 Studious of ornament, yet unresolv'd
 Which hue she most approv'd, she chose them all;
 Copious of flow'rs the woodbine, pale and wan,
 But well compensating her sickly looks
 With never-cloying odours, early and late;
 Hypericum, all bloom, so thick a swarm
 Of flow'rs, like flies clothing her slender rods,
 That scarce a leaf appears; mezereon, too,
 Though leafless, well attir'd, and thick beset
 With blushing wreaths, investing ev'ry spray;
 Althæa with the purple eye; the broom
 Yellow and bright, as bullion unalloy'd,
 Her blossoms; and luxuriant above all
 The jasmine, throwing wide her elegant sweets,
 The deep dark green of whose unvarnish'd leaf
 Makes more conspicuous, and illumines more
 The bright profusion of her scatter'd stars. —
 These have been, and these shall be in their day;
 And all this uniform uncolour'd scene
 Shall be dismantled of it's fleecy load,
 And flush into variety again.
 From dearth to plenty, and from death to life,
 Is Nature's progress when she lectures man
 In heav'nly truth; evincing as she makes
 The grand transition, that there lives and works
 A soul in all things, and that soul is God.
 The beauties of the wilderness are his,
 That makes so gay the solitary place,
 Where no eye sees them. And the fairer forms,
 That cultivation glories in, are his.
 He sets the bright procession on it's way,
 And marshals all the order of the year;
 He marks the bounds, which Winter may not pass,
 And blunts his pointed fury; in it's case,
 Russet and rude, folds up the tender germ,
 Uninjur'd, with inimitable art;
 And ere one flow'ry season fades and dies,
 Designs the blooming wonders of the next.

* The Guelder-rose.

Some say, that in the origin of things,
 When all creation started into birth,
 The infant elements receiv'd a law,
 From which they swerve not since. That under force
 Of that controlling ordinance they move,
 And need not his immediate hand, who first
 Prescrib'd their course, to regulate it now.
 Thus dream they, and contrive to save a God
 Th' incumbrance of his own concerns, and spare
 The great Artificer of all that moves
 The stress of a continual act, the pain
 Of unremitted vigilance and care,
 As too laborious and severe a task.
 So man, the moth, is not afraid, it seems,
 To span omnipotence, and measure might,
 That knows no measure, by the scanty rule
 And standard of his own, that is to-day,
 And is not ere to-morrow's sun go down.
 But how should matter occupy a charge,
 Dull as it is, and satisfy a law
 So vast in it's demands, unless impell'd
 To ceaseless service by a ceaseless force,
 And under pressure of some conscious cause?
 The Lord of all, himself through all diffus'd,
 Sustains, and is the life of all that lives.
 Nature is but a name for an effect,
 Whose cause is God. He feeds the secret fire
 By which the mighty process is maintain'd,
 Who sleeps not, is not weary; in whose sight
 Slow-circling ages are as transient days;
 Whose work is without labour; whose design
 No flaw deforms, no difficulty thwarts;
 And whose beneficence no charge exhausts.
 Him blind antiquity profan'd, not serv'd,
 With self-taught rites, and under various names,
 Female and male, Pomona, Pales, Pan,
 And Flora, and Vertumnus; peopling Earth
 With tutelary goddesses and gods,
 That were not; and commending as they would
 To each some province, garden, field, or grove.
 But all are under one. One spirit — His,
 Who wore the platted thorns with bleeding brow.
 Rules universal nature. Not a flow'r
 But shows some touch, in freckle, streak, or stain,
 Of his unrivall'd pencil. He inspires
 Their balmy odours, and imparts their hues,
 And bathes their eyes with nectar, and includes
 In grains as countless as the sea-side sands,
 The forms, with which he sprinkles all the Earth.
 Happy who walks with him! whom what he feeds
 Of flavour or of scent in fruit or flow'r,
 Or what he views of beautiful or grand
 In nature, from the broad majestic oak
 To the green blade, that twinkles in the sun,
 Prompts with remembrance of a present God.
 His presence, who made all so fair, perceiv'd
 Makes all still fairer. As with him no scene
 Is dreary, so with him all seasons please.
 Though winter had been none, had man been true.
 And Earth be punish'd for it's tenants' sake,
 Yet not in vengeance; as this smiling sky,
 So soon succeeding such an angry night,
 And these dissolving snows, and this clear stream
 Recov'ring fast it's liquid music, prove.

Who then, that has a mind well strung and tun'd
 To contemplation, and within his reach
 A scene so friendly to his fav'rite task,
 Would waste attention at the chequer'd board,
 His host of wooden warriors to and fro
 Marching and countermarching, with an eye

As fix'd as marble, with a forehead ridg'd
 And furrow'd into storms, and with a hand
 Trembling, as if eternity were hung
 In balance on his conduct of a pin?
 For envies he aught more their idle sport,
 Who pant with application misapplied
 To trivial toys, and, pushing iv'ry balls
 Across a velvet level, feel a joy
 Like to rapture, when the bauble finds
 It's destin'd goal, of difficult access.
 For deems he wiser him, who gives his noon
 To Miss, the mercer's plague, from shop to shop
 Vand'ring and litt'ring with unfolded silks
 The polish'd counter, and approving none,
 Or promising with smiles to call again.
 For him, who by his vanity seduc'd,
 And sooth'd into a dream that he discerns
 The difference of a Guido from a daub,
 Frequents the crowded auction: station'd there
 As duly as the Langford of the show,
 With glass at eye, and catalogue in hand,
 And tongue accomplish'd in the fulsome cant
 And pedantry, that coxcombs learn with ease;
 Oft as the price-deciding hammer falls,
 He notes it in his book, then raps his box,
 Swears 't is a bargain, rails at his hard fate,
 That he has let it pass — but never bids.
 Here unmolested, through whatever sign
 The Sun proceeds, I wander. Neither mist,
 Nor freezing sky nor sultry, checking me,
 Nor stranger intermeddling with my joy.
 Ev'n in the spring and play-time of the year,
 That calls th' unwonted villager abroad
 With all her little ones, a sportive train,
 To gather kingcups in the yellow mead,
 And prink their hair with daisies, or to pick
 A cheap but wholesome sallad from the brook,
 These shades are all my own. The tim'rous hare,
 Grown so familiar with her frequent guest,
 Scarce shuns me; and the stockdove unalarm'd
 Sits cooing in the pine-tree, nor suspends
 His long love-ditty for my near approach.
 Drawn from his refuge in some lonely elm,
 That age or injury has hollow'd deep,
 Where, on his bed of wool and matted leaves,
 He has outslept the Winter, ventures forth,
 To frisk awhile, and bask in the warm sun,
 The squirrel, flippant, pert, and full of play:
 He sees me, and at once, swift as a bird, [brush,
 Ascends the neighb'ring beech; there whisks his
 And perks his ears, and stamps, and cries aloud,
 With all the prettiness of feign'd alarm,
 And anger insignificantly fierce.
 The heart is hard in nature, and unfit
 For human fellowship, as being void
 Of sympathy, and therefore dead alike
 To love and friendship both, that is not pleas'd
 With sight of animals enjoying life,
 Nor feels their happiness augment his own.
 The bounding fawn, that darts across the glade
 When none pursues, through mere delight of heart,
 And spirits buoyant with excess of glee;
 The horse as wanton, and almost as fleet,
 That skims the spacious meadow at full speed,
 Then stops, and snorts, and, throwing high his heels,
 Starts to the voluntary race again;
 The very kine, that gambol at high noon,
 The total herd receiving first from one,
 That leads the dance, a summons to be gay,
 Though wild their strange vagaries, and uncouth

Their efforts, yet resolv'd with one consent,
 To give such act and utterance as they may
 To ecstasy, too big to be suppress'd —
 These, and a thousand images of bliss,
 With which kind Nature graces ev'ry scene,
 Where cruel man defeats not her design,
 Impart to the benevolent, who wish
 All that are capable of pleasure pleas'd,
 A far superior happiness to theirs,
 The comfort of a reasonable joy.

Man scarce had ris'n, obedient to his call,
 Who form'd him from the dust, his future grave,
 When he was crown'd as never king was since.
 God set the diadem upon his head,
 And angel choirs attended. Wond'ring stood
 The new-made monarch, while before him pass'd,
 All happy, and all perfect in their kind,
 The creatures, summon'd from their various haunts,
 To see their sov'reign, and confess his sway.
 Vast was his empire, absolute his pow'r,
 Or bounded only by a law, whose force
 'T was his sublimest privilege to feel
 And own, the law of universal love.
 He rul'd with meekness, they obey'd with joy;
 No cruel purpose lurk'd within his heart,
 And no distrust of his intent in theirs.
 So Eden was a scene of harmless sport,
 Where kindness on his part, who rul'd the whole,
 Begat a tranquil confidence in all,
 And fear as yet was not, nor cause for fear.
 But sin marr'd all; and the revolt of man,
 That source of evils not exhausted yet,
 Was punish'd with revolt of his from him.
 Garden of God, how terrible the change
 Thy groves and lawns then witness'd! Ev'ry heart,
 Each animal, of ev'ry name, conceiv'd
 A jealousy and an instinctive fear,
 And, conscious of some danger, either fled
 Precipitate the loath'd abode of man,
 Or growl'd defiance in such angry sort,
 As taught him too to tremble in his turn.
 Thus harmony and family accord
 Were driv'n from Paradise; and in that hour
 The seeds of cruelty, that since have swell'd
 To such gigantic and enormous growth,
 Were sown in human nature's fruitful soil.
 Hence date the persecution and the pain,
 That man inflicts on all inferior kinds,
 Regardless of their plaints. To make him sport,
 To gratify the phrenzy of his wrath,
 Or his base gluttony, are causes good
 And just in his account, why bird and beast
 Should suffer torture, and the streams be dyed
 With blood of their inhabitants impal'd.
 Earth groans beneath the burden of a war
 Wag'd with defenceless innocence, while he,
 Not satisfied to prey on all around,
 Adds tenfold bitterness of death by pangs
 Needless, and first torments ere he devours.
 Now happiest they, that occupy the scenes
 The most remote from his abhor'd resort,
 Whom once, as delegate of God on Earth,
 They fear'd, and as his perfect image lov'd.
 The wilderness is theirs, with all it's caves,
 It's hollow glens, it's thickets, and it's plains,
 Unvisited by man. There they are free,
 And howl and roar as likes them, uncontroll'd;
 Nor ask his leave to slumber or to play.
 Woe to the tyrant, if he dare intrude
 Within the confines of their wild domain:

The lion tells him—"I am monarch here"—
 And, if he spare him, spares him on the terms
 Of royal mercy, and through gen'rous scorn,
 To rend a victim trembling at his foot.
 In measure, as by force of instinct drawn,
 Or by necessity constrain'd, they live
 Dependent upon man; those in his fields,
 These at his crib, and some beneath his roof.
 They prove too often at how dear a rate
 He sells protection.—Witness at his foot
 The spaniel, dying for some venial fault
 Under dissection of the knotted scourge;
 Witness the patient ox, with stripes and yells
 Driv'n to the slaughter, goaded, as he runs,
 To madness; while the savage at his heels
 Laughs at the frantic suff'rer's fury, spent
 Upon the guiltless passenger o'erthrown.
 He too is witness, noblest of the train
 That wait on man, the flight-performing horse;
 With unsuspecting readiness he takes
 His murd'rer on his back, and, push'd all day
 With bleeding sides and flanks, that heave for life,
 To the far distant goal, arrives and dies.
 So little mercy shows who needs so much!
 Does law, so jealous in the cause of man,
 Denounce no doom on the delinquent? None.
 He lives, and o'er his brimming beaker boasts
 (As if barbarity were high desert)
 Th' inglorious feat, and clamorous in praise
 Of the poor brute, seems wisely to suppose
 The honours of his matchless horse his own.
 But many a crime, deem'd innocent on Earth,
 Is register'd in Heav'n; and these no doubt
 Have each their record, with a curse annex'd.
 Man may dismiss compassion from his heart,
 But God will never. When he charg'd the Jew
 To assist his foe's down-fallen beast to rise;
 And when the bush-exploring boy, that seiz'd
 The young, to let the parent bird go free;
 Prov'd he not plainly, that his meaner works
 Are yet his care, and have an int'rest all,
 All, in the universal Father's love?
 On Noah, and in him on all mankind,
 The charter was conferr'd, by which we hold
 The flesh of animals in fee, and claim
 O'er all we feed on pow'r of life and death.
 But read the instrument, and mark it well:
 Th' oppression of a tyrannous control
 Can find no warrant there. Feed then, and yield
 Thanks for thy food. Carnivorous, through sin,
 Feed on the slain, but spare the living brute!

The Governor of all, himself to all
 So bountiful, in whose attentive ear
 The unfledg'd raven, and the lion's whelp,
 Plead not in vain for pity on the pangs
 Of hunger unassuag'd, has interpos'd,
 Not seldom, his avenging arm, to smite
 Th' injurious trampler upon Nature's law,
 That claims forbearance even for a brute.
 He hates the hardness of a Balaam's heart;
 And, prophet as he was, he might not strike
 The blameless animal, without rebuke,
 On which he rode. Her opportune offence
 Sav'd him, or th' unrelenting seer had died.
 He sees that human equity is slack
 To interfere, though in so just a cause:
 And makes the task his own. Inspiring dumb
 And helpless victims with a sense so keen
 Of inj'ry, with such knowledge of their strength,
 And such sagacity to take revenge,

That oft the beast has seem'd to judge the man.
 An ancient, not a legendary tale,
 By one of sound intelligence rehears'd,
 (If such who plead for Providence may seem
 In modern eyes,) shall make the doctrine clear.

Where England, stretch'd towards the setting sun,
 Narrow and long, o'erlooks the western wave,
 Dwelt young Misagathus; a scorner he
 Of God and goodness, atheist in ostent,
 Vicious in act, in temper savage-fierce.
 He journey'd; and his chance was as he went
 To join a trav'ller, of far different note,
 Evander, fam'd for piety, for years
 Deserving honour, but for wisdom more.
 Fame had not left the venerable man
 A stranger to the manners of the youth,
 Whose face, too, was familiar to his view.
 Their way was on the margin of the land,
 O'er the green summit of the rocks, whose base
 Beats back the roaring surge, scarce heard so high.
 The charity, that warm'd his heart, was mov'd
 At sight of the man-monster. With a smile
 Gentle, and affable, and full of grace,
 As fearful of offending whom he wish'd
 Much to persuade, he plied his ear with truths
 Not harshly thunder'd forth, or rudely press'd,
 But, like his purpose, gracious, kind, and sweet.
 "And dost thou dream," th' impenetrable man
 Exclaim'd, "that me the lullabies of age,
 And fantasies of dotards such as thou,
 Can cheat, or move a moment's fear in me?
 Mark now the proof I give thee, that the brave
 Need no such aids, as superstition lends,
 To steel their hearts against the dread of death."
 He spoke, and to the precipice at hand
 Push'd with a madman's fury. Fancy shrinks,
 And the blood thrills and curdles, at the thought
 Of such a gulf as he design'd his grave.
 But, though the felon on his back could dare
 The dreadful leap, more rational, his steed
 Declin'd the death, and wheeling swiftly round,
 Or e'er his hoof had press'd the crumbling verge,
 Baffled his rider, sav'd against his will.
 The phrenzy of the brain may be redress'd
 By med'cine well applied, but without grace
 The heart's insanity admits no cure.
 Enrag'd the more, by what might have reform'd
 His horrible intent, again he sought
 Destruction, with a zeal to be destroy'd,
 With sounding whip, and rowels dyed in blood.
 But still in vain. The Providence, that meant
 A longer date to the far nobler beast,
 Spar'd yet again th' ignoble for his sake.
 And now, his prowess prov'd, and his sincere
 Incurable obduracy evinc'd, [earn'd
 His rage grew cool; and pleas'd, perhaps, t' have
 So cheaply the renown of that attempt,
 With looks of some complacence he resum'd
 His road, deriding much the blank amaze
 Of good Evander, still where he was left
 Fix'd motionless, and petrified with dread.
 So on they far'd. Discourse on other themes
 Ensuing seem'd t' obliterate the past;
 And tamer far for so much fury shown,
 (As is the course of rash and fiery men,)
 The rude companion smil'd, as if transform'd.
 But 't was a transient calm. A storm was near,
 An unsuspected storm. His hour was come,
 The impious challenger of Pow'r divine [wrath
 Was now to learn, that Heav'n, though slow to Never with impunity defied.

His horse, as he had caught his master's mood,
Mortifying, and starting into sudden rage,
Forbidden, and not now to be controll'd,
Dash'd to the cliff, and, having reach'd it, stood.
At once the shock unseated him: he flew
Heer'd o'er the craggy barrier; and immers'd
Deep in the flood, found, when he sought it not,
The death he had deserv'd, and died alone.

O God wrought double justice; made the fool
The victim of his own tremendous choice,
And taught a brute the way to safe revenge.

I would not enter on my list of friends [sense,
Though grac'd with polish'd manners and fine
(yet wanting sensibility) the man,

Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.

An inadvertent step may crush the snail,
That crawls at ev'ning in the public path;
But he that has humanity, forewarn'd,
Will tread aside and let the reptile live.

The creeping vermin, loathsome to the sight,
And charg'd, perhaps, with venom, that intrudes,
A visitor unwelcome, into scenes

Sacred to neatness and repose, th' alcove,
The chamber, or refectory, may die:

A necessary act incurs no blame.

Not so when, held within their proper bounds,
And guiltless of offence, they range the air,
Or take their pastime in the spacious field:

There they are privileg'd; and he that hunts

Or harms them there is guilty of a wrong,

Disturbs the economy of Nature's realm,

Who, when she form'd, design'd them an abode.

The sum is this. If man's convenience, health

Or safety, interfere, his rights and claims

Are paramount, and must extinguish theirs.

Else they are all — the meanest things that are,

As free to live, and to enjoy that life,

As God was free to form them at the first,

Who in his sov'reign wisdom made them all.

Ye, therefore, who love mercy, teach your sons

To love it too. The spring-time of our years

Is soon dishonour'd and defil'd in most

By budding ills, that ask a prudent hand

To check them. But, alas! none sooner shoots,

If unrestrain'd, into luxuriant growth,

Than cruelty, most dev'lish of them all.

Mercy to him that shows it, is the rule

And righteous limitation of it's act,

By which Heav'n moves in pard'ning guilty man;

And he that shows none, being ripe in years,

And conscious of the outrage he commits,

Shall seek it, and not find it, in his turn.

Distinguish'd much by reason, and still more

By our capacity of Grace divine,

From creatures, that exist but for our sake,

Which, having serv'd us, perish, we are held

Accountable; and God some future day

Will reckon with us roundly for th' abuse

Of what he deems no mean or trivial trust.

Superior as we are, they yet depend

Not more on human help than we on theirs.

Their strength, or speed, or vigilance, were giv'n

In aid of our defects. In some are found

Such teachable and apprehensive parts,

That man's attainments in his own concerns,

Match'd with th' expertness of the brutes in theirs,

Are oft-times vanquish'd and thrown far behind.

Some show that nice sagacity of smell,

And read with such discernment, in the port

And figure of the man, his secret aim,
That oft we owe our safety to a skill
We could not teach, and must despair to learn.
But learn we might, if not too proud to stoop
To quadruped instructors, many a good
And useful quality, and virtue too,
Rarely exemplified among ourselves.
Attachment, never to be wean'd, or chang'd
By any change of fortune, proof alike
Against unkindness, absence, and neglect;
Fidelity, that neither bribe nor threat
Can move or warp; and gratitude for small
And trivial favours, lasting as the life,
And glist'ning even in the dying eye.

Man praises man. Desert in arts or arms
Wins public honour; and ten thousand sit
Patiently present at a sacred song,
Commemoration mad; content to hear
(O wonderful effect of music's power!)
Messiah's eulogy for Handel's sake.
But less, methinks, than sacrilege might serve —
(For was it less? what heathen would have dar'd
To strip Jove's statue of his oaken wreath,
And hang it up in honour of a man?)
Much less might serve, when all that we design
Is but to gratify an itching ear,
And give the day to a musician's praise.
Remember Handel! Who, that was not born
Deaf as the dead to harmony, forgets,
Or can, the more than Homer of his age?
Yes — we remember him; and while we praise
A talent so divine, remember too
That His most holy book, from whence it came,
Was never meant, was never us'd before,
To buckram out the mem'ry of a man.
But hush! the Muse perhaps is too severe;
And with a gravity beyond the size
And measure of th' offence, rebukes a deed
Less impious than absurd, and owing more
To want of judgment than to wrong design.
So in the chapel of old Ely House,
When wand'ring Charles, who meant to be the third,
Had fled from William, and the news was fresh,
The simple clerk, but loyal, did announce,
And eke did rear right merrily, two staves,
Sung to the praise and glory of King George!
— Man praises man; and Garrick's mem'ry next,
When time hath somewhat mellow'd it, and made
The idol of our worship while he liv'd
The God of our idolatry once more,
Shall have it's altar; and the World shall go
In pilgrimage to bow before his shrine.
The theatre, too small, shall suffocate
It's squeez'd contents, and more than it admits
Shall sigh at their exclusion, and return
Ungratified: for there some noble lord
Shall stuff his shoulders with King Richard's bunch,
Or wrap himself in Hamlet's inky cloak.
And strut, and storm, and straddle, stamp and stare,
To show the world how Garrick did not act.
For Garrick was a worshipper himself;
He drew the liturgy, and fram'd the rites
And solemn ceremonial of the day,
And call'd the world to worship on the banks
Of Avon, fam'd in song. Ah, pleasant proof
That piety has still in human hearts
Some place, a spark or two not yet extinct.
The mulb'rry-tree was hung with blooming wreaths;
The mulb'rry-tree stood centre of the dance;
The mulb'rry-tree was hymn'd with dulcet airs;

And from his touchwood trunk the mulb'rry-tree
 Supplied such relics as devotion holds
 Still sacred, and preserves with pious care.
 So 't was a hallow'd time : decorum reign'd,
 And mirth without offence. No few return'd,
 Doubtless much edified, and all refresh'd.
 —Man praises man. The rabble all alive
 From tippling benches, cellars, stalls, and styes,
 Swarm in the streets. The statesman of the day,
 A pompous and slow-moving pageant, comes.
 Some shout him, and some hang upon his car,
 To gaze in 's eyes, and bless him. Maidens wave
 Their kerchiefs, and old women weep for joy :
 While others, not so satisfied, unhorse
 The gilded equipage, and turning loose
 His steeds, usurp a place they well deserve.
 Why? what has charm'd them? Hath he sav'd the state?

No. Doth he purpose it's salvation? No.
 Enchanting novelty, that moon at full,
 That finds out ev'ry crevice of the head,
 That is not sound and perfect, hath in theirs
 Wrought this disturbance. But the wane is near,
 And his own cattle must suffice him soon.
 Thus idly do we waste the breath of praise,
 And dedicate a tribute, in it's use
 And just direction sacred, to a thing
 Doom'd to the dust, or lodg'd already there.
 Encomium in old time was poet's work ;
 But poets, having lavishly long since
 Exhausted all materials of the art,
 The task now falls into the public hand ;
 And I, contented with an humble theme,
 Have pour'd my stream of panegyric down
 The vale of Nature, where it creeps, and winds
 Among her lovely works with a secure
 And unambitious course, reflecting clear,
 If not the virtues, yet the worth, of brutes.
 And I am recompens'd, and deem the toils
 Of poetry not lost, if verse of mine
 May stand between an animal and woe,
 And teach one tyrant pity for his drudge.

The groans of Nature in this nether world,
 Which Heav'n has heard for ages, have an end.
 Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
 Whose fire was kindled at the prophets' lamp,
 The time of rest, the promis'd sabbath, comes.
 Six thousand years of sorrow have well-nigh
 Fulfill'd their tardy and disastrous course
 Over a sinful world ; and what remains
 Of this tempestuous state of human things
 Is merely as the working of a sea
 Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest :
 For He, whose car the winds are, and the clouds
 The dust, that waits upon his sultry march,
 When sin hath mov'd him, and his wrath is hot,
 Shall visit Earth in mercy ; shall descend
 Propitious in his chariot pav'd with love ;
 And what his storms have blasted and defac'd
 For man's revolt shall with a smile repair.

Sweet is the harp of prophecy ; too sweet
 Not to be wrong'd by a mere mortal touch :
 Nor can the wonders it records be sung
 To meaner music, and not suffer loss.
 But when a poet, or when one like me,
 Happy to rove among poetic flow'rs,
 Though poor in skill to rear them, lights at last
 On some fair theme, some theme divinely fair,
 Such is the impulse and the spur he feels,
 To give it praise proportion'd to it's worth,

That not t' attempt it, arduous as he deems
 The labour, were a task more arduous still.

O scenes surpassing fable, and yet true,
 Scenes of accomplish'd bliss ! which who can see,
 Though but in distant prospect, and not feel
 His soul refresh'd with foretaste of the joy ?
 Rivers of gladness water all the Earth,
 And clothe all climes with beauty : the reproach
 Of barrenness is past. The fruitful field
 Laughs with abundance ; and the land, once lean,
 Or fertile only in it's own disgrace,
 Exults to see it's thistly curse repeal'd.
 The various seasons woven into one,
 And that one season an eternal spring,
 The garden fears no blight, and needs no fence,
 For there is none to covet, all are full.
 The lion, and the libbard, and the bear,
 Graze with the fearless flocks ; all bask at noon,
 Together, or all gambol in the shade
 Of the same grove, and drink one common stream.
 Antipathies are none. No foe to man
 Lurks in the serpent now : the mother sees,
 And smiles to see, her infant's playful hand
 Stretch'd forth to dally with the crested worm,
 To stroke his azure neck, or to receive
 The lambent homage of his arrowy tongue.
 All creatures worship man, and all mankind
 One Lord, one Father. Error has no place :
 That creeping pestilence is driv'n away :
 The breath of Heav'n has chas'd it. In the best
 No passion touches a discordant string,
 But all is harmony and love. Disease
 Is not : the pure and uncontaminate blood
 Holds it's due course, nor fears the frost of age.
 One song employs all nations ; and all cry,
 " Worthy the Lamb, for he was slain for us !"
 The dwellers in the vales and on the rocks
 Shout to each other, and the mountain tops
 From distant mountains catch the flying joy ;
 Till, nation after nation taught the strain,
 Earth rolls the rapturous Hosanna round.
 Behold the measure of the promise fill'd ;
 See Salem built, the labour of a God !
 Bright as a sun the sacred city shines ;
 All kingdoms and all princes of the Earth
 Flock to that light ; the glory of all lands
 Flows into her ; unbounded is her joy,
 And endless her increase. Thy rams are there,
 Nebaioth, and the flocks of Kedar there * :
 The looms of Ormus, and the mines of Ind,
 And Saba's spicy groves, pay tribute there.
 Praise is in all her gates : upon her walls,
 And in her streets, and in her spacious courts,
 Is heard salvation. Eastern Java there
 Kneels with the native of the farthest west ;
 And Æthiopia spreads abroad the hand,
 And worships. Her report has travell'd forth
 Into all lands. From ev'ry clime they come
 To see thy beauty, and to share thy joy,
 O Sion ! an assembly such as Earth
 Saw never, such as Heav'n stoops down to see. [once
 Thus Heav'nward all things tend. For all were Perfect, and all must be at length restor'd.
 So God has greatly purpos'd ; who would else
 In his dishonour'd works himself endure

* Nebaioth and Kedar, the sons of Ishmael, and progenitors of the Arabs, in the prophetic scripture here alluded to, may be reasonably considered as representatives of the Gentiles at large.

Dishonour, and be wrong'd without redress.
Haste then, and wheel away a shatter'd world,
Ye slow-revolving seasons ! we would see
( A sight to which our eyes are strangers yet )
A world, that does not dread and hate his laws,
And suffer for it's crime ; would learn how fair
The creature is, that God pronounces good,
How pleasant in itself what pleases him.
Here ev'ry drop of honey hides a sting ;
Worms wind themselves into our sweetest flow'rs ;
And ev'n the joy, that haply some poor heart
Derives from Heav'n, pure as the fountain is,
Is sullied in the stream, taking a taint
From touch of human lips, at best impure.
O for a world in principle as chaste
As this is gross and selfish ! over which
Custom and prejudice shall bear no sway,
That govern all things here, should ring aside
The meek and modest Truth, and forcing her
To seek a refuge from the tongue of Strife
In nooks obscure, far from the ways of men ;
Where Violence shall never lift the sword,
Nor Cunning justify the proud man's wrong,
Leaving the poor no remedy but tears :
Where he, that fills an office, shall esteem
Th' occasion it presents of doing good
More than the perquisite : where Law shall speak
Seldom, and never but as Wisdom prompts
And Equity ; not jealous more to guard
A worthless form, than to decide aright.
Where Fashion shall not sanctify abuse,
Nor smooth Good-breeding (supplemental grace)
With lean performance ape the work of Love !
Come then, and, added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the Earth,
'Thou who alone art worthy ! It was thine
By ancient covenant, ere Nature's birth ;
And thou hast made it thine by purchase since,
And overpaid it's value with thy blood.
Thy saints proclaim thee King ; and in their hearts
Thy title is engraven with a pen
Dipp'd in the fountain of eternal love.
Thy saints proclaim thee King ; and thy delay
Gives courage to their foes, who, could they see
The dawn of thy last advent, long desir'd,
Would creep into the bowels of the hills,
And flee for safety to the falling rocks.
The very spirit of the world is tir'd
Of it's own taunting question, ask'd so long,
" Where is the promise of your Lord's approach ?"
The infidel has shot his bolts away,
Till, his exhausted quiver yielding none,
He gleans the blunted shafts, that have recoil'd,
And aims them at the shield of Truth again.
The veil is rent, rent, too, by priestly hands,
That hides divinity from mortal eyes ;
And all the mysteries to faith propos'd,
Insulted and traduc'd, are cast aside,
As useless, to the moles and to the bats.
They now are deem'd the faithful, and are prais'd,
Who, constant only in rejecting thee,
Deny thy Godhead with a martyr's zeal,
And quit their office for their error's sake.
Blind, and in love with darkness ! yet ev'n these Worthy, compar'd with sycophants, who knee
Thy name adoring, and then preach thee man !
So fares thy church. But how thy church may fare,
The world takes little thought. Who will may preach,
And what they will. All pastors are alike

To wand'ring sheep, resolv'd to follow none.
Two gods divide them all — Pleasure and Gain :
For these they live, they sacrifice to these,
And in their service wage perpetual war
With Conscience and with thee. Lust in their hearts,
And mischief in their hands, they roam the Earth,
To prey upon each other : stubborn, fierce,
High-minded, feaming out their own disgrace.
Thy prophets speak of such ; and, noting down
The features of the last degen'rate times,
Exhibit ev'ry lineament of these.
Come then, and added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, as radiant as the rest,
Due to thy last and most effectual work,
Thy word fulfill'd, the conquest of a world !
He is the happy man, whose life e'en now
Shows somewhat of that happier life to come ;
Who, doom'd to an obscure but tranquil state,
Is pleas'd with it, and, were he free to choose,
Would make his fate his choice ; whom peace, the fruit
Of virtue, and whom virtue, fruit of faith,
Prepare for happiness ; bespeak him one
Content indeed to sojourn while he must
Below the skies, but having there his home.
The World o'erlooks him in her busy search
Of objects, more illustrious in her view ;
And, occupied as earnestly as she,
Though more sublimely, he o'erlooks the World.
She scorns his pleasures, for she knows them not ;
He seeks not hers, for he has prov'd them vain ;
He cannot skim the ground like summer birds
Pursuing gilded flies ; and such he deems
Her honours, her emoluments, her joys.
Therefore in contemplation is his bliss, [Earth
Whose pow'r is such, that whom she lifts from
She makes familiar with a Heav'n unseen,
And shows him glories yet to be reveal'd.
Not slothful he, though seeming unemploy'd,
And censur'd oft as useless. Stillest streams
Oft water fairest meadows, and the bird
That flutters least, is longest on the wing.
Ask him, indeed, what trophies he has rais'd,
Or what achievements of immortal fame
He purposes, and he shall answer — None.
His warfare is within. There, unfatigu'd,
His fervent spirit labours. There he fights,
And there obtains fresh triumphs o'er himself,
And never-with'ring wreaths, compar'd with which
The laurels that a Cæsar reaps are weeds.
Perhaps the self-approving haughty World,
That as she sweeps him with her whistling silks
Scarce deigns to notice him, or, if she see,
Deems him a cipher in the works of God,
Receives advantage from his noiseless hours,
Of what she little dreams. Perhaps she owes
Her sunshine and her rain, her blooming spring
And plenteous harvest, to the pray'r he makes,
When, Isaac-like, the solitary saint
Walks forth to meditate at even-tide,
And think on her, who thinks not for herself.
Forgive him then, thou bustler in concerns
Of little worth, an idler in the best,
If, author of no mischief and some good,
He seek his proper happiness by means,
That may advance, but cannot hinder, thine.
Nor, though he tread the secret path of life,
Engage no notice, and enjoy much ease,
Account him an encumbrance on the state,
Receiving benefits, and rend'ring none.

His sphere though humble, if that humble sphere
Shine with his fair example, and though small
His influence, if that influence all be spent
In soothing sorrow, and in quenching strife,
In aiding helpless indigence, in works,
From which at least a grateful few derive
Some taste of comfort in a world of woe ;
Then let the supercilious great confess
He serves his country, recompenses well
The state, beneath the shadow of whose vine
He sits secure, and in the scale of life
Holds no ignoble, though a slighted, place.
The man, whose virtues are more felt than seen,
Must drop indeed the hope of public praise ;
But, he may boast, what few that win it can,
That, if his country stand not by his skill,
At least his follies have not wrought her fall.
Polite Refinement offers him in vain
Her golden tube, through which a sensual World
Draws gross impurity, and likes it well,
The neat conveyance hiding all the offence.
Not that he peevishly rejects a mode,
Because that World adopts it. If it bear
The stamp and clear impression of good sense,
And be not costly more than of true worth,
He puts it on, and for decorum sake
Can wear it e'en as gracefully as she.
She judges of refinement by the eye,
He, by the test of conscience, and a heart
Not soon deceiv'd ; aware, that what is base
No polish can make sterling ; and that vice,
Though well perfum'd and elegantly dress'd,
Like an unburied carcase trick'd with flow'rs,
Is but a garnish'd nuisance, fitter far
For cleanly riddance, than for fair attire.
So life glides smoothly and by stealth away,
More golden than that age of fabled gold
Renown'd in ancient song ; not vex'd with care
Or stain'd with guilt, beneficent, approv'd
Of God and man, and peaceful in it's end.
So glide my life away ! and so at last,
My share of duties decently fulfill'd,
May some disease, not tardy to perform
It's destin'd office, yet with gentle stroke,
Dismiss me weary to a safe retreat,
Beneath the turf, that I have often trod.
It shall not grieve me then, that once when call'd
To dress a Sofa with the flow'rs of verse,
I play'd awhile, obedient to the fair,
With that light task ; but soon, to please her more,
Whom flow'rs alone I knew would little please,
Let fall th' unfinish'd wreath, and rov'd for fruit ;
Rov'd far, and gather'd much : some harsh, 't is true,
Pick'd from the thorns and briers of reproof,
But wholesome, well-digested ; grateful some
To palates, that can taste immortal truth ;
Inspid else, and sure to be despis'd.
But all is in his hand, whose praise I seek.
In vain the poet sings, and the world hears,
If he regard not, though divine the theme.
'T is not in artful measures, in the chime
And idle tinkling of a minstrel's lyre,
To charm his ear, whose eye is on the heart ;
Whose frown can disappoint the proudest strain,
Whose approbation — prosper even mine.

TIROCINIUM:

OR,

A REVIEW OF SCHOOLS.

Κεφαλαιον δε παιδευσεως οφειν τροφη.—Plato.

Αρχη πολιτικης παιδεως ηναι τροφη.—Diog. Laert.

It is not from his form, in which we trace
Strength join'd with beauty, dignity with grace,
That man, the master of this globe, derives
His right of empire over all that lives.
That form, indeed, th' associate of a mind
Vast in it's powers, ethereal in it's kind,
That form, the labour of Almighty skill,
Fram'd for the service of a free-born will,
Asserts precedence, and bespeaks control,
But borrows all it's grandeur from the soul.
Hers is the state, the splendour, and the throne
An intellectual kingdom, all her own.
For her the Mem'ry fills her ample page
With truths pour'd down from ev'ry distant age ;
For her amasses an unbounded store,
The wisdom of great nations, now no more ;
Though laden, not encumber'd with her spoil ;
Laborious, yet unconscious of her toil ;
When copiously supplied, then most enlarg'd ;
Still to be fed, and not to be surcharg'd.
For her the Fancy, roving unconfin'd,
The present muse of ev'ry pensive mind,
Works magic wonders, adds a brighter hue
To Nature's scenes than Nature ever knew.
At her command winds rise, and waters roar,
Again she lays them slumb'ring on the shore ;
With flow'r and fruit the wilderness supplies,
Or bids the rocks in ruder pomp arise.
For her the Judgment, umpire in the strife,
That Grace and Nature have to wage through life,
Quick-sighted arbiter of good and ill,
Appointed sage preceptor to the Will,
Condemns, approves, and with a faithful voice
Guides the decision of a doubtful choice.
Why did the fiat of a God give birth
To yon fair Sun, and his attendant Earth ?
And, when descending he resigns the skies,
Why takes the gentler Moon her turn to rise,
Whom Ocean feels through all his countless waves,
And owns her pow'r on ev'ry shore he laves ?
Why do the seasons still enrich the year,
Fruitful and young as in their first career ?
Spring hangs her infant blossoms on the trees,
Rock'd in the cradle of the western breeze ;
Summer in haste the thriving charge receives
Beneath the shade of her expanded leaves,
Till Autumn's fiercer heats and plenteous dews
Dye them at last in all their glowing hues. —
'T were wild profusion all, and bootless waste,
Pow'r misemploy'd, munificence misplac'd,
Had not it's author dignified the plan,
And crown'd it with the majesty of man.
Thus form'd, thus plac'd, intelligent, and taught,
Look where he will, the wonders God has wrought,
The wildest scorner of his Maker's laws
Finds in a sober moment time to pause,
To press th' important question on his heart,
“ Why form'd at all, and wherefore art thou art ? ”
If man be what he seems, this hour a slave,
The next mere dust and ashes in the grave ;

Indu'd with reason only to descry
His crimes and follies with an aching eye ;
With passions, just that he may prove, with pain,
The force he spends against their fury vain ;
And if, soon after having burnt, by turns,
With ev'ry lust, with which frail Nature burns,
His being end, where death dissolves the bond,
The tomb take all, and all be blank beyond ;
Then he, of all that Nature has brought forth,
Stands self-impeach'd the creature of least worth,
And useless while he lives and when he dies,
Brings into doubt the wisdom of the skies.

Truths, that the learn'd pursue with eager thought,
Are not important always as dear bought,
Proving at last, though told in pompous strains,
A childish waste of philosophic pains ;
But truths, on which depends our main concern,
That 't is our shame and mis'ry not to learn,
Shine by the side of ev'ry path we tread
With such a lustre, he that runs may read.
T is true that, if to trifle life away
Down to the sunset of their latest day,
Then perish on futurity's wide shore
Like fleeting exhalations, found no more,
Were all that Heav'n requir'd of human-kind,
And all the plan their destiny design'd,
What none could rev'rence all might justly blame,
And man would breathe but for his Maker's shame.

But reason heard, and nature well perus'd,
At once the dreaming mind is disabus'd.
If all we find possessing earth, sea, air,
Reflect his attributes, who plac'd them there,
Fulfil the purpose, and appear design'd
Proofs of the wisdom of th' all-seeing mind,
'T is plain the creature, whom he chose t' invest
With kingship and dominion o'er the rest,
Receiv'd his nobler nature, and was made
Fit for the power, in which he stands array'd ;
That first, or last, hereafter, if not here,
He, too, might make his author's wisdom clear,
Praise him on Earth, or, obstinately dumb,
Suffer his justice in a world to come.
This once believ'd, 't were logic misapplied,
To prove a consequence by none denied,
That we are bound to cast the minds of youth
Betwixt into the mould of heav'nly truth,
That taught of God they may indeed be wise,
Nor, ignorantly wand'ring, miss the skies.

In early days the conscience has in most
A quickness, which in later life is lost :
Preserv'd from guilt by salutary fears,
Or, guilty, soon relenting into tears.
Too careless often, as our years proceed,
What friends we sort with, or what books we read,
Our parents yet exert a prudent care,
To feed our infant minds with proper fare ;
And wisely store the nurs'ry by degrees
With wholesome learning, yet acquir'd with ease.
Neatly secur'd from being soil'd or torn
Beneath a pane of thin translucent horn,
A book (to please us at a tender age
'T is call'd a book, though but a single page)
Presents the pray'r the Saviour deign'd to teach,
Which children use, and parsons — when they preach.

Lisping our syllables, we scramble next
Through moral narrative, or sacred text ;
And learn with wonder how this world began,
Who made, who marr'd, and who has ransom'd, man.

Points, which, unless the Scripture made them plain,
The wisest heads might agitate in vain.
O thou, whom, borne on fancy's eager wing
Back to the season of life's happy spring,
I pleas'd remember, and, while Mem'ry yet
Holds fast her office here, can ne'er forget ;
Ingenious dreamer, in whose well-told tale
Sweet fiction and sweet truth alike prevail ; [style,
Whose hum'rous vein, strong sense, and simple
May teach the gayest, make the gravest smile ;
Witty, and well employ'd, and, like thy Lord,
Speaking in parables his slighted word ;
I name thee not, lest so despis'd a name
Should move a sneer at thy deserved fame ;
Yet ev'n in transitory life's late day,
That mingles all my brown with sober gray,
Revere the man, whose PILGRIM marks the road,
And guides the PROGRESS of the soul to God.
'T were well with most, if books, that could engage
Their childhood, pleas'd them at a riper age ;
The man, approving what had charm'd the boy,
Would die at last in comfort, peace, and joy ;
And not with curses on his heart, who stole
The gem of truth from his unguarded soul.
The stamp of artless piety impress'd
By kind tuition on his yielding breast,
The youth now bearded, and yet pert and raw,
Regards with scorn, though once receiv'd with awe ;
And, warp'd into the labyrinth of lies,
That babblers, call'd philosophers, devise,
Blasphemes his creed, as founded on a plan,
Replete with dreams, unworthy of a man.
Touch but his nature in it's ailing part,
Assert the native evil of his heart,
His pride resents the charge, although the proof
Rise in his forehead, and seem rank enough :
Point to the cure, describe a Saviour's cross
As God's expedient to retrieve his loss,
The young apostate sickens at the view,
And hates it with the malice of a Jew.

How weak the barrier of mere Nature proves,
Oppos'd against the pleasures Nature loves !
While self-betray'd, and wilfully undone,
She longs to yield, no sooner woo'd than won.
Try now the merits of this blest exchange
Of modest truth for wit's eccentric range.
Time was, he clos'd as he began the day,
With decent duty, not ashamed to pray :
The practice was a bond upon his heart,
A pledge he gave for a consistent part ;
Nor could he dare presumptuously displease
A pow'r, confess'd so lately on his knees.
But now, farewell all legendary tales,
The shadows fly, philosophy prevails ;
Pray'r to the winds, and caution to the waves ;
Religion makes the free by nature slaves.
Priests have invented, and the World admir'd
What knavish priests promulgate as inspir'd ;
Till Reason, now no longer overaw'd,
Resumes her pow'rs, and spurns the clumsy fraud ;
And, common-sense diffusing real day,
The meteor of the Gospel dies away.
Such rhapsodies our shrewd discerning youth
Learn from expert inquirers after truth ;
Whose only care, might Truth presume to speak,
Is not to find what they profess to seek.
And thus, well-tutor'd only while we share
A mother's lectures and a nurse's care ;
And taught at schools much mythologic stuff,
But sound religion sparingly enough ;

Our early notices of truth, disgrac'd,
Soon lose their credit, and are all effac'd.

Would you your son should be a sot or dunce,
Lascivious, headstrong, or all these at once ;
That in good time the stripling's finish'd taste
For loose expense, and fashionable waste,
Should prove your ruin, and his own at last ;
Train him in public with a mob of boys,
Childish in mischief only and in noise,
Else of a mannish growth, and five in ten
In infidelity and lewdness men.

There shall he learn, ere sixteen winters old,
That authors are most useful pawn'd or sold ;
That pedantry is all that schools impart,
But taverns teach the knowledge of the heart ;
There waiter Dick, with Bacchanalian lays,
Shall win his heart, and have his drunken praise,
His counsellor and bosom-friend, shall prove,
And some street-pacing harlot his first love.
Schools, unless discipline were doubly strong,
Detain their adolescent charge too long ;
The management of tiroes of eighteen
Is difficult, their punishment obscene.

The stout tall captain, whose superior size
The minor heroes view with envious eyes,
Becomes their pattern, upon whom they fix
Their whole attention, and ape all his tricks.
His pride, that scorns t' obey or to submit,
With them is courage ; his effront'ry wit.
His wild excursions, window-breaking feats,
Robb'ry of gardens, quarrels in the streets,
His hair-breadth 'scapes, and all his daring schemes,
Transport them, and are made their fav'rite themes.
In little bosoms such achievements strike
A kindred spark : they burn to do the like.
Thus, half-accomplish'd ere he yet begin
To show the peeping down upon his chin ;
And, as maturity of years comes on,
Made just th' adept that you design'd your son ;
T' ensure the perseverance of his course,
And give your monstrous project all it's force,
Send him to college. If he there be tam'd,
Or in one article of vice reclaim'd,
Where no regard of ord'nances is shown
Or look'd for now, the fault must be his own.
Some sneaking virtue lurks in him, no doubt,
Where neither strumpets' charms, nor drinking-
bout,

Nor gambling practices, can find it out.
Such youths of spirit, and that spirit too,
Ye nurs'ries of our boys, we owe to you :
Though from ourselves the mischief more proceeds,
For public schools 't is public folly feeds.
The slaves of custom and establish'd mode,
With packhorse constancy we keep the road,
Crooked or straight, through quags or thorny della,
True to the jingling of our leader's bells.
To follow foolish precedents, and wink
With both our eyes, is easier than to think :
And such an age as ours balks no expense,
Except of caution, and of common sense ;
Else, sure, notorious fact, and proof so plain,
Would turn our steps into a wiser train.
I blame not those, who, with what care they can
O'erwatch the num'rous and unruly clan ;
Or, if I blame, 't is only that they dare
Promise a work, of which they must despair.
Have ye, ye sage intendants of the whole,
A ubiquarian presence and control,

Elisha's eye, that, when Gehazi stray'd,
Went with him, and saw all the game he play'd ?
Yes — ye are conscious ; and on all the shelves
Your pupils strike upon, have struck yourselves.
Or if, by nature sober, ye had then,
Boys as ye were, the gravity of men ;
Ye knew at least, by constant proofs address'd
To ears and eyes, the vices of the rest.
But ye connive at what ye cannot cure,
And evils, not to be endur'd, endure,
Lest pow'r exerted, but without success,
Should make the little ye retain still less.
Ye once were justly fam'd for bringing forth
Undoubted scholarship and genuine worth ;
And in the firmament of fame still shines
A glory, bright as that of all the signs,
Of poets rais'd by you, and statesmen, and divines.
Peace to them all ! those brilliant times are fled,
And no such lights are kindling in their stead ;
Our striplings shine indeed, but with such rays,
As set the midnight riot in a blaze ;
And seem, if judg'd by their expressive looks,
Deeper in none than in their surgeons' books.

Say, Muse, (for education made the song,
No Muse can hesitate, or linger long,)
What causes move us, knowing as we must,
That these menageries all fail their trust,
To send our sons to scout and scamper there,
While colts and puppies cost us so much care ?

Be it a weakness, it deserves some praise,
We love the play-place of our early days ;
The scene is touching, and the heart is stone,
That feels not at that sight, and feels at none.
The wall on which we tried our graving skill,
The very name we carv'd subsisting still ;
The bench on which we sat while deep employ'd,
Though mangled, hack'd, and hew'd, not yet destroy'd ;

The little ones, unbutton'd, glowing hot,
Playing our games, and on the very spot ;
As happy as we once, to kneel and draw
The chalky ring, and knuckle down at taw ;
To pitch the ball into the grounded hat,
Or drive it devious with a dext'rous pat ;
The pleasing spectacle at once excites
Such recollection of our own delights,
That, viewing it, we seem almost t' obtain
Our innocent sweet simple years again.
This fond attachment to the well-known place,
Whence first we started into life's long race,
Maintains it's hold with such unfailing sway,
We feel it ev'n in age, and at our latest day.
Hark ! how the sire of chits, whose future share
Of classic food begins to be his care,
With his own likeness plac'd on either knee,
Indulges all a father's heart-felt glee ;
And tells them, as he strokes their silver locks,
That they must soon learn Latin, and to box ;
Then turning he regales his list'ning wife
With all th' adventures of his early life :
His skill in coachmanship, or driving chaise,
In bilking tavern-bills, and spouting plays ;
What shifts he us'd, detected in a scrape,
How he was flogg'd, or had the luck t' escape ;
What sums he lost at play, and how he sold
Watch, seals, and all — till all his pranks are told.
Retracing thus his frolics, ('t is a name
That palliates deeds of folly and of shame.)
He gives the local bias all it's sway ;
Resolves that, where he play'd, his sons shall play,

And destines their bright genius to be shown
 Just in the scene, where he display'd his own.
 The meek and bashful boy will soon be taught,
 To be as bold and forward as he ought ;
 The rude will scuffle through with ease enough,
 Great schools suit best the sturdy and the rough.
 Ah happy designation, prudent choice,
 Th' event is sure ; expect it, and rejoice !
 Soon see your wish fulfill'd in either child,
 The pert made perter, and the tame made wild.
 The great, indeed, by titles, riches, birth,
 Excus'd th' incumbrance of more solid worth,
 Are best dispos'd of where, with most success
 They may acquire that confident address,
 Those habits of profuse and lewd expense,
 That scorn of all delights but those of sense,
 Which, though in plain plebeians we condemn,
 With so much reason all expect from them.
 But families of less illustrious fame,
 Whose chief distinction is their spotless name,
 Whose heirs, their honours none, their income small,
 Must shine by true desert, or not at all,
 What dream they of, that with so little care
 They risk their hopes, their dearest treasure, there ?
 They dream of little Charles or William grac'd
 With wig prolix, down flowing to his waist ;
 They see th' attentive crowds his talents draw,
 They hear him speak — the oracle of law.
 The father, who designs his babe a priest,
 Dreams him episcopally such at least ;
 And, while the playful jockey scours the room
 Briskly, astride upon the parlour broom,
 In fancy sees him more superbly ride
 In coach with purple lin'd, and mitres on it's side.
 Events improbable and strange as these,
 Which only a parental eye foresees,
 A public school shall bring to pass with ease.
 But how ! resides such virtue in that air,
 As must create an appetite for pray'r ?
 And will it breathe into him all the zeal,
 That candidates for such a prize should feel,
 To take the lead and be the foremost still
 In all true worth and literary skill ?
 " Ah blind to bright futurity, untaught
 The knowledge of the world, and dull of thought !
 Church-ladders are not always mounted best
 By learned clerks, and latinists profess'd.
 The exalted prize demands an upward look,
 Not to be found by poring on a book,
 Small skill in Latin, and still less in Greek,
 Is more than adequate to all I seek.
 Let erudition grace him, or not grace,
 I give the bauble but the second place ;
 His wealth, fame, honours, all that I intend.
 Subsist and centre in one point — a friend.
 A friend, whate'er he studies or neglects,
 Shall give him consequence, heal all defects.
 His intercourse with peers and sons of peers —
 There dawns the splendour of his future years :
 In that bright quarter his propitious skies
 Shall blush betimes, and there his glory rise. [teach
Your Lordship, and Your Grace ! what school can
 A rhet'ric equal to those parts of speech ?
 What need of Homer's verse, or Tully's prose,
 Sweet interjections ! if he learn but those ?
 Let rev'rend churls his ignorance rebuke,
 Who starve upon a dog's-ear'd Pentateuch,
 The parson knows enough, who knows a duke."
 Egregious purpose ! worthily begun
 In barb'rous prostitution of your son ;

Press'd on his part by means, that would disgrace
 A scriv'ner's clerk, or footman out of place,
 And ending, if at last it's end be gain'd,
 In sacrilege, in God's own house profan'd.
 It may succeed ; and, if his sins should call
 For more than common punishment, it shall ;
 The wretch shall rise, and be the thing on Earth
 Least qualified in honour, learning, worth,
 To occupy a sacred, awful post,
 In which the best and worthiest tremble most.
 The royal letters are a thing of course,
 A king, that would, might recommend his horse ;
 And deans, no doubt, and chapters, with one voice,
 As bound in duty, would confirm the choice.
 Behold your bishop ! well he plays his part,
 Christian in name, and infidel in heart,
 Ghostly in office, earthly in his plan,
 A slave at court, elsewhere a lady's man.
 Dumb as a senator, and as a priest
 A piece of mere church-furniture at best ;
 To live estrang'd from God his total scope,
 And his end sure, without one glimpse of hope,
 But fair although and feasible it seem,
 Depend not much upon your golden dream ;
 For Providence, that seems concern'd t' exempt
 The hallow'd bench from absolute contempt,
 In spite of all the wrigglers into place,
 Still keeps a seat or two for worth and grace ;
 And therefore 't is, that, though the sight be rare,
 We sometimes see a Lowth or Bagot there.
 Besides, school-friendships are not always found,
 Though fair in promise, permanent and sound ;
 The most disint'rested and virtuous minds,
 In early years connected, time unbinds ;
 New situations give a diff'rent cast
 Of habit, inclination, temper, taste ;
 And he, that seem'd our counterpart at first,
 Soon shows the strong similitude revers'd.
 Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,
 And make mistakes for manhood to reform.
 Boys are at best but pretty buds unblown,
 Whose scent and hues are rather guess'd than known ;
 Each dreams that each is just what he appears,
 But learns his error in maturer years,
 When disposition, like a sail unfurl'd,
 Shows all it's rents and patches to the world.
 If, therefore, ev'n when honest in design,
 A boyish friendship may so soon decline,
 'T were wiser, sure, t' inspire a little heart
 With just abhorrence of so mean a part,
 Than set your son to work at a vile trade,
 For wages so unlikely to be paid.

Our public hives of puerile resort,
 That are of chief and most approv'd report,
 To such base hopes, in many a sordid soul,
 Owe their repute in part, but not the whole.
 A principle, whose proud pretensions pass
 Unquestion'd, though the jewel be but glass —
 That with a world, not often over-nice,
 Ranks as a virtue, and is yet a vice ;
 Or rather a gross compound, justly tried,
 Of envy, hatred, jealousy, and pride —
 Contributes most, perhaps, t' enhance their fame ;
 And emulation is it's specious name.
 Boys, once on fire with that contentious zeal,
 Feel all the rage, that female rivals feel ;
 The prize of beauty in a woman's eyes
 Not brighter than in theirs, the scholar's prize.
 The spirit of that competition burns
 With all varieties of ill by turns ;

Each vainly magnifies his own success,
 Resents his fellow's, wishes it were less,
 Exults in his miscarriage, if he fail, &
 Deems his reward too great, if he prevail,
 And labours to surpass him day and night,
 Less for improvement than to tickle spite.
 The spur is pow'rful, and I grant it's force ;
 It pricks the genius forward in it's course,
 Allows short time for play, and none for sloth ;
 And, felt alike by each, advances both :
 But judge, where so much evil intervenes,
 The end, though plausible, not worth the means.
 Weigh, for a moment, classical desert
 Against a heart deprav'd and temper hurt ;
 Hurt too, perhaps, for life ; for early wrong,
 Done to the nobler part, affects it long ;
 And you are staunch, indeed, in learning's cause,
 If you can crown a discipline, that draws
 Such mischiefs after it, with much applause.

Connection form'd for int'rest, and endear'd
 By selfish views, thus censur'd and cashier'd ;
 And emulation, as engend'ring hate,
 Doom'd to a no less ignominious fate :
 The props of such proud seminaries fall,
 The Jachin and the Boaz of them all.
 Great schools rejected then, as those that swell
 Beyond a size that can be manag'd well,
 Shall royal institutions miss the bays,
 And small academies win all the praise ?
 Force not my drift beyond it's just intent,
 I praise a school as Pope a government ;
 So take my judgment in his language dress'd,
 " Whate'er is best administer'd is best."
 Few boys are born with talents that excel,
 But all are capable of living well ;
 Then ask not, Whether limited or large ?
 But, Watch they strictly, or neglect their charge ?
 If anxious only, that their boys may learn,
 While morals languish, a despis'd concern,
 The great and small deserve one common blame,
 Diff'rent in size, but in effect the same.
 Much zeal in virtue's cause all teachers boast,
 Though motives of mere lucre sway the most :
 Therefore in towns and cities they abound,
 For there the game they seek is easiest found ;
 Though there, in spite of all that care can do,
 Traps to catch youth are most abundant too.
 If shrewd, and of a well-constructed brain,
 Keen in pursuit, and vig'rous to retain,
 Your son come forth a prodigy of skill :
 As, wheresoever taught, so form'd, he will ;
 The pedagogue, with self-complacent air,
 Claims more than half the praise as his due share.
 But if, with all his genius, he betray,
 Not more intelligent than loose and gay,
 Such vicious habits, as disgrace his name,
 Threaten his health, his fortune, and his fame ;
 Though want of due restraint alone have bred
 The symptoms, that you see with so much dread ;
 Unenvied there, he may sustain alone
 The whole reproach, the fault was all his own.

O 't is a sight to be with joy perus'd,
 By all whom sentiment has not abus'd ;
 New-fangled sentiment, the boasted grace
 Of those, who never feel in the right place ;
 A sight surpass'd by none that we can show,
 'Though Vestris on one leg still shine below ;
 A father blest with an ingenuous son,
 Father, and friend, and tutor, all in one.

How ! — turn again to tales long since forgot,
 Æsop, and Phædrus, and the rest ? — Why not ?
 He will not blush, that has a father's heart,
 To take in childish plays a childish part ;
 But bends his sturdy back to any toy,
 That youth takes pleasure in, to please his boy ;
 Then why resign into a stranger's hand
 A task as much within your own command,
 That God and Nature, and your int'rest too,
 Seem with one voice to delegate to you ?
 Why hire a lodging in a house unknown
 For one, whose tend'rest thoughts all hover round your own ?

This second weaning, needless as it is,
 How does it lac'rate both your heart and his !
 Th' indented stick, that loses day by day
 Notch after notch, till all are smooth'd away,
 Bears witness, long ere his dismissal come,
 With what intense desire he wants his home.
 But though the joys he hopes beneath your roof
 Bid fair enough to answer in the proof,
 Harmless, and safe, and nat'ral as they are,
 A disappointment waits him even there :
 Arriv'd, he feels an unexpected change,
 He blushes, hangs his head, is shy and strange,
 No longer takes, as once, with fearless ease,
 His fav'rite stand between his father's knees,
 But seeks the corner of some distant seat,
 And eyes the door, and watches a retreat,
 And, least familiar where he should be most,
 Feels all his happiest privileges lost.
 Alas, poor boy ! the natural effect
 Of love by absence chill'd into respect.
 Say, what accomplishments, at school acquir'd,
 Brings he, to sweeten fruits so undesir'd ?
 Thou well deserv'st an alienated son,
 Unless thy conscious heart acknowledge — none ;
 None that, in thy domestic snug recess,
 He had not made his own with more address,
 Though some perhaps, that shock thy feeling mind,
 And better never learn'd, or left behind.
 Add too, that, thus estrang'd, thou canst obtain
 By no kind arts his confidence again ;
 That here begins with most that long complaint
 Of filial frankness lost, and love grown faint,
 Which, oft neglected, in life's waning years
 A parent pours into regardless ears.

Like caterpillars, dangling under trees
 By slender threads, and swinging in the breeze,
 Which filthily bewray and sore disgrace
 The boughs, in which are bred th' unseemly race ;
 While ev'ry worm industriously weaves
 And winds his web about the rivell'd leaves ;
 So num'rous are the follies, that annoy
 The mind and heart of ev'ry sprightly boy ;
 Imaginations noxious and perverse,
 Which admonition can alone disperse.
 Th' encroaching nuisance asks a faithful hand,
 Patient, affectionate, of high command,
 To check the procreation of a breed
 Sure to exhaust the plant on which they feed.
 'T is not enough that Greek or Roman page,
 At stated hours, his freakish thoughts engage ;
 Ev'n in his pastimes he requires a friend,
 To warn, and teach him safely to unbend ;
 O'er all his pleasures gently to preside,
 Watch his emotions, and controul their tide ;
 And levying thus, and with an easy sway,
 A tax of profit from his very play.

I' impress a value, not to be eras'd, [waste.
 On moments squander'd else, and running all to
 And seems it nothing in a father's eye,
 That unimprov'd those many moments fly?
 And is he well content his son should find
 No nourishment to feed his growing mind,
 But conjugated verbs, and nouns declin'd?
 For such is all the mental food purvey'd
 By public hacknies in the schooling trade;
 Who feed a pupil's intellect with store
 Of syntax, truly, but with little more;
 Dismiss their cares, when they dismiss their flock,
 Machines themselves, and govern'd by a clock.
 Perhaps a father, blest with any brains,
 Would deem it no abuse, or waste of pains,
 I' improve this diet, at no great expense,
 With sav'ry truth and wholesome common sense;
 To lead his son, for prospects of delight,
 To some not steep, though philosophic, height,
 Thence to exhibit to his wond'ring eyes
 Yon circling worlds, their distance, and their size,
 The moons of Jove, and Saturn's belted ball,
 And the harmonious order of them all;
 To show him in an insect or a flow'r
 Such microscopic proof of skill and pow'r,
 As, hid from ages past, God now displays,
 To combat atheists with in modern days;
 To spread the Earth before him, and commend,
 With designation of the finger's end,
 It's various parts to his attentive note,
 Thus bringing home to him the most remote;
 To teach his heart to glow with gen'rous flame,
 Caught from the deeds of men of ancient fame:
 And, more than all, with commendation due,
 To set some living worthy in his view,
 Whose fair example may at once inspire
 A wish to copy, what he must admire.
 Such knowledge gain'd betimes, and which appears,
 Though solid, not too weighty for his years,
 Sweet in itself, and not forbidding sport,
 When health demands it, of athletic sort, [been,
 Would make him — what some lovely boys have
 And more than one perhaps that I have seen —
 An evidence and reprehension both
 Of the mere school-boy's lean and tardy growth.

Art thou a man professionally tied,
 With all thy faculties elsewhere applied,
 Too busy to intend a meaner care,
 Than how t' enrich thyself, and next thine heir?
 Or art thou (as though rich, perhaps thou art)
 But poor in knowledge, having none t' impart? —
 Behold that figure, neat, though plainly clad;
 His sprightly mingled with a shade of sad;
 Not of a nimble tongue, though now and then
 Heard to articulate like other men:
 No jester, and yet lively in discourse,
 His phrase well chosen, clear, and full of force;
 And his address, if not quite French in ease,
 Not English stiff, but frank, and form'd to please;
 Low in the world, because he scorns it's arts;
 A man of letters, manners, morals, parts;
 Unpatronis'd, and therefore little known;
 Wise for himself and his few friends alone —
 In him thy well-appointed proxy see,
 Arm'd for a work too difficult for thee;
 Prepar'd by taste, by learning, and true worth,
 To form thy son, to strike his genius forth;
 Beneath thy roof, beneath thine eye, to prove
 The force of discipline, when back'd by love;

To double all thy pleasure in thy child,
 His mind inform'd, his morals undefil'd.
 Safe under such a wing, the boy shall show
 No spots contracted among grooms below,
 Nor taint his speech with meannesses, design'd
 By footman Tom for witty and refin'd.
 There, in his commerce with the liv'ried herd,
 Lurks the contagion chiefly to be fear'd;
 For since (so fashion dictates) all, who claim
 A higher than a mere plebeian fame,
 Find it expedient, come what mischief may,
 To entertain a thief or two in pay,
 (And they that can afford th' expense of more,
 Some half-a-dozen and some half-a-score,)
 Great cause occurs, to save him from a band
 So sure to spoil him, and so near at hand;
 A point secur'd, if once he be supplied.
 With some such Mentor always at his side.
 Are such men rare? perhaps they would abound,
 Were occupation easier to be found,
 Were education, else so sure to fail,
 Conducted on a manageable scale,
 And schools, that have outliv'd all just esteem,
 Exchang'd for the secure domestic scheme. —
 But, having found him, be thou duke or earl,
 Show thou hast sense enough to prize the pearl,
 And, as thou wouldst th' advancement of thine heir
 In all good faculties beneath his care,
 Respect, as is but rational and just,
 A man deem'd worthy of so dear a trust.
 Despis'd by thee, what more can he expect
 From youthful folly than the same neglect?
 A flat and fatal negative obtains
 That instant upon all his future pains;
 His lessons tire, his mild rebukes offend,
 And all th' instructions of thy son's best friend
 Are a stream chok'd, or trickling to no end.
 Doom him not then to solitary meals;
 But recollect, that he has sense, and feels;
 And that, possessor of a soul refin'd,
 An upright heart, and cultivated mind,
 His post not mean, his talents not unknown,
 He deems it hard to vegetate alone.
 And, if admitted at thy board he sit,
 Account him no just mark for idle wit;
 Offend not him, whom modesty restrains
 From repartee, with jokes that he disdains;
 Much less transfix his feelings with an oath;
 Nor frown, unless he vanish with the cloth. —
 And, trust me, his utility may reach
 To more than he is hir'd or bound to teach;
 Much trash unutter'd, and some ills undone,
 Through rev'rence of the censor of thy son.

But, if thy table be indeed unclean,
 Foul with excess, and with discourse obscene,
 And thou a wretch, whom, foll'wing her old plan,
 The World accounts an honourable man,
 Because forsooth thy courage has been tried,
 And stood the test, perhaps, on the wrong side!
 Though thou hadst never grace enough to prove,
 That any thing but vice could win thy love; —
 Or hast thou a polite, card-playing wife,
 Chain'd to the routs that she frequents for life;
 Who just when industry begins to snore,
 Flies, wing'd with joy, to some coach-crowded door;
 And thrice in ev'ry winter throngs thine own
 With half the chariots and sedans in town,
 Thyself, meanwhile, e'en shifting as thou mayst;
 Not very sober though, nor very chaste:

Or is thine house, though less superb thy rank,
 If not a scene of pleasure, a mere blank,
 And thou at best, and in thy sob'rest mood,
 A trifler vain, and empty of all good;
 Though mercy for thyself thou canst have none,
 Hear Nature plead, show mercy to thy son.
 Sav'd from his home, where ev'ry day brings forth
 Some mischief fatal to his future worth,
 Find him a better in a distant spot,
 Within some pious pastor's humble cot,
 Where vile example (yours I chiefly mean,
 The most seducing, and the oft'nest seen)
 May never more be stamp'd upon his breast,
 Nor yet perhaps incurably impress'd.
 Where early rest makes early rising sure,
 Disease or comes not, or finds easy cure,
 Prevented much by diet neat and plain;
 Or, if it enter, soon starv'd out again:
 Where all th' attention of his faithful host,
 Discreetly limited to two at most,
 May raise such fruits as shall reward his care,
 And not at last evaporate in air:
 Where, stillness aiding study, and his mind
 Serene, and to his duties much inclin'd,
 Not occupied in day-dreams, as at home,
 Of pleasures past, or follies yet to come,
 His virtuous toil may terminate at last
 In settled habit and decided taste. —
 But whom do I advise? the fashion-led,
 Th' incorrigibly wrong, the deaf and dead,
 Whom care and cool deliberation suit
 Not better much than spectacles a brute;
 Who, if their sons some slight tuition share,
 Deem it of no great moment whose, or where;
 Too proud t' adopt the thoughts of one unknown,
 And much too gay t' have any of their own.
 "But courage, man!" methought the Muse replied,
 "Mankind are various, and the world is wide:
 The ostrich, silliest of the feather'd kind,
 And form'd of God without a parent's mind,
 Commits her eggs, incautious, to the dust,
 Forgetful that the foot may crush the trust;
 And, while on public nurs'ries they rely,
 Not knowing, and too oft not caring, why,
 Irrational in what they thus prefer,
 No few, that would seem wise, resemble her.
 But all are not alike. Thy warning voice
 May here and there prevent erroneous choice;
 And some perhaps, who, busy as they are,
 Yet make their progeny their dearest care, [reach (Whose hearts will ache, once told what ills may,
 Their offspring, left upon so wild a beach,)
 Will need no stress of argument t' enforce
 Th' expedience of a less advent'rous course:
 The rest will slight thy counsel, or condemn;
 But they have human feelings — turn to them."
 To you, then, tenants of life's middle state,
 Securely plac'd between the small and great,
 Whose character, yet undebauch'd, retains
 Two-thirds of all the virtue that remains,
 Who, wise yourselves, desire your son should learn
 Your wisdom and your ways — to you I turn.
 Look round you on a world perversely blind;
 See what contempt is fall'n on human-kind;
 See wealth abus'd, and dignities misplac'd,
 Great titles, offices, and trusts disgrac'd,
 Long lines of ancestry, renown'd of old,
 Their noble qualities all quench'd and cold;
 See Bedlam's closetted and hand-cuff'd charge
 Surpass'd in phrenzy by the mad at large;

See great commanders making war & trade,
 Great lawyers, lawyers without study made;
 Churchmen, in whose esteem their blest employ
 Is odious, and their wages all their joy,
 Who, far enough from furnishing their shelves
 With Gospel lore, turn infidels themselves;
 See womanhood despis'd, and manhood sham'd
 With infamy too nauseous to be nam'd,
 Fops at all corners, lady-like in mien,
 Civetted fellows, smelt ere they are seen,
 Else coarse and rude in manners, and their tongues
 On fire with curses, and with nonsense hung,
 Now flush'd with drunk'ness, now with whorish
 pale,
 Their breath a sample of last night's regale;
 See volunteers in all the vilest arts,
 Men well endow'd, of honourable parts,
 Design'd by Nature wise, but self-made fools:
 All these, and more like these, were bred at school.
 And if it chance, as sometimes chance it will,
 That, though school-bred, the boy be virtuous still:
 Such rare exceptions, shining in the dark,
 Prove, rather than impeach, the just remark:
 As here and there a twinkling star descried
 Serves but to show how black is all beside.
 Now look on him, whose very voice in tone
 Just echoes thine, whose features are thine own,
 And stroke his polish'd cheek of purest red,
 And lay thine hand upon his flaxen head,
 And say, "My boy, th' unwelcome hour is come
 When thou, transplanted from thy genial home,
 Must find a colder soil and bleaker air,
 And trust for safety to a stranger's care;
 What character, what turn thou wilt assume
 From constant converse with I know not whom:
 Who there will court thy friendship, with what views,
 And, artless as thou art, whom thou wilt choose;
 Though much depends on what thy choice shall be,
 Is all chance-medley, and unknown to me."
 Canst thou, the tear just trembling on thy lids,
 And while the dreadful risk foreseen forbids;
 Free to, and under no constraining force,
 Unless the sway of custom warp thy course;
 Lay such a stake upon the losing side,
 Merely to gratify so blind a guide?
 Thou canst not! Nature, pulling at thine heart,
 Condemns th' unfatherly, th' imprudent part.
 Thou wouldst not, deaf to Nature's tend'rest plea,
 Turn him adrift upon a rolling sea,
 Nor say, Go thither, conscious that there lay
 A brood of asps, or quicksands in his way:
 Then, only govern'd by the self-same rule
 Of nat'ral pity, send him not to school.
 No — guard him better. Is he not thine own,
 Thyself in miniature, thy flesh, thy bone?
 And hop'st thou not ('t is ev'ry father's hope)
 That, since thy strength must with thy years elope,
 And thou wilt need some comfort, to assuage
 Health's last farewell, a staff of thine old age,
 That then, in recompense of all thy cares,
 Thy child shall show respect to thy gray hairs,
 Befriend thee, of all other friends bereft,
 And give thy life it's only cordial left?
 Aware, then, how much danger intervenes,
 To compass that good end, forecast the means.
 His heart, now passive, yields to thy command;
 Secure it thine, it's key is in thine hand.
 If thou desert thy charge, and throw it wide,
 Nor heed what guests there enter and abide,

mplain not if attachments lewd and base
 pplant thee in it, and usurp thy place.
 t, if thou guard it's sacred chambers sure
 m vicious inmates and delights impure,
 ther his gratitude shall hold him fast,
 id keep him warm and filial to the last ;
 , if he prove unkind (as who can say it, being man, and therefore frail, he may ?)
 ie comfort yet shall cheer thine aged heart, owe'er he slight thee, thou hast done thy part.
 (Oh barb'rous ! wouldst thou with a Gothic hand ill down the schools—what ! —all the schools i'
 th' land ?

throw them up to liv'ry-nags and grooms,
 turn them into shops and auction-rooms ?
 captious question, sir, (and yours is one,) deserves an answer similar, or none.
 ouldst thou, possessor of a flock, employ ppris'd that he is such) a careless boy,
 id feed him well, and give him handsome pay,
 erely to sleep, and let them run astray ?
 rvey our schools and colleges, and see ight not much unlike my simile.
 om education, as the leading cause,
 e public character it's colour draws ;
 ence the prevailing manners take their cast,
 extravagant or sober, loose or chaste.
 nd, though I would not advertise them yet,
 or write on each — This building to be let,
 nless the world were all prepar'd t' embrace
 plan well worthy to supply their place ;
 et, backward as they are, and long have been,
 o cultivate and keep the MORALS clean,
 'orgive the crime,) I wish them, I confess,
 r better manag'd, or encourag'd less.

TABLE-TALK.

Si te fortè meæ gravis uret sarcina chartæ,
 Abjicito.                      Hon. Lib. i. Epist. 13.

A. You told me, I remember, " Glory, built
 n selfish principles, is shame and guilt ;
 he deeds, that men admire as half divine,
 ark naught, because corrupt in their design." —
 range doctrine this ! that without scruple tears
 he laurel, that the very lightning spares ;
 rings down the warrior's trophy to the dust,
 nd eats into his bloody sword like rust.

B. I grant that, men continuing what they are,
 ierce, avaricious, proud, there must be war.
 nd never meant the rule should be applied
 o him, that fights with justice on his side.

Let laurels, drench'd in pure Parnassian dew,
 eward his mem'ry, dear to ev'ry Muse,
 /ho, with a courage of unshaken root,
 a honour's field advancing his firm foot,
 lants it upon the line that Justice draws,
 nd will prevail or perish in her cause.
 'is to the virtues of such men, man owes his portion in the good that Heav'n bestows.
 nd when recording History displays
 eats of renown, though wrought in ancient days,
 tells of a few stout hearts, that fought and died,
 Where duty placed them, at their country's side ;
 he man, that is not mov'd with what he reads,
 hat takes not fire at their heroic deeds,

Unworthy of the blessings of the brave,
 Is base in kind, and born to be a slave.

But let eternal infamy pursue
 The wretch to nought but his ambition true,
 Who, for the sake of filling with one blast
 The post-horns of all Europe, lays her waste.
 Think yourself station'd on a tow'ring rock,
 To see a people scatter'd like a flock,
 Some royal mastiff panting at their heels,
 With all the savage thirst a tiger feels ;
 Then view him self-proclaim'd in a gazette
 Chief monster that has plagu'd the nations yet.
 The globe and sceptre in such hands misplac'd,
 Those ensigns of dominion, how disgrac'd !
 The glass, that bids man mark the fleeting hour,
 And Death's own scythe would better speak his pow'r ;
 Then grace the bony phantom in their stead
 With the king's shoulder-knot and gay cockade ;
 Clothe the twin-brethren in each other's dress
 The same their occupation and success.

A. 'Tis your belief the world was made for man ;
 Kings do but reason on the self-same plan :
 Maintaining yours, you cannot theirs condemn,
 Who think, or seem to think, man made for them.

B. Seldom, alas ! the pow'r of logic reigns
 With much sufficiency in royal brains ;
 Such reas'ning falls like an inverted cone,
 Wanting it's proper base to stand upon.
 Man made for kings ! those optics are but dim
 That tell you so — say, rather they for him.
 That were indeed a king-ennobling thought,
 Could they, or would they, reason as they ought.
 The diadem, with mighty projects lin'd
 To catch renown by ruining mankind,
 Is worth, with all it's gold and glitt'ring store,
 Just what the toy will sell for, and no more.

Oh ! bright occasions of dispensing good,
 How seldom us'd, how little understood !
 To pour in Virtue's lap her just reward ;
 Keep Vice restrain'd behind a double guard ;
 To quell the faction, that affronts the throne,
 By silent magnanimity alone ;
 To nurse with tender care the thriving arts ;
 Watch ev'ry beam Philosophy imparts ;
 To give Religion her unbridl'd scope,
 Nor judge by statute a believer's hope ;
 With close fidelity and love unfeign'd
 To keep the matrimonial bond unstain'd ;
 Covetous only of a virtuous praise ;
 His life a lesson to the land he sways ;
 To touch the sword with conscientious awe,
 Nor draw it but when duty bids him draw ;
 To sheath it in the peace-restoring close
 With joy beyond what victory bestows ;
 Blest country, where these kingly glories shine !
 Blest England, if this happiness be thine !

A. Guard what you say ; the patriotic tribe
 Will sneer and charge you with a bribe. — B. A bribe !
 The worth of his three kingdoms I defy,
 To lure me to the baseness of a lie :
 And, of all lies, (be that one poet's boast,)
 The lie that flatters I abhor the most.
 Those arts be theirs, who hate his gentle reign,
 But he that loves him has no need to feign.

A. Your smooth eulogium to one crown address'd,
 Seems to imply a censure on the rest.

B. Quevedo, as he tells his sober tale,
 Ask'd, when in Hell, to see the royal jail ;
 Approv'd their method in all other things ;
 " But where, good sir, do you confine your kings ?"

"There," said his guide, "the group is full in view."

"Indeed!" replied the don, "there are but few."

His black interpreter the charge disdain'd —

"Few, fellow! — there are all that ever reign'd."

Wit, undistinguishing, is apt to strike

The guilty and not guilty both alike :

I grant the sarcasm is too severe,

And we can readily refute it here ;

While Alfred's name, the father of his age,

And the Sixth Edward's, grace th' historic page.

A. Kings then at last have but the lot of all :

By their own conduct they must stand or fall.

B. True. While they live, the courtly laureat pays

His quit-rent ode, his pepper-corn of praise ;

And many a dunce, whose fingers itch to write,

Adds, as he can, his tributary mite :

A subject's faults a subject may proclaim,

A monarch's errors are forbidden game !

Thus free from censure, overaw'd by fear,

And prais'd for virtues, that they scorn to wear,

The fleeting forms of majesty engage

Respect, while stalking o'er life's narrow stage ;

Then leave their crimes for history to scan,

And ask with busy scorn, "Was this the man?"

I pity kings, whom Worship waits upon

Obsequious from the cradle to the throne ;

Before whose infant eyes the flatt'rer bows,

And binds a wreath about their baby brows ;

Whom Education stiffens into state,

And Death awakens from that dream too late.

Oh! if Servility with supple knees,

Whose trade it is to smile, to crouch, to please ;

If smooth Dissimulation, skill'd to grace

A devil's purpose with an angel's face ;

If smiling peeresses, and simp'ring peers,

Encompassing his throne a few short years ;

If the gilt carriage and the pamper'd steed,

That wants no driving, and disdains the lead ;

If guards, mechanically form'd in ranks,

Playing, at beat of drum, their martial pranks,

Should'ring and standing as if stuck to stone,

While condescending majesty looks on ;

If monarchy consist in such base things,

Sighing, I say again, "I pity kings!"

To be suspected, thwarted, and withstood,

Ev'n when he labours for his country's good ;

To see a band, call'd patriot for no cause,

But that they catch at popular applause,

Careless of all th' anxiety he feels,

Hook disappointment on the public wheels ;

With all their flippant fluency of tongue,

Most confident, when palpably most wrong :

If this be kingly, then farewell for me

All kingship ; and may I be poor and free !

To be the Table-Talk of clubs up stairs,

To which th' unwash'd artificer repairs,

T' indulge his genius, after long fatigue,

By diving into cabinet-intrigue ;

(For what kings deem a toil, as well they may,

To him is relaxation and mere play ;)

To win no praise when well-wrought plans prevail,

But to be rudely censur'd when they fail ;

To doubt the love his fav'rites may pretend,

And in reality to find no friend ;

If he indulge a cultivated taste,

His gall'ries with the works of art well grac'd,

To hear it call'd extravagance and waste ;

If these attendants, and if such as these,

Must follow royalty, then welcome ease ;

However humble and confin'd the sphere,

Happy the state, that has not these to fear. [dwell

A. Thus men, whose thoughts contemplative have

On situations, that they never felt,

Start up sagacious, cover'd with the dust

Of dreaming study and pedantic rust,

And prate and preach about what others prove,

As if the world and they were hand and glove.

Leave kingly backs to cope with kingly cares ;

They have their weight to carry, subjects theirs ;

Poets, of all men, ever least regret

Increasing taxes and the nation's debt.

Could you contrive the payment, and rehearse

The mighty plan, oracular, in verse,

No bard, howe'er majestic, old or new,

Should claim my fix'd attention more than you.

B. Not Brindley nor Bridgewater would essay

To turn the course of Helicon that way ;

Nor would the Nine consent the sacred tide

Should purl amidst the traffic of Cheapside,

Or tinkle in 'Change Alley, to amuse

The leathern ears of stock-jobbers and Jews.

A. Vouchsafe, at least, to pitch the key of rhyme

To themes more pertinent, if less sublime.

When ministers and ministerial arts ;

Patriots, who love good places at their hearts ;

When admirals, extoll'd for standing still,

Or doing nothing with a deal of skill ;

Gen'als, who will not conquer when they may,

Firm friends to peace, to pleasure, and good pay ;

When Freedom, wounded almost to despair,

Though Discontent alone can find out where ;

When themes like these employ the poet's tongue,

I hear as mute as if a syren sung.

Or tell me, if you can, what pow'r maintains

A Briton's scorn of arbitrary chains :

That were a theme might animate the dead,

And move the lips of poets cast in lead. [elude

B. The cause, though worth the search, may yet

Conjecture and remark, however shrewd.

They take perhaps a well-directed aim,

Who seek it in his climate and his frame.

Lib'ral in all things else, yet Nature here

With stern severity deals out the year.

Winter invades the spring, and often pours

A chilling flood on summer's drooping flow'rs ;

Unwelcome vapours quench autumnal beams,

Ungential blasts attending curl the streams :

The peasants urge their harvest, ply the fork

With double toil, and shiver at their work ;

Thus with a rigour, for his good design'd,

She rears her fav'rite man of all mankind.

His form robust and of elastic tone,

Proportion'd well, half muscle and half bone,

Supplies with warm activity and force

A mind well-lodg'd, and masculine of course.

Hence Liberty, sweet Liberty inspires

And keeps alive his fierce but noble fires.

Patient of constitutional controul,

He bears it with meek manliness of soul ;

But if Authority grow wanton, woe

To him that treads upon his free-born toe ;

One step beyond the bound'ry of the laws

Fires him at once in Freedom's glorious cause.

Thus proud Prerogative, not much rever'd,

Is seldom felt, though sometimes seen and heard,

And in his cage, like parrot fine and gay,

Is kept to strut, look big, and talk away.

Born in a climate softer far than ours,

Not form'd like us, with such Herculean pow'rs,

the Frenchman, easy, debonair, and brisk,
 Give him his lase, his fiddle, and his frisk,
 Is always happy, reign whoever may,
 And laughs the sense of mis'ry far away.
 He drinks his simple bev'rage with a gust;
 And, feasting on an onion and a crust,
 We never feel the alacrity and joy,
 With which he shouts and carols Vive le Roy!
 Fill'd with as much true merriment and glee,
 As if he heard his king say—"Slave, be free."

Thus happiness depends, as Nature shows,
 Less on exterior things than most suppose.
 Vigilant over all that he has made,
 Kind Providence attends with gracious aid;
 Bids equity throughout his works prevail,
 And weighs the nations in an even scale;
 He can encourage Slav'ry to a smile,
 And fill with discontent a British isle.

A. Freeman and slave then, if the case be such,
 Stand on a level; and you prove too much:
 If all men indiscriminately share
 His fost'ring power and tutelary care,
 As well be yok'd by Despotism's hand,
 As dwell at large in Britain's charter'd land.

B. No. Freedom has a thousand charms to show,
 That slaves, howe'er contented, never know.
 The mind attains beneath her happy reign
 The growth, that Nature meant she should attain;
 The varied fields of science, ever new,
 Op'ning and wider op'ning on her view,
 She ventures onward with a prosp'rous force,
 While no base fear impedes her in her course.
 Religion, richest favour of the skies,
 Stands most reveal'd before the freeman's eyes;
 No shades of superstition blot the day,
 Liberty chases all that gloom away;
 The soul emancipated, unoppress'd,
 Free to prove all things, and hold fast the best,
 Learns much; and to a thousand list'ning minds
 Communicates with joy the good she finds:
 Courage in arms, and ever prompt to show
 His manly forehead to the fiercest foe;
 Glorious in war, but for the sake of peace,
 His spirits rising as his toils increase,
 Guards well what arts and industry have won,
 And Freedom claims him for her first-born son.
 Slaves fight for what were better cast away—
 The chain that binds them, and a tyrant's sway;
 But they, that fight for freedom, undertake
 The noblest cause mankind can have at stake;—
 Religion, virtue, truth, whate'er we call
 A blessing—freedom is the pledge of all.
 O Liberty! the pris'ner's pleasing dream,
 The poet's muse, his passion, and his theme;
 Genius is thine, and thou art Fancy's nurse;
 Lost without thee th' ennobling pow'rs of verse;
 Heroic song from thy free touch acquires
 It's clearest tone, the rapture it inspires:
 Place me where Winter breathes his keenest air,
 And I will sing, if Liberty be there;
 And I will sing at Liberty's dear feet,
 In Afric's torrid clime, or India's fiercest heat.

A. Sing where you please; in such a cause I grant
 An English poet's privilege to rant:
 But is not Freedom—at least is not ours—
 Too apt to play the wanton with her pow'rs,
 Grow freakish, and, o'erleaping ev'ry mound,
 Spread anarchy and terrour all around?

B. Agreed. But would you sell or slay your horse
 For bounding and curvetting in his course?

Or if, when ridden with a careless rein,
 He break away, and seek the distant plain?
 No. His high mettle, under good control, [goal.
 Gives him Olympic speed, and shoots him to the

Let Discipline employ her wholesome arts;
 Let magistrates alert perform their parts,
 Not skulk or put on a prudential mask,
 As if their duty were a desp'rate task;
 Let active Laws apply the needful curb,
 To guard the Peace, that Riot would disturb:
 And Liberty, preserv'd from wild excess,
 Shall raise no feuds for armies to suppress.
 When Tumult lately burst his prison-door,
 And set plebeian thousands in a roar;
 When he usurp'd Authority's just place,
 And dar'd to look his master in the face;
 When the rude rabble's watchword was—Destroy!
 And blazing London seem'd a second Troy;
 Liberty blush'd, and hung her drooping head,
 Beheld their progress with the deepest dread;
 Blush'd, that effects like these she should produce,
 Worse than the deeds of galley-slaves broke loose.
 She loses in such storms her very name,
 And fierce Licentiousness should bear the blame.

Incomparable gem! thy worth untold; [sold;
 Cheap though blood-bought, and thrown away when
 May no foes ravish thee, and no false friend
 Betray thee, while professing to defend!
 Prize it, ye ministers; ye monarchs, spare;
 Ye patriots, guard it with a miser's care.

A. Patriots, alas! the few that have been found,
 Where most they flourish, upon English ground,
 The country's need have scantily supplied,
 And the last left the scene, when Chatham died.

B. Not so—the virtue still adorns our age,
 Though the chief actor died upon the stage.
 In him Demosthenes was heard again;
 Liberty taught him her Athenian strain;
 She cloth'd him with authority and awe,
 Spoke from his lips, and in his looks gave law.
 His speech, his form, his action, full of grace,
 And all his country beaming in his face,
 He stood, as some inimitable hand
 Would strive to make a Paul or Tully stand.
 No sycophant or slave, that dar'd oppose
 Her sacred cause, but trembled when he rose;
 And ev'ry venal stickler for the yoke
 Felt himself crush'd at the first word he spoke.

Such men are rais'd to station and command,
 When Providence means mercy to a land.
 He speaks, and they appear; to him they owe
 Skill to direct, and strength to strike the blow;
 To manage with address, to seize with pow'r
 The crisis of a dark decisive hour.
 So Gideon earn'd a victory not his own;
 Subserviency his praise, and that alone.

Poor England! thou art a devoted deer,
 Beset with every ill but that of fear.
 The nations hunt; all mark thee for a prey;
 They swarm around thee, and thou stand'st at bay,
 Undaunted still, though wearied and perplex'd.
 Once Chatham sav'd thee: but who saves thee next?
 Alas! the tide of pleasure sweeps along
 All that should be the boast of British song.
 'T is not the wreath, that once adorn'd thy brow,
 The prize of happier times, will serve thee now.
 Our ancestry, a gallant, Christian race,
 Patterns of ev'ry virtue, ev'ry grace,
 Confess'd a God; they kneel'd before they fought,
 And prais'd him in the victories he wrought.

Now from the dust of ancient days bring forth
 Their sober zeal, integrity, and worth ;
 Courage ungrac'd by these, affronts the skies,
 Is but the fire without the sacrifice.
 The stream, that feeds the well-spring of the heart,
 Not more invigorates life's noblest part,
 Than Virtue quickens with a warmth divine
 The pow'rs, that Sin has brought to a decline.

A. Th' inestimable Estimate of Brown
 Rose like a paper-kite, and charm'd the town ;
 But measures plann'd and executed well,
 Shifted the wind that rais'd it, and it fell.
 He trod the very self-same ground you tread,
 And Victory refuted all he said.

B. And yet his judgment was not fram'd amiss ;
 It's error, if it err'd, was merely this —
 He thought the dying hour already come,
 And a complete recov'ry struck him dumb.

But that effeminacy, folly, lust,
 Enervate and enfeeble, and needs must ;
 And that a nation shamefully debas'd,
 Will be despis'd, and trampled on at last,
 Unless sweet Penitence her pow'rs renew ;
 Is truth, if History itself be true.
 There is a time, and Justice marks the date,
 For long-forbearing Clemency to wait ;
 That hour elaps'd, th' incurable revolt
 Is punish'd, and down comes the thunderbolt.
 If Mercy then put by the threatening blow,
 Must she perform the same kind office now ?
 May she ! and, if offended Heav'n be still Accessible, and pray'r prevail, she will.
 'Tis not, however, insolence and noise,
 The tempest of tumultuary joys,
 Nor is it yet despondence and dismay
 Will win her visits or engage her stay ;
 Pray'r only, and the penitential tear,
 Can call her smiling down, and fix her here.

But when a country (one that I could name)
 In prostitution sinks the sense of shame ;
 When infamous Venality, grown bold,
 Writes on his bosom, To be let or sold ;
 When Perjury, that Heav'n-defying vice,
 Sells oaths by tale, and at the lowest price,
 Stamps God's own name upon a lie just made,
 To turn a penny in the way of trade ;
 When Av'rice starves (and never hides his face)
 Two or three millions of the human race,
 And not a tongue inquires, how, where, or when,
 Though conscience will have twinges now and then ;
 When profanation of the sacred cause
 In all it's parts, times, ministry, and laws,
 Bespeaks a land, once Christian, fall'n, and lost,
 In all, that wars against that title most ;
 What follows next let cities of great name,
 And regions long since desolate proclaim.
 Nineveh, Babylon, and ancient Rome,
 Speak to the present times, and times to come ;
 They cry aloud in ev'ry careless ear,
 " Stop, while ye may ; suspend your mad career ;
 O learn from our example and our fate,
 Learn wisdom and repentance ere too late."

Not only Vice disposes and prepares
 The mind, that slumbers sweetly in her snares,
 To stoop to Tyranny's usurp'd command,
 And bend her polish'd neck beneath his hand,
 (A dire effect, by one of Nature's laws
 Unchangeably connected with it's cause ;)
 But Providence himself will intervene,
 To throw his dark displeasure o'er the scene.

All are his instruments ; each form of war,
 What burns at home, or threatens from afar,
 Nature in arms, her elements at strife,
 The storms, that overset the joys of life,
 Are but his rods to scourge a guilty land,
 And waste it at the bidding of his hand.
 He gives the word, and Mutiny soon roars
 In all her gates, and shakes her distant shores ;
 The standards of all nations are unfurl'd ;
 She has one foe, and that one foe the world.
 And, if he doom that people with a frown,
 And mark them with a seal of wrath press'd down,
 Obduracy takes place ; callous and tough,
 The reprobated race grows judgment proof :
 Earth shakes beneath them, and Heav'n roars above
 But nothing scares them from the course they love
 To the lascivious pipe and wanton song,
 That charm down fear, they frolic it along.
 With mad rapidity and unconcern,
 Down to the gulf, from which is no return.
 They trust in navies, and their navies fail —
 God's curse can cast away ten thousand sail !
 They trust in armies, and their courage dies ;
 In wisdom, wealth, in fortune, and in lies ;
 But all they trust in withers, as it must,
 When He commands, in whom they place no trust.
 Vengeance at last pours down upon their coast
 A long-despis'd, but now victorious host ;
 Tyranny sends the chain, that must abridge
 The noble sweep of all their privilege ;
 Gives liberty the last, the mortal shock ;
 Slips the slave's collar on, and snaps the lock.

A. Such lofty strains embellish what you teach,
 Mean you to prophesy, or but to preach ?

B. I know the mind, that feels indeed the fire
 The Muse imparts, and can command the lyre,
 Acts with a force, and kindles with a seal,
 Whate'er the theme, that others never feel.
 If human woes her soft attention claim,
 A tender sympathy pervades the frame,
 She pours a sensibility divine
 Along the nerve of ev'ry feeling line.
 But if a deed not tamely to be borne
 Fire indignation and a sense of scorn,
 The strings are swept with such a pow'r, so loud,
 The storm of music shakes th' astonish'd crowd.
 So, when remote futurity is brought
 Before the keen inquiry of her thought,
 A terrible sagacity informs
 The poet's heart ; he looks to distant storms ;
 He hears the thunder ere the tempest low'rs ;
 And, arm'd with strength surpassing human pow'r,
 Seizes events as yet unknown to man,
 And darts his soul into the dawning plan.
 Hence, in a Roman mouth, the graceful name
 Of prophet and of poet was the same ;
 Hence British poets, too, the priesthood shar'd,
 And every hallow'd druid was a bard.
 But no prophetic fires to me belong ;
 I play with syllables, and sport in song.

A. At Westminster, where little poets strive
 To set a distich upon six and five,
 Where Discipline helps op'ning buds of sense,
 And makes his pupils proud with silver pence,
 I was a poet too ; but modern taste
 Is so refin'd, and delicate, and chaste,
 That verse, whatever fire the fancy warms,
 Without a creamy smoothness has no charms.
 Thus, all success depending on an ear,
 And thinking I might purchase it too dear,

sentiment were sacrific'd to sound,
 And truth cut short to make a period round,
 Judg'd a man of sense could scarce do worse,
 Than caper in the morris-dance of verse.

B. Thus reputation is a spur to wit,
 And some wits flag through fear of losing it.
 Give me the line, that plows it's stately course
 Like a proud swan, conq'ring the stream by force;
 That, like some cottage-beauty, strikes the heart,
 Quite unindebted to the tricks of art.
 When Labour and when Dulness, club in hand,
 Like the two figures at St. Dunstan's stand,
 Eating alternately, in measur'd time,
 The clock-work tintinnabulum of rhyme,
 Exact and regular the sounds will be;
 But such mere quarter-strokes are not for me.

From him, who rears a poem lank and long,
 To him who strains his all into a song;
 Perhaps some bonny Caledonian air,
 All birks and braes, though he was never there;
 Or, having whelp'd a prologue with great pains,
 Feels himself spent, and fumbles for his brains;
 A prologue interdash'd with many a stroke —
 An art contriv'd to advertise a joke,
 So that the jest is clearly to be seen,
 Not in the words — but in the gap between:
 Fanner is all in all, whate'er is writ,
 The substitute for genius, sense, and wit.

To dally much with subjects mean and low,
 Proves that the mind is weak, or makes it so.
 Neglected talents rust into decay,
 And ev'ry effort ends in push-pin play.
 The man that means success, should soar above
 A soldier's feather, or a lady's glove;
 Else summoning the Muse to such a theme,
 The fruit of all her labour is whipp'd cream.
 As if an eagle flew aloft, and then —
 Stoop'd from it's highest pitch to pounce a wren.
 As if the poet, purposing to wed,
 Should carve himself a wife in gingerbread.

Ages elaps'd ere Homer's lamp appear'd,
 And ages ere the Mantuan swan was heard.
 To carry nature lengths unknown before,
 To give a Milton birth, ask'd ages more.
 Thus Genius rose and set at order'd times,
 And shot a day-spring into distant climes,
 Ennobling ev'ry region that he chose;
 He sunk in Greece, in Italy he rose;
 And, tedious years of Gothic darkness pass'd,
 Emerg'd all splendour in our isle at last.
 Thus lovely halcyons dive into the main,
 Then show far off their shining plumes again.

A. Is genius only found in epic lays?
 Prove this, and forfeit all pretence to praise.
 Make their heroic pow'rs your own at once,
 Or candidly confess yourself a dunce.

B. These were the chief: each interval of night
 Was grac'd with many an undulating light,
 In less illustrious bards his beauty shone
 A meteor, or a star; in these the Sun.

The nightingale may claim the topmost bough,
 While the poor grasshopper must chirp below.
 Like him unnotic'd, I, and such as I,
 Spread little wings, and rather skip than fly;
 Perch'd on the meagre produce of the land,
 An ell or two of prospect we command;
 But never peep beyond the thorny bound,
 Or oaken fence, that hems the paddock round.

In Eden, ere yet innocence of heart
 Had faded, poetry was not an art;

Language, above all teaching, or if taught,
 Only by gratitude and glowing thought,
 Elegant as simplicity, and warm
 As ecstasy, unmanacled by form,
 Not prompted, as in our degen'rate days,
 By low ambition and the thirst of praise,
 Was natural as is the flowing stream,
 And yet magnificent — A God the theme!
 That theme on Earth exhausted, though above
 'T is found as everlasting as his love,
 Man lavish'd all his thoughts on human things —
 The feats of heroes, and the wrath of kings;
 But still, while Virtue kindled his delight,
 The song was moral, and so far was right.
 'T was thus till Luxury seduc'd the mind
 To joys less innocent, as less refin'd;
 Then Genius danc'd a bacchanal; he crown'd
 The brimming goblet, seiz'd the thyrsus, bound
 His brows with ivy, rush'd into the field
 Of wild imagination, and there reel'd,
 The victim of his own lascivious fires,
 And, dizzy with delight, profan'd the sacred wires.
 Anacreon, Horace, play'd in Greece and Rome
 This bedlam part; and others nearer home. [reign'd
 When Cromwell fought for pow'r, and while he
 The proud protector of the pow'r he gain'd,
 Religion, harsh, intolerant, austere,
 Parent of manners like herself severe,
 Drew a rough copy of the Christian face
 Without the smile, the sweetness, or the grace;
 The dark and sullen humour of the time.
 Judg'd ev'ry effort of the Muse a crime;
 Verse, in the finest mould of fancy cast,
 Was lumber in an age so void of taste:
 But when the second Charles assum'd the sway,
 And arts reviv'd beneath a softer day,
 Then, like a bow long forc'd into a curve,
 The mind, releas'd from too constrain'd a nerve,
 Flew to it's first position with a spring,
 That made the vaulted roofs of pleasure ring.
 His court, the dissolute and hateful school,
 Of Wantonness, where vice was taught by rule,
 Swarm'd with a scribbling herd, as deep inlaid
 With brutal lust as ever Circe made.
 From these a long succession, in the rage
 Of rank obscenity, debauch'd their age;
 Nor ceas'd, till, ever anxious to redress
 The abuses of her sacred charge, the press,
 The Muse instructed a well-nurtur'd train
 Of abler votaries to cleanse the stain,
 And claim the palm for purity of song,
 That Lewdness had usurp'd and worn so long.
 Then decent Pleasantry and sterling Sense,
 That neither gave nor would endure offence,
 Whipp'd out of sight, with satire just and keen,
 The puppy pack, that had defil'd the scene.

In front of these came Addison. In him
 Humour in holiday and slightly trim,
 Sublimity and Attic taste, combin'd,
 To polish, furnish, and delight, the mind.
 Then Pope, as harmony itself exact,
 In verse well disciplin'd, complete, compact,
 Gave virtue and morality a grace,
 That, quite eclipsing Pleasure's painted face,
 Levied a tax of wonder and applause,
 Ev'n on the fools that trampled on their laws.
 But he (his musical finesse was such,
 So nice his ear, so delicate his touch)
 Made poetry a mere mechanic art;
 And ev'ry warbler has his tune by heart.

Nature imparting her satiric gift,
Her serious mirth, to Arbuthnot and Swift,
With droll sobriety they rais'd a smile
At Folly's cost, themselves unmov'd the while.
That constellation set, the world in vain
Must hope to look upon their like again.

A. Are we then left?—B. Not wholly in the dark;
Wit now and then, struck smartly, shows a spark,
Sufficient to redeem the modern race
From total night and absolute disgrace.
While servile trick and imitative knack
Confine the million in the beaten track,
Perhaps some courser, who disdains the road,
Snuffs up the wind, and flings himself abroad.

Contemporaries all surpass'd, see one;
Short his career indeed, but ably run;
Churchill; himself, unconscious of his pow'rs,
In penury consum'd his idle hours;
And, like a scatter'd seed at random sown,
Was left to spring by vigour of his own.
Lifted at length, by dignity of thought
And dint of genius, to an affluent lot,
He laid his head in Luxury's soft lap,
And took, too often, there his easy nap.
If brighter beams than all he threw not forth,
'T was negligence in him, not want of worth.
Surly, and slovenly, and bold, and coarse,
Too proud for art, and trusting in mere force,
Spendthrift alike of money and of wit,
Always at speed, and never drawing bit,
He struck the lyre in such a careless mood,
And so disdain'd the rules he understood,
The laurel seem'd to wait on his command,
He snatch'd it rudely from the Muses' hand.
Nature, exerting an unwearied pow'r,
Forms, opens, and gives scent to ev'ry flow'r;
Spreads the fresh verdure of the field, and leads
The dancing Naiads through the dewy meads:
She fills profuse ten thousand little throats
With music, modulating all their notes; [known,
And charms the woodland scenes, and wilds un-
With artless airs and concerts of her own:
But seldom (as if fearful of expense)
Vouchsafes to man a poet's just pretence—
Fervency, freedom, fluency of thought,
Harmony, strength, words exquisitely sought;
Fancy, that from the bow, that spans the sky,
Brings colours, dipp'd in Heav'n, that never die;
A soul exalted above Earth, a mind
Skill'd in the characters that form mankind;
And, as the Sun in rising beauty dress'd,
Looks to the westward from the dappled east,
And marks, whatever clouds may interpose,
Ere yet his race begins, it's glorious close;
An eye like his to catch the distant goal;
Or, ere the wheels of verse begin to roll,
Like his to shed illuminating rays
On ev'ry scene and subject it surveys:
Thus grac'd, the man asserts a poet's name,
And the world cheerfully admits the claim.
Pity Religion has so seldom found
A skilful guide into poetic ground! [stray,
The flow'rs would spring where'er she deign'd to
And ev'ry Muse attend her in her way.
Virtue indeed meets many a rhyming friend,
And many a compliment politely penn'd;
But, unattir'd in that becoming vest
Religion weaves for her, and half undress'd,
Stands in the desert, shiv'ring and forlorn,
A wint'ry figure, like a wither'd thorn.

The shelves are full, all other themes are sped;
Hackney'd and worn to the last flimsy thread,
Satire has long since done his best; and curst
And loathsome Ribaldry has done his worst;
Fancy has sported all her pow'rs away
In tales, in trifles, and in children's play;
And 't is the sad complaint, and almost true,
Whate'er we write, we bring forth nothing new.
'T were new indeed to see a bard all fire,
Touch'd with a coal from Heav'n, assume the lyre,
And tell the world, still kindling as he sung,
With more than mortal music on his tongue,
That He, who died below, and reigns above,
Inspires the song, and that his name is Love.

For, after all, if merely to beguile,
By flowing numbers and a flow'ry style,
The tedium that the lazy rich endure,
Which now and then sweet poetry may cure;
Or, if to see the name of idle self,
Stamp'd on the well-bound quarto, grace the shelf,
To float a bubble on the breath of Fame,
Prompt his endeavour and engage his aim,
Debas'd to servile purposes of pride,
How are the pow'rs of genius misapplied!
The gift, whose office is the Giver's praise,
To trace him in his word, his works, his ways!
Then spread the rich discov'ry, and invite
Mankind to share in the divine delight,
Distorted from it's use and just design,
To make the pitiful possessor shine.
To purchase, at the fool-frequented fair
Of vanity, a wreath for self to wear,
Is profanation of the basest kind—
Proof of a trifling and a worthless mind.

A. Hail Sternhold, then; and Hopkins, hail!

B. Amen.

If flatt'ry, folly, lust, employ the pen;
If acrimony, slander, and abuse,
Give it a charge to blacken and traduce;
Though Butler's wit, Pope's numbers, Prior's ease,
With all that fancy can invent to please,
Adorn the polish'd periods as they fall,
One madrigal of theirs is worth them all.

A. 'T would thin the ranks of the poetic tribe,
To dash the pen through all that you proscribe.

B. No matter—we could shift when they were not;
And should, no doubt, if they were all forgot.

CONVERSATION.

Nam neque me tantum venientis sibylus auri,
Nec percussa juvant fluctu tam litora, nec quæ
Saxosas inter decurrunt flumina valles.

VIRG. Ecl. v.

THOUGH Nature weigh our talents, and dispense
To ev'ry man his modicum of sense,
And Conversation in it's better part
May be esteem'd a gift, and not an art,
Yet much depends, as in the tiller's toil,
On culture, and the sowing of the soil.
Words learn'd by rote a parrot may rehearse,
But talking is not always to converse;
Not more distinct from harmony divine,
The constant creaking of a country sign.
As Alphabets in ivory employ,
Hour after hour, the yet unletter'd boy,

Sorting and puzzling with a deal of glee
 Those seeds of science called his A B C ;
 O language in the mouths of the adult,
 Witness it's insignificant result,
 Too often proves an implement of play,
 A toy to sport with, and pass time away.
 Collect at ev'ning what the day brought forth,
 Compress the sum into it's solid worth,
 And if it weigh th' importance of a fly,
 The scales are false, or algebra a lie.
 Sacred interpreter of human thought,
 How few respect or use thee as they ought !
 But all shall give account of ev'ry wrong,
 Who dare dishonour or defile the tongue ;
 Who prostitute it in the cause of vice,
 Or sell their glory at a market-price ;
 Who vote for hire, or point it with lampoon,
 The dear-bought placeman, and the cheap buf-
 foon.

There is a prurience in the speech of some,
 Wrath stays him, or else God would strike them
 dumb :

His wise forbearance has their end in view,
 They fill their measure, and receive their due.
 The heathen law-givers of ancient days,
 Names almost worthy of a Christian's praise,
 Would drive them forth from the resort of men,
 And shut up ev'ry satyr in his den.

O come not ye near innocence and truth,
 Ye worms that eat into the bud of youth !
 Infectious as impure, your blighting pow'r
 Taints in it's rudiments the promis'd flow'r ;
 It's odour perish'd, and it's charming hue,
 Thenceforth 't is hateful, for it smells of you.
 Not ev'n the vigorous and headlong rage
 Of adolescence, or a firmer age,
 Affords a plea allowable or just
 For making speech the pamperer of lust ;
 But when the breath of age commits the fault,
 'T is nauseous as the vapour of a vault.
 So wither'd stumps disgrace the sylvan scene,
 No longer fruitful, and no longer green ;
 The sapless wood divested of the bark,
 Grows fungous, and takes fire at ev'ry spark.

Oaths terminate, as Paul observes, all strife —
 Some men have surely then a peaceful life ;
 Whatever subject occupy discourse,
 The feats of Vestris, or the naval force,
 Asseveration blust'ring in your face
 Makes contradiction such a hopeless case :
 In ev'ry tale they tell, or false or true,
 Well known, or such as no man ever knew,
 They fix attention, heedless of your pain,
 With oaths like rivets forc'd into the brain ;
 And ev'n when sober truth prevails throughout,
 They swear it, till affirmance breeds a doubt.
 A Persian, humble servant of the Sun,
 Who, though devout, yet bigotry had none,
 Hearing a lawyer, grave in his address,
 With adjurations ev'ry word impress,
 Suppos'd the man a bishop, or at least,
 God's name so much upon his lips, a priest ;
 Bow'd at the close with all his graceful airs,
 And begg'd an int'rest in his frequent pray'rs.

Go, quit the rank to which ye stood preferr'd,
 Henceforth associate in one common herd ;
 Religion, virtue, reason, common sense,
 Pronounce your human form a false pretence ;
 A mere disguise, in which a devil lurks,
 Who yet betrays his secret by his works.

Ye pow'rs who rule the tongue, if such there are,
 And make colloquial happiness your care,
 Preserve me from the thing I dread and hate,
 A duel in the form of a debate.
 The clash of arguments and jar of words,
 Worse than the mortal brunt of rival swords,
 Decide no question with their tedious length,
 For opposition gives opinion strength,
 Divert the champions prodigal of breath,
 And put the peaceably-dispos'd to death.
 O thwart me not, Sir Soph, at ev'ry turn,
 Nor carp at ev'ry flaw you may discern ;
 Though syllogisms hang not on my tongue,
 I am not surely always in the wrong ;
 'T is hard if all is false that I advance,
 A fool must now and then be right by chance.
 Not that all freedom of dissent I blame ;
 No — there I grant the privilege I claim ;
 A disputable point is no man's ground ;
 Rove where you please, 't is common all around.
 Discourse may want an animated — No,
 To brush the surface, and to make it flow ;
 But still remember, if you mean to please,
 To press your point with modesty and ease.
 The mark, at which my juster aim I take,
 Is contradiction for it's own dear sake.
 Set your opinion at whatever pitch,
 Knots and impediments make something hitch ;
 Adopt his own, 't is equally in vain,
 Your thread of argument is snapp'd again ;
 The wrangler, rather than accord with you,
 Will judge himself deceiv'd, and prove it too.
 Vociferated logic kills me quite,
 A noisy man is always in the right,
 I twirl my thumbs, fall back into my chair,
 Fix on the wainscot a distressful stare,
 And, when I hope his blunders are all out,
 Reply discreetly — " To be sure — no doubt !"
 Dubius is such a scrupulous good man —
 Yes — you may catch him tripping, if you can.
 He would not, with a peremptory tone,
 Assert the nose upon his face his own ;
 With hesitation admirably slow,
 He humbly hopes — presumes — it may be so.
 His evidence, if he were call'd by law
 To swear to some enormity he saw,
 For want of prominence and just relief,
 Would hang an honest man, and save a thief.
 Through constant dread of giving truth offence,
 He ties up all his hearers in suspense ;
 Knows what he knows, as if he knew it not ;
 What he remembers seems to have forgot ;
 His sole opinion, whatsoe'er befall,
 Centring at last in having none at all.
 Yet, though he tease and balk your list'ning ear,
 He makes one useful point exceeding clear ;
 Howe'er ingenious on his darling theme
 A sceptic in philosophy may seem,
 Reduc'd to practice, his beloved rule
 Would only prove him a consummate fool ;
 Useless in him alike both brain and speech,
 Fate having plac'd all truth above his reach,
 His ambiguities his total sum,
 He might as well be blind, and deaf, and dumb.

Where men of judgment creep and feel their way,
 The positive pronounce without dismay ;
 Their want of light and intellect supplied
 By sparks absurdity strikes out of pride.
 Without the means of knowing right from wrong,
 They always are decisive, clear, and strong ;

Where others toil with philosophic force,
 Their nimble nonsense takes a shorter course;
 Flings at your head conviction in the lump,
 And gains remote conclusions at a jump:
 Their own defect, invisible to them,
 Seen in another, they at once condemn;
 And, though self-idoliz'd in ev'ry case,
 Hate their own likeness in a brother's face.
 The cause is plain, and not to be denied,
 'The proud are always most provok'd by pride.
 Few competitions but engender spite;
 And those the most, where neither has a right.

The point of honour has been deem'd of use,
 To teach good manners, and to curb abuse;
 Admit it true, the consequence is clear,
 Our polish'd manners are a mask we wear,
 And, at the bottom barb'rous still and rude,
 We are restrain'd, indeed, but not subdu'd.
 The very remedy, however sure,
 Springs from the mischief it intends to cure,
 And savage in it's principle appears,
 Tried, as it should be, by the fruit it bears.
 'T is hard, indeed, if nothing will defend
 Mankind from quarrels but their fatal end;
 That now and then a hero must de cease,
 That the surviving world may live in peace.
 Perhaps at last close scrutiny may show
 The practice dastardly, and mean, and low;
 That men engage in it compell'd by force,
 And fear, not courage, is it's proper source:
 The fear of tyrant custom, and the fear
 Lest fops should censure us, and fools should sneer.
 At least to trample on our Maker's laws,
 And hazard life for any or no cause,
 To rush into a fix'd eternal state
 Out of the very flames of rage and hate,
 Or send another shiv'ring to the bar
 With all the guilt of such unnat'ral war,
 Whatever Use may urge, or Honour plead,
 On Reason's verdict is a madman's deed.
 Am I to set my life upon a throw,
 Because a bear is rude and surly? No—
 A moral, sensible, and well-bred man
 Will not affront me; and no other can.
 Were I empower'd to regulate the lists,
 They should encounter with well-loaded fists;
 A Trojan combat would be something new,
 Let Dares beat Entellus black and blue;
 Then each might show, to his admiring friends,
 In honourable bumps his rich amends,
 And carry, in contusions of his skull,
 A satisfactory receipt in full.

A story, in which native humour reigns,
 Is often useful, always entertains:
 A graver fact, enlisted on your side,
 May furnish illustration, well applied;
 But sedentary weavers of long tales
 Give me the fidgets, and my patience fails.
 'T is the most asinine employ on Earth,
 To hear them tell of parentage and birth,
 And echo conversations, dull and dry,
 Embellish'd with—"He said," and "So said I."
 At ev'ry interview their route the same,
 The repetition makes attention lame:
 We bustle up with unsuccessful speed,
 And in the saddest part cry—"Droll, indeed!"
 The path of narrative with care pursue,
 Still making probability your clew;
 On all the vestiges of truth attend,
 And let them guide you to a decent end.

Of all ambitions man may entertain,
 The worst, that can invade a sickly brain,
 Is that which angles hourly for surprise,
 And baits it's hook with prodigies and lies.
 Credulous infancy, or age as weak,
 Are fittest auditors for such to seek,
 Who, to please others, will themselves disgrace,
 Yet please not, but affront you to your face.
 A great retailer of this curious ware
 Having unloaded and made many stare,
 "Can this be true?"—an arch observer cries,
 "Yes," (rather mov'd,) "I saw it with these eyes."
 "Sir! I believe it on that ground alone;
 I could not, had I seen it with my own."

A tale should be judicious, clear, succinct;
 The language plain, and incidents well link'd;
 Tell not as new what ev'ry body knows,
 And, new or old, still hasten to a close;
 There, centring in a focus round and neat,
 Let all your rays of information meet.
 What neither yields us profit nor delight,
 Is like a nurse's lullaby at night;
 Guy Earl of Warwick, and fair Eleanore,
 Or giant-killing Jack, would please me more.

The pipe, with solemn interposing puff,
 Makes half a sentence at a time enough;
 The dozing sages drop the drowsy strain,
 Then pause, and puff—and speak, and pause again.
 Such often, like the tube they so admire,
 Important triflers! have more smoke than fire.
 Pernicious weed! whose scent the fair annoys,
 Unfriendly to society's chief joys,
 Thy worst effect is banishing for hours
 The sex, whose presence civilizes ours:
 Thou art, indeed, the drug a gard'ner wants,
 To poison vermin that infest his plants;
 But are we so to wit and beauty blind,
 As to despise the glory of our kind,
 And show the softest minds and fairest forms
 As little mercy, as he grubs and worms?
 They dare not wait the riotous abuse,
 Thy thirst-creating steams at length produce,
 When wine has giv'n indecent language birth,
 And forc'd the flood-gates of licentious mirth;
 For sea-born Venus her attachment shows
 Still to that element, from which she rose,
 And with a quiet, which no fumes disturb,
 Sips meek infusions of a milder herb.

Th' emphatic speaker dearly loves t' oppose,
 In contact inconvenient, nose to nose.
 As if the gnomon on his neighbour's phiz,
 Touch'd with the magnet, had attracted his.
 His whisper'd theme, dilated and at large,
 Proves after all a wind-gun's airy charge,
 An extract of his diary—no more,
 A tasteless journal of the day before.
 He walk'd abroad, o'ertaken in the rain,
 Call'd on a friend, drank tea, stepp'd home again,
 Resum'd his purpose, had a world of talk
 With one he stumbled on, and lost his walk.
 I interrupt him with a sudden bow
 "Adieu, dear sir! lest you should lose it now."

I cannot talk with civet in the room,
 A fine puss-gentleman that's all perfume;
 The sight's enough—no need to smell a bear—
 Who thrusts his nose into a raree-show?
 His odoriferous attempts to please
 Perhaps might prosper with a swarm of bees;
 But we that make no honey, though we sting,
 Poets are sometimes apt to man the thing.

'T is wrong to bring into a mix'd resort,
What makes some sick, and others à-la-mort :
An argument of cogence, we may say,
Why such a one should keep himself away.

A graver coxcomb we may sometimes see,
Quite as absurd, though not so light as he :
A shallow brain behind a serious mask,
An oracle within an empty cask,
The solemn fop ; significant and budge ;
A fool with judges, amongst fools a judge ;
He says but little, and that little said
Owes all it's weight, like loaded dice, to lead.
His wit invites you by his looks to come,
But when you knock it never is at home :
'T is like a parcel sent you by the stage,
Some handsome present, as your hopes presage ;
'T is heavy, bulky, and bids fair to prove
An absent friend's fidelity and love ;
But when unpack'd, your disappointment groans
To find it stuff'd with brick-bats, earth, and stones.

Some men employ their health, an ugly trick,
In making known how oft they have been sick,
And give us in recitals of disease
A doctor's trouble, but without the fees ;
Relate how many weeks they kept their bed,
How an emetic or cathartic sped ;
Nothing is slightly touch'd, much less forgot,
Nose, ears, and eyes, seem present on the spot.
Now the distemper, spite of draught or pill,
Victorious seem'd, and now the doctor's skill ;
And now — alas, for unforeseen mishaps !
They put on a damp nightcap and relapse ;
They thought they must have died, they were so bad ;
Their peevish hearers almost wish they had.

Some fretful tempers wince at ev'ry touch,
You always do too little, or too much :
You speak with life, in hopes to entertain,
Your elevated voice goes through the brain ;
You fall at once into a lower key,
That's worse — the drone-pipe of an humble-bee.
The southern sash admits too strong a light,
You rise and drop the curtain — now 't is night.
He shakes with cold — you stir the fire and strive
To make a blaze — that's roasting him alive.
Serve him with venison, and he chooses fish ;
With sole — that's just the sort he would not wish.
He takes what he at first profess'd to loath,
And in due time feeds heartily on both ;
Yet still, o'erclouded with a constant frown,
He does not swallow, but he gulps it down.
Your hope to please him vain on ev'ry plan,
Himself should work that wonder, if he can —
Alas ! his efforts double his distress,
He likes yours little, and his own still less.
Thus always teasing others, always teas'd,
His only pleasure is — to be displeas'd.

I pity bashful men, who feel the pain
Of fancied scorn and undeserv'd disdain,
And bear the marks upon a blushing face
Of needless shame, and self-impos'd disgrace.
Our sensibilities are so acute,
The fear of being silent makes us mute.
We sometimes think we could a speech produce
Much to the purpose, if our tongues were loose ;
But being tried, it dies upon the lip,
Faint as a chicken's note that has the pip :
Our wasted oil unprofitably burns,
Like hidden lamps in old sepulchral urns.
Few Frenchmen of this evil have complain'd ;
It seems as if we Britons were ordain'd,

By way of wholesome curb upon our pride,
To fear each other, fearing none beside.
The cause, perhaps, inquiry may descry,
Self-searching with an introverted eye,
Conceal'd within an unsuspected part,
The vainest corner of our own vain heart :
For ever aiming at the world's esteem,
Our self-importance ruins it's own scheme ;
In other eyes our talents rarely shown,
Become at length so splendid in our own,
We dare not risk them into public view,
Lest they miscarry of what seems their due.
True modesty is a discerning grace,
And only blushes in the proper place ;
But counterfeit is blind, and skulks through fear,
Where 't is a shame to be asham'd t' appear :
Humility the parent of the first,
The last by Vanity produc'd and nurs'd.
The circle form'd, we sit in silent state,
Like figures drawn upon a dial-plate ; [show
" Yes, ma'am," and " No, ma'am," utter'd softly,
Ev'ry five minutes how the minutes go ;
Each individual suff'ring a constraint
Poetry may, but colours cannot paint,
As if in close committee on the sky,
Reports it hot or cold, or wet or dry ;
And finds a changing clime a happy source
Of wise reflection, and well-tim'd discourse.
We next inquire, but softly and by stealth,
Like conservators of the public health,
Of epidemic throats, if such there are,
And coughs, and rheums, and phthisic, and catarrh.
That theme exhausted, a wide chasm ensues,
Fill'd up at last with interesting news,
Who danc'd with whom, and who are like to wed,
And who is hang'd, and who is brought to bed :
But fear to call a more important cause,
As if 't were treason against English laws.
The visit paid, with ecstasy we come,
As from a sev'n years' transportation, home,
And there resume an unembarrass'd brow,
Recov'ring what we lost we know not how,
The faculties, that seem'd reduc'd to nought,
Expression and the privilege of thought.

The reeking, roaring hero of the chase,
I give him over as a desp'rate case.
Physicians write in hopes to work a cure,
Never, if honest ones, when death is sure ;
And though the fox he follows may be tam'd,
A mere fox-foll'wer never is reclaim'd.
Some farrier should prescribe his proper course,
Whose only fit companion is his horse ;
Or if, deserving of a better doom,
The noble beast judge otherwise, his groom.
Yet ev'n the rogue that serves him, though he stand,
To take his honour's orders, cap in hand,
Prefers his fellow-grooms with much good sense,
Their skill a truth, his master's a pretence.
If neither horse nor groom affect the squire,
Where can at last his jockeyship retire ?
O to the club, the scene of savage joys,
The school of coarse good fellowship and noise ;
There, in the sweet society of those,
Whose friendship from his boyish years he chose,
Let him improve his talent if he can,
Till none but beasts acknowledge him a man.

Man's heart had been impenetrably seal'd,
Like theirs that cleave the flood or graze the field,
Had not his Maker's all-bestowing hand
Giv'n him a soul, and bade him understand ;

The reas'ning pow'r vouchsaf'd of course inferr'd
 The pow'r to clothe that reason with his word ;
 For all is perfect, that God works on Earth,
 And he, that gives conception, aids the birth.
 If this be plain, 't is plainly understood,
 What uses of his boon the giver would.
 The Mind, dispatch'd upon her busy toil,
 Should range where Providence has bless'd the soil ;
 Visiting ev'ry flow'r with labour meet,
 And gath'ring all her treasures sweet by sweet,
 She should imbue the tongue with what she sips,
 And shed the balmy blessing on the lips,
 That good diffus'd may more abundant grow,
 And speech may praise the pow'r that bids it flow.
 Will the sweet warbler of the livelong night,
 That fills the list'ning lover with delight,
 Forget his harmony, with rapture heard,
 To learn the twitt'ring of a meaner bird ?
 Or make the parrot's mimicry his choice,
 That odious libel on a human voice ?
 No— Nature, unsophisticate by man,
 Starts not aside from her Creator's plan ;
 The melody, that was at first design'd
 To cheer the rude forefathers of mankind,
 Is note for note deliver'd in our ears,
 In the last scene of her six thousand years.
 Yet Fashion, leader of a chatt'ring train,
 Whom man for his own hurt permits to reign,
 Who shifts and changes all things but his shape,
 And would degrade her vot'ry to an ape,
 The fruitful parent of abuse and wrong,
 Holds a usurp'd dominion o'er his tongue ;
 There sits and prompts him with his own disgrace,
 Prescribes the theme, the tone, and the grimace,
 And, when accomplish'd in her wayward school,
 Calls gentleman whom she has made a fool.
 'T is an unalterable fix'd decree,
 That none could frame or ratify but she,
 That Heav'n and Hell, and righteousness and sin,
 Snares in his path, and foes that lurk within,
 God and his attributes, (a field of day
 Where 't is an angel's happiness to stray,)
 Fruits of his love and wonders of his might,
 Be never nam'd in ears esteem'd polite.
 That he who dares, when she forbids, be grave,
 Shall stand proscrib'd, a madman or a knave,
 A close designer not to be believ'd,
 Or, if excus'd that charge, at least deceiv'd.
 Oh folly worthy of the nurse's lap,
 Give it the breast, or stop it's mouth with pap !
 Is it incredible, or can it seem
 A dream to any, except those that dream,
 That man should love his Maker, and that fire,
 Warming his heart, should at his lips transpire ?
 Know then, and modestly let fall your eyes,
 And veil your daring crest that braves the skies ;
 That air of insolence affronts your God,
 You need his pardon, and provoke his rod :
 Now, in a posture that becomes you more
 Than that heroic strut assum'd before,
 Know, your arrears with ev'ry hour accrue
 For mercy shown, while wrath is justly due.
 The time is short, and there are souls on Earth,
 Though future pain may serve for present mirth,
 Acquainted with the woes, that fear or shame,
 By Fashion taught, forbade them once to name,
 And, having felt the pangs you deem a jest,
 Have prov'd them truths too big to be express'd.
 Go seek on Revelation's hallow'd ground,
 Sure to succeed, the remedy they found ;

Touch'd by that pow'r that you have dar'd to mock,
 That makes seas stable, and dissolves the rock,
 Your heart shall yield a life-renewing stream,
 That fools, as you have done, shall call a dream.

It happen'd on a solemn even-tide,
 Soon after He that was our Surety died,
 Two bosom friends each pensively inclin'd,
 The scene of all those sorrows left behind,
 Sought their own village, busied as they went
 In musings worthy of the great event :
 They spake of him they lov'd, of him whose life,
 Though blameless, had incurr'd perpetual strife,
 Whose deeds had left, in spite of hostile arts,
 A deep memorial graven on their hearts.
 The recollection, like a vein of ore,
 The farther trac'd, enrich'd them still the more ;
 They thought him, and they justly thought him,
 one

Sent to do more than he appear'd t' have done ;
 T' exalt a people, and to place them high
 Above all else, and wonder'd he should die.
 Ere yet they brought their journey to an end,
 A stranger join'd them, courteous as a friend,
 And ask'd them with a kind engaging air
 What their affliction was, and begg'd a share.
 Inform'd, he gather'd up the broken thread,
 And, truth and wisdom gracing all he said,
 Explain'd, illustrated, and search'd so well
 The tender theme, on which they chose to dwell,
 That reaching home, " The night," they said, " is near,

We must not now be parted, sojourn here."
 The new acquaintance soon became a guest,
 And, made so welcome at their simple feast,
 He bless'd the bread, but vanish'd at the word,
 And left them both exclaiming, " 'T was the Lord !
 Did not our hearts feel all he deign'd to say,
 Did they not burn within us by the way ?"

Now theirs was converse, such as it behoves
 Man to maintain, and such as God approves :
 Their views indeed were indistinct and dim,
 But yet successful, being aim'd at him.
 Christ and his character their only scope,
 Their object, and their subject, and their hope,
 They felt what it became them much to feel,
 And, wanting him to loose the sacred seal,
 Found him as prompt, as their desire was true,
 To spread the new-born glories in their view.
 Well— what are ages and the lapse of time
 Match'd against truths, as lasting as sublime ?
 Can length of years on God himself exact,
 Or make that fiction, which was once a fact ?
 No— marble and recording brass decay,
 And like the graver's mem'ry pass away ;
 The works of man inherit, as is just,
 Their author's frailty, and return to dust :
 But truth divine for ever stands secure,
 It's head is guarded as it's base is sure ;
 Fix'd in the rolling flood of endless years,
 The pillar of th' eternal plan appears,
 The raging storm and dashing wave defies,
 Built by that architect, who built the skies.
 Hearts may be found, that harbour at this hour
 That love of Christ, and all it's quick'ning pow'r ;
 And lips unstain'd by folly or by strife,
 Whose wisdom, drawn from the deep well of life,
 Tastes of it's healthful origin, and flows
 A Jordan for th' ablution of our woes.
 O days of Heav'n, and nights of equal praise,
 Serene and peaceful as those heav'nly days,

hen souls drawn upwards in communion sweet
 njoy the stillness of some close retreat,
 discourse, as if releas'd and safe at home,
 f dangers past, and wonders yet to come,
 nd spread the sacred treasures of the breast
 pon the lap of covenanted Rest.

“ What, always dreaming over heav'nly things,
 like angel-heads in stone with pigeon-wings?
 anting and whining out all day the word,
 nd half the night? fanatic and absurd!
 line be the friend less frequent in his pray'rs,
 ho makes no bustle with his soul's affairs,
 hose wit can brighten up a wintry day,
 nd chase the splenetic dull hours away;
 ontent on Earth in earthly things to shine,
 ho waits for Heav'n ere he becomes divine,
 eaves saints t' enjoy those altitudes they teach,
 nd plucks the fruit plac'd more within his reach.”

Well spoken, Advocate of sin and shame,
 Known by thy bleating, Ignorance thy name.
 s sparkling wit the World's exclusive right?
 he fix'd fee-simple of the vain and light?
 Can hopes of Heav'n, bright prospects of an hour,
 hat come to waft us out of Sorrow's pow'r,
 Obscure or quench a faculty, that finds
 it's happiest soil in the serenest minds?
 Religion curbs indeed it's wanton play,
 And brings the trifler under rig'rous sway,
 But gives it usefulness unknown before,
 And, purifying, makes it shine the more.
 A Christian's wit is inoffensive light,
 A beam that aids, but never grieves the sight;
 Vig'rous in age as in the flush of youth,
 'Tis always active on the side of truth;
 Temp'rance and peace insure it's healthful state,
 And make it brightest at it's latest date.
 Oh I have seen (nor hope perhaps in vain,
 Ere life go down, to see such sights again)
 A vet'ran warrior in the Christian field,
 Who never saw the sword he could not wield;
 Grave without dulness, learned without pride,
 Exact, yet not precise, though meek, keen-ey'd;
 A man that would have foil'd at their own play
 A dozen would-bes of the modern day;
 Who, when occasion justified it's use,
 Had wit as bright as ready to produce,
 Could fetch from records of an earlier age,
 Or from philosophy's enlighten'd page,
 His rich materials, and regale your ear
 With strains it was a privilege to hear:
 Yet above all his luxury supreme,
 And his chief glory, was the Gospel theme;
 There he was copious as old Greece or Rome,
 His happy eloquence seem'd there at home,
 Ambitious not to shine or to excel,
 But to treat justly what he lov'd so well.

It moves me more perhaps than folly ought,
 When some green heads, as void of wit as thought,
 Suppose themselves monopolists of sense,
 And wiser men's ability pretence.
 Though time will wear us, and we must grow old,
 Such men are not forgot as soon as cold,
 Their fragrant mem'ry will outlast their tomb,
 Embalm'd for ever in it's own perfume.
 And to say truth, though in it's early prime,
 And when unstain'd with any grosser crime,
 Youth has a sprightliness and fire to boast,
 That in the valley of decline are lost,
 And Virtue with peculiar charms appears,
 Crown'd with the garland of life's blooming years;

Yet Age, by long experience well inform'd,
 Well read, well temper'd, with religion warm'd,
 That fire abated, which impels rash youth,
 Proud of his speed, to overshoot the truth,
 As time improves the grape's authentic juice,
 Mellows and makes the speech more fit for use,
 And claims a rev'rence in it's short'ning day,
 That 't is an honour and a joy to pay.
 The fruits of Age, less fair, are yet more sound,
 Than those a brighter season pours around;
 And, like the stores autumnal suns mature,
 Through wintry rigours unimpair'd endure.

What is fanatic phrenzy, scorn'd so much,
 And dreaded more than a contagious touch?
 I grant it dang'rous, and approve your fear,
 That fire is catching, if you draw too near;
 But sage observers oft mistake the flame,
 And give true piety that odious name.
 To tremble (as the creature of an hour
 Ought at the view of an almighty Pow'r)
 Before his presence, at whose awful throne
 All tremble in all worlds, except our own,
 To supplicate his mercy, love his ways,
 And prize them above pleasure, wealth, or praise,
 Though common sense, allow'd a casting voice,
 And free from bias, must approve the choice,
 Convicts a man fanatic in th' extreme,
 And wild as madness in the world's esteem.
 But that disease, when soberly defin'd,
 Is the false fire of an o'erheated mind;
 It views the truth with a distorted eye,
 And either warps or lays it useless by;
 'T is narrow, selfish, arrogant, and draws
 It's sordid nourishment from man's applause;
 And while at heart sin unrelinquish'd lies,
 Presumes itself chief fav'rite of the skies.
 'T is such a light as putrefaction breeds
 In fly-blown flesh, whereon the maggot feeds,
 Shines in the dark, but, usher'd into day,
 The stench remains, the lustre dies away.

True bliss, if man may reach it, is compos'd
 Of hearts in union mutually disclos'd;
 And, farewell else all hope of pure delight,
 Those hearts should be reclaim'd, renew'd, upright.
 Bad men, profaning friendship's hallow'd name,
 Form in it's stead, a covenant of shame,
 A dark confed'racy against the laws
 Of virtue, and religion's glorious cause:
 They build each other up with dreadful skill,
 As bastions set point blank against God's will;
 Enlarge and fortify the dread redoubt,
 Deeply resolv'd to shut a Saviour out;
 Call legions up from Hell to back the deed;
 And, curs'd with conquest, finally succeed.
 But souls, that carry on a blest exchange
 Of joys, they meet with in their heav'nly range,
 And with a fearless confidence make known
 The sorrows, sympathy esteems it's own,
 Daily derive increasing light and force
 From such communion in their pleasant course,
 Feel less the journey's roughness and its length,
 Meet their opposers with united strength,
 And, one in heart, in int'rest, and design,
 Gird up each other to the race divine.

But Conversation, choose what theme we may,
 And chiefly when religion leads the way,
 Should flow, like waters after summer show'rs,
 Not as if rais'd by mere mechanic pow'rs.
 The Christian, in whose soul, though now distress'd,
 Lives the dear thought of joys he once possess'd,

When all his glowing language issu'd forth
 With God's deep stamp upon it's current worth,
 Will speak without disguise, and must impart,
 Sad as it is, his undissembling heart,
 Abhors constraint, and dares not feign a zeal,
 Or seem to boast a fire he does not feel.
 The song of Sion is a tasteless thing,
 Unless, when rising on a joyful wing,
 The soul can mix with the celestial bands,
 And give the strain the compass it demands.

Strange tidings these to tell a World, who treat
 All but their own experience as deceit!
 Will they believe, though credulous enough,
 To swallow much upon much weaker proof,
 That there are blest inhabitants of Earth,
 Partakers of a new ethereal birth,
 Their hopes, desires, and purposes estrang'd
 From things terrestrial, and divinely chang'd,
 Their very language of a kind, that speaks
 The soul's sure int'rest in the good she seeks,
 Who deal with Scripture, it's importance felt,
 As Tully with philosophy once dealt,
 And in the silent watches of the night,
 And through the scenes of toil-renewing light,
 The social walk, or solitary ride,
 Keep still the dear companion at their side?
 No — shame upon a self-disgracing age,
 God's work may serve an ape upon a stage
 With such a jest, as fill'd with hellish glee
 Certain invisibles as shrewd as he;
 But veneration or respect finds none,
 Save from the subjects of that work alone.
 The World grown old her deep discernment shows,
 Claps spectacles on her sagacious nose,
 Peruses closely the true Christian's face,
 And finds it a mere mask of sly grimace;
 Usurps God's office, lays his bosom bare,
 And finds hypocrisy close lurking there;
 And, serving God herself through mere constraint,
 Concludes his unfeign'd love of him a feint.
 And yet, God knows, look human nature through,
 (And in due time the World shall know it too,)
 That since the flow'rs of Eden felt the blast,
 That after man's defection laid all waste,
 Sincerity tow'rd the heart-searching God
 Has made the new-born creature her abode,
 Nor shall be found in unregen'rate souls,
 Till the last fire burn all between the Poles.
 Sincerity! why 't is his only pride,
 Weak and imperfect in all grace beside,
 He knows that God demands his heart entire,
 And gives him all his just demands require.
 Without it his pretensions were as vain,
 As having it he deems the World's disdain;
 That great defect would cost him not alone
 Man's favourable judgment, but his own;
 His birthright shaken, and no longer clear,
 Than while his conduct proves his heart sincere.
 Retort the charge, and let the World be told
 She boasts a confidence she does not hold;
 That, conscious of her crimes, she feels instead
 A cold misgiving, and a killing dread:
 That while in health the ground of her support
 Is madly to forget that life is short;
 That sick she trembles, knowing she must die,
 Her hope presumption, and her faith a lie;
 That while she dotes, and dreams that she believes,
 She mocks her Maker, and herself deceives,
 Her utmost reach, historical assent,
 The doctrines warp'd to what they never meant;

That truth itself is in her head as dull
 And useless as a candle in a scull,
 And all her love of God a groundless claim,
 A trick upon the canvass, painted flame.
 Tell her again, the sneer upon her face,
 And all her censures of the work of grace,
 Are insincere, meant only to conceal
 A dread she would not, yet is forc'd to feel;
 That in her heart the Christian she reveres,
 And while she seems to scorn him, only fears.

A poet does not work by square or line,
 As smiths and joiners perfect a design;
 At least we moderns, our attention less,
 Beyond th' example of our sires digress,
 And claim a right to scamper and run wide,
 Wherever chance, caprice, or fancy guide.
 The World and I fortuitously met;
 I ow'd a trifle and have paid the debt;
 She did me wrong, I recompens'd the deed,
 And, having struck the balance, now proceed.
 Perhaps however as some years have pass'd,
 Since she and I convers'd together last,
 And I have liv'd recluse, in rural shades,
 Which seldom a distinct report pervades,
 Great changes and new manners have occur'd,
 And blest reforms, that I have never heard,
 And she may now be as discreet and wise,
 As once absurd in all discerning eyes.
 Sobriety perhaps may now be found,
 Where once Intoxication press'd the ground;
 The subtle and injurious may be just,
 And he grown chaste, that was the slave of lust;
 Arts once esteem'd may be with shame dismiss'd;
 Charity may relax the miser's fist;
 The gamester may have cast his cards away,
 Forgot to curse, and only kneel to pray.
 It has indeed been told me (with what weight,
 How credibly, 't is hard for me to state)
 That fables old, that seem'd for ever mute,
 Reviv'd are hast'ning into fresh repute,
 And gods and goddesses, discarded long
 Like useless lumber, or a stroller's song,
 Are bringing into vogue their heathen train,
 And Jupiter bids fair to rule again;
 That certain feasts are instituted now,
 Where Venus hears the lover's tender vow;
 That all Olympus through the country roves,
 To consecrate our few remaining groves,
 And Echo learns politely to repeat
 The praise of names for ages obsolete;
 That having prov'd the weakness, it should seem,
 Of Revelation's ineffectual beam,
 To bring the passions under sober sway,
 And give the moral springs their proper play,
 They mean to try what may at last be done,
 By stout substantial gods of wood and stone,
 And whether Roman rites may not produce
 The virtues of old Rome for English use.
 May such success attend the pious plan,
 May Mercury once more embellish man,
 Grace him again with long forgotten arts,
 Reclaim his taste, and brighten up his parts,
 Make him athletic as in days of old,
 Learn'd at the bar, in the palæstra bold,
 Divest the rougher sex of female airs,
 And teach the softer not to copy theirs:
 The change shall please, nor shall it matter aught
 Who works the wonder, if it be but wrought.
 'T is time, however, if the case stands thus,
 For us plain folks, and all who side with us,

build our altar, confident and bold,
 and say as stern Elijah said of old,
 the strife now stands upon a fair award,
 Israel's Lord be God, then serve the Lord :
 be he silent, faith is all a whim,
 when Baal is the God, and worship him.
 Digression is so much in modern use,
 thought is so rare, and fancy so profuse,
 we never seem so wide of their intent,
 when returning to the theme they meant ;
 mendicants, whose business is to roam,
 make ev'ry parish but their own their home.
 Though such continual zig-zags in a book,
 such drunken reelings have an awkward look,
 and I had rather creep to what is true,
 than rove and stagger with no mark in view ;
 yet to consult a little, seem'd no crime,
 the freakish humour of the present time :
 but now to gather up what seems dispers'd,
 and touch the subject I design'd at first,
 may prove, though much beside the rules of art,
 best for the public, and my wisest part.
 And first let no man charge me, that I mean
 to close in sable ev'ry social scene,
 and give good company a face severe,
 as if they met around a father's bier ;
 nor tell some men, that pleasure all their bent,
 and laughter all their work, is life mis-spent,
 their wisdom bursts into this sage reply,
 " Then mirth is sin, and we should always cry."
 To find the medium asks some share of wit,
 and therefore 't is a mark fools never hit :
 But though life's valley be a vale of tears,
 a brighter scene beyond that vale appears,
 whose glory with a light, that never fades,
 shoots between scatter'd rocks and op'ning shades,
 and, while it shows the land the soul desires,
 the language of the land she seeks inspires.
 Thus touch'd, the tongue receives a sacred cure
 Of all that was absurd, profane, impure ;
 Held within modest bounds, the tide of speech
 Pursues the course, that Truth and Nature teach ;
 No longer labours merely to produce
 The pomp of sound, or tinkle without use :
 Where'er it winds, the salutary stream,
 Sprightly and fresh, enriches ev'ry theme,
 While all the happy man possess'd before,
 The gift of Nature, or the classic store,
 Is made subservient to the grand design,
 For which Heav'n form'd the faculty divine.
 So should an idiot, while at large he strays,
 Find the sweet lyre, on which an artist plays,
 With rash and awkward force the chord he shakes,
 And grins with wonder at the jar he makes ;
 But let the wise and well-instructed hand
 Once take the shell beneath his just command,
 In gentle sounds it seems as it complain'd
 Of the rude injuries it late sustain'd,
 Till tun'd at length to some immortal song,
 It sounds Jehovah's name, and pours his praise along.

VERSES

SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY ALEXANDER SELKIRK, DURING HIS SOLITARY ABODE IN THE ISLAND OF JUAN FERNANDEZ.

I AM monarch of all I survey,
 My right there is none to dispute ;
 From the centre all round to the sea,
 I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
 O Solitude ! where are the charms,
 That sages have seen in thy face ?
 Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
 Than reign in this horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach,
 I must finish my journey alone,
 Never hear the sweet music of speech,
 I start at the sound of my own.
 The beasts, that roam over the plain,
 My form with indifference see ;
 They are so unacquainted with man,
 Their tameness is shocking to me.

Society, friendship, and love,
 Divinely bestow'd upon man,
 O, had I the wings of a dove,
 How soon would I taste you again !
 My sorrows I then might assuage
 In the ways of religion and truth,
 Might learn from the wisdom of age,
 And be cheer'd by the sallies of youth.

Religion ! what treasure untold
 Resides in that heavenly word !
 More precious than silver and gold,
 Or all that this Earth can afford.
 But the sound of the church-going bell
 These valleys and rocks never heard,
 Never sigh'd at the sound of a knell,
 Or smil'd when a sabbath appear'd.

Ye winds, that have made me your sport,
 Convey to this desolate shore
 Some cordial endearing report
 Of a land, I shall visit no more.
 My friends, do they now and then send
 A wish or a thought after me ?
 O tell me I yet have a friend,
 Though a friend I am never to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind !
 Compar'd with the speed of its flight,
 The tempest itself lags behind,
 And the swift-winged arrows of light.
 When I think of my own native land,
 In a moment I seem to be there ;
 But alas ! recollection at hand
 Soon hurries me back to despair.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
 The beast is laid down in his lair ;
 Even here is a season of rest,
 And I to my cabin repair.
 There 's mercy in every place,
 'And mercy, encouraging thought !
 Gives even affliction a grace,
 And reconciles man to his lot.

THE DIVERTING

HISTORY OF JOHN GILPIN;

SHOWING HOW HE WENT FARTHER THAN HE INTENDED, AND CAME SAFE HOME AGAIN.

JOHN GILPIN was a citizen
Of credit and renown,
A train-band captain eke was he
Of famous London town.

John Gilpin's spouse said to her dear,
" Though wedded we have been
These twice ten tedious years, yet we
No holiday have seen.

" To-morrow is our wedding-day,
And we will then repair
Unto the Bell at Edmonton
All in a chaise and pair.

" My sister, and my sister's child,
Myself, and children three,
Will fill the chaise ; so you must ride
On horseback after we."

He soon replied, " I do admire
Of woman-kind but one,
And you are she, my dearest dear,
Therefore it shall be done,

" I am a linen-draper bold,
As all the world doth know,
And my good friend the calendr
Will lend his horse to go."

Quoth Mrs. Gilpin, " That 's well said ;
And, for that wine is dear,
We will be furnish'd with our own,
Which is both bright and clear."

John Gilpin kiss'd his loving wife ;
O'erjoy'd was he to find,
That, though on pleasure she was bent,
She had a frugal mind.

The morning came, the chaise was brought,
But yet was not allow'd
To drive up to the door, lest all
Should say that she was proud.

So three doors off the chaise was stay'd,
Where they did all get in ;
Six precious souls, and all agog
To dash through thick and thin.

Smack went the whip, round went the wheels,
Were never folk so glad,
The stones did rattle underneath,
As if Cheapside were mad.

John Gilpin at his horse's side
Seiz'd fast the flowing mane,
And up he got, in haste to ride,
But soon came down again ;

For saddle-tree scarce reach'd had he,
His journey to begin,
When, turning round his head, he saw
Three customers come in.

So down he came ; for loss of time,
Although it griev'd him sore :
Yet loss of pence, full well he knew,
Would trouble him much more.

'T was long before the customers
Were suited to their mind,
When Betty screaming came down stairs,
" The wine is left behind !"

" Good lack !" quoth he — " yet bring it me,
My leathern belt likewise,
In which I bear my trusty sword,
When I do exercise."

Now Mistress Gilpin (careful soul !)
Had two stone bottles found,
To hold the liquor that she lov'd,
And keep it safe and sound.

Each bottle had a curling ear,
Through which the belt he drew,
And hung a bottle on each side,
To make his balance true.

Then over all, that he might be
Equipp'd from top to toe,
His long red cloak, well brush'd and neat,
He manfully did throw.

Now see him mounted once again
Upon his nimble steed,
Full slowly pacing o'er the stones,
With caution and good heed.

But finding soon a smoother road
Beneath his well-shod feet,
The snorting beast began to trot,
Which gall'd him in his seat.

So, " Fair and softly," John he cried,
But John he cried in vain ;
That trot became a gallop soon,
In spite of curb and rein.

So stooping down, as needs he must
Who cannot sit upright,
He grasp'd the mane with both his hands,
And eke with all his might.

His horse, who never in that sort
Had handled been before,
What thing upon his back had got
Did wonder more and more.

Away went Gilpin, neck or nought ;
Away went hat and wig ;
He little dreamt, when he set out,
Of running such a rig.

The wind did blow, the cloak did fly,
Like streamer long and gay,
Till, loop and button failing both,
At last it flew away.

Then might all people well discern
The bottles he had slung ;
A bottle swinging at each side,
As hath been said or sung.

The dogs did bark, the children scream'd,
Up flew the windows all;
And ev'ry soul cried out, "Well done!"
As loud as he could bawl.

Away went Gilpin — who but he?
His fame soon spread around,
"He carries weight! he rides a race!
'T is for a thousand pound!"

And still as fast as he drew near,
'T was wonderful to view,
How in a trice the turnpike men
Their gates wide open threw.

And now, as he went bowing down
His reeking head full low,
The bottles twain behind his back
Were shatter'd at a blow.

Down ran the wine into the road,
Most piteous to be seen,
Which made his horse's flanks to smoke,
As they had basted been.

But still he seem'd to carry weight,
With leathern girdle brac'd;
For all might see the bottle-necks
Still dangling at his waist.

Thus all through merry Islington
'These gambols he did play,
Until he came unto the Wash
Of Edmonton so gay;

And there he threw the wash about
On both sides of the way,
Just like unto a trundling mop,
Or a wild goose at play.

At Edmonton his loving wife
From the balcony spied
Her tender husband, wond'ring much
To see how he did ride.

"Stop, stop, John Gilpin! — Here 's the house —"

They all at once did cry;
"The dinner waits, and we are tir'd:"
Said Gilpin — "So am I!"

But yet his horse was not a whit
Inclin'd to tarry there;
For why? — his owner had a house
Full ten miles off, at Ware.

So like an arrow swift he flew,
Shot by an archer strong;
So did he fly — which brings me to
The middle of my song.

Away went Gilpin out of breath,
And sore against his will,
Till at his friend the calender's
His horse at last stood still.

The calender, amaz'd to see
His neighbour in such trim,
Laid down his pipe, flew to the gate,
And thus accosted him:

"What news? what news? your tidings tell;
Tell me you must and shall —
Say why bareheaded you are come,
Or why you come at all?"

Now Gilpin had a pleasant wit,
And lov'd a timely joke;
And thus unto the calender
In merry guise he spoke:

"I came because your horse would come;
And, if I well forbode,
My hat and wig will soon be here,
They are upon the road."

The calender, right glad to find
His friend in merry pin,
Return'd him not a single word,
But to the house went in:

Whence straight he came with hat and wig;
A wig that flow'd behind,
A hat not much the worse for wear,
Each comely in it's kind.

He held them up, and in his turn
Thus show'd his ready wit,
"My head is twice as big as yours,
They therefore needs must fit.

"But let me scrape the dirt away,
That hangs upon your face;
And stop and eat, for well you may
Be in a hungry case."

Said John, "It is my wedding-day,
And all the world would stare,
If wife should dine at Edmonton,
And I should dine at Ware."

So turning to his horse, he said,
"I am in haste to dine;
'T was for your pleasure you came here,
You shall go back for mine."

Ah luckless speech, and bootless boast!
For which he paid full dear;
For, while he spake, a braying ass
Did sing most loud and clear;

Whereat his horse did snort, as he
Had heard a lion roar,
And gallop'd off with all his might,
As he had done before.

Away went Gilpin, and away
Went Gilpin's hat and wig:
He lost them sooner than at first,
For why? — they were too big.

Now Mistress Gilpin, when she saw
Her husband posting down
Into the country far away,
She pull'd out half-a-crown;

And thus unto the youth she said,
That drove them to the Bell,
"This shall be yours, when you bring back
My husband safe and well."

The youth did ride, and soon did meet
John coming back amain;
Whom in a trice he tried to stop,
By catching at his rein;

But not performing what he meant,
And gladly would have done,
The frightened steed he frightened more,
And made him faster run.

Away went Gilpin, and away
Went postboy at his heels,
The postboy's horse right glad to miss
The lumb'ring of the wheels.

Six gentlemen upon the road,
Thus seeing Gilpin fly,
With postboy scamp'ring in the rear,
They rais'd the hue and cry:—

“Stop thief! stop thief!—a highwayman!”
Not one of them was mute;
And all and each that pass'd that way
Did join in the pursuit.

And now the turnpike gates again
Flew open in short space;
The toll-men thinking as before,
That Gilpin rode a race.

And so he did, and won it too,
For he got first to town;
Nor stopp'd till where he had got up
He did again get down.

Now let us sing, Long live the King,
And Gilpin long live he;
And, when he next doth ride abroad,
May I be there to see!

AN EPISTLE

TO

JOSEPH HILL, Esq.

DEAR JOSEPH—five-and-twenty years ago—
Alas, how time escapes!—'t is even so—
With frequent intercourse, and always sweet,
And always friendly, we were wont to cheat
A tedious hour—and now we never meet!
As some grave gentleman in Terence says,
(’T was therefore much the same in ancient days,)
Good luck, we know not what to-morrow brings—
Strange fluctuation of all human things!
True. Changes will befall, and friends may part,
But distance only cannot change the heart:
And, were I call'd to prove th’ assertion true,
One proof should serve—a reference to you.

Whence comes it then, that in the wane of life,
Though nothing have occur'd to kindle strife,
We find the friends we fancied we had won,
Though num'rous once, reduc'd to few or none?
Can gold grow worthless, that has stood the touch?
No; gold they seem'd, but they were never such.

Horatio's servant once, with bow and cringe,
Swinging the parlour door upon it's hinge,

Dreading a negative, and overaw'd
Lest he should trespass, begg'd to go abroad.
“Go, fellow!—whither?”—turning short about—
“Nay. Stay at home—you're always going out.”
“’T is but a step, sir, just at the street's end.”
“For what?”—“An please you, sir, to see a friend.”
“A friend!” Horatio cried, and seem'd to start—
“Yea marry shalt thou, and with all my heart.—
And fetch my cloak; for, though the night be raw,
I'll see him too—the first I ever saw.”

I knew the man, and knew his nature mild,
And was his plaything often when a child;
But somewhat at that moment pinch'd him close,
Else he was seldom bitter or morose.
Perhaps his confidence just then betray'd,
His grief might prompt him with the speech he made;
Perhaps 't was mere good-humour gave it birth,
The harmless play of pleasantry and mirth.
Howe'er it was, his language in my mind,
Bespoke at least a man that knew mankind.

But not to moralize too much, and strain,
To prove an evil, of which all complain,
(I hate long arguments verbosely spun,)
One story more, dear Hill, and I have done.
Once on a time an emp'ror, a wise man,
No matter where, in China, or Japan,
Decreed, that whosoever should offend
Against the well-known duties of a friend,
Convicted once should ever after wear
But half a coat, and show his bosom bare.
The punishment importing this, no doubt,
That all was naught within, and all found out.

O happy Britain! we have not to fear
Such hard and arbitrary measure here;
Else, could a law, like that which I relate,
Once have the sanction of our triple state,
Some few, that I have known in days of old,
Would run most dreadful risk of catching cold;
While you, my friend, whatever wind should blow,
Might traverse England safely to and fro,
An honest man, close-button'd to the chin,
Broad cloth without, and a warm heart within.

YARDLEY OAK.

SURVIVOR sole, and hardly such, of all,
That once liv'd here, thy brethren, at my birth,
(Since which I number threescore winters past,)
A shatter'd vet'ran, hollow-trunk'd perhaps,
As now, and with excoriate forks deform,
Relics of ages! Could a mind, imbued
With truth from Heaven, created thing adore,
I might with rev'rence kneel, and worship thee.

It seems idolatry with some excuse,
When our forefather Druids in their oaks
Imagined sanctity. The conscience, yet
Unpurified by an authentic act
Of amnesty, the meed of blood divine,
Lov'd not the light, but, gloomy, into gloom
Of thickest shades, like Adam after taste
Of fruit proscrib'd, as to a refuge, fled.

Thou wast a bauble once; a cup and ball,
Which babes might play with; and the thievish jay,
Seeking her food, with ease might have perdition'd
The auburn nut that held thee, swallowing down
Thy yet close-folded latitude of boughs

and all thine embryo vastness at a gulp.
 But Fate thy growth decreed; autumnal rains
 Beneath thy parent tree mellow'd the soil
 Design'd thy cradle; and a skipping deer,
 With pointed hoof dibbling the glebe prepar'd
 The soft receptacle, in which, secure,
 Thy rudiments should sleep the winter through.

So Fancy dreams. Disprove it, if ye can,
 The reas'ners broad awake, whose busy search
 Of argument, employ'd too oft amiss,
 Lifts half the pleasures of short life away!

Thou fell'st mature; and in the loamy clod
 Swelling with vegetative force instinct
 Didst burst thine egg, as theirs the fabled 'Twins,
 Now stars; two lobes, protruding, pair'd exact;
 A leaf succeeded, and another leaf,
 And, all the elements thy puny growth
 Post'ring propitious, thou becam'st a twig.

Who liv'd, when thou wast such? Oh, couldst
 thou speak,
 As in Dodona once thy kindred trees
 Oracular, I would not curious ask
 The future, best unknown, but at thy mouth
 Inquisitive, the less ambiguous past.

By thee I might correct, erroneous oft,
 The clock of history, facts and events
 Timing more punctual, unrecorded facts
 Recov'ring, and mis-stated setting right —
 Desp'rate attempt, till trees shall speak again!

Time made thee what thou wast, king of the woods;
 And Time hath made thee what thou art — a cave
 For owls to roost in. Once thy spreading boughs
 O'erhung the champaign; and the num'rous flocks,
 That graz'd it, stood beneath that ample cope
 Uncrowded, yet safe-shelter'd from the storm.
 No flock frequents thee now. Thou hast outliv'd
 Thy popularity, and art become
 (Unless verse rescue thee awhile) a thing
 Forgotten, as the foliage of thy youth.

While thus through all the stages thou hast push'd
 Of tree-ship — first a seedling, hid in grass;
 Then twig; then sapling; and, as cent'ry roll'd
 Slow after century, a giant-bulk
 Of girth enormous, with moss-cushion'd root
 Upheav'd above the soil, and sides emboss'd
 With prominent wens globose — till at the last
 The rottenness, which time is charged to inflict
 On other mighty ones, found also thee.

What exhibitions various hath the world
 Witness'd of mutability in all,
 That we account most durable below!
 Change is the diet on which all subsist,
 Created changeable, and change at last
 Destroys them. Skies uncertain now the heat
 Transmitting cloudless, and the solar beam
 Now quenching in a boundless sea of clouds —
 Calm and alternate storm, moisture and drought,
 Invigorate by turns the springs of life
 In all that live, plant, animal, and man,
 And in conclusion mar them. Nature's threads,
 Fine passing thought, e'en in her coarsest works,

Delight in agitation, yet sustain
 The force that agitates, not unimpair'd;
 But, worn by frequent impulse, to the cause
 Of their best tone their dissolution owe.

Thought cannot spend itself, comparing still
 The great and little of thy lot, thy growth
 From almost nullity into a state
 Of matchless grandeur, and declension thence,
 Slow, into such magnificent decay.
 Time was, when, settling on thy leaf, a fly
 Could shake thee to the root — and time has been
 When tempests could not. At thy firmest age
 Thou hadst within thy bole solid contents, [deck
 That might have ribb'd the sides and plank'd the
 Of some flagg'd admiral; and tortuous arms,
 The shipwright's darling treasure, didst present
 To the four-quarter'd winds, robust and bold,
 Warp'd into tough knee-timber*, many a load!
 But the axe spar'd thee. In those thriftier days
 Oaks fell not, bewn by thousands, to supply
 The bottomless demands of contest, wag'd
 For senatorial honours. Thus to Time
 The task was left to whittle thee away
 With his sly scythe, whose ever-nibbling edge,
 Noiseless, an atom, and an atom more,
 Disjoining from the rest, has, unobserv'd,
 Achiev'd a labour, which had far and wide,
 By man perform'd, made all the forest ring.

Embowell'd now, and of thy ancient self
 Possessing nought, but the scoop'd rind, that seems
 An huge throat, calling to the clouds for drink,
 Which it would give in rivulets to thy root,
 Thou temptest none, but rather much forbidd'st
 The feller's toil, which thou couldst ill requite.
 Yet is thy root sincere, sound as the rock,
 A quarry of stout spurs, and knotted fangs,
 Which, crook'd into a thousand whimsies, clasp
 The stubborn soil, and hold thee still erect.

So stands a kingdom, whose foundation yet
 Fails not, in virtue and in wisdom laid,
 Though all the superstructure, by the tooth
 Pulveriz'd of venality, a shell
 Stands now, and semblance only of itself!

Thine arms have left thee. Winds have rent them off
 Long since, and rovers of the forest wild [left
 With bow and shaft, have burnt them. Some have
 A splinter'd stump, bleach'd to a snowy white;
 And some, memorial none, where once they grew.
 Yet life still lingers in thee, and puts forth
 Proof not contemptible of what she can,
 Even where death predominates. The spring
 Finds thee not less alive to her sweet force,
 Than yonder upstarts of the neighb'ring wood,
 So much thy juniors, who their birth receiv'd
 Half a millennium since the date of thine.

But since, although well qualified by age
 To teach, no spirit dwells in thee, nor voice
 May be expected from thee, seated here

* Knee-timber is found in the crooked arms of oak, which, by reason of their distortion, are easily adjusted to the angle formed where the deck and the ship's sides meet.

On thy distorted root, with hearers none,
Or prompter; save the scene, I will perform
Myself the oracle, and will discourse
In my own ear such matter as I may.

One man alone, the father of us all,
Drew not his life from woman; never gaz'd,
With mute unconsciousness of what he saw,
On all around him; learn'd not by degrees,
Nor ow'd articulation to his ear;
But, moulded by his Maker into man
At once, upstood intelligent, survey'd
All creatures, with precision understood
Their purport, uses, properties, assign'd
To each his name significant, and, fill'd
With love and wisdom, render'd back to Heaven
In praise harmonious the first air he drew.
He was excus'd the penalties of dull
Minority. No tutor charg'd his hand
With the thought-tracing quill, or task'd his mind
With problems. History, not wanted yet,
Lean'd on her elbow, watching Time, whose course,
Eventful, should supply her with a theme.

THE CAST-AWAY.

Obscurer night involv'd the sky;
Th' Atlantic billows roar'd,
When such a destin'd wretch as I,
Wash'd headlong from on board,
Of friends, of hope, of all bereft,
His floating home for ever left.

No braver chief could Albion boast,
Than he, with whom he went,
Nor ever ship left Albion's coast,
With warmer wishes sent.
He lov'd them both, but both in vain,
Nor him beheld, nor her again.

Not long beneath the whelming brine,
Expert to swim, he lay:
Nor soon he felt his strength decline,
Or courage die away;
But wag'd with death a lasting strife,
Supported by despair of life.

He shouted; nor his friends had fail'd
To check the vessel's course,
But so the furious blast prevail'd,
That, pitiless, perforce,

They left their outcast mate behind,
And scudded still before the wind.

Some succour yet they could afford;
And, such as storms allow,
The cask, the coop, the floated cord,
Delay'd not to bestow.
But he, they knew, nor ship nor shore,
Whate'er they gave, should visit more.

Nor, cruel as it seem'd, could he
Their haste himself condemn,
Aware that flight, in such a sea,
Alone could rescue them;
Yet bitter felt it still to die
Deserted, and his friends so nigh.

He long survives, who lives an hour
In ocean, self-upheld:
And so long he, with unspent pow'r,
His destiny repell'd:
And ever as the minutes flew,
Entreated help, or cried — "Adieu!"

At length, his transient respite past,
His comrades, who before
Had heard his voice in ev'ry blast,
Could catch the sound no more.
For then, by toil subdued, he drank
The stifling wave, and then he sank.

No poet wept him; but the page
Of narrative sincere,
That tells his name, his worth, his age
Is wet with Anson's tear.
And tears by bards or heroes shed
Alike immortalize the dead.

I therefore purpose not, or dream,
Descanting on his fate,
To give the melancholy theme
A more enduring date.
But misery still delights to trace
It's semblance in another's case.

No voice divine the storm allay'd,
No light propitious shone;
When, snatch'd from all effectual aid,
We perish'd, each alone:
But I beneath a rougher sea,
And whelm'd in deeper gulfs than he.

JAMES BEATTIE.

---

JAMES BEATTIE, an admired poet and a moralist, was born about 1735, in the county of Kincardine, in Scotland. His father was a small farmer, who, though living in indigence, had imbibed so much of the spirit of his country, that he procured for his son a literary education, first at a parochial school, and then at the college of New Aberdeen, in which he entered as a bursar or exhibitioner. In the intervals of the sessions, James is supposed to have added to his scanty pittance by teaching at a country-school. Returning to Aberdeen, he obtained the situation of assistant to the master of the principal grammar-school, whose daughter he married. From youth he had cultivated a talent for poetry; and in 1760 he ventured to submit the fruit of his studies in this walk to the public, by a volume of "Original Poems and Translations." They were followed, in 1765, by "The Judgment of Paris;" and these performances, which displayed a familiarity with poetic diction, and harmony of versification, seem to have made him favourably known in his neighbourhood.

The interest of the Earl of Errol acquired for him the post of professor of moral philosophy and logic in the Marischal College of Aberdeen; in which capacity he published a work, entitled "An Essay on the Nature and Immutability of Truth, in opposition to Sophistry and Scepticism," 1770. Being written in a popular manner, it was much read, and gained the author many admirers, especially among the most distinguished members of the Church of England; and, at the suggestion of Lord Mansfield, he was rewarded with a pension of 200*l.* from the King's privy purse.

In 1771 his fame was largely extended by the first part of his "Minstrel," a piece the subject of which is the imagined birth and education of a poet. Although the word Minstrel is not with much propriety applied to such a person as he represents, and the "Gothic days" in which he is placed are not historically to be recognised, yet there is great beauty, both moral and descriptive, in the delineation, and perhaps no writer has managed the Spenserian stanza with more dexterity and harmony. The second part of this poem, which contains the maturer part of the education of the young bard, did not appear till 1774, and then left the work a fragment. But whatever may be the defects of the Minstrel, it possesses beauties which will secure it a place among the approved productions of the British muse.

Beattie visited London for the first time in 1771, where he was received with much cordiality by the admirers of his writings, who found equal cause to love and esteem the author. Not long afterwards, the degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by his college at Aberdeen. In 1777 a new edition, by subscription, was published of his "Essay on Truth," to which were added three Essays on subjects of polite literature. In 1783 he published "Dissertations Moral and Critical," consisting of detached essays, which had formed part of a course of lectures delivered by the author as professor. His last work was "Evidences of the Christian Religion, briefly and plainly stated," 2 vols. 1786. His time was now much occupied with the duties of his station, and particularly with the education of his eldest son, a youth of uncommon promise. His death of a decline was a very severe trial of the father's fortitude and resignation; and it was followed some years after by that of his younger son. These afflictions, with other domestic misfortunes, entirely broke his spirits, and brought him to his grave at Aberdeen, in August, 1803, in the 68th year of his age.

THE MINSTREL;

OR,

THE PROGRESS OF GENIUS.

Preface.

The design was, to trace the progress of a poetical genius, born in a rude age, from the first dawning of fancy and reason, till that period at which he may be supposed capable of appearing in the world as a Minstrel, that is, as an itinerant poet and musician; — a character which, according to the notions of our forefathers, was not only respectable but sacred.

I have endeavoured to imitate Spenser in the measure of his verse, and in the harmony, simplicity, and variety of his composition. Antique expressions I have avoided; admitting, however, some old words, where they seemed to suit the subject: but I hope none will be found that are now obsolete, or in any degree not intelligible to a reader of English poetry.

To those who may be disposed to ask, what could induce me to write in so difficult a measure, I can only answer, that it pleases my ear, and seems, from its Gothic structure and original, to bear some relation to the subject and spirit of the poem. It admits both simplicity and magnificence of sound and of language, beyond any other stanza that I am acquainted with. It allows the sententiousness of the couplet, as well as the more complex modulation of blank verse. What some critics have remarked, of its uniformity growing at last tiresome to the ear, will be found to hold true, only when the poetry is faulty in other respects.

Book I.

AH! who can tell how hard it is to climb
The steep where Fame's proud temple shines afar;
Ah! who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star,
And waged with Fortune an eternal war;
Check'd by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown,
And Poverty's unconquerable bar,
In life's low vale remote has pined alone,
Then dropt into the grave, unpitied and unknown!

And yet the languor of inglorious days,
Not equally oppressive is to all;
Him, who ne'er listen'd to the voice of praise,
The silence of neglect can ne'er appal.
There are, who, deaf to mad Ambition's call,
Would shrink to hear th' obstreperous trump of Fame;
Supremely blest, if to their portion fall
Health, competence, and peace. Nor higher aim
Had he, whose simple tale these artless lines proclaim.

The rolls of fame I will not now explore;
Nor need I here describe in learned lay,
How forth the Minstrel far'd in days of yore,
Right glad of heart, though homely in array;
His waving locks and beard all hoary grey:

While from his bending shoulder, decent hang
His harp, the sole companion of his way,
Which to the whistling wind responsive rung:
And ever as he went some merry lay he sang.

Fret not thyself, thou glittering child of pride,
That a poor villager inspires my strain;
With thee let Pageantry and Power abide:
The gentle Muses haunt the sylvan reign;
Where through wild groves at eve the lonely swain
Enraptured roams, to gaze on Nature's charms.
They hate the sensual, and scorn the vain,
The parasite their influence never warms,
Nor him whose sordid soul the love of gold alarms.

Though richest hues the peacock's plumes adorn,
Yet horror screams from his discordant throat.
Rise, sons of harmony, and hail the morn,
While warbling larks on russet pinions float:
Or seek at noon the woodland scene remote,
Where the grey linnets carol from the bill.
O let them ne'er, with artificial note,
To please a tyrant, strain the little bill,
But sing what Heaven inspires, and wander when they will.

Liberal, not lavish, is kind Nature's hand;
Nor was perfection made for man below.
Yet all her schemes with nicest art are plann'd,
Good counteracting ill, and gladness woe.
With gold and gems if Chilian mountains glow;
If bleak and barren Scotia's hills arise;
There plague and poison, lust and rapine grow;
Here peaceful are the vales, and pure the skies,
And freedom fires the soul, and sparkles in the eyes.

Then grieve not, thou, to whom th' indulgent Muse
Vouchsafes a portion of celestial fire:
Nor blame the partial Fates, if they refuse
Th' imperial banquet, and the rich attire.
Know thine own worth, and reverence the lyre.
Wilt thou debase the heart which God refin'd?
No; let thy heaven-taught soul to Heaven aspire,
To fancy, freedom, harmony, resign'd;
Ambition's grovelling crew for ever left behind.

Canst thou forego the pure ethereal soul
In each fine sense so exquisitely keen,
On the dull couch of Luxury to loll,
Stung with disease, and stupefied with spleen;
Fain to implore the aid of Flattery's screen,
Even from thyself thy loathsome heart to hide,
(The mansion then no more of joy serene,)
Where fear, distrust, malevolence, abide,
And impotent desire, and disappointed pride?

O how canst thou renounce the boundless store
Of charms which Nature to her votary yields!
The warbling woodland, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves, and garniture of fields;
All that the genial ray of morning gilds,
And all that echoes to the song of even,
All that the mountain's sheltering bosom shields,
And all the dread magnificence of Heaven,
O how canst thou renounce, and hope to be forgiven?

These charms shall work thy soul's eternal health,
And love, and gentleness, and joy, impart.
But these thou must renounce, if lust of wealth
E'er win it's way to thy corrupted heart:

For ah ! it poisons like a scorpion's dart ;
 Prompting th' ungenerous wish, the selfish scheme,
 The stern resolve unmov'd by pity's smart,
 The troublous day, and long distressful dream,
 Return, my roving Muse, resume thy purposed
 theme.

There lived in Gothic days, as legends tell,
 A shepherd-swain, a man of low degree ;
 Whose sires, perchance, in Faryland might dwell,
 Sicilian groves, or vales of Arcady ;
 But he, I ween, was of the north countrie ;
 A nation fam'd for song, and beauty's charms ;
 Zealous, yet modest ; innocent, though free ;
 Patient of toil ; serene amidst alarms ;
 Inflexible in faith ; invincible in arms.

The shepherd-swain of whom I mention made,
 On Scotia's mountains fed his little flock ;
 The sickle, scythe, or plough, he never sway'd ;
 An honest heart was almost all his stock ;
 His drink the living water from the rock :
 The milky dams supplied his board, and lent
 Their kindly fleece to baffle winter's shock ;
 And he, though oft with dust and sweat besprent,
 Did guide and guard their wanderings, wheresoe'er
 they went.

From labour health, from health contentment
 springs :

Contentment opes the source of every joy.
 He envied not, he never thought of, kings ;
 Nor from those appetites sustain'd annoy,
 That chance may frustrate, or indulgence cloy :
 Nor Fate his calm and humble hopes beguiled ;
 He mourned no recreant friend, nor mistress coy,
 For on his vows the blameless Phœbe smiled,
 And her alone he loved, and loved her from a child.

No jealousy their dawn of love o'ercast,
 Nor blasted were their wedded days with strife ;
 Each season look'd delightful as it past,
 To the fond husband, and the faithful wife.
 Beyond the lowly vale of shepherd-life
 They never roam'd ; secure beneath the storm
 Which in Ambition's lofty land is rife,
 Where peace and love are canker'd by the worm
 Of pride, each bud of joy industrious to deform.

The wight, whose tale these artless lines unfold,
 Was all the offspring of this humble pair :
 His birth no oracle or seer foretold ;
 No prodigy appear'd in earth or air,
 Nor aught that might a strange event declare.
 You guess each circumstance of Edwin's birth ;
 The parent's transport, and the parent's care ;
 The gossip's prayer for wealth, and wit, and worth ;
 And one long summer-day of indolence and mirth.

And yet poor Edwin was no vulgar boy,
 Deep thought oft seem'd to fix his infant eye.
 Dainties he heeded not, nor gaude, nor toy,
 Save one short pipe of rudest minstrelsy ;
 Silent when glad ; affectionate, though shy ;
 And now his look was most demurely sad ;
 And now he laugh'd aloud, yet none knew why.
 The neighbours star'd and sigh'd, yet bless'd the lad :
 Some deem'd him wondrous wise, and some believed him mad.

But why should I his childish feats display ?
 Concourse, and noise, and toil, he ever fled ;
 Nor cared to mingle in the clamorous fray
 Of squabbling imps ; but to the forest sped,
 Or roam'd at large the lonely mountain's head,
 Or, where the maze of some bewilder'd stream
 To deep untrodden groves his footsteps led,
 There would he wander wild, till Phœbus' beam,
 Shot from the western cliff, released the weary team.

Th' exploit of strength, dexterity, or speed,
 To him nor vanity nor joy could bring.
 His heart, from cruel sport estranged, would bleed
 To work the woe of any living thing,
 By trap, or net ; by arrow, or by sling ;
 These he detested ; those he scorn'd to wield :
 He wish'd to be the guardian, not the king,
 Tyrant far less, or traitor of the field.
 And sure the sylvan reign unbloody joy might yield.

Lo ! where the stripling, wrapt in wonder, roves
 Beneath the precipice o'erhung with pine ;
 And sees, on high, amidst th' encircling groves,
 From cliff to cliff the foaming torrents shine :
 While waters, woods, and winds, in concert join,
 And Echo swells the chorus to the skies.
 Would Edwin this majestic scene resign
 For aught the huntsman's puny craft supplies ?
 Ah ! no : he better knows great Nature's charms to prize.

And oft he traced the uplands, to survey,
 When o'er the sky advanced the kindling dawn,
 The crimson cloud, blue main, and mountain grey,
 And lake, dim-gleaming on the smoky lawn :
 Far to the west the long, long vale withdrawn,
 Where twilight loves to linger for a while ;
 And now he faintly kens the bounding fawn,
 And villager abroad at early toil.
 But lo ! the Sun appears ! and heaven, earth, ocean,
 smile.

And oft the craggy cliff he loved to climb,
 When all in mist the world below was lost.
 What dreadful pleasure ! there to stand sublime,
 Like shipwreck'd mariner on desert coast,
 And view th' enormous waste of vapour, tost
 In billows, lengthening to th' horizon round,
 Now scoop'd in gulfs, with mountains now em-
 boss'd !
 And hear the voice of mirth and song rebound,
 Flocks, herds, and waterfalls, along the hear pro-
 found !

In truth he was a strange and wayward wight,
 Fond of each gentle, and each dreadful scene.
 In darkness, and in storm, he found delight :
 Nor less, than when on ocean-wave serene
 The southern Sun diffused his dazzling shene.
 Even sad vicissitude amused his soul :
 And if a sigh would sometimes intervene,
 And down his cheek a tear of pity roll,
 A sigh, a tear, so sweet, he wish'd not to control.

" O ye wild groves, O where is now your bloom !"
 (The Muse interprets thus his tender thought,)
 " Your flowers, your verdure, and your balmy
 gloom,
 Of late so grateful in the hour of drought !"

Why do the birds, that song and rapture brought
To all your bowers, their mansions now forsake?
Ah! why has fickle chance this ruin wrought?
For now the storm howls mournful through the brake,
And the dead foliage flies in many a shapeless flake.

"Where now the rill, melodious, pure, and cool,
And meads, with life, and mirth, and beauty
crown'd!

Ah! see, th' unsightly slime, and sluggish pool,
Have all the solitary vale embrown'd;
Fled each fair form, and mute each melting sound,
The raven croaks forlorn on naked spray:
And hark! the river, hursting every mound,
Down the vale thunders, and with wasteful sway
Uproots the grove, and rolls the shattered rocks
away.

"Yet such the destiny of all on Earth:
So flourishes and fades majestic Man.
Fair is the bud his vernal morn brings forth,
And fostering gales awhile the nursling fan.
O smile, ye Heavens, serene; ye mildews wan,
Ye blighting whirlwinds, spare his balmy prime,
Nor lessen of his life the little span.
Borne on the swift, though silent, wings of Time,
Old Age comes on apace to ravage all the clime.

"And be it so. Let those deplore their doom,
Whose hope still grovels in this dark sojourn:
But lofty souls, who look beyond the tomb,
Can smile at Fate, and wonder how they mourn.
Shall Spring to these sad scenes no more return?
Is yonder wave the Sun's eternal bed?
Soon shall the orient with new lustre burn,
And Spring shall soon her vital influence shed,
Again attune the grove, again adorn the mead.

"Shall I be left forgotten in the dust,
When Fate, relenting, lets the flower revive?
Shall Nature's voice, to man alone unjust,
Bid him, though doomed to perish, hope to live?
Is it for this fair Virtue oft must strive
With disappointment, penury, and pain?
No: Heaven's immortal springs shall yet arrive,
And man's majestic beauty bloom again,
Bright through th' eternal year of Love's triumphant reign."

This truth sublime his simple sire had taught.
In sooth, 't was almost all the shepherd knew.
No subtle nor superfluous lore he sought,
Nor ever wish'd his Edwin to pursue.

"Let man's own sphere," said he, "confine his view,
Be man's peculiar work his sole delight."
And much, and oft, he warn'd him, to eschew
Falsehood and guile, and aye maintain the right,
By pleasure uneduc'd, unaw'd by lawless might.

"And from the prayer of Want, and plaint of Woe,
O never, never turn away thine ear!
Forlorn, in this bleak wilderness below,
Ah! what were man, should Heaven refuse to hear!
To others do (the law is not severe)
What to thyself thou wishest to be done.
Forgive thy foes; and love thy parents dear,
And friends, and native land; nor those alone;
All human' weal and woe learn thou to make thine
own."

See, in the rear of the warm sunny shower
The visionary boy from shelter fly;
For now the storm of summer-rain is o'er,
And cool, and fresh, and fragrant is the sky.
And, lo! in the dark east, expanded high,
The rainbow brightens to the setting Sun!
Fond fool, that deem'st the streaming glory nigh,
How vain the chase thine ardour has begun!
'T is fled afar, ere half thy purpos'd race be run.

Yet couldst thou learn, that thus it fares with age,
When pleasure, wealth, or power, the bosom warm,
This baffled hope might tame thy manhood's rage,
And disappointment of her sting disarm.
But why should foresight thy fond heart alarm?
Perish the lore that deadens young desire;
Pursue, poor imp, th' imaginary charm,
Indulge gay Hope, and Fancy's pleasing fire:
Fancy and Hope too soon shall of themselves expire.

When the long-sounding curfew from afar
Loaded with loud lament the lonely gale,
Young Edwin, lighted by the evening star,
Lingering and listening, wander'd down the vale.
There would he dream of graves, and corpses pale;
And ghosts that to the charnel-dungeon throng,
And drag a length of clanking chain, and wail,
Till silenc'd by the owl's terrific song, [along,
Or blast that shrieks by fits the shuddering idle

Or, when the setting Moon, in crimson dyed,
Hung o'er the dark and melancholy deep,
To haunted stream, remote from man, he hied,
Where fays of yore their revels wont to keep;
And there let Fancy rove at large, till sleep
A vision brought to his entranced sight.
And first, a wildly-murmuring wind 'gan creep
Shrill to his ringing ear; then tapers bright, [right
With instantaneous gleam, illum'd the vault of

Anon in view a portal's blazon'd arch
Arose; the trumpet bids the valves unfold:
And forth an host of little warriors march,
Grasping the diamond-lance, and targe of gold.
Their look was gentle, their demeanor bold,
And green their helms, and green their silk attire;
And here and there, right venerably old,
The long-rob'd minstrels wake the warbling wire,
And some with mellow breath the martial pipe inspire.

With merriment, and song, and timbrels clear,
A troop of dames from myrtle bowers advance;
The little warriors doff the targe and spear,
And loud enlivening strains provoke the dance.
They meet, they dart away, they wheel astance;
To right, to left, they thrud the flying mass;
Now bound aloft with vigorous spring, then glance
Rapid along: with many-colour'd rays
Of tapers, gems, and gold, the echoing forests blaze.

The dream is fled. Proud harbinger of day,
Who scar'd'st the vision with thy clarion shrill,
Fell chanticler! who oft hath rest away
My fancied good, and brought substantial ill!
O to thy cursed scream, discordant still,
Let harmony aye shut her gentle ear:
Thy boastful mirth let jealous rivals spill,
Insult thy crest, and glossy pinions tear,
And ever in thy dreams the ruthless fox appear.

orbear, my Muse. Let Love attune thy line.
 Evoke the spell. Thine Edwin frets not so.
 Or how should he at wicked chance repine,
 Who feels from every change amusement flow !
 Even now his eyes with smiles of rapture glow,
 As on he wanders through the scenes of morn,
 Where the fresh flowers in living lustre blow,
 Where thousand pearls, the dewy lawns adorn,
 A thousand notes of joy, in every breeze are borne.

But who the melodies of morn can tell ?
 The wild brook babbling down the mountain-side ;
 The lowing herd ; the sheepfold's simple bell ;
 The pipe of early shepherd dim descried
 In the lone valley ; echoing far and wide
 The clamorous horn along the cliffs above ;
 The hollow murmur of the ocean-tide ;
 The hum of bees, the linnet's lay of love,
 And the full choir that wakes the universal grove.

The cottage-curs at early pilgrim bark ;
 Crown'd with her pail the tripping milk-maid sings ;
 The whistling ploughman stalks afield ; and, hark !
 Down the rough slope the ponderous waggon rings ;
 Through rustling corn the hare astonish'd springs ;
 How tolls the village-clock the drowsy hour ;
 The partridge bursts away on whirring wings ;
 Deep mourns the turtle in sequester'd bower,
 And shrill lark carols clear from her aerial tour.

O Nature, how in every charm supreme !
 Whose votaries feast on raptures ever new !
 O for the voice and fire of seraphim,
 To sing thy glories with devotion due !
 Blest be the day I 'scaped the wrangling crew,
 From Pyrrho's maze, and Epicurus' sty ;
 And held high converse with the godlike few,
 Who to th' enraptur'd heart, and ear, and eye,
 Teach beauty, virtue, truth, and love, and melody.

Hence ! ye who snare and stupefy the mind,
 Sophists, of beauty, virtue, joy, the bane !
 Greedy and fell, though impotent and blind,
 Who spread your filthy nets in Truth's fair fane,
 And ever ply your venom'd fangs amain !
 Hence to dark Errour's den, whose rankling slime
 First gave you form ! Hence ! lest the Muse should Deign,
 Though loth on theme so mean to waste a rhyme,)
 With vengeance to pursue your sacrilegious crime.

But hail, ye mighty masters of the lay,
 Nature's true sons, the friends of man and truth !
 Whose song, sublimely sweet, serenely gay,
 Amus'd my childhood, and inform'd my youth.
 O let your spirit still my bosom soothe,
 Inspire my dreams, and my wild wanderings guide !
 Your voice each rugged path of life can smoothe :
 For well I know wherever ye reside,
 There harmony, and peace, and innocence abide.

Ah me ! neglected on the lonesome plain,
 As yet poor Edwin never knew your lore,
 Save when against the winter's drenching rain,
 And driving snow, the cottage shut the door.
 Then, as instructed by tradition hoar,
 Her legend when the beldame 'gan impart,
 Or chant the old heroic ditty o'er,
 Wonder and joy ran thrilling to his heart ;
 Much he the tale admir'd, but more the tuneful art.

Various and strange was the long-winded tale ;
 And halls, and knights, and feats of arms, display'd ;
 Or merry swains, who quaff the nut-brown ale,
 And sing enamour'd of the nut-brown maid ;
 The moon-light revel of the fairy glade ;
 Or hags, that suckle an infernal brood,
 And ply in caves th' unutterable trade,
 'Midst fiends and spectres, quench the Moon in blood,
 Yell in the midnight storm, or ride th' infuriate flood.

But when to horror his amazement rose,
 A gentler strain the beldame would rehearse,
 A tale of rural life, a tale of woes,
 The orphan-babes, and guardian uncle fierce.
 O cruel ! will no pang of pity pierce
 That heart, by lust of lucre sear'd to stone ?
 For sure, if aught of virtue last, or verse,
 To latest times shall tender souls bemoan
 Those hopeless orphan-babes by thy fell arts undone.

Behold, with berries smear'd, with brambles torn,
 The babes now famish'd lay them down to die :
 Amidst the howl of darksome woods forlorn,
 Folded in one another's arms they lie ;
 Nor friend, nor stranger, hears their dying cry :
 " For from the town the man returns no more."
 But thou, who Heaven's just vengeance dar'st defy,
 This deed with fruitless tears shalt soon deplore,
 When Death lays waste thy house, and flames consume thy store.

A stifled smile of stern vindictive joy
 Brighten'd one moment Edwin's starting tear,
 " But why should gold man's feeble mind decoy,
 And innocence thus die by doom severe ?
 O Edwin ! while thy heart is yet sincere,
 Th' assaults of discontent and doubt repel :
 Dark even at noontide is our mortal sphere ;
 But let us hope ; to doubt is to rebel ;
 Let us exult in hope, that all shall yet be well.

Nor be thy generous indignation check'd,
 Nor check'd the tender tear to Misery given ;
 From Guilt's contagious power shall that protect,
 This soften and refine the soul for Heaven.
 But dreadful is their doom, whom doubt has driven
 To censure Fate, and pious Hope forego :
 Like yonder blasted boughs by lightning riven,
 Perfection, beauty, life, they never know,
 But frown on all that pass, a monument of woe.

Shall he, whose birth, maturity, and age,
 Scarce fill the circle of one summer day,
 Shall the poor gnat, with discontent and rage,
 Exclaim that Nature hastens to decay,
 If but a cloud obstruct the solar ray,
 If but a momentary shower descend ?
 Or shall frail man Heaven's dread decree gainsay,
 Which bade the series of events extend (end ?
 Wide through unnumber'd worlds, and ages without

One part, one little part, we dimly scan
 Through the dark medium of life's feverish dream ;
 Yet dare arraign the whole stupendous plan,
 If but that little part incongruous seem.
 Nor is that part, perhaps, what mortals deem ;
 Oft from apparent ill our blessings rise.
 O then renounce that impious self-esteem,
 That aims to trace the secrets of the skies :
 For thou art but of dust ; be humble, and be wise.

Thus Heaven enlarg'd his soul in riper years.
 For Nature gave him strength, and fire, to soar
 On Fancy's wing above this vale of tears ;
 Where dark cold-hearted sceptics, creeping, pore
 Through microscope of metaphysic lore :
 And much they grope for Truth, but never hit.
 For why ? Their powers, inadequate before,
 This idle art makes more and more unfit ;
 Yet deem they darkness light, and their vain blunders wit.

Nor was this ancient dame a foe to mirth.
 Her ballad, jest, and riddle's quaint device
 Oft cheer'd the shepherds round their social hearth ;
 Whom levity or spleen could ne'er entice
 To purchase chat, or laughter, at the price
 Of decency. Nor let it faith exceed,
 That Nature forms a rustic taste so nice.
 Ah ! had they been of court or city breed,
 Such delicacy were right marvellous indeed.

Oft when the winter storm had ceas'd to rave,
 He roam'd the snowy waste at even, to view
 The cloud stupendous, from th' Atlantic wave
 High-towering, sail along th' horizon blue :
 Where, 'midst the changeful scenery, ever new,
 Fancy a thousand wondrous forms describes,
 More wildly great than ever pencil drew,
 Rocks, torrents, gulfs, and shapes of giant size,
 And glitt'ring cliffs on cliffs, and fiery ramparts
 rise.

Thence uniting onward to the sounding shore,
 The lone enthusiast oft would take his way,
 Listening, with pleasing dread, to the deep roar
 Of the wide-weltering waves. In black array,
 When sulphurous clouds roll'd on th' autumnal day,
 Ev'n then he hasten'd from the haunt of men,
 Along the trembling wilderness to stray,
 What time the lightning's fierce career began,
 And o'er Heav'n's reading arch the rattling thunder
 ran.

Responsive to the sprightly pipe, when all
 In sprightly dance the village youth were join'd,
 Edwin, of melody aye held in thrall,
 From the rude gambol far remote reclie'd,
 Sooth'd with the soft notes warbling in the wind.
 Ah then, all jollity seem'd noise and folly,
 To the pure soul by Fancy's fire refin'd,
 Ah, what is mirth but turbulence unholy,
 When with the charm compar'd of heavenly melancholy !

Is there a heart that music cannot melt ?
 Alas ! how is that rugged heart forlorn ;
 Is there, who ne'er those mystic transports felt
 Of solitude and melancholy born ?
 He needs not woo the Muse ; he is her scorn.
 The sophist's rope of cobweb he shall twine ;
 Mope o'er the schoolman's peevish page ; or mourn,
 And delve for life in Mammon's dirty mine ;
 Sneak with the scoundrel fox, or grunt with glutton swine.

For Edwin, Fate a nobler doom had plann'd ;
 Song was his favourite and first pursuit.
 The wild harp rang to his advent'rous hand,
 And languish'd to his breath the plaintive flute.

His infant Muse, though artless, was not mute :
 Of elegance as yet he took no care ;
 For this of time and culture is the fruit ;
 And Edwin gain'd at last this fruit so rare :
 As in some future verse I purpose to declare.

Meanwhile, whate'er of beautiful, or new,
 Sublime, or dreadful, in earth, sea, or sky,
 By chance, or search, was offer'd to his view,
 He scann'd with curious and romantic eye.
 Whate'er of lore tradition could supply
 From Gothic tale, or song, or fable old,
 Rous'd him, still keen to listen and to pry.
 At last, though long by penury control'd,
 And solitude, her soul his graces 'gan unfold.

Thus on the chill Lapponian's dreary land,
 For many a long month lost in snow profound,
 When Sol from Cancer sends the season bland,
 And in their northern cave the storms are bound ;
 From silent mountains, straight, with startling sound,
 Torrents are hurl'd ; green hills emerge ; and lo,
 The trees with foliage, cliffs with flowers are crown'd ;
 Pure rills through vales of verdure warbling go ;
 And wonder, love, and joy, the peasant's heart o'er-
 flow.

Here pause, my Gothic lyre, a little while.
 The leisure hour is all that thou canst claim.
 But on this verse if Montague should smile,
 New strains ere long shall animate thy frame.
 And her applause to me is more than fame ;
 For still with truth accords her taste refin'd.
 At lucre or renown let others aim,
 I only wish to please the gentle mind, [kind
 Whom Nature's charms inspire, and love of human-

Book II.

Or chance or change O let not man complain,
 Else shall he never, never cease to wail ;
 For, from the imperial dome, to where the swain
 Rears the lone cottage in the silent dale,
 All feel th' assault of Fortune's fickle gale ;
 Art, empire, Earth itself, to change are doom'd ;
 Earthquakes have rais'd to Heaven the humble vale,
 And gulfs the mountain's mighty mass entomb'd ;
 And where th' Atlantic rolls wide continents have bloom'd. *

But sure to foreign climes we need not range,
 Nor search the ancient records of our race,
 To learn the dire effects of time and change,
 Which in ourselves, alas ! we daily trace.
 Yet at the darken'd eye, the wither'd face,
 Or hoary hair, I never will repine :
 But spare, O Time, whate'er of mental grace,
 Of candour, love, or sympathy divine, [mine
 Whate'er of fancy's ray, or friendship's flame is

So I, obsequious to Truth's dread command,
 Shall here without reluctance change my lay,
 And smite the Gothic lyre with harsher hand ;
 Now when I leave that flowery path for aye
 Of childhood, where I sported many a day,
 Warbling and sauntering carelessly along ;
 Where every face was innocent and gay,
 Each vale romantic, tuneful every tongue,
 Sweet, wild, and artless all, as Edwin's infant song.

* See Plato's Timæus.

"Perish the lore that deadens young desire,"
Is the soft tenour of my song no more.
Edwin, tho' lov'd of Heaven, must not aspire
To bliss, which mortals never knew before.
On trembling wings let youthful fancy soar,
Nor always haunt the sunny realms of joy :
But now and then the shades of life explore ;
Though many a sound and sight of woe annoy,
And many a qualm of care his rising hopes destroy.

Vigour from toil, from trouble patience grows.
The weakly blossom, warm in summer-bower,
Some tints of transient beauty may disclose ;
But soon it withers in the chilling hour.
Mark yonder oaks ! Superior to the power
Of all the warring winds of Heaven they rise,
And from the stormy promontory tower,
And toss their giant arms amid the skies, [plies.
While each assailing blast increase of strength sup-

And now the downy cheek and deepen'd voice
Gave dignity to Edwin's blooming prime ;
And walks of wider circuit were his choice,
And vales more mild, and mountains more sublime.
One evening, as he fram'd the careless rhyme,
It was his chance to wander far abroad,
And o'er a lonely eminence to climb,
Which heretofore his foot had never trod ;
A vale appear'd below, a deep retired abode.

Thither he hied, enamour'd of the scene.
For rocks on rocks pill'd as by magic spell,
Here scorch'd with lightning, there with ivy green,
Fenc'd from the north and east this savage dell.
Southward a mountain rose with easy swell,
Whose long, long groves eternal murmur made :
And toward the western sun a streamlet fell,
Where, through the cliffs, the eye, remote, survey'd
Blue hills, and glittering waves, and skies in gold array'd.

Along this narrow valley you might see
The wild deer sporting on the meadow ground,
And, here and there, a solitary tree,
Or mossy stone, or rock with woodbine crown'd.
Oft did the cliffs reverberate the sound
Of parted fragments tumbling from on high ;
And from the summit of that craggy mound
The perching eagle oft was heard to cry,
Or on resounding wings, to shoot athwart the sky.

One cultivated spot there was, that spread
Its flowery bosom to the noonday beam,
Where many a rose-bud rears its blushing head,
And herbs for food with future plenty teem.
Sooth'd by the lulling sound of grove and stream,
Romantic visions swarm on Edwin's soul :
He minded not the Sun's last trembling gleam,
Nor heard from far the twilight curfew toll ;
When slowly on his ear these moving accents stole :

"Hail, awful scenes, that calm the troubled breast,
And woo the weary to profound repose !
Can passion's wildest uproar lay to rest,
And whisper comfort to the man of woes !
Here Innocence may wander, safe from foes,
And Contemplation soar on seraph wings.
O solitude ! the man who thee foregoes,
When lucre lures him, or ambition stings, [springs.
Shall never know the source whence real grandeur

"Vain man ! is grandeur giv'n to gay attire ?
Then let the butterfly thy pride upbraid :
To friends, attendants, armies, bought with hire ?
It is thy weakness that requires their aid :
To palaces, with gold and gems inlay'd ?
They fear the thief, and tremble in the storm :
To hosts, through carnage who to conquest wade ?
Behold the victor vanquish'd by the worm !
Behold, what deeds of woe the locust can perform !

"True dignity is his, whose tranquil mind
Virtue has rais'd above the things below ;
Who, every hope and fear to Heaven resign'd,
Shrinks not, though Fortune smite her deadliest blow."
This strain from 'midst the rocks was heard to flow,
In solemn sounds. Now beam'd the evening star ;
And from embattled clouds emerging slow
Cynthia came riding on her silver car ;
And hoary mountain-cliffs shone faintly from afar.

Soon did the solemn voice its theme renew :
(While Edwin wrapt in wonder listening stood)

"Ye tools and toys of tyranny, adieu,
Scorn'd by the wise and hated by the good !
Ye only can engage the servile brood
Of Levity and Lust, who all their days,
Asham'd of truth and liberty, have woo'd,
And hugg'd the chain, that, glittering on their gase,
Seems to outshine the pomp of Heaven's empyreal blaze.

"Like them, abandon'd to Ambition's sway,
I sought for glory in the paths of guile ;
And fawn'd and smil'd, to plunder and betray,
Myself betray'd and plunder'd all the while ;
So gnaw'd the viper the corroding file ;
But now, with pangs of keen remorse, I rue
Those years of trouble and debasement vile.
Yet why should I this cruel theme pursue !
Fly, fly, detested thoughts, for ever from my view !

"The gusts of appetite, the clouds of care,
And storms of disappointment, all o'erpast,
Henceforth no earthly hope with Heaven shall share
This heart, where peace serenely shines at last.
And if for me no treasure be amass'd,
And if no future age shall bear my name,
I lurk the more secure from fortune's blast,
And with more leisure feed this pious flame, [flame.
Whose rapture far transcends the fairest hopes of

"The end and the reward of toil is rest.
Be all my prayer for virtue and for peace.
Of wealth and fame, of pomp and power possess'd,
Who ever felt his weight of woe decrease ?
Ah ! what avails the lore of Rome and Greece,
The lay heaven-prompted, and harmonious string,
The dust of Ophir, or the Tyrian fleece,
All that art, fortune, enterprise, can bring,
If envy, scorn, remorse, or pride the bosom wring !

"Let Vanity adorn the marble tomb
With trophies, rhymes, and scutcheons of renown,
In the deep dungeon of some Gothic dome,
Where night and desolation ever frown.
Mine be the breezy hill that skirts the down ;
Where a green grassy turf is all I crave,
With here and there a violet bestrown,
Fast by a brook, or fountain's murmuring wave ;
And many an evening sun shine sweetly on my grave.

" And thither let the village-swain repair ;
And, light of heart, the village-maiden gay,
To deck with flowers her half-dishevell'd hair,
And celebrate the merry morn of May.
There let the shepherd's pipe the live-long day
Fill all the grove with love's bewitching woe ;
And when mild Evening comes in mantle gray,
Let not the blooming band make haste to go ;
No ghost, nor spell, my long and last abode shall know.

" For though I fly to 'scape from Fortune's rage,
And bear the scars of envy, spite, and scorn,
Yet with mankind no horrid war I wage,
Yet with no impious spleen my breast is torn :
For virtue lost, and ruin'd man, I mourn.
O man ! creation's pride, Heaven's darling child,
Whom Nature's best, divinest gifts adorn,
Why from thy home are truth and joy exil'd,
And all thy favourite haunts with blood and tears
defil'd ?

" Along yon glittering sky what glory streams !
What majesty attends Night's lovely queen !
Fair laugh our valleys in the vernal beams ;
And mountains rise, and oceans roll between,
And all conspire to beautify the scene.
But, in the mental world, what chaos drear ;
What forms of mournful, loathsome, furious mien !
O when shall that eternal morn appear, [clear !
These dreadful forms to chase, this chaos dark to

" O Thou, at whose creative smile, yon heaven,
In all the pomp of beauty, life, and light
Rose from th' abyss ; when dark Confusion driven
Down, down the bottomless profound of night,
Fled, where he ever flies thy piercing sight !
O glance on these sad shades one pitying ray,
To blast the fury of oppressive might,
Melt the hard heart to love and mercy's sway,
And cheer the wandering soul, and light him on the way !"

Silence ensu'd : and Edwin raised his eyes
In tears, for grief lay heavy at his heart.
" And is it thus in courtly life," he cries,
" That man to man acts a betrayer's part ?
And dares he thus the gifts of Heaven pervert,
Each social instinct, and sublime desire ?
Hail, Poverty ! if honour, wealth, and art,
If what the great pursue, and learn'd admire,
Thus dissipate and quench the soul's ethereal fire !"

He said, and turn'd away ; nor did the sage
O'erbear, in silent orisons employ'd.
The youth, his rising sorrow to assuage,
Home as he hied, the evening scene enjoy'd :
For now no cloud obscures the starry void ;
The yellow moonlight sleeps on all the hills ;
Nor is the mind with startling sounds annoy'd ;
A soothing murmur the lone region fills,
Of groves, and dying gales, and melancholy rills.

But he from day to day more anxious grew,
The voice still seem'd to vibrate on his ear,
Nor durst he hope the hermit's tale untrue ;
For man he seem'd to love, and Heaven to fear ;
And none speaks false, where there is none to hear,

" Yet, can man's gentle heart become so fell :
No more in vain conjecture let me wear
My hours away, but seek the hermit's cell ;
'Tis he my doubt can clear, perhaps my care dispel."

At early dawn the youth his journey took,
And many a mountain pass'd and valley wide,
Then reach'd the wild ; where, in a flowery nook,
And seated on a mossy stone, he spied
An ancient man : his harp lay him beside.
A stag sprang from the pasture at his call,
And, kneeling, lick'd the wither'd hand that tied
A wreath of woodbine round his antlers tall,
And hung his lofty neck with many a flower small.

And now the hoary sage arose, and saw
The wanderer approaching : innocence
Smil'd on his glowing cheek, but modest awe
Depress'd his eye, that fear'd to give offence.
" Who art thou, courteous stranger ? and from whence ?

Why roam thy steps to this sequester'd dale ?"
" A shepherd-boy," the youth replied, " far hence
My habitation ; hear my artless tale ;
Nor levity nor falsehood shall thine ear assail.

" Late as I roam'd, intent on Nature's charms,
I reach'd at eve this wilderness profound ;
And, leaning where yon oak expands her arms,
Heard these rude cliffs thine awful voice rebound,
(For in thy speech I recognise the sound.)
You mourn'd for ruin'd man, and virtue lost,
And seem'd to feel of keen remorse the wound,
Pondering on former days by guilt engross'd,
Or in the giddy storm of dissipation toss'd.

" But say, in courtly life can craft be learn'd
Where knowledge opens, and exalts the soul ?
Where Fortune lavishes her gifts unearn'd,
Can selfishness the liberal heart control ?
Is glory there achiev'd by arts, as foul
As those that felons, fiends, and furies plan ?
Spiders ensnare, snakes poison, tygers prowl :
Love is the godlike attribute of man.
O teach a simple youth this mystery to scan.

" Or else the lamentable strain disclaim,
And give me back the calm, contented mind ;
Which, late, exulting, view'd in Nature's frame,
Goodness untainted, wisdom unconfin'd,
Grace, grandeur, and utility combined,
Restore those tranquil days, that saw me still
Well pleas'd with all, but most with human-kind.
When Fancy roam'd through Nature's works at
will,
Uncheck'd by cold distrust, and uninform'd of ill."

" Wouldst thou," the sage replied, " in peace return
To the gay dreams of fond romantic youth,
Leave me to hide, in this remote sojourn,
From every gentle ear the dreadful truth :
For if my desultory strain with ruth
And indignation make thine eyes o'erflow,
Alas ! what comfort could thy anguish soothe,
Shouldst thou th' extent of human folly know.
Be ignorance thy choice, where knowledge leads to
woe.

But let untender thoughts afar be driven ;
 Or venture to arraign the dread decree.
 Or know, to man, as candidate for Heaven,
 The voice of the Eternal said, Be free :
 And this divine prerogative to thee
 Does virtue, happiness, and Heaven convey ;
 For virtue is the child of liberty,
 And happiness of virtue ; nor can they
 Be free to keep the path, who are not free to stray.

Yet leave me not. I would allay that grief,
 Which else might thy young virtue overpower,
 And in thy converse I shall find relief,
 When the dark shades of melancholy lower ;
 For solitude has many a dreary hour,
 Even when exempt from grief, remorse, and pain :
 Come often then ; for, haply, in my bower,
 Amusement, knowledge, wisdom thou may'st gain :
 If I one soul improve, I have not liv'd in vain."

And now, at length, to Edwin's ardent gaze
 The Muse of history unrolls her page.
 But few, alas ! the scenes her art displays,
 To charm his fancy, or his heart engage.
 Here chiefs their thirst of power in blood assuage,
 And straight their flames with tenfold fierceness
 burn :

Here smiling Virtue prompts the patriots's rage,
 But lo, ere long, is left alone to mourn,
 And languish in the dust, and clasp th' abandon'd
 urn !

" Ambition's slippery verge shall mortals tread,
 Where ruin's gulf unfathom'd yawns beneath !
 Shall life, shall liberty be lost," he said,
 " For the vain toys that pomp and power bequeath !
 The car of victory, the plume, the wreath,
 Defend not from the bolt of fate the brave :
 No note the clarion of renown can breathe,
 To alarm the long night of the lonely grave, [wave.
 Or check the headlong haste of time's o'erwhelming

" Ah, what avails it to have trac'd the springs,
 That whirl of empire the stupendous wheel !
 Ah, what have I to do with conquering kings,
 Hands drench'd in blood, and breasts begirt with steel !

To those, whom Nature taught to think and feel,
 Heroes, alas ! are things of small concern ;
 Could History man's secret heart reveal,
 And what imports a heaven-born mind to learn,
 Her transcripts to explore what bosom would not yearn !

" This praise, O Cheronean sage *, is thine !
 (Why should this praise to thee alone belong ?)
 All else from Nature's moral path decline,
 Lur'd by the toys that captivate the throng ;
 To herd in cabinets and camps, among
 Spoil, carnage, and the cruel pomp of pride ;
 Or chant of heraldry the drowsy song,
 How tyrant blood, o'er many a region wide,
 Rolls to a thousand thrones its execrable tide.

" O who of man the story will unfold,
 Ere victory and empire wrought annoy,
 In that elysian age (misnam'd of gold)
 The age of love, and innocence and joy,

* Plutarch.

When all were great and free ! man's sole employ
 To deck the bosom of his parent earth ;
 Or toward his bower the murmuring stream decoy,
 To aid the flow'et's long-expected birth,
 And lull the bed of peace, and crown the board of mirth.

" Sweet were your shades, O ye primeval groves !
 Whose boughs to man his food and shelter lent,
 Pure in his pleasures, happy in his loves,
 His eye still smiling, and his heart content.
 Then, hand in hand, health, sport, and labour went.
 Nature supply'd the wish she taught to crave.
 None prowl'd for prey, none watch'd to circumvent.
 To all an equal lot Heaven's bounty gave :
 No vassal fear'd his lord, no tyrant fear'd his slave.

But ah ! th' historic Muse has never dar'd
 To pierce those hallow'd bowers : 't is Fancy's beam
 Pour'd on the vision of the enraptured bard,
 That paints the charms of that delicious theme.
 Then hail sweet Fancy's ray ! and hail the dream
 That weans the weary soul from guilt and woe !
 Careless what others of my choice may deem,
 I long, where Love and Fancy lead, to go
 And meditate on Heaven, enough of Earth I know."

" I cannot blame thy choice," the sage replied,
 " For soft and smooth are Fancy's flowery ways.
 And yet, even there, if left without a guide,
 The young adventurer unsafely plays.
 Eyes dazzl'd long by fiction's gaudy rays
 In modest truth no light nor beauty find.
 And who, my child, would trust the meteor-blaze,
 That soon must fail, and leave the wanderer blind,
 More dark and helpless far, than if it ne'er had shin'd ?

" Fancy enervates, while it soothes, the heart,
 And, while it dazzles, wounds the mental sight :
 To joy each heightening charm it can impart,
 But wraps the hour of woe in tenfold night.
 And often, where no real ills affright,
 Its visionary fiends, an endless train,
 Assail with equal or superior might,
 And through the throbbing heart, and dizzy brain,
 And shivering nerves, shoot stings of more than mortal pain.

" And yet, alas ! the real ills of life
 Claim the full vigour of a mind prepar'd,
 Prepar'd for patient, long, laborious strife,
 Its guide experience, and truth its guard.
 We fare on Earth as other men have far'd.
 Were they successful ? Let not us despair.
 Was disappointment oft their sole reward ?
 Yet shall their tale instruct, if it declare,
 How they have borne the load ourselves are doom'd
 to bear.

What charms th' historic Muse adorn, from spoils,
 And blood, and tyrants, when she wings her flight,
 To hail the patriot prince, whose pious toils
 Sacred to science, liberty, and right,
 And peace, through every age divinely bright,
 Shall shine the boast and wonder of mankind !
 Sees yonder Sun, from his meridian height,
 A lovelier scene, than virtue thus enshrin'd
 In power, and man with man for mutual aid com-
 bin'd ?

" Hail, sacred Polity, by Freedom rear'd !
Hail, sacred Freedom, when by law restrain'd !
Without you what were man ? A grovelling herd
In darkness, wretchedness, and want enchain'd.
Sublim'd by you, the Greek and Roman reign'd
In arts unrivall'd : O, to latest days,
In Albion may your influence, unprofan'd,
To godlike worth the generous bosom raise,
And prompt the sage's lore, and fire the poet's lays !

" But now let other themes our ears engage.
For lo, with modest yet majestic grace,
To curb Imagination's lawless rage,
And from within the cherish'd heart to brace,
Philosophy appears ! The gloomy race
By indolence and moping Fancy bred,
Fear, Discontent, Solitude, give place,
And Hope and Courage brighten in their stead,
While on the kindling soul her vital beams are shed.

Then waken from long lethargy to life
The seeds of happiness, and powers of thought ;
Then jarring appetites forego their strife,
A strife by ignorance to madness wrought.
Pleasure by savage man is dearly bought
With fell revenge, lust that defies controul,
With gluttony and death. The mind untaught
Is a dark waste, where fiends and tempests howl ;
As Phœbus to the world, is science to the soul.

And Reason now through number, time, and space,
Darts the keen lustre of her serious eye.
And learns, from facts compar'd, the laws to trace,
Whose long progression leads to Deity.
Can mortal strength presume to soar so high !
Can mortal sight, so oft bedimm'd with tears,
Such glory bear ! — for lo ! the shadows fly
From Nature's face ; confusion disappears,
And order charms the eye, and harmony the ears !

" In the deep windings of the grove, no more
The hag obscene, and grisly phantom dwell ;
Nor in the fall of mountain-stream, or roar
Of winds, is heard the angry spirit's yell ;
No wizard mutters the tremendous spell,
Nor sinks convulsive in prophetic swoon ;
Nor bids the noise of drums and trumpets swell,
To ease of fancied pangs the labouring Moon,
Or chase the shade that blots the blazing orb of noon.

" Many a long-lingering year, in lonely isle,
Stunn'd with th' eternal turbulence of waves,
Lo, with dim eyes, that never learn'd to smile,
And trembling hands, the famish'd native craves
Of Heaven his wretched fare ; shivering in caves,
Or scorched on rocks, he pines from day to day ;
But Science gives the word ; and lo, he braves
The surge and tempest, lighted by her ray,
And to a happier land wafts merrily away !

" And even where Nature leads the teeming plain
With the full pomp of vegetable store,
Her bounty, unimprov'd, is deadly bare :
Dark woods and rankling wilds, from shore to shore,
Stretch their enormous gloom ; which to explore
Even Fancy trembles, in her sprightliest mood ;
For there, each eye-ball gleams with lust of gore,
Nestles each murderous and each monstrous brood,
Plague lurks in every shade, and steams from every flood.

" 'T was from Philosophy man learn'd to tame
The soil by plenty to intemperance fed.
Lo, from the echoing sea, and thundering flame,
Poison and plague and yelling rage are fled !
The waters, bursting from their slony bed,
Bring health and melody to every vale :
And, from the breezy main, and mountain's head,
Ceres and Flora, to the sunny dale, [gate.
To fan their glowing charms, invite the fluttering

" What dire necessities on every hand
Our art, our strength, our fortitude require !
Of foes intestine what a numerous band
Against this little throb of life conspire !
Yet Science can elude their fatal ire
Awhile, and turn aside Death's levell'd dart,
Soothe the sharp pang, allay the fever's fire,
And brace the nerves once more, and cheer the heart,
And yet a few soft nights and balmy days impart.

" Nor less to regulate man's moral frame
Science exerts her all-composing sway.
Flutters thy breast with fear, or pants for fear,
Or pines, to indolence and spleen a prey,
Or avarice, a fiend more fierce than they ?
Flee to the shade of Academus' grove ;
Where cares molest not, discord melts away
In harmony, and the pure passions prove How sweet the words of Truth, breath'd from the lips of Love.

" What cannot Art and Industry perform,
When Science plants the progress of their toil !
They smile at penury, disease, and storm ;
And oceans from their mighty mounds recoil.
When tyrants scourge, or demagogues embroil
A land, or when the rabble's headlong rage
Order transforms to anarchy and spoil,
Deep-vers'd in man the philosophic sage
Prepares with lenient hand their phrenzy to assuage.

" 'T is he alone, whose comprehensive mind,
From situation, temper, soil and clime
Explor'd, a nation's various powers can bind,
And various orders, in one form sublime
Of policy, that, midst the wrecks of time,
Secure shall lift its head on high, nor fear
Th' assault of foreign or domestic crime,
While public faith, and public love sincere,
And industry and law maintain their sway severe."

Enraptur'd by the hermit's strain, the youth
Proceeds the path of Science to explore.
And now, expanded to the beams of truth,
New energies and charms unknown before,
His mind discloses : Fancy now no more
Wantons on fickle pinion through the skies ;
But, fix'd in aim, and conscious of her power,
Aloft from cause to cause exults to rise,
Creation's blended stores arranging as she flies.

Nor love of novelty alone inspires,
Their laws and nice dependencies to scan ;
For, mindful of the aids that life requires,
And of the services man owes to man,
He meditates new arts on Nature's plan ;
The cold desponding breast of sloth to warm,
The flame of industry and genius fan,
And emulation's noble rage alarm,
And the long hours of toil and solitude to charm.

But she, who set on fire his infant heart,
 And all his dreams, and all his wanderings shar'd
 And bless'd, the Muse, and her celestial art,
 Still claim th' enthusiast's fond and first regard.
 From Nature's beauties variously compar'd
 And variously combin'd, he learns to frame
 Those forms of bright perfection, which the bard,
 While boundless hopes and boundless views inflame,
 Enamour'd, consecrates to never-dying fame.

Of late, with cumbersome, though pompous show,
 Edwin would oft his flowery rhyme deface,
 Through ardour to adorn; but Nature now
 To his experienc'd eye a modest grace
 Presents, where ornament the second place
 Holds, to intrinsic worth and just design
 Subservient still. Simplicity apace
 Tempers his rage: he owns her charm divine,
 And clears th' ambiguous phrase, and lops th' unwieldy line.

Fain would I sing (much yet unsung remains)
 What sweet delirium o'er his bosom stole,
 When the great shepherd of the Mantuan plain
 His deep majestic melody 'gan roll:
 Fain would I sing what transport storm'd his soul,
 How the red current throb'd his veins along,
 When, like Pelides, bold beyond controul,
 Without art graceful, without effort strong,
 Homer rais'd high to Heaven the loud, th' impetuous
 song.

And how his lyre, though rude her first essays,
 Now skilled to soothe, to triumph, to complain,
 Warbling at will through each harmonious maze,
 Was taught to modulate the artful strain,
 I fain would sing: — but ah! I strive in vain.
 Sighs from a breaking heart my voice confound,
 With trembling step, to join yon weeping train,
 I haste, where gleams funereal glare around,
 And mix'd with shrieks of woe, the knells of death
 resound.

Adieu, ye lays, that Fancy's flowers adorn,
 The soft amusement of the vacant mind!
 He sleeps in dust, and all the Muses mourn,
 He, whom each virtue fir'd, each grace refin'd,
 Friend, teacher, pattern, darling of mankind!
 He sleeps in dust. Ah! how shall I pursue
 My theme! To heart-consuming grief resign'd,
 Here on his recent grave I fix my view,
 And pour my bitter tears. Ye flowery lays, adieu!

Art thou, my GREGORY, for ever fled!
 And am I left to unavailing woe!
 When fortune's storms assail this weary head,
 Where cares long since have shed untimely snow!
 Ah, now for comfort whither shall I go!
 No more thy soothing voice my anguish cheers:
 Thy placid eyes with smiles no longer glow,
 My hopes to cherish, and allay my fears.
 'T is meet that I should mourn: flow forth afresh,
 my tears.
